settle the matter between themselves. The reason why I say that is, because I know there are other things which are a great deal more important than differences between a landlord and tenant for a small farm. But what do Governments do if one does harm to another? They try to settle it by arbitration. When a tenant goes out of a farm, he gives it to a man who knows the way to value, and the landlord and the incoming tenant do the same; if any dispute arises in the value of a farm, I do not see why he should not treat with somebody like that. I have not the least doubt but that a very few landlords would suffer by it; big landlords would never suffer, because I believe that they let their land mostly in a way, that the farmers can pay for it; but as to small landlords who have a small income, and perhaps borrow money, they have done the most they can, to injure the farmers, and the farmers have no encouragement to put money out for bettering a farm, because no sooner do they do so, than they will either have to leave, and leave their improvements behind, or have their rents raised. I know two parishes, Llanmaes parish and Llanfihangel, where you never require to have any one go between the landlord and tenant, but it is required very much, where there are poor landlords who drive their tenants, so that they cannot pay for the land and live upon it. I will now hand you a letter which I have received from a gentleman in this county, and he gave me a message as well: I will hand it in to you; it is a letter from Mr. Daniel Owen, to say that if you give a chance to a tenant farmer to improve his holding, he will do so, and do something on it. "Ash Hall, Cowbridge, Glamorgan, "31st October 1893. Dear Sir, In reply to "your letter of 28th inst. I am sorry that "having so many important engagements at the "present time, I cannot give all the details I "should wish to, but I felt I was bound to "answer your letter. Your letter is not very "clear as regards what information you require "from me, but I think I understand what you "mean. When I bought a portion of the New "Forest Down, it was all covered with gorse "and ferns. I had the land fenced in and "cleared, cultivated it on the four-course "system for many years, liberally supplying "sheep with corn and cake when on the roots. "This land when I bought it, was not worth 2*s.* "an acre to a tenant. I well remember the time, "when you remarked to me, what a splendid "crop of barley there was in the field near "'Ty Capper.' It was so. That crop of barley "yielded me 57 bushels an acre. The following "year, 1872, I had clover and rye grass in the "same field. I had six and a half tons per "acre of hay off that field that year, three tons "per acre the first crop, two tons per acre the "second crop, one and a-half tons per acre the "third crop, making in all six and a half tons "per acre. This was grown on land, as I before "said, which was not worth 2*s.* per acre per "annum. On the upper portion of that moun-"tain land, I have grown 57 bushels of wheat "per acre, and have grown 90 bushels of oats

" on the same land per acre—about 16 or 18 " years ago, I laid it down in permanent pas- " ture, and by using the proper seeds for per- " manent pasture. (This should be noticed by " all farmers.) The general impression is that " permament pasture cannot be successful for 30 " or 40 years after it is laid down. This is a " mistake. That mountain land has produced " an excellent crop of pasture, from the time I " laid it down to the present. That pasture " land now is nearly equal, but not quite, to " any pasture in the Vale of Glamorgan. You " know the field in front of the house where " my late father resided, of eight acres which " was covered with gorse and fern when I " bought it 33 years ago, from which I made a " profit from 110*l.* to 115*l.* a year for many " years. That cannot be done now, but what I " have stated shows clearly what can be done " with waste land, with proper cultivation. See " the report in the 'Journal of the Royal Agri- " cultural Society,' page 300 (1872) as to my " mode of farming, which report was written by " Messrs. Finlay, Dunn, Boustead, and Jenkins " who acted on the behalf of the Royal Agricul- " tural Society of England. They were all " strangers to me, consequently you have a true

" version of what has taken place on this moun- " tain land. Yours faithfully, Daniel Owen.— " Mr. Thomas Morgan, Colhugh Villa, Llantwit " Major."

Mr. Griffiths.

25,891. Is it a fact that two tenants have failed, owing to the over-preservation of game on the same farm?—Yes.

25,892. And yet the landlord cannot see the evil of it?—No, I suppose he cannot, or else he would not offer it again. I know it is offered again, and I suppose on the same principle as before. I saw hundreds of pheasants close to me this day week, at any rate not less than 150 on a small spot, on some of the best land in the Vale, and 150 rabbits were killed close by me this week.

25,893. Do the tenants object to the shooting of the game being let out?—Yes, they do.

25,894. Do you not think in the event of your not getting a remedy, it would be better for the tenant to have the game in his own hands?—Yes.

25,895. Do you not think it would be better for the tenant himself to rent the game?—Yes, exactly, if he chose to do so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. GODFREY L. CLARK called and examined.

Chairman.

25,896. You do not want to speak on the general questions?—I only wish to go through the heads of the syllabus.

25,897. Then we will confine ourselves to your own estate, and not go into the generalities. You are the son of Mr. G. T. Clark, the owner of the Talygarn estate, in the county of Glamorgan?—Yes.

25,898. What is the size of your estate?—About 900 to 1,000 acres.

25,899. I suppose there is no inquiry made as to language, politics, or religion?—No.

25,900. Is your agent an experienced man?—Yes, he is present here. Mr. David is the agent, and he is a properly qualified land agent of great experience, I believe.

25,901. What is the date of entry on your estate?—The 2nd of February.

25,902. Of course the tenancies are yearly?—Yes.

25,903. There is no demand for leases?—None.

25,904. How many changes have you had in 20 years?—Practically, none. One man gave up and died; at least he died, and his son followed on, and he gave up, and one of our servants' sons married the daughter. That is the only change, I think, that has taken place in, roughly, 20 years, or perhaps rather more.

25,905. There are no cases of hardship?—There have been no complaints.

25,906. You give compensation if you resume occupation?—Well, it has not occurred.

25,907. You put in the agreement?—Yes (handing agreement).

Chairman—continued.

25,908. Will you tell us anything about the rent?—In what respect?

25,909. The rent of the 562 acres is how much?—389*l.*; about 14*s.* per acre.

25,910. And the remainder of your estate is in hand?—Yes.

25,911. How is the rent fixed?—It was fixed originally by valuation, and it has never been altered since we came there.

25,912. Is the rent the same as when the estate was purchased?—There has been no alteration.

25,913. With regard to abatement, can you hand in any statement?—Yes.

25,914. What abatements have you made?—Shall I put in the agreements.

25,915. Yes, I think so, if you will. (Witness handed in agreements.) The Commission will look over them. When is the rent paid after it is due?—About five or six months after it is due. It goes through the agent's hands.

25,916. Then the tenants pay the tithes, rates, and taxes, do they?—Yes.

25,917. What is the average size of your farms?—They vary. They average, I suppose, about 100 acres, if you average the five of them.

25,918. With regard to permanent improvements, that is important. What improvements do you make?—All permanent improvements.

25,919. Can you hand in a statement about the improvements?—Yes (handed).

25,920. The total is 3,305 in 30 years, is it not?—Rather under 30 years—since the property was bought.

Chairman—continued.

25,921. How about the haulage?—The custom is, in small matters, for the tenant to do the haulage, but in permanent repairs entailing new building, we do the haulage.

25,922. Then you have got your compensation provided, I suppose, by the clauses in the agreement?—Yes.

25,923. Do the tenants claim under the custom of the country?—Yes, my Lord, they would; it hardly arises.

25,924. Then how about the game. Have you got much game on the property?—No keeper.

25,925. Have you got any hares?—There was one seen, I believe, this year.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,926. They are not quite extinct?—This is the only one I have heard of, and it was made a good deal of. It was in our own field, too.

25,927. Then they will be extinct?—Very probably, I should think, in our part of the world.

25,928. You do not think there is much damage; there is no damage complained of by the game?—No, I think I may say, none. Once a man complained of rabbits, but I think he had no reason to complain afterwards. It was settled, and the compensation was given to him on his own terms.

Mr. Grove.

25,929. We can go on to the question of proprietor farmers. Are there any proprietor farmers in your neighbourhood?—Freeholders?

25,930. Yes, freeholders?—No, I do not think so.

25,931. And the farmers and their wives, of course, work together, and work very hard?—Yes, there is no doubt about that.

25,932. What wages do you pay your labourers?—From 18*s.* to over 1*l.* a week, with a house, and in most cases a garden, with a nominal rent.

Mr. Groves—continued.

25,933. Are your cottages pretty good?—We are improving the cottages, the old cottages were abominable places.

25,934. They were very bad?—They were very bad; but people are getting more particular now, and there is a greater demand for them.

25,935. Have you any allotments or any demand for small holdings?—There is a fair demand for allotments—not for small holdings—there would be, I believe, very rarely.

25,936. There might be if they were offered?—There might be.

25,937. What is the tenure of a cottage?—A labourer's cottage is occupied as long as a man is employed by us, and we make no changes if a man comes on, and is a steady, good man; he is first of all probably taken on at a temporary job, to see what he is like, and, if he is a good man, he is kept on permanently, for good and all.

25,938. Are the relations between your tenants and yourself very friendly?—I believe so.

25,939. Have you anything to say about the improvements you have made?—I believe the schedule speaks for that.

25,940. We will print the schedule in the Appendix, if you please, and then that will explain itself?—There are more still going on, I might say.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,941. Those labourers are not found their food or board at all?—Do you mean do we find it?

25,942. Those who are paid 18*s.* to 1*l.* a week you do not find food for?—No, they are out of door labourers, farm labourers.

25,943. Are there any farm servants on your farms?—Do you mean kept by the tenants?

25,944. Yes?—No, a man and a boy I should think, would be the outside.

25,945. I was going to ask about the accommodation for them, but in that case it is of no use?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD KNOX called and examined.

Chairman.

See 5001 25,761.

25,946. You are the agent for the estate of Miss Talbot, the Margam estate?—I am, my Lord.

25,947. How large is that?—The Margam estate consists of 30,000 acres, of which about 12,000 are mountain land.

25,948. Are there any manors on it?—There are 14 manors, the courts are held once in every year, and the officers are stewards, constables, and haywards.

25,949. Would you hand in a list of those manors. If you have not one now you can send us in a list?—Yes, I can send in a list. I have a list here which I will write out afterwards.

25,950. You have in your statement the word "copyhold." Is that the copyhold rents, or is that the freehold rents?—That is the copyhold rents.

25,951. What are the rents on the estate? What do they range from?—The rents range from 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre, to 35*s.* or 45*s.* an acre. They are 45*s.* an acre in some few instances.

25,952. Have you had any recent enclosures of waste?—No, there has been no enclosure, except 30 or 40 years ago, at Newton Down. Mr. Talbot then got about 20 or 30 acres allotted to him as his share. It was an enclosure by Act of Parliament.

25,953. Do all your tenants speak English?—They all speak and understand English. I never find any difficulty in conversing with them.

Chairman—continued.

25,954. Do you speak Welsh yourself?—No. I only know a very few words.

Professor Rhŷs.

Those are important words, I suppose.

Chairman.

25,955. Have you ever asked a tenant about his religion or political views?—No, I have never done such a thing.

25,956. You have had a training as agent?—Yes, I gave evidence as to that at Swansea, when you were down before, my Lord. I was a sub-agent on a neighbouring estate, belonging to Lord Wimborne 10 years ago.

25,957. What is the date of entry on the Margam estate?—The day of entry is Lady Day.

25,958. There are yearly tenancies, of course, and no demand for leases?—No.

25,959. Have you many changes?—There have been seven changes on the whole estate this last Michaelmas; that is, to enter next Lady Day.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,960. Out of how many holdings?—I do not know how many holdings there are. There were seven changes, six of which were caused by death, and one of which was caused by a widow, who is going to take another farm on the Margam estate. I may say that I had 24 applicants for that farm, which was a farm near Cowbridge.

Chairman.

25,961. When you resume occupation, do you give compensation?—Miss Talbot makes it a practice to give compensation nearly always, as a rule, for laying down grass land, and I think that in any alteration of the custom of the country, it would be a very good thing if it was made compulsory, that the tenant should be recouped for land that was laid down in grass. At present his only remedy is to plough it up or threaten to plough it up as he might do, and so get the bill for ploughing, and as it is a great advantage when land is well laid down to grass, and the landlord can probably get a better rent for it in consequence, I think the tenant ought certainly to be paid for it, and Miss Talbot does that.

25,962. Will you put in your agreement?—I put in the agreement during Mr. Talbot's time (handing).

25,963. What is your present agreement?—This is the agreement at the present time, under Miss Talbot (handing).

25,964. Are there any clauses that the tenants think hard in this agreement?—I have never had any tenant object to sign the agreement. I have sometimes had to explain to him two or three clauses, but I find as a rule, that they are only too anxious to come under the new agreement, because under Mr. Talbot's agreement they had to do all the repairs themselves, and under Miss Talbot's agreement everything is put into repair, the buildings, fences, gates, and everything, and materials are supplied for repairs.

Chairman—continued.

25,965. In Mr. Talbot's time they had to do the repairs themselves?—They had to do the repairs themselves, and Mr. Talbot's practice was to reduce the rent 10 per cent., so that the tenant should do the repairs.

25,966. With regard to these agreements do they all have a copy signed by the landlord?—They all have a copy signed by Miss Talbot, and a map of their farm, which they appreciate very much indeed. That map has every gate marked upon it.

25,967. Then you fix the rent at so much an acre, do you not?—I always go over the farm when there is a farm to let, and I put down how much I think each field is worth, and then I add it together and arrive at the gross total.

25,968. Is it considered a high rented or low rented estate?—I think, as a rule, my Lord, that the Margam estate is considered low rented. I may say that the county council two years ago, were dissatisfied with the valuation of Margam parish, and they appointed a gentleman to value it, who had been a tenant farmer. I am sorry to say that he died two or three months ago. The result of his valuation was that out of 107 holdings in Margam parish, 62 are held at rents below the gross estimated rental put by this gentleman, 29 are held at rents equal to the gross estimated rental, and only 16 are above the gross estimated rental. Off all these rents, Miss Talbot took last year 15 per cent.

25,969. You have told us about the rents. I think you said they went up to 35*s.* an acre, did you not?—There is land that is let at 45*s.* an acre, to butchers—small fields—but I do not think there is any farm that would average anything like that; 30*s.* or 32*s.* per acre, I think, is the highest rented farm on the estate.

25,970. Do you expect any services from the tenants besides paying the rents?—None, my Lord.

25,971. The farms, I suppose, you do not let to the highest bidder?—No. When I let this farm the other day near Cowbridge that I told you I had 24 applicants for, the tenant remarked to me, when I told him what the rent was, that I had not put it up to him because there were so many applicants. I let it to him for 18*s.* an acre, and I should have easily got 20*s.* or 22*s.* if I wanted it. I took him because I knew he was a good farmer, and I found out afterwards that he was a nonconformist, and it made no difference to Miss Talbot.

25,972. Are the rents the same for the last 50 years, or have they been put up?—I think the rents have been raised in some cases, but the rents have not been raised in Miss Talbot's time, except in a very few instances. Under the new agreements, although Miss Talbot has done all these repairs, and has spent 31,000*l.* upon the estate, she has hardly raised the rent in one case,

Chairman—continued.

The rent is the same as when the tenant was under covenant to repair.

25,973. What abatements have you given?—Miss Talbot gave an abatement of 15 per cent. last year.

25,974. Anything before that?—No, Miss Talbot has only had the property three years.

25,975. Have there been any abatements on the property before that?—I think Mr. Talbot gave an abatement of 25 per cent.

25,976. In the year 1886?—Yes, in 1886, and there was another abatement.

25,977. Of 20 per cent. in 1881. Is that so?—Yes, that is so.

25,978. When do you collect the rents?—The rents are collected six months after they are legally due.

25,979. Have you anything to say about preferential claim?—I think that the tenants as a rule, would much prefer the landlords to have a preferential claim, as it prevents small tradespeople levying a distress on them, which they might otherwise do.

25,980. Have the local rates been increased within the last 25 years or not?—I am sorry to say they have been very much increased. Speaking about rates, my Lord, I think that as the tenant does not benefit from the drainage and water supply of the urban district, or local board district in which he is, that it is very unfair that his land should be taxed as well. I think it is a great hardship. A professional man only pays rates on his house. He does not pay anything on his income, although it may be 1,000*l.* a year, and in this way a farmer is very much handicapped, especially when he happens to live in a local board area.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,981. That is the sanitary rate which you think he ought not to pay?—That is so.

25,982. He ought not to pay any part of it do you think?—Only upon his house. His house is rated separately now to his land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,983. But is there no outer circle formed in local board districts?—No, not in Glamorganshire.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I think it is the tenant's own fault.

Chairman.

25,984. What is the average size of your farms?—There are some mountain farms as much as 700 or 800 acres; but, of course, it is mostly mountain land let at 6*d.* or 1*s.* an acre. I should say the average size farm was 150 or 120 acres.

25,985. Is there any scarcity of labour do you think?—There is a great difficulty in getting labour, because we are so near the colliery districts, and there is a large amount of land lying down by the sea, which we call Margam Moors, and we try, if possible, to let one field on the moors to each tenant on the hills, so that he may get hay from it. The ditches previous to the last two years, there have got into a frightful state, owing to the tenants not being able to get labour to clean them out, and Miss Talbot said that if the tenants who had got this land would pay a drainage tax, like they do in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, of 1*s.* per acre, that she would undertake this, and the tenants have been most grateful for it. It has been done during the last two years, and for the last two years it has been carried on at a very great loss, because it had got into such a bad state; but I hope that in two or three years' time we shall be able to make ends meet, as it has been very expensive for Miss Talbot.

25,986. Do you give drain pipes?—Always when they are asked for.

25,987. Miss Talbot puts everything into repair, I suppose, under the new agreement, does she not?—Yes, my Lord.

25,988. There is no contracting out of the custom of the country, under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—None whatever; the agreement does not provide for that in any way.

25,989.—When compensation is to be paid do you and the tenant appoint valuers; is that how it is done?—Yes. I think it is fair for Miss Talbot to appoint a valuer, rather than leave it in my hands; so that I make a practice of appointing a valuer for Miss Talbot, and the tenant appoints a valuer to act for him.

25,990. With regard to the practice of selling sheep in going out of the hill farms, does the tenant sell the sheep?—It is the practice for them to do it. I am sorry to say that of late many of the mountain sheep have been in such a bad condition, that it has been impossible to sell them, and that the incoming tenant would not take them over.

25,991. What has Miss Talbot done, with regard to improvements in repairs and buildings?—Miss Talbot has during the last three years, spent in repairs to farms and new buildings, 31,000*l.* She has put 36 farms into a thorough state of repair. She has spent 6,000*l.* in providing new cottages and putting old cottages into a good state of repair, and she has provided a water supply to over 300 cottages on the estate, at an expense of 1,800*l.* These cottages had not got water before, and Miss Talbot has supplied it at her own cost.

See 498 26,183, 26,240.

but I cannot get anything definitely stated. I am sure Miss Talbot does not wish that there should be any over-preservation of game.

ee 25,870. 25,993. Is there any of the estate let for game?—The late Mrs. Stacey, who died, had the Llandough estate near Cowbridge (which belongs to Miss Talbot) on a life lease, and when Mrs. Stacey died the lease reverted to Miss Talbot. I have been unable to let it, and one of the reasons is that the game book is so very unsatisfactory, and there is so very little game that I cannot get anybody to take it. There is only one day's covert shooting on the whole property, and there is very little to shoot. Mr. Thomas Morgan made a statement about two tenants, who had left owing to the game. One of them, he said, had left in Mr. Talbot's time, and I do not know about that one; but I have inquired from several tenants in the room, and they tell me that the facts are that the first was a widow, who left at her husband's death; that had nothing whatever to do with the game. The other, the second case, left in Miss Talbot's time, and, to my knowledge, it had nothing whatever to do with the game. There is no covert on the farm, and there is hardly any game to be seen. The farm unfortunately had got into a frightful state of cultivation, and it was that farm which was mentioned in regard to the seed. Mr. Watts has taken it, and I am glad to say he has already made it look very different to what it was two years ago.

Mr. Grove.

25,994. Is that Mrs. Gwyn?—No, that is not Mrs. Gwyn. Mrs. Gwyn's farm was taken by trustees for herself and her children, and when the children came of age, the trustees gave up the farm—this Michaelmas. Mrs. Gwyn has taken from Miss Talbot another farm, a smaller farm on the same estate. I had got a note about ee 25,339. the game that Mr. Thomas David of Hafod Haulog gave evidence yesterday about, and of his complaints in regard to the game. I can only say, that he never has complained to me about game, except with regard to the deer. About two years ago several of the deer got out of the park, and he mentioned that they did him damage; and perhaps they may have done. At any rate Miss Talbot gave instructions that these deer were to be killed at once, and although it was out of the season, the deer were killed. That is the only complaint about game that I have had from Thomas David of Hafod Haulog. He and his son both carry a gun, and shoot hares and rabbits. Last year on the whole of the beat on which his farm was situated, there were only 35 hares and six rabbits killed—the Hafod Haulog beat. I think, Sir John, you know it.

25,995. The Bryndu side?—The Bryndu side.

Chairman.

25,996. Are there any peasant proprietors or small freeholders?—No.

25,997. And I suppose as to the tenant farmers, your evidence is the same as everyone else's.

They work very hard and are very industrious?—Yes, but I consider that the sons working on their father's farms, work there to serve a kind of apprenticeship. Everybody has to serve an apprenticeship for a trade, and if you serve an apprenticeship elsewhere you have to pay for it; they get their apprenticeship, without paying for it. I think it is fair to look at it in that light.

25,998. With regard to the labourers, are they pretty well off on the Margam estate?—Yes, because there is not as much labour as we should be glad of.

25,999. Is the cottage accommodation pretty decent?—Miss Talbot's wish is that there should be three bedrooms in each cottage, and so far as possible it is my endeavour to provide that.

26,000. Have they got gardens?—They have all got gardens.

26,001. Are they held by the landlord or the tenant farmers?—The cottages as a rule are held by the landlord direct.

26,002. When do you think that the depression began?—I think that the depression has been going on and off ever since 1879; it is undoubtedly worse at the present time, owing to the prices of everything being depressed, except the price of hay and straw, and one may say the price of butter; but with the exception of those, everything is depressed in price.

26,003. Have you anything to suggest that would remove this depression in any way?—My only suggestion is relieving the farmer of some of the rates, as I have mentioned, making the people in the towns who get the benefit of these things pay for them, whereas the farmers who do not get the benefit, ought not to pay. That is the only suggestion that I can think of.

26,004. Have you anything to say about the land courts, which we have heard a good deal of, the suggested land courts?—I am afraid that in many cases, the tenants would not be so well off, as they are at present. If there was a land court, I suppose there would be an official valuer appointed, who would value in the same way as this official valuer valued for the county council two years ago. His valuation gave great dissatisfaction, and the tenants went to the assessment committee and asked for their assessment to be reduced; the assessment committee said that they did not care what Miss Talbot let the farms for, but that they would take the valuation of the official valuer; so that in many cases, as I say, the tenants are paying at a higher rateable value than the rent they are paying Miss Talbot.

26,005. You consider the relations between Miss Talbot and her tenants are very satisfactory?—I am quite certain of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,006. Will you tell us about the custom of the county in Glamorgan. Is that as applicable to western farms as it is to the eastern farms on the Margam estate?—On the Margam estate it is applicable throughout. The custom goes up to Neath.

26,007. Do you find it equally good upon the mountain farms as upon the lowland farms?—Yes, equally good.

26,008. It was first applicable to the lowland farms, and it was found to be applicable to the upland farms as well?—Yes.

26,009. Are you now keeping down the rabbits, to the best of your ability, over the estate?—With the exception of one or two farms that adjoin the coverts, and one farm where the tenant is, under a special clause in his agreement, that he shall be paid for any damage done, and he has only to send in a bill; there is hardly a rabbit on the estate.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,010. Do the tenants clear away all the game when they have a free hand?—Oh, no; as a rule, with regard to the rabbits, the rabbits are cleared away by Miss Talbot's orders; there are not rabbits for them to shoot, but with regard to the hares, there are hares at Hafod Haulog, where I say the tenant shoots them.

26,011. And partridges and pheasants?—And partridges and pheasants.

26,012. Amongst the things that you mentioned just now, as not having gone down so seriously in price, was butter?—Yes, butter; that remains about the same price, and has for the last 10 or 12 years.

26,013. In North Wales we heard that pigs maintain their price. Is that so in South Wales?—They were a little higher a short time ago, they have gone down again.

26,014. Do your tenants rear pigs to any extent?—Not to any great extent.

26,015. They might do more, you think?—Yes.

26,016. Is there any reason why they should not?—No, none whatever.

26,017. Do your tenants have farm servants or day labourers mostly?—Some of the larger tenants have farm servants; of course the smaller tenants only have day labourers.

26,018. In the case of farm servants, where do they sleep?—In the house, where they have farm servants.

26,019. Under the same roof as the farmer himself?—Yes.

26,020. Have you ever heard any objection to that?—No, I have not heard any objection to it. Of course it necessitates a rather larger kitchen, than would be necessary otherwise.

Mr. Grove.

26,021. Is there much damage in certain parts of your estate, from copper smoke?—I am sorry to say that there has been a great deal of damage.

26,022. Was there a valuation made of those farms where such damage takes place?—Yes.

26,023. I saw it in the newspaper?—Yes; and the rents were reduced by Miss Talbot from 35 to 75 per cent. in consequence of that.

26,024. So that what we saw in the paper was correct?—It was.

26,025. It was 35 to 75 per cent.?—It was so.

26,026. And was that valuation made recently?—It was a result of four valuations which had been made. There were four valuations made at different times of the year; as we were going to law about it, and it was necessary to have the facts very accurate, we had four different valuations, and it was the result of all four. There was a Mr. Ronaldson, a member of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society; he was one of the valuers and is a very well known agriculturist.

26,028. No doubt it is?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,029. With reference to the custom of the Vale of Glamorgan, you have estates outside that custom, have you not?—I have nothing to do with any portion of Miss Talbot's property which is outside.

26,030. But she has property outside?—She has property in the Peninsula of Gower, which is outside.

26,031. Do you see any practical difficulty in extending the custom to those Gower estates, by inserting a clause in the agreement, that the custom shall prevail?—The only difficulty that I can see, is the difficulty which Mr. Osborne Sheppard mentioned at Swansea this week, and that is, that a tenant might object to go out of a farm on a different custom to what he came in on. I do not quite see how that is to be got over.

26,032. As to an incoming tenant, he would not like it?—I do not suppose it would make any difference to the incoming tenant, because he would start on that basis, but the tenant who had already come into the farm on a different custom, would object to go out on another custom.

26,033. But would he object to go out on a better custom, would he not get more under the custom of Glamorgan?—I think, sir, as a rule, the Welsh do not like any changes; they are very conservative in that way, and I do not think they would like any change in that respect.

26,034. Then you think that, bad as their customs are, it would be very difficult to get them altered, except by Act of Parliament?—I cannot help thinking that that is the case.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,035. What is the character of the land that is let at 2*s.* 6*d.* per acre?—High mountain land.

26,036. And the part that is let at 45*s.*, I take it, would be accommodation land?—Accommodation land near Bridgend, and near Port Talbot.

26,037. You say that provision should be made in your custom, for the laying down of pasture land. In the absence of that provision, do you know of any cases, where tenants have written to their landlords for their consent, to lay down pasture according to the 1st Schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not know of any case.

26,039. Of course, you know that laying down pasture, is a very costly proceeding on the part of a farmer?—It is very costly.

26,040. And that if he left his farm, he would not get any compensation whatever for it?—It is for that reason I suggest that the present custom be amended, and that it be compulsory to compensate him.

26,041. What is the reason that the tenants do not write to their landlords, to obtain their consent, according to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I am afraid that very many tenants have never read the Agricultural Holdings Act.

26,042. They rely entirely on the custom?—Yes, they rely entirely on the custom.

26,043. Are they aware that they would not get any compensation for laying down permanent pasture?—I cannot say what they are aware of, or what they are not aware of.

26,044. I think that Mr. George Thomas, of Ely Farm, made a similar suggestion to what you have made?—He did at Cowbridge.

26,045. Are any of the tenants on the Margam estate still under the old covenant?—The old covenant to repair?

26,046. Yes?—The great majority are under the old covenant to repair.

26,047. Do you not think that is the reason in many cases, perhaps generally, why the rateable value is higher than the rental? Of course the farms are let on the condition that the tenant does the repairs, and they are let so much lower accordingly?—Yes.

26,048. But the officers of the county council would not recognise such a thing; they would take the value of the farm with the buildings on it?—Yes.

26,049. Is it not possible, that that is the reason, why the rateable value is higher than the rental per acre?—I can only say that it is rather an unusual thing for that to be so. I do not know what was in the mind of the valuer, because I did not speak to him on the subject. I only give it for a fact; how he arrived at his valuation I cannot say.

26,050. Of course he would take the buildings into calculation, in arriving at the value of the farm?—But if the buildings were in a bad state of repair, he would have made the rateable value less, would he not, instead of more?

26,051. Yes, he would, if they were bad, certainly?—I am sorry to say that the buildings are in a bad state, many of them, on these farms that he has valued higher than we rent them at.

26,052. But does it not occur to you, that that is a reason why the rateable value should be higher than the rental?—It may be a reason, certainly.

26,053. How far does the local board area of Bridgend extend?—I could not say how far the local board area of Bridgend extends. I do not think that the local board area of Bridgend extends very much out of the outskirts of this town, but the local board area of Margam extends over the 18,000 acres of Margam parish.

26,054. Are the sanitary rates and other rates very high?—Yes, they are very high; they are 2*s.* 1*d.* and 2*s.* 3*d.* now.

26,056. It is not a question of voting, you know. If they made an application to the Local Government Board, they would send down a Commissioner to make an inquiry. If he was convinced that they had a good case they would be exempt to a certain extent from these sanitary rates?—But would it not be only on the recommendation of the local board, not on the recommendation of a small portion of the ratepayers. Would not there have to be a public meeting convened and a vote taken at a public meeting. I defer to Mr. Brynmor Jones upon the point.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,057. What is the point?—Mr. Richard Jones was saying that if the farmer ratepayers in the local board district were to apply to the

Local Government Board, they might have an area mapped out, in which they would not have to pay the sanitary rate, the district rate on their land. But my idea is (I may be wrong) that that could only be done, after calling a public meeting of all the ratepayers, and that there would be a poll of the parish if demanded.

26,058. This is my impression, but of course one could not give a definite answer, without looking to the Act of Parliament?—I am afraid that is so, and then as the townspeople were in a great majority, the farmers would have no chance upon the point whatever.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,059. I am not certain upon the point, but I thought it was otherwise?—I will certainly look it up, and if we can do anything in Margam parish, you may be bound we shall.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,060. It is impossible to remember the whole of these Acts of Parliament?—Yes. If I might make one suggestion about repairs, I think it has been generally conceded that farmers prefer to rent under large landowners than under small landowners, and I think one or two witnesses, one witness at least, said to day, that small landowners could not afford to put up the buildings that were necessary and do the repairs. What I think would be a very good thing, if it could be possibly arranged, would be that the Government should lend these small owners money at the price of Consols, so that they might do the necessary repairs, because I am quite certain that a tenant cannot pay rent unless he has proper buildings. I think if the Government would lend these small landowners money at 2½ or 3 per cent., they would be able to do what is necessary. They have to borrow money now at 5 and 6 per cent., and it is almost impossible for them to do it with the present rents.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,061. You make that as a recommendation?—As a recommendation.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,062. May I ask whether yours is a rural sanitary district or urban?—It is a local board area, which combines the offices of a rural sanitary authority and an urban sanitary authority. It is what would be a district council, when the District Councils Bill passes. It will be a district council instead of a local board.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,063. You have had some experience in farming in England—Yorkshire—have you not?—I was agent for seven years in Yorkshire.

26,064. What might be the difference in the manner of living between the Welsh farmer and the English farmer?—I think, as a rule, the Welsh farmer lives more simply, because, as a rule, the holdings are smaller. On the estate where I was in Yorkshire, the holdings were very large, and the farmers were as good as the landlords really.

26,065. Some of them drove in their carriage and pair, I think?—Yes, I am afraid they are not doing that now, but they were.

26,066. I notice again in your statement, that you have given abatements in 1886 of 25 per cent.?—Mr. Talbot did that.

26,067. Do you not think, that you should have given the same abatement in 1892 as that. The abatement in 1892 was 15 per cent. Do you not think the times in 1892 were equally as bad as, if not worse, than they were in 1886?—I think, sir, that if you put against that the enormous sum that Miss Talbot has spent on her estate in the last three years, one will weigh against the other.

26,068. You give the same abatement to all tenants, then?—Yes, all alike; with the exception of a tenant having only a rental of 10*l.* a year. I think it was for tenants of 15*l.* and upwards.

26,069. Yes, we had that yesterday, I think?—I speak from memory upon that point.

26,070. You spoke just now, about the sheep having got into a bad state. How do you account for that?—Only the sheep in the area of the copper smoke district. The sheep in the other parts of the Margam estate are as good as and as healthy as ever they were.

26,071. They are not healthy with the copper smoke?—They are not healthy with it.

26,072. Do you think Miss Talbot would allow the game to be let to the tenants; we have had a tenant before us, who would gladly take the game himself?—I believe Mr. Talbot's idea was, that the rents were low, and one reason was, because the tenants might have to put up with something from the game. I may say that the rent of Mr. Thomas David, of Hafod Haulog, who complained to you about the game, although he had never made any complaint to me, is only 7*s.* 9*d.* an acre. He holds 167 acres odd at 65*l.*, and that equals 7*s.* 9*d.* an acre. I am quite certain, that his farm is worth more than that, unless something were taken into account.

26,073. I quite see that. But if a tenant should now come to you, and ask you to let him the game that is let now to another, would you be disposed to do it?—I cannot say what Miss Talbot would be disposed to do.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,075. We had at Gower something about the Gower estate of Miss Talbot amongst others, and it turned out that the farm buildings and so forth, were in a very sad state of repair down there?—In Gower.

26,076. Yes?—I do not know anything about Gower.

26,077. I was going to ask you whether on the Margam estate, the outbuildings and farm buildings were in a better state than at Gower; but if you do not know Gower you cannot form a judgment?—No, I cannot say.

26,078. Then, at any rate, you do not approve of the late Mr. Talbot's policy?—I do not think that the 10 per cent. which he took off the tenants' rent, did either the estate or them any good whatever.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,079. Your answer to the preferential claim to rent is this, that the farmers are in favour of a preferential claim as a protection against small tradesmen. I suppose you would consider that when a farmer obtains goods from a tradesman, the debt is as honourable on the part of the tradesman, as rent due to the landlord?—Yes.

26,080. Do you not think that a tradesman is as entitled to his debt as the landlord is to his rent?—Yes, I think so, certainly.

26,081. Do you think this is a happy wording then; you say, "As a protection against small tradesmen," as if they were spoliators or robbers?—I only say that a tradesman or small tradesman might distrain on the tenant, where the landlord would not.

26,082. "Distrain" is not the right word. You mean issue an execution?—Issue an execution.

26,083. And then your point is, that the landlord is not so likely to distrain for rent, as a tradesman who has not got the same personal connexion with the tenant, is likely to issue execution?—Yes.

26,084. Still that raises an ethical question: is it right for the landlord to hold that always over, and prevent tradesmen getting their debts paid, simply because he likes his tenant?—I believe it is the wish of the majority of the tenants. I have asked several on various estates, and they all agree on the same point, and I believe the tenant farmers I have asked that question of, have said the same thing.

26,085. But do you think the small tradesman would say the same thing, if he was asked. It is perhaps questionable, is it not?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,086. Did you read the account of the Farmers' Conference in London about 12 months ago?—Yes, I did.

26,087. Are you aware that they passed a resolution in favour of the abolition of the law of distress?—No, I did not see that.

26,088. You will see it is so, if you get the official report?—I think they passed a good many resolutions.

26,089. They passed that amongst others?—They passed a good many, which were not of much account.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,090. Your point is, that, on the whole this power of distraint of the landlord is not a bad thing from the tenants' point of view?—That is my point.

26,091. You admit that the preferential position of the landlord, is a bad thing for the other creditors?—Yes.

26,092. And its existence, of course, is an infraction of the theory of our law that all debts of the same degree, should be payable pari passu, out of the means even of an insolvent person?—Yes.

Chairman.

26,093. I have some questions handed in. Mr. John Williams asks, "Do you know Mr. "Thomas Morris, of Llandough, an old tenant of "yours?"—Yes, very well.

26,094. Mr. John Williams also asks, "Can "you tell the Commissioners, how many pheas-"ants were reared on the Margam estate since "last spring?" Do you happen to know that?—I think about 1,400 or 1,500.

26,095. "How many keepers and under-"keepers have you on the estate?"—Miss Talbot has two keepers and three under keepers, and the rest are trappers, who are employed in order to keep the rabbits down on the estate. If the farmers kept the rabbits down themselves, there would be no need to have so many.

26,096. The following question is by Mr. Watkin Bevan: "How many pheasants were "turned out at Collwyn this year, and what "extent is Collwyn?" Do you happen to know that?—I do not know the place by that name, my Lord; it is Pyle Wood that is referred to.

26,097. Then there are further questions by Mr. Watkin Bevan: "How many pheasants "were hatched this year at Margam?" You said 1,500. "Is rent still paid for land taken by the "Great Western Railway in the vicinity of Pyle?"—I do not think so. I do not think the tenant would consent to pay for land that he had not got.

26,098. "And have tenants' rents been re-"duced from time to time as land was taken by "the company?"—I believe always.

26,099. "Does Miss Talbot place the same "confidence in her tenants, as she places in her "keepers?"—I think, my Lord, comparisons are odious. But I am sure Miss Talbot places the greatest confidence in her tenants.

26,100. "If she did, what necessity would "there be for the employment of keepers?"—I can only say that I am in receipt of several letters, during the time I have been agent of the Margam estate, from tenants on lands which we do not preserve, and have no keepers upon, asking me to send up somebody to look after the place, because it is overrun with trespassers, and they do not know what to do. I believe, in many cases, if it was not for the keepers, the land would be overrun with tramps and other people, because the farmers have complained to me several times, that it is no use saying anything to anybody coming mushrooming and blackberrying, as they do not take any notice whatever. But when the keepers speak to them they do take notice, and although the keepers may have faults, and I am quite willing to acknowledge that they have faults, I think that is a benefit that they do render to the tenant.

26,101. This question is handed in by Mr. T. J. Hughes, "Can you state what are the fresh "obligations on the tenant, imposed by the new "agreement. Is the sale of hay, &c. pro- "hibited?"—I should like to say, with regard to the new agreement, that it was considered, I think almost by everyone, that it was necessary to have a fuller agreement than that half sheet of paper, which I handed in. Miss Talbot then looked about to see what agreement she should adopt, and she ultimately decided to adopt the agreement in use on Lord Wimborne's estate in Glamorganshire. It has been in use now for 15 years, or perhaps more, and all the tenants on Lord Wimborne's estate are, I believe, very well satisfied with it. Miss Talbot thought that she could not do better than adopt the same agreement, and it is almost word for word the same, except, I believe, as to the question of hay. I inserted the words that they could sell hay with the permission of the landlord or the agent. I have several applications from tenants to sell hay, and in every case I have granted permission; in fact, I have told them that with hay at this price it is better for them to sell it, and keep their corn and grind their corn, for which they can get very little; it is better for them to sell what they can get most money for.

See 24,991, 26,124.

26,102. The following question is by Mr. T. J. Hughes: "Will you give particulars of "the case on the Margam estate (referred to "yesterday), in which a building lessee of a "cottage was compelled to pay 20*l.* extra to his "ground rent, as a condition of consent to use "the premises as a small shop?"—It was the custom on the Margam estate, in the small towns and villages that belonged to Mr. Talbot, to discourage the keeping of so many shops. He thought that they cut each other's throats, and did no good to any one, and his practice was to charge a license—to make the tenant take out a license, which was only from year to year, if he wanted to keep a shop, and he could go out at any time. That is how it arose. With regard to that 20*l.*, I am sorry to say that there was a mistake over that. The amount that Miss Talbot said that Mrs. Hanford, this person in question, was to pay was 10*l.*; and owing to some mistake, another agent of Miss Talbot's charged 20*l.*, and I believe Miss Talbot has put the matter right since. Miss Talbot spoke to me only the other day about it, and said she was very sorry that there was the mistake about it.

Mr. Grove.

26,103. Then the money has been refunded?—The money will be refunded. I do not think it has ever been paid.

Chairman.

26,104. The following question is by Mr. Edward John: "There is in Miss Talbot's agree- "ment a clause that tenants are not to sell hay "or straw; is that consistent with the fact "that the estate includes large mineral and "manufacturing properties, where the inhabi- "tants are necessarily large consumers of "hay and straw?"—I think I have explained that.

26,105. Yes, you have answered that question?—I have answered that question.

26,106. "From where are they to get the "same if from not farmers." That is also answered practically. The following questions are by Mr. Thomas Howell: "Did Miss Talbot "receive 35*l.* 5*s.* surplus of the workmen's "poundage and grants, when she took the "Bryndû School into her hands." Could you answer that question?—I can say, with regard to the Bryndû Schools, Mr. Talbot had the Bryndû Colliery, the coke ovens, and other works appertaining to it, for a great many years. At Mr. Talbot's death, I strongly advised Miss Talbot to give it up, if she could get a lessee, and she did this, and the lessee did not wish to take over the school, and the school remained the property of Miss Talbot. Any balance that Mr. Howell speaks of, there was the balance of working, it was not only the workmen's poundage. I will say, with regard to those schools, that Miss Talbot is at present spending 1,200*l.* on those schools in the erection of larger class-rooms, and is making them larger and better altogether. I may say, my Lord, that the matter was brought up yesterday evening by several people, and several tenants said to me: "We are only too thankful to "Miss Talbot for providing the education of "this populous place at Kenfig Hill, as it would "have entailed a rate of 7*d.* or 8*d.*, in the pound, "if she had not done so."

26,107. Mr. Howell also asks: "Is it true that "Miss Talbot has refused ground to build a "chapel house at Groes, Margam." Can you answer that question?—There is a chapel there.

26,108. The question is, whether she has refused ground to build a chapel house?—I do not know for certain about this. Miss Talbot would object to a lease. I do not know whether it was a lease that was asked for, or anything particular, but Miss Talbot objects to any lease just round the park, she prefers the cottages not to be let by anything but yearly agreements.

26,109. Is it a chapel house not a chapel?—A chapel house.

26,110. What is your answer to the question?—I think a refusal might have been made, because Miss Talbot will not let any property just round the house and park on lease, and naturally nobody would wish to build unless they had a 99 years' lease.

Chairman—continued.

26,111. Was a request made to build a chapel house there?—No, not that I know of.

Mr. Grove.

26,112. Is there any chapel already built near to Margam Castle in any part?—Yes, there is a very large chapel, that was built during Mr. Talbot's time.

26,113. Was it a house for the minister of that chapel, do you think, that was wanted?—I do not know for a fact, but it might very likely have been. I do not think that the request was ever put directly to Miss Talbot.

Chairman.

00. 26,114. A question is sent up by Mr. Howell: "Are the tenants of land through which railways go, allowed for the loss, or do they pay the same rents?"—That has been answered, I may say, my Lord, with reference to Mr. Howell's statement yesterday about a field under water, that that field had nothing to do with Longland Farm. It was one of the fields down on the moors, where we clean out the ditches, and unfortunately it was covered with water about 30 years ago, owing to the working of the minerals under it.

Mr. Grove.

26,115. It was caused by subsidence of the land?—It was through subsidence of the land.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,116. Do you often have such cases of subsidence?—Yes, they are constantly occurring.

26,117. What do you do, do you allow in the rent?—We allow in the rent, and the tenant of the minerals undertakes to take over the land, that is covered with water.

Chairman.

26,118. This is a question by Mr. Hughes: "Does Lord Wimborne reserve the game in his agreements." Do you happen to know that?—I do not know whether anything is said in the agreements about it, but I believe in every case, Lord Wimborne's tenants have the shooting.

26,119. Questions by Mr. Vincent: "Have you had experience in England?"—I was agent for seven years there, in Yorkshire.

26,120. "Do you think there is any ground for saying that rents are higher, in proportion to the quality of land in Wales, than in England?"—I do not think there is any ground whatever for saying that.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,121. Could you give us an approximate calculation of the money spent, in buying food for these pheasants, when they were turned out on the different farms?—I could send the Commission the bills for the amount of food which was bought for the pheasants, which was very large indeed.

26,122. I do not mean pheasants that are reared, but the ones that are put out?—The ones that are put out. I could hand in to the Commission bills which amount to a considerable sum.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,123. Could you give us very roughly the number of the tenants that you have on the Margam estate?—I could not now, but I could let you have it by Saturday at Cardiff.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. T. J. Hughes re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

991, 26,124. You gave evidence yesterday?—Yes. I wish to say that the case of Hanford, was one which came under my notice professionally in this way.

26,125. What was the case of Hanford?—It was the case which was referred to by Mr. Knox in answer to the question I put to him just now, where a largely increased rent was asked.

26,126. On account of the shop?—Yes. In that case the person worked in one of the works at Cwmavon, and had a wife and family. One of the sons was a sharp lad, and they thought it would be a good thing if they could assist the man, who was rather in ill-health, by starting a little business. They were lessees of their cottage; it was a small cottage; I think the ground rent was something under 2*l.*, or something like that amount. As a condition of the consent to opening the small shop in this cottage, 5*l.* a quarter was asked and was demanded as a condition by the Margam estate. I have seen, I have handed it over now to the official receiver, but I have seen the written notification to that effect, and the estate reserved to themselves the right, at the expiration of three months' notice, at any time to withdraw that consent at their will and pleasure. I am not aware that there was any mistake at all about the amount being asked. I am not aware that there was any refunding of the whole or any portion of it. In fact, the man has had to file his petition in bankruptcy; I filed his petition two months ago. The official receiver would be very glad to receive, I have no doubt, from the Talbot estate, a cheque in respect of the sum which is proposed to be refunded.

26,127. Do you wish to state that the bankruptcy of this man was in consequence of that?—I cannot say that, but the man filed his petition in bankruptcy.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,128. Which man, the son or the tenant?—The tenant himself.

26,129. For what amount is he indebted?—Speaking roughly, 600*l.* or 700*l.*

26,130. Then a matter of 5*l.* would be of no value, practically?—Oh, no, I do not suggest it for that reason.

26,131. Did the estate build anything; did they build the shop?—No; he was a building lessee; it was his own cottage originally.

26,132. Then they expended nothing on it in any way?—Nothing at all. They got 20*l.* a year, for allowing him to alter an ordinary cottage window into a plate glass window.

26,133. Would not the fact that he was obliged to file his petition in bankruptcy soon after, show that he was not a suitable person to open a shop?—I do not know how soon after; I do not know when the permission was granted; I do not know how long ago it was that that arrangement was made.

26,134. It has just come into your hands lately?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,135. But if there was any discretion to be used by the landlord, that fact would rather tend to show that a wise discretion would have been used in refusing consent?—I have no doubt whatever that if the Margam estate had taken the ordinary proceedings, under the Conveyancing Act to claim damages for breach of covenant, not to alter the premises into business premises, they would have got nominal damages, say, 40*s.*; they would not have had anything like the capitalised value of 20*l.* a year.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Rees Thomas called and examined.

Chairman.

26,136. You live at Hall Farm, Pyle?—Yes.

26,137. Is that on the Margam estate?—Yes.

26,138. What do you wish to tell the Commissioners; what do you wish to speak about in particular?—I would first of all mention to you, that Miss Talbot made it known, through her agent, and some others, that she was quite willing and would be very glad for any of her tenants to give evidence before this Commission; and as a consequence a meeting was called of the tenants, and (unfortunately) I was one named to come here and give evidence. The evidence which I want to give you first I should give in their behalf as well as for myself. I want to point out to you, that we are suffering from the great depression that is going on in the farming trade, and has been going on for the last 20 years. When I started farming it was in the year 1873. Beef at that time touched 10*d.* a pound; from that to now it has been receding all the way down; at present it is not more than 6*d.* For that reason, and for the reason that mutton has gone down at the same rate, the farm produce does not produce sufficient money to meet the demands that come upon the farmers. I think that is the evidence I have to offer to you, as far as depression is concerned.

26,139. Have there been any permanent reductions of rent? I suppose you complain of the rents on the Margam estate generally, do you?—There have been no permanent reductions, since I am farming on the estate.

26,140. Do you consider that the rent on the Margam estate is generally too high?—That is what the tenants wish me to point out.

26,141. That they are rented too high?—Yes.

26,142. Was Miss Talbot asked for a reduction of rent a year ago?—A little more than a year ago, Miss Talbot was asked to make reductions of rents.

26,143. What did she do?—At once, well, I think in less than a fortnight, all her tenants received letters from her saying that she would not reduce the rent, but would make an abatement equal to 15 per cent. on their rents.

26,144. Then you did not consider that sufficient?—Well, I cannot answer that question. For myself I did not.

26,145. And is that the general opinion of the tenantry?—I could not express that; I could not say. For myself I do not consider it sufficient.

26,146. But you are not empowered to say that?—They did not tell me to say that.

26,147. Have you any reason to complain of any game on the farm you occupy?—On the farm I occupy, I have no reason at all to complain of game.

26,148. Do any of the tenant farmers who are near the coverts cry out about the game?—The farmers near the coverts, are not as well off as I am. There is no doubt, there is an excessive amount of game in some parts of the estate.

26,149. But we have heard that the pheasants are very well fed; there is a great deal of corn in the coverts, of course for the pheasants?—Miss Talbot puts her game in the coverts when they put them out from their breeding places, and I think everything is done to try and keep them there.

26,150. They are given corn and wheat, and so forth?—Yes, and barley; but if game are put out on to a field where corn is, it is more than anybody could expect, that they should keep away from it. I think everything is done to try and prevent them doing any damage.

26,151. Have any complaints been made to Miss Talbot?—I do not know what has been made to Miss Talbot. I know there were complaints made to Mr. Talbot, and I believe there were complaints made to Miss Talbot.

26,152. Have you ever had a deputation of farmers to wait on anybody to mention this?—Not this particular point—another point.

26,153. You have written down "a deputa- " tion of farmers waited upon Mr. Knox in the " early part of last winter." That is about the wild geese, is it?—Yes.

26,154. Do the wild geese do any harm?—I should like to say first of all, before I get to the wild geese, that I think if the tenants on the Margam estate were to make a complaint at the proper quarter, Miss Talbot would do all that she could to remedy any evil that existed. I think I can undertake to tell you that Miss Talbot does not trouble her head very much about the game, especially if she finds they may do any damage. I know that, and I can speak conscientiously.

26,155. What about the wild geese; are they troublesome?—When I say that Miss Talbot would at once remedy the evil respecting the game, I want to point out that the wild geese have been preserved, well, as long as I can remember, and I have always lived on the Margam estate. I think they have been quite as closely preserved as the game have been, and in the time of Mr. Talbot, it was not a very nice thing to attempt to kill a goose. They still kept getting thicker and thicker, and at last this depression and other things coming upon us, we thought this would be one remedy, if we could get rid of the wild geese. We came together at a meeting, and I was one of the deputation appointed to call on Mr. Knox, to ask him to lay the matter before Miss Talbot, and to ask her if she would allow us to kill the geese and drive them away. In a very short time we received a letter from Mr. Knox, saying that Miss Talbot was quite willing for us to shoot the geese and drive them away as we liked, and we availed ourselves of that opportunity.

26,156. Are there any geese there now?—Oh, no, it is too soon yet.

26,157. But do they come every year?—Oh yes, thousands of them.

26,158. Do you really mean thousands of them?—Yes, thousands of them. I cannot be contradicted.

26,159. I mean, that is not a fashion of speaking, you really mean that?—I really mean that.

26,160. Great flocks of them?—Great flocks of them.

26,161. Whence do they come?—Some say they come from Norway.

26,162. But when do they come?—It will depend a great deal on the weather. They begin to come in about a month, I should think.

Chairman.

26,163. Has Mr. Talbot spent much money on repairing farm buildings and farm houses?—Mr. Talbot did not spend as much as he ought to have spent, there is no doubt, but Miss Talbot is spending thousands of pounds annually, in repairing the farm houses and farm buildings.

Chairman—continued.

26,164. And the estate was in bad order when she took it over?—Very bad.

26,165. And it is now getting satisfactory?—It is not yet getting satisfactory.

26,166. Not yet?—No. What Miss Talbot has done is done very well indeed. Unfortunately Miss Talbot has had to do a great many farm houses and buildings, which took a lot of work and time and money, but I am given to understand that the work is to be carried on in a different way from henceforth. She is now going to take the repairs piecemeal rather. She is going to get over the estate, by first of all doing what is most necessary for the farming. I think that is the complaint at present, that she is spending too much money and time on what has been already done.

26,167. I do not quite follow that?—For the reason that she will not get round the estate quick enough.

26,168. Then what they are going to do now, is to do what is absolutely necessary, and then leave the rest?—To get over it a second time.

26,169. But those are quite satisfied, who have been fortunate enough to have their farm buildings repaired?—I think more than satisfied.

26,170. Is there anything else you wish to say?—Yes. I should like to point out to you that we, in our parish, have an annual ploughing match, with the object of improving the agricultural labourer and bringing the labourer nearer to the farmer, the farmer nearer to the agent, and the agent nearer to the landlord. At the end of each ploughing match we have a little dinner. We meet together, and we have our discourses. Each one of us has to say what he has to say, and I consider that it is a very good opportunity to bring up any grievance or any matter that wants to be ventilated. I remember the speech at Kenfig Hill. I must first of all point out to you that Mr. Knox has been most ready to come and assist us at these annual gatherings. Ever since he has been in Margam he has attended every ploughing match dinner, and he is a great acquisition to us, and gives us a great deal of help. I think it is only right that I should say that at the Margam ploughing match, as we call it, Mr. Knox was present at the dinner. So was I, and I heard his speech. I heard it pointed out yesterday, that Mr. Knox should say he wished the people would not give evidence, and I understood it to be at this Commission. I want to point out to you that it was nothing of the sort. What Mr. Knox really did say, was that he hoped that political questions would not be mixed up with agriculture. He told us "Combine yourselves as much as eve. " you like at your meeting, but do not let " politics interfere with agriculture." That is all I have to say. See 24,512.

26,171. A question is handed up by Mr. John Williams, "Have you been valuing damage by " game to Mr. Powell, late of Eglwysnunydd?" —No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Miles Roberts called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

26,172. Do you believe that differences of language, creed, or politics make any difference to the relation between landlord and tenant?—No.

26,173. Do you prefer tenancy from year to year to a lease?—I prefer year to year.

26,174. Judging by your own experience, do you think tenancy is reasonably secure in Wales?—I believe so.

26,175. Are you familiar with the terms on which you occupy your holding? Have you a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

26,176. Have you any agreement?—No.

26,177. Do you wish for a land court?—I ask for the same mode of arrangements with my landlord that I have at present.

26,178. Does the landlord do all the repairs in the new buildings?—Yes.

26,179. Is there any ground for saying, as has been said by some witnesses, that farmers are afraid to come forward?—No.

26,180. Do you believe the feeling between farmers and tenants in this county, is cordial?—Yes, my grandfather had occupied the same place, and I have never heard any complaint.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Saturday at 10 o'clock at Cardiff.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY.

The Town Hall, Cardiff, Glamorganshire, Saturday, 4th November 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

BENJAMIN D. MADDY called and examined.

Chairman.

26,181. Where do you live?—Penlline, near Cowbridge.

26,182. What is your profession?—Rabbit catcher.

See 25,992, 26,240. 26,183. What do you wish to tell the Commissioners?—I was in Bridgend on Wednesday and Thursday, and I heard the evidence as to the damage done by rabbits on the Margam estate, given by Mr. Knox, and he said he had had no complaints of damage done by rabbits on the land belonging to Miss Talbot.

26,184. On the Margam estate?—Yes.

26,185. Then you want to give evidence about the number of rabbits on the Margam estate; is that so?—On part of the estate.

26,186. What do you know about it?—What I have caught during this summer.

26,187. How many have you caught during this summer?—I have caught about 1,400 rabbits on a very small space of ground.

26,188. On how many acres?—I caught 800 on about 30 or 40 acres of land. I could not say exactly the acreage.

26,189. Were you employed by the estate?—By the tenant farmers.

26,190. When was that?—From May to October.

26,191. This year?—In this year.

26,192. Employed by whom do you say?—By the tenant farmers on the estate.

26,193. What arrangement do you make about rabbit catching?—I catch in some places by the dozen, and in other places on wages.

26,194. What arrangement had you in this instance?—By the dozen.

26,195. What did they give you per dozen?—4*s*.

26,196. Anything more?—And my food and lodging.

26,197. Have you anything more to say about the rabbits on this estate?—Only where I have been catching on this land, where Mr. Knox said there was no damage done; under Mr. Watts; the Herberts, St. Mary's Church Farm, I caught about 800 rabbits on from 30 to 40 acres of land. That was the land troubled with rabbits. See 36,035.

26,198. Is that close to the coverts?—It lays between two coverts.

26,199. Did you exterminate them?—Did you get them down very low then, or were any left?—There are a lot of rabbits left there now.

26,200. Have the tenants the right of killing rabbits?—I believe so, on that land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,201. Where do the rabbits burrow?—In the wood; in the coverts.

26,202. What about the fences?—The fences belong to the landlord.

26,203. In what state are the fences?—Well, pretty good, I believe, to keep stock out or anything of that sort, but not good enough to keep the rabbits out.

26,204. Who repairs the fences, the tenant or the landlord?—The landlord, I believe.

26,205. I suppose in the process of catching these rabbits, you observe the crops on the fields. Do you think they had done much damage?—Yes, very great damage in this instance.

26,206. To what had they done damage?—Well, as to this field, on this plot of land I allude to now, when I went there in May, the farmer asked me if I could come and catch the rabbits for him, as he said they were eating him up, and he had been talking to the keeper about keeping them down, and he said he would employ me if he could not do so, and he said he could not do it. In May I saw the farmer, and agreed to catch them for 4*s*. a dozen. I took 150 wires in the morning, and put them down on the runs, because there are always tracks where the rabbits travel. I went round that afternoon, and found that the keeper with his son, had laid a lot of wire down by that time opposite mine, all the way round, consequently I caught scarcely anything that night. I thought the next morning I might as well pull those wires up, as the keeper was catching them inside, and that if I shifted them to another part of the farm, the keeper would pull his up and shift them again. Instead of that I went to work and made another 80 new wires, and put them by another plantation. The next evening I went round about two hours afterwards, and found of the 80 there were over 40 knocked off and broken with a stick or something, and the rest of the 40 I could not find. Now I do not think it would be to the interest of anyone, barring the keeper, to do this work, and I think it very likely he did it. I talked it over with him, and he said perhaps his sons might have been there, and he said he would caution them. However, it was done daily, and I did not have any peace, and I told Mr. Watts I could not get rabbits in that way, and then I believe he wrote to Mr. Knox and stated the case to him, and afterwards I had better quiet on that farm.

26,207. What was on these fields?—The largest field out of the three by a little covert, was supposed to be kept in hay, and a couple of fields adjoining it, but the rabbits kept it down very nearly as bare as the floor of this hall. There were two or three fields of 8 or 9 acres, and another of 2 or 3 acres each, and it was kept down bare by the rabbits.

26,208. As a rabbit catcher, what is your experience; do you think that animals like to graze, where rabbits have gone?—No, I believe they poison what they get over.

26,209. They taint the grass?—Yes; there is nothing will eat after them, I believe.

26,210. These rabbits were in the neighbourhood of the coverts in which rabbits were preserved?—Yes, I believe they have been preserving them for years there.

26,211. Would it be possible by wiring, to keep the rabbits within the preserves, and to prevent their coming on the fields?—It might be possible by putting wire netting, and they would have to put it outside the fence, because they burrow through the fence underneath, and out on some occasions.

26,212. One question upon a general matter. Supposing you wanted on the estate to kill all the rabbits, is it a thing that can be done in one year, or must it be repeated year by year?—I do not know. I have been killing rabbits for many years, and I cannot kill the last whatever, although I have tried my best.

26,213. It is in the nature of the soil they burrow under, and you cannot really get rid of them altogether?—I do not believe it is possible to get rid of all.

Chairman.

26,214. Has the tenant a right to set wires in the fences of the coverts or not?—No.

Chairman—continued.

26,215. That is reserved to the landlord?—To the landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,216. How would you consider a wire fence, could prevent the rabbits coming through in the field, where the cattle and sheep graze?—I do not consider a wire fence could, but wire netting to a certain height and depth might prevent it.

26,217. Would not the cattle interfere with a wire fence. There must be something to protect the wire fences?—Yes, it would be a job to keep them out. I have known warrens now with wire round, and they either dig under or jump over, and get out somehow or other—some few—I do not say the majority of them.

26,218. The only way in which you think it could be done, would be to go inside to the covert and catch them there?—You would then have a better chance of destroying them.

26,219. There are some questions put in by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "You are employed by the "tenant farmers, are you not?"—By the tenant farmers.

26,220. Then Mr. Vincent may take it that the Ground Game Act is in operation on the Margam estate?—Yes, on this part of the estate, I believe it is.

26,221. "Are there more than 40 acres of "covert on the Llandough estate of 1,500 acres?" —I should believe so.

26,222. "Is that part of the estate to which you refer?"—Not altogether. The estate reaches further than where I have been catching.

26,223. These are questions by Mr. John Williams: "Have you been catching rabbits on "the Penlline estate?"—Yes.

26,224. To whom does that belong?—Captain Homfray. I hope I might be allowed to refer back to instances, having been a rabbit catcher for several years, at other places where I have been catching, and how I have been served between the landlord and tenant—I mean as the middleman between each.

26,225. If you have any statistics about the rabbits on any other estate, please give them?—Yes, I have been a rabbit catcher now for nearly seven years, and have been catching rabbits nearly all the time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,226. Do you find that rabbits are thicker on the Margam estate than on any other estate? —They have been thicker, than any other part that I have been to this summer. I have been on several different estates in different parishes, and I find them thicker there than any other place this summer. But at Penlline, in the summer of last year, I killed over 5,000 rabbits in one parish and sold them. See 36

Chairman.

26,227. As a professional man, do you consider that rabbits are in injurious numbers in your district?—Yes, too many by far.

26,228. You think there are too many rabbits on the ground?—Yes, I know, for instance, in Morelands, on the Penlline estate, 6 to 8 acres out of 12 to 20 acres have been cut clean off, and in other parts, half of it is cut off—thinned out through the fields.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,229. In what way have the landlords and the agents usually interfered with your business as a rabbit catcher?—I would say the keepers generally are those who interfere with me.

26,230. What do they do?—I will give you an instance. At Llansannor, they pulled up a wire netting, some time at the beginning of last hunting season, between the wood and a field of Mr. John's brother, Fistla Farm. That was part of the land from the warren, and the warren is swarmed with rabbits. I believe Mr. Alexander, of Cardiff, has the shooting this year. Well, Mr. John employed me to go there to catch, and I went there and set from 80 to 100 wires. The keeper laughed at me and said, I would not catch many there, and I said, "Why?" and he said "They won't come out." Well, I went to pick up my wires as I could not catch anything but a rabbit here and there, and then I found my wires were dropping off fairly, and they were new wires, which I had made the day previously. They were dropping off because vitriol or some acid, had been put on them, that completely burnt the wires off. I have known paraffin and other things, poured over my wires. This was close by the keeper's house. I have been stopped in that way several times by pouring paraffin over my wires, and carbolic acid and vitriol, so that I cannot catch any when they do come out, and I am forced to go where I can get my living. There are plenty there, although I cannot catch them.

26,231. This, you said, was on the Llansannor estate?—Yes.

26,232. In that instance, did you call the attention of your employer, the tenant farmer, to what had been done by the keepers?—Yes, many times.

26,233. Did you write or did he write to the landlord?—No, I never did, but I have told the landlord on different occasions about it.

26,234. What did he say about the matter?—He said he would not have them caught. The fences belonged to the farmer on this covert; it was a field planted some years ago in shrubs and trees, and since that it has been made into a warren. That is part of the warren, and the fence belongs, I believe, to the farmer.

26,235. Did he admit that he knew what the keepers had done?—I believe so, or I told him so, and he has always had the laugh of me.

26,236. Did he deny that the keepers had done anything of the sort?—He denied that the keepers had put this stuff on my wires. I have gathered a bunch together when they have been putting carbolic and paraffin over them, and said he could smell them for himself, but he refused to smell my wires, after I had gathered up 60 or 80 together.

26,237. Your impression is, notwithstanding his denial, that he knew about it?—Yes, the feed was so poor and kept down, that I could not get any runs, so I put my wires on the bank of the fence, and he ordered his keepers to pull up every wire, I put on the banks. Well, the keeper did so and took them to the house, and the keeper has told me "You cannot have "them back again, until you have gone to Sir "Joseph Spearman" (he is the landlord), and I have gone there and he has given me the wires back, only saying I am not to put them on the fences. They took them right away, off the ground.

Chairman.

26,238. This is a question by Mr. Knox: "Have you ever caught rabbits on the Margam "estate?"—Never, only on the Llandough estate; it belongs to the Margam estate. It belongs to Miss Talbot, the same landlady.

26,239. But not on the Margam estate?—Not on the Margam estate.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined on 51st and 59th Days.

Mr. EDWARD KNOX recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

e above.

26,240. Do you wish to rebut anything the last witness has said?—I only wish to state that the Llandough estate is 17 miles from the Margam estate, and has nothing whatever to do with it, and that the tenants on the Llandough estate have always caught rabbits; they have never been interfered with in any way; the rabbits belong to them, and I have never heard any complaints whatever. I think the fact that this man has been employed for a long time by the tenants to catch the rabbits, and that there are many rabbits there, shows that the tenants do not mind them. They have had perfect liberty to shoot and trap them, and do whatever they liked with them.

Chairman—continued.

26,241. You heard him say that the tenants had no right to trap the rabbits in the fences of the coverts?—I have never told any tenant not to trap a rabbit anywhere.

26,242. Is the Llandough estate under you?—Yes, my Lord.

26,243. You have heard it given in evidence, that the tenants in point of fact do not trap the rabbits in the fences of the coverts, and that they are under the impression, that they are not allowed to do so?—I have never told the tenants so and I did not know that they were under any impression whatever.

26,244. You have heard that in evidence to-day?—Yes, I have.

26,245. May we ask, what would be your action, if one of the farmers went into one of the woods and caught rabbits there?—The farmers would have no right to go into the wood; but I can show that there are not the rabbits on the Llandough estate, that he mentions.

26,246. You say distinctly that the farmers would have no right to go into the woods, to destroy the rabbits there?—Yes, not into the woods.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,247. Did not Mr. Watts tell us, that he had sent in to you some claim for compensation, in respect of the damage done by game?—I never received any claim for compensation. I never heard from him on the question. I have had no claim for compensation for damage from any tenant on the Llandough estate, during the last three years, while I have been agent.

26,248. I daresay my impression was wrong. I thought Mr. Watts gave evidence at Bridgend?—No, he did not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD LLEWELYN called and examined.

Chairman.

See 26,787.

26,249. Where do you live?—St. Fagans.

26,250. What are you?—I am a carpenter. I wish to speak respecting the evidence of Mr. Edward John, and of Mr. Corbett, as to the squatters at Llanbleddian. My grandfather, about the year 1830, built on same waste land at Llanbleddian, a house and buildings costing him, with his own personal labour about 200*l.*, the garden belonging to which, he had enclosed some years previously. The house was built by my grandfather, on the strength of a promise from the Bute estate officials, that a lease in perpetuity should be granted him, at a rent of 1*s.* a year. Before the 23 lots of squatters' premises were offered for sale, Messrs. Corbetts offered my mother 80*l.*, for the house. This she declined. On a re-valuation, made on behalf of the Bute office, she was offered 100*l.* This also she declined. Eventually she was forcibly ejected from the premises on to the road, by bailiffs accompanied by policemen. She was afterwards informed that she must take 100*l.* or nothing, and she accepted it. The house was afterwards let to Mr. David Jenkins for 8*l.* a year. My mother farmed about 30 acres of glebe land in the vicinity.

26,251. What sort of state was the house in, at the time your mother was offered 100*l.* for it?—A very good state.

26,252. It was built by your grandfather in 1830?—I could not say to the exact date, but somewhere near there.

26,253. When was your mother forcibly evicted?—In October 1880.

26,254. The house was 50 years old then, but in a good wear and tear condition?—Oh, yes, certainly.

26,255. A decent home, and in good condition?—The best in the village, as a cottage.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,256. Had you any agreement in writing at all, at the time the house was built?—Nothing whatever; no more than the promise. Of course my grandfather looked upon it pretty well as a freehold.

26,257. You could not remember the circumstances of the building yourself, I suppose?—No.

26,258. Then what you speak of, is from hearsay?—Well, from facts which have been handed to me from my grandmother and my mother.

26,259. Is it usual to build houses without a lease?—On those places.

26,260. Where do you say it was?—Llanbleddian, near Cowbridge.

26,261. Were there other houses built in the same way, without a lease?—Yes, there is one adjoining.

26,262. Can you say, from hearsay, whether those houses were built under the impression, that it was open to the commoners to build there?—Yes.

26,263. Others besides your mother thought that they might build there, and claim their houses?—Yes, on the strength of paying this shilling per year.

26,264. When was it, you were turned out?—In October, 1880.

26,265. Fifty years after the house was built?—Yes, near about.

26,266. Up to that time you had been paying the acknowledgment of 1*s.* a year?—Yes.

26,267. When other people built in a similar way, were they dealt with in the same way?—No, not the house adjoining.

26,268. Did they pay no acknowledgment then?—I could not say whether they paid an acknowledgment or not, but it is on the same class of ground; there is only the one hedge parting the two gardens.

26,269. Was the other house built during the same period?—Before, I think.

26,270. You do not know whether they paid an acknowledgment or not?—No, I could not say.

26,271. Why did you pay an acknowledgment?—Upon the strength of having security to the house.

26,272. By it, you acknowledged the right of the Marquess of Bute to the land?—I suppose my grandfather did, by paying 1*s.* a year to him, as lord of the manor.

26,273. That is the point I wanted to go to. I wanted you to tell me, whether you looked upon him as the manorial owner?—As the manorial owner.

26,274. You have told us that the next-door house, so far as you know, did not pay an acknowledgment?—I could not say.

26,275. Can you say, whether any of the other people who built at Llanbleddian, paid an acknowledgment?—I could not say, I am sure, about other people.

26,276. Do you think you were quite singular in having made an acknowledgment?—No, there were other people paying there, but I could not say who they were.

26,277. Do you consider that the 100*l.* paid was less than the value of the house?—Half the value. You can prove that by the rent they receive from it now, according to their own showing..

26,278. The 8*l.*, I think you have told us, has been received since?—Yes.

26,279. From 1880 to the present time?—Yes, up to the present time; so that they practically have had their money back in 12 years' purchase in that way.

26,280. Are you not aware that in general, when a shilling a year is paid as an acknowledgment, it means that it is not a permanent tenancy?—No. The people there look upon it pretty well as a freehold.

26,281. Are there not cases now, where 1*s.* a year is paid as an acknowledgment, simply on the ground of keeping up the right, to prevent its becoming a permanent right?—I could not say now, since those patches of ground were sold a few years ago, but there were people paying it, up to that time.

26,282. Were these houses put up originally, under the notion that if they were put up in a single night, it was legal?—Oh, no.

26,283. They were deliberately built upon portions of the waste?—Yes; in fact that house of my grandfather, so far as I can understand, the outbuildings and so forth, were not built for a few years afterwards, as he could come round, and he added bit by bit. I may say, there was a stable, cart-house, and cowshed with the cottage.

26,284. How much land was taken at the time, with the house?—I should say about 20 to 30 perches. I could not say the exact number.

26,285. Did that carry with it, a right of common on the waste?—Yes; but before this time there were three or four gardens adjoining, taken into the field at the back.

26,286. By your grandfather?—No; the landlord adjoining, withdrew those gardens into his field, so that they are enclosed with the field now.

26,287. How many others are in the same position with you?—Well, I could not say, I am sure.

26,288. Is yours a solitary instance?—Yes; as a case of eviction.

26,289. Then did the others buy their holding of the lord of the manor?—Some did, rather than be turned out.

26,290. You did not?—We had not the chance. They would not accept any terms from my mother when she offered them—rather than be turned out she would buy it herself—they would not give her the option.

26,291. I think you said the new rent was 8*l.*?—Yes.

26,292. You received 80*l.*?—Yes; they valued it at 100*l.*, but the solicitor charged 13*l.*, and where the rest went, I do not know.

26,293. Do you know how many years' purchase, a purchaser of that property would expect to give—what per-centage?—From 3 to 4 per cent.

26,294. Surely more?—Not on freehold; there is not an instance there, where more is to be got.

26,295. Then there is a great demand for them?—Yes, there is.

26,296. Do you think your mother had given offence in any way, to the officials on the Bute estate?—No; it was simply the greed of the Reverend Morgan, St. Hilary, who wanted the cottage to put into his field. He wanted the house put into his field, which was adjoining at the back, and you may say it was a case of land grabbing; and the other gardens he took in, but he had not so much resistance from them.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,297. Was he the vicar or rector?—The rector or vicar, I could not say which.

26,298. Is he the incumbent of the parish?—Not of that parish; the parish adjoining, St. Hilary.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,299. Is it possible that a clergyman should have coveted your mother's house and garden?—It is.

26,300. Did she ever refuse to pay this 1*s.* a year rent?—My grandmother always paid, mother never paid it. My mother was left a widow, and my grandmother gave the house to my mother to live in, rent free—she was left with six children.

26,301. Your mother never paid it?—She never had the opportunity. My grandmother died a few years before my mother; she died about 1876, I think.

26,302. For how many years did she live in the cottage, without paying any rent?—About 12 or 13 years.

26,303. And they forcibly turned her out?—They turned her on to the road, and she was on the road until that night, until my cousin came and took her in.

26,304. And back into the cottage again?—No, to another house.

26,305. They offered you 80*l.* for the house. Was there a valuer sent to value?—The Bute valuer valued it, but we could not value it at any price.

26,306. Did you have anyone to value?—They would not listen to anything; they would value it, and have it at their own price.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,307. Was this valuation under legal process. Had any judgment gone against your mother?—I expect there had been, because a person came three or four times with different papers, but I could not say what they were.

26,308. Who actually came and turned her out?—The bailiffs and police.

26,309. Of the county court?—Yes, of the county court.

26,310. Did your mother defend the action?—Well, no, she was advised it was no use going to law with a man like the Marquess of Bute, and she accepted the 80*l.*

26,311. Then what took place was this: there was an ejectment action, judgment given against your mother, and then a writ of possession issued, and she was turned out?—Yes, I suppose, that would have been the process.

26,312. Then I understand this is one of those cottages, about which Mr. Edward John gave evidence at Cowbridge?—Yes.

26,313. Mr. Corbett has given evidence before us about that, and according to his evidence, most of these squatters bought their holdings from the Bute estate?—This happened before the sale took place.

26,314. So far as I understand your statement, whether you may think it a hardship or not, at any rate you were treated better than the other people were, because the other people had to buy their holdings, whereas Lord Bute paid your mother 100*l.*?—She would have bought hers, if she had had a chance.

26,315. In the cases which Mr. Corbett referred to, and in the cases which Mr. Edward John referred to, the tenants bought from Lord Bute?—I do not know about all, some of them did.

26,316. Putting aside the question of the judgment, it appears to me that this case is rather the other way?—I cannot see it, when they got the place for half the value.

26,317. I am coming to that; that is another point. But these other persons to whom Mr. John referred, had actually had to pay money to Lord Bute for the house?—It would have been better for my mother to have bought it for the 100*l.*, than to have received the 100*l.* for it.

26,318. If it was exactly worth 200*l.*, there would not be much difference, but do you mean you would have preferred paying 100*l.* and having the house, to being turned out of it and receiving the 100*l.*?—By far, because it meant this, that she farmed a little, it turned the cattle out as well, because it is glebe land, and there is no shed or anything put up. The cattle are turned out ever since, summer and winter.

26,319. What became of your mother when she was turned out?—She was on the road until that night, and my cousin took her in, and she was never well afterwards.

26,320. Had she any means at all?—She had a little property.

26,321. Besides this?—Yes, just a little, and of course being left a widow, we lived on that. She brought six of us up on it and on the land she farmed.

26,322. The house is now let to Jenkins, I think you said, at 8*l.* a year?—Jenkins has gone from it, and there is another party paying the 8*l.* a year.

26,323. It does not matter about the actual name. Who is bound to repair under that—does the landlord repair or the tenant?—I could not say, I am sure.

26,324. Because I mean to say it is only 8*l.*, and it makes a good deal of difference whether the landlord or the tenant repairs, and who pays the insurance, and so forth?—There is no insurance down there.

Chairman.

26,325. Then you practically mean to say, that it ruined your mother to be turned out under those circumstances?—Yes, she had no place to carry on her business.

26,326. And the shock of the eviction affected her health as well?—Yes, she never recovered. For months she never slept.

26,327. She never recovered from the shock of the eviction?—No; it brought on a heart affection, from which she died on February 22nd, 1888.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. FREDERICK W. EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

26,328. You wish to make a statement?—Yes, on behalf of Mr. Thomas Evans. I have conveyed your Lordship's observations to Mr. Thomas Evans, upon the subject of his re-examination, in which he designed to reply to the evidence of Mr. Forrest, and to a letter of Lord Windsor. Mr. Evans desires me to say that, inasmuch as Mr. Forrest's evidence throughout impugned his, Mr. Evans's, veracity, and defamed his business and private character, he had carefully prepared evidence rebutting and correcting that of Mr. Forrest, and that he exceedingly regrets your decision, by which he is precluded from delivering it. He is of opinion that, as a matter of justice to himself, he should have been heard. Under the circumstances, dictated by the Commission, he contents himself with handing in two letters as to character, with the request that they may be read. [Witness handed in two letters.] He further requests that the written copy of his prepared evidence, which I beg to hand in, may be received by the Commission and printed in the Appendix of the Minutes of Evidence.

Chairman—continued.

26,329. I think, Mr. Evans, we had better be perfectly clear about this, because it is an important case, and the Commissioners would like to be distinctly understood the view that they take of this case. We consider that this case is an isolated one, but not at all typical of the relations that exist between the landlord and the tenants on the Windsor estate.

Chairman—continued.

The question between Mr. Thomas Evans and Lord Windsor has been very thoroughly gone into, and we do not consider that it is in any way a case for us to settle, but is clearly a case for arbitration or legal proceedings. The first of the case, as we understand it, is, that Mr. Evans surrendered a lease to Lord Windsor's agent, which gave him security of tenure for a certain number of years, for some consideration, about which, there appears to us to have been some dispute between Lord Windsor's agent and Mr. Thomas Evans. It is admitted that Mr. Thomas Evans became a yearly tenant on one of Lord Windsor's farms, and it is also clear, that he has received notice to quit. These, we consider, are the salient points of the case, which we will bear in mind when we consider the Report, on the general state of the law between landlord and tenant. But it is no part of our duty to comment upon the merits or demerits of any one particular case. There is one further fact I should like to draw the attention of Mr. Thomas Evans to, which is, that it was stated before the Commissioners that Mr. Thomas Evans had threatened to shoot Lord Windsor's agent. I pointed out to Lord Windsor's agent, when he made this statement, that this was a very serious charge, and a gentleman appeared before us, who corroborated this statement of Lord Windsor's agent. We should be extremely anxious to know, if Mr. Thomas Evans can in any way, explain away this most serious accusation. We should be, as Commissioners, extremely glad if in any way Mr. Evans could explain this, as a mistake or a misunderstanding?—Mr. Thomas Evans is prepared to do that, my Lord. Will you kindly have the letters as to character read. They are addressed to the Chairman and the members of the Commission.

26,330. Of course the question of character, you quite understand, opens a new case altogether, and if the question of character is gone into now, of course it will be probably gone into on the other side?—It is simply the testimony of those who have done business with him, and may be put against statements made at the meeting when Mr. Forrest was examined.

26,332. I want it perfectly to be understood, that there shall be no mistake afterwards, that you shall not say that you did not understand anything, because in your statement that you read out, I think there was a good deal of misunderstanding of what I explained to you, before the Commission sat. So that I wish there to be no misunderstanding about this: if these letters as to character are put in and read, other witnesses will be perfectly at liberty to come forward and give their information as well. That is distinctly understood?—It is for you to decide.

26,333. There is nothing for me to decide. Do you wish these letters read or not?—I wish them read, my Lord.

(Two letters were then read, which were respectively signed by 18 and 47 persons who testified that they had always found Mr. Thomas Evans "honourable and just in his dealings, "and courteous and gentlemanly in his "demeanour.")

Mr. Thomas Evans recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

e 4822

26,334. What is your statement?—"It is "untrue that I ever threatened (Question 4823) "to shoot Mr. Forrest. On hearing the charge, "I immediately denied and repudiated it in the "columns of the local papers, and I forwarded a "copy of my refutation to the Commission on "May 29th. Like many Welshmen I am often "hasty and vehement in speech, but I have no "wish to do Mr. Forrest or anyone else personal "violence. What may have given rise to the "story so skilfully turned to account against

"me, was my saying that if Mr. Forrest "were in Ireland, and treated tenants as he "had treated me, he would be shot. Mr. Brace's "story (Question 4973) is refuted by his own "answers made to Mr. Brynmor Jones."

Chairman.

I will now call Mr. William Spiller to give rebutting evidence as to character put in by Mr. Vincent.

Mr. William Spiller called and examined.

Chairman.

e 4823.

26,335. You have been police constable at St. Fagan's for 10 years?—I have, my Lord.

26,336. How long have you known Mr Evans?—10 years and over.

26,337. What condition has he been in for the last six or seven years, in your opinion?—Given way to drink very much.

26,338. Do you consider him quarrelsome, under the influence of drink?—Very quarrelsome.

26,339. Will you state what happened, when Mr. Evans arrived at St. Fagan's by train, on one occasion?—I remember him arriving by train and going to the "Plymouth Arms,"

St. Fagan's. I saw that he was the worse for drink. I followed him in, and advised the landlady not to serve him, as he was worse for drink.

26,340. Anything more?—After some little time he went away and used a lot of abusive language. On several occasions, I have been sent for by the landlady, on account of Mr. Thomas Evans' abusive language in the house, being under the influence of drink.

26,341. Have you ever been sent for by his wife?—I have, in 1891.

26,342. What happened then?—One Sunday afternoon I was sent there. The wife sent for me; the wife and family were turned out of the house. She informed me he had threatened to shoot her.

26,343. What condition was he in, at that time?—I did not see him. She informed me he was drunk and had a gun in his possession. I advised her to stay away till he got sober, which she did.

26,344. Have you ever heard him make any statements about Mr. Forrest?—Yes; on several occasions I have heard him say that he would shoot him; that he was bound to be hung some day, and he would be hung for shooting a Scotchman.

26,345. In what condition was he when he made those statements?—Always drunk, or under the influence of drink.

26,346. Have you anything more to say?—Nothing, my Lord.

26,347. Just one question: I suppose if he were to turn really boná fide teetotaler you would consider him a pretty good sort of fellow, would you not?—He is a very nice man, when he is sober.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,348. Have you ever laid any information against him?—I have not.

26,349. Then when you talk about his being drunk, or under the influence of drink, to what extent do you mean?—I beg your pardon.

26,350. To what extent do you mean he is under the influence of drink—is he drunk and incapable ever?—Never incapable: he will always walk away, when I tell him.

26,351. Are you in the habit of following people into public-houses, and warning the people not to supply them?—When I see them drunk going in.

26,352. That is not an answer to my question: are you in the habit of following people into public-houses?—No.

26,353. You think that on the occasion, to which you refer, he really was in such state that a publican ought not to supply him with liquor?—Certainly.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,354. Do you consider that his condition was such, that he would not make a good tenant? Was it habitually such as to prevent his being a good tenant of a farm?—Under the state that I have seen him, he could not be a good tenant; he would not know what he was about, half his time.

Mr. Grove.

26,355. Was it very often that he was in that condition?—The last two years, he was in it more than half his time, barring three months. These last three months, I have not seen him the worse for drink.

Chairman.

26,356. The following question is put by Mr. Fred. Evans: "Have you ever known Thomas "Evans to drink anything but lemonade and "beer?"—I have.

26,357. Is not Mr. Evans a teetotaller, now?—That I cannot answer.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. C. H. KEMPTHORNE called and examined.

Chairman.

26,358. What is your profession?—I am pupil of Mr. Forrest.

26,359. How long have you lived at St. Fagan's?—The last three years.

26,360. Where did you reside before that?—At Neath, before I came to St. Fagan's.

26,361. Do you know Mr. Evans by sight?—Oh, yes. I lodged at his house, his farm.

26,362. Do you know anything about his habits of life?—Yes, I have seen him drunk on several occasions; he has come home drunk.

Chairman.

Is this evidence insisted on?

Mr. Forrest.

My Lord, I shall be very glad if it is withdrawn. I was very reluctant to give Mr. Vincent consent to put it in.

Chairman.

If you withdraw it, I think it will be better.

Mr. Forrest.

Certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. F. W. Evans.

My Lord, may the evidence that the witness offers to the Commission in the shape of a letter, be added as an appendix to the minutes of evidence.

Mr. F. W. Evans—continued.

Chairman.

I have put it as plainly as possible before, that we must not go into these personal questions.

Mr. F. W. Evans.

This is not personal.

Chairman.

It is what was sent to me last night, I suppose.

Mr. F. W. Evans.

Yes.

Chairman.

We cannot have the matter threshed out again.

Mr. EVAN EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

26,363. You are a county councillor for the Ogmore Division?—Yes.

26,364. Will you kindly tell us, where you reside at the present time?—At Porthcawl.

26,365. What do you wish to tell the Commission?—I will read the evidence, if your Lordship will permit me.

26,366. Certainly, if you please?—"My father-in-law, the late Mr. Thomas Edwards, held "Caer Lan Farm, in the parish of Llantrissant, "for a period of 35 years. During that time "he, by the expenditure of capital and labour, "greatly improved the condition of the farm. "He had no allowance for these improvements "which he had effected: on the contrary, from "time to time his rent was increased, in conse-"quence of the improvements effected by his "own labour, and expenditure of capital. The "original rent of the farm was 38*l.* per annum. "This was increased upon three occasions, to an "ultimate sum of 62*l.*, being an increase at the "rate of 65 per cent. It was then let by "auction, and the party who rented came to "pecuniary difficulties; after which, the farm "was re-offered to my father-in-law, who re-"took it for the purpose of getting back some "portion of his previous outlay. I consider "the formation of a Land Court, to secure fair "rent and fixity of tenure, an absolute neces-"sity. I also urge the undesirability of any "restrictive arguments. I consider that the "landlord should be satisfied before he lets a "farm, first, that the tenant has the necessary "capital; secondly, that he knows his business, "and that if so, the tenant should have perfect "freedom."

26,367. May I ask you, who was the proprietor of this farm?—I do not wish to give the names of any party. It belonged, in the first instance, to a living—Llanwono living.

26,368. It was a glebe farm?—I believe it was.

26,369. Was it sold for the glebe?—It was sold, yes. This year when it was sold, it was let by auction for 70*l.*

26,370. And your father-in-law is in possession of the farm now?—No; he left it 13 years ago.

26,371. When was it sold?—About 13 years ago.

26,372. It was then, when it was first sold?—No; it was sold before.

26,373. It was sold before your father-in-law left it?—It was sold about 17 or 18 years ago.

26,374. Was the purchaser a large landlord or a small landlord?—Do you wish me to give the name.

26,375. No; you have already said you would rather not?—I would prefer not.

26,376. I only wish to know, whether he is to be classed in the category of large or small landlords. Was the purchaser a gentleman who owned much land before?—No, not very much.

26,377. Is it near Porthcawl?—No. Llantrissant, I should say.

26,378. A mountain farm?—Upland farm.

26,379. In the coal district?—Yes; very near.

26,380. Were the minerals sold at the same time?—I believe so. I have no doubt it will all come right again.

26,381. Are you aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not very minutely; I know of it. That was not in existence at this time.

26,382. Do you think that this Act does justice between landlord and tenant?—Not exactly. I think it falls very far from reaching the necessities, which we require.

26,383. If it had been in existence at that time, do you think it would have secured your ancestors, against the increased rent upon their own improvements?—I doubt it very much, because the reclaiming of land takes a very great many years, especially in the upland farms. About three acres, if taken every year. It takes a good many years to get it to good pasture.

26,384. May I ask, if this increase of rent was made upon any building improvements upon the land?—Very little worth mentioning.

26,385. Principally upon agricultural improvements?—Yes, upon reclaiming land.

26,386. I understood you to say, that you would have the law so altered, that you would have no agreements between landlords and tenants?—I say there are no agreements that would reach this reclaiming of land, and that could induce the investment of labour and capital in the land.

26,387. You would prefer it all to be settled by law beforehand?—It cannot be practically done in any other way in our experience.

26,388. The custom of Glamorgan does not quite satisfy the case then, you say?—Well, it goes to a very far extent, I admit; but still, in reclaiming land, it takes a very great many years. I know of many cases, where farmers have been doing this for 20 years and 30 years continually.

26,389. And the custom of Glamorgan does not allow a sufficient period to elapse, for the unexhausted improvements?—Not for particular farms such as bog, peat, and where you have to clear the bracks-forming fields, which was going on about 20 years ago, very extensively.

26,390. But the custom of Glamorgan would come nearer to what you consider just, than the present Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I consider it does.

26,391. It would be easier to mend that to meet your requirements, than to amend the present Act of Parliament?—Yes. I prefer the custom.

26,392. The present Act of Parliament is not resorted to at all, is it?—No.

26,393. Tenants know very little about it?—Yes.

26,394. And care less?—Yes. It has been tested, and it has been found in every case, that the old custom is much better. May I give my reason for saying, that I do not agree with restrictions in agreements?

26,395. That was partly the object of my questions to you; I did not quite follow you. Will you give your reasons?—My objection is to the restrictions against the selling of hay and straw, and swedes. The manurial value of hay is about 30*s.* per ton; straw, say, 10*s.*; swedes, say, 5*s.*; whereas you can sell hay sometimes for, say, 6*l.* to 7*l.* a ton.

26,396. At present you could sell it for more, could you not?—Yes, you might; it has been higher. If you were to sell the hay, and buy the equivalent, say in manure, I should think you would buy at a profit of, say, 200 per cent., because you could have every property that contains the manurial value of hay in manure. Especially so with swedes, again—I think in these days if you could sell swedes and buy corn, and feed the sheep on the fields with corn, and sell some swedes, you would profit very much indeed.

26,397. Would you suggest any means of superintending this, or some check on the farmer to see that he does bring in sufficient manure. There is occasionally, you know, a bad farmer as well as a bad landlord?—Yes. I think for the fairness of landlords that it ought to be checked; although in very rare cases, you will find it. I think it would be only fair, because it is quite possible for a farmer to run into a farm, and ruin it. I admit that.

26,398. What sort of check would you suggest?—I do not know of any instances, in my experience, that should require it.

26,399. Still you have just admitted that there might be a bad farmer?—I admitted the possibility.

26,400. What would you do with regard to him; you would have to provide for that, in some way. If you altered the law, you would have to cover that?—Well, there is the principle; but I should not like to suggest any details.

26,401. You have not thought that out?—I should think it would be only fair, that there should be something.

26,402. But you have not thought out the exact working?—No. It is such an exceptional case, I did not think of it—very exceptional indeed. I may endorse, what has been put before you already, that the state of agriculture at the present time is very depressed indeed, and unless we have some remedy shortly, we will see disastrous consequences.

26,403. What remedy do you suggest?—Well, you must let the land at fair rates, at all events.

26,404. Fair rents?—Fair rents.

26,405. Anything else?—Oh, yes; there are many other things; especially railway rates. I sent wheat not long ago, from a short distance to Cardiff. The miller told me that he also received wheat from Texas. He asked me, "How much do you pay for railway rates for "this 20 miles?" I showed him the bill, and then he showed me the expense of transit from Texas here to Cardiff; and it was much less than we had to pay from near Bridgend. I think that was a very hard case.

26,406. You think something ought to be done to give you fair play in that direction; Yes; I think so.

26,407. You do not go so far as to suggest protection, do you?—No; far from it. I think that is all a dream, with the present population of this country.

26,408. You suggest that there should be some correction of the present rates of transit?—Yes, that is one thing.

26,409. How would you get that brought about; I mean, we cannot control the tranit rates from Texas to our own ports?—No.

26,410. What would you do?—I think the railway fares on agricultural commodities, ought to be modified very much.

26,411. Lowered, you mean?—Yes, lowered.

26,412. Do you ever suggest anything of the sort, when you have an election of a Member of Parliament?—Well, it is a grievance all over the country.

26,413. But is it ever suggested to candidates for Parliament, that they should look after your interests with regard to railway fares?—Not practical enough—I am afraid not.

26,414. Do you not heckle your candidates with some effect upon these things?—Yes; but I am afraid in this case we have neglected it, we have never put it forward.

26,415. Attention is confined to disestablishment and questions of that sort?—Yes, very much, no doubt.

26,416. And the farming interests have been, on the whole, neglected, you think?—To a certain extent, not altogether.

Mr. Grove.

26,417. You speak of the charge for carriage of wheat by rail from Cardiff to Bridgend?—Yes.

26,418. How much per ton did they charge you?—I cannot give you the figures to-day.

26,419. Do you know whether it was up to the maximum power of charge of the railway company?—No; I cannot give figures; I am not prepared.

26,420. You speak of reclaiming of land. You seem to have watched that pretty closely. Could you give us an estimate of the cost of reclaiming an acre of land, and when it is reclaimed, the increased value of it?—I have been interested in reclaiming myself about 50 to 60 acres, and it cost us at least 10*l.* an acre.

26,421. What would you consider the increased value of the land?—I am not able to say. My impression always has been, that the reclaiming of land where there is no mineral, reached to very nearly the value of the land originally in any cases. Reclaiming has come very near, including making banks where there are no minerals, and no prospects.

26,422. We have had evidence given us, that where a correct account was kept of the cost of reclaiming land, the increased value of the land only gave 1 per cent. upon the outlay?—Yes; 1 per cent.

26,423. Would you confirm that generally speaking?—That depends on the land.

26,424. Of course, but you could not, I suppose, give an average just at the moment?—I have known in my experience, land that returned 3, 4, and 5 per cent., and I know some land that does not pay 1 per cent. for reclaiming.

26,425. During the last few months, since hay has been selling at a good price, have the farmers availed themselves of that, to any extent, by selling as much hay as possible?—Well, not much; you may say it has been carried on to a certain extent. I do not think it has been used very much.

26,426. But I gather, that some of the agents of the larger estates, have given perfect freedom to farmers to sell as much as they possibly could at the higher prices?—Yes. Well, that is very wise of them, very wise indeed. This year prices are very high, and no doubt many have had consent, but I am sorry to say there is no hay to be sold, unfortunately.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,427. I take it, when a tenant erects any buildings, there is no provision in the custom of West Glamorgan for meeting a case of that kind?—No, there is not. I have experience myself in that case.

26,428. Do you know whether tenants do erect any buildings?—Oh, in many cases.

26,429. Do they take precaution to obtain the consent of the landlord in such cases?—No, I am sorry to say, it is very rare; it is an exceptional case for them to do so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

26,430. Why do they do so—because they are clearly out of court?—Well, I am sorry to say we, as farmers, are not business men as a rule, we are very much behind business men.

26,431. Are they not sufficiently alive to their interests?—Well, they are beginning to wake now, I am glad to say; there is great amendment in that respect lately.

26,432. I suppose "necessity is the mother of invention"?—Exactly. "Desperate diseases "require desperate remedies." I think that is the state at the present time.

26,433. With regard to the reclamation of waste land, what is the general rule of compensation. Are valuers guided by the value of the improvement to the incoming tenant, or is there a scale of compensation?—I do not know of a scale for reclaiming land.

26,434. Is there a scale for anything at all for compensation?—Yes, there is.

26,435. For lime, I suppose, and things of that kind?—Yes, and for eating swedes, and manure, and many things; there are scales for those.

26,436. Is there any suggestion you could make, to improve the custom?—I am not prepared to-day to suggest any improvement; I have not thought it sufficiently over; but I believe that it takes 20 or 30 years to reclaim a farm; it comes year after year gradually, especially the old times, 20 or 30 years ago. Not so much of that is done, at the present time.

26,437. That is, you mean, to reap the full benefit of it?—Quite so; it is impossible. Seven years is nothing for a farmer; he cannot right himself in a farm in seven years.

26,438. But does not the valuer take that into consideration, when he is valuing between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—Yes, to a certain extent, but I do not think he can cover it all.

26,439. I think you made a reference to the consuming value of swedes and so forth?—I beg pardon?

26,440. When the consuming value of produce is assessed, is it elastic—does it vary with the price of produce, or is it generally a fixed sum?—You mean in the scale according to the custom.

26,441. Yes, according to the custom?—I think it is fixed.

26,442. At a fixed price?—I think it is, according to the outlay on feeding, cotton cake and linseed cake and so on. I think that is the scale they go upon.

26,443. With regard to hay I mean; hay is dearer at some times than at others?—Yes, it is.

26,444. Would the valuer take the consuming price of hay to the incoming tenant?—I understand your question now. I do not think it would be necessary, because the manurial value of a ton of hay is the same, whether the price is 2*l.* or 8*l.* a ton.

26,445. It is true that the manurial value of it is the same, but do you think it would be just between them?—Yes, I think it would be fair. It must be.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,446. What do you consider the difference between the value of hay—I mean the consuming price—and the market price?—Well, I am not prepared to go into that. It is only the principle I wish to suggest. I wish not to go into figures, only the principle.

26,447. You spoke just now of a farm being advanced from 38*l.* to 62*l.*?—I did.

26,448. It was afterwards retaken?—Yes.

26,449. At what rent was it taken the last time?—At the same rent as it was before.

26,450. At 62*l.*?—Up to the time it was let by auction.

26,451. Had the landlord made any improvements before he advanced the rent from 38*l.* to 62*l.*?—No. I am glad you asked that question. The farm had gone into ruin in the twelvemonth, because when the farmer came there, it was let in one open common for the cattle. The fences were reduced very much indeed and the land damaged very seriously.

26,452. Had the landlord done any improvements, before raising the rent?—No, he had not.

26,453. The improvements were all done by the tenant, were they?—Yes, all.

26,454. Do you not think that farmers have trusted too much to the honour of the landlords in the past?—Well, I think they are to be blamed to a great extent; I should not say all the landlords; but, as I say, the farmers ought to be more business men. Some landlords are so honourable till their tenants are deluded; so I should not like to go into these matters.

26,455. But some tenants have had some severe lessons in doing so, have they not?—Oh, I have got many instances of farmers who have been ruined.

26,456. By trusting to the landlords?—Yes, by too much confidence—going to the farm and beginning to reclaim it, and then speculating, advancing all their capital, and eventually having the rent advanced; then times have turned, you may say, and the consequence is very serious indeed.

26,457. Do you remember any instances of farms being sold in that way, after the tenant had improved them?—Well I am not ready now to go into that.

26,458. Do you think Government should interfere with regard to railway rates, and give the farmers the same chance as any others, to send their produce over the railway?—Decidedly.

Chairman.

26,459. I have only one more question to put to you, and that is from Mr. Vincent: "Are you "a practical farmer"?—I have been a farmer all the days of my life.

26,460. "How many acres do you farm"?—160 acres, since I am responsible.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

26,461. Can you speak English?—No; I prefer Welsh.

26,462. Is this statement of your evidence accurate?—Yes.

26,463. You can speak English to a certain extent, can you not?—To a small extent, but I would prefer giving evidence in Welsh. [The evidence of the witness was then taken through an interpreter.]

26,464. This statement is accurate?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read—

"Thomas Evans, of Mount Pleasant, Porthcawl, farmer, will state as follows:—

"My late father, Evan Evans, was a tenant of Garth Grabben Farm, near Llantrissant, under the Garth Hall Estate. The farm was about 200 acres, one-fourth of which was arable. My grandfather farmed the farm before him. When I was a boy at home, at least half the land was wet and boggy, and the farm generally was not in a good condition. The dry portion of the land was very stony, and briars, furze, and gorse grew on a portion of it. The rent was 76*l.* in my father's time. I and my brothers helped my father on the farm, without wages; there were four of us altogether. The farm was not sufficient to keep us, and so we boys, when we grew up, took jobs outside in the way of road-making,

Chairman—continued.

&c., to help to pay the rent. My father died in 1879, and on his death my mother, brothers, and self took on the farm jointly. When my father died, the condition of the farm had greatly improved, by our labours in removing the gorse, and in draining the wet portion of the land, and in removing the stones from off the land. When the farm was let to my mother, brothers, and self, the rent was the same as before, but the price of corn became so cheap, that we put the arable portion of the farm into pasture, at our own expense. In 1880 this was thoroughly completed, and we then had notice to quit for the rise in the rent from 76*l.* to 123*l.* nett. The increase in the rent was due solely to the improvements which my father, brothers, and self had effected on the land at our own expense, and we considered it was a great hardship, and so left the farm. At the time we left, I consider the farm was well worth the sum asked, but we thought it was so unjust that we should be taxed upon our own improvements. I strongly urge that a Land Court should be established, to meet such a case as the one I have described, and that there should be fixity of tenure so as to prevent the landlord acting to others as our landlord did to us, namely, tax our own industry and capital. I think that the farmer is in a different condition, with reference to his farm, than the ordinary tradesman is, with reference to his shop. The tradesman if he has notice to quit, can take the goods from off his shelves, and leave the shop as empty as when he took it, but a farmer cannot take everything he has put into the land out, and the improvements, even under the custom of the county, do not recoup him for his labour or capital. My brother county councillor, Evan Evans, is in court, and will confirm all I have said."

26,465. Would you mind giving us the name of the landlord?—His name was Humphreys. Then the estate passed on to others after that.

26,466. Who raised the rent?—Mrs. Adam, to whom the estate came.

26,467. What compensation did you get, when you went out?—50*l.*, and that is all for the improvements.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,468. What were the improvements for which you received the sum of 50*l.*?—Draining, for the most part.

26,469. Then you had notice to quit or raising the rent?—Yes, or raising the rent.

26,470. And you did not take the farm?—We refused it.

26,471. Why did you refuse to take the farm?—Because I saw it was too hard to raise such a sum, on our own industry.

26,472. Then it was not altogether because the farm was too dear, but you considered it a great hardship that you were obliged to pay twice for it?—Of the two, I think the farm is cheaper now, than it was before it was improved.

26,473. Did anyone value this farm?—Yes. You mean in order to have the rent raised?

26,474. That is what I mean. Who valued the farm?—The agent.

26,475. Is he a professional valuer?—He valued the farm high enough at any rate.

26,476. But is he a regular valuer?—I cannot be sure about that.

26,477. Did you ever hear of him valuing anywhere else?—I think he has done so.

26,478. Then, as a rule, the tenants are obliged to yield to his valuation or leave the farm?—We had to so, at any rate.

26,479. Then you want some court to appeal to. When you consider the rent is too high, and the landlord thinks it is too low, you want to have some court that you can refer to, to settle the question between you?—Yes, undoubtedly.

26,480. And also to appeal as to any improvements made upon the farm?—Yes, emphatically.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,481. I suppose you turned a good deal of your farm into permanent pasture?—I was on the last field of the farm, when I received notice to quit.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

26,482. Inasmuch as you do not get anything for laying down permanent pasture, according to the custom of Glamorganshire, you would recommend that the custom should provide against a case of that kind?—Yes, undoubtedly.

26,483. Are you satisfied with the Glamorganshire custom, in respect to drainage. Is 14 years a sufficient time to work out the improvement?—Not half.

26,484. What number of years would you consider sufficient?—It is difficult to say, but I think it should be as many years as the tenant should live, or rather as long as the drain conveys the water.

Mr. Grove.

26,485. Am I right, in the note I have made, that the rent used to be 76*l.* a year, and the present rent is 123*l.*?—Yes, as near as I could say.

26,486. And were all the improvements, making this increased value, effected by you and your family?—Entirely.

26,487. Then it appears that the farm now fetches, in consequence of those improvements, 47*l.* a year more than it did?—Yes, undoubtedly.

26,488. That turned into capitalised value at 30 years' purchase would be about 1,410*l.*?—Yes, about that. That was what I calculated it to be.

26,489. And for that increased capital value, you only got 50*l.* when you left the farm?—I only got 50*l.* I understand you mean for the the improvements?

26,490. Yes?—I got something from the incoming tenant.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,491. For other things?—For other things.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,492. Supposing there had been a Land Court in existence, when you went out, and that you had applied to it, according to your own showing, would not the rent have been raised?—I would not mind that, provided they paid for any improvements.

26,493. That is exactly the point I wanted to come to. Is not then your contention: that there ought to be full compensation for improvements?—Altogether. That is my meaning.

26,494. Were you under the custom of the county of Glamorgan?—Yes.

26,495. Did you make any application for compensation?—No, I did not understand which way I could do so.

26,496. How did you get the 50*l.* compensation then?—The agent asked me how much I thought I could claim for improvements—those that I could claim within the time, because draining extends to 14 years. He asked me what did I think would be about the average claim for that.

26,497. What was your answer to that?—I mentioned a particular sum.

26,498. What was that sum?—I said 40*l.* Then I saw that I had asked for far too little, and I said 50*l.* afterwards, and he gave me that amount.

26,499. Do you mind telling us how much you received from the incoming tenant?—I have no objection—about 120*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

26,500. Was it on the draining alone that you had this 50*l.*?—Well, we spoke about draining, and I suppose the agent was a little smarter than me. He gave what I asked for immediately, without having time to go into other matters.

26,501. But was that for draining alone, did it include anything else?—Well, there was much to be included at any rate.

26,502. You worked on this farm with your father when you were young, did you not?—Yes.

26,503. Was it rather a tight job to get the rent in, before you made your improvements?—So hard, that the agent permitted my father not to pay the rent until he was really in a position to pay it, and I understood that he paid 5*l.* every half year, and was cleared off in six or seven years.

26,504. But gradually he made the farm pay?—We made it pay when we worked for nothing for him.

26,505. You mean the children—you and your brothers?—Yes, when the children worked for nothing.

26,506. Did they receive no pay at all?—No, we as children received nothing, except food and clothes.

26,507. Do you think that was as much as the wages that are given to servants now?—I doubt it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,508. Do you think it right, that a landlord should have the power of turning out a tenant on the world, even if he gets full compensation for improvements, after he has formed his connexions in a place or in a neighbourhood?—Entirely to the contrary.

26,509. That is, if the farming gives satisfaction to the agent and the landlord?—Yes.

26,510. In that case you are in favour of fixity of tenure?—Yes, entirely. The reason of that is, that the tenant gets to understand the nature of the soil, and what cattle and so on, best suit the land.

Chairman.

26,511. A question is sent up by Mr. T. Radcliffe: "Had you sufficient buildings on the farm?"—There were sufficient buildings on the farm in my father's time, but they were too limited in our time.

Chairman—continued.

26,512. "Have you built any buildings on your farm?"—Yes.

26,514. Then I have some questions by Mr. Daniel John: "How many cattle were kept "on the farm before cultivating?"—From 25 to 30.

26,515. "And how many afterwards?"—From 35 to 50. I have seen as many as 50.

26,516. "Is it true that you had notice to "quit because your political opinion differed "from that of your landlord's and agent's?"—No, I do not think so, although we do not hold the same political views. The agent told me, I was the only one of whom they felt certain, how he would vote, and he commended me for my outspokenness.

26,517. "Do you know of any instances in "your neighbourhood similar to yours?"—Yes.

26,518. "Where farms have been cultivated "and rents have been advanced?"—Yes, and, worse than all, I can mention one, especially Coed-y-le on the Ynysplwm estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,519. Who is the owner?—Mr. Cozens, of Ynysplwm. When they took the farm it was 90*l.* They were there 28 years, and the rent was raised to 180*l.* Besides an outlay of 150*l.* for buildings for cattle, having been promised to be paid for that in the future, but unfortunately the estate was to pass unencumbered to the succeeding owner. The consequence of that is, that four or more tenants have been there, and some of them have gone to the wall—ruined themselves, and others have left for their lives, and the rent by this, has come back nearly to the old price. When they left there was a gate on every gap, but by this time, there is not one.

Chairman.

26,520. A question is handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Was not the owner of this farm, "Coed-y-le, himself a farmer, and a very small "owner"?—No, he was not a small landowner.

Mr. Griffiths.

26,521. Was the landlord aware that you had received 120*l.* from the incoming tenant?—

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

What he said was this: "You should ask the "incoming tenant for everything, which you "can claim according to the custom." We, the incoming and outgoing tenants, agreed without the valuation being made.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Jenkin Thomas, Junior, called and examined.

Chairman.

26,522. Where do you live?—I live at Lilliput Farm, Bonvilstone.

26,523. Close to Cardiff?—About 8 miles out of Cardiff.

26,524. Who is the tenant of Lilliput Farm?—My father.

26,525. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Thurston Bassett.

26,526. You work the farm with your father, I understand?—Yes, my Lord.

26,527. On what do you wish to speak?—Perhaps I had better give the evidence of my father coming down from near Bridgend and tenanting a farm in 1863—Holton Farm. There was a new building to be erected on this farm, and he had to do the hauling; to carry the stones between a mile and a mile and a half, and the slates and timber from Cardiff, 7 miles. After the building was erected, there was a new agent taken on the estate; he was a lawyer.

26,528. Who was the landlord of this estate?—Captain Jenner then. Five and a half years after this building was erected, he raised the rent of the farm 50*l.*

26,529. What was the original rent?—I am not able to tell you.

26,530. He raised the rent of the farm, however, 50*l.* a year?—50*l.* a year. In consequence, my father was not able to pay. He had notice to quit the farm, and he left the farm. We were a family of 13—11 children and our parents—living in this house on the farm. There were three bedrooms in the house, and two front rooms, and a small back kitchen, a small pantry, and a small dairy. In consequence we, as a family, had to put three beds in the same room, and seven of us slept in the same room, and we had not room even to walk between these three beds. We had to go over a bed to get into bed. The servant men, in consequence, had to sleep out in the buildings, and that was a great inconvenience to us.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,531. In the outbuildings?—In the outbuildings. That is all I have to tell you about Holton Farm. I should say this. When father left this farm he had 428*l.* for improvements from the incoming tenant. He took Cwmcidy Farm in 1876. The terms of entering into this farm were, that we should pay for the manure and the clover that was in the land. We had to pay for all standing manure, that was left by the landlord. The landlord farmed the farm himself, and he charged us for the manure, when we went into the farm.

Chairman

26,532. Who was the landlord of that farm?—The late Colonel Romilly. The farm was 350 acres, more or less; more, I should say, than 350 acres.

26,534. What is the whole acreage of Lilliput Farm?—218 acres.

since we have been there with Mr. Crawshay, we have been continually at loggerheads about the game—preserving game in the coverts and eating our crops. We were not allowed to catch the game inside. It was impossible sometimes to trample through the hay, to catch the game outside the coverts. They were eating, not to say a word of untruth, surely about an acre of hay every year. Last year we had a field of barley, and it was estimated by neighbours close by, that they ate 50 bushels of this barley for us. This year we had clover, and they ate an acre of this clover this year. Well, we went before the present landlord, and he told us that he would not allow any more rabbiting. Father said "Well, if you are going to stop us to catch "the rabbits I will not keep the farm for half "the price." "Well," he said, "You know the "law, and you can use the law, but I am having "continual complaints of catching the rabbits "from Mr. Crawshay." We did not know what to do; whether to catch the rabbits, or whether to leave the rabbits alone.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,536. Did you know the law?—We knew the law allowed us to catch the game.

26,537. Well, where was the uncertainty?—The landlord himself telling us that he would not allow any more rabbiting. We had notice, when the late Mr. Bassett died, of the change of landlord, and when we went before the present landlord, he spoke very grossly to us—I do not know why—and he gave us an allowance to continue in the farm for a certain time. We were renting afterwards under Mrs. Bassett, the widow of the late Mr. Richard Bassett, and from Mr. Thurston Bassett, Crossways. The lower part of the farm belonged to Mrs. Bassett, and this other part of the farm and buildings belonged to Mr. Thurston Bassett. We had notice to quit the last February, and we thought that Mr. Bassett was going to buy the whole of the farm, and we lingered until we thought he would be sole landlord. The day we were going to pay the rent, my sister was taken very poorly, and we were not able to leave her bedside for a month. In consequence we had to stay at home, and father had to stay at home as well. A man came during this time to walk the farm. I suppose he saw Mr. Bassett, and rented the farm without giving a chance to father, who had been in the farm for 12 years, and did not owe the landlord a penny of rent. Without giving a chance to father, he rented the farm to this tenant, who is coming in now. I wrote to Mr. Bassett and I asked him this. I said I was sorry he was turning my father out. He was a man of 78 years of age—nearly 79.

26,539. You mean he had "let" the farm?—Yes, he had let the farm. Of course we had nothing else to do then, but it has been said, and I do not know whether it is right or not, that father had to leave owing to myself. I am very sorry to say it. I cannot say that this is a correct statement, but Mr. Bassett referred to me when we were before him, and he said that I must stay more at home with father. I occasionally speak on Sunday in the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel. I spend not an hour of father's time to prepare in any way for this work. I have been on the farm now working for him, and I have not received one fraction for my work during these five years. I have paid money to help father, very often out of my own pocket, to help him to bring two ends to meet. We have not had a single fraction back from our landlord as compensation, and not as a percentage, in these bad times. He told me that I had no right to go about, and he said that if I was a farmer, I could not do the both things. I told him I was not his tenant; and I said I simply stayed with father, because he was getting on in years. I simply told him the fact that I could do better without the farm, but in consideration for helping father, I stayed at home. I do not know whether it is because I stand up and defend my own principles, and the principles that I cannot help defending—if this is the reason, I am ashamed to think that we are made slaves of—I am ashamed to think that father is turned out of his farm because of myself, and I am very sorry, really, that I have been a stumbling block in the way. As to the position of farmers and landlords, I think that we can gather this, if the present state of trade is going to continue, the farming class will be the poorest class possible. I do no know whether I ought to say any more, but I think it is my place now to leave the evidence, and answer any questions you may put.

Chairman.

26,540. On your statement you say you are in favour of a Land Court to fix fair rents?—Yes.

26,541. And also a Land Court to fix security of tenure and compensation?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,542. I will take you back to the first portion of your evidence, in 1863, when your father did the haulage for certain buildings; that was on Captain Jenner's estate?—Yes, on Captain Jenner's estate.

26,543. Was the farm sold?—No, not to my knowledge.

26,544. What was the year when you went out of it?—1876.

26,545. That would be the year in which you went to Cwmcidy Farm?—Yes.

26,546. When you went out, did you make any claim for compensation?—We had 428*l.* compensation.

26,547. You told us from the incoming tenant?—From the incoming tenant.

26,548. You told us, that you had done five-and-a-half years, before a certain amount of haulage for permanent improvements?—Yes.

26,549. Was it in your agreement that the tenant was to do that haulage?—I cannot say.

26,550. Can you say, whether it is the ordinary custom of this county, that the tenant does haulage for permanent improvements?—I am not able to say.

26,551. I rather take it, you complain that when you went out, you ought to have had something for that haulage?—Yes, I do.

26,552. Did you make any claim for it to the landlord?—Yes, it was mentioned to the landlord, but they said it was gone too late to make a claim.

26,553. At Cwmcidy you say, you paid going in for manure and clover?—Yes.

26,554. You did not say how much?—68*l.* or 62*l.*, I am not sure which.

26,555. When you went out again, you were only paid for the clover, and not for the manure?—Not for the manure.

26,556. Can you say how much you received?—No, I cannot tell you; I am not able to tell you.

26,557. Was there a valuation made; did you appoint a valuer, and the landlord appoint a valuer, or how did you arrive at the amount?—I do not know whether Mr. George Thomas was the valuer there of the manure or not, and the clover; he was our valuer, when we went out of Holton Farm. I am not able to state whether we had a valuer then or not.

26,558. If not how was the amount arrived at?—Well, I think that we must have had a valuer. Of course I could give those facts again.

26,559. The five years between 1876 and 1881 were very wet years, and you had a considerable loss?—Yes.

26,560. Were you singular in that, or did the other neighbouring farmers lose?—I think the other farmers lost as well at the same time, through the sheep rotting.

26,561. In Lilliput had you any agreement with the landlord?—Yes.

26,562. Have you that by you now?—No, I have not.

26,563. It was a written agreement?—Yes.

26,564. Was the game reserved to the landlord?—No.

26,565. In consequence of there being no reservation, you exercised the rights?—We had the ground game. That is the way in which it was rented to us. That was before the Act passed.

26,566. It was in 1881, was it not?—Yes.

26,567. Was not the Ground Game Act passed in 1880?—Yes, I think it was.

26,568. You took Lilliput in 1881?—In 1881.

26,569. You exercised rights at all events?—Yes.

26,570. Can you tell me how those rights were taken from you, or attempted to be taken from you?—I suppose it was owing to Mr. Tudor Crawshay renting the game.

26,571. Have you anything to show the way in which it was attempted to take your rights from you?—No, I have not.

26,572. Did any letters pass on the subject?—No, I do not think so.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,573. Did you make any complaints about the game to Mr. Bassett?—To the agent. We were making complaints continually of the interference of Mr. Crawshay and his keepers about the game.

26,574. Mr. Bassett in his evidence told us that he never had any bother with the game at all?—Yes, I think Mr. Bassett spoke in his evidence about the number of rabbits shot, and that there was no damage done by the game on his estate. I think, if I remember rightly, he said that, at Cowbridge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,575. Mr. Bassett did not himself exercise any rights of sporting there?—Not himself. We have never seen him shooting over the farm, only Mr. Crawshay.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,576. Did you have any reduction in your rent, or ask for any; did your father ask for any reduction in his rent?—Yes.

26,577. Did he get any?—No.

26,578. Mr. Bassett, in his evidence to us, said he made reductions on his own estate—"on "my own estate there have been permanent re-"ductions," but your father did not get any?—Not any.

26,579. Mr. Bassett objects to you, you think, and it is rumoured that that is why your father has to leave the place?—I have heard that, but I am not able to maintain it.

26,580. Is there any good ground for maintaining that?—I have heard other people saying it, but I do not know whether it is right or not. I am sorry if it is right. I am sorry of this occurring.

26,581. You say you have been assisting your father to pay the rent?—Yes.

26,582. Do you think if you had been a clerk, we will say at Cardiff here, or a joiner, or tailor, or draper, and assisted your father in paying the rent, there would be any objection; do you think your father would have had notice to quit in that case?—I do not know. I cannot tell you.

26,583. One question about the 18 acres. You said there were 18 acres taken for two years, of the very best land of the farm; do we gather that no allowance was made for that?—There was an allowance, I suppose, of 3*l.* an acre, and when the account was made up, we had to pay 60*l.* for the land afterwards.

26,584. You considered you did get an allowance then, equivalent to the value of that land?—I do not think we could have, owing to that land being the best land, and the only land that we could grow hay upon. On the back land we could grow nothing else but fern.

26,585. We understand there were 13 acres of very poor land there, but you did get an allowance of some kind for the 18 acres?—Yes, we did. This back land we had a sale of, on the 2nd of November. We had an offer for the back land, for the roughage for three months to the 2nd of February. That is to prove the value of this land, and some of it we could not rent at any price. They would not take it to turn their animals into.

26,586. How far is it the custom in this part of the world in letting a farm to a father of considerable age who has a son, to put the tenancy in the name of the father without the son being joined with him?—I am not able to answer your question.

26,587. I mean if an old man, a man of the age of your father, was taking a farm, would it be likely that he would be able to take the farm, if he had not a son working with him?—When he took the farm of course he was younger, that was 13 years ago next February, and I was younger at that time, and my brothers were married, and they had taken separate businesses.

26,588. So that you think there was no justification for holding that the farm had practically been let to your father and his son together?—Well, I cannot say.

26,589. You think it is quite clear it was let solely to your father?—Yes, it was let solely to father.

26,590. Do you work on the farm yourself?—Yes.

26,591. Are you paid for your work?—No.

26,592. Not in wages?—No.

26,593. What do you consider it would cost your father to get someone to do the work you do for him, if he was to employ another?—If he was to take a man into the house it would cost him his food and lodging, and 6*s.* a week, or 7*s.* a week.

26,594. You spoke of the bedrooms of one of these farms being insufficient. How many in the family did you say?—Eleven children.

26,595. How many boys?—Three.

26,596. How many girls?—Eight.

26,597. Did your father apply to his landlord for any allowance, when he lost all these sheep?—He applied to the landlord for a reduction in the farm, when he went from Cwmcidy; he gave notice for a reduction.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

26,598. That was not the year he lost the sheep, was it?—No.

26,599. At the time he lost the sheep, did he ask the landlord to help him as it was such a severe case?—I cannot say.

26,600. Was it not the same landlord, that made him pay for the clover and manure when you went into the farm, and who refused when you went out?—Yes.

26,601. The same landlord?—Yes.

26,602. Did not your father reason with him, that it was a hard case, that you should have to pay coming in, and not be paid going out?—Yes.

26,603. What did he say?—Well, he said he would not pay; father had as much right not to take the dung, when he went in, as he now had to sell, when he went out.

26,604. Was this manure in a position, where you could get a good price for it?—Well, it was in the surroundings of the farms. We could only sell it to the farmers.

26,605. Is it a mountainous farm?—No, a flat farm; not a mountainous farm at all.

26,607. Have you yourself been taking any part in elections, political or otherwise?—Oh, yes.

26,608. You have not at all offended your landlord in so doing, have you?—I do not know; that is a hard matter to answer.

26,609. How came you to suppose that he had ill-will against you?—By what other people had been telling me.

26,610. Have you witnesses who have heard him say so?—I have no witnesses that have heard Mr. Bassett say so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,611. I understand that there was a great deal of friction between your father and yourself on the one side, and Mr. Crawshay on the other?—Yes.

26,612. What was it that Mr. Crawshay and his keepers actually did, that you objected to?—The first thing that occurred was, Mr. Crawshay sent his keepers round and had another keeper from the Wenvoe estate, Miss Jenner's keeper, to put wires down, and father then saw that, and he sent his man round to pick up the wires. That was the commencement of it between Mr. Crawshay and father.

26,613. You mean the wire was actually put upon the field?—Wires for catching rabbits.

26,614. In fields forming part of your taking or holding?—Yes.

26,615. You gave an account of an interview that you actually had with Mr. Bassett?—Yes.

26,616. What did Mr. Bassett say in reference to the Act of Parliament; I did not quite catch that?—He told us that he did not allow any rabbiting, and father said "Well, if you stop us "catching rabbits I will not take the farm for "half the value; they will eat everything we "have;" and he said "Well, you know the law." That is all he answered.

26,617. Did you take that to mean that Mr. Bassett was referring to the Act of 1880?—I do not know. I cannot say. Of course, I suppose, he was.

26,618. What I am suggesting is this: Did you think that he meant that to you as a permission to exercise your legal rights, or do you mean to suggest that he referred to the law, and at the same time meant to suggest to you that he had his remedy, if you would not fall in with his wishes?—That is the way in which we took it.

26,619. As you say it, it seems to me capable of the other interpretation. You say in substance that was a kind of threat?—Well, what was the reason he said it? We did not understand why he should say he would not allow any more rabbiting.

26,620. He might say, "You know very well, "Mr. Thomas, that under the Act of 1880, "you being a tenant from year to year, have "your legal right to go and take the rabbits if "you wish, but at the same time I do not wish "you to do it." Was that the meaning of what he said?—It may perhaps be so. Of course we are not able to give an interpretation to his saying that.

26,621. How long before you received notice to quit, did you have this interview with Mr. Bassett?—I think about 18 months.

26,622. Had there been any further dispute or trouble, between the time of this interview and the time of receiving the notice to quit?—Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

26,623. Had you any dispute of any kind with Mr. Bassett in the meantime?—No; we had no dispute afterwards.

26,624. The next thing that you personally know about the farm, apart from your own actual work, is that you received this notice to quit?—Yes.

26,625. What were the terms of the notice to quit?—The terms of the notice to quit were these. We had the notice last February, that we were to give up the land by this next February, and the house and buildings in May.

26,626. I am not talking of the actual notice to quit. I mean the letter accompanying the notice to quit. I understand you had a letter as well as a notice to quit?—Not at that time. I wrote to Mr. Bassett, at the time father was not able to see him, and then I had a letter from Mr. Bassett himself personally.

26,627. Have you got it here?—No; I have not.

26,628. What reason did he assign for giving notice?—No particular reason. He said he was very sorry for letting the farm, but it was too late.

26,629. You have expressed an opinion in favour of the Land Court. Are you prepared to develop your views a little further on that matter. I will ask you a question. Do you mean a Land Court constituted in the same way with the same jurisdiction, as that established by the Land Act of 1881?—I think we should have a Land Court to place the rent of the different lands. I think it would be very valuable and beneficial for the different qualities of land, to be settled by the Land Court. That is, one farm is much more valuable than another farm, say for instance our farm; with the number of acres of poor soil, we can never compete with farmers that have good land.

26,630. Why do you want a Land Court?—To fix a proper rent, and a rent that can be paid for the quality of the land.

26,631. Would that be a sufficient security of tenure. Would the fixing of a fair rent be a fair security?—I cannot answer that.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. A. C. Bruce Pryce, called and examined.

Chairman.

26,632. Will you tell us where you live?—I am living at Abbey Holme, Cheltenham, at present. I have a house close to the seaside, at Monknash, where I spent last summer.

26,633. And that is your connexion with this part of the world?—Well, I am the owner of three different estates in different parts of the county, as to two of which I must be an absentee, and as to the third of which, I generally have been an absentee.

26,634. Are they all in the Vale of Glamorgan?—No, my Lord. I have 1,600 acres in the

Vale, next this seaside place, and the others are mountain farms.

26,635. What is the total acreage?—The total acreage is just under 3,000 acres. I may mention that last year, I sold 1,700 acres in this immediate neighbourhood, as I thought it was as well to be wise in time, before the Commission came.

26,636. You sold 1,700 acres last year?—Yes.

26,637. Was that arable property?—That was general agricultural property, just in the neighbourhood of the witnesses that you have last heard, the estates of Mr. Jenner and Mr. Thurston Bassett, and so on.

26,638. May I ask you, did many of your tenants buy their farms?—Not one; they were not offered to them. It was a sale by private contract to a gentleman whose name you may have heard, Mr. John Cory, who is said to have paid the purchase money of the estate out of income, without touching an investment.

26,639. The property was sold as a large tract of land?—It was sold as a large property in a ring fence.

26,640. It was sold in a ring fence, but it was not offered to the tenants; they had no option of purchasing?—Oh dear me, no; I had no idea of anything of the kind.

26,641. You had no idea of anything of the sort?—Not the least in the world. I might just as well have offered it to my servants.

26,642. I see you do not consider that encumbrances affect occupiers at all?—I beg your pardon; that encumbrances do not affect the tenants, do you mean?

26,643. I suppose that is what it means?—Yes, speaking as the owner of an encumbered estate, I should say that the encumbrances do not affect the occupiers at all. The estate has to be kept in repair, and I really do not see how the fact that interest has to be paid, as I have had to pay it on encumbrances, has anything whatever to do with the tenants. When I came into the property, I had heavy mortgages and charges upon it—a mortgage of 40,000*l.*, and the interest on it has always been paid to the day. But it has nothing to do with the tenants. The repairs and so on, on the estate have gone on exactly the same as they did in my grandfather's time, who had 20,000*l.* a year.

26,644. Do you think there is any evil effect from landlords not being resident, in any way?—Speaking practically, as an absentee myself, I think that the tenants have been better off in consequence of my absence.

26,645. In what way?—My uncle, Mr. William Bruce, who took the house when I left it, had a very much larger income than I have, and he employed a great deal more labour, and spent a great deal more money there than I should have done.

26,646. Do you think that that is a bad thing for the estate?—No; I say that, speaking from my own experience, the fact of my having been an absentee, has been a benefit rather than otherwise to the tenants, for more labour has been employed by those who rented the mansion house.

26,647. Then you had a tenant at the house—the seat was occupied by someone?—Certainly.

26,648. You think that your tenant did more good than would probably have been done by yourself?—Most decidedly.

26,649. As regards the experience of agents, have you anything to complain of?—Oh, dear me, no. I think that my former agent was a man whom everybody respected—Mr. Bradley. He and his father were agents for nearly a century on the estate. My present agent is the son of a tenant farmer, and I believe that he is as much liked and as much respected, as he can be.

26,650. And a thoroughly practical man?—A thoroughly practical man.

26,651. Have you anything to say about the advantage or otherwise of land being held by small or large owners?—Do you mean as tenants or as owners?

26,652. Do you think that the tenants are better under a small estate or a large estate?—I really do not know what is a small and what is a large estate. I do not know whether 1,500, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, or 5,000 acres would be called a small or large estate. It depends entirely on the point of view.

26,653. I suppose the question is directed to an estate over 3,000 acres, as being a large estate?—Whether the tenants would be better off?

26,654. Yes, whether tenants would be better off on an estate of over 3,000 acres, than they would be on a small estate?—I cannot see how the size of the estate would affect them.

26,655. You do not think it makes any practical difference?—I do not see how it would affect them, any more than the colour of their hair would. I cannot understand the relation between the two—what they really have to do with one another—the size of the estate and the tenants being badly or well off.

26,656. Nothing suggests itself to your mind with regard to that?—Nothing at all.

26,657. Have you anything to say about the difference of language, politics, or religion, so far as you know—so far as comes under your own knowledge?—So far as my experience goes, I have never enquired, and I do not believe that my grandfather, who was a very strong Churchman and a very strong Tory, ever inquired what the religion or politics of a tenant were. My only real experience of the matter was a short time after I came into the property, that the best farmer on the estate came to me (he is in the occupation now of another farm), and he asked me, whether I had any objection to his acting as secretary to the Conservative Association, as he understood that I was a Liberal in politics. I said that I really did not care whether he was a secretary or acted for the Conservative Association or not; it was a matter that concerned him and himself, alone. But that is the only time, that any question on the subject, has ever been put to me by any tenant.

26,658. Religion, I suppose, does not come in in any way either?—Oh, dear me, no.

26,659. Do you consider the condition of leaseholders superior to that of yearly tenants, or do you think their farming is better than yearly tenants' farming?—I offered a lease to this particular tenant of the farm he originally occupied, and his only answer was: "Are you "going to turn me out?" I had known him ever since I was a child, and it was the very last thing that occurred to me. He said: "What good should I have by taking the lease." I said: "I do not know; if you want one you "are welcome to it." He subsequently took a lease of a larger farm, which he is now occupying.

26,660. Under yourself?—No, under Mr. Cory at present, but he took the lease from me 15 years ago. He took a lease from me on going into this larger farm, and he is now in possession under that lease.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,661. And that is one of the farms which has now become vested in Mr. John Cory?—It is now in his possession; he bought the farm.

Chairman.

26,662. Have you had any changes of tenancy on the estate, or are they more frequent than they were. What do you say with regard to that?—I really cannot say that they are more or less frequent. You see, when prices are going up, farmers are making money, and they naturally stick to their farms. When we are all making money, we do not say much about it, but in times of depression, when money is being lost, farms are naturally given up. On the ordinary principles of political economy, that must be so.

26,663. Have you had many changes on your estate, if I may ask the question?—No, I think not. I speak more particularly about the Monknash property, which is mine at present. We have had one or two changes, one at the termination of a lease.

26,664. But nothing serious?—No. I had once during the depression to take up a farm, and I was very sorry I had to do it. That was about 8 or 10 years ago.

26,665. There has been nothing serious in any way?—Dear me, no.

26,666. How is rent usually fixed?—It is fixed in the ordinary way. My agent, who is a man who knows his work, puts a value on the farm, and people come forward and arrange to take it, or do not, as the case may be.

26,668. Have you had any permanent reductions or permanent abatements of rent on your estate?—Speaking now for the Monknash estate, we had a re-valuation by the agent, on the application of tenants, and there have been very large reductions. I can tell you of one farm, which was let at 470*l.*, for which I am now getting 315*l.*, which is somewhere about 50 per cent. on the present rent, or 33 per cent. on the old.

26,669. Then you have had permanent reductions on your estate?—Yes, certainly.

26,670. As well as the temporary abatements?—On this Monknash Estate we have never given any temporary abatements.

26,671. They have all been permanent?—They have all been permanent. On the St. Nicholas Estate, which Mr. Cory has, we used to give temporary abatements, but I disapprove of them altogether. The tenants do not get the advantage in the way of any remission of rates.

26,672. Could you give us your opinion as to the preferential position on the part of the landlord for his claim for rent. Do you approve of that?—Most decidedly; I do not see how in the world a tenant could go into a farm without it. If it were not for the preferential claim for rent, a landlord in letting a farm would have to ask for security, and I know that you do not get people to become your surety for nothing, especially in Cardiff, and I know that it would cost the tenant 10*l.* for every 1*l.* that he has to pay now.

26,673. With regard to improvements, do you do all the improvements on your estate as landlord?—I do not know exactly what is meant by "improvements."

26,674. Keeping the estate in repair?—Keeping the estate in repair is not an improvement, I suppose.

26,675. Let us take it in two ways—if there are any new buildings?—That would be an improvement, obviously.

26,676. We will split it up into two. With regard to the new buildings, are they done by the landlord?—Always; the haulage being done by the tenants.

26,677. Is any compensation paid for the haulage?—Oh, no; it is part of the agreement. Supposing that a new building is required, we will say, on which 40*l.* or 50*l.* is spent by the landlord. The tenant requires it for the purpose of his cows or his horses, or whatever it may happen to be. It is not at all impossible that the next man who may not go in for such extensive dairy farming may not require it at all, and may look upon that building as an encumbrance—he may object to it altogether, so that it has always been considered fair that some part of it should fall upon the tenant, and as he has got his waggons and horses with which he takes his crops into the market town, the easiest way of conveying the materials back is to let them be hauled by the tenant.

26,678. Then as a practical man, you think it is fair that the sitting tenant should draw all the materials to his farm, and should not be compensated when he leaves it?—Yes; I think that, speaking broadly, it is to the advantage of the tenant as well as of the landlord. I carefully guard myself against speaking of exceptional instances; but, speaking broadly, I think it is to the advantage of both, that the present arrangement should be carried out.

26,679. Speaking broadly, you do not think that the tenant has any reason to complain of that arrangement?—No; I think that instances do or may arise in which he has; but speaking quite broadly, I think it is an arrangement that is good for both.

26,680. Now, with regard to keeping your estate in tenantable repair, how is that done?—In very much the same way as, when a house is taken in a town and the tenant agrees to keep it in repair. The landlord has to find gates, and the tenant agrees to keep them in repair; but, as you are perfectly aware, the tenant has labourers, and when a waggon is going through the labourer will swing a gate back, and the gate will go crash in between the wheels of the waggon, and will be knocked to pieces. Those are all things, in which we have to depend upon one another, and make such arrangements as we can in one another's interest.

26,681. You have nothing to say about game, have you?—I personally have nothing to say about it. I do not know whether you wish to ask me any questions about it.

26,682. No, I think not. You give the tenants the game, do you?—Certainly not, they are reserved in all the agreements.

26,683. Is the shooting let on some parts of the estate?—The shooting has been let. On the Monknash Estate it was not let last year. This year I have been down with my sons, and they have had the shooting. My sight is too bad to allow me to shoot.

26,684. But you do not see any objection to the landlord letting the shooting over his property to a third person?—Well, from my point of view, the tenants take their farms for certain purposes. They take them on conditions that they know perfectly well, and one of those conditions is, that the game is reserved to the landlord. I look upon all interference, especially on the part of the Legislature, between landlords and tenants as most mischievous.

26,685. I do not go so far as that. I only ask you whether there is any objection to a landlord letting the shooting over his property to a third person?—I give you a broad answer, my Lord.

26,686. The meaning of the question I asked was, do you think it is a cause of friction between landlords and tenants to have the game let to a third person?—Oh, certainly it is; it is like the intervention of any other third person; it is a cause of friction.

26,687. Still you approve of it. You see no objection to it, though it may be a cause of friction?—Certainly not.

26,689. Can you suggest any remedies for improving the profits on land?—I really do not know that there are any remedies for increasing the profits. I suppose that under ordinary circumstances, the planting of land ought to be encouraged instead of being discouraged as it is, but I am speaking now particularly in relation to a mountain farm of mine on which I planted 50 acres, and as soon as ever it was planted (it cost me 600*l.* to plant it) the neighbouring wiseacres went and rated it, in defiance of the Act of Parliament. The whole of the rates only amounted to a few shillings a year, and it was not worth appealing for, so we did not appeal, but it was in utter defiance of the words of the Act of Parliament, which say that the land shall be rated at the value which it held previously to the planting. Half of that plantation was burnt down this year, and, as for profits upon it, I never expect to make any.

26,690. I need hardly ask you about your relations with your tenants. I suppose I may take it, that they are very friendly?—Oh, most friendly; they are as friendly as they can be, and I should be very sorry if anything made them anything but extremely friendly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,691. Have you a form of agreement in use on your estate?—Yes, and I went over to the hotel to fetch it, because I thought you might like to have a look at it, but I unfortunately took up the wrong paper.

26,692. Will you kindly send it to the secretary for us?—Certainly.

it made much difference whether an estate was encumbered or not, because the estate has to be kept in good and substantial repair, or else there will be no surplus for anybody.

26,694. But there I wish to refer to the distinction which you yourself made between repairs and improvements. Where does the tenant for life of an encumbered estate—with the objects that you point out such a tenant for life naturally has—get any capital from to improve the estate?—Why should it be improved?—quieta non movere—why should not the farms be allowed to remain as they are, if they are in good repairs?

26,695. We can give you an instance in this very county, in reference to which we have had evidence, both at these sittings and at our last sittings in this county. I refer to the Margam estate, where the late Mr. Talbot, following a policy of his own, which has some advantages and some disadvantages, let the farms at low rents on the understanding that the tenants were to do the repairs and make what buildings they liked?—Yes.

26,696. Now we have got Mr. Knox, who comes upon the scene, and who has adopted a different policy, advancing considerable sums in order to improve the property?—Yes.

26,699. Do you remember the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, Mr. Bruce Pryce?—Yes.

26,700. Do you think that is a satisfactory Act, and one which carries the abolition of settlements, indirectly, by increasing the powers of tenants for lives, sufficiently far?—No, cercainly not. The Settled Land Act of 1882 has this great disadvantage, that any purchase money has to be re-invested for the objects of the settlement. As now practically you cannot get more than 2¾ per cent. or 3 per cent. for your money, there is no inducement whatever to sell except under exceptional circumstances, such as the arrival of this Commission

26,701. Can you tell us anything about a very interesting case that came before us at Swansea—the Loughor Common?—Yes, I know something about that, but I do not know very much about it. I think that it is possible that you know even more than I do. I recollect your being engaged in the case at Gorseinon.

26,702. But that was a case that only raised, somewhat indirectly, some points not very relevant to our general inquiry?—Yes.

26,703. That is some years ago?—That is some years ago, unfortunately. I know nothing at all about the estate.

26,704. Do you remember when you were younger than you are now, whether the common was much larger than it is at the present time?—Yes, very much larger. I was there a few years ago, and there have been enormous encroachments in the way of buildings.

26,705. Is there a manor of Loughor, or what is the name of that manor, that the common of Loughor is in?—I do not know; I do not remember. It is my uncle's property, Mr. Cameron.

26,706. Have you any old documents, or has Mr. Cameron any documents relating to that manor. I have forgotten the name of it?—I think it is the manor of Loughor. There are two names to it, but I have forgotten the other name which you are referring to.

26,707. Do you happen to know, whether there are any court rolls left, or any deeds or documents in Mr. Cameron's possession?—No, I do not think there are any whatever.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,708. I gathered from your evidence, that you felt that as little interference as possible was the best thing for both landlords and tenants?—I am sorry to say, that I am animated by a profound detestation of law and lawyers.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,709. Mr. Bruce Pryce, you are a barrister?—I am.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,710. Your view is founded upon—— ?—Knowledge.

26,711. Yes, but upon the principle that freedom of contract in the long run is best?—I cannot imagine any other system paying at all.

26,712. How would you deal with cases, where there was no freedom of contract on one side of the contract?—I am afraid I do not follow you.

26,713. What I mean is this: supposing, for instance, that you have an estate in Chancery?—Yes.

26,714. And the trustees of that estate can do nothing but what is strictly within the law. Do you think that the laws, as they now exist, are so perfect that it is right to leave a tenant under such circumstances simply to the tender mercies of the law?—I am sorry to say, that I think that our English law is the very worst in all civilised Europe, so that I do not stand up as a defender of our law at all.

26,715. In what way would you suggest alteration of the law to meet such a case as that?—To begin with, the first thing I should like to see would be the abolition of wills and settlements as they are generally spoken of. On account of vested interests, which of course have to be respected, that would have very little effect immediately, and it would be more than a century before we should have freedom, and what intermediate arrangements might be made to get out of the present state of slavery, I do not know.

26,716. But even supposing you had made the alterations, that you consider necessary in the law, by the abolition of settlements and everything of that kind, you cannot abolish a minority?—No, you cannot.

26,717. Then during the 21 years of the life of an owner who is a minor, perfect freedom does not settle the question, does it?—I lived for five years in Switzerland; of course it is a small country, but it is in opposition to England—a free country—and there the rights of tenants are simply ignored. Occasionally of course a person goes away or has bits of land in different parts, and the land is let, but generally speaking, broadly, the rights of tenants are simply ignored; the only person who is ever regarded is the landowner. There, in the case of a minority, no solicitor is employed at all; the mayor has official charge of the minors; if he wants an extra clerk he gets it, and at the end of the minority, whatever money belongs to the minor is handed over to him, and the farms or the land are let during the meanwhile.

26,718. Of course we know that in Switzerland, in by far the majority of cases, the landlord is also the occupier?—Exactly.

26,719. Is that what you would like to see in England?—Very much indeed.

26,720. Then you really are in favour of what we may call peasant proprietorship?—Oh, dear me, no; I am in favour of perfect freedom; that is to say, that I would not inquire into the division of land any more than I should into the division of consols.

26,721. You would leave natural laws to settle it?—Exactly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,722. Even in a country like England, where the land is limited, and the population is increasing?—Really I do not see how that affects the question. The population is increasing, I know, to my cost.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,723. You think it would be very wrong, to increase the amount of population which remains in England by artificial means, which would nurse a greater population than can possibly live by the land. That would be one of the objections you would have to the interference of the law, if there was a law, which artificially produced peasant proprietors by giving them advantages—for instance, lending them money to purchase their holdings?—What would happen, supposing there were peasant proprietors in England, is what has already happened in Lincolnshire, where there were a very large number of them; the land had all to be sold to satisfy the lawyers. In England we cannot move or live or have our being at all, without having solicitors at our sides, and those solicitors are men of education—I am not reflecting upon them at all in any way—but they have to be paid, and all those Lincolnshire holdings, one by one, fell into the hands of the lawyers.

26,724. This is the point I want to come to: You would object to any system by which public money would be lent at low rates to farmers, in order that they might buy their holdings, and in order that thereby we might get a larger number of peasant proprietors?—But, excuse me, as I understand peasant proprietors, you surely do not mean proprietors of farms of 300 or 400 acres or 500 acres; you would not call them peasant holdings.

26,725. But the farms we are speaking of here, are small ones?—The farms I have been speaking of on the Monknash estate average 250 acres.

26,726. Then I asked my question more with regard to the smaller ones?—Of 100 acres, or 20 acres?

26,727. Of 20, 30, 40, or 50—just as it happens?—You see what we, as landlords, have always liked has been to let our farms in holdings of about 100 acres, which a man and his family could cultivate. The rents have always been punctually paid on those holdings, and there was not as much capital required, and they were more easy to manage than the larger farms. But then those are not what you would call peasant holdings at all.

26,728. I do not want to restrict you to any particular sized farms—say that 100 acres is the model farm?—Yes.

26,729. Now, supposing that there were a great many farmers in Wales who held farms of 100 acres, would you object to the State lending them money at 3 per cent., in order to buy those farms, in case of sale by the landlord?—I think it would be a most unwise and impolitic act for the State to do; I do not see why the State should pick out the farmers for that purpose, any more than they should pick out any other trade.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

26,730. You think that in the long run, with regard to the Legislature of England, looking ahead, it is better to leave things to take their course, and for farmers either to stay or to emigrate, or to do what they like, rather than that there should be any artificial system of keeping them in their farms?—I should think so myself, certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edwin W. M. Corbett re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

26,731. You wish to rebut some evidence you have heard to day?—I wish to rebut some evidence given by Mr. John, at Bridgend, on the 2nd November, and some evidence given by Alderman Gwylim Jones, and I wish to refer to the evidence given by Mr. E. Llewelyn this morning.

26,732. Shall we take Mr. John's evidence first?—If you please, my Lord.

26,733. When was Mr. John's evidence given?—On the 2nd November, at Bridgend.

26,735. What did Mr. John say about that? Was that the case of the perpetual lease for half-a-crown?—I think this was 5*s.* a year; there was half-a-crown for the leasehold, and there was a garden which we always considered was held with it; it was not included in the lease, but it was dealt with in it, and it had been held by the same tenant at another half-a-crown, making 5*s.* a year.

26,736. Was that the case in which the grandfather sold?—Yes.

26,737. What he said, so far as I remember, was that the grandfather built the house, and they paid, as he said he understood it to be, a perpetual rent of half-a-crown for each plot of land—so many perches of land?—Yes; that is the case. He said he understood it to be a perpetual rent, when he held the lease at the time. He held the lease, it was absolutely impossible that he should have understood it to be a perpetual rent, the lease for lives. The owners have it now, at the present moment, in their possession.

26,738. Can the lease be produced?—I do not know whether we have a copy of that; a copy was produced at the time, anyhow, there is no question about that, and I believe if the owner were brought before you, he would say so here. That is as regards lot 66.

26,739. He never mentioned that lease at all?—Oh, dear no, and that is just the way the evidence was given before you by this gentleman, to suit his purpose.

26,740. But after all, there is the statement, one man says nothing at all about a lease, then another statement is that there is a lease; but no lease is produced. We are very glad to have any rebutting evidence you like; we are only too pleased to have it; but it must be proof?—Well, that is my statement of fact.

26,741. Exactly. He states that there was no lease, and you state that there was. Is not that so?—Yes, only that I am in a position to know that it is so.

26,742. We do not doubt your knowledge at all, all we want is proof. All we have at present is, that one man says he had not got a lease and another man says he had?—But excuse me, my Lord. The owner of the property does not say that he has not got a lease; it is only an outsider who tells you so.

26,743. He never mentioned the word "lease" at all, he says he had a perpetual ground rent?—The owner of the property has not been before you at all. It is only an outsider who comes before you, and tells you a story. He does not know the facts; I do know the facts. That is what it comes to.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,744. As to lot 66, Richard Hugh is the tenant. That is the one you mean, is it not?—Yes.

Chairman.

26,745. He is put down as a yearly tenant here?—He is a yearly tenant for one piece—for a garden; then there was a piece sold with that. The leasehold piece was sold with it.

26,746. Who puts in those particulars?—Those are our particulars.

26,747. Against lot 67 there is this note in red ink: "Lease for life of James Thomas, stated "to have been four months of age, from the "1st May 1824." That is against lot 67, and there is nothing against lot 66 at all?—No. That is what I explained at first. There were two pieces, they were held together. The piece which made the value of the property was

No. 67, that is the lease for lives, the other was always held with it, and they were sold together by private treaty.

26,748. It is not so marked. We must be very careful about this. There is only lot 67, lease for life, and to lot 66 there is nothing whatever?—Lot 66 is yearly tenancy; it is a garden.

26,749. But that lot 66 was taken by Lord Bute just the same as lot 67. Lots 66 and 67 you say were sold together?—Quite so. They were held together, and they were sold together, but lot 66 was a small piece of garden. Lot 67 was the piece with houses on, as to which it is stated that it is a hardship that we should have sold it, because the man had built the houses and so made the value of the property. Lot 67 was included definitely in this lease for life. Lot 66 was a garden on the other side of the road; it was always held with the other, and we treated the two at the sale by private treaty as together.

26,750. You always treated them as together, but there is nothing said here on lot 66 whatever, except that you say it was a yearly tenancy and that he says it was what they call a feu?—But I think that he was speaking more of lot 67 because that was the land with the buildings on it.

26,751. I quite see that; I was only pointing out that there was nothing against lot 66 whatever?—No; 67 is the plot he referred to.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,752. Why is there no mention of the lease in the printed particulars of sale?—Because we thought the lease had expired, until the owners of the property came and told us that it had not, and that there was this man's life.

Chairman.

26,753. When was all this writing put in, because it is not in the print?—It was put in at the time of the sale—just before the sale. Inquiries were made in the room just before. It was put in just before the sale.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,754. Then we may take it that these particulars of sale contained the red nk?—Yes. The next lot is a similar kind of case, lot 45. That is a man of the name of David Thomas. This was leased for 60 years from May 1838.

Chairman.

26,755. I should rather like to see a copy of this lease. It is rather important?—I produced a copy of the leases in London to show the class of things they were.

26,756. A copy of all these?—Oh, dear no, we do not have copies, we do not possess them.

26,757. Then all this is hearsay?—No. It is in our estate surveys that they were leased at certain dates. It is years ago. These old leases are a great many of them lost, or rather the counterparts.

26,758. You have a record of them?—We have a record of them. Of course the owners would hold the original leases and do hold them, some were produced; of course, we should only sell subject to those leases.

26,759. These were put in as yearly tenancies, and all these written alterations are corrections?—Yes, because we were not aware in some cases of these leases, and the people came and proved to us, at the time of the sale, that they held the leases. We thought that some of these pieces were on yearly tenancy.

26,760. Did Mr. Richard Hughes for instance come and tell you he had a lease?—I think in Richard Hughes' case we had a note that there was a lease, but we thought the lives were extinct; then at the time of the sale it was proved to us, that there was a life left, a man living in Glasgow, James Thomas. He was four months old when the lease was granted in 1824.

26,761. Now what is the next instance you want to refer to?—I was going to speak of lot 45. That was a lease for 60 years.

26,762. Was that Sweeting's?—No, I am coming to Sweeting's presently. This is David Thomas.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,763. I think you gave us a specimen of the leases?—I gave a specimen of these old life leases.

26,764. They were leases for lives, and they were very interesting. Mr. Seebohm and I were much struck with them, and we went through one of them in London?—Yes, that is so.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,765. The real point seems to be this, that a man who is a holder for a very long period, or the successor of a holder loses sight of the fact that he has a lease, and thinks because his father before him has held the place for 60 years, that he can go on holding it. It is ignorance?—It may be so, but I do not believe they lost sight of it, because when we advertised them as yearly, thinking them yearly, they very soon came and said they had leases. I believe they were perfectly aware of the fact, all of them. Now as to lot 45, this was a lease for 60 years from May 1838, so that there would be only 10 years to run. The house and garden and 1 rood 20 perches of land, we sold to the tenant for 55*l.* I cannot conceive that that can be a very great hardship.

Chairman.

26,766. He was executor to his father-in-law, and he bought this property assuming that his father-in-law was the real owner?—Well, we cannot help, what he chose to assume.

26,767. And he paid the Marquess of Bute this sum of 66*l.*?—No, he paid him 55*l.*

Chairman—continued.

26,768. He paid his relations 66*l.*, and then the house was sold at this sale for 55*l.*?—Well, of course we cannot help what he thought and what he paid his relations for it.

26,769. He bought it again for 55*l.*, is that so?—Yes, we knew nothing of the other transactions. We simply sold to him as tenant for 55*l.*

26,770. I think there is no difference between you there?—Then as regards lot 70. That is a piece of land, 2 roods and 29 perches, with two cottages built upon it. The first entry we have in the rental is in 1844, that is 50 years ago very nearly. We do not know—we have no record at all—on what condition that land was let to this man. It is possible, that there was an understanding that there was to be a lease, but what lease it was we do not know, if there was anything at all. It might have been that he was a squatter and built these houses, and that then we came in and said, that he must pull them down or pay us for them. I do not know, but anyhow we sold him half an acre of land and the houses, for 40*l.* We had a perfect right to put this up to auction and turn him out and get what we could for the land and the houses, I daresay a couple of hundred pounds or more. We sold it to him for 40*l.*, because we thought it possible there might have been a lease.

26,771. You sold this property to him on the supposition that there was a lease?—No, we thought there might have been.

26,772. You sold him this property, for which he gave 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre, for 40*l.*, assuming that it was the property of the Marquess of Bute?—We did not assume that; we knew it.

26,773. Knowing, or at all events asserting that it was the property of the Marquess of Bute, though there was no lease for lives or anything?—No, there was no lease, and we could not tell from any of our books, under what circumstances he had been allowed to build these houses.

26,774. You could not make out under what circumstances he built the houses, and yet you sold him the place for 40*l.*?—Yes.

26,775. Then there is no difference between you. That is what he says?—That is what he says, but he says it is a hardship, and I want to convince you that it is not.

26,776. But there is no rebutting evidence in that?—Only that for which we could have got 200*l.* or more we sold to this man for the 40*l.* on the consideration that he might have a lease; so that I do not think it fair to say there is any hardship.

26,777. You say the value was 200*l.*?—I am only saying about 200*l.*; I do not know personally; I have never seen the property.

26,778. Anyhow, there is no difference between you?—Not as to facts; I think not.

26,779. That is exactly what he says?—Only as to the inference that it was a hardship. I say it is no hardship. I say we treated him liberally.

26,780. Well, we are very glad to take your view about that?—Then as regards the case of Sweeting. I only got the notes at 10 o'clock this morning; the newspapers did not help me because they gave the name of "Sweet," and other particulars were not correct; and I have not had time to inquire into the matter; but it does seem that the first rent we received was in 1868.

26,781. Sweeting was the man who went to the parson, and then the parson went to you?—So he said. I never heard the story before. It may be right or not; I do not know. I have never been able to inquire into it.

26,782. That is his story—that he went and took the advice of the parson?—At any rate, by paying 1*s.* a year he admitted (whether in ignorance or not I do not know), but he did admit that it was not his property, and that it was Lord Bute's, and we treated it in that way.

26,783. We do not see that. We must stick to what is before us. There is no admission of that sort at all?—Yes, by paying 1*s.* a year.

26,784. That was the feu, the perpetual ground rent?—No, I do not think he could have understood that. We never have such a thing as a perpetual ground rent on our estate at all, not within recent years, or say 70 or 80 years.

26,785. I quite remember the case of Sweeting. He went to the parson, the parson went to you, and then the place was sold?—That is what he says.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,786. Of course the whole importance of this, is not in the details of this particular case, because this appears to be waste of the manor, and we have already discussed the important points that arise there?—That is so. A great deal of it was waste of the manor, as to which we contend, that we had a right to deal with it as we liked, provided we left sufficient pasturage. I know the law is now altered, but that was the law.

26,787. By the bye, what do you say about Edward Llewellyn's evidence?—You mean the evidence he gave this morning? See 26,250.

26,788. Yes?—I am quite at a loss to follow what he said about it. I think he is entirely mistaken.

26,789. He said that Lord Bute paid his mother 100*l.* after judgment?—Yes.

Chairman.

26,790. Is that the case where the woman was put out on to the road?—Yes, but we know nothing whatever about the transaction at all. This is supposed to have happened, as I understood the evidence, just before 1888. I myself and everyone in the office would have known everything there was to be known about this. We know nothing of the kind. We know for certain, that we never bought anybody's property in 1888, and we know that we turned nobody into the road.

26,791. This was not one of the instances referred to by Mr. John at all. It took place earlier, about 1880, and he admitted that 100*l.* had been paid?—But I do not admit it had. We have no recollection of anything of the kind ever happening. The note I have is this, that just before the sale these things happened. Of course this evidence was only given an hour or two ago. I have the shorthand note here, and according to that he said "just before the sale"—he does not say how long before the sale—"of these 23 plots, the Corbetts offered "80*l.* for this house." His mother would not take it; they then had her turned out by the bailiffs, and told her that if she did not take 100*l.* she would get nothing, and she took 100*l.* I suppose he meant that all this transaction took place in 1888; "just before the sale," he said. I never heard anything of it, and know nothing about it.

26,792. We only want rebutting evidence. Are you in a position to deny that this old lady was turned out into the road, that she suffered severely in health afterwards, and that she was told, "If you do not take 100*l.* you "will get nothing?"—Certainly I am, most distinctly. We know nothing whatever of it. I think he must have got hold of some other estate or something. I do not know at all.

26,793. But do you absolutely come before the Commission and say that that did not take place?—That did not take place at anything like that date. Whether it might have done many years ago or not, of course I cannot tell, because I have not had time to inquire. We can none of us remember or think of anything of the sort.

26,794. What date was it?—It is put in the notes that just before the sale of these 22 or 23 plots these things happened.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,795. But there was a county court action, and a judgment, and a writ of possession?—That is not mentioned here I think.

Chairman,

26,796. Yes. It is in Mr. Llewelyn's statement. We are quite aware that you may not be aware of it, but are you in a position to deny the facts alleged. Do you think it is likely that a man would come forward publicly, and make such a statement as that when it did not take place?—I think he is mistaken. I think he is thinking of some other property. I cannot trace anything of the kind.

26,797. That is not rebutting evidence. It is only that you think he is mistaken?—Well, I have only to go by certain notes of what was said this morning, and what I am told, and what I understand is, that he said that about the year 1888, just before these sales, this happened. I can say positively that about that time nothing of the sort happened. Whether in past history anything of the kind happened or not, I am not prepared to say, because I have not had an opportunity of inquiring. If dates are given, and more definite facts, then I can go into it and give you further evidence.

26,798. This gentleman comes forward and says this. He is asked, "When was your mother forcibly evicted?" He says, "In October 1880." Are you in a position to deny that in 1880 this gentleman's mother was put out on to the road—forcibly ejected—and had to take 100*l.*?—Before I deny that I must make further inquiries. This has been handed to me only this morning.

26,799. We understand that, but what we object to is this sort of denials and statements that cannot be substantiated. Any rebutting evidence we are only too glad to hear, and we will give you every opportunity to rebut, but we do not want any kind of casual denials which cannot be proved?—Then as to Alderman Gwylim Jones's evidence ——

26,800. About the common, you mean?—Yes. He says he believes the Marquess of Bute had dealt harshly with brinkers, squatters, and so on. His evidence, as I think you, my Lord, remarked, was very general. Still as a matter of fact, there are no squatters—he was speaking of Eglwysilan Common—and as far as I can ascertain, certainly in my recollection, there never have been any squatters there, so that we could not very well have treated them harshly. As to the treatment of the brinkers, you I think pressed him for a case in point, and he said there was one of a man who had to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* for driving his sheep from the common. That case I think—I have no doubt, in fact—refers to the case of Thomas Evans, whose place is upon a narrow neck of the common, and Mr. Thomas Evans found it convenient to put hurdles across, so as to pen his sheep. We said that could not be allowed because it would be establishing a right. It was as much in protection of the commoners as ourselves. See 25,39 26,805.

26,801. You charged him 2*s.* 6*d.* a year for that?—We charged him 2*s.* 6*d.* when he did it; I think it has been paid once or twice. Then he says, a relative of his had a claim to a piece of Lord Bute's property (this is very old history), so many acres of sheep walk.

26,802. And that he had to give it up?—Yes. His relative gave up the claim; still it was brought forward before you as some sort of grievance.

a bridge over the canal, and making structural alterations in the canal. The subject has been discussed for a considerable time, but there is no indisposition on the part of Lord Bute's agent to meet the county council, and to give them every facility. To show that there has been no undue delay in the matter, I produce a tracing here that was sent to us by the county surveyor on the 13th October. That tracing has been agreed to by Sir William Lewis a few days afterwards; it has been handed to me to make a valuation of the property, and I am now engaged in doing so. This is only on the 13th October. This gentleman, remember, was a member of the county council, who should have known all about it, but he comes and makes these statements.

Chairman—continued.

26,804. Is that all?—I think that is all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Hopkin Smith Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

26,805. You are an accountant at Pontypridd?—Yes.

26,807. This is the public recreation ground?—Yes, and if it is continued to be quarried at that rate for any very lengthened period, the whole of it will really be destroyed for purposes of public recreation. The compensation given for this land was something like 14*l.* an acre, whereas similar land is let for building purposes in the neighbourhood at the rate of from 1*d.* to 2*d.* per yard; that would give at least 1,000*l.* an acre.

26,808. And 14*l.* an acre compensation was given for the land?—Yes. The Pontypridd Local Board are at present the trustees of this land, and they have contemplated laying it out as a public park, but they find that it is no earthly use laying it out in that manner, and spending money upon it, when it is probable that it will be destroyed by quarrying. It is therefore suggested that the Commissioners should make a recommendation, that lords of the manor and all other persons should be prevented from quarrying or working minerals under land, used for public purposes, in this fashion. I would also beg to draw your attention to the award of the Inclosure Commissioners for this common. In paragraph 13 "the minerals under the lands to be enclosed" are given to Lord Bute. In paragraph 14 the lands given to the different owners are mentioned as "land to be enclosed." In paragraph 9, which gives a portion of the common to the public, there is no mention of the word "inclosed," or "inclosure" at all. I submit therefore that this award does not entitle Lord Bute, as lord of the manor, to quarry upon this land, or to work the minerals under it.

26,809. We are much obliged to you for bringing this forward, and we will put that award upon the notes. (See Appendix.) You have nothing further to add?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

Is there anybody else in the county of Glamorgan who wishes to give any further evidence? [Nobody responded.] I think now that we have finished our inquiry as far as the county of Glamorgan is concerned. We are much obliged to the gentlemen, who have come forward and given evidence.

Chairman—continued.

Adjourned sine die.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY.

Second Court.

Town Hall, Cardiff, 4th November 1893.

SIR JOHN LLEWELYN IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. MORGAN DAVIES called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,810. Do you live at Penrhiwceiber Farm, near Mountain Ash?—Yes.

26,811. What are you?—A tenant farmer.

26,812. Do you believe that differences of language, creed, or politics make any difference to the relation between landlord and tenant?—No, in my experience I have not found it so.

26,813. Do you prefer tenancies from year to year to a lease?—Yes.

26,814. Why?—Because in my case, I consider my tenancy is as secure, as if I had a lease in every respect.

26,815. Do you consider in Wales that the tenancy is reasonably secure?—Yes, I do.

26,816. Will you kindly tell me who your landlord is?—Mr. Vaughan Lee is one, and Mr. Herbert Thompson Crawshay the other, and Lord Windsor is a third.

26,817. Are you judging by your own experience. Are you able to speak of others as well as yourself?—Yes, of others as well as myself.

26,818. Are you familiar with the terms on which you occupy your holding. Have you any agreement?—No I never had any agreement drawn out between me and any one of my landlords, of whom I have three, Mr. Vaughan Lee, Mr. H. T. Crawshay, and Lord Windsor.

26,819. Then if there is no agreement, I suppose, there are no penalising clauses. That goes without saying Are you under the custom of the county?—Yes, I am under the custom of the county.

26,820. You have no difficulty between outgoing and incoming tenants?—I see no difficulties.

26,821. Are you in favour of a Land Court?—No.

26,822. Just give the reasons why you object?—Because I consider that every landlord and tenant ought to settle the question of the rents between themselves. I do not think the landlord will be so well inclined to spend any money provided such a Court is in existence in this part.

26,823. Then will you kindly give us the class of work done by the landowners, in the way of building and draining, and the terms on which it is usually done?—All buildings and repairs, that are necessary, are done at the landlord's expense. No interest for such outlay is ever charged on me. I always do the necessary haulage work myself.

26,824. Is there anything else you wish to say. Is there any ground for saying, as has been said by some witnesses, that farmers are afraid to come forward?—Not in my opinion.

26,825. Is there anything else you wish to say?—No, I think not.

Mr. Grove.

26,826. You say you consider the tenancy to be as secure as if you had a lease?—Yes, I do.

26,827. Do you take into consideration the possible chance of the farm being sold over your head?—Well, I have more faith than that in my landlord.

26,828. What about the death of the owner. Suppose there was a death of one of your landlords would that not imperil the position somewhat?—I do not believe so. That is my opinion. I never found it so in our district.

26,829. Have you ever known any cases?—I have one in our district.

26,830. You have heard of a sitting tenant being turned out, because the farm has been sold over his head?—I do not know of any without compensation for it.

26,831. Really you see no benefit in a lease?—I do not see any benefit in a lease.

26,832. And therefore you see no benefit in an agreement?—No, I do not see any benefit in an agreement at all; certainly it would answer some sort of people who wished to destroy the best ground on the land; who wished to plough it up or something of that kind.

26,833. Howm any farms have you?—Penrhiwceiber 80 acres, Vanalog 160 acres, and Nant-y-Rhussa is somewhere about 150 acres or thereabouts.

26,834. That is a very large place?—390 acres altogether.

26,835. What is the rent?—45*l.* upon Penrhiwceiber, 75*l.* on Vanalog, and 45*l.* upon Nant-y-Rhussa.

26,836. That is 165*l.*?—Yes.

26,837. So that it is about 8*s.* an acre. Have you been long in occupation of these farms?—Yes, I was bred and born at Penrhiwceiber, and

I am going on for 66, and my father was before me, and we have it now going on somewhere about 79 years.

26,838. Then you think that a Land Court would be objectionable, do you?—Yes, I do not want it at all; however, I do not think it would do any good.

26,839. You seem to have very good landlords. Are there anything like bad landlords in this county?—Well, there are a few and no mistake about it.

26,840. In the case of an unsatisfactory landlord, do you not think the Land Court may be of benefit?—It is a pity for good people to go and bind themselves with bad ones.

26,841. Do you not think it may be done in this way, that the good landlord and the tenant should always agree together; they need not go to a Land Court even if a Court was provided; they could agree among themselves, and as soon as they agree amongst themselves the thing is settled; but in the event of an unsatisfactory landlord would not the Land Court be valuable and advisable?—In that case it might be.

26,842. If itwas arranged in that way. You think if the landlord and the tenant had plenty of opportunity to agree amongst themselves, and to come to a conclusion, that would do away with some of your objections to a Land Court?—No, I would rather trust it the other way.

26,843. You would rather leave it an open question?—Yes, an open question.

26,844. You cannot see any good in a Land Court?—No.

26,845. Not in any way at all?—No, I would rather leave it as it is at present.

26,846. You say you think that witnesses are not afraid to come forward?—I am not aware of it.

26,847. We have heard general rumours that there is a great deal of that sort of thing. So far as your experience goes, you think that it is all incorrect?—Yes, I do.

26,848. Do you think you would be likely to be aware of it if it existed?—Yes, of course, being in the middle of the locality.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,849. Have you known many instances of change of tenure?—Oh, yes.

26,850. On those occasions, have the financial questions been settled in the ordinary way between incoming and outgoing tenants, by valuation?—Yes, by valuation.

26,851. Have you found any instances in which the costs of the valuation have been oppressive?—No, not in our part. Of course, if the two tenants, the incoming and the outgoing, will not agree themselves, we must have something like that. Sometimes we find that they refer it to valuers, and if the two cannot do it, they must find an umpire between them, and there it is.

26,852. Has that been a very expensive process?—Oh no, of course they generally do it in a friendly way.

26,853. We had an instance the other day before us, in which they spoke of it being oppressive, but I think that was exceptional?—Yes, it is exceptional.

Mr. Grove.

26,854. Your farm seems to be a very low rent. What sort of land is it?—Very high land.

26,855. I see it comes to an average of 8*s.* 6*d.* an acre, taking it all through?—Yes, there is some of it very high.

26,856. A good deal of rough land?—Oh, yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,857. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Do you attend markets?"—Not a great deal now, and I will tell you the reason why: we are selling milk now and keep the stock on the other part.

26,858. "Are you familiar with the district?—I am.

26,859. "Have you ever heard a substantial "farmer say, he is afraid to come forward?"—I never have.

Mr. Grove.

26,860. May I take it you are a Nonconformist or a Churchman?—Well, I do not know. I am a straightaway; I am a Unionist.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Williams called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,861. Where do you live?—1, Glossop Terrace, Cardiff.

26,862. Do you wish to give evidence upon anything that has passed before. You have given evidence already before us. Is it rebutting evidence or fresh evidence you wish now to give?—I thought of saying a few words, with regard to what I said at Pontypridd, in relation to the game. As you are aware, I made allusion at Pontypridd to Mr. Powell of Eglwysnunnyd; that he left owing partly, I did not say entirely, to the damage he had sustained by the game, and treatment by the agent, or something like that. He was kind enough to send a letter to the Commission down to Swansea, if you remember, to deny what I said. After that, I thought it proper for me to try and defend myself, because he told me it was so at his sale. Then I put a letter in the paper just to remind him that the Commissioners had promised to come to Glamorganshire again, and that I hoped he would come forward to give evidence for himself.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,863. You do not know whether he is coming?—I expected he would be at Bridgend or Cardiff, but he has not been present so far. I have been rather disappointed he did not come, in this way. I took, well, the liberty, I should say, to put a little paragraph in the paper to remind him that the Commissioners were coming to Glamorgan again, and that I should be very pleased to see him. I wrote Mr. Powell, I should say, a private letter, as well as putting it in the paper last week, to remind him that the Commissioners were coming to Cardiff and Bridgend, and I told him I hoped he would make it convenient to come and give evidence, and any information he could, to the Commissioners. I am only very much disappointed that he has not come.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,863*a*. Is there anything else you wish to say?—With regard to the Windmill Farm, I should like to say something.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,864. Do you adhere to the statement you made about this tenant of Eglwysnunnyd?—He had two sales in the spring, and he told us the reason he was going to leave, and as I said, I took the liberty of mentioning his name, but I had no authority from Mr. Powell to mention his name, certainly, but I thought there was no harm, because he was an independent gentleman, and he did not care for his landlord or anyone else.

26,865. He wrote afterwards to say, that the quantity of game on the farm, was not the reason he left?—I have before me what he said now.

26,866. This is the letter. "Dear Mr. Knox, "I am surprised and annoyed to find that it "was stated before the Land Commission that I "left Eglwysnunnyd owing to the game. Such "a statement was not correct?"—Yes, and I would take my oath he told me so. How could I think of such a thing. How could I know it without he told me.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,867. In Mr. Talbot's time there were a good many hares?—Yes, you know that, Sir John Llewelyn, to-day there is enough game there, without anything else on that estate.

26,868. At the same time, Mr. Powell won the prize for the best cultivated farm?—Yes; I mentioned that, and everything about him and his good qualities. He is a wonderful gentleman, I must say. I thought of saying, before I went to Thomas Williams' matter, that I was very glad to see you went round the vale, although I would rather you went to the west to prove my case.

26,869. What is the other point you wish to call attention to?—To the case of Thomas Williams, of the Windmill Farm, Llansannor. I thought of mentioning a few words about it, as he is not here himself. I went to Llansannor in 1875, as you had the evidence before, and then he had the Windmill.

26,870. Has Thomas Williams given evidence before us at all?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,871. Is he any relation of yours?—Yes, a brother-in-law; he promised to come to-day, but he is timid, I know.

26,872. Did he ask you to give this evidence for him?—Yes.

26,873. Had he the Windmill Farm at Llansannor?—Yes.

26,874. And Courtisha Farm, Tythegstone?—Yes.

26,875. When did he retire from farming?—I cannot say exactly; he was in the Windmill Farm about eight years, I should think.

26,876. Is he still conversant with the position and requirements of farmers?—Yes; although he is a contractor in Cardiff, he knows all about it.

26,877 Had he a lease?—I had a lease, and he had to farm the top farm. He farmed the Windmill Farm.

26,878. What do you say about the condition of the buildings and fences of that farm?—That is the point I want to call attention to. He built a house there which cost him 400*l*., and he had 100*l*. from the Chancery Court. The estate was in Chancery, when I took the farm. I had the leases on the two, but he farmed the top one. He spent over 300*l*. on the farm alone.

26,879. He only got 100*l*.?—Only 100*l*.

26,880. How long was it, that he was in possession of these buildings, before he got the 100*l*., and after they had been built?—He had the 100*l*. when he was building.

26,881. What did the buildings consist of—pigstyes?—He built the house, in fact the house cost him alone that amount, without the pigstyes.

26,882. Boundary walls?—Boundary walls and garden.

26,883. And hauling materials for the cart-house and the granary?—Yes, the house cost him 400*l*.

26,884. Who found the stone and lime?—He found that as well—everything except the labour.

26,885. Was there anything in addition to that outlay by which he brought the farm into better cultivation?—Yes. You had a letter read at Bridgend to Thomas Morgan by Mr. Owen, a great authority on land in our country, that he had land, and it was only worth 2*s*. an acre when he had it a few years ago, and then you saw what Mr. Owen brought it to. Here is land adjoining, of which Thomas Williams cleared 18 acres and he never had a penny.

26,886. What do you value the improvements that he made upon the land, irrespective of the buildings, to bring the farm into a better state of cultivation?—Well, 500*l.* or 600*l.* at least.

26,887. Was there any water there?—No.

26,888. Did you do anything to get water. Did you ask the landlord to bring water there?—When he built that house, he understood through the agent, that he was to have water.

26,889. There was a kind of a promise?—Yes, there was a kind of promise.

26,890. Was that promise fulfilled?—Oh, never, not to Thomas Williams.

26,891. Did it cost him any money in drawing water?—Well, he was obliged to keep a horse and water-cask, and to haul it about three-quarters of a mile distant.

26,892. This was on lease?—Yes, a 21 years' lease.

26,893. When that expired, did he give any notice for reduction of rent?—Well, I gave notice because the lease was in my name all through. It altered when I took the farm in 1875; things were going on very well, and before another seven years was over, everything was upside down—1879 came in very wet; I had a reduction at Llansannor, and he could not get a reduction on the Windmill.

26,894. You gave notice for a reduction?—Yes.

26,895. Was that refused?—It was refused, and he could not get anything at all there.

26,896. What did he get for his improvements?—Not a penny.

26,897. Did he get any payment for tillages?—Yes, it was the custom of the country there.

26,898. And after he left, was the farm unoccupied?—Well, they had to farm it themselves; Sir Joseph Spearman had to farm it, because no one would take it then.

26,899. You complained that there was mischief done by the game?—Oh, yes, great damage.

26,900. Have we not had this before in your evidence?—Yes, the damage by game. I said something about this too, but the sale has taken place since. They offered the property for sale; that is what I was going to tell you, and here are the particulars of the sale (producing same).

Mr. Grove.

26,901. When was the sale?—About a month ago.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,902. What do you estimate the mischief done by the game at, between 1879 and 1880?—It was about 200*l.* on Llansannor, and the Windmill was over that.

26,903. Do you consider that a Land Court is necessary?—Very necessary.

26,904. Do other farmers to your knowledge think so?—If there was a Land Court in existence, we should be farming to-day.

26,905. What would be the object of that Land Court, in your opinion?—To give the sitting farmer the land, at a proper value.

26,906. To fix fair rents?—To fix fair rents.

26,907. Anything else?—That is all I should think the tenant would require, and free liberty afterwards for farming; to grow what he liked and to sell what he liked.

26,908. Do you consider that royalties and ground rents should be taxed?—Yes.

26,909. To relieve present taxation?—Yes, as I said before, I think they ought to go to pay the taxes.

26,910. And your brother-in-law thinks that the game should belong to the tenant?—Yes, that is my opinion too.

26,911. Is that not the law?—The ground game?

26,912. Yes?—All game ought to belong to the tenant, and every good tenant would be glad to see his landlord there every day if he chose to come; they would be better keepers for him than all the landlord's keepers he could get. As to Llansannor, when I went there, there was a wood called Stenby Wood; there were more pheasants there by far when I went there than when Sir Joseph Spearman was preserving by the aid of two or three keepers. We had the game on this farm for ourselves, the first two or three years. Foolishly, I signed an agreement. They said, "You can sign the agreement and do what you like"; but when Sir Joseph came of age he put everything upside down, and, as you know, I had notice to quit at the end of six months, and I lost by it. Now he is obliged to sell the estate, and here are the particulars of a part of it sold. He farmed only for six years.

Mr. Grove.

26,913. When was this sale?—About a month or a little more ago.

26,914. What was the quantity sold of that particular farm you are alluding to?—It was not sold at all.

26,915. You spoke of one field of 18 acres, and you drew a distinction between that and the other. Why did you draw that distinction?—Because of this. It was exactly as Mr. Owen said in his letter at Bridgend to Thomas Morgan. Thomas Williams cleaned that part, and it cost about 200*l.* or more.

26,916. Did he ever get any payment for it?—Not a fraction, and it was sold at over 500*l.* the other day. That one was sold but the farm was not. This was sold without the farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,917. You are of opinion that the land ought not to be sold upon the tenant's improvements?—Quite so, until that takes place, this part of the country will never stand and never improve at all.

26,918. Have there been many instances in your knowledge, in which the tenant's improvements have been sold?—Well, all this now has been sold.

26,919. In this particular instance?—Yes, and Llansannor Court will be sold again one of these days, and I have laid out thousands, not hundreds, I am sorry to say, and I shall not get anything.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,920. Do you know the neighbourhood from which the previous witness comes?—I do not know so much there, more up to the east.

26,921. He did not know of any hardships in that part?—I know one tenant he alluded to, with respect to an advancement of rent, because they improved the property, that is Coed-y-nay; they were splendid farmers and improved it a good deal, and as soon as they had done so it was advanced, and at last they left it and went to Penlline, and they are in Penlline parish now.

26,922. Is it your opinion, that if the tenants had the game, and could do as they liked with it, they would soon clear the whole country of game altogether?—I do not know that they would clear it altogether. They would clear it in a way, that they would not do damage to themselves.

26,923. You consider that, after all, game is an article of food?—In its place it is very well. As to preserving it, to eat what they ought not to eat, it is out of the way altogether.

26,924. You would not wish the game all to become extinct?—Oh, no, certainly not.

26,925. There would be some game still for the landlord to come for?—Yes, any time he comes for sport.

26,926. What you object to is its being let to other people?—Yes; you have two tenants on the same land.

26,927. With conflicting interests?—Yes.

26,928. And then there is a great deal of disagreeableness and unfairness?—Yes. This is what happened at this Windmill Farm. Just after we went there, Sir Joseph Spearman came of age, and he was a little bouncing in his way, and thought he was everything. If you knew him, you would say the same thing. I met him here in Cardiff, and he told me like this. He said, "Look "here, John, you tell that brother-in-law of "yours to mind what he is about, or else he "will be thrashed to the last inch of his life."

26,929. What did he mean; I am not quite sure that I understand this slang?—He meant he would have it by the keepers. I knew what he meant, when he said that. I asked him which brother-in-law he meant, because there was another one on another farm, and he said Thomas Williams, the very man who was going to give evidence to-day. I said, "What is it, Sir Joseph?" He said, "Oh! he has been "threatening my keepers, and this and that, I "will not allow." I said, "It is very hard "lines, he has had that farm ruined, and he has "gone to hundreds of expense to put the hedges "and fences and everything in order, and now "you allow your keepers and all their clique to "go over it and do as they like; it is not "encouraging for us to farm tidily if you allow "this." Well, he said he told the keeper that he did not care for him, nor Sir Joseph, and very likely he did; I would not say but that he did. "Well," he said, "he ought not to have said that." "Well, it is not encouraging at all, "if you are going to allow your keepers to do "that." I told him afterwards, "Well, Sir "Joseph, we want an understanding; if you "allow your keepers to do this and that, we "cannot farm like we ought to." "Well," he said, "if you have some grievance, come to me." "Well, I am doing so," I said. He said, "Well, "tell your brother-in-law." I mention this so that you can see what authority the keepers had over him, because that is what I want to show you.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

26,930. You know the Ground Game Act?—Yes.

26,931. If this Act had been in operation at that time you were speaking of, would it have been sufficient to protect you?—No, because a tenant came to this farm after Sir Joseph farmed it for a year or two. He had another W. Thomas, and he got that man to sign something that he would not touch game or rabbits or anything else.

26,932. That is illegal?—That is illegal. The man told me himself, but he is afraid to come and give evidence, although he would like to. I told him distinctly, "If you have done "that, you will never pay for the Windmill." "Well," he said, "he promised to keep them down." Within another 12 months or so, the quarrel went on, and he paid him for one damage, and then he could not get a penny. What did he do? He put some of the men to catch the rabbits, and Sir Joseph's keeper came there and took the nets up and summoned the two fellows, and they went before the magistrate at Cowbridge, and had to pay for it. That is a fact which can be proved.

26,933. Is there anything else?—There is one thing I should like to say; I was pleased that the Commissioners went round the vale, but I should like some of them to go to Margam and round to Penlline. I can assure you, I do not want to come here and say anything, but what is a fact.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,934. I think some of the Commissioners will go to Margam?—Well, they have said so much about Mr. Powell denying and Mr. Knox denying, that I should like them to do so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,935. I was staying at Margam the other day for the Agricultural Show at Bridgend, and I must say I do not think there was one rabbit for every 100 there was in my uncle's time?—There are hares and pheasants there; there used to be rabbits. At the time when I challenged Mr. Knox, if you will remember, I said if he will give me two days' shooting I would guarantee to kill 750. Perhaps you noticed that in the paper; but I did not have that taken up.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,936. He did not accept that challenge?—No.

26,937. Perhaps you are a very good shot?—I have not shot much—only rabbits. I have only shot a few rabbits in my time.

26,939. Who gave the notice?—The tenant gave notice for a reduction. The agent persuaded him to go on for another year, to see if he would improve. He did, and he could not get a penny. Then he gave notice afterwards to go altogether, and he did; he took a farm up in Breconshire and took the little stock that was on it as well. He had a sale at Tydu, and he bought the stock he had there and a few sheep, and made a sale at Tydu. On the day of the sale the agent sent notice to the auctioneer and told him not to pay a penny to the tenant. The poor tenant had told the auctioneer to pay the landlord for the rent, and he could have what was there afterwards. The auctioneer would not do that. Well, he tried to get something for the land, and then the agent, Richard Williams, the lawyer of Cardiff—I do not want to make a grand case of it, but I want you to know who he is—said to the outgoing tenant: "Who is your valuer?" He said—"George "Thomas, of Ely;" he was valuing myself going in, and I think he will value me going out. He said "You must not have him because he is

"mine," Well, I thought he could do it for us both, and he said, "No, you must have your "own valuer, George Thomas is mine." That was so; the poor tenant had to have John Lewis Brigam, and then they went both to value, and it turned round like this, that Richard Williams wanted to charge the poor fellow for dilapidations on the farm.

26,940. You are not in a position exactly to find fault with the valuer's awards?—No, I am not going to do that.

26,941. Mr. George Thomas, of Ely, and Mr. John Lewis, of Brigam, are both good men?—Yes, they are the two best men you could have. The farm was let to another tenant without paying a penny bill at all. Richard Williams, the agent, told him not to pay a penny bill. Then Richard Williams fought with this poor outgoing tenant for dilapidations on the farm, saying he did not farm it as he ought to, having refused him to go two or three years before. I do not know how the litigation went on, but they went to London and came back to Cardiff to finish it afterwards, and the poor fellow had everything sold up. Richard Williams followed him up, and even sold his bed from under him. There was not enough to pay the legal costs and all expenses. This man's wife had a little money, a couple of years afterwards, from her uncle, and then when he found that out, he put in for a slice of that, and he had 80*l.* or so.

26,942. The upshot of this is to advise the tenants to keep clear of the law?—Yes, especially clear of the law, if there is any agent on the land. That is the worst case I know, and I should like him to come himself, but he is so timid; he has been a respectable farmer, but he now drives a cab in Cardiff.

26,943. He would not come forward?—No, he is afraid. He is afraid because there is a few pounds balance again on the old score, and of the expenses of the last litigation he had with the agent. They do not complain of the landlord; he is a splendid landlord; but as for the agent there is not a worse in the county.

The witness withdrew

Mr. T. MANSEL FRANKLEN called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

introduced at once conflicts with the old custom, and can be objected to. I suggested at the Cowbridge Farmers' Club, that valuers should be requested to give adequate compensation for land laid down to grass, having known cases of tenants when leaving farms ploughing up a fair turf laid down by them, as the only means of getting some allowance, which would be only the profit on the labour done, thereby throwing back the land from the only profitable method of working it, in the present state of prices. My father in my time laid down more than one-fourth of his whole holding into grass, and the country has followed. I do not mean to say that they followed his example, but the face of the country has changed in very nearly that proportion in my experience, the plough land being laid down to grass.

I wish to suggest, as a remedy for the great grievance about the grass land, that not only in respect of future improvements, which are provided for with the landlord's consent, which I think should be subject to appeal, but also in respect of the grass which has been laid down during the past period, and has not been compensated for in one form or another. I think that the tenant ought to have a claim before a skilled referee, as to what extent he has benefited his landlord's capital in that farm, by laying down his land into grass, and has not been remunerated by holding it on for a long period.

Another matter is the provision of suitable buildings, which is necessitated by the laying down of land to grass. You require pools in the fields, and you require sheds for high-class modern cattle, especially Channel Island cows, which are almost necessary for a modern dairy to be carried on at a profit. Under the present law a tenant who is willing to put them up at his own expense, cannot do so and get compensation, without the previous written consent of his landlord. I do not know whether the Commissioners would require instances, as evidence on which they must found any report. I have no grievance, but I am willing to give instances if it is necessary, without any complaint of anybody. I shall take care so to state it that I make no complaint. What I have done in my own case I have done with my eyes open, and have no sort of complaint to make, but I think it is only an instance of what the state of the law is for everybody, and therefore I do not know that it is necessary to mention any instances at all. But my suggestion of the remedy is, if the landlord when applied to for an improvement of the first class in the schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act refuses his consent, the tenant ought to have liberty to apply to a public officer—I suggest a competent person appointed by the Board of Agriculture in each neighbourhood—to say whether the improvement is suitable to the holding, and if he finds that it is, the tenant ought to be allowed to execute it, and obtain compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

I should like to go on to say something about building leases if that is within the scope of your inquiry. I think that much exploitation of the people of the country takes place, in respect of the method of granting building leases. The first thing is excessive and unreasonable fees charged not for the leases themselves, but for incidental services. I have a couple of instances to mention, which have come into my hands as clerk of the county council, which if evidence is required to furnish ground for the Commissioners' Report, I am quite ready to bring forward. I do not make any particular complaint in these instances, but I think they are specimens of undue hardship that deserve a remedy, because what is done to us is certainly done to the poor in at least an equal extent. The fees charged in respect of the surveyor's services are subject to no check whatever, in the same way that the costs of solicitors are subject to a check; and I think they ought to be. I spend a good deal of my time in reducing solicitors bills: it is a part of my duty, and I think there ought to be some public officer, to state what is a reasonable fee for services done by surveyors. I am not in the least desirous that people should work for less than a fair remuneration, but the fees I have known charged, are fees that have no relation whatever to services done.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,947. You mean out of all proportion?—I consider them out of all proportion, and I will give instances that have taken place in the county council office. I have an agreement for a lease in my pocket now of a police station, for which the landlord's surveyor asked a fee of 7*l.* 7*s.* merely for pegging out the ground; that is the only service he renders, and seeing that the building is there when we come to ask for our lease.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Mr. Grove says they pay 9*l.* 9*s.* in Monmouthshire.

Mr. Grove.

by the aid of the High Court of Chancery, or now the Chancery Division, should be put into the hands of the county court and to some extent extended.

26,949. When you speak of a licence for a shop, do you mean an ordinary business place?—An ordinary business place, to carry on any business whatsoever—grocer's business for instance.

26,950. It is usual to have that very strictly as regards public-houses, is it not?—Oh, certainly.

26,951. You mean an ordinary grocer's shop, or anything of that?—I mean carrying on any trade or business.

26,952. Have you thought out the benefit or otherwise of a Land Court?—Well, a Land Court means so many things in different people's minds. I have a strong view about a Land Court. My own opinion is that it cannot fail to make the actual occupier sit at a competition rent. That must be the ultimate effect of a Land Court, meaning by that a court to fix fair rents, and nothing more.

26,953. Do you think the Agricultural Holdings Act is imperfect as it is at present?—It is a very good Act so far as it goes, but I have pointed out what I think is a great defect in it. In point of fact, take such a thing as laying down land to grass. Is it in accordance with the ordinary rules of business, that a tenant who is going to lay down a field to grass would obtain a licence in writing before he does it? In point of fact, as to the improvements made by tenants, they are not many in this country, but such as they are, they are made from day to day, and without a special previous application in writing. If he sees the agent coming over the land, he very likely will tell him what he is going to do, and the agent would make no objection if it was a reasonable thing. That ought to be a sufficient consent without a previous notice in writing.

26,954. You referred to the report of the Board of Agriculture. You think that possibly the Board of Agriculture should supply a referee in these matters?—It is provided by the Agricultural Holdings Act that there should be a referee appointed by what was the Board in those days. I only use the Board of Agriculture as the modern term for the same authority. I think the machinery under the Agricultural Holdings Act is perfectly fair and just. The only fault about it is, that it is so highly technical, that it is practically impossible for a tenant to work through it without the aid of a skilled adviser.

26,955. You would agree with the principle of justice that a tenant should be fully compensated for the improvement he puts on the ground?—Certainly, in the form provided in the Agricultural Holdings Act. That is to say, not for the money he has laid out, but for the benefit to his successor that he leaves in. That is fair justice.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

6, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, Tuesday, 23rd January 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GHIFFITHS.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.
Mr. T. E. MORRIS,
Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Colonel Sir COLIN C. SCOTT MONCRIEFF, K.C.M.G., C.S.I., called and examined.

Chairman.

26,956. You are, I believe, Permanent Under-Secretary for Scotland?—Yes.

26,957. You have been good enough to say that you will give us some evidence of which you have prepared a draft?—I shall be glad to do so. Mr. Seebohm was good enough to give me suggestions on the points you would like to have evidence about, and I have turned my attention to those points.

26,958. Will you kindly speak to them seriatim?—Certainly.

26,959. Will you please begin with the Celtic passion for land?—The Celtic passion for land, I suppose, is notorious; everybody knows it. I find in the report by Sir John McNiell, who was sent to examine the condition of the Highlands of Scotland, in the year 1851, that he writes:—"The tenacity of their attachment "to their native soil and their repugnance to a "residence in parts of the kingdom where they "are foreigners, is great. Years of intercourse "with the more advanced districts seem to pro-"duce no desire to change their condition." I asked Sheriff Brand, who is and has been the Chairman of the Crofters' Commission since 1886, as to whether he thought that description could be modified at all just now, and he says since the passing of the Education Act of 1872, while attachment to the native soil has continued, the tendency—especially of those both male and female who have learned to speak English—to seek advancement in populous parts of the country has considerably increased, and is likely to increase much more. In those parts of the crofting area where the Norse element prevails, as in Caithness and Orkney and Shetland, attachment to native soil is different in degree, and is accompanied with a stronger spirit of enterprise and adventure. But the fact is well known in Scotland of the passion for very dreary barren moors, merely because their ancestors have been there from all time.

26,960. Then kindly tell us the grievances alleged in the Highlands, and the extent to which they have been met by legislation?—Lord Napier of Ettrick was chairman of a very important Commission which went to the Western Highlands in 1884, and he writes: "The "population belonging to the class of crofters "and cottars engaged in agricultural and pas-"toral pursuits, in addition to the evils attached "to an unproductive soil, high elevations, and a "variable and boisterous climate, suffer from "several causes of indigence, discouragement, "and irritation, which are subject to remedial "treatment. These may be enumerated as "follows: undue contraction of the area of "holdings, undue extension of the area of "holdings, insecurity of tenure, want of com-"pensation for improvements, high rents, defec-"tive communications—many parts of the "crofting districts being inadequately supplied "with ordinary roads—and such landing-places "for boats as might easily be afforded; with-"drawal of the soil in connexion with the "purposes of sport. To these we may add, as "contributing in our opinion to the depressed "condition of the people, defects in education, "which, however, have been largely remedied "by the Act of 1872, defects in the machinery "of justice, and want of facilities for emigra-"tion." That was written 10 years ago. Again I consulted Sheriff Brand, and he says he is not aware of any undue extension of the area of the holdings being a grievance. He thinks the absence of roads has been a very great grievance, and the absence of landing-places for boats. As to the defects in the machinery of justice, he thinks as much has been done as can be done in a sparsely inhabited mountainous country. And as to the want of facilities for emigration, unfortunately we do not find much desire for emigration. Then Lord Napier goes on to say: "The opinion so often expressed before us that "the small tenantry of the Highlands have an "inherited inalienable title to security of tenure "in their possessions, while rent and service are "duly rendered, is an impression indigenous to "the country, though it has never been sanc-"tioned by legal recognition, and has been long "repudiated by the action of the proprietor." That feeling was evidently very strong; they could not show any papers for it, but somehow there was the old clan feeling that they had a right to stop there. From time to time they were dispossessed. The Duke of Sutherland swept out an immense number of them in the "forties," and that was a great grievance. As to the extent to which the Crofters Act has met these grievances, I would point out the first important point is the security of tenure.

26,961. Was that given by the Act?—That was given by the Act, and given in rather a remarkable way. There was no intention on the part of the Act to perpetuate and encourage this peculiar crofter tenure, but they settled that all who were crofters at that date, 25th June 1886, should get the benefit of the Act; all who were then crofters and their heirs.

26,962. The Act of 1886 gave them security of tenure?—Security of tenure to the then possessors under certain conditions as to paying the rent and so on. It gave them no right to dispose of their croft without the landlord's permission, but it gave their heirs a right to succeed to it.

26,963. It gave no right of disposition of the property?—No, unless with the approval of the landlord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,964. That is, no power at all of alienation inter vivos, but a limited power to devise by will to a member of the family?—To a member of the family. It is defined by the Act, who were members of the family. Shall I begin by defining what a crofter is?

Chairman.

26,965. You had better do so I think?—Section 34 of the Act defines it: "'Crofter' "means any person who at the passing of this "Act is tenant of a holding from year to year, "who resides on his holding, the annual rent of "which does not exceed 30*l.* in money, and which "is situated in a crofting parish, and the suc- "cessors of such person in the holding, being "his heirs or legatees." The condition of the crofter as to security of tenure, is as follows:—First rent must be paid. The crofter must not make over to another his tenancy without the consent of the landlord. He must not sub-divide his holding, or sub-let it or injure it, or dilapidate it. He must not after notice given deteriorate the soil, or build another house upon his holding without the landlord's permission. He must not open a public-house on it without the landlord's consent, and he must not do any act whereby, as the Act says, he becomes a notour bankrupt.

26,966. Does the Act prevent a man building a house, or may he build a house and cannot claim compensation?—If there is no house, he may build one; he would have to settle that with the landlord probably, but as a matter of fact there always has been a house; you understand it is an essential part that the crofter has built his own house; the landlord has never done anything for him; but the Act provides against his doing what they have a very great tendency to do. A man's son marries and he brings his wife there, and a second house is built upon the croft.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,967. The definition clause really carries the existence of a dwelling-house on the holding so to speak?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,968. It is not a question of not getting compensation for what he builds, but to prevent his sub-dividing?—To prevent his sub-dividing, that is the danger; and in spite of the Act, that danger has had a very prejudicial effect in the island of Lewis, where it has been neglected, and the population has gone on increasing in a very unfortunate way.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,969. He is entitled to compensation for permanent improvements?—Oh, yes.

26,970. And in the schedule among permanent improvements we find the head of "dwelling-house"?—Surely. If the crofter leaves the place, or if the landlord deprives him of his croft (as under certain circumstances the Act permits him to do), then he is entitled to full compensation for his land, his house, and his improvements.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,971. But the extra dwelling-house he ought not to build does not come within the schedule?—Well, it comes in in another way. The extra dwelling house is considered as a cottar's house. The Crofters' Act applies to crofters and cottars.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,972. You will find the definition of a cottar, I think, in the same section?—Yes.

26,973. A cottar is a person who does not pay more than 6*l.* a year?—5*l.* or 6*l.* a year, I forget which it is, and the cottar must not possess agricultural land.

Chairman.

26,974. He either pays no rent or rent not exceeding 6*l.*?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,975. The great point of distinction between him and the crofter is, that he is not to hold any arable or pasture land?—Quite so, and whereas in the course of nature the crofter must die out, because only crofters who are descendants of these, are allowed to go on, the Act does not limit cottars in the same way. Cottars may go on. If a landlord allows a cottar to settle down on his property, he may take the benefit of this Act.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,976. I do not quite see what prevents the son of the tenant in a cottage becoming a cottar, and so getting a sub-division of the holding?—Well, the landlord might at once turn the crofter out who allowed the son to do so.

26,977. It is one of the conditions of this permanence in the tenure, that he does not sub-divide?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,978. That rather seems to mean sub-division for agricultural purposes?—Yes.

26,979. I do not quite follow the reason for saying that you cannot build labourers' cottages, I mean, supposing it is worth while to do so; or to build a son's cottage?—Yes, I think it is understood that he has not a right to do that.

26,980. It is exactly provided for by section 1, sub-section 4: He is not to erect any dwelling-house otherwise than in substitution for those already on the premises. You cannot build an extra dwelling-house, but you may build a new dwelling-house?—I am glad to say that one of the good things of the Act is, that it has improved and is improving the crofters' houses. Some of them were really deplorable. There is a distinct amelioration, the people tell me who know most of them.

26,981. One effect of the Act has been to improve the dwelling-houses?—Undoubtedly, I do not think in all my experience of foreign travelling, that anywhere in Christendom, have I seen such a low type of houses, as I have seen in some of our Western Highlands.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,982. They are even worse, so far as I could judge, than anything I have seen in Ireland, but what I saw may have been exceptional cases, of course?—Extraordinarily bad.

Mr. Seebohm.

26,983. Then the hold the landlord has against sub-division and the building of unnecessary houses is the provision in the first clause of section 1, that he may not be removed from his holding, except on breach of one of the conditions, and therefore the landlord gets the whip hand over him if he breaks one of the conditions?—Decidedly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,984. As long as the crofter complies with the statutory conditions, he cannot be turned out of his holding?—There are certain provisions. The landlord may turn him out for enlarging a holding; please refer to section 16 of the Act.

26,985. Section 16 deals with the case of bequests, and gives the landlords certain powers in relation to the person, to whom the property is devised?—There is another case, to enlarge his holding and to improve his estate.

26,986. Apart from those special cases he is perfectly secure? Section 2 contains a special case: "Notwithstanding the provisions contained in the preceding section, the Crofters' Commission may, on the application of the landlord, and upon being satisfied that he desires to resume the holding or part thereof for some reasonable purpose, having relation to the good of the holding or of the estate, including the using, letting, or feuing the land proposed to be resumed, for the building of dwellings, or for small allotments for fishermen," and so on. He may take up the man's croft.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

26,987. But under the orders, so to speak, of the Crofters' Commission?—Yes, there was an instance in point: "Where the croft was the only property of the proprietrix, who desired to resume possession and take up residence thereon. The Commissioners held this to be a reasonable purpose."

Chairman.

26,988. Is that all the satisfaction the Crofters Act has given, the improvement of the houses?—It has given satisfaction; it is a popular Act all through, I think.

26,989. It has settled the country down?—Yes. The country, I daresay, you may remember, was in a very serious condition from 1882 to 1886.

26,991. Are crofters generally fishermen as well as farmers?—Yes, if they have the chance.

26,992. Then, they want to extend the benefit of the Act to farmers as well?—And fishermen, too, sometimes. A man wants to have a lease and settle on a small farm, rather than as a crofter. We have a strong case just now in the county of Sutherland; the estate is in trust, the trustee is a lawyer or banker, and the rents are notoriously high. He says, "Well, it is my duty to my trust; I do not see my way to lowering them." The sheriff's officer has been deforced, and there is a great deal of trouble about it at the present time. These people say, "Why should not we get the benefit of the Crofters Act?"

26,993. They are not in the area?—Yes, they are, but they have a lease.

Sir John Llewelyn.

26,994. The leases are usually for 19 years?—That is the ordinary Scotch lease. Therein lies just the difference between a crofter and the Lowland farmer; the difference between the Saxon and the Celt.

26,995. Are there any instances in which the lease would exceed 19 years, do you think?—I do not know of any.

26,996. If there were any departure from it, probably it would be less than 19 years rather than more than 19 years?—19 years has been the thing usually since my childhood.

Professor Rhŷs.

26,997. When the 19 years expired, would they then be able to become crofters?—No, because by the Crofters Act, a man must have been a crofter in the year 1886.

Mr. Richard Jones.

26,998. When were these men induced to take leases? Was it just before the passing of the Act, in anticipation of the passing of the Act?—I have no evidence to that effect. I really do not know. It is easy to imagine that some landlords may have stood out and said, "I "will not have you unless you take a lease," at any time, but whether they did so before the passing of the Act, I have never heard asserted.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

26,999. This Act does not appear to apply to any holding or tenancy created since the time the Act came into operation?—No, it makes no provision for adding to the number of crofters.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,000. On the part of the Legislature?—Quite so.

27,001. But there is on the part of the inhabitants?—Oh, on the part of the inhabitants, so long as that passion for land lasts there is a very strong feeling about it; and no doubt you are aware there is a Commission in Scotland now, called the Deer Forests Commission.

Chairman.

27,002. How far have rents been reduced?—On an average of operations during four years, the Crofters' Commission reduced rents by 29·232 per cent., say 30 per cent.

27,003. The rents were reduced 30 per cent.?—Yes, and they cancelled 68 per cent. of arrears. In some cases more than 50 per cent. was taken off rents, and in one county 78 per cent. of the arrears were cancelled during one season. On the other hand the reductions were much less in some cases, and in certain cases the rents were actually increased, because the landlord had a right to appeal to the Commission as well as the crofter.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,004. Is it chiefly in the islands that the rents have been reduced?—No.

27,005. Are the islands the worst part?—Yes, the worst part; but the mainland of Argyll and Rosshire were both reduced very much. The Sutherland rents were reduced less than any.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,006. Who is the largest proprietor, whose estate was affected by this?—The Duke of Sutherland; he is the largest proprietor in Scotland; but his rents were reduced less than almost any. The Crofters' Commission bore strong testimony to the liberality with which the rents were conducted on his estate. The Duke of Argyll's rents were reduced much more.

27,007. Do you remember by what per-centage?—Quite 30 per cent. I think. I am sorry I have not brought down the reports with me.

27,008. There are reports to show exactly what the reduction was?—Yes, an exact tabular statement is given of every case.

Chairman.

27,009. How far have the total receipts by the landlord been lessened?—I find that a very difficult question to get an answer upon. Sheriff Brand writes me: "It is very possible that in "the Lewis both those crofters whose applica-"tions have been dealt with, and others are, in "too many cases, in arrear with their rents. "But in many districts landlords have received "their rents much more regularly since the Act "passed." A gentleman, talking to me recently, instanced a place in one of the islands, where he said in the old days the rents were nominally much higher, but the landlord never pressed for them; he took things easily, but now the rents are lowered very considerably, he insists upon having all the rent, and the tenant really pays more than he used to do. I have not been able to verify that actually, but you can understand the landlord saying, "This is a matter of business "now; you have appealed to this court, and "there is no more give and take between us."

27,010. Anyhow you go so far as to say that the rents have been received much more readily?—Certainly; that is Sheriff's Brand testimony, and he is the best authority upon the subject.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,011. He is the the Acting Commissioner?—Yes, he is the Chairman of the Commission, and has been since it began in 1886.

27,012. You have not told us anything about how far abatements of rents have been made, since the rents were fixed. In a bad year would there be no abatements?—The rents once abated have not been touched since. The Crofters' Commission is still going on.

27,013. But I mean, the rent having been fixed by the Crofters' Commission, would the landlord, out of kindness to his tenants, still make abatements?—About that Sheriff Brand thought it was possible enough, and that was my own experience in the island of Lewis. Lady Mathieson is the owner there, and the place, I am sorry to say, is in a most unsatisfactory condition altogether; the arrears are heavy, and Lady Mathieson's man of business, assured me, whether the crofter's rent had been reduced or had not been reduced, they equally refused to pay up. There have been no evictions there, which would be extremely unpopular if there were any.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,014. Do I understand they refused to pay the judicial rent?—At any rate, they do not pay it, and the feeling is so strong against eviction, that practically they dare not put the law into force.

27,015. The law does not run?—No, the law does not run.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,016. The judicial rent is fixed for seven years, and it cannot be altered by agreement during that time?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,017. The question is whether under ordinary circumstances, the landlord, having a judicial rent fixed, considered he was no longer amenable to be asked for abatement?—I think that is the impression.

Chairman.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,019. Do the crofters farm to any profit at all? Perhaps "farm" is the wrong word to use, but do they carry on business on these holdings with the view to profit?—They do to a certain extent, I think, with cattle; they send them in for sale, and certainly depend a great deal upon that, and many have fishing boats in the innumerable lochs, where they are keen about selling the fish.

27,020. What is the difference between their case and that of the tenants who do not farm with a view to profit, who have small holdings, but at the same time do other work?—It is rather difficult to answer that.

27,021. Let me put it in the concrete form?—I know a number of crofters, as a matter of fact, are steadily engaged in other work, and we have got roads which are being made now in the Highlands for the sake of these very men, to give them work, because the croft does not give them anything like work enough. They are not a hard-working people; on the contrary.

27,022. I take it the farming is really what you may call self-sufficing?—I think it is rather that more than anything else, as regards the produce of the soil.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,023. I suppose fishing is rather a precarious living; is it?—Very precarious. The seas are abounding in fish I believe, really, but the west coast fishermen have not got the "go" that the east coast men have. Any number of boats come through the Caledonian Canal from Aberdeenshire and Banff, and take up the fish under the crofter's eyes. The crofters have some boats, but they are inferior boats, and they are not such born sailors. They send their sons out with these boats, however, from the east coast as labourers. A great number of crofters' girls go right across every year to Peterhead and elsewhere, on the Aberdeenshire coast, to clean fish and do salting, and so on.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,024. Are they a law-abiding people, speaking generally?—Well, this is comparative. We have always looked upon our people in Scotland as law-abiding, compared with the Irish for instance. I am sorry to say, that only within the last fortnight, a case has come to our notice, of the mutilation of cattle in the island of Lewis, which is the first instance I have ever heard of, in Scotland.

27,025. Then apart from crimes connected with the holding of land—what may be called agrarian crimes—you would say they are law-abiding people?—Certainly. They are very much under the influence of their ministers.

27,026. The statistics of the Law Courts would tell you that, and would afford a fair basis for comparison?—Yes.

27,027. How do you find the criminal statistics of the counties affected by the Crofters' Act, compared with the rest of Scotland?—I am sorry to say I have not gone into that.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,028. Was agrarian crime increasing very much before the Crofters' Act?—There were great outbursts of crime.

27,029. And that has ceased?—Yes; there has been none since, but still one is always, so to speak, on the verge of it. Last October I was in Skye, and at that time there was a slight amount of excitement; a farm had been taken, and the crofters said that the land belonged to them. It was a small island off Skye, and they would not let the man put his cattle on to this little island. They were summoned to appear in court, and they refused to appear, and there was a little fuss at the time, but it was got over.

27,030. Then really the claim of the people went a good deal beyond what the Legislature has conceded. You say, they said that the land belonged to them; I think that was the phrase you used?—Yes; that is the feeling of the people. You have to go back to the old clan time. They said The McLeod or The McPherson or The McKenzie was their chief, and they had been there always, and they had a right to stop there always. I do not think they would have ignored the chief; they would have given him certainly a great deal of power over them, that no modern landlord would dream of using. But, on the other hand, they felt themselves that they had a right to the land. I have only had the opportunity of studying this for the last year and a half that I have been back in my own country, but I think the Crofters' Act has been very judiciously framed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,031. May we take it, Sir Colin, that there was a desire among the crofters of becoming freeholders of their land?—It was more a sense that they were the holders, and that they were rightfully the holders.

27,032. But there is no provision in the Act?—No, not in the Act. We do not find that they take advantage of the Small Holdings Act in Scotland.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,033. I do not know whether it is taken advantage of anywhere much.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,034. Is it from ignorance? Do they know that such an Act is passed?—That is the question. We sent out circulars about it, and it did a good deal of good at the time, but one of the county councillors the other day said he thought they were ignorant, and that they did not know much about it. In the Lowlands I think there is no wish for it. The people do not care about it.

Chairman.

27,035. Is there any difference between a Court of the Crofters' Commission and a Land Court?—I have always looked upon it as a Land Court. It has all the essentials of a Land Court, I think.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,036. I think the question was put down with the intention of bringing out the point, in what respect the Commission differed from an ordinary judicial court. It has three Commissioners, has it not?—Three Commissioners. The crofters appear themselves in most cases. They may send a lawyer, if they like, but there is no necessity for a lawyer going. I will inquire what Sheriff Brand says about that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,037. The sections of the Act, that form the Crofters Commission, to all intents and purposes make it a court?—Yes.

27,038. I mean, it seems to me more a question of names than anything else. Of course, it is obviously intended not to be a permanent Court or Commission?—Well, that is just a point as to which I think the Act is a little difficult to understand. It certainly is not meant to be a permanent Commission, but, on the other hand, it talks about revising rents at the end of seven years, and one does not know ultimately who is to carry on the jurisdiction, if the Crofters' Commission is not in existence.

27,039. Well, certain of their powers, or a portion of their jurisdiction, for instance, ends at the end of five years, that is to say, the power with regard to enlarging the holdings—that goes?—Yes.

27,040. Consequently, all that would be left to them, by-and-bye, would be to exercise the power of giving consents under the Act, and to refix the rents?—I cannot help thinking when the time comes, that, when everything else has gone, the Legislature will provide for the sheriff doing that, or something of that sort.

27,041. It is very much like the Court, because they may, subject to the approval of the secretary, issue printed forms of application, and so on?—Yes.

27,042. I should say that the point that strikes one most as a practical lawyer is this, that the decision of the Crofters' Commission with regard to any matter is final. There is no question of appeal to any court?—That is so.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,043. May I ask you, Sir Colin, is this judicial rent fixed upon all the crofters' land, or only upon the land of those who wish it?—Only upon the land of those who like to come before the Commission. In many, many cases, they have not come, and they have settled it privately with the landlords.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,044. Have any complaints been made about the Commissioners, with regard to the way in which they do their work?—I have never heard any.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,045. These Commissioners are practical men?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,046. One, it appears, is to be an advocate of not less than 10 years' standing?—Yes, that is the sheriff, and one must be able to talk Gaelic.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,047. They differ from a court rather in this respect, do they not, that they take their own ways of getting evidence?—Yes. There is a great deal of personal inspection done by them; actual walking over the crofts. They are constantly moving in the summer. Sheriff Brand says that lawyers are not required to appear in proceedings before the Crofters' Commission. "I may add," he says, "that this rule has been "found to work satisfactorily." Crofters have often represented their friends with great ability and fluency.

Chairman.

27,048. Then the chief difference between a Crofters' Commission and a Land Court is, that the crofters appear themselves, without the aid of a lawyer?—I suppose that must be so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,049. That is hardly a sound distinction, because in the County Courts a large number of persons appear in person?—Would you not call the Crofters' Commission a Land Court?

27,050. I am inclined to think to all intents and purposes it is a court. I see they have power to appoint valuers and arbitrators?—Yes.

27,051. I suppose they do that a good deal, do they?—There is a great deal of that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I think that is what Mr. Seebohm had in his mind when he was putting down the question. Some witnesses have suggested to us that for certain purposes a Land Court might be established; others have said, "We do not really "want a Land Court. What we want is some "fair and cheap method of arbitration." Is not that what was in your mind, Mr. Seebohm?

Mr. Seebohm.

I rather wanted to clear up what was the difference between a Crofters' Commission and a Land Court. We have a Land Court in Ireland, and a Crofters' Commission in Scotland, and one does not seem to have quite the clearness of definition that one would like, in order to show what the difference is between the two.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Comparing this section with the Irish Land Act of 1881, of course one does find some considerable difference in the powers. For instance, if I remember rightly, the Commissioner in Ireland has all the powers of a Judge of the High Court, and has all the status and all the privileges. That gives them all sorts of powers, I should think, that these Commissioners would not have.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,052. In the case of the Crofters' Commission, a great many of the formalities of the Court are done away with, I think?—When those three gentlemen go about they are allowed to delegate their duties; one of the three may go out and settle the cases, but then there is an appeal to all three together.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

27,053. Does he sit in public?—Yes, he sits in public. He sits in the school-house, or any building that is there, and there are constant applications to the Commissioners here and there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,054. They are entitled to use the Court-houses?—Yes, but in many cases there are no Court-houses. They sit in our Free Churches, or anywhere.

27,055. Supposing the people would not obey the order of the Commission, what steps are taken?—Then you would have recourse to the Sheriff's officer. You mean refusing to accept the rent?

27,056. Yes, supposing a landlord refused to accept it?—Then the landlord would have a right of eviction.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,057. Supposing the tenant refuses?—It comes to the same.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,058. But supposing the Commissioner goes to a village in an out of the way place, in one of these Highlands, and investigates the subject on the spot. Does he go into a public-house, for instance, in a formal way and give his decision?—I cannot tell you.

27,059. Or how does this itinerant court manage those affairs?—He simply goes to some place of that sort.

27,060. Before he leaves the place, does he sit formally to give his decision, or does he send it afterwards in writing?—I am sorry to say I cannot answer that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,061. Would he not communicate his decision to the sheriff afterwards?—He would, as a matter of course, but it is my impression that he tells the people concerned at once, and they may appeal from any one Commissioner to the three Commissioners.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,062. I see that they may take evidence not upon oath, because it is expressly provided that there shall be power for the Crofters' Commission, if the parties demand it, to order that the evidence shall be taken upon oath?—Yes.

27,063. Of course in a court of law we must take the evidence upon oath?—Yes.

27,064. "It shall also be competent to the "Crofters' Commission to make such order as "to expenses as they think fit?"—Yes

27,065. Supposing he orders the landlord to pay, say 1*l.* for the expenses of the crofters, having come before them in a disputed case, how is that order enforced, supposing the landlord says

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"I will see the Commission somewhere first?"—I am sorry to say I cannot answer the question.

27,066. They have to go to some court then. After all, they have to go to a court?—Yes, they have to go to the Sheriff's Court.

Mr. Seebohm.

That would apply to all Acts—to the Improvement Acts—you would have to sue for the amount of your damage, would you not?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,067. But I should like to follow up this one point a little further as to the formalities that they require. Suppose that there is a dispute between landlord and tenant, and the Commission go down to the land, and after hearing the evidence on both sides, then and there give a decision, it is a very much simpler thing than that the evidence should have to be brought before a court, and that a judicial decision should be obtained?—I am pretty certain that is what they do.

27,068. If they can?—Yes, but I cannot say positively; I have never seen them actually at work.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,069. But there would be an appeal to the other two Commissioners?—There would be an appeal to the other two Commissioners.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,070. I see, according to section 30, "Where, "in any proceeding under this Act, the Crofters' "Commission is empowered to pronounce an "order, the landlord and the crofter may "agree to accept the decision of a sole arbiter "mutually chosen instead of the decision of the "Crofters' Commission." Is recourse often had to this way of settling the question of rent between landlord and tenant?—I am sorry I cannot answer you as to that.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,071. I do not know whether I rightly understood that the legal expenses are practically very small?—Very small.

Chairman.

27,072. How far does the Act dispense with the services of lawyers, and thereby lessen expense?—It is a fact that the Act does dispense with the services of lawyers; that the crofter may come and plead his own case, or he may be represented by a friend.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,073. He may employ a lawyer if he likes?—If he likes.

27,074. And I suppose the landlord generally does?—Yes, the landlord would. In many cases I have known of the landlords coming themselves and explaining the circumstances.

27,075. Or his factor?—Or his factor.

Chairman.

27,076. How far does personal inspection supersede evidence in court?—Well, the habit of the Commission up to now has been one of the most extensive personal inspection. They have been over all these crofter counties, and they have actually gone and walked over the crofts.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,077. Do they hold periodical sittings, or do they come to any place where a dispute arises?—No, they have been systematically visiting different parts. They have not yet gone over the whole of the crofters' country.

27,078. No; I understand that so far as fixing fair rent goes, they would have to go, as you say, systematically, but there are divers applications and divers matters in respect of which the Commission have got power as to which there might be a dispute?—Then one of their number will go in that case, I see that Sheriff Brand writes: "It is required by the Act that "every case shall be heard, but there is no "corresponding provision for inspection. In "practice, however, every holding and every "common hill grazing has been inspected. For "a length of time, at first, the holdings were "inspected by the whole three Commissioners "acting together."

Mr. Seebohm.

27,079. Will you tell us whether the applications are generally individual applications, or applications of a whole crofters' village. Would a whole crofters' village apply to have reduction of rent?—I think so, but I really cannot tell you about that. We have had applications from individual crofters again and again, and sometimes by landlords, begging that the Crofters' Commission might come to their places, and we have sent a request to the Commissioners to arrange as they best can.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,080. I suppose applications for extensions of holdings would be made by groups of crofters of not less than five?—Of course to extend the holding you have to cut it off something. The Commission have very frequently taken a piece off a farm, or something of that sort.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,081. As to the area that is covered by the Act, I see by the 19th section inquiry was to be made in Argyle, Inverness, Ross and Cromartie, Sutherland, Caithness, Orkney and Shetland?—Yes.

27,082. And that certain parts of those counties and districts were to be placed under the Commission?—Yes.

27,083. Therefore the area was a restricted one. I hope I am not travelling over ground that was travelled over before I came in, but I was anxious to learn whether that area covered the whole of those counties?—No, not in every case. By the definition, the crofter was to be in a crofting parish, and a crofting parish was that which was to settle whether he was a crofter or not.

27,084. It was within the jurisdiction of the Commission to say which should be crofting parishes and which shall not?—Yes. A good number protested that they were not crofting parishes, and in every case, I believe I am right in saying, the Commission declared that those that protested were crofting parishes.

27,085. So that they extended the Act so far as it was in their power; they made the area as large as they could?—Yes. It was chiefly in the Orkneys and Shetlands where that occurred.

27,086. Did I follow you just now, in saying that you found that there was a growing desire for this area to be extended?—Yes, that is so.

27,087. Outside of these counties which are named?—Yes, both outside of the counties which are named and outside of the limit of the definition of the crofter, because they would like to bring in leaseholders in the county.

27,088. Yes, and also with regard to leaseholders; that I understood. Is that desired principally upon the western coast, or does it extend all over Scotland?—It is a desire which exists in the hill counties. I do not think there is any sort of wish for it in the Lothians, for instance, but we have had lately some applications from the island of Arran. I have heard of a desire up in the hill country of Aberdeenshire and Perthshire.

27,089. Above the Gaelic line?—Yes, above the Gaelic line.

27,090. Then do you consider that the crofters are very much better satisfied when they find the Commissioners coming to see their farms than they would be to settle it in a court?—Yes, undoubtedly.

27,091. And not doing it in the way that we do now by the Board of Guardians Assessment Committees, who settle it in their own room, and thus arrive at the value of a farm without going to see it. The Crofters' Commission is much more satisfactory?—It is much more satisfactory; I know they prefer it very largely. I think that is natural.

Chairman.

27,092. How can the difficulty be best met of small holders being ousted by larger ones as regards rights of common pasturage?—That is met by the Crofters' Common Grazings Regulation Act of 1891. It is a permissive Act. It is chpater 41 of the year 1891.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,093. That applies to Scotland only, I suppose?—Yes, it is a Sootch Act. It makes arrangements for a committee in each crofting township. Section 2 provides that "the crofters "in any township or townships situated in "a crofting parish or parishes within the "meaning of the principal Act, who share in "the same common grazing, may, at a public "meeting called by public notice, appoint a "committee of such number as the meeting "shall think fit, not being less than three or "more than five, who shall be charged with "the duty (in so far as such matters are not "regulated by conditions binding in terms of "section 1, sub-section 5, of the principal Act), "of making regulations as to the number of "stock which each crofter shall be entitled to "put on the common grazing, and as to any "other matters affecting the fair exercise of "their joint rights therein by the several "crofters." Then it goes on to say that where the township does not make this committee, if two or three apply to the Crofters' Commission, they can insist upon their making this committee.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,094. Has that been largely used, do you know?—Yes.

Chairman.

27,095. How is compensation for improvements best arranged, by independent assessors from outside or by local valuers?—I have not been able to get a proper answer to that from Sheriff Brand. I was obliged to depend upon him for my information, and unfortunately he has been ill all this time, so it is a little difficult to get it. He has not answered that. He notes here that "compensation is fully dealt with by "the Crofters Act in sections 2, 8, 9, 10, 16, and "at the end of 31," but he does not really meet that point.

27,096. Has any hardship been felt at the expiration of improving leases, and how far has there been a demand for the option of purchase?—You see, crofters have no leases.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,097. An improving lease is a very common thing in Scotland, is it not?—Yes.

27,098. And they are quite little people, are they not, who take those improving leases?—Yes, very often. Then you get out of that regular Celtic stratum.

Chairman.

27,099. You have told us of the benefits of the Crofters Holdings Act, but can you tell us any further how it works in general?—No, I do not know that there is anything more to be said about it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,100. Can you tell us, Sir Colin, if there is any demand for the option of purchase?—No, I do not think there is. You mean, desire of the crofter to buy his holding outright?

27,101. Yes?—No.

27,102. You are not aware of it?—No, my impression is there is not.

27,103. Perhaps they have not capital enough?—They have no capital.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,104. If they have got the old clan feeling they would not consider that buying was required, or that it was proper, would they?—No. I am sorry to say that all that was good in the clan feeling, I am afraid, has very much disappeared.

27,105. They would consider they had a right to the place, and they would not consider that they were called upon to buy it?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,106. The question which I had in my mind just now, I have not got quite clear. You said that they considered they had a right to the land; do you mean that to be a right to the land as individuals or as members of a clan?—As a clan. They consider that they have a right, but that is not a right to sell the land. I do not think they would claim a right to dispose of it, and to sell it, but they consider that they have a right to live on it, so far as regards them and their children.

27,107. That would be a communal feeling, and not as private individuals, I understand?—Well, each little bit would be private, of course.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,108. They would not consider that they have a right to that land without rent?—Well, partly without rent, but traditionally they consider they have a right to occupy it, but not to sell it.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,109. They have a tradition that there is a right to it, subject to their chief, and so on?—Yes, and of course this is rudely bowled over when a landlord sells the whole of his property to another person, who has never heard about this before; when a landlord chooses to sell his property and cut it up into farms.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,110. There is one other point upon clause 16 with regard to the question of the permanence of the holding by the members of the family. I see in sub-section (d) that the sheriff comes in?—Yes.

27,111. Could you explain how it is that the sheriff comes in?—Well, that particular sub-section, I think, has been framed with a view to the time when the Crofters' Commission ceases to exist, but that has not been consistently carried through the Act. I have tried to get at that myself, and I do not think the Act is consistent upon that point.

27,112. But is not the sheriff in Scotland a different person from what he is in England?—Oh, totally different. The sheriff is a county judge.

27,113. And that, of course, creates a great difference?—Yes, and he has a permanency.

27,114. Then as to the last clause, after the sub-sections in that same section with regard to the enlargement of the holdings in certain cases. "Provided always, that in the case of "any legatee or heir-at-law more distant than "wife, son, grandson, daughter, grand-daughter, "brother, or son-in-law, it shall be competent to "the landlord on his own part, or on the part "of neighbouring crofters, to represent that, for "the purpose of enlarging their holding or "holdings, the holding ought to be added to "them; and in all cases in which the sheriff "shall determine in favour of such representa-"tion the heir ——?"—That it "shall be compe-"tent to the neighbouring crofters to apply to "the Crofters' Commission, who shall make an "order assigning the holding to one or more "of the neighbouring crofters for the enlarge-"ment of his or their holding or holdings."

27,115. Do you know whether that has often taken place?—No, I cannot tell you.

27,116. It would be a very good way of getting rid of the unpopularity of increasing the size of holdings in such cases, that it should be done by the court, and not by the landlord, would it not?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,117. I think, according to the statistics supplied by Mr. Shaw Lefevre in his "Agrarian Tenures," he says that it is but seldom that the crofters succeed in their applications for holdings. He says: "During the same time," that is, during five years, "there have been 187 "applications from 2,804 crofters for enlarge-"ment of their holdings or their common "pasture; of these only 32 cases, from 527 "crofters, have been sanctioned?"—The enlargement of a holding practically means taking a piece of land from a farm. If it is arable land they want, it is probably under lease already, and of course it is a very serious matter to reduce the land a man holds by lease, that is his farm land.

27,118. Were there no applications for portions of deer forests?—Yes, there have been, and occasionally for pasture.

27,119. For common pasture?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,120. Most of the claims would be for arable land?—Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,121. I suppose the Commission would have to be satisfied that the crofters would be able to cultivate the arable land, and also stock the pasture land?—Yes, undoubtedly. Just now the scope of the present Commission is to report what land is primarily under deer and also under pasture. Farms might be made available for arable purposes, and Sheriff Brand, who is chairman of the Crofters' Commission, is also chairman of this new Royal Commission sitting just now, namely, the West Highlands and Islands Commissions of 1893.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,122. I have one other question as we have thoroughly gone into the points: to what extent is the Gaelic language spoken now in the crofting areas?—It is unquestionably the language, but you do not find many adults who cannot speak English.

27,123. But for the ordinary purposes of their lives, the people who come under the denomination of crofters and cottars under this Act, do use the Gaelic language entirely?—Yes.

27,124. Are there many resident owners in these counties?—I wish there were more.

27,125. I mean owners who live a considerable portion of the year there?—No, there are not very many.

27,126. Then, these people have been left very much to themselves, I suppose?—They are very much to themselves. I think the agitation has been brought about a good deal in this way. Of course, property is not so valuable as it used to be. Landowners have found that the best rent they can get for the lands is sporting rent, and they get enormous rents, especially for deer forests, and in a great many cases wealthy people from the south who have taken up these deer forests only go for two or three months, and then they have finished their connexion with the place.

27,127. Has the practical working of the Act shown that it requires amendment in any particular?—That I do not know; unless with the amendment is a change of policy, for instance.

27,128. I did not mean with reference to general change of policy. I meant with regard to the practical machinery provided by the Act, or the definition, and so forth?—I have not heard of any complaint of that sort.

27,129. Then may I take it that there has been no complaint of the practical nature of the Statutory provisions laid down?—I think not.

27,130. And no difficulty has arisen with regard to the working of the Commission?—I think not.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,131. Will you kindly tell us, Sir Colin, whether the Crofters Act has improved the general farming, the agriculture of the district?—I do not believe it has much.

27,132. You do not think they farm any better than they did?—I do not think so. Of course so many causes have been at work one way and the other. Farm produce has been getting cheaper and cheaper. On the other hand, a good deal has been done to help the people. For instance the Government subsidizes a line of steamers, and gives 10,000*l.* a year to steamers for their touching at various places, and taking up and helping in that way. We have also an Act to enable us to spend a certain amount of money in small harbours and boat slips and so on to help these people.

27,133. Quite so, but they do not depend entirely upon agriculture?—No. The country is over populated; that is my own personal opinion.

27,134. Is there any marked difference between the leaseholder and the annual tenant in their mode of farming, do you think?—I am sorry to say, I cannot tell you from much personal knowledge of it. The small leaseholder, I understand, is very little above the crofter, but yet the line is a strong one, and they are jealous of the leasholder, the man that has 50 acres, and a man that has only 20, would like to get some of them. They want to enlarge their holdings at the expense of the leaseholder.

27,135. Has the present depression been felt so much in Scotland? You say the rents have been paid more regularly than before?—These reduced rents, which have been reduced 30 per cent., you understand.

27,136. Quite so?—I think the depression is very great in Scotland.

27,137. But still you say there are some abatements made even upon those?—Even upon those. I do not think there are many.

27,138. In some cases you say the judicial rent is not paid. Can a tenant claim, when the seven years are up, a reduction for the years that are past?—I do not think he could claim if his arrear is not wiped out.

27,139. You say the judicial rent is not paid in some cases?—Yes; the law is not running in some places in spite of all this. I should say that is so in one place, in this long island of Lewis and Harris. That is quite the most backward of all places in Scotland, the great Outer Hebrides.

27,140. I think in many cases it may be clearly seen that the farm is very much less in value, and the tenant refuses to pay the rent. Then cannot he apply to the court that the rent should be reduced, two or three years before?—Before the seven years?

27,141. Yes; before the seven years?—No, I think not.

27,142. You are not sure about that?—I think he cannot.

27,143. Then with regard to this common pasturage, is it not in consequence of having that common pasturage, that they graze the land too bare, so as not to derive any good from it? We found that in North Wales, where there were many cattle upon the mountains, they have too many stock, so that it does them more harm than good?—I really cannot answer that question.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

27,144. You have not found that?—I must plead ignorance of a great deal of it. I have really been so little in my own country for so many years. I have been continuously abroad.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,145. That is where they have what is called grazing without stint?—Yes, that is it.

27,146. Each one tries to graze as many cattle as he can?—Yes. You see this Act of 1891 regulates all that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,147. I think the custom there is that they have what they call the "club farm system"?—They have that in some places.

27,148. And in other places they graze without stint, and on other common pastures I believe that the number is regulated. I think it varies in some places?—The club system is a very common system.

27,149. I suppose that is the best system?—Well, I think this new Act is the best arrangement.

27,150. What is the arrangement under the new Act?—The new Act is that "the crofters "in any township or townships situated "in a crofting parish or parishes within the "meaning of the principal Act, who share "in the same common grazing, may, at a public "meeting called by public notice, appoint a "committee of such number as the meeting "shall think fit, not being less than three or more "than five, who shall be charged with the duty "(in so far as such matters are not regulated by "conditions binding in terms of section 1, sub-"section 5, of the principal Act) of making "regulations as to the number of stock which "each crofter shall be entitled to put on the "common grazing and as to any other matters "affecting the fair exercise of their joint rights "therein by the several crofters."

Professor Rhŷs.

27,151. That is really coming back to something like some of the functions of the old clan organisation?—Yes, or this club organisation.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,152. I think you said that you cannot tell us anything with regard to compensation for improvements. You cannot say how they are carried out?—No, I am sorry to say I cannot.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,153. You could not tell us anything as to the scale of costs?—I am sorry to say I cannot. Of course I should be very glad if you would kindly give me any memorandum of points of that sort, and I would make a point of sending down and getting the information for you. There would be no difficulty about that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

That would be very convenient. I understand Mr. Richard Jones to mean the expense of appearing before the Crofters' Commission, and what expenses they usually allow as between landlords and tenants.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Yes.

27,154. Do you know, Sir Colin, whether the crofters are satisfied with the period for which rents are fixed—seven years—whether it is too short or too long, inasmuch as the prices of stock and produce fluctuate?—I am sorry I cannot answer that. The condition of the Scotch Highlands is one of very considerable restless agitation—political agitation. They have got a Land League there, and I think they have very considerably been affected by what is going on in Ireland.

27,155. Have they any grievances now after the passing of the Act. Do they feel that they have any grievances now. Is there any damage done by the deer?—They have this grievance, they complain of the deer; they want more land, and they say that as long as the deer forests are there, they have a belief, whether well-founded or ill-founded, that a good deal of the land which is now under deer forest might be made available for them.

27,156. Have they any ground for complaint that the deer damage the crops?—That complaint is made from time to time; whether there is any real ground for it I do not know, but whether the land is fit for them, we must leave this Forest Deer Commission to settle. That is now being threshed out.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,157. Do you think that this land, that is under deer forests, could be beneficially improved?—This present Royal Commission is threshing out that matter. My own personal belief (I do not pretend to know anything about it, and I cannot give a very positive belief) is that there is not very much to be got out of it, that the parts that have been reserved for deer are so very high, and such very poor land, that there is not very much to be obtained. I have no doubt that here and there you would get little patches, but I do not believe there will be much more.

27,158. In North Wales we had evidence of some people who made a complaint that they could not get at land, that land was really left to grow gorse, and they would be glad to cultivate it. You say the population is very thick in Scotland?—Yes. Were there found to be grounds for that? Did you find in Wales that that really was the case, that that complaint was a just one.

27,159. Yes, in some cases?—The crofters will constantly tell you that. It is an imaginary kind of thing—some wealthy man from the South comes up there, and they feel that he is an outsider and an alien.

27,160. We actually had a man who came before us who had five or six sons, and he would be glad to cultivate this very land I refer to, if it was only let to him?—And to pay rent for it?

27,161. Yes, land which was perfectly useless?—I do not think that so long as this Deer Forest Commission is sitting one can properly give much information upon that. The matter is now being examined.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,162. I have only one point which I wanted to try and make clear, and that is the difference between these crofters and the ordinary small tenant farmer in Wales. I see that in the first Report of the Commission, out of which this Act sprang, they gave as typical instances of what the crofters are, the statistics of four parishes. In those four parishes there were 2,090 crofters and cottars. There were only 36 tenants who were not crofters and cottars, so that, leaving out those 36 tenants who were not crofters and cottars, the population consisted of 63 per cent. of crofters and cottars, and 26 per cent. of labourers and squatters. Are we to suppose that those crofters and cottars and labourers live together in villages; would those four parishes mean four villages, or would the holdings be scattered?—No, it would be more than four. The parishes have a very large area, and you will find that they use this term "township," which is a little hamlet.

27,163. But they do live in clusters?—Yes, always in clusters.

27,164. Rarely in little farm-houses scattered over the country?—Not generally, I think. I do not understand the distinction between the cottars and the labourers in that case, because the cottars must have been labourers, and the labourers must have been cottars.

27,165. Probably the labourers would be without land?—Without land at all, not even a cottage, perhaps.

27,166. But my point was that we have here in Scotland clusters of population which are almost entirely crofters?—Yes.

27,167. And not the scattered holdings of little farmers, who live, as a rule, solitary on their farms?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,169. Now in regard to Lewis, is there any particular reason, do you think, for this continued discontent and quasi-rebellion on the estates of Lady Mathieson?—It is very hard to say, Sir James Mathieson bought that island some 50 or 60 years ago, and he spent a great deal of money on it. I think it has been spent very lavishly. Somehow or other, I do not know whether he was too autocratic or what it was, but there has never been a good footing between the landlord and the tenants there, and there has been constant grumbling. Now it belongs to Lady Mathieson, who is an elderly lady, and she never goes near it.

27,170. But generally speaking in the other crofter districts, do you think the working of the Act has been satisfactory, and that it has produced satisfactory results?—I think so, certainly. The fact of improving the houses is an instance in point, I think.

27,171. I think so distinctly with regard to the houses. There is one thing I want to ask; they are not allowed to multiply the houses, are they?—No.

27,172. Supposing the son of a crofter marries, does he smuggle his wife into his father's house, and do they overcrowd in that way?—It is hard to answer. I do not know. I found in Lewis, again and again, a second house had been smuggled up; whether it was before 1886 or not I cannot say; but the law has not been very rigidly enforced.

27,173. Does the law touch that?—The son may live in the house with his father.

27,174. Without building, without overcrowding?—The law does not touch that.

27,175. I mean this law? It is not creditable to our Scotch people at all that that kind of house exists. It is an oblong hut built of stone laid in sods. The roof, instead of projecting like an eave over it, rests on the inside of the wall.

27,176. I know something about it archæologically; it is very interesting, but I should not like to live in one of them?—In these places one third of the house is given up to the cattle, and you have to walk through the cattle place to get to the dwelling-house, where you find a peat fire in the middle of the room and the place full of smoke, as there is no chimney, a terrible place to be in. The byre, a part where you may find a half dozen cattle of all sorts, is never cleaned out except once a year, in April, and out of these places emerge the nicest looking young men and women you can see in Scotland.

27,177. I do not remember any statistics with regard to the morality of the crofter villages before the Act?—I do not know whether there is any difference there On that side of Scotland the morality statistics are better than the owland side.

27,178. They have generally had a good reputation?—The Celtic is better than the Saxon as regards that.

27,179. You do not know that there is any marked difference since?—No, I do not believe there is. I am glad to say there are very few public-houses; not from any local option, but because the landlords have used a strong hand, and will not allow them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,180. I wish to put two questions to you on my own behalf. Do you know Wales?—In a very small way, indeed.

27,181. Then I will not ask you any more questions about that. With regard to the Commissioners, can you inform us what their remuneration is, what it costs the country?—If you have the Civil List for the last year I could soon tell you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,182. Which class does it come under, "Scotland"?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,183. The farm labourers' cottages in Scotland are generally pretty near, attached to the the farm yard, are they not?—Yes, I think so.

27,184. Is it not beneficial that they should be so?—Yes.

27,185. In Wales they are grouped near the villages and towns. But the landlords in Scotland do provide cottages for the tenants on most of the farms, do they?—It is always looked upon that the landlord provides the cottages for his labourers.

27,186. Adjacent?—Yes, on the farm.

27,187. The farmer provides them?—The landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,188. Are the men very well satisfied?—I think so. You are talking of the more Lowland part of Scotland. In the Lowland the country population is a very prosperous one, and it is not a bit increasing. I suppose it is the same as in England, the draw is towards the towns.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,189. The labourer rents the house from the farmer?—Yes, generally from the tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,190. I have a number of questions put in. The first questions are on behalf of Mr. Malcolm, of the Highland Property Defence Association, and Mr. Vincent puts them in. "Will you "kindly state the number of crofters and cottars "in the crofter counties?" It is suggested it is 40,000?—I am sorry I have not the figures here.

27,191. The Crofters' Commission Report 1884, page 108, is the authority for that?—I could not answer that.

27,192. "How many of these have made "applications for the fixing of 'Fair Rent'?"—From the Crofters' Report I could find the statistics fast enough, but I cannot answer it straight off.

27,193. The answers are suggested here with the questions?—It is all in print, and published in the Reports.

27,194. "Can you state any benefits which "the Crofter Acts in Scotland have conferred "upon crofters except a revision of rents?" I think you have already told us there is improvement in the quality of houses?—Yes.

27,195. Any other?—I think security of tenure produces a certain contentment, and that goes for a good deal.

27,196. "Is it not the case that rents have "been sometimes increased and not reduced, "under these Acts, in Sutherland for in-"stance?"—There have been some cases, but very few. You could see at once in the statistics the very few cases in which they have been increased.

27,197. "As a set-off to security of tenure "and fair rent, are not crofters subjected, under "the Act of 1886, to a series of vexatious and "onerous restrictive conditions?"—I do not know what these are.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,198. They are very ordinary conditions I should think?—Yes, I should think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,199. "Do you consider it fair, that the crofters should be permitted 'as under the Act "of 1887' to withhold all payment of rent, "pending decision of their applications for fair "rent?"—Well, I think it is myself, but that is an individual opinion.

27,200. May I ask you a question upon that myself. I suppose that is the law?—Yes.

27,201. But how long, as a matter of fact, is it before a decision is arrived at before the Commissioners——

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,201A. Could that be answered in this way: has there been any complaint about delay?—Yes, there have been complaints of delay. A complaint came from the island of Skye not long ago, and we investigated it and inquired into the matter, and found, so far as I remember, how it was some stupid mistake of some intimation not being sent when it ought to have been sent.

27,203. No, I have not got that?—There you will see "Any crofter who has made or shall

"make an application to the Crofters' Commission to fix a fair rent for his holding, and "against whom legal proceedings have been "taken for payment of rent, may apply under "the same, or any subsequent application, to the "Crofters Commission for an order prohibiting "the sale of the crofters' effects upon the said "holding, by virtue of any decree for payment "of such rent; and the Crofters' Commission, if "satisfied that such sale would have the effect "of defeating, in the case of such crofter, the "intention of the principal Act, may, upon such "terms as to payment of rent or otherwise as "they shall think fit, grant an order prohibiting "such sale till the application to fix a fair rent "has been finally determined."

27,204. If that is so, it would be very unfair to the landlords if the proceedings are delayed at all?—Yes.

27,205. No serious delays have come to your notice?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,206. It has a remarkable reputation for celerity?—They have worked very hard.

27,207. And every formality calculated to cause delay is dispensed with?—That is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,208. The next question put by Mr. Malcolm is, "Do you consider it fair that the landlords "should have been compelled to pay rates and "taxes upon the rents so withheld, and ulti- "mately wiped off, by the Commission?"—It is hard, certainly.

27,209. The next question is, "Is it not the "case that these Acts have completely dried up "all expenditure by landlords upon permanent "improvements or otherwise upon crofts?"—I am sure Sheriff Brand would deny that.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,210. I think, according to your previous answer, nothing used to be done by the landlord?—For the actual croft, nothing. I do not mean to say there was not a great deal of kindly feeling going on, and that has come out. The whole position of the landlord and tenant has very much changed. I do not know if it is altogether due to this Act. A Member of Parliament gave me an instance the other day. He was appealing to us to give some help to the fishermen of Shetland as regards some harbours there, and he said, "Remember things are "different to what they were very much. The "landlord used to be a sort of banker to the "fishermen, and when they had bad seasons "he used to give them money, but now the "fisherman has his rights and the landlord his "rights, and all that sort of thing has ceased."

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,211. These are questions put in by Mr. Vincent. "Are not rough farming and fishing "the only occupations open to men in the "crofting counties?"—Yes, except a good many are now employed in a certain time of the year with sporting tenants as gamekeepers, gillies, beaters, and that kind of thing.

27,212. "Would not the presence of quarries, "as in Carnarvon and Merioneth; of collieries, "as in Denbigh, Flint, Monmouth, Glamorgan, "and Carmarthen; and of works, make the "situation different?"—Of course it would.

27,213. "Referring to the Report of Lord "Napier's Commission, do we not find that the "history of land tenure in the Highlands and "islands is distinct and characteristic?"—Yes; the existence of the crofter scheme at all is distinctly characteristic.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,214. Do you mean land tenure in Scotland has a totally different history from land tenure in Wales, or England, or Ireland?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,215. Are you in a position to speak as to Wales on the question?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,216. It strikes me as being very analogous to the agitation that took place in England, when the lords of the country affected to make the copyholders revert to their original position?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,217. If I am not mistaken, it practically comes to this, the clan system has survived the longest?—Yes.

27,218. The present state of things is nearer to the clan system than in most other parts?—Than in most other parts of the British Islands.

27,219. Yes?—Yes, I think so.

27,220. Does the clan system exist at all else where?—I do not know that it does.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,221. The next question by Mr. Vincent is "Was not the tribal idea alive, so to speak, in "Scotland, up to the middle of the last century?"—Undoubtedly. If you read Johnson's Tour in the Hebrides you will find that.

27,222. Then, "Was there not a system under "which the tacksmen, or large leaseholders, "held under the proprietors; and did not the "tacksmen sublet to the cultivators as sub- "tenants?"—The tacksmen were, as I understand, the sort of principal feudal dependents of the chief of the clan. There was one chief, The McLeod, for instance, and a number of the McLeod's in this place and that place, who were tacksmen under him, and who held from him, and paid him a more or less nominal rent.

27,223. "May I take it from you that land "hunger is, in itself, a bad and wasteful thing, "and that it fades before education?"—Yes, I think it is an unfortunate and wasteful thing; I have not any of it myself.

27,224. "Does not the Report indicate a policy "pursued by proprietors in the past of deliber- "ately removing crofters to the sea-coast, where "they were able to make kelp?"—That policy undoubtedly existed, and that kelp industry is one that has disappeared.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,225. That was chiefly in Sutherlandshire, was it not?—Yes, and elsewhere in the Highlands, too, there was a good deal of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,226. "Was not the policy a mistake, and "may not the condition of the crofters be taken "to be partly the result of that mistake?"—Certainly; there are large portions of Scotland where you see the signs of what were once inhabited tracks, farms, and so on, not only in the crofter counties, but elsewhere, where one knows there was a great deal of population, which was cleared out by the landlord on the notion that big farms paid better than small ones.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,227. Do you see it in the counties of Caithness, Elgin and Morayshire?—Yes, I believe so. The 90th Regiment was raised in the Valley of the Tay; they would find a great deal of difficulty to raise a regiment there now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,228. Do you consider that policy was a mistake?—I do.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,229. That is a mere matter of history. Kelp or no kelp, it makes no difference to the practical question?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,230. The next question is this: "Do you "know on what principle rents are fixed by the "Commission, by which I mean, do you know "what theory of rent, if any, is acted on by "the Commission?"—I cannot answer that question.

27,231. There is another question by Mr. Vincent: "Speaking in general terms, do you "think that the compulsory reductions under "the Crofters Act have been greater than those "made in course of nature, so to speak, in "counties outside the operations of the Act?"—No, I dare say that they have not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,232. Have rents fallen in Scotland?—Oh, very largely indeed, over the whole of Scotland.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,233. This would be the kind of tenant least capable of getting a reduction, perhaps?—Yes, having this passion for the land he would give up a great deal sooner than leave the place altogether. He has no lease, and he would put up with a great deal.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

27,234. So that the fact of the reduction not being greater than elsewhere, does not quite touch the vital point?—It does not quite touch the point whether these particular farms would have been reduced, if it had not been for the Commission.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,235. Are you in a position to say that rents have been generally reduced to the extent of 30 per cent.?—I cannot say off-hand.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,236. But the reduction of rents has been very general?—Yes.

27,237. Permanent reductions, not abatements?—No, reductions.

27,238. The following questions are put in by Mr. Owen Wynne:—"You said the Act did not "apply to crofters who held written leases; "does this refer to written agreements as well?"—I am not quite sure that I understand the difference between a lease and an agreement in a case like that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The leases would be under seal; I suppose that is the distinction. The Act says "Any "person from the passing of the Act who is "tenant of a holding from year to year."

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,239. Are there written agreements?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,240. That disposes of it, I should think. The next question by Mr. Owen Wynne is: "Do not the clauses of this Crofters Act, in a "condensed and succint form, virtually com- "prise most, if not all, the clauses contained in "the usual agreements between landlord and "tenant in Wales?" I think you told me you did not know much about Wales?—Quite so.

27,241. The other questions refer to Wales, and therefore you cannot answer them?—Quite so.

Professor Rhŷs.

We might ask that as compared with the usual agreements between landlord and tenant in other parts of Scotland. Perhaps Sir Colin could answer that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,242. "Do not the clauses of this Crofter Act, "in a condensed and succinct form, virtually "comprise most, if not all, the clauses contained "in the usual agreements between landlord and "tenant in Wales?"—I should say not. For instance, all this question of bequests, which is a very important one, does not come in at all in the ordinary condition of landlord and tenant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,243. For instance, there is no condition here as to selling the crops off, and so on. I suppose in Scottish agreements, as well as in Welsh agreements, there are conditions about those matters.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,244. I do not think any object would be gained by asking it with regard to the rest of Scotland, because I believe the English land system prevails in the rest of Scotland?—I believe it is universal in Scotland, outside the Highland line, to have regular written leases. I understand that in England there is a great deal of land held without any written agreement at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,245. "You said Lady Mathieson never "went near Lewis now?"—No, I fancy she is heart-sick of the whole thing.

27,246. "Do you think she has received any "encouragement to go there or reside there?" —No, I do not think she has, poor lady.

27,247. "May I ask if you have had a long "and familiar experience of the crofters of "Scotland, and of the working of the Crofters "Act?"—I cannot say I have.

27,248. Do you consider them a hardworking "and thrifty people?"—No, I do not. I wish they were.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,249. There was some irritation felt among the crofters in reference to diverse charges made by the landlord for peat and so forth, was there not?—Yes, there was something of that sort, I really cannot quite remember now.

27,250. You do not hear now any complaint in reference to straw for thatching, or peat?—No, I have heard nothing of that sort.

Adjourned till to-morrow.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

6, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, 24th January, 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord Kenyon.
Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Professor Rhŷs, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederick Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. Morris,
Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir Gardner Engleheart, C.B., called and examined.

Chairman.

27,251. You are, I believe, the Clerk of the Council of the Duchy of Lancaster?—I am.

27,252. You are good enough to come before us to give us some information about the Manor of Ogmore. Can you tell us anything about its extent or character?—The manor of Ogmore, in Glamorganshire, consists of two members, the upper and the lower lordship; one to the north of Bridgend, and the other to the south, about equi-distant perhaps, roughly speaking; and the centres of the two members are about 10 miles from one another. The manors have been in lease continuously from Charles I. time and before, up to 1869, when the last lease, the Dunraven lease, fell in, and we declined to renew it. The customs of both members of the manor are almost identical, varying only in some respects in the extent of common rights. In the upper lordship there are no copyholds, but in the lower lordship there are a good many, and the tenure is Borough-English. In the upper lordship there are no mesne manors; in the lower lordship there are several; I think, if you will allow me to show you this Ordnance map, it will conduce to a clearer explanation of the thing. The lower lordship is bounded on the south by the sea, and on the west or north-west by the river Ogmore, which runs up to Bridgend. It is bounded on the north by the river Ewenny, which flows into the Ogmore, and then it follows, after it leaves the Ewenny, this course of the blue line, which is, in fact, derived from the surveys, and enters the sea again down there by your hand. So that the manor is very clearly defined by natural boundaries on three sides. The part coloured pink represents the mesne manors, of which there are several, some held of the manor, and some held as of the manor, there being a distinction between the two; some owe suit service and rent, and some owe nothing. The area with which we are dealing, therefore, will exclude these mesne manors entirely, and also exclude Wick. Wick is a parish of its own, and it is held with St. Bride's. And I exclude that, partly because Mr. Verity excluded it, and it is desirable to keep to the same area, and partly because its exclusion happens to be right. Wick does not inter-common with the other members of the manor. There are no rights of common in question here at all. Wick is excluded, and these mesne manors are excluded. Properly speaking, I also ought to exclude Dunraven, but I am not quite sure of the boundaries of the manor, therefore I have not excluded it. It only contains one or two families, and is enumerated in the census with St. Bride's Major. I may tell you there are outlying parts "detached," as they are called on the Ordnance map of St. Bride's, which are not dealt with, inasmuch as they represent the mesne manor of Lampha, therefore we are dealing with all this encircled by the blue line, minus Wick.

27,253. You have put in a map which illustrates the lower lordships, and which is situate in the parish of St. Bride's Major. Can you give us any idea of the area of the commons in the lower lordships, and to what extent they have been diminished?—Will you allow me to put in the other maps first and the surveys, because the survey is the foundation of it all.

27,254. Yes, if you please?—There are a great many surveys—five or six surveys. There is a survey or rental of Henry VI. time. There is a survey of James. There is a survey of Lord Pembroke himself, who was then lessee of the manor in 1631. There is a survey, which I think has been already before you, of Charles, 1637, and there is a Parliamentary Survey of 1650. I may say in passing, I see a witness has stated that the survey of 1637 was sanctioned by Parliament; that is, of course, entirely a mistake. The Parliamentary Survey was in pursuance of a Commission issued by Parliament, in just the same way as the Caroline Survey was in pursuance of a Commission issued by King Charles. One in no respect confirms the other; in fact, the survey of Charles was much fuller than that of the Parliament in 1650. You have that before you. I have a map here of 1830, made in pursuance of directions from the Duchy Office, and directed to Mr. Lewis, who was then a well known surveyor in Bridgend, directing him to survey the commons of Ogmore, including the lower lordship. He made a very accurate survey, in which he marked all the encroachments. It is in two parts, and the date is 1830.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,255. Which is the main Down?—Ogmore is the large main Down. Then, besides those maps, we get the Ordnance, which of course brings it up to date. We get this map of 1830—60 years ago—and besides those we have some curious old maps, one of which is merely a curiosity, and the other will be of use. That is a very curious affair. (Producing an old map.)

27,256. I think we saw one very much like that at Cardiff?—It is practically useless. No doubt these things on the map are portraits, these churches, and they are beautifully done. They all differ inter se.

Lord Kenyon.

27,257. Have you any idea what date this is?—At the Record Office they suppose this is to be in the time of Edward VI.(?) at all events, it is anterior to the other one.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,258. Are all the little villages extant, or have they gone?—No, I do not think they are among the wrecked. This map is supposed to be in Elizabeth's time, and it appeals at once to the eye. You are enclosed here still by the rivers. Here is the Ogmore and Ewenny, and this is the River Alun which separates these mesne manors from the rest of the manor. So that it is clearly defined on three sides. Wick is put unduly large with its common. All the three roads are exactly on this as they were on that. You will see how the commons run into the land like bays and indents. These finger shapes are all indicated here, although of course roughly. Here is St. Bride's. This represents the desmesne lands, which I ought to say were sold, the whole of them, by Charles I., the year after that survey in 1637 or 1638, so that at present we have nothing whatever, not a rood of land; we have nothing but the common rights, and such encroachments as are held of us by persons who have given acknowledgment. I may say we have been battling with these encroachers the last 20 years, and we have succeeded in getting a certain number back, and an acknowledgment for a certain number of others. We are at the present bringing actions against two or three encroachers, which I have no doubt will be successful. These are the three periods that we have: this map 250 years before the present Ordnance, and that intermediary map of 1830.

Chairman.

27,259. Now perhaps you will be able to tell us the area of the commons on the lower lordship, and to what extent they have been diminished?—The area of the commons on the lower lordship by the present Ordnance is about 1,030 acres. But Mr. Verity, to whose evidence I am obliged to refer, says that they were formerly 1,000 acres more. I should like to be allowed to say in limine, I shall have occasion to reflect rather severely upon this gentleman's evidence, and I should like it to be understood, that I make no reflection upon his bonâ fides. I believe in what he stated he believed himself to be stating it correctly, and he had the good of his neighbours and the locality at heart. He makes an astounding statement at Question No. 25,171.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,261. What do you mean by abuttals?—You will find in the survey the Ogmore Down is defined on the east or the south as abutting upon Lady Down, North Down, and Butler's Down. These downs are used as we might use, say, this river Ogmore, and say that Ogmore Down abuts upon the Ogmore or upon the Kymney. Well, Dunraven was a mesne manor. Seaton was not a common at all, it was a vill, and you will find it in that old map. Rawling's Wood and King's Wood were not commons; you will not find them mentioned in any of the surveys as commons. So that out of the eleven which he mentions—Southern Down was also a vill—and with Southern Down, the 12 which he mentions, all except four had no existence as commons, and therefore could not have vanished as commons. The commons that we have to deal with, and which they had to deal with in 1830, and in that old map of Elizabeth consisted of four, and the Commissioners will be good enough to get those four names into their minds.

27,262. Will you give them again?—I will point them out. Ogmore Down, which is all this upper part; Old Castle, which is that; and Fleming Down, lying between the two, and the Kymney, which is a track lying all along the seashore. I should point out that of those four only three are mentioned here. For some reason or other they appear to have left out the Kymney; I cannot tell you why.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,263. Kymney is a bit near the sea?—Yes, skirting the sea, and a very beautiful bit it is.

27,264. Some of the Commissioners drove along there?—Then besides those four commons there are what the survey has called splots, which are small pieces; Old Castle Cliff, which is down there; small pieces of four or five acres, which are just mentioned in the survey. Well, I have taken a great deal of trouble to ascertain the changes which have taken place in the commons since 1830. I will take that first if you will allow me.

Chairman.

27,265. May I ask you this question first. Do you say that, according to your old maps, Lady Down, North Down, Butler's Down, Downraven; and a portion of Sea Down or Seaton, as it is called, were never commons at all?—When I say never, I do not mean if you go back to 600 or 700 years ago; but never within the time of any maps which you have upon the table.

Lord Kenyon.

27,266. Never within the last 250 years?—300 years certainly.

27,267. There is no evidence of their having been commons?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,268. Take Llangeinor?—That is in the upper lordship. I think I said there are no mesne manors in the upper lordship at all.

27,269. Does it belong to the Duchy of Lancaster?—Yes, the upper lordship is the northern member of the manor; but there are no mesne manors in it as there are in the south member.

27,270. Were there not commons belonging to it?—Yes.

27,271. I do not quite see why they do not come under your view to-day?—For this reason, I was given to understand that the south lordship was the only part of the manor that was within your view, that was the only part dealt with before.

27,272. It is not included in Mr. Verity's evidence?—Not at all, but I shall be happy to answer any questions about the northern lordship.

Chairman.

27,273. I am sorry to have interrupted you. Will you go on with your evidence?—I think I was saying that I have taken a great deal of trouble to harmonise, if possible, those two periods, the present time and Mr. Lewis's map of 63 years ago; and I may say that they are in complete harmony. Mr. Lewis measured the commons; he measured the roads; and he measured the encroachments of his day, and those all totalled up together come to 1,035 acres. The acreage given by the ordnance is 1,030. That difference of five, or it may be six acres, represents actually the approximate measurement of the encroachments since Mr. Lewis's time. Most of these encroachments, you will kindly remember, are small filchings, of a perch here and a perch there; a man extends his garden, puts out his wall a little further into the common, and so on; but in the aggregate we cannot take more than from five to six acres since Mr. Lewis's time.

Chairman—continued.

27,275. Will you kindly explain the Glamorganshire acre?—I understand that every perch consists of 36 square yards instead of 30¼, and that the acre is as 5,760 square yards to the statute acre of 4,840. Then I get the acreage into complete harmony between the two later periods; I wish I could find the other acres. You will see by that, that the commons have grown since that old map rather than diminished.

Mr. Grove.

27,276. I suppose there are no records to show that that was actual measurement. It was not taken from anything prior to that, do you suppose?—I have no evidence except the thing itself. Then, perhaps, I should say that Mr. Lewis in his survey ascertains that at that date, 1830, the encroachments, which he took up to the last 60 years before his day, consisted of about 9 acres; and the encroachments since his day consist of 5 acres or 6 acres; so that you get an ascertained encroachment area of some 15 acres in the last 100 years, many of which we have got back and are getting back. That is not a bad record, I think, for a large common in 100 years, you may say 300 years.

Chairman.

27,277. Can you tell us at all to what extent the population of the parish of St. Bride's Major has been diminished, and the cause of such diminution?—Well, I have no doubt it has been diminished. I dare say most of the members of the Commission have read that very interesting report of the Registrar-General just out. He speaks there, amongst many other most interesting topics, of the depopulation of the rural districts, and he says that it is in Wales where this depopulation is most noticeable, and he gives a tabulation of eight counties, out of the 12 Welsh counties, in which the population has diminished by per-centages varying from 11½ to 3 per cent.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,278. Within what period, please?—I think he speaks of it in the last decennial period. Well, Glamorganshire is not one of those eight. On the contrary, the population of Glamorganshire seems to have enormously increased, and at this moment it is within 100,000 of the whole of the population of the rest of the principality. But the cause which led to the shifting of the population, owing to the enormous development of minerals in Wales in the last 50 years, has acted very strongly upon Glamorganshire. I suppose there is no county—certainly no county in Wales, and hardly any county in England, with the exception perhaps of Yorkshire and Durham—where the coal interest has developed so enormously as in Glamorganshire. And the same causes, which depopulated the rural population in the other counties, have acted very strongly upon the rural population of Glamorganshire, forcing them to find more lucrative employment, to leave their few sheep in the wilderness, and to go where they could find better wages and more constant employment. It is curious that in this very manor of Ogmore, in the upper lordship of Llangeinor, in 30 years, from 1861 to 1891, the population has increased from 363 to 8,000.

Then there are, of course, the large towns. Bridgend has increased one-third in the last 20 years; Cardiff has increased enormously; Swansea has increased; and it is no wonder that the people of Ogmore should have migrated elsewhere, in common with so large a portion of the rural population in Wales. But after all, what is this depopulation of Ogmore? Unfortunately I am not able to give you the results of the census of 1881 and 1891, that is to say, not with any precision, and for this reason; I have made inquiries at the Registrar-General's office; the Registrar-General was good enough to come to me, and he told me that since 1871, Lampha, which I think I mentioned, represented the detached portions of the parish of St. Bride's, is no longer enumerated with St. Bride's, and, therefore, a certain population is cut off from the subsequent census of 1881 and 1891, but, taking the four censuses of 1841, 1851, 1861, and 1871, the population of Ogmore has diminished four per cent. I am not anxious to insist that the population of Ogmore has not decreased; I should be very much surprised if it had not, but I say that, taking the official figures from 1841 to 1871, the population has diminished four per cent. The 1891 population, so far as we can ascertain it under the circumstances which I have mentioned, a portion of it being cut off, is 621 persons, as compared with 766 in 1871. That, of course, brings the diminution to a much higher per-centage, but there does not seem to have been this extreme depopulation, which the witness speaks of, as to it being a sort of deserted village.

Perhaps the Commission would be interested in knowing that this district of Ogmore has seen a great many vicissitudes and fluctuations of population. Before Henry the Sixth's time the population of Ogmore was larger than it was in the beginning of this century. Probably I am understating it, because before Henry the Sixth's time the number of houses in Ogmore and St. Bride's was larger than it has ever been in this century. The reason, I believe, is this: the first survey which I speak of, of Henry the Sixth's time, gives the number of houses, and it gives them as 97, and then it adds that there are 69 other houses which are in decay; that is the expression which is used, the lord cannot find tenants for them. The lands given as occupied are 457 acres, and the lands not occupied and in decay are 590 acres. I believe that state of things was owing to its not having recovered from the effects of Owen Glyndwr's insurrection, in Henry the Fourth's time. I suppose that country felt the effects of that insurrection very much, and these houses and these lands went out of occupation and cultivation in consequence, and have never been restored. I may say, it was at that time that the castle of Ogmore was destroyed, the castle which we are rather called upon to account for not having kept in repair. But that is interesting as showing that the population of Ogmore has been larger than it ever was in this century, and I hope it will be much larger again.

27,279. Taking five persons to a house, you would have about 120 houses now?—Well, I did not venture to take so many. I thought three or four to a house; I think would bring up the population higher than it is now.

27,280. Yes. I was dividing 621, which was the population in 1891, by five, and it gives us about 120 against the 97 houses which were in good repair?—Yes, in good repair, but the fact of there being others out of repair showed that they were at one time occupied.

Chairman.

27,281. Sir Gardner, there is a statement made by Mr. Verity, that 45 years ago there were 32 commoners. That is page 1,260, question 25,172. He says, "forty-five years "ago, when there were 32 commoners, some of "them kept something like about 30, and some "of them 60, and some 80 and 100, up to 150 "sheep on the common." Have you any reason to doubt that statement?—Not the slightest.

Chairman—continued.

27,282. Then is there any doubt as regards this statement: "At the present time there only "remain two, and they are only of very recent "creation, and one has got 15 and the other 22 "sheep on the Down?"—I have not the slightest materials, but that depends, does it not, on the right of commoning and the mode of commoning?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,284. Yes, we have heard the expression several times in the Law Courts?—Mr. Verity, I see, says at Question 25,175, that "the other "parts of the down are all allotted out to "different farmers around, and it is impossible "for the cottagers to keep anything there; "they drive them off; they persecute and "drive them from one flock to the other." Now, it may be so, but all I can say is that in the upper lordship of Llangeinor, where there are large commons, it is considered rather a neighbourly act, if A. finds B.'s sheep trespassing on his Arosfa, to drive them off back again, anywhere, at all events out of the Arosfa, and if all do that, then the sheep, at once, get into their proper locale. But I have no doubt that these two things combined, the custom of commoning without stint and the custom of Arosfa, have tended very much to produce the result that Mr. Verity speaks of, and deprecates very properly. But that is not the fault of the Duchy. I want to impress that upon the Commission.

Chairman.

27,285. Who allots out all the other parts of the down except the two little flocks mentioned, and who renders it impossible for the cottagers to keep anything there. Is that with the sanction of the Duchy, or do they arrange that amongst themselves?—The Duchy has nothing whatever to do with it; they cannot have, no one can, for the simple reason that the common is without stint. I have a right to turn out as many sheep as I like. I suppose I could put out 10,000 sheep, if I could get them. Therefore, no one has a right to say, "You have got too "many sheep, you must take half of them "away."

27,286. That being so, is it not an illegal act to allot the different parts of the down to the different farmers, if there is commonage without stint?—Yes.

27,287. Would it not be an illegal act for the farmers to part and parcel out different parts?—No doubt, perfectly illegal, entirely illegal.

27,288. Is that done with the knowledge of the Duchy?—No, the Duchy cannot interfere; the Duchy have no right to interfere. No doubt it is illegal in the sense that it cannot be supported by law, in that respect it is illegal; but I understand it is a Welsh custom, a Welsh habit, I will not say a custom, because that trenches upon the manorial word. It is a Welsh habit. I am under correction if it is not so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,289. There is no illegality in the custom as such, if every person who has a right of common is willing to acquiesce in the arrangement and in the apportionment of divers parts of the waste?—No doubt.

27,290. All that has appeared in cases that have come under my notice at the Glamorganshire Assize Courts, and in the case that went to the House of Lords the other day, is that there does appear to be a kind of implied custom among the farmers who have got farms round a waste mountain, say, to confine their sheep and their cattle to certain definite portions, which from time immemorial are pretty well understood?—Yes.

27,291. That is somewhat the way in which the custom has been stated?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

27,292. But there has been no evidence, so far as I have come across, of any definite agreement between definite persons to that effect?—It is a mere matter of convenience.

27,293. It seems, as I understand it, that when a man takes a farm in Glamorganshire, and he has a right of common or adjoining common, that he is told by the outgoing tenant, "This is your Arosfa?"—Yes.

27,294. "You will see your stones there, and "you will keep your sheep within those stones, "otherwise you will get into trouble with the "next farmer, if you let them stray over?"—Yes.

27,295. But what the origin of that custom is I have never heard explained?—There is no doubt it is a matter of convenience. It is a matter of great convenience to big people, but a matter of extreme inconvenience to small ones.

Mr. Seebohm.

Would it be possible for the two customs to exist together, the custom of putting on without stint and the Arosfa?

Professor Rhŷs.

That is what I cannot follow.

Chairman.

Then if you look at Question 25,228, I understand there is no reason to doubt the following statement of Mr. Verity, made in reply to Mr. S. H. Stockwood, that the farmers "have allotted "the common amongst themselves, and the "cottagers cannot complain, because there is no "leet court for them to complain to. That is "the only place, where they can vent their "feelings and their grievances, and you cannot "vent a grievance unless you have a place to "vent it."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,296. Before Sir Gardner answers that question, might I say that Mr. Verity supplemented this part of his evidence when a quorum of the Commissioners went down to inspect the locus in quo. Mr. Verity supplemented his evidence by telling us how this custom or arrangement, whatever it was, worked. A small cottager, say, put five sheep, but wherever he put them he was practically told by the big farmers around, "That is my Arosfa." So that his sheep wandered about the common, and always came to some land or other which had been allotted, impliedly or expressly, to the big farmers themselves. That is, no doubt, what the grievance was?—I have no doubt that was the grievance.

27,297. In the case of Marsh v. Bailey, which, I think, I pointed out to Mr. Seebohm, there does not appear to have been any evidence as to the exact time at which this custom arose. It is quite possible that the theory is correct, as to the custom having existed before the English laws were applied in Glamorganshire and other parts of Wales?—What I want the Commission to understand is this, that the Duchy has no more power to interfere and correct that grievance than any one of you gentlemen personally has power to do so. There is no power whatever.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Chairman.

27,298. But I understand that there is no doubt, from your answer, that that grievance does exist?—I cannot say personally whether it does or does not. I am quite willing to take Mr. Verity's statement that it does. I think it is very likely.

27,299. Mr. Verity says, in answer to Mr. S. H. Stockwood, at Question 25,228, that the farmers "have allotted it themselves." Then he is asked, at Question 25,229, "Have the cot-"tagers ever complained of the farmers' "monopoly to the Duchy?—(A.) They cannot "complain, because there is no Leet Court for "them to complain to."?—That introduces the question of courts.

27,300. But could not they make a written complaint to you without stopping to go before the court?—No doubt they might make a written complaint to us. I am afraid, the only answer they could receive, would be a polite intimation that we could not do anything.

27,301. As a matter of fact, have they ever done so, do you know?—No, never.

Chairman.

27,302. Now, with regard to the Manor Courts?—This gentleman says in passing, and says in several cases, that the Manor Courts have not been held; he says the Leet Courts have not been held. I may say at once the Leet Court has nothing whatever to do with the matter. I suppose the only reason why the Leet Court is introduced so prominently is that the ancient glories of the Leet Court, which are now entirely departed, so overshadowed all the other courts, customary and baron, that it stands for them all. But otherwise, the Leet Court per se has nothing whatever to do with this matter. The Leet Court is, of course, as it is well known, a criminal court—a court of criminal jurisdiction, and a court which takes cognizance of public nuisances and public damages—nocumentum commune is the expression used, and it is laid down in the books—you may see it everywhere—it is laid down in Comyn and Kitchin that a Leet Court cannot take cognizance of surcharging the common, surcharging being, as I have said just now, a technical expression for putting more sheep on to a common than you are entitled to. But perhaps it is not necessary to go into the question of a Leet Court, inasmuch as all the courts are held together, Court Leet, Court Baron, and Customary Court, so that somehow or other you get the right court.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,303. Do you say that the Leet Court could not have dealt with trespasses—with the actual driving away of cattle—by an organised combination of some of the tenants ?—No doubt they could have dealt with violence, because then unquestionably would come in the criminal part of it, but even then I should have thought it is much easier to go to the nearest police court.

27,304. The offence of surcharging the common simply means the actual fact of placing more cattle on the common than you have a right to ?—Yes, quite so.

27,305. Where there is pasturage without stint, you can hardly have that offence ?—Quite so.

27,306. But the court could take cognizance of a case in which, we will say, two or three large farmers were drawing away the cattle of the small commoners, under this pretext of the custom of Arosfa ?—Surely that would only be actionable unless violence was actually used.

27,307. I am assuming actual violence—actual trespass ?—Violence, no doubt, would be dealt with, but that is not the point which Mr. Verity takes.

27,308. No, I am obliged to you. Since you promised to come here in December, I have looked into the statement, and I think I may say you are quite accurate in every way ?—Then Mr. Verity says that we hold the courts anywhere, and that we hold them at Bridgend.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,309. What you say about the Leet Court does not apply to the Court Baron ?—Oh, no. He says in one of his statements that we hold the court at Bridgend, out of the manor.

Lord Kenyon.

27,310. At Questions 25,225 and 25,226 ?—No court has ever been held at Bridgend; no Leet, Baron, nor Customary Court has ever been held at Bridgend.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,311. Mr. Seebohm asked him: "So that "the manor court is at Bridgend ?—(A.) Yes; "the steward lives here now. (Q.) Is there a "Court Leet held there now—that is, in "Bridgend ?—(A.) No, nothing of the kind; it "would not be legal ?"—Yes, but he says, in another part, that the court was held at Bridgend.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Not the Court Leet.

Lord Kenyon.

He says they are not held in the proper place.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,312. His point was that they ought to have been held at Ogmore Castle ?—Yes. I will come to that directly. I will just take Bridgend first. No court has ever been held at Bridgend of any sort or kind, though, of course, subsequent to the Copyhold Act, the 4th and 5th of the Queen, the Ogmore steward has done what all stewards do elsewhere, that is, they take acts of court, surrenders, admittances, and so on, at their own office. That they are entitled to do by that Act of 4 & 5 of the Queen, but that is not holding a court. Then it is said that the court ought to have been held at Ogmore Castle, and nowhere else, according to the survey. Well, the survey of 1637 does not say anything of the sort. It says that the accounts of the accountants to the King shall be passed at Ogmore Castle and nowhere else, and that was in relief of the accountants, in order not to put them to the trouble and expense of coming up to the Duchy Court in London.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mr. Seebohm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,314. But there was a house pointed out to us close by, the Exchequer House, which appeared to be a much more modern building than the castle, but which now, like the castle, is in ruins ?—It is now in ruins. You can find from the books that the King can hold the Leet Court where he likes within the leet district. Of course, the leet district need not be confined to the manor, there can be a much larger district for the Court Leet than for the Court Baron, but the lord may hold his court wherever he chooses within the seigniory. Impliedly, so far as one can see, it is suggested that the courts have not been held at all, neither in Bridgend, nor in Ogmore, nor anywhere. I have here a statement of the courts which have been held since 1812.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,315. The Courts Leet or the Courts Baron ?—I will answer your question by reading what the heading of it is. The steward has sent a copy of the presentments made, and in sending the presentments he has put in the margin the courts, and they are all headed in this way: "Special presentments made at courts held for "the manor of Ogmore since the year 1793, "prior to which date there are no Court Rolls "in the possession of the steward; there are no "special presentments at any court earlier than "1812, each court being headed, 'Court Leet "'with a view of Frank Pledge Court Baron "'and Customary Court.'" Then from 1812 he gives all the courts, and since 1812 there have been 129 courts held, and this gentleman, Mr. Verity, who speaks for 45 years, might have had the opportunity, had he liked, of attending 57 of those courts.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,316. What place is mentioned ? Where were the courts held ?—The courts were held in St. Bride's Village, Ogmore Village; then there is a long string of ditto, ditto, ditto,—in fact, they are mostly at Ogmore Village; sometimes at St. Bride's, and sometimes at Mr. Butler's house, which I believe is at that very Butler's Down which I was mentioning just now. There are some rather curious presentments among these. I thought you would like to see them, perhaps. (The witness handed in a copy of the presentments. (See Appendix.)

27,317. I daresay, Sir Gardner, you would allow us to have a copy of this so as to have it printed?—I had that copy made for you. You will see in those presentments there are several that refer to the common. There is one on the 25th of April 1836: "It was presented that "the commons of the manor has been irregularly "overstocked, and that a number of scabby and "diseased sheep are allowed to be on the said "commons, and we request the steward to direct "the haywards of the manor to impound all "such sheep after next shearing time, and they "be not released until payment of 2*s.* 6*d.* a head, "and that in future the owners of all sheep sent "to the commons be requested to mark them "with letters of 4 inches long." That presentment may have been made at the Court Leet, or may have been made at the Customary Court, the Court Baron, but, anyhow, I think that that probably belonged to the Leet, because it was a public nuisance; it was almost a statutory nuisance. There is an old Act of Henry VIII. making it penal to put out scabby horses upon the common, and this was pari materie with scabby sheep, and there is no doubt these sheep would injure not only the sheep of other individual commoners, but might also injure other animals that came in contact with them, when they were being driven to and from the common. That was really a public nuisance. They say "overstocking," you notice, not "surcharging." Then there is another presentment on the 19th of April 1841: "That the haywards of this manor im-"pound the sheep, horses, and cattle of all "persons not occupying any lands within the "manor." That was public intrusion—they had not any right to common there at all. It was an invasion of the territory by strangers. There is one on 13th of October 1851, which is interesting: "That Michael Spencer has about 150 "sheep on the common of this manor, and that "he has no right to depasture on the common, "and that the hayward do give him 14 days "notice to remove the said sheep therefrom." Evidently he is not mentioned as a stranger; he is a resident in the manor, but he is evidently one of those people who, having a right to pasture on one common, has taken leave to pasture upon another and therefore he is to be removed. Then the last, I will notice, is the 7th October. 1861: "That certain persons having sheep on "the Ogmore Down marked in a manner and "according to the custom of the manor, and that "authority is given to the hayward to collect "the sheep together, and ascertain if such be "the case, and such sheep as have two marks to "be disposed of by the owners at once, or not "allowed to graze the common in case of non-"compliance." I suppose that all the sheep were ear-marked, whence comes our legal term of "ear-marking," and I imagine that the ear-marks had something to do with the Arosfa, and that some persons improperly marked their sheep with two Arosfas, so that they might have a better chance of feeding; but that is as it may be. Those are interesting.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

27,318. I should like to ask a question at this point. As to the court, what constitutes a court, is any previous notice given, or are courts held on certain given days?—I believe they ought to be held on certain given days, but notice is also given. The steward issues his precept to the bailiff or reeve, or whoever he may be. I believe it used to be 15 days' notice, or seven days' notice, I believe, has been held to be good, and I believe it is generally affixed to the church door.

27,319. Because if you look at Question 25,235, on page 1,263, you will see that Mr. Verity says that informal courts have been held. Does he mean informal; because of the proper notice not having been given?—I think if you will look at the next question you will find your point is answered. He is asked: "Do you call "them informal because they are not held in "Ogmore Castle?" And the answer is, "They "are not held in the proper place."

27,320. Yes, but if you will take the first question you will see he says that one of them was held three years ago for the purpose of enabling the volunteers to use the Down for encamping, so he seems to have acknowledged that a court was held three years before?—Yes, to that extent he acknowledges the existence of the court, but the other 56 courts, which he might have attended, he seems to have ignored.

27,321. That is what appears rather strange, because, evidently, he had taken some degree of interest in these questions for a great many years past. It seems so strange that if the courts had been properly notified, he did not know of them. That is just what occurs to one's mind?—It is very strange indeed, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

He does not deny that any courts were held. I rather think that Mr. Verity perfectly knew that the steward of the manor was holding courts at St. Bride's. I think he says so somewhere. At Question 25,219, Mr. Seebohm's question, he is asked, "Now can you tell me "what has become of the Court Leets?—(A.) "As to the Court Leets, the only legal one that "has been held was held about 16 years ago, I "understand, in Ogmore. The others were "informal ones, which were held in St. Bride's, "which is not right; according to the survey, "they are to be held in Ogmore Castle only."

Lord Kenyon.

27,322. You deny that the survey states that, do you not, Sir Gardner. You said just now the survey did not state they were to be held in Ogmore Castle?—And not elsewhere,—I deny that. The survey states that they are to be held at the Court House of Ogmore, and the lord may hold the courts wherever he likes within his seigniory.

Mr. Grove.

27,323. Then we gather that a notice must be given of the court; it may be on an uncertain day; it is not on a fixed day always?—I believe not.

27,324. And that it is to be affixed to the church door?—I believe so.

27,325. That constitutes a legal notice of the court?—I believe so.

27,326. Then who presides at the court, the steward?—The steward is the judge of the Court Leet, the steward is the judge of the Customary Court, and the freeholders are the judges of the Court Baron.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,327. St. Bride's Major is not very far from St. Bride's Minor, is it?—St. Bride's Minor is a long way, St. Bride's Minor is near the upper lordship.

27,328. Then St. Bride's Major is really in the middle of this Ogmore district?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,329. So far as you know, the steward of the manor has kept these courts properly in accordance with the customary rules and the statutory rules?—There is the return.

27,330. It does not say anything about the notices, and so on?—No, but surely omnia præsumuntur.

26,331. That is what I am putting to you?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,332. According to this there have been no courts held since 1889?—No, but we were not aware of that, and he has been instructed to hold courts regularly every year now.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,333. How long ago was the instruction given, lately?—Lately as soon as I got that return up. We were not aware that it had not been held. The courts are not of the same importance that they were in former days.

Mr. Grove.

27,334. But still, I presume that when a steward holds a court he makes an official return to you that the court has been held?—We have the copies of the Court Rolls up periodically, but we have lately changed our steward, and there has been a little confusion.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,335. Is it not part of the duty of the court to prevent encroachments?—Of the court?

27,336. Yes?—Encroachments are presented. There are several presentments of encroachments on those occasions, and then they are called upon to abate the encroachment. These encroachments have been very very small, still they are none the less illegal for being small.

27,337. Are the jurors generally tenants of the lord of the manor?—Mostly, but anyone may attend a Court Leet, whether he be a tenant of the manor or not. Anybody may have justice at a Court Leet, any resident in the manor.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

27,338. Does the bailiff, then, give notice to all the tenants?—The bailiff takes the steps, or ought to take the steps, which I have just mentioned.

27,339. You say this gentleman has not attended as many courts as he ought to have attended, as he could have attended rather?—All the inhabitants are not bound to attend every court.

27,340. But what I wanted to know was whether he had been summoned to attend?—That I could not possibly tell you. He was summoned by the notice on the church door.

Mr. Grove.

27,341. There seems to be no personal summons, but I understand that there is a notice on the church door.

Mr. Griffiths.

We have a Court Leet in our parish, but I am not sure whether a notice is affixed to the church door.

Mr. Grove.

Do you get a separate notice sent to each?

Mr. Griffiths.

Yes.

Mr. Grove.

That is a different thing.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Does the steward send notices indiscriminately to all in the parish?

Mr. Griffiths.

Yes, the bailiff does to all jurors.

The Witness.

I cannot answer your question exactly, whether this gentleman has ever received notice.

27,342. Did the border farmers ever pay a rent for the right of grazing on this common?—No.

27,343. No rent at all?—No, not to my knowledge, no rent whatever. There is nothing in the surveys about rent for grazing.

27,344. Had all the borderers of the common a right to send their sheep there?—All the residents; that is the expression used in the survey. I think there is some indication in one of the surveys that they pay 2*d.* a head, or something of that sort, but I have not been able to find it in the recent surveys.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,345. Can you tell me whether the hayward has been elected annually within recent times within the last few years?—I believe he has. The hayward would be a leet officer; the hayward was the man who looked after pound-breaches and things of that kind, offences against the public. He took up the stray cattle. If you will allow me to say so, one reason for the disuse of the common by these small people may possibly be the almost penal law against allowing cattle to stray upon the highways. The large brinkers would have their shepherds and other people to look after and keep their flocks in order, but the small people with but a score of sheep could not do that. That may be an additional reason for the disuse.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,346. Are the cottagers perfectly aware of their rights as to pasturage; that is, that they are not allowed to graze on any common they like?—I really cannot say whether they are all aware of what their rights are in that respect.

27,347. Because I see you drew a distinction?—I merely draw the distinction of the survey that has been in our hands, the survey of 1636. My information only comes from that, and Mr. Verity might have obtained it in the same way.

Chairman.

27,348. Now, Sir Gardner, what do you say with regard to the general results?—Well, really, I think the general results are most satisfactory, as showing how little this common has been wasted the last 100 years, or 200 or 300 years. I venture to say that there is not a common in the country that has suffered so little as this has. I think it is quite extraordinary that only 9 acres in 1830, and five since, making 14 acres, should have been encroached upon and taken away from the common in at least 100 years, or probably more. Then I think another result is to show how very dangerous a thing it is to get hold of a copy of an old document, and with insufficient information of facts, and insufficient knowledge of law applicable to those facts, to draw a conclusion based upon erroneous premises, which I am afraid, judging by the tenor of Question 25,227, has influenced the minds of the Commission, I hope I may say only temporarily, and induced them to believe in the charges which really run like a sort of refrain through all this evidence; there is the ruined castle, neglected courts, shrunken commons, and diminished population, all chargeable to the Duchy.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,349. He says the whole thing is a perfect wreck, and the boldest man takes the biggest bite?—That is it.

27,350. You repudiate that altogether?—I repudiate that the whole thing is a perfect wreck.

27,351. You contradict that statement completely?—Well, it is rather a large statement. One would like to take that statement to pieces.

27,352. I think you have done so?—Certainly the castle is a wreck, to begin with. The Castle was wrecked by Mr. Verity's predecessors, probably.

27,353. I do not think he refers to that particularly?—Oh, yes, that the whole thing is a wreck, and the castle is in ruins.

Chairman.

27,354. He says the castle is a wreck, and that no courts have been held for 16 years?—And he says what other courts have been held before that have been held in the wrong place.

Chairman—continued.

27,355. And the population has decreased?—Yes; commons shrunk one half.

27,356. Where, I think, his mistake is, is that he says, "All the rest have vanished, that is the "Lady Down, North Down, Butler's Down, "Southern Down, Down Raven, and a portion "of Sea Down, or Seaton, as it is called." Those, you say, never were commons at all?—They never were commons at all within the time of these materials before us.

27,357. That is, when he says the commons have shrunk, he does not say that the 1,000 acres have shrunk, but he says all the rest have vanished. He says it was 2,000 acres. Now, according to your calculation, it is 1,030 acres?—Yes.

27,358. I suppose the Lady Down, North Down, and so on, were some other 1,000 acres?—I cannot tell at all.

27,359. He says that is what has vanished. He does not say that the commons in the lower lordship have vanished?—We are only speaking of the commons in the lower lordship.

27,360. Yes, but he does not say that has vanished at all. He says also the rest has vanished. He says, "The Ogmore's Down at the "present time comprises, as I say, 1,000 acres." You agree with that?—Yes, the whole commons.

27,361. But that all the rest have vanished, and his contention was that those other portions were common, which is denied by you, I think. That is the question between you?—I do not know where he has found them, or where he has not found them. I do not know what he means by the 1,000 acres that have vanished.

27,362. Lady Down, North Down, Butler's Down, and so on?—Yes, I suppose that is it.

27,363. You both agree that the Ogmore Down is 1,000 acres, at least you are only 30 acres out between you?—Yes, as to the whole commons.

27,364. You agree there, but his contention is that those other commons had vanished?—Yes.

27,365. There has been no accusation of any of the other commons being taken away. Then he says that the population has diminished, and that no courts have been held, and that the castle is in ruins, which has been the case for a great many years?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,366. When Mr. Seebohm, Mr. Richard Jones, and myself went down, we were shown divers pieces of land as freehold land between the road and the sea, for instance?—Yes.

27,367. I suppose that there is no dispute between you and the persons who are in possession of those plots of land, as to the title. It certainly seemed very unfortunate that persons should have been able to acquire these small freeholds in the position in which they did acquire them. That was one of the points which was made before us?—Most unfortunate, but I am afraid we have nothing to with it now-a-days.

27,368. No. Really, so far as you can tell us, those freeholds existed before the surveys of the 17th century?—Before the surveys represented by that map.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

27,369. That is 1637?—Yes, I should say, certainly they did.

27,370. My recollection is that we drove along a road away from Dunraven Castle, which was in sight from where we started?—Yes.

27,371. Then we drove for a mile or a mile and a half, I should think, until we came to the river?—To the Ogmore?

27,372. To the Ogmore, and just by the river we were shown the ruins of the castle and of the Exchequer House. One of the points that were made by those who were good enough to show us the places was this, that it is most unfortunate that so many little bits of freehold should have been created and allowed to grow up between the road and the sea, and prevent the expansion of the place within proper lines for the good of the public?—Yes.

27,373. As I understand, those freeholds are not comparatively recent encroachments, but that they are encroachments, if they were encroachments, which existed in 1637?—Before 1637, well, I can only go by this map, but they certainly existed long before 1830, because they are shown here (pointing on map).

27,374. That was the impression left upon my mind, that they were comparatively recent encroachments?—The outline of this is identical with the outline of the Ordnance, and this gentleman, Mr. Lewis, who was a competent surveyor, has marked them on this map just there (pointing). He goes back 60 years before that, and the only encroachments that he can find are nine acres, so that that carries you back 100 years from the present time.

27,375. I have certainly gathered that these were comparatively recent encroachments. I mean within the last 60 or 80 years?—But there is nothing more deceptive than the loose evidence of old people, of the oldest inhabitant, unless he is brought up and cross-examined specially by a competent cross-examiner, as to the age of any of these encroachments. There is an encroachment here (pointing on map), which I told our bailiff to find out about, and he got hold of an old man, who was an intelligent man enough, and who said, "Oh yes, that encroachment was "made some years ago." He got him at last to say that it must have been perhaps 200 or 300 years ago. The encroachments referred to are on the plan (the witness pointed on the Lewis plan). He puts it down as an old encroachment then. Unless you go very closely into these matters, it is very difficult to judge.

Chairman.

There is one more question that I have to ask you. What course do you consider should be pursued in order to develop the capabilities of the district. Can you tell us anything upon that point.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,376. I should like to put a question before that, which relates to what has passed. It is one of the misfortunes of our Commission that evidence comes before us charging a grievance, and that grievances must relate to an individual or to a particular body. Still, the real object we have is to ascertain whether there are grievances which may be nobody's fault, but which can be remedied, and it seems to me that Mr. Verity's statement remains where it was from that point of view, that however wrong he may have been in his history, it comes to this, that we have here a typical instance of a common which was a comparatively short time ago, 40 or 50 years ago, occupied and used by a largish number of people, say 30 or 40 people, which has now dwindled down in its use to two or three large farmers. That, I think, is the substantial point that comes before our Commission, and as to which we have to consider whether any remedy can be found. It is not by any means an isolated case?—There I am happy to be able to say that I am at one with Mr. Verity, and I very much regret that any of these poor people should be deprived of their rights, but again, what I want to show is that we have nothing to do with it, the Duchy has nothing to do with it, even the court has nothing to do with it, and you gentlemen have nothing to do with it, and nothing short of an Act of Parliament will alter it.

27,377. But we are sitting here to make a report upon what really wants altering in the law?—No doubt.

27,378. And whilst I think for myself that the evidence you have given with regard to the Duchy of Lancaster has been very pertinent indeed, and has removed a great many of the misunderstandings which otherwise we should have had in our minds, there does remain the point whether anything can be done to prevent the little holders being turned out of these commons by the larger ones?—No doubt.

27,379. We had mentioned in evidence yesterday, as regards Scotland, an Act to regulate crofter's common grazings in Scotland, and which resulted from this fact, which you have also put before us, that where there is a common without stint, there is very little possibility of preventing the big people turning out the little people. I think your evidence goes to show that manorial courts, in their present rather decrepit state, are not exactly the bodies which can take in hand these questions which belong to the interests of the smaller people in the community. This Act gives power for the appointment of a committee in a village to take the use of the commons specially under its charge, and limit the number of sheep or cattle that are put upon the common, and in other ways to manage it. Now, what I should like to ask you, if you will kindly allow me to, is upon this point, whether, as we find the thing now, it has gone past remedy or whether it would be worth while in such a case as this—a typical case like this—to endeavour to put up any kind of machinery which should in future protect little men against the big men, and restore to the neighbourhood, or to the little people in the neighbourhood, the actual use of those commons which were used by their predecessors?—I think that is part of the larger question which I understood the Chairman to be about to enter upon—what is to be done in the future.

27,380. Well, having stated what I have, I will leave you to answer it in the course of your evidence?—I may say, once for all, I quite believe what has been stated, and that the Duchy is extremely anxious to improve the position of these people and to develop the resources of the place, resources which are very considerable. There is no reason why Ogmore should not be a health resort for the large towns of Cardiff, Bridgend, and Swansea, and the inland country, very much to the benefit of those who sought the resort, and very much more to the benefit of the inhabitants. In fact, the great thing is to get people with a little money in their pockets to come and spend it at Ogmore. The poor people would have a better market for their eggs and butter and various things that they make, and labour would be much more in request. The question is how to do it You have the two schemes before you, the scheme of Mr. Williams and the scheme of Mr. Verity. Mr. Williams' scheme proposes to hand over the whole place to the county council, and to ignore the Duchy. To that I think the Duchy would not agree. Mr. Verity's scheme is, in fact, a scheme for enclosure. Now, we are very much averse to enclosing. I think that is the tendency of the present day. There are not many beautiful commons left in England and Wales, but if you do enclose, enclose as little as possible. What we have felt is this, we have no land whatever; if we had had land, we could have obtained the building of a hotel, where sufficient accommodation could have been provided for visitors and even for sojourners—people who drive over for a day, and put up their horses and enjoy the fresh air and beauties of the place, and people would come and spend a week or two there; and also we could have put up a few residential houses to attract people, and by degrees to form the nucleus of a watering place. We were sorely tempted at one time to put in force the statute of Merton; we still have power to do that. We are not within the recent Act of Lord Thring, but the Duchy, and particularly the present Chancellor, was very much adverse to putting the statute of Merton in force. I have a letter from the Chancellor which I should like to read, if the Commissioners will allow me. He is away from London; he is in Scotland at the present moment. This is it, "Dear Sir Gardner, you are, "I think, already fully in possession of my "views regarding the manor of Lower Ogmore "and the common there. It is most desirable "to turn to some better account than now this "beautiful stretch of land, part of it along the "seashore, and to make it available as a pleasure "resort for the people of the populous inland "parts of Glamorgan. With a view to this, not "only a regulation order, but even the enclosure of "some small parts of the common for the erection "of a hotel and of houses where visitors may be

See 25,188–191, 25,368.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

"received, would appear desirable, there being "now, as I understood, practically no accommodation for visitors. On the other hand, I am "extremely averse to having even a small enclosure sanctioned by the Duchy, unless at "the request of some local authority entitled to "speak, and with the consent of the bulk of the "Commissoners. The open spaces and commons which are left in England and Wales "are none too many. I have, as you know, been "considering with you several plans, but pending the deliberations of the Commission, from "which we may perhaps receive further light, I "need not enter on the details of them now."

Mr. Grove.

27,382. You would agree generally that the development of the land might be increased by a certain process?—Yes, and that would circulate money among the people and, give a new aspect and colour to the whole place.

27,383. Perhaps you have noticed also that both Mr. Williams and Mr. Verity seem to suggest that certain powers might be given in the parish councils, with the consent of the Duchy, to take over certain of these lands on certain conditions, and to apply them for certain specific purposes?—For allotments.

27,384. Mr. Williams defines it at page 1,274, Question 25,368. He says: "I pointed out to "the Duchy that if the Provisional Order gave "the committee of the county council power to "take a moderate acreage of the common at "these parts and apply it for this purpose, I am "confident, from what I have myself heard and "seen, that the allotments would be accepted as "a great blessing by a large number of working "men." That is alluding to smaller allotments. In other places he alludes to the hotel and stables for putting up horses, and other matters of that kind for picnicers?—Yes.

27,385. Does it occur to you that some amendment might be now moved in the Lords, we will say, in this Parish Councils Bill that that would be serviceable, the Bill now being at the moment before the House of Lords?—To tell you the truth, I really do not know at present much about the Parish Councils Bill. I have purposely abstained from following the various changes. Until the Bill is crystallized into an Act it is no use trying to master it. We might, if we like, approve, and having approved under the Statute, then sell or lease at a nominal rent to the parish councils 30, 40, or 50 acres, not more, certainly, if so much, for the purpose of allotments.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,386. You would not approve the suggestion of Mr. Williams that certain portions of the commons should be converted into rabbit warrens?—We have had some experience of rabbit warrens; you mean keeping rabbits within a wire fence?

27,387. Yes?—We have had some experience of that, and it looks very well on paper, but it does not answer practically.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,388. If you were to enclose certain portions, I suppose, under the statute of Merton, you would have to leave enough for the sheep commoners?—Yes.

27,389. If smaller people did not use those commons, it would be practically giving the common for sheep for the sole use of two or three farmers?—If the small people had the allotments surely it would be a very good exchange, it might be an acre, or a two acre, or a five acre allotment. Of course you might by a Provisional Order alter the whole customs of the place, because the Provisional Order is an Act of Parliament; I mean you might turn it into a common with stint.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,390. Who would have to take the initiative of that? That would probably be an expensive process?—Which particular process, a regulation order?

27,391. Yes?—Of course we are not under the Board of Agriculture, but for that purpose we should or might put ourselves under them, and move them to issue a regulation order.

Lord Kenyon.

27,392. We may take it that the Duchy of Lancaster is very anxious to do what it can for the inhabitants?—Certainly, very anxious.

27,393. And it is hardly fair to say that they have woefully neglected their duty?—Well, I think I have said all I have to say about that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,394. Of course the Duchy are very much at the mercy of their agents in the locality?—I suppose we all are.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

27,395. My reason for asking is this: My attention has been called to the Bridgend Water Act and to a spring which appears to have been taken over by that company under the Act of Parliament. Have you heard anything about that?—I have heard very recently about it. I have had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Robinson, who has interested himself lately a good deal about the district, so I thought perhaps questions might be asked about it, and I took some little trouble to find out the state of the case. I have the Act here.

27,396. It is a private Act, I take it?—Yes.

27,397. As I understand the transaction, this spring was bought by the company from a Mrs. Nicholl, of Merthyr Mawr?—Yes, so I am told.

27,398. And it is the fact that that spring was in the Duchy property, and was very useful to the inhabitants who lived in the neighbourhood in which the spring was situate?—At what time, may I ask?

27,399. In 1869?—No, certainly it was not in Duchy property at that time. The spring was situate in the demesne lands which I think I mentioned were sold by Charles I. in 1638. I have here a statement which shows the inaccuracy of these sort of statements, in which the parcels are given as taken by the Bridgend Company with A.'s, B.'s, and C.'s, where the property is actually stated to be in the possession of the Countess of Dunraven, who held the last lease on the death of her husband, the lease that expired in 1869. I sent to the House of Lords and got a copy of the deposited plan, and I find it is not so at all. There are all the owners and all the occupiers, and they are all given there differently to what was stated to me, and the Countess of Dunraven had nothing whatever to do with it, and the Duchy had nothing whatever to do with it, in fact, we never heard of that Act at all; they did not serve us with notice; they considered, I suppose, it was not our property, and there was no occasion to serve us.

27,400. If it was not your property, and you are clear it was outside the parcels of the common which belong to you, of course there is no point in the complaint so far as the Duchy are concerned?—None whatever.

common at the side of the road. There again I have taken the trouble to ascertain when this road was made, and, so far as I can find, it was until recent times, until the Bridgend road authorities took it up, a mere track over the highground. They took it up and made it into a road; but, when all these demesne lands beginning from there, all lying close under Ogmore Castle and up to the river, were sold, 250 years ago, this spring passed with them, and the track and everything else. You see there was no track in the earlier times at all. These roads are very carefully given.

27,402. The road appears to have been made through waste of the manor, does it not?—A mere track.

27,403. It became a highway?—These were demesne lands; this was the waste. The white on this old map shows the demesne lands.

27,404. It seems to be odd you received no notice of it?—Why, it was not our property.

27,405. You have property there still, as I understand it?—No, only rights of common; only the manorial rights.

27,406. The Duchy has the usual rights of a lord of the manor, surely?—Yes, no doubt, and that is what has misled these gentlemen, who find in the deposited plans all these usual notices at the top; when they enter manors they put the name of the lord of the manor on each page, and they have mistaken that for ownership.

27,407. In whom is the freehold of the common vested?—In us.

27,408. Then, taking that view of the case, you were landowners adjoining?—You do not give notice to adjoining landowners if you do not touch their land.

27,409. I rather fancy that somehow or other notice ought to have been given to the parishioners, in a private Act of Parliament, with regard to gas and water?—I do not defend the company. I do not know anything about it, but there was no reason to give us notice, simply because it was not our property.

Lord Kenyon.

27,410. At any rate, you did not get it?—We did not get it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,411. The substantial interest goes as soon as you admit the spring was in the property of an adjoining owner. I suppose this water from the spring flowed towards the river?—No doubt. You see it here on the map exactly; they have made apparently in modern times a sort of communication with the river close to the Bridgend Waterworks.

Lord Kenyon.

27,412. The whole thing is marked. There is a regular communication between the springs and the river?—Yes, there is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,413. Has any complaint reached you as to quarrying—as to the common being damaged by the method in which quarrying is carried on there, and gravel and so forth taken away?—No, I think not.

27,414. Who receives the tolls for the quarrying, and so on?—The steward. Of course the lord has a right to quarry the mines and minerals.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,415. Does the water from this spring flow into the common at all?—No, it flows into the river Ewenny.

27,416. Who has the sporting rights over the common?—The lord.

27,417. Does he preserve?—It is let to Mr. Robinson, the gentleman I spoke of just now.

27,418. Who has the right to shoot the rabbits?—He has, as tenant. I see the rabbits are mentioned as having come over the river during frosts.

27,419. Yes?—All I can say is that there was a warren there in Henry the Sixth's time, because it is mentioned in the survey.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,420. And it was never cleared out I suppose?—No, never cleared out. I suppose their descendants came over the river afterwards.

27,421. In a contrary direction?—Probably.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,422. The only point I want to ask you about is this. I take it your view is, that it is better not to go back on the past, but to do what is best for developing the district, and by this, in addition, perhaps, to allotments, the little people would get more advantage in having a market at their doors, and all that, than they would get by any artificial attempt to regain the rights of the common?—I really think so, and if we should find hereafter any expression on the part of the Commission to strengthen our hands, we should very likely be able to act. We do not like to put the statute of Merton in force without some very strong reason.

Mr. Grove.

27,423. Are any minerals worked at all in connexion with these manors?—Yes; not in the lower lordship, but in the upper lordship they are worked considerably, at Llangeinor.

27,424. And the Duchy then get the benefit of the royalties?—Yes.

27,425. Are they worked to any large extent?—North's Navigation Company are working part of them.

27,426. You have not given us any information about the northern manor, have you?—Except in general terms.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,427. Will you kindly state in general terms what the Llangeinor Manor is?—I beg your pardon, there is no Llangeinor Manor.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

27,428. It is part of the manor of Ogmore?—Yes, it is part of the manor of Ogmore, but it is not a manor of itself.

27,429. It is one of those districts in which the population has increased?—I think I mentioned it has been increased in 30 years from 363 to 8,000.

Mr. Grove.

27,430. What is the reason?—Because of the development of these coal mines.

27,431. Have you in your mind something like the quantity of coal worked there per annum?—No, indeed I could not supply you with that.

27,432. I presume there have been no evictions in connexion with these small holders in times gone by. Some of the encroachments I think you told us you had been gathering together as well as you could. You had given notice, and in some cases you had adopted a certain rental. In other cases have they been turned out?—No, but we shall certainly turn some out shortly, if they do not abate the encroachment.

27,433. But, up to this time, there has been nothing in the shape of an eviction has there?—Not by process of law, I think. I should say not. When it has come to the last day, they have given the thing up, or given an acknowledgment.

Lord Kenyon.

27,434. Under notice to quit?—If you take the case of a few perches of land that a man adds to his garden, one does not very much like to turn him out.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,435. With regard to developing that district, would the parish be a sufficiently large body to consider it? It would affect a good deal beyond the locality according to what I have heard. It would be a great advantage to the county and the neighbouring towns?—I think so.

27,436. Would not the County Council be even a better body to deal with it than the parish in that case?—We should not have the least objection what body dealt with it, so long as they did not take the whole common and enclose it.

27,436A. There would be no difficulty, I gather from what you said, supposing the local body or the County Council, and the Duchy together, agreed on something. Would that not help you with the backing that you would want to carry out some measure?—Yes. I was thinking of the backing of some strong expression of views on the part of the Commission.

Lord Kenyon.

The Commissioners are extremely obliged to you for your courtesy in coming here to give them this information.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

6, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, Thursday, 25th January 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERICK SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Mr. J. RUSSELL SOWRAY called and examined.

Chairman.

27,437. You were one of the two principal clerks of the Woods and Forests Department?—I was.

27,438. Have you now retired?—Yes.

27,439. You have been good enough to come before the Commission to give evidence from that department?—That is so.

27,440. Can you tell us anything generally as to the Crown rights in Wales?—I wish to commence any evidence that I am to give, by saying that I should very much desire to avoid saying anything to prejudice the rights of the Crown, or anything to prejudice the rights of other persons; therefore I wish to confine my evidence within such limits as will enable me to avoid prejudicing any landowner or prejudicing the Crown by limiting its rights in any way. I should say that the rights of the Crown in Wales are now almost wholly seignorial rights; the Crown has little or no property in fee simple. I am very ignorant of the ancient tenure in Wales; and all that it is perhaps necessary to say is that, on the conquest of Wales in the reign of Edward I., the whole country may be said, technically, to have fallen to the Crown; and a very large extent, no doubt, did fall into the possession of the Sovereign. Of course, a very large extent of the cultivated land was found to be in the possession or occupation of the actual cultivators, who appear to have had some rights of tenure either as freemen or as bondsmen. I fancy that in the period between Edward I. and Henry VIII. there was a gradual assimilation of that tenure to the tenure in England. I am speaking with great diffidence upon that; but, at all events, whatever the gradual conversion may have been, by the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26., the principality was annexed to the realm of England, and the Act appointed that the laws of England should take place there, and that all Wales' laws, sinister customs, and tenures not agreeable to the laws of England should thenceforth be abrogated and annulled. That, at all events, legally converted the tenures in Wales into tenures similar to those in England, which were then feudal, and converted, I suppose, the ancient lordships and villes, and commotes and cantreds, and so on, into quasi manors. I have been quite unable to find that since then there has been any practical distinction between those who were formerly freemen and bondsmen, so far as the Crown is concerned. They all seem to have been treated very much in the same way, and to have held their holdings subject to the payment of the accustomed rents. Whatever demesne lands were orginally in the possession of the Crown either were granted away in fee-farm or, at all events, have been lost to the Crown, as the Crown now has scarcely any demesne land in which it has the entire fee simple. The rights of the Crown are now confined to the income from foreshores, still under the management of the Commissioners of Woods, the fee-farm rents reserved out of the numerous grants of property made by former Sovereigns, and the various manorial rents known as collection rents, bailiff's rents, beadle's rents, prepositors' rents, &c. payable by the customary tenants of the lordships or the commotes or manors, or whatever they may be, still belonging to the Crown, and which rents, I suppose, represent to a great extent the payments made by the occupiers of the soil in ancient times.

See 27,56 27,943.

27,441. Have you anything to say about the grants made by the Stuarts?—It was suggested that I should give some sort of list of the grants. Of course it would be impossible for me to give a correct or complete list of the grants; but I have taken out a list of those to which I could find reference, and if it is wished I will hand that list in.

27,442. Could you state roughly what it contains?—It contains a very great number; I had better hand it in. Of course some are much larger than others.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,443. Give the chief ones?—The chief ones are those to Collins and Fenn, and to Ditchfield and Highlord. Those were I think in the 4th of Charles 1st. There were two to Ditchfield and Highlord, and I think only one to Collins and Fenn. But those were very large grants, so that in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. I do not find a reference to any grants in Wales, although I believe there were considerable grants in England. Those grants which Charles I. made were so sweeping that I suppose they thought it would be better to leave Wales alone. I might give you the number of those to which I find a reference.

27,444. Ditchfield and others were to the city of London?—Yes.

27,445. Could you tell us who were Collins and Fenn?—I do not know who Collins and Fenn represented. If it is stated in the grant I forget what the history of it is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,446. Where was the property alienated to Ditchfield and others situate?—All over Wales. I think there are 53 grants in this list which I will hand in. (See Appendix.)

27,447. Can you tell us about the management and the Acts of Parliament?—The first Act which it is necessary to refer to is the Act of the 1 Anne, the Civil List Act, which really was the starting point of effectual legislature, restraining the unlimited grants by the Sovereign and endeavouring to preserve intact the land revenues of the Crown as they then existed. That Act enacted that no future lease or grant shall be good if made for more than 31 years or three lives, and unless there be reserved the ancient or most usual rent or more, or such rent as hath been paid for the greater part of 20 years before, or a rent not being less than one third of the clear yearly value. But where the greatest part of the yearly value of any estate shall consist of the buildings thereon then the lease may be for 50 years or three lives That of course restrained grants in perpetuity altogether and limited the grants of leases; but it was somewhat widely worded as to the one-third of the value being taken as the yearly value; and I believe that it was to a considerable extent, I will not say evaded, but taken advantage of for some time afterwards by the grant of leases at this minimum rent, that is, one-third of the yearly value, possibly subject to a fine at the same time, and also the prohibition against alienation was to some extent overruled by, I believe, several special Acts of Parliament sanctioning sales to particular people. That went on until at last Commissioners were appointed by the Act 26 Geo. III. c. 87., to inquire into the management of the whole of the land revenues of the Crown. Those Commissioners sat between 1786 and 1794, and their reports are most interesting and valuable. They went fully into every subject. I should say that by the Act appointing those Commissioners they were made trustees for the sale of the fee-farm rents of the Crown. The sale of fee farms in England had previously been authorised under an Act in the reign of Charles II., but that Act did not include Wales, it excepted it. But the Act of George III. did not except Wales, and those Commissioners sold a large number of the fee-farm rents belonging to the Crown. As the result of their recommendations an Act was passed in the 34 Geo. III. c. 75. for the better management of the land revenues of the Crown and for the sale of the fee-farm and other unimprovable rents. That of course transferred from the Special Commissioners, whose duties were ended, to the Surveyor-General the power of sale of fee-farm and other unimprovable rents, and also authorised the grant of building leases for 99 years (that was extending the Act of Anne) or three lives where the buildings were of greater value than the land.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,448. Would that be the beginning of the Woods and Forests; I refer to the Surveyor-General?—No, the office of Surveyor-General, I think, was constituted in 1612, and went on until 1809, when by the Act of 50 Geo. III. c. 65. the Commissioners of Woods Forests and Land Revenues were appointed; and the Act transferred to them the functions of the Surveyor-General of Woods and Forests and Surveyor-General of Land Revenues. Various Acts for the amendment of the Acts for the management of the land revenues of the Crown were passed, but really the Act upon which the Office of Woods now proceeds, subject to subsequent amendments, and what we call our sheet anchor, is the 10 Geo. IV. c. 50. That repealed most of the previous Acts; re-enacted a good many of their provisions; and, subject to the amendments by subsequent Acts, which are not very serious, that is the Act upon which the Commissioners of Woods proceed at the present time. It authorises not only leases for 31 years of ordinary lands and farms, and for 99 years for building purposes, but also authorises sales of all property, and it also does what was very imperfectly done before, it makes a distinct and positive separation between capital and income. The defect of all the previous legislation was that there was no sufficient distinction between capital and income. That Act makes a most rigid and positive distinction between capital and income, so that whatever sale of Crown property takes place, the money from that sale cannot be treated as income.

Chairman.

27,449. Have you anything to say about the Nullum Tempus Amendment Act?—That of course has a most important bearing upon the present rights of the Crown in Wales. It is a very curious thing, but it is a fact that in the reign of James I., at the time when all these enormous grants were taking place, there was an Act passed—I believe considerable pressure was put upon the King to pass it—the 21 James I. c. 2., which limited the Crown to 60 years when the subject had held or enjoyed or taken the rents and profits for 60 years. But the Act was only retrospective, it was not a continuing Act. It only applied to the past, although some wished to make it continuous; but I think I have seen some reference to it in which the King is reported to have said beggars must not be choosers, and they must take what they could get. It is curious at that period, when all these grants were being made, that the King should have been induced to pass such a sweeping Act, which deprived the Crown of everything which had been out of its possession for 60 years. The first continuing Act was the 9 Geo. III. c. 16., which enacted that the Crown "should be barred from question-"ing any title or claiming any property by "reason of any right or title which shall not "hereafter first accrue within the space of 60 "years next before the date of action; unless "His Majesty, his predecessors or ancestors, "heirs or successors, or some other person or "persons under whom His Majesty lawfully "claimed, shall have been answered by virtue "of such right or title, the rents, &c. thereof, "or the rents or profits of any honour or manor "whereof the premises are part or parcel within "60 years, or that the same shall have been "duly in charge or stood in super of record "within 60 years." That Act was by no means so sweeping as the Act of James I., because it preserved to the Crown all those premises which were parcel of a manor or lordship, and it also preserved all those premises which stood in charge on the Crown rentals and were continued in charge, although the rents had not been received. That was most important as regards the fee farm and unimprovable rents, because a very large number of those were what is called in super, that is, had not been collected for a great number of years. But that Act did not touch those rents. If the Crown was capable of identifying the premises out of which those rents issued at any time, the fact of their being on the Crown rentals preserved the Crown's title to them. But Parliament, I suppose, did not consider it sufficient, because by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 62., it was enacted that the Crown should not be entitled to recover any property or rents which have been held and enjoyed by others for 60 years, merely because such property or rents form part of any honour, manor, &c., belonging to the Crown, or have been in charge or stood in super of record within 60 years. That at once swept away a very large number of the Crown's fee farm, and unimprovable rents, because it at once says that if the Crown had not been in possession of them for 60 years they would go, although they were in charge. That has an important bearing on everything connected with the Crown's rights in Wales, and really limits the Crown to what it has in possession now, or what it had in possession at some time within the past 60 years.

27,450. Can you tell us anything about the Crown lordships and the commons and the manors?—On the Conquest, no doubt, the Crown came into possession of everything except those lordships to which the Crown confirmed the title of those they found there. Practically nearly the whole of Wales, I imagine, came into the possession of the Crown as to the seigniory, that is, the Crown became lord of the whole land. Therefore the Crown lordships and manors and commotes are very numerous, and extend over an immense area; but it must not be supposed that because the head lordship or manor or commote extends over a very large area, that therefore the Crown is possessed of all the seigniorial rights within it, because all the grants, of which you have a specimen in what I have put in from the Stuarts, which the sovereigns have made, are grants, many of them, of mesne manors, which cut away from the Crown a large portion of the seigniory. Therefore it is a very poor guide to the present state of the Crown's rights in Wales, to look at what its nominal seigniories are, but I have a list here if you wish to have them put in.

27,451. Could you give us any general idea of those papers that have been put in?—I will take Anglesey, where practically the Crown has now very little, but where the Crown lordship of Tyndaethwy includes practically the whole county excepting the boroughs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,452. I have a return here of Crown manors of the year 1845. Is there any variation between your list and the list that was given in this return to the House of Commons?—Yes, I fancy so. I do not place much reliance on that; I am afraid it was hastily prepared, and that it cannot be very much relied upon; at all events the spelling is in some cases incorrect; it is neither Welsh nor English.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,453. Did we understand that Tyndaethwy still remains Crown property?—That is the seigniory, and that includes practically, I think, the whole of Anglesey, excepting perhaps the boroughs and the Island of Holyhead; I am not sure that it includes that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,454. Do you put the boroughs in your list?—No; nearly all the boroughs have charters.

27,455. The reason I ask is because, of course, one knows that some of the boroughs in Wales have charters from—say the Duchy of Lancaster, which is one that I know of?—Yes. There are properties belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

27,456. Those documents I speak of, are very old documents; they would not be Crown boroughs, but Duchy boroughs and Chester boroughs. There is one that I have seen from the Earl of Chester?—Yes.

27,457. But you have not put a list of Crown boroughs in this list of yours?—I do not know that there are any. I do not think so. I mean that all have charters, and the only thing that they render is, sometimes, a rent to the Crown, which they collect themselves, and pay over in gross.

27,458. Then we may take it, that the list, that you put in now, is a carefully compiled and accurate list of the Crown manors in Wales?—It has been prepared with some little haste, but I think it is accurate as to the seigniory, but as I say it gives a very misleading idea of what the extent of the Crown rights in Wales now is.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,459. Because of the mesne manors which have been made out of them?—Yes, the numerous grants which have been made out of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,460. Would it be possible to get a list of those grants?—Well, it would be, I should say, the work of a lifetime to search the records for every grant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,461. Do you keep the older documents at the Office of Woods and Forests?—Oh, no. A large proportion of the grants are at the Public Record Office. Some of the grants are recorded at the Land Revenue Record Office, but as to the older ones, I should think the greater number are at the Public Record Office

27,462. Practically, I suppose, you only have the documents from the time that the office was formed in its present form?—I think more than that: probably from the time of the constitution of the Surveyer-General: very likely that would be the commencement.

27,463. 1612?—Yes, 1612, somewhere about then. We have a good many documents from about that time at the Land Revenue Record Office, but there was probably no fixed rule as to where the grants should be recorded until within recent years.

Chairman.

27,464. Then as regards the Crown freehold land and the Crown tenants?—That is remarkably small. There is a farm called Sychnant Farm, in the parish of Maentwrog, in the county of Merioneth. It was a very old encroachment. I cannot trace the origin, but I believe it was originally an encroachment on the waste; it is on the border of the Crown waste, and I have no doubt it was originally an old encroachment. It is now let. It was last let in 1890, I think. It was let by tender; the acreage is

Chairman—continued.

101 acres, 3 roods, and 39 perches, and it was let for 21 years from the 10th of October 1891, at the rent which the tenant offered, namely 45*l.* a year. The present tenant, notwithstanding that he tendered the rent, was allowed 5 per cent. off for the year to 10th of October 1892, and I believe there is some idea of making him an allowance for the past year. Since 1880 the sum of 396*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* has been expended by the Crown in repairing and partially rebuilding the farmhouse and buildings, and in fencing and draining. Drainage works are now going on, and the sum of 33*l.* 8*s.* further has to be expended by the Crown to complete the estimate.

Mr. Grove.

27,465. Then that would be about eight to nine years rental, something about that?—Yes; the rent has varied, I think, between 40*l.* and 50*l.* for some years. I was proposing to give a list of all that we have, if it is not wearying the Commission. They are very small. The next is an estate, not the ancient freehold of the Crown, but an estate which the Crown purchased for other purposes than with a view to acquiring the surface. It was purchased because it runs up into and adjoins the Crown property, the Crown waste, through which one of the most valuable slate veins in Wales runs; the slate vein continues through this property, and it is very important property for the Crown to possess for the purpose of facilitating the working of the slate, not only in the property itself but in the Crown property adjoining. It was, therefore, purchased with that view in 1887. It was purchased for 8,740*l.* The larger part of the consideration money was really in respect of the valuable slate vein that ran through it, but it is now divided into five farms.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,466. In what county is that, may I ask?—It is called the Hafod-y-Wern estate, in the parish of Llanwnda, in the county of Carnarvon. These farms were let very soon after the Crown acquired the property. One contained 160 acres, and was let for 60*l.* a year on a yearly tenancy. The next contains 116 acres, 3 roods, and 33 perches, and was let for 50*l.* a year.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,467. A good deal of that land is mountain land I suppose, sheep pasture?—Yes, quite so.

27,468. Or else it looks a large acreage for the rent?—It is mountain land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,469. Was it bought in the public market or by private treaty?—There was an auction, but I really forget whether the Crown bought it by public auction or afterwards by private treaty; I am not sure; I think it was by private treaty.

Mr. Grove.

27,470. Did you give us the total acreage for the 8,700*l.*? Probably when you give us the five different farms, that it will show us the total acreage.—Yes. The next is 23 acres and 19 perches, let at 22*l.* a year; the next is 25 acres, 2 roods, and 20 perches, let at 18*l.* a year; the next is 10 acres, 2 roods, and 37 perches, let at 13*l.* a year. 10 per cent. was allowed off these rents for the year to October 1892.

27,471. Were these let by tender?—No, they were let by arrangement with the local agent, and 15 per cent. has been allowed off the rents for the year to October last.

27,472. The Crown has an agent there?—Yes. Since 1888, when these five small farms came into the hands of the Crown the sum of 302*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* has been spent upon them in repairs and alterations to the houses and buildings, and in fences and drainage, and it has now been decided to provide additional farm buildings at Hafod-y-Wern and Tyddyn Sir Hugh farms at an estimated cost of 300*l.*

Mr. Grove.

27,473. Is the slate worked at all on that property?—Not at present; no eligible tenant has yet presented himself.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,474. It is not a particularly brisk time in the slate trade, is it?—It has been much better, I believe.

27,475. It is improving, no doubt?—Yes; but still this is a property which requires a large capital to be expended upon it. The other landed possessions of the Crown are simply allotments which were acquired under Inclosure Acts, and which the Crown, I suppose, was not able to get purchasers for, or at all events did not sell and has let; one is in the parish of Cerrig-y-Druidion, in the county of Denbigh, 126 acres, 2 roods, and 22 perches, let at 16*l.* a year.

Lord Kenyon.

27,476. That is on the hill top too?—Yes, that is mountain. Then one in the parish of Llaneilian, in the county of Denbigh, 20 acres, let at 6*l.* per annum.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,477. Is that mountain land also?—Yes. Then two allotments of mountain land in the parish of Llanddwywe and Llanelltyd, in the county of Merioneth. One contains 95 acres, 1 rood, and 6 perches, and the other contains 221 acres, and they are let for 13*l.* a year.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,478. The two together?—The two together. The value is very small. Not only are they in a remote position, but there is a slate quarry on them, which, of course, the Crown reserves the right to work. Then there are two in Carmarthenshire. One in the parish of Llanelly, containing 23 acres, 3 roods. It is marsh land, and is let at 5*l.* a year. There is another in the parish of Pembrey, containing 13 acres, 1 rood, and 25 perches, which is better land, and is let at 15*l.* per annum. Various remissions have been made in these rents, but probably the Commission would not care to go into them.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

27,479. Simply allowances, not permanent reductions upon any of that land?—No; that is so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,480. Then that is a complete list of the freehold property of the Crown in the Welsh counties and in Monmouthshire?—Yes, excepting the encroachments, in so far as they are freehold, from having been enclosed 20 years years ago, but not enclosed 60—between 20 and 60 years. After 20 years the commoners' rights are barred, but it takes 60 years to bar the rights of the Crown. Therefore encroachments between 20 and 60 years may be considered to be the freehold property of the Crown.

Lord Kenyon.

27,481. I suppose the Crown defends itself in those cases?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,482. Do we understand clearly that this is the list of all the mountain land that is let?—Yes.

27,483. Because the mountain land also belongs to the Crown?—Yes.

27,484. These are simply the tenants?—Those are merely what I call the freeholds—freed and discharged of all rights whatever.

27,485. They add up to 900 acres altogether.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,486. Then the Crown is the freeholder, or at any rate has rights in tracts of lands besides these places?—Yes, the Crown has the freehold of waste lands, subject to the rights of common of pasture, turbary, and so on.

Lord Kenyon.

27,487. Have you a list of those wastes? Can you tell us the amount of those wastes?—There was a list published by the Committee who inquired into the Office of Woods in 1889–90. I have not copied it out.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,488. If you will give us the reference, that will do. That is, I suppose, a public return which is printed by the Queen's printers?—That is a public return in Parliamentary paper 284, 1889, page 310.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,489. Was it called a report of a Committee on the Woods and Forests?—Estimate of areas of lands in which the Crown possesses an interest.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,490. It was a report of a Select Committee?—It was a Select Committee of the House of Commons on the management of the Office of Woods and Forests. I can give the totals if the Commission wish it.

27,491. If you please?—The total of unenclosed waste land still belonging to the Crown is 84,110 acres 2 roods. This is only an estimate. Lands, formerly Crown lands, which have been sold since 1788 (that is, since the Commission was appointed under that Act which I spoke about), subject to the reservation of mineral rights (excluding allotments under enclosures), 90,863 acres 1 rood and 1 perch.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,492. In all those the mineral rights are reserved?—Yes. Then, lands divided and allotted under Inclosure Acts of Parliament, subject to a reservation of the Crown mineral rights (including the Crown allotments), 189,828 acres, making a total of 364,801 acres 3 roods and 1 perch. That is an estimate of all the lands in Wales in which the Crown possesses an interest.

27,493. And it possesses the mineral rights of the whole of that portion?—Yes. I am not sure that the waste land includes encroachments in which we have an interest; I rather think not; but that is a comparatively small matter.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,494. I should like to be clear with regard to the seigniory and the grants which seem to make holes in the rights of the seigniory. Are those grants in any way taken into account there?—These are what we feel that we are really in possession of.

27,495. In the case of the grants that you spoke of just now, the mineral rights and all are gone?—Yes.

27,496. Is that so?—In the old grants I am not sure whether I have not come across one or two in which there was a reservation of minerals; but in 99 cases out of 100, the mineral rights went—there was no reservation whatever. It is only in modern times that we have persistently insisted upon a reservation of the mineral rights.

Lord Kenyon.

27,497. Have you anything further to say under that head?—I think not.

Mr. Grove.

27,498. On that point I should like to ask a question: Are these minerals being largely worked?—In some cases they are largely worked. Of course, in some places, there are no minerals.

Mr. Grove—continued.

27,499. Quite so?—But where there are minerals they are being extensively worked, although unfortunately the depressed state of lead and copper has knocked the Welsh mines almost out of the market.

27,500. Have you no coal being worked?—No; no coal, excepting some under-sea coal at Llanelly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,501. Slate you have?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,502. Could you give us roughly the rental which the Crown gets out of the 364,000 acres odd?—If the Commission wish it I will give the revenue at various dates, and then I will give it in detail at the present time. There is a reference I see to the revenue in 1377; I do not know that it is worth much, but it is put down at 5,214*l.* 11*s.* 10¾*d.* It professes to be very exact. Then the next reference that I find is in 1689, and then it is put at 6,998*l.*, or, knocking off the shillings and pence, practically 6,999*l.* In 1701, 6,796*l.*; in 1760, 4,933*l.*; in 1786, 5,711*l.*; in 1816, 3,960*l.*; in 1832–3, that is the 31st March 1833, I think, 5,446*l.*; in 1849–50, 5,697*l.*; in 1859–60, 9,118*l.*; in 1869–70, 12,832*l.*; in 1879–80, 13,289*l.*; in 1889–90, 14,481*l.*; and in 1892–3, the last year which has been published, it had fallen to 13,464*l.*, owing to the depression in minerals. The increase between 1849–50 and 1888 is in the face of sales, of fee-farm rents sold for 34,369*l.* and of lands, foreshores, &c. 117,178*l.*, or together 151,547*l.*; this at 3 per cent. would produce 4,546*l.* per annum which might be added to the last year, to show what it would have been if no sales had taken place.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,503. Are those the gross receipts that you are giving us?—They are the gross receipts.

27,504. I ask the question because I find that in a Return to the House of Commons in the year 1835 there appears to have been a deficit of 150*l.*?—That was after deducting the pensions.

27,506. But there were allowances to bailiffs as well and salaries to stewards; Sir Watkin Williams Wynne, for instance, was steward, and received 20*l.* a year?—Oh, yes; there are expenses to be deducted, but not those large sums which you find there for pensions. I think I have the return somewhere.

27,507. May I ask what is the authority for the earlier rental which you have given?—I can give it to you. It is the Twelfth Report of the Commissioners under the Act of 26 Geo. III.

27,508. But do you think they took it from Sir John Doddridge's book?—I think very likely they did. I think it is in Sir John Doddridge's book. What his authority for it is I really cannot say.

27,509. So far as you have examined Sir John Doddridge's book, do you find it a trustworthy and accurate account?—I think so. I am not prepared to show that anything is inaccurate in it. I went through it, and took some extracts from it. I think it is carefully prepared.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,510. He gives the revenue of the Principality of Wales in 1844 as 1,335*l.*?—That is imperfect, I think.

Lord Kenyon.

27,511. Does this list include all rents?—That includes all.

27,512. Freeholds, wastes, and everything?—Yes.

27,513. Can you tell us at all why the rentals went down so very low in 1816. That was the time when the distinction was made clear between capital and income, was it not, or just after that?—Yes, and I fancy that, about that date, the same attention was not bestowed upon the Welsh revenue as has been bestowed upon it since.

Lord Kenyon.

27,514. Perhaps there were more sales in that year?—There may have been some sales.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,515. I do not quite see where the result of the sales in the time of Charles I. comes in, but of course we have not got anything earlier than 1689, practically?—No.

27,516. The amount in 1689 is what was left after the sales of Charles I.?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

27,517. Have you anything to say as to the general policy as to waste and encroachments?—Up to quite recently the policy as regards the wastes was the policy which was considered by all authorities 100 years ago to be the correct one; that was to get them enclosed and divided as soon as possible, and in pursuance of that policy the Crown, without actually promoting enclosures, rendered every facility for the inclosure of its waste lands, and from the figures which I have given you as to the quantity of land divided and enclosed, you may imagine that the inclosures of Crown wastes have been very numerous.

27,518. Up to what date was that?—That was up to the time when the late Mr. Fawcett, I think it was, put a stop to enclosures. I forget what date that was.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,519. From about the time of the Commons Preservation Society?—Yes, it would be about the same time.

27,520. In the sixties, I think, but I am not quite sure?—I see there has been only one Crown inclosure since 1868.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,521. You have not told us what the Crown got during that time when its policy was to enclose and divide as much as possible Did they charge a rental or a fine or what?—The Crown had the sporting and the estrays, and of course if any encroachment were made, the Crown required the encroacher to acknowledge the rights of the Crown, by the payment of some rent or by purchasing, if he chose to purchase, subject to the chance of his encroachment being thrown down.

27,522. Did the encroacher become a year to year tenant?—He became a year to year tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

27,523. Since that time, I take it, the Crown has maintained the wastes as waste?—The Crown wastes have been maintained, and as regards the encroachments, the usual practice with regard to encroachments has been to have them periodically surveyed and valued, and to charge as rent about one quarter of the value of the land and buildings to the encroacher, that being in consideration of the fact that, although he has done an illegal act, he has spent money in enclosing the land and erecting the building, and therefore it has been taken at that modified rent.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,524. One quarter of the improved value?—Of the full value, as certified by the Surveyor. Of course, if a tenant occupies for a great number of years—30 or 40 years—he has had an opportunity of getting back his money under this small rent, and the rent is in some cases raised; or if an encroacher gives up his encroachment for any reason, and a stranger comes in who has had no expenditure, the rent is increased.

27,525. You mean the full rent—the ordinary rent?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

27,526. You would not raise the rent to the man who had been there some time?—Not unless he and his family had been there for a great number of years.

27,527. Would it be raised after a certain of years?—We have done so, yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,528. That would be very strongly resisted, I suppose, by the tenant, would it not?—No, I do not know that it has. Of course, no one likes to have his rent raised.

27,529. But the longer the period he has enjoyed it at the small rent the more likely, I should think, he is to feel entitled to it always?—Yes, that is so.

27,530. Can you give us the number of small holders that have been created in that way?—Of course the number throughout Wales is very large, but from a conversation which I had with you, sir, before coming here, I thought it might interest the Commission to have some idea of two or three localities with reference to the question of small holders and peasant proprietors, and that it might be worth while to inquire, perhaps, and see what the result of this operation has been. I will take first of all, in the county of Radnor, seven parishes in what is called our manor of South Ugre, which is a manor in the lordship of Cantre Mellenith, which comprises several manors. Perhaps you would like to know the parishes. They are the parishes of Llanbister, Llandewy, Llananno, Llanbadarnfynydd, Beguildy, Heyop, and Llangunllo. I should say that, of course, the figures are subject to this remark, that a great number of the encroachments were made by tenants of the freeholders, in whom the right of common is vested; and I believe the law is, that an encroachment enures to the benefit of the freeholder and not to the benefit of the tenant. Therefore, some considerable reduction must be made from the figures to allow for those encroachments, which, though made freehold, are simply added to existing farms and not held independently. Still there is a residue of encroachments made by squatters and held independently of anybody. The number of encroachments in these seven parishes which have been made freehold, either by grant from the Crown or by lapse of time, since the grounds have been surveyed, is 700; the acreage is 2,701 acres, giving an average size of 3 acres, 3 roods, and 17 perches. It is a curious thing with these encroachments, that they really suggest the three acres and a cow throughout.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,531. They are more likely to be three acres and a sheep?—Possibly. The area of these parishes is 58,049 acres, so that the encroachments which have been made freehold form one 21st or one 22nd part of the whole area of the parishes.

27,532. Do you consider that a remarkable group for the principality? — There were an unusual number of encroachments in that manor.

27,533. What I wanted was whether you would mention any others?—Yes. I will give you another.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,534. Could you tell us what the result has been; whether it has been beneficial—whether they are still held by these little holders?—No, I have not had time to obtain that information. I thought of going to the poor law returns, and seeing whether the poor rates indicated an increase or decrease as compared with the adjoining parishes, but I have not had the time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,535. These 700 small encroachments are still in the occupation of divers persons, are they?—Subject to my remark that many of the encroachments are made by the tenants of premises adjoining, belonging to the freeholders, in whom the right of common is vested, and that they are simply added to the farm, and are not independent holdings.

Lord Kenyon.

27,536. Have these freeholders had to buy these encroachments?—Yes, where they did not succeed in avoiding us for 60 years; then they got them for nothing. The next I will take are four parishes in the lordship of Denbigh. The names are Gwytherin, Llanfairtalhaiarn, Llansannan, and Llanefydd. The number of encroachments which have become freehold in those four parishes is 1,238. In many instances there are 3, 4, 5, and 6 encroachments (by the time the survey is made) belonging to one individual. That is, there seems almost, before the survey is made, to have been an amalgamation. The total acreage was 4,239, which gives an average of 3 acres 1 rood and 21 perches.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,537. Have you the total acreage of those parishes?—The total area of those parishes is 30,356 acres, so that the encroachments form rather more than one-seventh of the area of the parishes.

27,538. Do we understand that it is a mountainous district?—Yes, it is a mountainous district.

27,539. Then one would suppose the area of the parish would be very large?—Yes, but as I have taken it, I may have made a mistake, and I should like to be corrected if that is so; that is what I made those four parishes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I think they are rather small parishes. Llanfairtalhaiarn is a small parish.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,540. Yes, but they have valleys. I do not know whether the Crown has property in the valleys or on the hills?—Oh, on the hills; you may take it, that wherever the Crown has a right, it is generally on a hill.

27,541. Except that one would rather take it that the average extent would be somewhat larger than three acres?—It surprised me, but I think these figures are correct.

Lord Kenyon.

27,542. Perhaps if they had taken more they would have been found out sooner?—Perhaps they felt that, and of course the larger the encroachment the greater the cost in enclosing it. The other case I will take will be a case which I think is perhaps more valuable, because I believe in this case most of the encroachments were really made by squatters, and are probably still held, so far as they are held by the squatters, independently of any other land—a large number of them, at all events. That is the parish of Llandwrog, in the county of Carnarvon. It is a parish in which there are a great number of slate quarries, and it is largely occupied by persons working in or connected with those quarries. The number of encroachments in that parish which have become freehold are 181, and the acreage is 660, giving an average of 3 acres 2 roods and 23 perches. The area of the parish appears to be 9,516 acres, so that the freehold encroachments occupy from a 14th to a 15th of the area of the parish.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,543. Have we been told since what date these encroachments were made?—Roughly speaking, these encroachments were made between 1770 and quite recently; I think the earliest surveys of them were from 1826 to 1836.

Lord Kenyon.

27,544. Up to the present time?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,545. These are very interesting. They are all in North Wales, I notice, except Radnorshire?—Yes, excepting Radnorshire.

27,546. You do not happen to have anything in Cardiganshire?—I might have got something out in Cardiganshire, but the encroachments are not so numerous, I think, and, therefore, they do not form so good a basis.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,547. What is the present state of relations between the Crown and these squatters. Do they pay small rents?—These freeholders have purchased or acquired by lapse of time, and all our interest is in the sporting and in the mineral, both of which are reserved, the sporting being reserved because taken separately for each encroachment it is valueless, but taken over the whole bulk in connection with the waste it may be of considerable value.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,548. Then in addition to this, you have a considerable number of squatters who are going through the process now, I suppose, and who are not freeholders?—Taking that parish of Llandwrog, we found that perhaps not sufficient consideration had been given to the fact that it was a great slate district, and that, therefore, it was very important to preserve everything for the Crown which might interfere with the slate. Therefore for some years past we have usually declined to sell anything there, because we found that our tenants of the slate came to us and said, "You have sold an encroachment here for, "perhaps, 5*l.*, and I have been to the man, as I "want it for my slate quarry, and he asks 500*l.* "for it." Therefore, we have declined to sell any more encroachments, and there are now let to tenants, 134 encroachments.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,549. At Llandwrog?—Yes, at Llandwrog.

27,550. These others are all sold?—They are all sold. The 134 encroachments contain 202 acres 2 roods and 16 perches.

27,551. At a rental of what?—I am afraid I have not the rental.

27,552. The rental is of the average that you described just now?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

A quarter of the actual value, I suppose.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,553. The property adjoining, on which the encroachment is made, is waste land over which other persons have rights of common I suppose?—At all events on one side.

27,554. Do you get any applications for small holdings at all from persons living in this parish, say the parish of Llandwrog?—I do not think we do, because they know that we have no right to grant them.

Lord Kenyon.

27,555. That would be in the nature of enclosing waste?—Yes. The Office of Woods is careful not to encourage encroachments. We merely come in when the encroachment is made, and we say, "You have made an encroach-"ment, you have no right to make it. The "commoners have a right to throw it down, but "so far as the Crown is concerned we will "take care you do not get our rights for "nothing."

27,556. You do not exercise your rights under the Statute of Merton in that respect?—No, we do not encourage encroachments in any way. In this particular parish I think we discovered some time ago that the bailiff was assisting people to mark out encroachments, and thereby giving a sort of quasi assent to the encroachments being made, and we at once put a stop to it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,557. I suppose most of the squatters have built a house upon the encroachment?—A considerable number, the exceptions being chiefly those who have tenements adjoining, and who merely wish to add to their holding.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,558. Have you any agents in the different parishes to look after your interests?—Not in every parish, but we have agents who go round.

Lord Kenyon.

27,559. Have you anything further to say on the inclosure of waste lands?—I do not know whether the Commission would wish to have any details about the inclosures of waste land.

27,560. I think so?—They have been going on since, I suppose, 1780 up to about 1868, and there has been only one since.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,561. Have you a list of the Inclosure Acts relating to Wales?—Yes, I have where the Crown is interested.

27,562. Can you give them to us?—Yes. There is also a schedule of the inclosures which have taken place since the general Inclosure Act, 1847, since which a special Act for each inclosure has not been necessary. I put both the schedules in as the Commission wish it. [See Appendix.]

Lord Kenyon.

27,440, 943. 27,563. Now will you kindly give us your evidence as to the foreshores?—The management of the foreshores passed to the Board of Trade in 1866, so that the Office of Woods has nothing to do with the management of foreshores, excepting those which had been already dealt with either by lease or in some other way, and these were reserved by the Act. We have, therefore, some foreshore. Before 1866 the sales were numerous. I think since 1866 the Commissioners of Woods have rather felt that foreshore land should not be sold, and therefore they have limited the sales very much to those cases in which the applicant has a parliamentary title, that is, where a work is authorised by Parliament, and where, therefore, he may naturally expect to have a conveyance granted to him. In other cases we endeavour to induce the people to take a long lease if they are going to put valuable buildings on the foreshore, or if they merely wish it for the protection of their frontage an ordinary lease at a small rent, in most cases of course the lease being revocable if any works are required to be put upon the foreshore.

Lord Kenyon.

27,564. Then will you kindly give us any evidence with regard to Beadle's and Prepositor's rents?—I find that the only indications on the rentals that I have been able to refer to of there being Beadle's and Prepositor's rents are in Cardiganshire. There are several cases in Cardiganshire, but I do not find any elsewhere, although it is quite possible that the distinction between Beadle's rents and Prepositor's rents in other parts of Wales did exist, but has been lost sight of.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

27,565. Will you kindly explain to the Commission what the lists are?—I propose, if it is agreeable to the Commission, to put in a Beadle's rental and a Prepositor's rental of the same lordship, the lordship or manor of Harminiog, in the county of Cardigan. [See Appendix.]

27,566. What is the date?—They are collected every year. I may mention in passing these are the only rentals of these small manorial rents to which we have a parliamentary title. The Harminiog Inclosure Act directed the Commissioners to set out the rents which were due to the Crown within the lordship, and to make a rental of them, and they did so in their award.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,567. Perhaps I may explain that the interest in the two lists is this, that in the same parish or same lordship there are two sets of rentals collected by two separate officers?—Formerly.

27,568. One of them called the Beadle's and the others the Prepositor's?—Yes.

27,569. And the suspicion is that the one is the freehold rent and the other the ancient bondsmen's rent. I do not know whether you have any opinion upon that or whether that can be verified or not?—I am afraid I must confess my ignorance. I have puzzled over it several times, but it is rather perplexing. However, I will put the rentals in.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,570. They are not very considerable?—They are somewhat lengthy 27,571. Individually they are small?—Very small.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,572. Are those the titles invariably given to these officers in such rentals as you have?—Formerly; we employ bailiffs or collectors now.

27,573. Are those the titles you find in the most ancient documents?—In ancient documents we find the Beadles and Prepositors as being the officers who collected these rents.

Mr. Seebohm.

The real interest in this is that the rentals which were reserved at the time of the conquest of Wales in the 13th century have been so very carefully preserved down to the present time. There are a great many instances in which the actual rents which are down in the surveys of Edward I.'s time are collected now; and in this one case of Cardiganshire we have them distinguished into these two lists by the fact that they are collected by two different officers. The question, therefore, arises why are these two sets of rentals kept distinct, being very small rentals—some even less than 1*s.*—and why have they during all these hundreds of years been kept distinct. The probability, or the possibility, is that the one is the rent of the bondsmen collected by the 'maer,' and the other the freehold rents.

The Witness.

27,574. My attention was called to some reference to an Act of the 31 Eliz. c. 7, which was an Act which prohibited any person within the realm of England from making, building, or erecting any cottage or dwelling-house to be used for habitation, unless the same person do assign four acres at least of land to be freehold with the said cottage. Some stress was laid upon that Act, but in point of fact the Act was repealed by the 15 Geo. III. c. 32. And the reason given in the preamble of the repealing Act was that the said Act had led the industrious poor to great difficulties to procure habitations, tended very much to lessen population, and in divers other respects had been found inconvenient to the labouring part of the nation in general.

27,575. That is to say, a man could not build a cottage without putting a certain amount of land to it?—And he could not find the land.

27,576. And that was a bar against building cottages?—Yes.

See 27,691, 27,753, and evidence of Mr. J. Lloyd, 59th Day.

27,577. Now will you kindly give us your evidence about the Forest of Brecon?—I understood that some information was required about the Forest of Brecon. I should say that the Crown has had nothing whatever to do with the Forest of Brecon for about 70 years, therefore I do not know what the interest will be to the members of the Commission or to anyone else. But, however, if it is desired, I will give a statement on the subject.

was so poor that it would not pay the expenses of enclosure and cultivation, and in 1818 the Act of 58 Geo. III. c. 99, was passed, which repealed so much of the previous Act as authorised the setting out of allotments in lieu of tithes, and the division amongst the commoners of the share of the forest set apart for them; and enacted that the commoners' share should "remain open and unenclosed for the benefit of "the several other owners or proprietors of "ancient messuages, cottages, enclosed lands, "and grounds entitled to rights of common in, "over, and upon the said lands and grounds "according to their several and respective "rights and interests therein freed and discharged from all forestal rights, and from all "claims of his Majesty, his heirs and successors, "and all persons lawfully claiming under him "or them: save and except such rights and "interests as are hereinafter expressly excepted "and reserved to his Majesty, his heirs and successors." The Act repeats the reservation of minerals in the whole forest to the Crown, and ends with a saving clause saving to the Crown and to all other persons "all such estate, right, title, "interest, claim, and demand whatsoever (other "than and except such as is and are hereby "expressed, meant, and intended to be barred, "destroyed, or extinguished) as they, every, or "any of them had or enjoyed in, to, or out of "the said forest and open commonable lands "and grounds, or could have had and enjoyed "therein in case this Act had not been passed." The allotment set out to the Crown contained about 13,860 acres, and this was sold by tender to Mr. John Stewart, merchant (excepting a certain piece or parcel of land called Wain Liky, containing 240 acres, found to belong to Mr. Rice Powell), but including an allotment of 140 acres awarded to the Crown in lieu of Wain Liky—that reduced the acreage to 13,760—"together "with all mines of coal, lead, ores, metals, and "all other minerals whatsoever in or under the "same, and all other his Majesty's manorial "and other rights, royalties, and privileges in "and over the said several allotments respectively." The conveyance is dated 7th February 1820, and the purchase-money was 15,000*l.* On the same day a conveyance was made to Archibald Christie—I believe he was a nominee of the Mr. Stewart who purchased the other—of the Crown's mineral rights in five allotments containing 1,786a. 2r. 3p., sold by the Disafforesting Commissioners to pay their expenses, and all other rights, royalties, and privileges in and over the same, the consideration being 200*l.* And on the 15th February 1822 a conveyance was made to John Stewart of the tithes in respect of the land sold to him and in respect of the commoners' allotments and elsewhere (excepting what had been sold to Archibald Christie and what had agreed to be sold to John Parton), also all his Majesty's rights and interests in, to, and over an allotment called Wain Dwr, containing 167 acres, and an allotment containing 82 acres (allotted in lieu of tithes), and also mines and minerals and other rights, royalties, privileges, and interests of every description whatsoever of or belonging to his Majesty in and over the said respective allotments, and in and over the whole of the said great forest of Brecknock, save only and except what had been sold to Archibald Christie and agreed to be sold to John Parton. The consideration for this conveyance was 1,330*l.*, and swept from the Crown the whole of the interest, mineral, and everything else out of the Crown hands, and the Crown has had nothing to do with the Brecknock Forest since.

27,579. The Crown has washed its hands of all responsibility in connection with Brecknock Forest now?—Yes; of course, we cannot be responsible for what we have no interest in.

Adjourned for a short time.

Lord Kenyon.

27,580. You mentioned that one of the farms was let by tender. Is that the usual process of the Crown?—Whenever we can do so in Wales we let by tender, and we also, in those cases where we sell allotments under Inclosure Acts, usually sell those by tender. I do not think it is so in England.

27,581. Is that an advisable custom?—At all events it is a convenient one, because we advertise, and we presume that the best offer will be made that we can expect to get; and I think in a public department it is advisable.

27,582. You practically let to the highest bidder?—Yes, to the highest bidder—of course, if his references are satisfactory.

27,583. It is a practice that is rather objected to in a private landowner?—It may possibly have some drawbacks, especially with farms, but this was a small farm, and it was thought better and more convenient that it should be let by tender.

27,584. We have been told several times that there is a great land hunger in Wales, and people are ready to pay more for land than it is actually worth. Therefore, letting by tender would seem to get the class of man you do not quite wish to have, and who offers more than he can really pay?—Inquiries were made as to the sufficiency of the highest bidder. There were only three offers although the farm was advertised.

27,585. In that particular instance?—Yes.

27,586. Perhaps that throws some light on the way in which a State landlord might manage its affairs?—I should not like to commit the Commissioners of Woods so far as England is concerned. I do not know as a matter of fact whether they do usually let by 27,464. tender or not; I should say not. Before parting with that particular farm of Sychnant, I wish to correct a statement I made that I thought it was an old encroachment, and that I could not trace it. I understand the origin of it has been traced, and it was an old escheat escheated to the Crown some 200 years or more ago.

27,587. Have you any knowledge of a place in Denbighshire called Holt?—Yes, I know Holt.

27,588. While you were at the Woods and Forests did you have any correspondence about Holt?—I have had a great deal at various times.

27,589. The people there think they are rather aggrieved by the action of the Crown?—Could you tell me in what respect?

27,590. Well, there is a certain amount of ground in the middle of the village or town which is now very untidy and dirty and waste, and the Crown refuses to part with it, or do anything with it, so far as I understand. I was wondering whether you could help me at all about it?—Is there any name for the ground?

27,591. It is a pool, I do not know that it has a name at all. There is a place called the Wall Garden which adjoins that?—I cannot call to my recollection the exact place. I have nothing before me to tell me, but my impression is that there was a difficulty in parting with it, because it was in the middle of the village and was used as the village green.

27,592. Excuse my laughing at the descriptive term "village green," that is just what it should be.

Professor Rhŷs.

I suppose it is green water now.

Lord Kenyon.

27,593. It is mostly water and the rest mud. The people complain that the Crown will not do anything to help them. They are very poor, and it is a very small place, and the Crown treats them in rather a dog-in-the-manger style; they will not help them and they will not part with it?—I do not know that there has been any application made about it.

27,594. I am sure there have been several applications, whether to sell or not, I do not quite know?—I do not remember anything for two or three years, at all events.

27,595. Shall I advise the people to keep on making applications?—I think it is very desirable that they should represent their grievances to the Office of Woods, and I am sure Mr. Howard, the present Commissioner, will look into it, and give them an answer.

Mr. Grove.

27,596. Could it be easily drained?

Lord Kenyon.

It wants a little money spent upon it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,597. Were you at the Woods and Forests Office in September 1893?—I left in October 1893.

27,598. Did you receive a deputation from the Colwyn Local Board?—Yes, I was present at that time.

27,599. We have had some evidence before us as to the action of the local board when we met at Conway on the 23rd of September?—Yes.

27,600. We were then informed that a deputation had waited on the Woods and Forests, in respect of the London and North-Western Railway Company's acquisition of some land?—Yes.

27,601. Can you tell us anything that has taken place with regard to that since?—Yes. The facts are that the railway company are lessees of the foreshore for about two miles, constituting Colwyn Bay, and have been so for many years. They took the lease to enable them to protect their railway, which is very close to the sea there, and to protect the foreshore from any acts being done there which would endanger their line; but they recently applied to purchase a strip along the whole extent, presumably to enable them to widen their line if they desired so to do. A portion of that Colwyn Bay is tolerably wild, and has not many residences abutting on it, but it does abut upon an important watering place — New Colwyn, I think it is called,—which is a place very much frequented in the summer, and a place of some importance. The Commissioner, the late Mr. Culley, thought it would not be right to do anything with the railway company without consulting the local board of this New Colwyn. He accordingly communicated with the local board and asked them what their views were on this proposal of the railway company. The local board held indignation meetings, and at last came up in a deputation to protest against any such grant to the railway company, and Mr. Culley said that they had better go to the railway company and endeavour to make arrangements with them which would be agreeable to them, and that in the meantime, for a certain time at all events, he would do nothing. I understand, that since I left the office the negotiations have practically come to an end; the local board do not seem to be able to come to a satisfactory arrangement with the railway company, and, therefore, the Office of Woods declined to proceed with the application of the railway company, at all events in so far as the portion of foreshore is concerned which is in front of this favourite watering-place of New Colwyn.

27,602. If the negotiations have come to an end I need not ask any more?—They are certainly suspended.

Mr. Grove.

27,603. Do you know of your own knowledge that the local board of Colwyn have spent 8,000*l.* in making a new approach down to the sea-shore?—I should not be surprised. I do not know as a fact as to the amount spent, but I have seen the approach, and I should not be surprised if it cost 8,000*l.*

Mr. Grove—continued.

See 27,

27,605. That guarantees the land from being sold under its value?—The Act of Parliament requires it, and it was no doubt put in with that object.

27,606. Supposing several people were in terested in the particular piece of land, one man may ask to have it sold to him, possibly the others would not know anything about it. Supposing a great landlord wants to acquire this, some other people may be concerned, and it may be a convenience to them. How is the interest of the others looked after?—Supposing it is waste land over which a great number of persons have rights of common, it is always sold subject to those rights.

27,607. No doubt, but suppose it the case of a foreshore?—In that case no conveyance by the Crown can destroy the public right, whatever that is. As to the rights of individuals I do not know that any individuals have any rights as individuals upon the Crown foreshore but the public have certain rights of approach, landing, embarking, bathing, and so on, and those cannot be taken away. No conveyance by the Commissioner of Woods can take these away, but as to individual rights I do not know that individuals have rights upon the foreshore as individuals.

27,608. I heard some time ago of a foreshore in the neighbourhood of a town being likely to be sold to a great landlord, but the townspeople did not know of it. That would be rather hard on that town. I was wondering whether the Crown in its transactions could guarantee against anything of that sort taking place?—I do not think it would be likely that the Commissioner of Woods would sell a foreshore in front of a town to private individuals without informing that town—I should think not—unless there were some special circumstances: that the individuals had some parliamentary right to erect works, or something of that sort.

Mr. Grove.

27,609. Go back to Colwyn Bay for a moment, please. Do we understand the position is that the London and North-Western Company can do nothing in that matter because your Office has not given its consent?—Yes.

27,610. Have you seen the evidence of the particular witness that we allude to, given at Conway?—No, I am afraid I have not.

27,611. Where he says there was a resolution expressing something of this sort, "That in the event of the Company acquiring the property, it would be fatal to the interests of the district." They put it very strongly indeed?—They did.

27,612. And at the present moment the position is blocked because you refuse consent?—Yes. What Mr. Culley told the local board was, "You had better go and settle this matter "with the railway company, and in the mean-"time I will do nothing."

27,613. Should we be right in assuming that nothing can be done to alter the present position without the consent of your Office?—Yes, certainly because the railway company have a lease, but I think they are prohibited from executing any works, because it was granted to them merely for protection purposes, and they pay a nominal rent, therefore they are not entitled to execute any works whatever.

27,614. And I think the local board there have a right over the part leased to the railway company, to get down to their boat-house?—They acquired that, I think, from the railway company.

27,615. A great deal of evidence has been given to us with regard to the foreshore at Swansea, and a dispute between the corporation and the Duke of Beaufort. Do you know anything of that. Did it come under your cognisance officially in any way?—I know nothing whatever of it.

27,616. And the disputes more or less; I will not say they are very much of disputes, but various negotiations at any rate at Cardiff have taken place between the corporation and the Marquis of Bute. Have those come under your official cognisance in any way?—Not any disputes. We have disposed of some foreshore in that neighbourhood for purposes connected with the port and harbour. Some of the foreshore there belongs to the Crown, or did belong to the Crown.

27,617. Have you any existing rights now at Swansea?—I am not aware of any.

27,618. But you still have at Cardiff?—I doubt whether there is much left, but it is now under the management of the Board of Trade. All the foreshores, except those which the Crown had already dealt with, were transferred to the management of the Board of Trade by the Crown Lands Act, 1866.

27,619. When you disposed of certain rights over the foreshore at Cardiff, to whom did you dispose of them?—There was one conveyance to the Baroness Windsor, I think that was outside—at Penarth. There was a very old one, and I really forget who it was to, but I think it was to trustees for one of the landowners there. That was many years ago. I think there was a small one, more recent, but I am afraid at the moment I cannot refer to it—it was only a small thing.

27,620. Assuming there were rights by the inhabitants, were they guarded in any way at that time?—No. I think not, because there were Acts of Parliament authorising works for the extension and the improvement of the docks and harbours which override all public rights.

27,621. You have explained that where a public Act of Parliament is obtained for improvement works, you generally give your consent?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,622. Have you any single instance that you can tell us where the Crown foreshore rights have been parted with to individuals?—Many.

27,623. To individuals?—Yes.

27,624. In recent years?—Yes. Where a man has property abutting on the shore; I mean property not in front of a town, or in a populous place—a man has a manor for instance running down to the shore—we have frequently sold the foreshore to the owner of the manor or the owner of the land to enable him to have the full control, and protect his frontage from depredations by persons taking the sand and letting the sea into his land. If the foreshore is not to be retained in the hands of the Crown as being the protectors of the whole country, it is better in the hands of the ex-adverso proprietor; he looks after it for his own protection.

27,625. One further point. Have you ever parted with the foreshore to any individual other than the owner of the adjacent soil?—I do not remember any case, except, as I say, where the individual or a company have acquired parliamentary powers to execute some work.

27,626. The case of a company, I can quite understand?—I cannot call to mind any other case.

Mr. Grove.

See 27,460.

27,628. You say that some part of that information has been published—the sales from the year 1784?—Yes.

27,629. Where could they be obtained?—From 1784 to 1831, the information is in Parliamentary paper 128 of 1831; from 1832 down to 1848 is in the report of what is called Lord Duncan's Committee. I am afraid I have not the reference to it, but it was a Committee of the House of Commons, of which Lord Duncan was the head in 1848–9. They are thick volumes, and they give schedules of every sort, sales and leases, and all the fee farm rents are set out.

27,631. Would you allow me now to ask you a question about Brecknock Forest? Do we gather that the Crown have parted entirely with their rights there?—Yes.

27,632. I suppose you are acquainted with the fact that the commoners recently, or some two years ago, promoted a Bill for securing, as they thought, to themselves certain rights, but I think the Bill was withdrawn?—Yes, Mr. Lloyd was kind enough to consult me about the Bill, and the Bill was withdrawn from some threatened opposition, but of course I know nothing about the opposition; I do not know the nature of it, the ground of it, or anything at all about it.

27,633. You perhaps did not follow at all the history of the Bill, to see what it was that the commoners were claiming?—I did read the Bill: Mr. Lloyd was good enough to consult us about it, and I think I pointed out to him that the Bill was defective, and I fancy would have had to be remodelled even if it had not been opposed.

27,634. Perhaps it is hardly right to ask you if you know whether there is any intention to proceed again on new lines?—No, I have no knowledge.

27,635. Because it is a matter which will come before us when we go into that county. Therefore we should like to have the opportunity of getting all the information we can?—No, I have no knowledge.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,636. The result of your evidence as regards what was left in the Crown of actual freehold, was very clear that there are only about 1,000 acres, roughly speaking, 900 acres?—Yes, that is freehold.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

27,637. The rest of your property is what may be called lordship rights?—Yes.

27,638. I want to ask with regard to the mountain pastures, which I suppose are the chief area in which the freehold is still left in your hands, apart from the 900 acres, how far, when grants have been made, they have included the land over which there was right to pasture, or whether the mountain pasture still remaining in your freehold has rights over it, belonging to the tenants or occupiers of those who have received grants?—I have not any very precise information on the subject, but my impression is that you would find cases of both sorts, cases in which Crown grantees have been granted only certain defined lands, which, being freeholds in the parish, are entitled to rights of common over the Crown waste, and also certain cases in which the Crown not only granted the ancient inclosed land, but also by what law I do not know—I am speaking of old days—granted some of the waste to be held with that land. That I think may indicate that at that early time that waste was probably occupied as some of the wastes now are, in the form of sheep walks; that is, that each person having a right of common, instead of sending his sheep over the whole common, sends them over that portion of the common which is most convenient and most accessible from his freehold land, and that gradually creates a right, and that is called a sheep walk. It does not give him the freehold of the sheep walk.

27,639. That being so, retaining the lordship over these lands, have you maintained in any way the manorial courts, or any other courts which would have jurisdiction over the commons?—In some cases the courts are held regularly, and in some they have fallen into abeyance. It is rather difficult to revive a court when it has been allowed to lapse for a great many years, but in a good many of our lordships, the courts are either held regularly annually or in some cases every two, three, or four years.

27,640. In those instances where the courts are still held do they consider they have jurisdiction over the commons—say the court baron or whatever it is?—They present encroachments and fine people, and it is from those presentments they are fined. Until we get a regular survey and valuation, we make the people pay nominal acknowledgment for these encroachments, which are presented.

27,643. Then that brings us to the point that we had brought before us on the Scotch evidence, that there has recently been an Act passed giving each village or each parish or each district the power to appoint a committee to arrange with regard to the use of the commons and the stint of the common, and I presume at the same time also in some way or other to protect the rights of individuals. Would you say that this was a crying want in Wales?—I never heard of its being anything like a general grievance, but what you suggest seems to be a very good way. Of course, with commoners, unless they unite, it is like the bundle of sticks, each commoner has not much power himself, and therefore it is desirable that there should be some means of uniting them so as to protect their own interests.

27,644. The breaking down of the manorial system has left the small commoners without the protection which, probably, they used to have in the old days, when the manorial courts were regularly held, and were a power?—Yes. I do not know that the manorial courts necessarily protected the commoner's rights, because the encroachments upon commons were presented as encroachments upon the rights of the lord rather than upon the rights of the commoners, and in, I should think, the great majority of cases the encroacher himself was a commoner.

27,645. Do you happen to know of any case on your mountain pastures, where the tenants put their flocks together under one shepherd, and have any arrangement of that kind?—No, I do not remember such a case.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,646. There is one question which I should like to ask with reference to the evidence of Mr. Darbishire. He made a statement to this effect, that the manorial rights of the Crown have been sold to Mr. Sudbury?—Could you say where Ffrith fawr is. I have not been able to find it.

27,647. It is near Penmachnawr?—Yes, but that is rather wide. I cannot find Ffrith fawr.

27,648. Mr. Darbishire is called at page 723, question 15,714. You will find the name Ffrith fawr in 15,718?—Yes, but I do not find it anywhere else; I do not find it on the Ordnance.

27,649. Is it possible that it would pass under some other name?—The only presumption I have been able to make is that it is a block of land to the east of Graig lwyd, but that is called Ffrith fach, I think, or some such name as that.

27,650. Possibly it is the same?—It may be the same.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,651. Ffrith fach, is it, or Ffrith fawr?—I have not been able to find Ffrith fawr. I suppose it is known by that name.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,652. At any rate this is the question which I wanted to ask: When the Crown has sold its manorial rights to a private individual, has that individual afterwards power to prevent encroachments?—Yes, the individual has the same power as the Crown has, precisely.

27,653. According to Mr. Darbishire's evidence, he makes out that he had not any power to prevent it?—Yes, so I understood him.

27,654. And he suggested that that power should be extended to some local authority to guard the rights of the public in a case of that kind?—Well, if I were the owner of a tract of common land which I had secured from the Crown or anybody else, I should be very happy if some local board would take care of it for me, and prevent people from encroaching on it. As to whether that would be right or not, I do not express any opinion.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,655. You told us just now that some of the tenants of the Woods and Forests had not paid their rents for a great many years—some over 60 years?—Yes, some of these old fee farm and collection rents. A great many have been lost on that account.

27,656. How do you account for that having been neglected?—Because of the great difficulty of identifying the premises in some cases, and in some cases of identifying the persons who are liable. After a lapse of years those difficulties increase so much that it is difficult to overcome them in some cases, and in some cases the Crown rentals themselves are to a certain extent defective, I have no doubt. I think reference has been made to one Parliamentary paper already, in which the spelling is all wrong—the names are entirely wrong—and that is one cause of the difficulty in recovering these rents.

27,657. Then the Woods and Forests sent round and made a fresh claim upon the different people, did they?—They make a claim every year until the thing is lost.

27,658. I mean upon some of these places where they had not paid for so many years?—Oh, where they know whom to apply to, they make a claim, but that is one of the difficulties they have to meet.

ee 5,714–48.

27,659. Did all those people that the claims were made to, pay?—Some may pay and some may not.

27,660. Were these people not ignorant of the fact that, after a period of 60 years had elapsed, they had any occasion to pay?—You are speaking of those who have not paid for 60 years or more.

27,661. But do you not think that they were unaware that they had to pay after 60 years had elapsed?—I think most of them know. I do not know that we have for many years collected a rent of more than 60 years in arrear.

27,662. But has not there been an attempt to collect rents by the Woods and Forests within this last 20 years—a fresh attempt upon many places where they had never paid any rent?—No, I do not think so.

27,663. Or within the last dozen years?—No. If you point to some particular instance I can perhaps bring it to mind.

27,664. I am referring to the county of Pembroke and to the bottom part of Carmarthenshire?—No. I do not remember it in either of those counties. I cannot call to mind any rent which has been in arrear 60 years, which has been re-demanded.

27,666. But I am inclined to think then that the claims were made for more than 60 years, and those who really had no occasion to pay have paid?—I do not know of a case. I cannot call to mind a case. I should be very happy, if you could point to one, to investigate it, and bring the facts out.

27,667. I will consider that afterwards. Some of these places were sold as well. Did the tenants have the first chance of purchasing these small places?—The encroachments?

27,668. Yes?—They are invariably sold to the persons in possession.

27,669. When these encroachments were made, they were generally made by the people building houses and inclosing some land?—Enclosing land at all events, and in some cases building houses, small cottages.

27,670. Do you not think that the Woods and Forests encouraged these people to encroach upon the land—that they were allowed to go and take a bit of ground and build upon it?—No, it can scarcely be called an encouragement to a man to make him pay for what he has done.

27,671 Yes, but they did not pay. I know of instances where they never paid—where they built a house in one night, and lived a twelvemonth in it, and inclosed a portion of ground, and paid no rent?—But those must be either very old cases, or cases in which we have not got a fresh survey and valuation. We cannot survey and value these every year; sometimes there is a lapse of 10 or 15 years between one survey and valuation and another, because it is an expensive business having these surveys and valuations. Either it must be a case within that period, or else it must be a very old case.

27,672. It is within a late period. You have some Crown lands in Pembrokeshire; in this list which you have handed in to us there is no mention of any?—I do not think there are any in Pembrokeshire.

27,673. You have some manorial lands?—I think not. There is no manor that I am aware of belonging to the Crown in Pembrokeshire. There used to be a manor of Fishguard, which was sold many years ago.

27,674. Then there are manors in different counties which are sold to other people, and the Crown have nothing whatever to do with them?—That is so.

27,675. You stated that some of these people did not pay their rent. Is there much rent in arrear now; or are you paid the rent regularly?—There are always rents in arrear. The arrears are small comparatively, but, as I explained to the Commission when speaking of the Nullum Tempus Acts, the operation of the last Nullum Tempus Amendment Act was to sweep away every rent which was more than 60 years in arrear.

27,676. Then you gave us a table of the advances in the rent after so many years in different periods. Was the mineral on those lands the cause of the increase in value, or was it the agricultural value of the land that increased?—The minerals principally; but then, as I explained, during that period between 1848 and 1850, landed property had been sold to the extent, I think I said, of 151,000*l.* I can give you the details of the revenue for the last year—1893. "Fee farm, quit and other unimprovable rents, 1,743; rents of land, &c., 3,928*l.*; rents of mines" (one-half of which is placed to capital), "7,793*l.*"

27,677. Then the Woods and Forests have nothing to do with all the copyhold property that we see in the country?—No; only within its own manors.

27,678. Is it possible to get a list of the foreshores that have been sold by the Woods and Forests?—It will be found in that paper which I handed in.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,679. I think, Mr. Sowray, I may conclude, from what you have told us, that in former years the Crown property in Wales was much neglected—not by your Department, but at any rate by the Surveyor-General?—I think at one period there was less attention paid to the land revenue in Wales than perhaps might have been paid. It was an obscure subject; a subject that required a good deal of investigation, and I think it was perhaps not looked after so well as it might have been, and that you will find an indication of in the statement I gave of the revenue at different periods. I think that it went down considerably in 1816, and about that time there were other things of more pressing importance which the Commissioners of Woods had in hand, and perhaps Wales was not so much troubled about. Then a receiver was appointed—Mr. John Wilkin—about 1820. He really worked up the Welsh revenue, and saved a good deal of it from loss.

27,680. Then, judging from your own knowledge of the past, as gathered from your experience in the Department, the more vigorous preservation of the Crown property in Wales would date from the receivership of Mr. Wilkin?—I think so.

27,681. But it is the fact, is it not, that there was a good deal of agitation in divers parts of Wales, in the thirties, for instance, in consequence of the action, I do not say of Mr. Wilkin, but of the Crown authorities?—I think there was, but I think it was a little later than 1830, I am not sure.

27,682. I said in the thirties?—Yes, I think so. Mr. Wilkin was complained of, I think, in the House of Commons, and Mr. Attwood, whose speech I think I have seen, made a speech in defence of Mr. Wilkin and in defence of the administration of the Crown property. I think that was in 1837, but I am not sure.

27,683. What was the nature of the complaint against Mr. Wilkin?—That he was raking up old claims, and generally irritating and annoying the subject.

27,684. And the complaint chiefly came, I suppose, from the gentry?—I think it did, but my recollection is not only the gentry, but the middle and the smaller proprietors were angry as well.

27,685. But from proprietors of land, not from squatters and cotters, and such people?—No, perhaps not so much from the squatters; I do not remember that so much, but I am quite sure that the complaints came from others than the large proprietors: that they were not the only complainants.

27,686. Do you think, comparing the extent of the Crown rights, say, in the time of the Stuarts, and the site of the Crown property in Wales at that time, that the Crown lost much by neglect?—I think there is no doubt the Crown has lost. I do not know that it lost much between the Conquest and Henry VIII., because, although the kings between those dates were extremely ready in making grants to their favourites, they were equally ready to resume them, and if you look at the forfeitures and resumptions and escheats made by one king of what his predecessor had granted, I do not think there was very much lost between those dates. But when it came to the Stuarts, the Stuarts granted, but there were fewer resumptions.

27,687. It appears, from some documents which were laid before us in Carnarvonshire, that there was a further agitation about 1848 in North Wales. Do you know anything about that?—No, I have no recollection about that. That was about the time of Lord Duncan's Committee, when the land revenues generally were inquired into; but I have no distinct recollection of any agitation at that time. There may have been, but it was before my time, and I may not have come across it.

27,688. You have put in a list of the sales and grants, and so forth, made during recent years. Is it the fact that very often these sales led to a considerable hardship in regard to the people living upon the manors that were sold, and some considerable disturbances, law suits, and so forth?—No, I am not aware that that is so.

27,689. Let me give you an instance. You will hardly remember this, but perhaps you are acquainted with the sale of Iscoed manor in the county of Radnorshire?—Yes.

27,690. That appears to have been surveyed and valued in 1822, and then it appears to have been sold about 1826, I think. The original conveyance is dated the 30th December 1826, and it is a certificate in form of the conveyance of this manor to James Watt for, I think, something over 1,000*l.* to 1,200*l.* Shortly afterwards, it appears from the return which I hold in my hand, which is a return ordered by the House of Commons to be printed in 1839, that a Mr. Guy Parsons writes to the then Prime Minister, Mr. Guy Parsons having been High Sheriff of the county of Radnor, I believe, and in his letter he calls attention to the consequence of this transaction between the Crown and Mr. Watt. He says: "The happiness, comfort, "and good conduct of hundreds of poor cot-"tagers and their families are involved in the "decision, and upon this ground alone I claim "your Lordship's attention." He goes on to point out the nature of the grievance. It appeared in substance that the purchaser from the Crown was exercising the manorial rights in a way very different to that in which the Crown had attempted to exercise them. That is what I understand the gist of the complaint to be. He says: "If the assumed rights of the lords "of the manors be allowed, it is impossible "to describe the extent of misery which must "inevitably follow to the families of that "numerous class of men, the mountain-lotters, "who are now, and for many years have been, "in quiet and peaceful possession of the little "sheltered houses they have by their own "labour secured from the waste lands." The upshot of the correspondence appears to be that the Crown leaves things as you have described, as they are, leaving the parties to the courts for redress of any grievance. Of course I am not now suggesting any points of law, but is it not the fact that the sale of these manors has led to difficulties such as are pointed out by Mr. Parsons?—I remember in the case of some of those manors in Radnorshire there was a difficulty raised when the purchaser claimed the right to the encroachments—I think not only to the encroachments within 20 years, but also to step into the shoes of the Crown and take the encroachments up to 60 years. I think there was some difficulty of that sort, but the whole question about the manors arose from this, that the Crown at that time granted the manor and all its appurtenances, and therefore granted the right of the Crown to the encroachments. There is no doubt that there was a defect in that. I am not here to blame my predecessors of those days, neither is it necessary, I suppose, that I should defend them; but I can only say that I have never in my time known an instance of a manor being granted, and whenever we grant waste we carefully exclude all the encroachments excepting those encroachments which are certified to be in the possession of the purchaser or of some tenant of his.

27,692. From Fordyce's reports no doubt that clearly appears, but surely that must be land that is, fairly speaking, likely to be reclaimable at a profit?—Yes.

27,693. How can any one, who knew of the 40,000 acres in Brecknockshire, have ever supposed that in 1816 or in 1819, for the matter of that, it would be worth anybody else's while to attempt to reclaim that—for agricultural purposes I mean?—I fancy some portion has been reclaimed, because I have heard of plantations in that neighbourhood, and I fancy there are plantations on some of that land, and if you go to some of the Merionethshire lands which have been inclosed, I think you will find that some of the allotments made to private individuals, which are in a favourable aspect, have been planted.

27,694. Yes, but in fact it is rather a historical question than a question upon which I think you would have any special knowledge, that on these 40,000 acres from the Great Forest of Brecknock several very important rivers for Breconshire and Glamorganshire spring down, do they not?—I believe they do.

27,695. What can you suggest to defend the Department for having shown some want of foresight, having regard to the disposition of the 40,000 acres, when they must have known that in time this water would become very valuable?—Supposing the water is of so much value, I presume it must be valuable for some large town or city which requires a water supply.

27,696. Quite so; in Radnorshire there is an instance at present of water being taken to Birmingham?—Yes, but I do not see that that water in the Forest of Brecknock is less accessible now under Parliamentary powers than it was when it was in the hands of the Crown. The Crown would require to be paid for it just as much as a private individual, and we have recently been paid by the Birmingham Corporation for certain mineral rights that they wanted to secure of ours in Cardiganshire.

27,697. Surely it is easier to deal with one proprietor than several if you are acquiring land?—It may be easier, but still it is possible to acquire it otherwise.

27,698. Would you agree with what was advanced by the promoters of the Brecknock Forest Bill of 1893, that this transaction of 1815–19 has inflicted serious permanent injury on the farming industry of Breconshire. I do not know whether they say it in the document which you have got there?—I would rather not go into the assertions in the preamble. I really do not know whether good or injury has been done, but as to the general idea of the Bill, supposing the commoners' allotment to be as it was when the inclosure took place, there seems to be no reason why there should not be some arrangement made for regulating it and protecting the interests of the commoners under it.

27,699. The Crown has the mines and minerals, I take it?—No, it has sold everything. It has no interest whatever left.

27,700. Do you recollect to whom the Crown sold the portion of the Forest of Brecknock that was assigned to it?—Yes, I have given that information. The greater part was sold to a Mr. John Stewart, a merchant. There were two conveyances.

27,701. Yes; I see we have got those. Coming for one moment to a matter again of rather historical interest than anything else, I find in the return of 1835 that J. A. Dawkins is mentioned as a steward, Sir Watkin Wynn is mentioned as a steward, and so on, at certain salaries which are very small. Had they any rights as stewards to the occupation of any portion of the Crown demesne?—No, not now.

27,702. Had they then?—I believe in old times there was some right of that sort.

27,703. Because I see that some complaint is made of improper exercise of authority by the stewards—their affecting to have greater powers than they perhaps legally had?—I think there is only one steward now who is appointed outside the Office (all the others are merely servants of the Office) and that is the steward of the lordship of Bromfield and Yale, and the salary attached to that Office is 10*l.* a year. That I think is the only stewardship.

27,704. Does he have any dwelling-house in addition?—No.

27,705. Nothing but that?—Nothing but the 10*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

27,706. May I ask whether that manor remains in your hands?—Yes, it is a very large manor.

Lord Kenyon.

27,707. Sir Robert Cunliffe is the steward, is he not?—Yes, Sir Robert Cunliffe. It is rather a lordship than a manor.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,708. I should like to call your attention to a sale that took place on the 28th August 1858 of "the Crown interest in the site of the Castle "and in several pieces or parcels of unenclosed "waste lands containing altogether about 30 "acres 3 roods situate in the parish and borough "of Criccieth, County Carnavon." That is the castle which I suppose one still sees?—Yes.

27,709. Did the Crown often part with historical monuments of that kind?—No, it was rather exceptional, and it was disposed of in consequence of the Commissioner of Woods hearing that the Castle was one which was rather dilapidated and wanted some money spent upon it, and the principal landowner came forward and I think gave the Office to understand that if they sold it to him, he would keep it up, and it was therefore sold to him with the waste land. That waste land is now I think a recreation ground. I was there last autumn and the Castle is very nicely kept.

27,710. I see the purchase money was only 175*l.*?—Well, to anyone who was not prepared to spend money, the Castle, at all events, was not worth much of course.

27,711. The conveyance was to the Trustees of the settled estates of William Ormsby Gore?—Yes.

27,712. Was there a covenant in the conveyance that the Castle was to be repaired and kept up?—I cannot say whether there was any covenant or not.

27,713. Can you recollect any other instance of that kind?—No, I think not. I think is the only one. Of course the castles have been granted away in former times—ancient times.

27,714. Is there any manor in Pembrokeshire?—No, I do not think there is any Crown manor.

27,715. It is not put in this list, but you say that this list, or return made to the House of Commons, was not a very trustworthy one. Mr. Griffiths suggests to me that Manor Bier for instance has a castle which is in private hands now too?—Yes.

27,716. And Pembroke Castle?—I think you will find there are some ancient grants.

Lord Kenyon.

27,717. Very likely, similar to Ludlow and other places?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

12,219. 27,718. Then there is another conveyance of 1858. I do not know whether you had anything to do with that. When did you go to the Office, Mr. Sowray?—I went there in 1852. It seems a very long time ago.

27,719. This is a conveyance to the Hon. Edward Gorden Douglas Pennant of "the Crown's interest in several parcels of uninclosed waste land, containing together about 6,129a. 0r. 3p., and in a piece of land inclosed from the waste containing about 6a. 0r. 27p. situate in the parish of Llanllechid, also in several chief rents or quit rents, amounting together to the sum of 6*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* per annum issuing out of lands, tenements, and hereditaments within the same parish—co. Carnarvon. What was the nature of the Crown's interest there?—The usual manorial right—the right to the soil and the freehold, subject to the rights of the commoners.

27,720. Are the minerals excepted in that?—The minerals were excepted.

27,721. Do you in the public interest approve of such a conveyance as that to a private person of uninclosed waste, subject to manorial sub-common rights?—Where a large land-owner owns nearly the whole of the common rights, or a large proportion of them, and his estates partially surround, if not entirely surround, the waste, I do not think it is an improper thing that he should have the freehold of those wastes, subject to the rights of the commoners, whoever may have rights besides his own tenants.

27,722. Then the real fact is this, that if the person who acquires the 6,000 acres is able to maintain lawsuits freely against the commoners and put the commoners to proof of their rights, his possession may be very advantageous, may it not?—If the commoners do not protect themselves.

27,723. Quite so, but then the Crown is more or less amenable to something more than public opinion; it is amenable to the opinion of the House of Commons, for instance; a private individual may not be?—Yes, but my recollection of that case is, that nearly the whole of the rights of the common belonged to Lord Penrhyn, and it was not thought objectionable that he should buy it.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,724. May we have the price in that instance?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1,739*l.* 10*s.* for 6,000 acres odd.

27,725. What are the usual terms that you make with persons anxious to quarry slate and other minerals?—I understood that the mining and quarrying was not one of the subjects you wished me to give evidence upon.

27,726. I am not going into it in detail at all. You reserve a royalty, I think?—We reserve a royalty, sometimes a tonnage royalty, sometimes a proportion.

27,727. For what length of term is the lease generally made out?—Formerly we could only grant for 31 years. That was the utmost limit, but under a recent Act, the Commissioners of Woods can now grant mineral leases for 63 years. It depends on the nature of the property as to what the length of the lease should be.

27,728. Can you give me any information about a property in Anglesea, with regard to which I think some evidence was given before the Commission, viz., Towyn Trewan?—Yes. See 18,560, 18,684.

27,729. Is it a fact that there was a conflict with the Bishop of Bangor as to the ownership of that?—Yes, and one portion was found to belong to the Bishop, and the other to the Crown. It was settled at last, I think, by arbitration.

27,730. Do you know whether it is a fact that after the arbitration, and the Commissioners had sold the surface-rights in the part allotted to them, or a portion of it, the assignee or grantee endeavoured to make the commoners pay for putting their sheep there?—I heard there was some dispute between the purchaser and the commoners, but I have no recollection as to what was done.

27,731. We have several instances. Is it not the fact that in most of the sales that have taken place, by the Commissioners, to private individuals in Wales, the result has been law-suits and difficulties?—No, I am not aware of that.

27,732. What I am informed is, I do not know, of course, whether it is accurate, but you can tell me, that a small portion was afterwards conceded by Captain Thomas to the commoners, or some arrangement. I suppose that some arrangement was made between Captain Thomas and the commoners. That was after a law suit. We have had some evidence about that. The costs came to about 2,000*l.* Have you heard of that before?—I cannot say I have, I may have heard of it before, but I know very little about it. The greater part of the common is sand.

Lord Kenyon.

27,733. I have several questions handed in, with which I shall have to trouble you, Mr. Sowray. First of all, these are some questions by Mr. Vincent: "To go back to the annexation—do "not some authorities hold that the 'free "tenants' were treated with distinct favour "while the lands of the taeogs passed to the "Crown, and then were for the most part sold "to private owners"?—I think I commenced my evidence by expressing my ignorance of the ancient tenures. I really am scarcely prepared to answer that question.

27,734. "Do not the lists of Sheriffs and "Members of Parliament given in Mona Antiqua "tend to show that the Welsh tenants were not "dispossessed." There is a list in a book produced?—I have seen the book. I have no doubt a great many of the Welsh persons were either granted or allowed to retain possession of what they were found in possession of, on the conquest of Wales. What they paid, or what the arrangement was, I do not know, but it is unreasonable to suppose that the English King should turn all the Welsh out of Wales.

27,735. You think it does go to show that the tenants were not dispossessed?—Oh, decidedly.

27,736. "Does your general knowledge enable "you to say that the opposite course was "pursued in Ireland, and that there the native "chiefs were dispossessed?"—I am afraid I am not prepared to go across the channel to Ireland.

27,737. "Referring to the evidence of Mr. T. "Prichard, of Llwydiarth Esgob (19,367), can

"you tell us whether the Woods and Forests "compelled the people of Gwalchmai to buy the "chapel, which they had themselves built? "Was not this considered a hardship?" Mr. Prichard said they had built a chapel, and when this was inclosed they had to pay 23*l.* to the Crown?—There was a chapel on Gwalchmai Common, and this chapel was an encroachment upon the common, and was dealt with as other encroachments. It was a chapel, house, and garden; whether that means that the minister had a house and a garden attached to the chapel I do not know, but there was a chapel, house, and garden according to the survey. It was encroached in 1822, and it was sold to trustees for the chapel in 1870.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,738. Was this encroachment the usual three acres odd?—I have not the measurement. I think it was smaller than that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,739. Can you tell us the amount for which it was sold?—I am afraid I have not the exact amount, but I think it would be about 23*l.* I think I remember looking at the valuation, and I think that was the figure; I am not sure.

Lord Kenyon.

27,740. Was it considered a hardship?—I have no recollection.

27,741. They did not complain to you?—I cannot say, I do not remember. I have no recollection of any complaint.

27,742. "Have there not been numerous "complaints of harsh treatment of squatters by "the department? I refer particularly to the "common of Towyn Trewan in Anglesey?"—That was the common we have just been speaking of. See 1

27,743. Yes, which Mr. Brynmor Jones referred to just now?—Before the common was sold there were only two or three wretched little hovels on the common, and we had some trouble with those people, because they were so poor that they could not pay anything, and I do not know that they ever did pay anything; but at the time the common was sold, the encroachments on Towyn Trewan were very small and not worth speaking of.

27,744. Is your answer to that that there were not numerous complaints then?—Well, I think, I might safely say so.

27,745. "Where, for example, the tenant of "Cerrig Llewelyn squatted accidentally to the "extent of building the corner of a cow-house on "to the common, did not the department try to "obtain a rent out of him, the owner?"—I think I remember a cow-house at the corner; and, of course, the encroacher was asked to pay as all other encroachers are.

27,746. Did he pay?—I really forget. We had some trouble with him I know.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,747. Mention was made in your answers to Mr. Brynmor Jones of the Manor of Bromfield and Yale. I think that was the manor in which, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, the copyholders had given them leases from 40 to 50 years?—I think I have seen a reference to it.

27,748. Do you think that arrangement is now going on—that that custom still exists?—The question has never been raised in my time.

27,749. You are not aware whether there are copyholders still existing?—We have never supposed there are any copyholders there.

Lord Kenyon.

27,750. With regard to asking for these rents which have not been demanded for a great number of years, would not the complaints be from those people who thought they had become proprietors?—No doubt.

27,751. And those for the most part were the smaller people?—No; far from it.

27,752. But would the larger proprietors become possessed?—The larger proprietors have the same right to take advantage of time as the smaller ones.

Mr. yd's lence, h Day.

27,753. There are a number of questions put by Mr. John Lloyd: "Did not the commoners of "the Great Forest of Brecknock surrender to "the Crown their commonable rights over the "13,760 acres allotted to the Crown?"—They did not surrender their rights; they were taken away from them by the Act. The Act abolished the rights of common over the Crown allotments.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,754. Which Act was that?—That was the second Act.

Lord Kenyon.

27,755. "Did not, as part of the bargain, the "rights of the Crown cease over the remainder, "except as expressly reserved by section 17 of "58 George III. cap. 99; and whether the only "express reservation was the reservation of the "mines and minerals?"—There was the reservation of section 18.

27,756. What is the reservation in section 18?—"Saving to the Crown, and to all other persons "all such estate, right, title, interest, claim, and "demand whatsoever (other than and except "such as is and are hereby expressed, meant, "and intended to be barred, destroyed, or "extinguished) as they, every or any of them, "had or enjoyed in, to or out of the said forest "and open commonable land and grounds."

27,757. "What is the meaning of the paragraph in the report of the Commissioners of "Woods, 1823, which says: 'In compensation "for all the rights of the Crown over that "barren and extensive waste.'" Can you "explain that paragraph?—I am afraid I am hardly in a position to explain a paragraph in the report of the Commissioners, who made their report before I was born. I cannot say what that meant.

27,758. "What was the cost of the enclosure scheme"?—I have no information I am sorry to say. The expenses were to be paid by the sale of land, I think, so that the Crown knew nothing about it. I do not know how much they sold.

27,759. "And who paid the cost?"—It was paid for by the sales. The Commissioners sold, and took the money, and paid themselves out of it.

27,760. "What has been the result on the "agriculture of the district?"—I do not know that district at all, excepting I have heard there are some plantations there.

27,761. "Whether it has come to the know-"ledge of the Crown, that frequent lawsuits have "resulted from the unsatisfactory condition in "which matters were left under the enclosure "scheme?"—Is that relating to Brecknock.

27,762. Yes, I suppose to the same common?—All that I have heard has been recently, in consequence of the movement by some gentlemen on behalf of the commoners, to get this common regulated in some way. That is all I have heard about it.

27,763. You do not know of any lawsuits about it?—No.

27,764. "Has the Crown Office copies of surveyor's reports on the value of the properties sold to Stewart, Christie, and others?—I think, if I remember rightly, they were sold by tender, and in that case there would probably not be surveys.

27,765. You do not know of any?—No.

27,766. "Whether it was not usual to have "surveyors' reports as to value previous to "sales?"—I do not know at that time whether it was usual.

27,767. Then there are some more questions from Mr. John Lloyd as to Crown manors in Breconshire. Are there any other Crown manors in Breconshire?—I see there are none in this list?—Not that I am aware of.

27,768. The first question is as to Brecknock Castle, the number of parishes in which situate?—I know nothing about that lordship, I fancy, it has not been in the hands of the Crown for generations.

37,769. Can you answer the third question; "When and to whom disposed of?"—I thought I had reference to some very old grant. I know there is a reference to a grant, somewhere in that neighbourhood, before the conquest of Wales.

27,770. Do you know anything of Little Forest manor?—No.

27,771. You do not know how that was disposed of?—No, I do not know.

27,772. Do you know anything of the Manor of Troscoed?—No, that is in Brecknockshire. We may have fee-farm rents issuing out of grants in these places, but without the fee-farm rentals I could not tell.

27,773. And the Manor of Haya Wallensis?—I am sorry I did not bring those old books containing the old conveyances. Haya Wallensis is one of the manors sold. I do not like to rest on memory, but I think it was sold between 1820 and 1830.

27,774. Do you know whether the Crown had any other manors in Brecknockshire?—No, I do not.

27,775. There is a query as to the Manor of Mara Mota?—I never heard of it.

27,776. Garth?—No.

27,777. Palley?—No.

27,778. Dinas Castle?—No.

27,779. Builth Castle?—No, that was, I think, also a grant before the conquest of Wales.

27,780. Would you be good enough to answer this question: "What were the manors granted by the Stuarts in Breconshire?"—That would take a long time, and you would have to go through every grant and pick out the premises. Anyone can do that by going to the Record Office.

27,781. There are some questions put in by Mr. Owen S. Wynne: "Do you consider the way "in which the Office have latterly been demanding from landowners in North Wales, Crown "rents many years, 50 and more, in arrear, and "which have been allowed to fall in arrear "owing to the neglect of the collectors, tends "to make the administration of the Woods and "Forests property in Wales popular"?—I do not suppose it makes it very popular with those who are called upon to pay.

See 27,797.

27,782. May I ask a question upon that? Has your department had any difficulty within these last few years in collecting rents from landowners or compelling landowners to perform their obligations?—Yes, great difficulty.

27,783. Can you give me an instance?—I do not like to go into particular names.

27,784. We have gone into particular cases in Wales in regard to other matters. I leave it entirely to you, Mr. Sowray. Mr. Stafford Howard is here, I see?—Well, I think if any case is given, it is only just and fair that the case of the largest landowner in Wales should be that taken; therefore, I would mention the name of Sir Watkin Wynn. We have had very great difficulty with Sir Watkin Wynn for some time, with these ancient fee farm rents, and they have been in arrear, a good many of the rents which were usually paid by him and his predecessors, for a good many years. It was in 1884 that the case was specially taken up with the view to induce Sir Watkin Wynn to settle for these rents, and to purchase them and wipe them off the list altogether. Negotiations were entered into with Sir Watkin Wynn's agent, and at last, it came to an offer; a list was prepared of those rents which had been paid by his predecessors, and as to which he could not state that he had disposed of the properties. The list was made and the offer was made to accept one half the amount of the arrears as a compromise of the whole. That offer, as we understood, was accepted; at all events, whether there was a misunderstanding or not, I cannot say, but it was not acted upon, and, being unable to get any settlement, the Commissioner of Woods had to cause investigations to be made into these rents, to see in what cases Sir Watkin could be compelled to pay the full arrears. The difficulty, of course, was that these rents having been paid for generations by the same family all necessity for investigation and inquiry had been for a time suspended; therefore, any changes of name or any changes in the divisior of the property in any way, would be unknown to the Office of Woods, the rents having been regularly claimed from the same family and paid by the same family. But when the Crown was suddenly put to the strict proof, it became necessary to be very cautious, because the Crown Receiver, I think, in one case did distrain for one of these rents and a replevin was immediately put in. It was necessary to be very cautious and as soon as some of the larger fee farm rents were clearly identified, (it was a work of considerable labour,) application was made and an intimation given to the agents, that unless a settlement was made it would be necessary to enforce payment. No satisfactory answer could be got, and at last Mr. Culley, who was then the Commissioner of Woods, thought it necessary to write to Sir Watkin Wynn himself, and probably the position of the whole case would be best understood, if I read to the Commission the letter which Mr. Culley addressed to him. It was written on the 11th November 1885.

"Office of Woods,
Sir, 11th November 1885.

I regret having to trouble you about a matter which I had hoped to be able to settle with your agents in the ordinary course of business.

You are perhaps aware that a considerable part of your property (like that of other landowners in Wales) is held subject to the payment to the Crown of certain rents, which are in the nature either of ancient customary chief or quit rents, or of rents which were reserved in fee farm grants made by the Crown in former times.

Some of these rents have been from time to time redeemed by your predecessors, while the remainder were annually paid until the year 1861.

In the year 1861, however, your local solicitors, Messrs. Lougueville, Williams, and Jones, objected to continue the payment of a large number of these rents until proof of liability was given and as, after the payment for generations by your predecessors in title, this evidence had to some extent been lost sight of, a good many of the rents have since remained unpaid, while others for which Messrs. Longueville, Jones, and Williams did not appear to be able to deny your liability, were only paid by them last year, after they had been informed that the arrears would otherwise be recovered by distress.

I enclose a copy of the correspondence, which I have had with them for your information, and I may remark upon it that if the claim of the Crown had been an entirely new one, or one which had not been acquiesced in by your predecessors, I should be disposed to concur in their method of dealing with it, but under the actual circumstances it seems to me that the method is scarcely consistent with their position, as representing one of the largest landowners in Wales. . . . . .

You will perceive on reference to the correspondence, that I have intimated to Messrs. Longueville, Jones, and Williams my intention of recovering the arrears of the rent, which has been selected as a test case by levying on a tenement in the manor out of which the rent issues. I feel, however, that I must expect that your agents will take advantage of every legal and technical objection for the purpose of defeating the Crown's claim, and on reconsideration it has occurred to me, that if I levy on a tenement in the manor, they may raise a question, whether such tenement is parcel of the manor, and as the manor has been out of the Crown's possession for more than 200 years, an expensive search among the records would be necessary to overcome this objection, and I have therefore reluctantly come to the conclusion, that in the interest of the Crown, (which it is my duty to protect) the safer course will be to levy the arrears by distress at Wynnstay.

It is in consequence of this determination that I trouble you with this communication, as I should not think of adopting such a course, without giving you timely notice, and affording you every reasonable opportunity of making inquiries on the subject.

I propose therefore to postpone taking the action I have indicated for three weeks from this date.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"The particulars of the rent, and of the amount due are as follows:—

Crown rental for County of Merioneth.

No. 40 Vill Lordship and Manor of Pennanllewe otherwise Pennallewe (Pennantlliw).

Annual rent	4	16	0
Deduct land tax		18	0
Nett	3	18	0
Number of years in arrear on 10th Oct. 1885		24

It is needless to say that shortly after, the arrears were paid. But a similar course had to be taken with every rent, and I believe I am correct in saying that the investigations have extended over a long period, and that even now, we are unable to ascertain, with sufficient precision, the exact particulars of some of the rents to enable us to enforce payment, and they are still unpaid. That is an instance of the difficulty. It is only one instance of the difficulty, which the Crown experiences in getting in these ancient rents.

27,785. You would not say it was owing to the neglect of the collectors?—The collectors have this difficulty, that of course they have not much information beyond what is given to them on the rentals, and if they want further information, they may get some information locally; but in most of these cases it renders necessary reference to the Records.

27,786. I gather from what you said in that particular case, that the rent had been demanded from year to year in the usual way?—I believe it had until the refusal to pay was reported by the Receiver.

27,787. Now Mr. Owen Wynne's next question in this: "Did not the Office of Woods request, "the late Sir Watkin, as steward of Bromfield "and Yale, to collect from the inhabitants of "Holt, a quantity of these chief rents supposed "to be many years in arrear, and which neither "Sir Watkin nor the inhabitants had ever "heard of"?—That I am afraid is a very long story. What is called the Holt rent is a cumulo rent, and the Corporation of Holt was liable to the Crown for the cumulo rent. They had been in the habit, when they had collected it, of collecting it by a sort of assessment, at all events collecting it from the inhabitants of the borough, and paying the gross sum over to the Crown, which it was their duty to do, under the grant or charter under which they exercised their powers. Unfortunately the Corporation of Holt disappeared, and the Crown then had to step in their place, and make this detailed collection, and it was in its endeavours to perform that duty, that, no doubt, the irritation referred to in that question arose.

27,788. "And did not the Office intimate to Sir Watkin, that unless he carried out the most unpopular demand, the salary of 20*l.* a year would be stopped"?—I think there was something of that sort.

27,789. "I think I am right in saying that the present Sir Watkin is not now the steward of the Crown manor of Bromfield and Yale, but that when the late Sir Watkin died in 1885. Sir Robert Cunliffe was appointed by the Liberal Government then in office"?—Yes.

27,790. "May I ask if the Crown are now receiving any considerable sum from royalties on gold, worked in the county of Merioneth, by Mr. Pritchard Morgan and others"?

See 28,124–243.

27,791. Before that question is answered, I may mention that Mr. Pritchard Morgan has been good enough to send to me, this afternoon, several questions in reference to gold mines in Wales, and I think in relation to his own mines?—I think I should be acting in accordance with the wishes of the Commissioner of Woods if I asked the chairman to withdraw those questions, on my saying that the whole of Mr. Pritchard Morgan's case was carefully examined and gone into before the Royal Commission on Mining Royalties, who gave their opinions fully after inquiring into it, and very fully stating their opinions respecting Mr. Pritchard Morgan's case. I would only refer you to the final report of the Commission on Mining Royalties, Parliamentary paper C 6980—1893, and to the third report, where the evidence is, upon which they founded their report.

Lord Kenyon.

27,792. That question is withdrawn then. "Do you know if there has not been great dissatisfaction on the part of the adventurers and landowners by the way in which the royalties are assessed and the takenotes and leases granted"?—Mr. Pritchard Morgan complains.

27,793. He is at the bottom of it?—Probably.

27,794. "Is acquittance still charged on Crown rents"?—Yes, in some cases.

27,795. "Do you consider it a legal charge"?—Yes, it is authorised by the 33 Henry VIII. chapter 39, and I think reserved in subsequent Acts.

27,796. "Is it not a fact that at about the period named by Mr. Brynmor Jones, there were great and numerous complaints from cotters and squatters in the neighbourhood of Cefn in the county of Denbigh, at the action of the Woods and Forests, and was not a pamphlet published setting forth their grievances"?—I am afraid I have no recollection on the subject. I think nearly the whole of Cefn is enclosed. I do not think there is any common excepting road-side waste. They have divided it amongst themselves, and the Crown allowed them to purchase on the usual terms.

Lord Kenyon.

We are very much obliged to you for giving us such valuable evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen Slaney Wynne recalled.

Lord Kenyon.

27,797. You were agent for the late Sir Watkin Wynn, and I believe you wish to give some evidence upon what we have just heard?—Yes, my Lord. I was agent at the time that Mr. Russell Sowray referred to in 1884, which was the year before the late Sir Watkin died. I do not quite remember the year in which these demands were made, but I perfectly well remember the demands being made, and so far as I remember they referred to a quantity of chief rents or Crown rents, which we had no knowledge of whatever. We knew nothing about them. Sir Watkin did pay certain chief rents and Crown rents, large ones, and they are still paid regularly. This is a demand which came suddenly one morning; I think I opened the letter, for a large amount of chief rents which we had never heard of before, and which I believe had never been demanded during the lifetime of that Sir Watkin. As Mr. Sowray says, we refused to pay. I thought of all other persons Sir Watkin was the person best able to fight the battle with the Crown, because if he could not, I was sure the smaller people could not. I know as a fact for a great number of years from landowners in Wales, small and large, the Crown has now and then come down suddenly with a demand for these large arrears of Crown rents which had not been collected through the neglect of their own collectors for 58 years, anything under 60 years. They demanded money from my father at Peniarth for a good many years, and he refused to pay in the same way, until he was quite certain that the demand was right, and they could identify the place out of which the Crown rent issued. We refused to pay on the same line on Sir Watkins behalf. If they could identify the place we were willing to pay, but they were and I daresay are still, making these demands on landowners in Wales, as I say, small and large. You open your letters in the morning and suddenly find a demand for 40*l.* or 50*l.* for arrears of Crown rent, which were never heard of before. I think it is most unfair that they should be collected in that way. I think Mr. Sowray said incidentally he believed the demand had been made annually. I can only say for certain it had not been made annually; neither myself nor Sir Watkin's solicitors, Messrs. Longueville, Williams, and Jones, who were his solicitors for a great number of years, knew anything of them in any way. As I have said before, if a man in Sir Watkin's position cannot fight with them, how can the small landowners in Wales fight with them. I know for a fact all over Wales, especially in Merionethshire, these demands are occasionally made. I think if the Woods and Forests collected these things regularly and demanded them regularly, there would not be the slightest demur about paying them; but when meeting with a demand like this, which you never heard of before, it is only natural you should demur and refuse payment, until you have absolute certainty that the premises can be identified.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,798. You, I understand, think that it is a great grievance for a landlord to demand the rent? —No, I think he should demand the rent, that he is quite sure, is due. I do not say it is a grievance to demand his rent if he is quite sure that that rent is due.

27,799. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests were sure?—No; even Mr. Russell Sowray says himself they are very uncertain about a great many of these.

27,800. Not uncertain as to the amount, but uncertain as to the particular item that came from the particular manor or lordship, which is a very different thing?—They could not identify the premises anyhow.

27,801. The reason given in the case seems to me to be very fair, namely, that one family owning a very considerable tract of territory in Wales were in the habit of paying a lump sum? —That we did not know anything about.

27,802. If you had looked back at the old rent rolls you could have seen?—We could not find any trace of it whatever, or else we should have paid.

Lord Kenyon.

27,803. Was the rent that you paid after diminished?—I do not know; indeed I do not think they were paid until after I gave up the agency; I am not quite sure about that. Whether they were paid in the lifetime of that Sir Watkin or the lifetime of the present Sir Watkin, I do not know, but I know we could not identify them, and could not make anything of them.

27,804. Was the same amount paid each year as long as you remember?—The same amount was paid each year so long as I remember, of those we knew were right, and it is still paid quite regularly.

27,805. This was an increased demand over and above what they had paid before?—Yes, a large demand, and a lot of things we knew nothing about whatever.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,806. It seems extraordinary. There must have been some kind of chief rent or quit rent in the account of the estate?—We could not find anything whatever about it, or we should have paid it, and it was exactly the same with my father's property at Peniarth. My father was a great antiquarian, and he was very well up in these sort of things, and he could find no trace of them, but they came down upon him for a large amount of these chief rents, and I think after some long correspondence he eventually paid them, merely to get rid of the nuisance. He could not make them out at all however, and I am sure, if there was anyone in Wales who could identify such things, or trace them, it was my father.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,807. I presume they would be independently very small rents, many of them under 1*l.*?—Very small rents, but a great many years in arrear, or supposed to be a great many years in arrear.

27,808. It would make them a reasonable sum to collect over a considerable estate every year?—Yes.

27,809. If they were only 5*s.* 6*d.* or 3*s.* 4*d.* for instance, the expense of collection would be too great?—Yes. They were small things, which got a good many years in arrears.

Lord Kenyon.

27,810. You say from the fault of the collectors?—Yes, 4*d.* and 5*d.*, I could find many landowners who have the same grievance against the Woods and Forests, they have come down on them suddenly for the chief rents, which they could not trace, and then said "You must pay."

Mr. Grove.

27,811. During the whole time of your agency you never saw a demand?—Never heard of it before. I am quite sure that the late Sir Watkin was not a man to resist any proper payment, but I thought it was his duty to inquire into those things before he paid them. That is all I wish to say, and I wish to make that explanation on his behalf and also on my own behalf.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. Russell Sowray recalled.

Lord Kenyon.

27,812. What is it you wish to state?—I think there are one or two points in Mr. Wynne's evidence that I should like to remark upon. He said first of all, that Sir Watkin Wynn's agents knew nothing about these rents, that they were all of a very small character, and that they had never been demanded before. I think Mr. Wynne has forgotten the facts of the case. These rents ceased to be paid and fell into arrear (I do not say it was in Mr. Wynne's time, because it may have been before Mr. Wynne's time) simply because Sir Watkin's agent refused to pay them.

27,813. But the point is, was the demand made?—The demand was certainly made.

27,814. When?—At the proper time.

27,815. Each year?—I will not say each year, because the Receiver reported the arrears to the Office and said he could do nothing more with them: whether he, after that, made the demand or not, I will not positively say, but up to that time he certainly made the demand annually.

Lord Kenyon.

27,816. What I want to get at is, when were these demands begun to be made, because there seems to have been some reason for not obtaining them?—This rent, as you see, was four years in arrear on the 10th October, 1865. Therefore it was in 1861 that the arrears which Mr. Wynne seems to intimate began, and I think it must be a mistake, that this was the first time they had ever heard of these rents. We can prove, by our rentals, that for generations before 1861, the Watkin Wynn family paid those rents.

27,817. This was therefore no new demand in 1861?—No new demand.

27,818. It was not an increased demand in 1861?—It was the demand which had been acquiesced in, for more than the years of prescription.

Mr. Grove.

27,819. Was it the same amount each year?—The same amount. Then as to their being very small, this rent which was the subject of the letter which I read to the Commission, shows that they were not all small. This is a rent of 4*l.* 16*s.* There were other rents, I think of, nearly the same amount. I can give them, but this rent is not one of small amount, and when Mr. Wynne says, that they never heard of the places out of which these rents issued, I think he must also have forgotten. How can it be possible that Sir Watkin Wynn or his agents should be ignorant of the fact that they are possessors of a lordship or manor of Pennantlliw, or that the Crown should have to show them that they own a considerable area of country, known as the manor of Pennantlliw? I cannot suppose that Sir Watkin Wynn's agent did not know that he had a manor of Pennantlliw and did not know where it was; but they said "We will not pay you until you "show us where it is," and we had to show them. We did show them, and recovered the rent.

Lord Kenyon.

27,820. Could you tell me, whether Sir Watkin paid the same amounts of chief rents in 1861 as he did in 1860?—You mean the aggregate?

27,821. Yes, the aggregate?—No, because he may have sold properties and he may have bought properties. I would not say that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,822. When that takes place is there an apportionment of the fee-farm rent?—The apportionment of the fee-farm rent is a matter which can only take place in a formal manner. When a property is divided, upon which one rent is payable, each part of that property is liable to the whole rent; but if the owners wish to apportion, there is a clause in the Land Revenue Acts, and there is also a clause in the general Inclosure Act, which enables them to apply to the Crown to agree to an apportionment.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 28,23

Mr. Owen Slaney Wynne recalled.

Lord Kenyon.

27,823. Have you anything further to say with reference to this?—I wish to say with regard to the Manor of Pennantlliw, that perhaps I did not make myself understood. Mr. Sowray says that neither I nor Sir Watkin could be unaware of those rents, but I say I was totally unaware, and what I said was, that they had not been demanded before during my agency, nor I believe during Sir Watkin's lifetime. As regards the manor of Pennantlliw, I know perfectly well where it is, but we were not aware that there was any demand for Crown rent, and no demand for Crown rent had been made before, I believe, on that manor.

Mr. Grove.

27,824. How long were you agent, Mr. Wynne?—I was there nearly 20 years altogether; over 16 as agent and 3 as auditor.

Lord Kenyon.

27,825. I have no doubt, it will be all threshed out, when Sir Watkin's agents come before the Commission?—Probably.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY.

6, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, Friday, 26th January 1894.

Present:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (Chairman).

Lord Kenyon.
Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Professor Rhŷs, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederick Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. Morris, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir Courtenay Boyle, K.C.B., called and examined.

Chairman.

27,826. Are you Permanent Secretary to the Board of Trade?—Yes, my Lord.

27,827. Can you give us any information as regards recent legislation for Wales on the subject of railway rates, so far as they apply to agricultural produce?—Yes, my Lord. I should like to explain to the Commission, in answer to that question, what it is that the Legislature has done, and what it is that the Legislature has not done. After the passing of the Act of 1888, it was decided by Parliament that there should be submitted to Parliament, through the Board of Trade, revised schedules of railway rates, and revised classifications applicable to all the railways in the United Kingdom. But the rates thus revised were the maximum rates; that is to say, that the powers of the railway companies to charge were to be reviewed and revised, first by the Board of Trade, and afterwards by Parliament. Now there is a considerable difference between a maximum rate and an actual rate. A revision of maximum powers of the railway companies or maximum rates does not necessarily (although it may do so) affect actual rates. In order to exemplify that I should like to point out that the old maximum powers in the various Acts of Parliament governing agricultural produce were far higher, as a rule, than any rates which were actually charged. It is impossible to speak with absolute detailed accuracy, because the number of Acts of Parliament is very large, and the diversity of rates is very great, but, speaking generally, the old maximum powers for grain and flour, which is probably the principal agricultural produce, was either 2½*d.* or 3*d.* We have dealt with 43 railway companies in Wales. In 37 of those the maximum power of charge for grain, which is in Class C. of the classification, has been fixed not at 2*d.*, 3*d.*, or 4*d.*, but at 1·80*d.* for the first 20 miles, 1·50*d.* for the next 30 miles, 1·20*d.* for the next 50 miles, and 0·70*d.* for the remainder of the distance. So that undoubtedly Parliament did materially reduce, very largely reduce, so far as grain is concerned, the charging powers of the company. There are a few other railway companies where the maximum powers are somewhat different, but they chiefly relate to the narrow gauge railways. For instance, Festiniog, Glyn Valley, and the Gorsedda Junction and Portmadoc Railways, which are entirely exceptional in their character, and are entirely removed from the general circumstances of the other railways.

Chairman—continued.

Then as regards hay and straw, provender and vegetables, I have before me a table, which I shall be glad to put in if desired, of the maximum powers conferred by Parliament, but the whole is extensively set out in the analysis of the Provisional Orders which was laid before Parliament last year. Blue Book, C.—6832. There is a perfect analysis of the whole maximum powers conferred to be found there.

That is a general statement of what Parliament has done. I shall be glad to answer any question which your Lordship would like to put.

Lord Kenyon.

27,829. How do you account for the general outcry against the railway companies at the present time?—I think it is this: A certain amount of raising of rates has been adopted by the railway companies in order to recoup themselves for the compulsory losses to which I have just referred.

27,830. The exceptions that have been referred to?—No; certain rates have been reduced and they have raised others. I should like to hand in to the Commission a small typical diagram which shows it exactly. That table shows certain rates in existence, and the red line shows the decision of Parliament as to where the maximum powers should be. Your Lordship will observe several dots and crosses both above and below the line. Those above the line were compulsorily reduced. Power was left to the railway companies to raise up to the line those dots and crosses which were below it. Of that power they have availed themselves to a certain extent, hence the irritation referred to by Lord Kenyon.

27,831. Am I right in saying that in many cases they have reverted to the old rates?—In many cases the railway companies, in consequence of the outcry which has been raised, have abandoned their position of raising the rates and have gone back to the old rates, but it is impossible to say they have done that in every case.

27,832. Of course it is; therefore I do not quite see that it has been very successful?—Well, it depends what the object of Parliament was. Nowhere was it laid down that the object of Parliament in undertaking this legislation was to reduce the rates, and no instructions were ever given to the Board of Trade or to the committee that the object of the law was to reduce the rates from what they were in 1892; nor indeed, has the select committee, under the presidency of Mr. Shaw Lefevre, recommended that any action should be taken with reference to the rates which were in force in 1892. A great deal has been done; the recent legislation has been most useful because it has codified something like 1,200 Acts of Parliament into 35. I think there are 400 Acts in one company alone. The whole conditions of railway traffic have been simplified, codified, and made clear to anyone, whereas they were so complicated before that it required a very clever lawyer to ascertain what were the circumstances.

27,833. Do you think that anything can be done to meet the difficulty which presents itself in this way; for instance, beasts landed in Liverpool can be landed cheaper in London than the ordinary agricultural produce can. Of course, it is cheaper for the railway company to land a whole cargo straight from a ship, and pack them off in the train, and send them to London, than to take them up truck-load by truck-load?—That must be so. The courts have always held, that a railway company were justified in granting a lower rate, where traffic was consigned to them in regular volume, and in a largely increased bulk, that is to say, the justification for the difference of the charge is that the consignments came; take it in animals in truck-loads, or take it in corn in consignments of 10 tons and upwards, as compared with individual heads of cattle, or hundredweights, or single tons of grain. Where traffic comes in great volume and with great regularity, the railway companies can deal with that traffic at a lower rate than they can if it comes in uncertain volume and small quantities.

27,834. You do not see any chance of improving the condition of the agricultural farmer in that respect?—I should like to refer to an observation made by Lord Herschell, the present Lord Chancellor, in a judgment in the Court of Appeal, which relates to the point raised by your Lordship, where a low rate is charged from a port inwards in order to secure the traffic, which I think is an instance your Lordship has in your mind. He says, "Many cases might be "put where, although the object of the railway "company is to secure the traffic for their own "purposes and for that line, yet, nevertheless, "the very fact that they seek to secure it by "the charges that they make, operates in the "interests of the public. One class of cases "unquestionably intended to be covered by this "is that in which traffic from a distance, of a "character that competes with the traffic nearer "the market, is charged low rates, because "unless such low rates were charged, it would "not come into the market at all. It is certain, "unless some such principle as that were "adopted, a large town would necessarily have "its food supplies raised in price. So that, al-"though the object of the company is simply "to get the traffic, the public have an interest "in their getting the traffic, and allowing the "carriage at a rate which will render that traffic "possible, and so bring the goods at a cheaper "rate, and a rate which makes it possible for "traders at a distance to compete with those "situate nearer to it." That refers to what the agriculturist complains of, and it is impossible to see that they can be blamed for complaining of it, instances where agricultural produce, grain, and live and dead meat are carried past their doors at a rate lower than they themselves can obtain.

27,835. Do you think the railway companies treat the farmers unfairly in that respect?—No, I do not say that.

rate than local traffic where there is no water communication.

27,837. Do you think there is any possibility of using water communication, in the way of canals, further than they are utilised at present?—That is a question which the Board of Trade at present are studying very carefully. The difficulty of developing internal water ways is the cost, and the inherent difficulty that traffic conveyed by canals must be conveyed at a slow rate.

27,838. And possibly a good many of the canals are in the hands of the railway companies?—The railway companies have acquired a very considerable interest in the canals. Parliament has done its best to put a stop to that by this very Act, which, your Lordship is aware, prohibits the acquisition by any railway company or its officers, of an interest in a canal.

27,839. It always seems to me that there are certain things it does not matter whether they are delivered at a slow rate or not—they do not deteriorate by taking any length of time on the road?—There is a considerable volume of traffic on the Aire and Calder Canal, and on the Leeds and Liverpool Canal, and the River Severn of timber, stone, and to a certain extent, grain and manure, and various other classes of agricultural produce where quick delivery is not necessary.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,840. Have you found that there have been more complaints from the 13 counties, that this Commission has to do with, than from other portions of the country?—No, I do not think I have. Last year we had, speaking in round numbers, 1,100 complaints of the action of the railway companies in raising rates, and only 12 of those relate to increased rates on agricultural produce in Wales.

27,841. I suppose the complaints fron Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire have been of quite a different kind from the complaints in the other counties of Wales?—We have had some complaints from Wales about some mineral traffic, but not very many about agricultural produce. There have been 12, and they related four to agricultural produce, two to animals, two to grain, two to manure, and two to provisions.

27,842. What counties?—From Wales and Monmouthshire.

27,843. Were they complaints as to the rates or as to the classification of merchandise?—As to the rates. We have had very few complaints that the merchandise is improperly classified. The complaints have generally been that the rates attached to the class have been too high.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,844. How do you account for the fact that the passes granted to men travelling with cattle have been withdrawn?—How do I account for it?

27,845. Yes?—Well, I do not think it is my business to account for it. The railway companies account for it in this way, that the passes were improperly used; instead of being used by the men in charge of cattle to take cattle to market, they were handed to their friends very largely, when the circumstances did not justify the use of the passes. But upon that we have put a considerable amount of pressure upon the railway companies to restore the old system, and I was under the impression that they had restored the old system.

27,846. I do not think that has been done; it is a great complaint in our neighbourhood that they have withdrawn them?—We did make representations to the Railway Companies Association in favour of restoring the old system, and many companies have reverted to the old system. It is impossible for me to say now here that all have in every instance, because, as you are aware, there are over 250 railway companies, 45 in Wales alone, and it is impossible to say that they have all acted in the same way; but the good offices of the Board of Trade will certainly be exercised in the direction of asking the railway companies to restore the old privileges, of course, on the understanding that they will not be abused.

27,847. Do you consider that there should be this great difference made in the charges, for cattle coming over from Ireland, thence by the Great Western Railway, and the charges made for Welsh cattle sold at the Pembrokeshire fairs, thence forwarded over the same route 50, 60, or 70 trucks together? Should they not be charged at the same rate?—If the services are similar they should be taken at the same rate.

27,848. The fairs are taking place at the same date?—You are aware that some of the Irish cattle dealers say, that they are charged higher rates in Ireland than you are in England.

27,849. I think it is the reverse?—My friend, Mr. Field, the Member of Parliament for Dublin, has been continually complaining of that. I do not think he makes out his case, but that complaint does exist. However, in answer to your question, I am quite certain that if the services are the same, the rate ought to be the same.

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,850. Do you know whether any public authorities in Wales and Monmouthshire, such as the county council, have made any complaints?—Yes, we have had 19 communications from various corporations, chambers of commerce, and bodies of traders, but those complaints have been general in their character, not detailed.

27,851. Is there any association at all for the protection of traders?—There are several associations in Wales for the protection of traders as regards railway rates, but they mostly deal with minerals; I do not mean to say universally.

27,852. Not for agricultural produce?—There are chambers of commerce and chambers of agriculture, but I am not aware of any particular railway rates association dealing with agricultural matters. Chambers of agriculture and chambers of commerce do take care of the agricultural traders, but with that exception there is nothing general like the Mansion House Association in London.

or the Lancashire and Cheshire Conference, which deal with rates.

27,853. Do you know how many of the county councils in Wales have joined the Mansion House Association?—I could not tell you without reference to the documents, which I have not got.

27,854. I suppose we may take it, there were good grounds for complaints when such an association as the Mansion House Association was formed?—The Mansion House Association was formed to watch the legislation, the Provisional Order legislation of 1891, 1892, and 1893, and to watch the action of the railway companies with regard to that legislation. For an answer to the question whether there was justification for the complaints, it is proper I should refer you to Mr. Shaw Lefevre's report, in which it is said there were grounds for the complaints. The report of the committee would be far more valuable to your Commission than any opinion of my own.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,855. Can you give us a general idea, as to whether the condition of things, with regard to these rates, is more or less advantageous to the agriculturist, than it was before the question was raised?—Well, the maximum powers of the companies have been most largely reduced, and their powers of making charges, which would injuriously affect the traders, have been very largely curtailed—they have not been curtailed to the extent that some of the agriculturists have asked, but they have been very considerably curtailed, as you will find from my opening statement.

27,856. But in actual practice as to the rates actually charged, the impression abroad is that the agitation has done the farmer harm rather than good?—I do not think that impression is justified. There are a large number of instances in which rates have been compulsorily reduced. The trader who gets the benefit of that says nothing, but the gentleman whose rates have been raised at all, naturally clamours very loudly. That state of affairs is incidental to any revision. Where you deal with many millions of items, some of which are above a line and are reduced to it, and some are raised from below the line up to it, you hear complaints from all those under the line who are raised, but hear nothing with respect to the reductions.

27,857. In those cases where they have been reduced, are there any cases in which the railway companies have been actually made to carry at a loss?—No, not made to carry at a loss.

27,858. That is to say, the maximum is never placed below the actual cost to the railway company?—The actual cost of carrying a ton of any article is always very difficult to ascertain, but I do not think Parliament or the Board of Trade ever fixed a maximum, which would involve an absolute loss to the railway company.

27,859. Not knowingly?—Not knowingly.

27,861. Would it not be a fact that there were districts where there was competition, where the rates would be much less, for exactly the same amount of carriage, and under exactly the same circumstances, than they are in a district where there is no competition?—That I think must be so, that where there is competition between two lines the tendency is to reduce rates, or any how, if not to reduce rates, to increase facilities, which is very much the same thing.

27,862. In a district where there is only one railway, and where there are stations placed entirely at the power of that railway, would there not be a certain amount of fairness on the ground, in that district at all events, that the railway had a monopoly, that the minimum should be placed pretty nearly on what they find under similar circumstances, they can carry the goods at?—Yes, there is that, but the question is, where the line should be drawn. Take the example which I laid before the Commission just now. Take a line of dots, placed on a diagram scattered up and down. Where are you to draw the line. One way of doing it is to draw a line at the lowest dot. That is very much in the interest of the trader. But the railway company would say, "we invested "our money on the faith that there should be "no interference, and because we have given a "concession, you have now reduced our powers "to the lowest points, and that is not equitable." On the other hand, to take the highest rate would be unfair to the trader, because it would give power to the railway company to charge the highest rate; therefore what Parliament did was to draw the line somewhere near the middle.

27,863. I quite admit the difficulty, but it still seems to me that there is something of a grievance where there are two places the same distance from London, and one is on a line which has a competitor, and the other is on a line which has no competitor, and you find the charges on the one are very much larger than on the other, although the cost must be very much the same?—Yes, that is so, and the trader in the high district naturally grumbles; but that,

I think, is incidental to geographical position.

27,864. Incidental to the fact that you have placed the railways, notwithstanding their monopoly, within the lines of free competition. I was going to ask another question in connexion with that. Would your experience enable you to judge whether in foreign countries, say in Belgium, where the railways belong to the State, and where the whole is regulated from a national point of view, the same anomalies exist?—It is a difficult question, but I may go so far as to say this, that in countries where the railways are owned by the State you have similar anomalies, not precisely to the same extent perhaps, and that various countries are endeavouring to approach as near as they can safely to the principle of equal mileage rates, which principle would be fatal to England.

27,865. I quite admit the difficulty of the thing, and yet I am not quite willing to admit that there is no grievance?—I agree with you, sir. I do not at all say that there is no grievance, but if you try to remedy a grievance on one side you create a grievance on the other.

27,866. In our penny postage and our parcels post we have gone to the other extreme, you may say, in departing from the actual cost and treating the whole country alike?—Yes. If you attempted to reduce the rates of the trader who is in the district where there is no competition, you might do a vast amount of harm to our ports. It would be dangerous to establish a system of equal mileage rates to such an extent that the geographical position of our ports was thereby damnified.

27,867. You have been kind enough to give us some of the rates as to hay and straw, and matters of that kind, but you have not touched upon the terminal charges. Now what we have found is that complaints have been made by the farmers who really keep horses on purpose to haul their stuff from point to point, and so avoid the railways, because they find the charges for short distances are so very heavy. Take hay: the terminal station charge is 1*s.* per ton at each station, so that that adds 2*s.* a ton at once to the rate itself?—That is the maximum terminal; but that is very seldom charged.

27,868. We found instances where they have charged the full amount, and from the many cases that have come before us, we fear that the railway companies are really exercising their maximum powers to a very great extent?—That exercise by the railway companies of their maximum powers was carefully inquired into by Mr. Shaw Lefevre's Committee, and the Commission could not do better than look at that report as to the manner in which the railway companies did exercise those powers. Of course the imposition of a terminal maximum does materially add to the cost of a short distance conveyance—materially add to it.

27,869. If we were to take Class 2 there is 1*s.* 6*d.* charged for a terminal charge at each station; then there would be 8*d.* for loading and 8*d.* for unloading; so that there would be 4*s.* 4*d.* that they could charge on that particular traffic, in addition to the actual carrying rate. The complaints that we have had are that, for short distances, they avoid the railways as much as they possibly can?—Yes, I think that is a consequence.

27,870. Another point is this: The principle you went upon was reducing the rate above a certain number of miles. You charge for the first 20 and then 50, and then above 50. What we rather fear in Wales is that the railways have such short leads, that they can never touch the lower rates at all. There is hardly a railway in Wales, except, perhaps, the Great Western main line, where it would enable the rates to be appreciably reduced?—You have long leads on the Great Western main line, the Cambrian, the London and North-western, and the principal mineral lines which run down on the main line to Glamorganshire and Monmouth, and Mid-Wales, the lines running through Brecon.

27,871. But very little traffic of this character comes along them?—I do not suppose there is very much.

27,872. It seems that Wales, speaking generally, has some little right to grumble in not getting the lower rates, as they do on some of the lines in England?—Yes; that is to say, that Wales has more interest in the short distances, and is less favourably situated as regards the minimum. There is a great deal to be said on the other side. You will find a great deal of evidence upon that point given before the Duke of Richmond's Committee of the two Houses.

27,873. With regard to the foreign produce coming in; the agriculturists complain very bitterly of that; they say the low rates at which foreign produce is brought in, very seriously affects them. I daresay, generally speaking, you would admit that. Take, for instance, the importation of corn, of meat, of potatoes, of fruit and of cheese, as well as other matters one might mention. They complain in those cases, that the very low rates tell against them. But we gather from you, I think, that under precisely the same carrying conditions no preference can be made now, by law, by any railway company?—The governing words are "for the same or similar services." There is always a very great difference of opinion whether the services are "same" or "similar"; and I entirely agree with what has been said about the justification for the complaint of the English agriculturist, when he finds foreign goods carried past his door, at a rate, which he cannot get himself from the railway company. That seems to me to be a strong point, and how to remedy it, is one of the most difficult problems of our time.

27,874. Take the case of American cheese coming over the water and from Liverpool to London—I think they get a very low through rate—and cheese from Cheshire, where they pass through; it is a higher rate than the total carriage of the other altogether?—That very likely is so, but supposing that they are absolutely prohibitive what would be the result? That the American cheese would go to London by water. The producer would not receive any benefit, and the consumer would be damnified. That has been tried several times in various districts, but the effect has been to raise the land rate, to such an extent, as to force the traffic to go round by water. The local producer gets no benefit.

27,875. That is confirmed by what a friend of mine, a large merchant, told me last night. He is getting canned meat from America packed in wooden boxes, and there are 1,200 miles of railway in America to traverse, and then there are, of course, nearly 3,000 miles by water, and the goods come to London, and they get carried that distance for 25*s.* a ton, whereas for the moderate distances in this country they charge 25*s.* a ton. That seems to confirm what you say?—That is an extreme case. I should not be disposed to say that there were a good many others exactly like it. There are some. But how to deal with it is a very difficult question. A Commission in the United States has been grappling with the same problems for many years, and I do not think they have touched bottom at the present time.

27,876. Then goods from Antwerp are brought into London for less, than the same goods would be taken from Colchester. He gave me an illustration of that last night?—Upon that, the Commission are probably aware that, it is open to any trader to make a complaint under section 31, which is known as the conciliation clause. If he thinks that he is being unfairly treated, he can make a complaint under that conciliation clause, which complaint really costs him nothing beyond the paper upon which the letter is written. He can write to the Board of Trade, and the Board of Trade will endeavour to settle the matter amicably. It is open to him to take that step if he thinks it is any good.

27,877. The Board of Trade can be so easily approached now, that a trader need not keep back from coming to you with his troubles?—He need not be kept back, however humble he may be or however big.

27,878. Do you say that is generally understood by the smaller freighters in the country?—I think so. We have complaints.

Lord Kenyon.

27,879. Do you think the principle of co-operation is advantageous; for instance, could any preference be given to any number of men sending up a large bulk of goods?—Yes, if there could be combination.

27,880. That is what I mean?—If there could be combination to produce increased volume of consignment, possibly the railway rates might be reduced; but that is introducing one more middle man, and it is a question whether the middle man's charges, the charges for combination, would not be greater than the reduction of railway rates. That is a question of fact.

27,881. It occurred to me with regard to what Mr. Grove said about cheese, because I know something about cheese. Cheese is very often sold in a large fair, and it is sold in a very large bulk of several tons, sometimes 100 tons at one fair. If the Dairy Association, under whose auspices that cheese fair is held, could combine to ask for a through rate for any large quantity of cheese going to any one particular place—we will say going from my place (Whitchurch) up to Selby, or any of those big Yorkshire towns—such a request coming from an association or a combination, could some preferential rate be given to them?—A combination of that sort would decrease the volume of the consignments, and would justify the railway companies in giving lower special rates, undoubtedly. Personally, I have always pressed traders to see whether it would not be possible to produce some such combination as your Lordship mentioned. There are always great difficulties in the way, but it is done in the case of cattle dealers in Ireland. You are perfectly aware that cattle dealers in Ireland deal not with individual heads of cattle, but with large consignments, because they combine. They send large consignments of cattle from the great fairs in Ireland, and not by truck loads, but by train loads or half train loads.

Mr. Grove.

27,882. I think another point, which was pressed somewhat by one of our witnesses, was something of this sort. He sent goods a very short distance, say six or seven miles, and over two railways, they happened to touch two railways. Would each one be justified in charging a short distance clause, supposing they had a six miles short distance clause for each of those railways?—That took three or four days before the committee to settle. This is the settlement, the provision in the short distance clause on page 105 of the Blue Book, clause 11: "Where "merchandise is conveyed for an entire distance "which does not exceed in the case of merchandise in respect of which a station terminal is "chargeable at each end of the transit three "miles, or in the case of merchandise in respect "of which a station terminal is chargeable at "one end of the transit four and a half miles, or "in the case of merchandise in respect of which "no station terminal is chargeable six miles, "the company may, except as herein-after "specially provided, make the charges for conveyance authorised by this schedule as for "three miles, four and a half miles, and six "miles respectively: Provided that where merchandise is conveyed by the company partly "on the railway and partly on the railway of "any other company, the railway and the railway of such other company shall for the purpose of reckoning such short distance be "considered as one railway." So that there is no double short distance, but there is a double initial distance. Do you follow the differences?

27,883. I am afraid I do not just for the moment?—Railway A. begins with the 1.80*d.* for the 20 miles, then it passes on to Railway B., and that begins with the 1·80*d.* for the first part of its conveyance. So that though there are not two short distances, there are two initial distances.

27,884. Yes, I follow that point. But I will take a case now; supposing that goods go six miles, that is three miles on one railway, and three miles on another, and that each of these railway companies have charging powers for six miles, we will suppose that?—Yes.

27,885. They could not charge for the total distance more than six miles?—That is all.

27,886. That is so?—That is so, by this provision.

27,887. It would be at their initial rate in each case?—Unless there was a new consignment, if it is conveyed by one.

27,888. Yes, through traffic?—Of course, if it is conveyed by one company, and then there is another consignment, and the second railway company takes it over, and holds it again, then there would be two short distances. But supposing it goes in the trucks of the two companies all along one distance of six miles, it is only one six miles.

27,889. May I ask you, whether you have had cases of that description, because it has been said that you must consign the traffic to a certain point, and then reconsign it?—The answer to that is, that any trader can apply to the Railway Commissioners for a through rate under the new law, and if the railway companies attempted to do that, they can be prevented.

27,890. Suppose that in the case of a railway company or railway companies, (it might apply to both) there are two routes, from point A to point B, and one is 30 miles, and the other is 40 miles; are they entitled to take their traffic round by the 40 miles route on purpose to make a greater charge?—That is an extremely difficult question of law, and I do not think I ought to answer it. Under the conciliation clause I have had some acquaintance with that particular series of considerations. There are circumstances under which it is better for the traffic to go by the longer route, but as a rule the shorter route ought to be followed, and the railway companies are generally inclined to take the shorter route for their own interests, and I think they ought to take the shorter route. But whether the law should say, "You must in all instances take the "shorter route," I do not know.

27,891. I know in one or two cases they have considered it a grievance; they have said, "traffic has been taken round by such and "such a point, on purpose to charge us some-"thing extra for it"?—I have heard that alleged, but I do not think it is so.

27,892. Then if it were so, the freighter could come to you and give you particulars of it?—Certainly, under the conciliation clause he can come and say, "Our traffic is carried by the 40-mile "route instead of the 30; cannot you persuade "the railway companies to take it by the 30 "mile route."

27,893. As to chambers of agriculture in Wales, have you had many complaints from those. I think you have stated that you have had a few?—Chambers of commerce?

27,894. No, I mean chambers of agriculture?—I do not think so; I am not sure. I have not got anything down about chambers of agriculture.

27,895. So that you could not say whether their complaints have been well founded?—Not as regards chambers of agriculture, but I should be very sorry to say that any complaint we have received from Wales, has not been well founded.

27,896. But as a rule, do you think that the railway companies now are endeavouring to charge their maximum?—No, I should not like to say that; they are not endeavouring to charge their maximum. Some of the railway companies go to a degree of nearness to it, which I, for one, regret very much, that is, some of the railway companies, others have wisely accepted the situation laid down by Parliament, and accepted the reduction imposed upon them, and not endeavoured to recoup themselves. But upon that you will find the whole matter laid down in Mr. Shaw-Lefevre's Committee report.

27,897. We have had complaints of this kind, that since the new legislation rates have gone up, and instances have been given to us, and in some cases we have tested that, because we have been able to do so. One particular case which was given was lime for gasworks, which I think you remember, after a good deal of discussion, was put into Class A.?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,899. You mean compulsory lessenings, I think?—Yes, compulsory lessenings, reductions of rates, loss of revenue as compared with the old state of things. I see the ambiguity you intend to suggest. It is loss of revenue as compared with the old rate.

attention, but we receive bitter complaints from the long distance consignors, that they cannot get to the market because the rates are so high. That is, for instance, as to fish from the north of Scotland, and fish coming from Milford. We receive bitter complaints of the fish rates from Milford.

27,901. Have you complaints of the difficulty of getting sidings for farms along the lines, and that kind of thing, for manure, and so on?—No. I have not received any complaints of that sort. Sidings have been generally, as a rule, created for traffic which comes in considerable volume. It would not be worth the while of the railway company, nor of the trader, to erect a siding for traffic which did not come in considerable volume.

Mr. Grove.

Do you mean sidings for farmers or farms?

Mr. Seebohm.

Yes.

Mr. Grove.

But at a station?

Mr. Richard Jones.

27,902. In cases where farmers have applied to have a siding, and the railway company has decided against them, have they come to the Board of Trade?—We must first clear up what you mean by "siding." I rather think, you mean a station.

27,903. Yes, a station?—Well, technically, a siding is a different thing from a station. A siding is a line branching off the railway for a particular trader's convenience. What I think you mean, and what I think was also meant by Mr. Seebohm, was a small station.

27,904. Yes, a small station?—A platform at a particular place.

27,905. I happen to know of a place where a man is kept in charge, and where the trains pass, and the farmers in the neighbourhood have been applying to the railway company to form a station there, and they have not succeeded in their object?—No, I do not think any appeal would lie to anybody, for this reason, that that would involve a power on the part of somebody to impose upon a railway the obligation to make stations at every 100 yards of their line, if necessary. I do not think there is any law of that sort. A trader can make his own siding under certain circumstances, but he cannot compel the railway company to give him what amounts to a station at a particular place. With regard to that again, the amicable powers of the Board of Trade step in. If there was really good ground for asking for a station at a particular place, the Board of Trade would use their good offices with the railway companies, and have done so.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,906. Must there be a certain amount of traffic before a siding can be put there?—Yes, I think so. I do not think the Board of Trade would require a railway company to put one otherwise.

27,907. I do not mean a station, but a siding, a siding in a station?—It is technically a station. You mean a platform. You mean a place where they can unload.

27,908. No, a place where they can turn the truck off from the main line, where there is a single line?—You mean a little line in that sense; that is a siding. The trader can make his own, and can demand that the railway company shall give him a connexion for his siding under conditions which solely have regard to public safety, that is to say, the level of the line at the particular place where the siding is made, and the signalling, and so on, but I do not think he can compel the railway company to create a siding for him at a particular place.

Mr. Grove.

27,909. He would, of course, have to pay all the expenses?—Yes, he would have to pay the expenses of construction, and a certain amount of the expenses of working.

27,910. Those expenses would be so large as to be prohibitory?—They would be prohibitory for ordinary traffic. Except in the case of a large volume of traffic, I never heard of its being done—except for such traffic as Huntley and Palmer's biscuit traffic at Reading, and traffic of that size, or mineral produce.

27,911. I suppose in the reports of the recent committee we shall probably get an answer to this, as to how the rates now in force for, say, butter, poultry, and animals, compare with the actual rates of the railway companies before the recent legislation. Would it be possible to say at all?—I have not got figures to give the Commission upon that, for this reason, that there are 10,000 stations in the United Kingdom, and I should have to look at all the rates of each of those 10,000 stations.

27,912. But you have had, generally speaking, no very great complaints of matters of that sort?—No, and as I say from Wales we have had very few.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,913. The Board of Trade have recognised the action of Parliament as being a revision and not universally a reduction of rates?—The word revision appears all through the Act. There is nothing about reduction anywhere, nor did the grand committee, which settled the Act of 1888, refer to reduction. The Board of Trade tried to get from that grand committee some instructions as to the basis of their action, but they entirely failed. The only words which Parliament gave the Board of Trade were "justice and reasonableness," and there was no measure whatever of what was to be just and reasonable.

27,914. Was it under this conciliation clause that the complaints have been made to which you have already referred?—It is difficult to say whether a complaint is a complaint under section 31 or whether it is a general grumble.

27,915. Did you treat it as such?—There were a considerable number of general grumbles which we treated as being of a general nature. But there are a great many specific complaints under section 31, which we have taken up and dealt with.

27,916. You have already told us that in 1893 they numbered 1,100. Was that from Wales alone?—There were 1,100 representations from the United Kingdom, some of them including two or more complaints.

27,917. Can you tell us how many of those referred to Wales?—Twelve.

27,918. But I understood the 12 to be with regard to agricultural produce?—Twelve referred to agricultural produce.

27,919. On the whole of the United Kingdom?—No.

27,920. I want to have that cleared up if you please. I took it down at the time that in 1893 1,100 complaints had reached you?—Yes.

27,921. Was that from the whole of the United Kingdom?—From the whole of the United Kingdom.

27,922. I further took down that 12 of those referred to agricultural produce. Perhaps I was wrong?—Twelve referred to agricultural produce in Wales.

27,923. Then the 1,100 complaints are general complaints?—Yes.

27,924. And the 12 refer to agricultural complaints from Wales?—Yes, that is so.

27,925. Would you tell me whether those included complaints from chambers of commerce as well as from individual traders?—No. In addition to the 12, there were 19 communications from corporations, chambers of commerce, and bodies of traders, protesting generally against increased rates, not specific cases of increase of rates from A. to B, but general complaints that the increase of rates was a bad thing.

27,926. You have already told us that they do not refer to the reductions of rates, but to the increases. In respect of the complaints that have reached you as to agricultural produce, have a large proportion of those been in respect of milk?—Not in Wales, I think. I do not think there are any in Wales.

27,927. Twelve agricultural complaints do refer to Wales?—The 12 complaints do refer to Wales. Four of those were with regard to agricultural produce (I do not think they were with regard to milk at all), two with regard to animals, two with regard to grain, two with regard to manure, and two with regard to provisions. I do not think the milk question has been raised in Wales. It has been raised very much upon the other portions of the Great Western system.

27,928. I have lost the proportion; 1,100 complaints are general, 12 of them are agricultural, referring to Wales?—Yes.

27,929. I have therefore no proportion to go upon. The question I wished to put to you was this, whether you considered, with regard to the rates which have been raised, the proportion of those which relate to agriculture is greater in Wales than in England?—I have nothing to show that, and a good deal to show the opposite I should think it is the opposite, from the absence of complaints; we have 567 agricultural complaints in the United Kingdom.

27,930. Out of the 1,100?—Out of the 1,100.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,931. That is a point now which I am very much obliged to you for clearing up?—The 1,100 representations are general, and they deal in many cases with more than one complaint. You can understand that a representation makes more than one complaint very often. We put it roughly in this way, that the 1,100 representations make 2,100 complaints, and of those complaints, 567 refer to agricultural produce.

27,932. And 12 from Wales?—Twelve of those are from Wales.

27,933. Have you any knowledge of the number of cases, which have been settled without reference to the Board of Trade, between companies and the traders?—No. They must be many hundreds; I hope many thousands. You must understand, Sir John, that the numbers of rates in the United Kingdom are counted by millions.

27,934. They are not reported to you?—They are counted by millions, and they are not always reported to us.

27,935. Generally speaking, is it your opinion that irritation has been allayed in recent months quite recently?—It is being allayed. I do not mean to say that the waves are perfectly calm at the present time; the storm is still going on, and I think it will go on for some time.

Mr. Grove.

27,936. Does it not arise partly from this, that the railway companies, whilst they render accounts for increased rates, are not enforcing them, but the matter is laying in abeyance; in Wales that certainly is so to a large extent?—The railway companies have a very large amount of outstanding accounts at the present moment. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre's Committee has made certain recommendations, and we have been asked to use our good offices with the Railway Association, to induce them not to press these outstanding accounts until the final decision of Parliament has been arrived at.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,937. But I suppose it is within your knowledge that those outstanding accounts are being very rapidly diminished?—They are being rapidly diminished and rapidly settled; I do not say paid.

27,938. By mutual concessions?—Mutual concessions are leading rapidly to the reduction of numbers of outstanding accounts, but still there are very many.

Professor Rhŷs.

27,939. May I ask what is the nature of those outstanding liabilities?—It is generally in this way. Where the rates for 1893 were higher than the rates in 1892 the traders paid upon the basis of the 1892 rates, and where an additional amount was outstanding said they would leave it on the book, and not pay at present. Generally, that is the explanation.

Chairman.

27,940. May I ask you if you could give us any evidence as regards bankruptcies amongst tenants in Wales for 1892 or 1893 as contrasted with England?—My Lord, I thought it would be more satisfactory to the Commission if the evidence as regards foreshores were furnished to you by Mr. Trevor, the Assistant Secretary to the Board of Trade, who is thoroughly conversant with the administration and with the Acts of Parliament relating to foreshores, and the evidence as regards bankruptcy were laid before you by Mr. Smith, the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy. They have both of them most carefully collected certain facts which they have to put before the Commission, and I think it would be of convenience to the Commission, that the evidence with regard to those facts, should be laid before you by those two gentlemen instead of myself.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. CHARLES CECIL TREVOR, C.B., called and examined.

Chairman.

27,941. You are Assistant Secretary to the Board of Trade?—I am.

27,942. For 27 years you have been in the department dealing with foreshores, amongst other subjects?—I have had charge of that department for 27 years.

See 27,563. 27,943. Then the management of foreshores was transferred 27 years ago to the Board of Trade, I believe?—Yes, from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

27,945. When the management of the foreshores in 1866 was transferred from the Woods and Forests to the Board of Trade, how were the applications which were made to them, and which they dealt with, governed?—By the same Acts of Parliament under which the Commissioners of Woods and Forests themselves had acted, principally by an Act of the year 1829, called the Crown Lands Act of that year, but it is rather an elastic Act, and the present Board of Trade endeavour, so far as they can, to look after the interests of navigation. There are two prominent considerations generally in the mind of the Board now, that is, the benefit of the public, and the interests of navigation. Those were not necessarily before the minds of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests 30 years ago, but I think since the transfer to us we have endeavoured, at any rate, to keep those in view.

27,946. Can you tell us what the general considerations are on which the Board act?—Some of those considerations are to prevent encroachments upon the foreshore, such as the construction, without permission, of piers, walls, drains, &c., and again to prevent, whenever possible, the exclusion of the public from the use of the shore for either walking, bathing, boating, or fishing, or other like occupations. Then, again, it is our duty to watch all Bills in Parliament which may contain provisions affecting navigation, or for the acquisition of the foreshore, and where necessary to report to Parliament upon them. Then, of course, we, being the department exercising the rights of owners of the shore, have power to either sell or license the use of the soil wherever it is desirable to do so. But as I said before, our main object is to preserve, so far as possible, the rights of the public over the shores.

27,947. You look upon yourselves as the representatives of the public?—The guardians of the interests of the public, so far as is compatilbe with the rights of the Crown, who are primâ facie the owners of the shore.

27,948. Is it the practice of the Board to part with the rights and interests of the Crown in foreshore?—Speaking generally, it has not been the practice to part with the rights and interests of the Crown, except for the purpose of some useful works in immediate contemplation. Take, for instance, the case of an owner of a sea-board property; he wants to put a groin up in a particular place, either to prevent the shingle coming in a particular way, or as a protection of a particular part of his property. That is an instance in which we should at once entertain his application. Then, again, in the case of a local authority, if they have obtained power to make byelaws for controlling the use of the shore adjacent to their district, we are always ready to consider most favourably any application for our consent to such a byelaw. As we are talking about Wales, take Llandudno for instance; the local board at Llandudno may want to make byelaws for the purpose of preventing nuisances on the shore. If the shore belongs to us, in those cases we immediately say we will consent to those byelaws unreservedly.

27,950. When the Board consider applications, what do they principally bear in mind?—Of course, one of the primary considerations we have to bear in mind in regard to anything connected with tidal waters, is what effect it will have upon navigation; for instance, a pier or a groin might be proposed in a place which is unsuitable; or again, it might be proposed where it would extend too far into a navigable channel, thus obstructing the navigation; it might unduly affect the sea defences in the neighbourhood; or again, works might be proposed which would tend to silt up and deteriorate existing navigable waterways; or dredging operations might be contemplated which would alter injuriously the channel, or assist the sea in undermining the foundations of any quays or other works in proximity. Of course, in such ill-advised cases as these, the applications would not be entertained. We have at hand a professional adviser, a sort of hydrographer to the Board of Trade, who can always tell us by looking at his charts, &c., what the effect of a particular work would be. If he reports against such an application it is necessarily dead at once.

27,951. Where only the mere interference with the shore is proposed, such as the construction of sewers, groins, and other works of a small and unimportant character, what does the Board generally require as a recognition of their rights?—The most nominal pecuniary acknowledgement, say, 2*s.* 6*d.* or 5*s.*

27,952. What is the general custom as regards the case of promenade piers, and so on?—Promenade piers, as a rule, are authorised by a Provisional Order confirmed by Parliament. In those cases we never require the local advertisements, because it is assumed that when the parliamentary powers are obtained, all notices have been, and in fact all notices must have been, given before those powers are obtained. Therefore the local public are thoughly conversant with what is done or proposed. When Parliament has sanctioned a work of that description, we offer a grant of so much only of that shore as is actually required for the sites of the pillars or supports of the pier, by which procedure we retain for the public the use of the foreshore and of the sea under and around the pier. So that the pier company cannot say to you or to me going out in a boat, "Oh, you "must pay a penny for going under our pier;" all they get is the parliamentary rate for using the deck of the pier, and the ownership of the soil in which each of their pillars are situated, which, of course, after the pillar is put there is of no use to the public.

27,953. Have you any hard and fast rule with regard to the consideration money paid for conveyances?—The amount of consideration necessarily varies very considerably, and chiefly depends upon whether it is for private profit or for the public benefit. If it is for private profit, the fair value, frequently settled after valuation by a competent surveyor, must be paid; if the latter, that is, if it is for the public benefit, the Board are often prepared to make a grant or lease for a moderate or even nominal sum, and many small piers, boat slips, and other useful works have been made by local subscriptions or loans which might never have come into existence, if the full value of the Crown's rights had been enforced or demanded. The Act of Parliament of 1829, leaves a reasonable discretion to the Department in dealing with shore in that way. Any large area, the title to which is not disputed by anybody, must go to a valuation by the Act of Parliament, and whatever the valuer fixes as the proper price, we are bound to ask.

27,954. Does it ever happen that when materials are removed from the foreshore below high-water mark, the owner of the land above the high-water mark, thinks damage may occur to his lands, and consequently complains?—Yes, we have frequent complaints of that sort, and the way we entertain them is in the first place to try and get, after local inquiry, some proof that there is a primâ facie ground for the apprehensions of the complainant. We have the services of the coastguard all round the country, and of collectors of customs, who are asked to give us a report upon any local complaints of this description. If we have a primâ facie case made out, we permit the complainant to exhibit a notice prohibiting the practice complained of, and assist him so far as we can, in taking, at his own expense, any proceedings that may be necessary to enforce the terms of the notice.

27,955. Can you call to mind any illustrations of this?—Yes, there is a case which the Commission themselves will be very familiar with. I have been favoured with a proof copy of some evidence that was given before your Commission, in the case of the Cemlyn Bay foreshore, which is referred to at questions 20,006 and 20,092 of the evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

27,956. That is in Anglesea?—Yes, in Anglesea. The number of the question with respect to this claim is 20,094, on the 24th day. I may state shortly the circumstances of that case. Lady Neave and Sir George Meyrick complained in June 1891, that the removal of materials from the foreshore of Cemlyn Bay, below the line of high water, was calculated to damage their property above that line, and, after consideration, the Board gave to those landowners permission to exhibit a notice, prohibiting the removal. In September 1891, that would be two or three months after the permission was given, the local agent for those landowners asked to be allowed to prosecute a man for removing materials contrary to the terms of the notice, and the Board authorised the prosecution. From the judgment of the county court judge, already handed in by a witness before this Commission, it would appear that the county court judge, after himself visiting the locality, decided that no risk of damage in the immediate future was probable, and declined to interfere with what he considered the prescriptive right of the defendant to take materials. This judgment, however, I would point out did not affect the title of the Crown to the soil of the shore; it merely said that the farmer or individual, I forget what his calling was, had a right with everybody else to take the materials if he wanted them. We should never have dreamed of interfering in such a case as this, if we had not been fairly primâ facie satisfied that there was a chance of damage and injury. The court decided there was not. I do not know with what object that judgment was put in before you, but I do not think it goes so far as to say, that the county court judge decided any question of title. The Crown were not before him, and they were not in the case, and therefore he had no ground to decide it, and I do not suppose that he did decide that.

Mr. Grove.

It was purely a question of damage.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,957. One person taking one barrow load might be innocuous, but as a principle it might be very dangerous?—Certainly.

Mr. Grove.

27,958. In that case you allowed those local landowners to use the name of the Board of Trade in the prosecution?—Yes, that is our practice. Where damage is impending we say to them, "You may stand in our shoes, provided, "as the damage is going to be to you, you pay "the expenses."

Chairman.

27,959. There was a report of the county court judgment handed in on the 11th October 1893 before the Commission, when it sat at Llangefni, in the Isle of Anglesea?—Yes.

27,960. Is there any other class of cases that you can mention?—There is another class of cases, where the owner of the adjoining land claims the shore as part of his manor. I need not say that those descriptions of cases are rather numerous. A claim is easy to make, but it is not always so easy to prove. However, there are many cases in which it has been considered desirable to effect a compromise with a claimant by granting him, upon terms deemed satisfactory by the Board, a conveyance of the rights of the Crown in such foreshore, at the same time providing in the conveyance for the free use and enjoyment of the shore by the public, for bathing, walking, fishing, &c., so long as it is below high-water mark, and also for the protection of navigation. I can give you an instance of that class of cases in Wales, viz., the Marquis of Bute at Cardiff. There was a considerable tract of shore there, as to which for a long time there had been a dispute. His claim was considered by our local advisers to be a strong one, and he was anxious to compromise, and he made us an offer; I think he offered us 6,000*l.* odd for 1,200 odd acres, and that offer was accepted.

Mr. Grove.

27,961. Was that sold to the Marquis of Bute recently, or at least 10 or 12 years ago?—The 1,211 acres were sold in March 1888 for 6,055*l.*

27,962. Do we gather that any local inquiry was held in that matter, to show what rights the public had in any way to these particular 1,211 acres, before you sold that to the Marquis?—No, there was no inquiry in that case. It was practically a compromise of a claim.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,963. Then it would be sold subject to any public rights?—It would be sold subject to any public rights, and of course the moment 10 acres, say, of this site had been embanked or enclosed, or put into a dock, the public rights must necessarily cease in respect of that particular portion of it.

Mr. Grove.

27,964. Then do we gather that the conveyance (I presume there would be that legal document) to the Marquis of Bute, would reserve to the public any existing rights?—Yes, so long as the shore was covered with water, and not shut out by a dock wall or anything of that sort.

Chairman.

27,965. Do the Board of Trade ever report to Parliament their dealings with regard to foreshore?—Yes, always, I may say. Every five years we present to Parliament a parliamentary paper setting out every dealing we have had during the previous five years. If the Commission wish to have the particulars of those returns, I will give the reference to the parliamentary papers:

No.	61	of session	1872.
„	122	„	1882.
„	118	„	1892.

That gives all the dealings of the 25 years from the date of the transfer of the jurisdiction to the Board of Trade down to the end of December 1891, and whoever will be responsible at the end of the next five years will no doubt present a similar parliamentary paper to Parliament. According to these returns, the number of dealings with foreshores by the Board in the 25 years from 1st January, 1867, to 31 December, 1891, is as follows :—

	Conveyances.	Leases.	Acknowledgments.	Total.
England -	147	88	377	612
Wales -	38	22	63	123
Scotland -	150	46	171	367
Ireland -	81	22	235	338
Total -	416	178	846	1,440

Mr. Grove.

27,966. Then the transfer was in 1866?—Yes, from the 1st day of January 1867. The Act of Parliament, the Crown Lands Act, was in 1866.

Sir. John Llewelyn.

27,967. When these parliamentary papers are laid before Parliament, there is an opportunity for any Member of Parliament who considers it a public grievance, to bring the matter before the House?—Naturally there is.

27,968. Has that been done in many instances out of these 416 cases, which I see you have reported?—I do not remember at the moment a single instance.

27,969. I suppose that, amongst others, this conveyance to the Marquis of Bute would have been included and reported to Parliament?—It was included and reported to Parliament.

27,970. And an opportunity then did occur in which the public might have a voice and take exception, if they had any exception to take?—Certainly.

27,971. But when you say that an opportunity occurred to the public, does it not seem more reasonable to suppose that there should be a local inquiry, before important powers of this kind were transferred over to private individuals?—There would be a quasi local inquiry in an ordinary case, but in a question of disputed claim, where there is a fair ground for the legal advisers of the Board of Trade considering the claimant had something to say, at any rate, from his point of view, I do not think that a compromise of that sort should be bruited abroad before it is settled.

27,972. And that seems practically to shut out the public from a voice in the matter?—To a certain extent it does, but I think, considering that all public rights were reserved at the time, the general public had very little to complain of.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,973. As to those special acres that were taken away from the public rights, they were taken to make a dock, were they not?—Yes, but that was the question, whether it belonged to the public or not. Supposing Lord Bute had taken proceedings and got a verdict, they would have been entirely ousted, whereas by this compromise and by this deed, they have certain rights still reserved to them with his consent, and the public have got the benefit of the 6,055*l.*

Mr. Grove.

27,974. Do we gather then, that certain specific rights were retained for the public in the deed, or that, generally speaking, the existing rights would be maintained?—I have not got a copy of the actual conveyance given to Lord Bute at the time, but I have a copy of our model form of conveyance, which reserves most fully the public rights.

27,975. Would it be troubling you too much to just read those few words in your ordinary form of conveyance. This is a matter of some interest to us, because we have had complaints on this very question?—You have had complaints in, I think, a case where the claim had been admitted. You are referring to the Duke of Beaufort's case are you not? See 6189–6422.

27,976. That is so?—In Lord Bute's case the claim was not admitted at all.

27,978. Then there are no general words as to any other existing rights, I suppose. Would you specify those?—There is this: " And also except and always reserving as " aforesaid all rights of way and access to and " over the premises now existing by means " of any public road, footpath, bridge, or other " means or by means of any road, footpath, or " bridge shown on the said plan hereto " annexed," and so on, and a full right of entry on the premises.

Mr. Seebohm.

27,979. We will suppose that those 1,200 acres of shore, which were taken by the neighbouring landowner, had been the whole of the shore that was used by the public for bathing, and all that kind of thing, and that it was taken into a dock. I suppose the public rights would immediately attach to the new shore, which the sea would be sure to cast up. It would not involve the taking away of the ordinary rights of the watering place in the neighbourhood of the docks, would it?—You see the accretion of land in that way varies according to the coast a great deal; on the east coast of England for instance, the sea may be continually receding; possibly in the west it may be coming the other way.

27,980. But in the Swansea case that was one of the grievances, that the public were debarred by the construction of these docks, which were partly for private emolumemt, from the ordinary exercise of their rights?—Yes, but is not that a natural consequence of the construction of a dock authorised by Parliament; Parliament knows it when it gives leave to have these docks made, and if public rights were to be retained in every work of that description, you would hardly keep the trade in the country.

27,981. But is it not a very strong reason for a local inquiry?—Yes, but Parliament have not provided for a local inquiry in the case of any work authorised by them. As a rule, our practice of advertising produces local objections, but those, of course, are in cases only that have not been authorised by Parliament.

27,982. It is a matter, I think, between the rights of the national public and the local public; 6,000*l.* odd comes into the pockets of the national public, and it may be to the injury of the local public?—It may be, but then you cannot eliminate from consideration in that particular case, the value of the claim of the landowner.

Mr. Griffiths.

27,983. I should like to ask you this, Mr. Trevor, the extent of your limit is high-water mark, is it not?—The boundary of the Crown's rights has been determined by a case in the Court of Appeal in Chancery, in the year 1854; the line is defined to be the line of high-water mark of an average or medium tide, that is, a tide between a high-water spring and a high-water neap, so that the Crown rights extend from that to the low water of an average or medium tide. Then we come from there to the bed of the sea beyond low-water mark, which so far as territorial limits go, has always been considered to belong to the Sovereign of the country.

27,984. In such a case as you mentioned just now, where the sea has receded, say, 200 or 300 yards, and sand has accumulated up to 30 feet high and grass has grown upon that, which the sea is never likely to cover over again, to whom does the land belong, to the lord of the manor or the adjoining landowner?—That depends upon whether the recession or accretion has been gradual or sudden caused by say some storm; gradual or the reverse. If it is gradual and imperceptible it belongs to the owner of the adjoining land; if it is sudden and considerable, caused, for instance, by a work made, a dock, a wall, or a groin, or anything of that sort, then it belongs to the Crown; primâ facie, of course.

27,985. Where the lord of the manor has his jurisdiction over that very plot of ground, though it is not exactly his ground but it was within his manor, would he not have a claim to it?—No, I think the idea of law is, I do not speak as a lawyer, that what one owner loses in one place, another owner gains in another. It may not be satisfactory to the one who loses.

27,986. May I ask you again, for my own information, have the public a right to walk within a certain distance of the high-water mark?—Do you mean above it or below it.

27,987. Along the shore above it. In some parts they claim a right of way?—That depends upon the owner of the shore. Take a watering place, as a rule the beach, as it is called, that is, the shingle or sand which is above high-water mark, is common property, but in many cases there is an owner of the land, in fact, I believe in all cases, there must be an owner of the soil above high-water mark; it is not the Crown, and we cannot interfere with anything above high-water mark.

27,988. There is a certain amount of public opinion to the effect, that they have really a right to go along the sea coast, all round, everywhere?—I cannot say anything upon that point. The Crown do not claim that right, and have never exercised it so far as I know.

27,989. Have there been any sales of late of these foreshores to lords of the manor or to landlords of adjoining districts?—There have been in the 25 years, 38 conveyances in Wales, some of them to railway companies, for instance, the Barry Docks.

27,990. I did not mean to private people, except it was to the adjoining landlords?—We do not, as a rule, make any conveyance to a landlord merely for the purpose of adding to his property, for instance. As I have said in my evidence already, our practice is only to give shore for works in immediate contemplation.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27,991. I do not know whether you quite appreciate the point which Mr. Griffiths was making. According to the law as you have laid it down, the Crown right ceases at what may be called the medium high-water mark. Therefore, it would follow in strictness that all the soil above that medium high-water mark belongs to some private owners presumably; consequently, if I were by the seaside just at high water, I must be presumably a trespasser. That is the point Mr. Griffiths is making?—No doubt in theory that may be so.

27,992. Have you had any complaints anywhere, either from landowners adjacent to the seashore, that the public trespass and commit nuisances upon their private property, or do you find, on the other hand, complaints from the public at large that landowners exercise their rights oppressively?—There are not many complaints of the latter order. I know none of the former. I hoped to have been able to give you an instance. There is one that was in my mind, and it is one that occurred more than 20 years ago. A landowner at Filey, who, as we were afterwards advised, had got the foreshore, prevented boats being beached above the high-water mark. We were then in hopes of stopping it, but I cannot trust my memory at this distance of time, to tell you the exact particulars of that case. There is no doubt that was a very great hardship to fishermen, who ought to be able to

27,993. Then the strict legal doctrine, as laid down by you, does lead to inconvenience almost necessarily?—I attempted to guard myself against laying down the law, but I think it will follow naturally that there must be some owner of every part of the shore. The Crown do not claim anything above that medium high-water line. Somebody else, therefore, has the property in the shore above it. Whether they use that right oppressively or not, I am afraid we have no means of either stopping them or preventing them.

27,994. Of course, the question of boundary as between the Crown and the private owners is a matter that has to be decided by reference to the facts of each particular case, I take it?—Yes. I do not think that, as a rule, we have any difficulties. The coastguard, for instance, have no difficulty in settling what is that medium high-water line. In some cases, where the shores are very flat and go out a very long way—I have some in my mind in the Bristol Channel, Weston-super-Mare, for instance—where the high-water line is about a mile and a half from low-water mark; there, of course, the shore is very extensive. In other cases there may be cliffs, and there may be but a few inches of shore between high-water and low-water marks. So that, of course, it varies according to each locality.

27,995. With regard to the Cardiff case, do I understand you to say, that that was a compromise between the Board of Trade and Lord Bute?—In the nature of a compromise. He had advanced his claim for many years, and there was some difficulty among the legal advisers of the Board, as to whether his claim was a good one or not, and, of course, litigation is always expensive to both sides, therefore, it was settled. I do not know whether the litigation had actually commenced in that case. Proceedings had not been begun by Lord Bute, but I believe there was an idea that they would be.

27,996. But the Crown was in possession, was it not?—Nominally, yes.

27,997. Do you happen to recollect, whether any correspondence has come before you in reference to Bangor foreshore or ferry rights?—Do you mean Garth Ferry at Bangor? ee 13,226.

27,998. I think it was the Garth Ferry. I mean some evidence has been laid before us in reference to the matter?—I believe there is a claim of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners there, in right of the Bishopric of Bangor. I could not say offhand, but I know there have been some papers about it. We have not admitted their claim yet, but there is a Bill before Parliament this coming session, in which the corporation are seeking power to make a pier close to Garth Ferry, and no doubt if there are any objections on behalf of the public, it will come out before the committee.

Chairman.

27,999. I have one question more to ask you; into what fund in the Treasury is the rent of the foreshore paid?—That is provided for by the 12th and 13th sections of the Crown Lands Act, 1866. The 12th section is as follows: "All "money which is received by the Board of "Trade in consequence of the exercise of any of "the powers or authorities, rights or privileges "conferred on them by this Act, and which if "this Act had not been passed would have been "carried by the Commissioners of Woods as "annual income to the Consolidated Fund of "the United Kingdom, in this Act called the "Consolidated Fund, shall be paid by the Board "of Trade into the receipt of Her Majesty's "Exchequer, and shall be carried to, and form "part of, the Consolidated Fund." That means, generally, that anything in the way of income is to go to the Consolidated Fund, and anything that is paid as capital, for instance, this 6,000*l.* odd that we have been talking about, is paid into the Treasury and applied by them to the reduction of the National Debt, so that you may say that annual income goes to the Consolidated Fund, and capital to the reduction of the National Debt.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,000. Reverting to the Cardiff case for one moment, may I ask what the general nature of the case set up against the Crown was. I will tell you why I am asking. You say the Crown was nominally in possession, that means that the Crown was in possession in the same way that it is in possession of most of the foreshore that belongs to it?—Yes.

28,001. Then how long had that state of things gone on?—There had been several encroachments on the shore, which we had attempted to prevent and stop, and we found our hands were very weak in doing so; in fact, in some of them we were put at defiance, and the then President considered that it was a very good compromise to make with an offer of that sort.

28,002. But how long had the lord of the manor been out of possession?—I do not quite understand your term of "out of possession.' He was claiming continually.

28,003. The lord of the manor kept on saying, "This foreshore is mine"?—Yes.

28,004. And he proceeded to try and do certain acts, I suppose, or to justify the acts done by certain persons?—Yes.

28,005. But the Crown all the time was in possession, as I understand it?—Yes.

28,006. Why did not the Crown simply hold its hands?—We do not like to go to law if we can help it.

28,007. But it would be for the lord of the manor to go to law under the circumstances you are stating. Do you see my point?—Yes, I do.

28,008. What was the general nature of the title that was set up here?—I could not remember at this distance of time without having the papers.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

28,009. Did the advisers of the Marquis of Bute lay their documents on the table before you ?—We acted under legal advice at the time.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Mr. Grove.

28,012. There is one point we have not touched upon, that is Colwyn Bay. I do not think it has been mentioned. Evidence was given, that application was made by the London and North-western Railway Company to purchase, along the coast in the bay, two miles of foreshore ?—Yes; there was a question asked in Parliament recently about it, and I am afraid I am not in a position to give you any information with regard to it, because that shore is under the management of the Woods and Forests. The Act transferring to us made certain exceptions, among those exceptions were anything that the Commissioners of Woods had previously dealt with. This comes in that class of cases, and the representative of the Woods and Forests may possibly be able to give you that information.

28,013. That is so, so that you can add nothing to what Mr. Sowray has told us ?—I can say nothing whatever about it.

28,014. I should like to ask you a question with regard to the Swansea Corporation and the Duke of Beaufort. Have you any knowledge at all, in your Department, of the disputes that have been going on there ?—No, none at all, except so far as this goes, that 27 years ago, when the transfer was made, we were furnished by the Office of Woods with a list of claims that they had admitted, and among those was the

See 27,975.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Duke of Beaufort's for this Terra de Gower, which they asserted to have been decided by a case in the Court of Exchequer. We took what they gave us, and we have never exercised any claim whatever in respect of that. That is a sample of one of the large adverse claims in Wales that have been admitted. There is another large claim which, perhaps, you may be interested to know of, viz., the whole of the River Dee. The River Dee Company, by Act of Parliament, have got almost the whole of the foreshore of the River Dee, and the Board of Trade have no power to stop the erection of anything there.

28,015. Have there been any disputes to your knowledge at Newport as regards the foreshore ? —In the River Usk ?

28,016. Yes ?—I could not say without having our maps before me ; but, speaking generally, there are two claims, one on each side of the river there, that are practically not disputed. Of course, the Commission will very properly understand, that in giving public evidence which has to be printed, I ought to be very chary of saying anything about adverse claims, but we do not dispute certain claims in the River Usk. Probably you will not ask me who the claimants are.

28,017. Oh, no. Then when you speak of protecting the rights of the Crown, do we understand that that means the rights of the public ? —To a great extent. Of course there are rights of the Crown that are not the rights of the public ; for instance, there is this money that has come to the Treasury, though to a certain extent, even there, that is to the interest of the public.

28,018. So that it would appear then that the public ought to be acquainted with these transfers and sales before they are effected ?—Generally speaking, they are acquainted with them.

28,020. Partly, probably, because those works generally confer a benefit upon the public of the town or the place where they are made ; for instance, the making of a dock must, of course, confer a considerable local benefit upon the public ?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,021. I should just like to ask a question about the Dee Company, which you alluded to just now. The Dee Company still exists, I suppose?—I believe so.

28,022. Was it not a company formed with a view to enclosing land there?—I could not say, I am not familiar with what the company did.

28,023. As a matter of fact they began a very big wall, which was broken into, and I do not think it has been at all repaired of late. What I want to know is, supposing this company exists and they do nothing, or do not act on the main lines of the objects of the company, how long is the Crown to be excluded from the rights it had previous to the existence of the company. You see the Dee Company might exist for many years and do nothing, and prevent other people doing anything, that is my point?—It is possible (I do not know of my own knowledge) that the River Dee Company have got an Act of Parliament, authorising them to do certain things and to acquire certain ground. If they have acquired that ground, Parliament alone can take it away from them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,024. One question more, Mr. Trevor, I want to get this perfectly clear. Was this compromise, or this transaction in the nature of a compromise, effected by the Board of Trade without any notice being given to the Mayor and Corporation of Cardiff?—I think no notice was given at all; in fact, I remember now that the Corporation of Cardiff made a complaint to us, that they had not been consulted.

28,025. Without asking you to express any opinion in reference to that transaction, do you not think it would be for the public interests that before these sales, or before any compromise of Crown rights took place, the local authorities should receive notice and have an opportunity of being heard?—I think in ordinary sales, certainly, but I do not wish to go quite so far in cases of compromise.

28,026. But do you not think that where the claims are doubtful, those are the very cases in which the Board of Trade might usefully take counsel of the local authorities?—I think it is quite possible, that such a course would practically put any chance of compromise to an end. As a rule, a local authority is not always on all fours with the local landlords. It was considered, so far as I could see by the papers, a good thing for the Crown to have this compromise, and it might be unadvisable to consult people who might prevent it.

28,027. But supposing the local authority felt so strongly about it, that they were willing to undertake the risks of litigation?—That is a totally different case.

28,028. Not so, because Cardiff never had the chance of saying whether it would or would not run the risk of litigation?—Well, the compromises are not many, and although I would not quite say de minimis non curat lex, I do not think it is so very large an item in the administration of foreshore.

28,029. The case of the Terra de Gower was a very special one, so far as I could understand it. The grant which was proved in the case in the Exchequer which you alluded to, was an old grant, I think of King John's, as to the existence of which there could be no doubt, and it was a definite grant, not of simply a manor, but of a lordship extending over a considerable territory, and which appeared to confer upon the grantee quasi legal rights?—Yes.

28,030. Was there any suggestion of such a grant from any sovereign in the case of Cardiff?—I could not answer that without looking at the papers again. I was not aware that I should be examined upon the details of the Cardiff case, and I only mentioned it in my examination in chief, as an illustration of cases of compromise, which come before us.

Chairman.

28,031. There are two or three questions which have been handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Do not various owners in Anglesea claim "property in the foreshore of the island?"—There is one case I am aware of; Mr. Bulkeley Hughes claims at a place called Cemmaes in Anglesea.

28,032. "Does he base his claim on a grant?"—I am not aware of the particulars of his claim. It was made before the administration came to us, and all we know is that he does claim.

28,033. "Is it not the fact that when private "owners of foreshore grant licenses to persons to "carry on works, those licenses are usually "made subject to the consent of the Board of "Trade?"—Does "private owners of foreshore" mean people whose claim the Crown have either admitted or declined to dispute?

28,034. (Mr. Vincent.) Yes?—I am not aware of any cases, in which private owners of foreshore grant licenses to persons to carry on works.

Chairman.

28,035. "Are any considerable parts of the "foreshore of Wales not the property of the "Crown"?—I have already given the two cases in which the largest areas of foreshore are not disputed by the Crown—the River Dee Company, and the Duke of Beaufort's claim at Gower. There are a few other claims, but I think they will all be shown by a single figure; they do not go into two figures.

28,036. "In the event of an accretion, "whether gradual or not, upon foreshore in "respect of which another owner than the "Crown, claims to possess the rights of the "Crown, (assuming the claim to be proved) "would not the new land become the property "of that owner?"—That is a question of law which I do not feel competent to go into.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

You might refer Mr. Vincent to "Hall on Foreshore."

Mr. Seebohm.

28,037. We had a case in Swansea, I think, showing that the Duke of Beaufort had made claim to new ground that had been thrown up from the sea, and actually got from the Corporation of Swansea a large sum for the ground. That was one of their great hardships?—But that was a gradual accretion.

Mr. Grove.

28,038. It was 25 or 30 years, or something of that sort?—But the book to which the Commissioner has just referred, lays down the whole of the law very clearly.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Chairman.

28,039. "Are you aware that the Ecclesi"astical Commissioners have recently sold the "'occasional' island of Gorad Goch, claiming to do
"so as successors of the Bishops of Bangor"?—I am not aware of it, the sale of an island above high water mark would not be brought to the notice of the Board of Trade.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Smith called and examined.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,040. You are the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy?—Yes.

28,041. Your duty is to exercise supervision over the administration of the Bankruptcy Acts throughout England and Wales?—Yes.

28,042. Have you in that capacity become acquainted with the statistics relating to failures among the agricultural community?—Yes; certain statistical returns are made, and it is my duty to make myself acquainted with them.

28,043. And I think you have made some investigations?—Yes, I have made some investigations into the question of agricultural insolvencies in Wales during the last three years.

28,044. Into what class do you divide those insolvencies?—There are two systems of winding up; one under the Bankruptcy Acts, which takes place in the bankruptcy courts, and the other under private deeds of arrangement. Until within the last few years, we had no information with regard to private deeds of arrangement, but since the passing of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, certain returns are now required by law to be furnished to the registrar of bills of sale, and he is required to make certain returns to the Board of Trade. I am therefore able to give some figures, which will include both the bankruptcies and the private deeds of arrangement.

28,045. In regard to the first class of cases, the information is based upon official returns?—Yes, Gazette notices and returns which are made by the various courts.

28,046. Of course you have the statements of affairs filed?—Yes, statements of affairs, sworn to by the debtors and filed in the different courts.

28,047. Then, I suppose, with regard to the second class of cases, besides the Deeds of Arrangement Act, you have some information from the documents filed under the Bills of Sale Act?—It is under the Deeds of Arrangement Act that a trustee in a private deed of arrangement is required to make certain returns. In these deeds a debtor is now required to furnish a list of his creditors, to state the amount of his liabilities and assets, and an abstract of that information is furnished to and registered with the registrar of bills of sale.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

28,048. What is the date of the Bankruptcy Act itself?—1883. The Deeds of Arrangement Act only come into operation in 1888.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,049. What general conclusion do you come to, in regard to the increase or the decrease of insolvencies amongst farmers in Wales during the last three years?—They have considerably increased. I can give you the figures combining the deeds of arrangement and bankruptcies. I may say these are purely farmers' failures. There are one or two other cases of persons engaged in other occupations, who combine farming with these occupations, but these would not appear in our returns as agricultural failures. For the year 1891 the number of failures was 24, with liabilities amounting to 10,471*l.*; for the year 1892 the number of failures was 32, with liabilities amounting to 20,878*l.*; and for the year 1893 the number of failures were 42, with liabilities amounting to 32,708*l.*

28,050. You could give us, I daresay, the details under each branch?—Yes, I have them here, both under deeds of arrangement or bankruptcy.

28,051. I think we should like to hear them?—The receiving orders in 1891 were 20, with liabilities amounting to 7,880*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

28,052. What do you mean by "receiving orders"?—Bankruptcies proper. In 1892 there were 27 receiving orders, with liabilities amounting to 18,491*l.*, and in 1893 there were 31 receiving orders, with liabilities amounting to 20,003*l.* Then the deeds of arrangement were, in 1891, 4, with liabilities amounting to 2,591*l.* In 1892 there were 5 deeds, with liabilities amounting to 2,387*l.*, and in 1893 there were 11 deeds, with liabilities amounting to 12,705*l.*

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

28,053. Can we have that table?—Yes. This is a table which gives the particulars of the receiving orders and deeds of arrangement in Wales and Monmouthshire on the one hand, and of the whole country on the other. (See Appendix.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,054. What do you say with regard to the whole country. Is this increase of insolvencies among tenant farmers confined to Wales?—No, it is not confined to Wales. It is general throughout the entire country.

28,055. Then I think we had better have, in order to make the comparison more complete, the number for England as well in the same way?—Yes, I have the numbers here divided into general failures and agricultural failures. Under the head of general failures in England, excluding Monmouthshire, there were in 1891, 6,812 failures, with liabilities amounting to 13,342,857*l.* For 1892 there were 7,392 failures, with liabilities amounting to 14,070,479*l.* In 1893 the estimated number of failures is 8,131, with liabilities amounting to 16,523,677*l.* I should, perhaps, explain that the figures for 1893 are estimated, because we have not the final returns, and we have made them up on an estimate for the period ending October last. Then with regard to the agricultural failures for England, in 1891 there were 280, with liabilities 329,290*l.* In 1892 there were 351 failures, with liabilities 440,914*l.*, and the estimated number for 1893 is 481 failures, with 645,586*l.* of liabilities.

28,056. We have not got the general figures for Wales, have we, so far?—The general figures for Wales have not, I am afraid, been taken out.

28,057. Will you do it for us?—Yes.

28,059. Therefore, taking the three years, the ratio of agricultural failures is rather larger in Wales than in England?—Yes, rather larger.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,060. More farmers in proportion to other trades?—Yes. Last year you observe the figures are identical.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,061. Have you considered at all the causes of the agricultural failures in Wales?—Yes, I have made that a subject of consideration to some extent. We have information from two sources, first the evidence given by debtors upon their public examinations in the Bankruptcy Court, and secondly the reports which are furnished to me by the official receiver of the various districts. They do not altogether coincide, but I could give you some information under each head. That, however, is limited I should say, to the cases of bankruptices proper. I have no information with regard to the cases of insolvency under deeds of arrangement, although I have no reason to think that they would differ materially from similar causes of failure in the Bankruptcy Court.

28,062. What is the chief cause, do you think?—The most frequent cause, I think, is admitted both by the debtors themselves and the official receivers, to be the want of capital.

28,063. Can you give us any instances from Wales?—Yes, I have taken out instances in the Carmarthenshire Court. One farmer failed with liabilities of 423*l.*, who was insolvent when he took the farm. Another, who started without capital, failed for 695*l.* liabilities. Another, who started with 100*l.* capital, and whose annual rent amounted to 360*l.*, failed for 953*l.* Another, with 50*l.* of capital, with a 75*l.* rent, failed for 620*l.* Another started with 120*l.* of borrowed capital, and failed for 1,351*l.*, his rent being 150*l.* These cases are all taken from one district. I was not able to extend my searches to the others, but if the Commission desire it, I should be able to procure information upon these points.

28,064. You could tell us generally, I daresay, now, whether similar causes prevail throughout the whole country?—The same causes undoubtedly prevail throughout the whole country, and I may say, so far as I can observe, the same cause obtains in the case of English failures to a very large extent.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,065. You mean original want of capital?—Want of capital at the time the tenant takes the farm; he has no means; he is impecunious.

28,066. Does that apply to England?—So far as I can observe, but I have not given that matter the special attention, which I should like to do before expressing an opinion here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,067. Do you find any other causes are alleged?—Yes. The most frequent causes alleged are loss of stock by death, and very frequently, costs incurred in litigation, and in loan transactions in which they engage, where both the costs of obtaining the loan, and the rate of interest is considerable. The rate of interest, especially, I find to be a very frequent cause of failure on the part of the farmer.

28,068. In the case of the failure of Welsh farmers, what is the general nature of the debts which they have incurred. Are they debts to agricultural implement makers, and debts in respect of goods and stock they have purchased and not paid for?—Yes, so far as I have noticed they are chiefly incurred to agricultural and seed merchants, and miscellaneous household and trade expenses of all kinds. They are not necessarily confined to the business of the farm.

28,069. Does the money lender often figure in the list of creditors?—The money lender comes in frequently, and generally the bankrupt's friends, also, to a certain extent.

28,070. I observe you do not say that the Official Receiver reports, in the case of Welsh farmers, personal extravagance or speculation as amongst the causes of failure?—Intemperate habits are referred to frequently, and general incapacity and neglect of business is a very frequent cause of failure. Extravagance is sometimes alleged, but I have not noticed it so prominently in the returns.

28,071. That is one of the things which, according to my experience in the county courts, the Official Reciever does take notice of, namely whether it has been brought about by extravagance in domestic expenditure, and so on?—Undoubtedly; but that is not a prominent feature in his reports.

28,072. Then the question of speculation, either gambling in its more coarse form, or else gambling upon the Stock Exchange, and so forth, also finds a prominent place in most bankruptcies?—I have not found that in the case of the Welsh farmer to any extent.

28,073. Then neglect of business is a common complaint made by official receivers as one of the causes?—Here is a list furnised by one of the official receivers, which would perhaps put it more completely.

28,074. How many bankrupt districts are there in Wales?—Five centres. There are many more county courts, but five official receivers.

28,075. And one for Monmouthshire?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,076. What district would that represent which you are going to refer to?—Merthyr Tydvil.

28,077. You have supplied the figures for one district in South Wales. Could you supply the figures for one district in North Wales?—I have not got them, but I could obtain them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,078. Can you give us an example of a report from an Official Receiver in the case of a Welsh farmer's failure?—The Official Receiver "at Merthyr says:—"The following are fair "examples of the causes usually given by "farmers for their failure:—(1.) Great depre- "ciation in value of cattle. (2.) Losses "on stock. (3.) Chancery suit; and loss on "death of cow. (4.) Losses in purchasing cattle "bought when prices were high, and being "obliged to sell when the market had gone "down, and loss of 50*l.* through spending money "on a farm without reaping any benefit. (5.) "Pressure by holder of bill of sale; heavy rate "of interest; and loss of cow and calf. (6.) "Becoming surety for brother. (7.) Losses on "colliery. (8.) Depression in the agricultural

"district and consequent falling off of trade. "(9.) Heavy losses on farming operations in "consequence of cattle, horses, and sheep dying, "and the present agricultural depression." And then he adds, "I am inclined to believe that, on "the whole, the causes usually assigned by "bankrupt farmers for their insolvency, are "reliable so far as they go, and the debtors "have seldom been shaken on cross-examination "by hostile creditors at the public examinations. "Personally, I may state that I have long been "of opinion that the insolvency of farmers is "due to other causes which are seldom or never "named by bankrupts themselves, viz:—(a.) "High rents: This is a subject on which I have "rarely heard a farmer complain. The reluc- "tance would probably be due to a fear on the "part of the farmer to offend his landlord, and "thus cause him to refuse to allow him to "remain as tenant. (b.) Insufficiency of capital "to enable the farmer to stock the land, to "drain, to manure, and to repair the fences. "(c.) Too large a family depending on a com- "paratively small and unprofitable holding, "owing to the inability, through lack of in- "fluence and want of capital on the part of the "head of the family to secure other holdings "for the sons and daughters when they become "of age. (d.) Inaccessibility to farms: Many "of them being situate on high mountains, in "some cases without roads, and in other cases "with roads so badly formed and metalled, as "to make cartage expensive and indeed pro- "hibitive. (e.) Absence of machinery and "agricultural implements, owing to the in- "ability through poverty of the farmer to "obtain them." Do you desire that I should read any other reports?

28,079. Is that a fair sample?—I rather mention it as an exhaustive list of the causes of failure, than as quite a representative sample of the different reports. I believe Merthyr Tydvil is not an entirely agricultural district.

28,080. What do you find as to keeping accounts, which is one of the requirements under the Act, at least indirectly, inasmuch as the court has to take into account that question, when it comes to consider whether it shall give a discharge?—The accounts are very badly kept when they are kept; in fact, they are frequently not kept at all. I would summarise the chief causes of insolvency in this way. The Official Receiver for Carmarthen says, "No doubt "during the last three years agricultural "depression and the constant reduction of "prices in farming stock have, in many cases, "been the immediate cause of failure, but the "real cause in most cases have been want of "capital, resulting in being obliged to borrow "money at a high rate of interest. Occasionally "it was found that the tenants had purchased "their holdings at a high price with borrowed "moneys, the interest of which was higher "than the rent formerly paid." The Merthyr Tydvil Receiver's report I have already given you. The Cardiff Official Receiver reports that "In most of the cases in his district the farmers

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

" have been ignorant men, keeping no books of " account of any kind, and I should say great " muddlers. In one instance a respectably edu- " cated man, but practically without capital, " took a farm from a relative, giving a bill of " sale on all his stock. The relative shortly " afterwards pressed for payment and took pos- " session, leading to the farmer filing his peti- " tion." The Newport Official Receiver, after enumerating several cases similar to the foregoing, adds of one farmer that " he complained " that the rent of his farm was too high, but " he knew of several persons who were prepared " to take it at the same rent, as soon as he left " it." The Official Receiver for Newtown quotes the case of a farmer who " had been gradually " going from bad to worse, paying pretty well " cent. per cent. to professional money lenders." I think these fairly represent the general causes of insolvency throughout the whole of Wales.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,081. Cent. per cent. he says?—Yes, interest on loans.

Mr. Grove.

28,082. I suppose in the majority of cases no books of account are kept at all?—I should not like to answer that question further than saying, that as a rule, the books are very badly kept. In a large number of cases there are none. I could not say whether really in the actual majority of cases, books were kept or not.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,083. You have given us the statistics for the last three years, which would be the three years of depression in Wales, probably owing to the fall in the price of cattle. Can you say how these three years correspond with, say, 10 years ago?—Unfortunately I am not able to do that. I could, with some trouble, no doubt procure the information, but we have not kept statistics of the numbers or amounts of failures in particular trades, further back than the last three years. We have not classified them. Still the information could be got out.

28,084. That seems to me to be the important matter, to know whether the failures are greater now than they were 10 years ago?—If the information is limited to Wales, it could be got out without a very great amount of trouble. It would take a very considerable amount of time to get it out now with reference to the whole failures in England and Wales.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,085. I think it would be very useful if you could let us know the number of agricultural failures?—I shall be happy to do so, and shall have a table prepared showing the number, and other particulars, of all the failures in Wales since 1884, when the present Bankruptcy Act came into operation, and distinguishing the agricultural from the general failures. (See Appendix.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

28,086. So far as the Act of 1869 is concerned, you have nothing at the Board of Trade that would enable you to give the information?—Nothing whatever.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,087. The Bankruptcy Act was passed in 1883, I think?—Yes.

28,088. I am afraid a comparison would be made rather nugatory, would it not, by the change in circumstances; owing to the passing of the Act, for some considerable time the Bankruptcy Act was very little used, I mean the number of cases of private arrangements increased and the number of bankruptcies which came before you were very much diminished?—I think not; that would certainly not apply to the case of agricultural insolvencies in Wales. On the contrary, the number of deeds of arrangement in earlier years were very few indeed. That is since 1883, but I cannot give you information earlier than 1888. I have noticed, so far as farmers are concerned, generally throughout the country, the proportion of deeds of arrangement have been extremely few. What you have said is to some extent correct, perhaps, with regard to other trades in large towns.

28,089. I am not sure whether the second Act, which you have mentioned, about the deeds of arrangement, enforced every deed of arrangement coming before you, even when it is signed by everyone of the creditors?—Yes. No deed of arrangement is legal, unless it is registered with the Registrar of Bills of Sale.

28,090. Then does it come under the term of a deed of arrangement, if every creditor has joined in it?—Yes; it is possible the debtor may go round to his creditors and say to them personally, " will you take 5*s.* in the £ in discharge of your debt?" and so arrange with each individual creditor and have no deed at all; but if he executes a deed, whatever it be, if it is to pay less than 20*s.* in the £, or to give time, that deed requires to be registered, otherwise it is illegal.

28,091. So that the figures would be very fairly typical, if we could get them at the two dates. There is a question, about the money lenders and rate of interest, that I want to ask you. Do you think extravagant rates are charged in Wales to any great extent?—I am afraid they are; in some districts I know they are.

28,092. What class of money lender is it?—Small loan and discount offices in such places as Swansea and Cardiff. There are small money lenders, who lend not only to farmers, but to all classes. They take considerable risks and they charge very heavy rates.

28,093. And in cases of personal loans from their relatives, are high rates usual in Wales, or would 5 per cent. be about it?—I could not say.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,094. Could you tell us, whether this want of capital has arisen of late years, or has it been so for the last 20 years. What I mean is, have not a great many of the farmers been rún out in their capital—that farmers well to do 20 years ago, have now gone back to a state almost of bankruptcy?—That is not what I gather to be the views of the official receivers who have reported to me. It is rather that the tenants have commenced business inadequately, or with no capital.

28,095. Bankrupts, as a rule, try to make out a good case?—I am giving you the opinions of the official receivers. As a rule bankrupts do not advance the argument that they started without capital, but the official receivers in summarising the results of the last 10 years' experience, have reported to me as I have stated.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,096. The four or five cases which you gave in the Carmarthen County Court, were all cases of farmers who, within recent years, had taken a particular farm and then failed; they were not the cases of farmers who had been, for a long time, engaged in the farming business?—No, these were all cases which have occurred comparatively recently, and farmers who have taken farms with the capital stated or without capital.

28,097. It looks rather as though the greater number of the farming failures were cases of men, who had comparatively recently commenced the business, does it not, judging from that report?—I should not like to commit myself to that without further inquiry. The Official Receiver does not give the dates when they took the farms.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,098. It would be very important to get that, because we should then be able to judge?—I will undertake to supply that evidence as to Carmarthen which I have promised.*

28,099. The statistics you have given show that there is a great rush for land in Wales, notwithstanding the high rent and the depression?—I think so. I think that is the conclusion I should draw, but I gather that it is a rush by largely impecunious men.

28,100. And some parts of Wales are very thickly populated?—Yes, that is so. There is one point which I wish to suggest to the Commission. I do not know whether you care to have my opinion upon it, but there is a certain feature in agricultural tenancies not confined to Wales, it is equally common probably in England, but I think it does throw some light upon the character of the tenants with regard to their pecuniary condition. The point is this, we very frequently come across cases where, by extreme conditions imposed in the lease, such as forfeiture of the farmer's stock and tillages, and the ejection of the farmer upon his becoming bankrupt or executing a deed of arrangement, the whole of the assets pass out of his control and out of the control of his creditors. I should think that that had a tendency to prevent men of more substantial capital from taking the farms, or competing for farms with men of less substantial means.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,102. What did the court adjudge?—The matter did not come before the court. I only had this report a few days ago. The matter has not come to issue, but the question has come before me in connexion with several English bankruptcies, and in one of them the opinion of counsel was taken in a somewhat similar case, where the question was whether on the termination of a lease by disclaimer, the landlord was bound to pay for hay, straw, &c. on the farm, or whether the trustee in bankruptcy of the tenant could sell it. The opinion was as follows:—"(1.) "The provision in the lease by which the landlord "is to pay for unconsumed hay, straw, &c. at "valuation price is one which, in my opinion, "comes into operation only when the tenancy "expires by effluxion of time or notice. It does "not apply where the tenancy comes to an end by "disclaimer or (I think) forfeiture. The landlord, "therefore, will not be bound to take the hay "and straw at valuation prices. As regards "tillages also the matter is quite clear. If "there is a disclaimer the landlord cannot be

* See question 28,603. The witness has supplied the Secretary with the information promised, which is as follows:—

The 1st case of liabilities for	423*l.*	had held	his farm for	18	years.
„ 2nd	„	„	695*l.*	„	„	6	„
„ 3rd	„	„	953*l.*	„	„	13	„
„ 4th	„	„	620*l.*	„	„	16	„
„ 5th	„	„	1,351*l.*	„	„	4	„

" compelled to pay for the value of tillages. " (2.) The trustee cannot sell the hay, straw, &c. " Before disclaimer he is absolutely prevented " from doing so by the covenant and by the " statute 56 George III. c. 50. s. 11; and after " disclaimer he would have no right to go " on to the farm to remove the hay, straw, &c., " nor, I think, would he be at liberty to remove " them." And several cases are quoted. " (3.) " I do not think that the trustee can by any " means remove hay and straw for purposes of " sale. (4.) The result of disclaimer is, I think, " that the hay and straw remain the property " of the trustee but cannot be removed by him, " and that the landlord cannot be compelled to " purchase at any valuation prices. . . . The " result follows, that if the landlord takes to and " consumes the hay and straw, which are the " property of the trustee, he must pay the " value of what he takes and consumes, that is, " the ordinary market value."

28,103. A disclaimer was referred to: I suppose the disclaimer is by the trustee or the Official Receiver, where he is trustee under the Bankruptcy Act, of a term of years, is he not?—It need not be a term of years. He is liable for rent if he does not disclaim, whatever the agreement may be.

28,104. Of course, he must disclaim a tenancy from year to year or he becomes liable for the rent, I use the words "term of years" for shortness there; but, according to the contention in the Welsh case, the landlord alleged that without any disclaimer the term or tenancy was at an end?—Yes, the tenancy was terminated by the bankruptcy in accordance with the lease.

28,105. And we have had several agreements put before us in North Wales, in which apparently that result would follow, that the term ends upon a certain event, namely, the insolvency of the tenant?—Yes, the term ends.

28,106. And then there is nothing left for the Official Receiver or the trustee to disclaim?—Probably that would be so.

28,107. The opinion you have read, rather seems to apply to leases, than an ordinary tenancy from year to year?—The same principle would apply, I should submit, in the case whether the lease was terminated by disclaimer or by a forfeiture clause. The Official Receiver would be entitled to the hay or stock upon the land, although the lease was ended, but he is not able to get it.

expense of the tenant's creditors, by seizing the stock which remains upon the farm, when that tenant becomes bankrupt.

28,109. I gather you think, although apparently, at first sight, this clause is beneficial to a landlord and tenant as against the general body of creditors, yet in the long run, you think it is detrimental to the landlord's interest, because it encourages the letting of farms to persons without capital?—I think so. I think it is detrimental to all concerned; it is demoralising because it is unjust.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,110. It incites an unnatural competition for land?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,111. Do you know any case where the tenant has attributed his failure to a great extent, to the landlord enforcing his claims for dilapidations?—No, I do not.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,112. I suppose the tenant farmers of Wales are very much smaller than the ordinary run of tenant farmers in England?—I should say so.

28,113. Does your experience enable you to judge, how far the present Bankruptcy Acts meet the case of the very small farmers. Are the expenses reduced to a fair proportion of the assets as compared with larger cases?—I think so. They have been very considerably reduced in all cases, both large and small, since the beginning of the Act, but it depends so much upon the circumstances of the case; and where there are involved questions of litigation and claims as to farming stock, sometimes the costs are considerable. But I could give you, I daresay, the per-centage of costs.

28,114. I do not want that. I was merely asking your opinion whether there was any grievance on the part of the little farmers, of the expense of the bankruptcy?—No, there would be no complaint on the part of the farmers, because it really does not affect them, but their creditors. I have never heard of any such complaint, however, on the part of either.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,115. You have stated that the causes assigned for bankruptcy in England, as well as Wales, are frequently attributed to want of capital to start their business?—Yes.

28,116. We will assume that the cases are equal in England and in Wales, but inasmuch as the holdings are less in Wales than they are in England, does it not occur to you that the competition for farms in Wales must be keener than it is in England, because a less capital is required on a small holding than on a large holding?—There are some very small holdings in England, but as a rule no doubt the holdings in Wales are smaller.

28,117. I think so, so far as my knowledge goes?—I do not know that the competition is greater; it may be so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

28,118. Would it not occur to you that if the holdings are smaller, and the cases, we will say, were equal proportionally in England and in Wales, where the reasons supplied for the bankruptcy would be that there was want of sufficient capital to start, such an inference might be drawn?—I am afraid I could not, with any advantage, express an opinion upon that question.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,119. May I put it in another way. In Wales the stepping-stone from the labourer to the farmer is one much easier and more readily taken than it is in England, and therefore the number of persons who save a little money, but hardly enough to commence, get on to the ladder and get on to the small farms with but small capital. In old days they would earn more and go on all right, but in these days, with the fall in the price of stock, and so on, of course, the original want of capital applies so much more strongly?—I should think that is so, but I have not turned my mind to the subject, and I have no special information about it.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,120. You mentioned several cases of men beginning to farm without any money of their own or a very small amount of money of their own. Is that anything like in England, do you think?—I should think not. I have not the same information with regard to English farmers, because I have not specially directed my attention to the subject, until I knew I was going to appear before this Commission. I could not give the same information with regard to the English cases at present.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,121. Is it not a fact that the statistics you have given, prove that the large farmers have suffered more than the small ones? I see the liabilities in 1891 are given as 10,471*l.* and in 1893 as 32,708*l.*?—No doubt the liabilities have increased.

28,122. Does it not show that the largest farmers are suffering most?—If the large amount of liabilities corresponds with the size and value of the farms, that would be so, and I suppose it may be taken that is so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,123. There is a question put in by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "Can you, from your experi- "ence, suggest any way in which landlords "could ascertain whether intending tenants "really possessed capital?"—Not from my official experience, certainly. There are ways and means by which that information can sometimes be obtained, but it has not come before me officially.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. Pritchard Morgan, M.P., called and examined.

Chairman.

See 27,790 –1, 28,232.

28,124. You are Member of Parliament, I think, for Merthyr Tydvil in Glamorganshire?—I am.

Chairman—continued.

With reference to the manner in which tenants of the Crown are treated in Wales (I am speaking now of mining tenants), if a man applies to the Woods and Forests Office for a license to work a State mine—a Crown mine—he is referred to the landowner. The Woods and Forests Office always has hitherto acted purely and simply as a landlord's agent, and in no other capacity, and they have wrung out from the miners every possible fraction that they could ever get from them. In practice, a miner applies for a license to work upon a piece of land, the surface of which belongs to the landowner. The Woods and Forests thereupon write to the landowner, and inform him that a miner has discovered a Crown mine upon his, the landowner's, land, and they thereupon give the landowner an option to take up a lease for that land, instead of the man who has made the discovery.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,126. A lease for the mining of the land?—A lease for the mining of the land. That to my mind is a gross injustice. It has always been the practice of the Woods and Forests Office to do that. In one case, on property adjoining one of my properties at Dolmelynllyn, near Dolgelly, a miner applied for a license to work a State mine containing gold upon that property. They thereupon wrote to the landowner and offered him a lease. He declined to take the lease if there were any working conditions. They submitted a lease to him with working conditions in it, and he sent it back striking out the working conditions. They threatened him that if he did not accept the lease on their terms, they would grant it to someone else, but upon further consideration they struck out the working conditions from that lease, and granted a lease for a large area of this land containing this Crown mine, which is known to be valuable—a lease for 30 years, capitalising the royalties at 1*l.* per annum; so that this State mine has been locked up by the Woods and Forests Office, which is the agent for the State, because the State holds these mines for the Crown for the time being; it has locked up this valuable property for 30 years for 1*l.* per annum. That, I say, is a complaint which ought to come under the notice of this Commission, with regard to the Woods and Forests Office.

28,127. Do you mean 1*l.* per acre, or 1*l.* for the whole?—1*l.* for the whole lease, that lease being, I think, of something like 2,000 acres. I do not know the area of the lease, but I know that the estate is 2,000 acres. Whether the lease covered the whole or not, I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,128. Do you mean to say that that was a dead rent, or that they capitalised the royalties?—They capitalised the royalties at 1*l.* per annum. I, myself, have taken advantage of that precedent, and they have granted to me a similar lease of land, but when I asked to be allowed to work there on a moderate royalty, they said, "No, you shall not work unless you pay 3⅓ per "cent. royalty," which I cannot afford to pay. The Woods and Forests Office, up to 10 years ago, were charging royalties, which were absolutely prohibitive. They were induced by pressure to reduce them from time to time, until they had now reduced them to 1*l.* per cent., but only for a period of five years, and notwithstanding the fact that I hold leases from the Crown of many properties for 30 years, I can get no fixity of royalties whatever, from this office, which represents the State. In one particular property, I have explained to the Woods and Forests Office, that one year of the five has practically gone. It will take me two years to put in an adit, upon which we have now spent a large sum of money, so that at the end of two years, I hope to arrive at a point where we may get something remunerative. Then I shall only have two years during which to work at 1 per cent., and then I shall be entirely and absolutely at the mercy of the Crown, and they can raise the royalties back to 3⅓ per cent. again. That percentage of 3⅓ per cent., it must be distinctly understood, is upon the turnover of the mine, and not upon the profits, and having regard to the fact, as I say, that the farmers are helped very materially by the mining industries to pay their rents, and to exist, I have asked them to take a share of the profits, and I have offered them over and over again 2½ per cent. on the profit, instead of 1 per cent. on the product, and this they have declined to take, but there is no reason why they should not.

Mr. Grove.

28,129. Did you offer them any certain rent at the same time?—There is always a certain small rent, a certain nominal rent.

28,130. But supposing no profits were made, would you be prepared to increase that certain rent?—They have proposed a sliding scale, but as I have explained to them, and as every mining man can explain to them, it is absolutely impracticable, that is to say, you may have a vein of gold-bearing rock containing half an ounce to the ton, and that would be far more valuable to the miner than a vein six inches thick which contained as many ounces to the ton, but the effect of the practice of the Woods and Forests Office in sending the miner to the landowner is this, that the landowner dictates his own terms, and the Woods and Forests say, and properly say—it is the law undoubtedly—"The base "metals in the land belong to the landowner, "and the precious metals belong to the Crown; "you must go to the landowner, and obtain a "license for the base metals, before we give you "a license for the precious metals." But these base metals are of no value whatever. They exist there in infinitesmal quantities, and are not workable at a profit.

Lord Kenyon.

28,131. They have been worked?—Not in the gold mines.

28,132. But base metals have been worked so as to be valuable, copper and lead?—That is perfectly true; there are valuable copper and lead mines in Wales.

28,133. But you say not in payable quantities?—Not in payable quantities in lodes where the gold is in payable quantities. That has always been the rule in Wales, and it is generally the rule throughout the whole world. But to take one instance, my own mine, in the last month, has produced 700*l.* worth of gold. I had to pay the Crown 7*l.* That I do not complain of, but through their forcing me into the position of going to the landowner, the landowner gets from that a ground rent, a dead rent of 300*l.* a year, so that that would be 25*l.* a month, and he gets 25*l.* as against 7*l.* which the Crown gets.

Chairman.

28,134. You produced 700*l.* worth of gold last month?—Yes.

28,135. Then the Crown gets how much?—The Crown gets 7*l.* of that.

28,136. They take 7*l.* as royalty, that is to say, 1 per cent. up to the first five years. Is that so?—Yes, that is so, five years from last spring.

28,137. Then do you say the landowner got 25*l.*?—Yes; 300*l.* a year but for many years past this same landowner has been getting 750*l.* a year.

28,138. He took 25*l.*, and then the rest of it was yours?—Yes, the rest of it, beside the 7*l.* to the Crown.

28,139. That was 32*l.* out of 700*l.*?—Yes.

28,140. 700*l.* being the gross value of the gold?—Yes; I will explain that in a moment.

28,141. Is that what you call the turnover of the mine?—Yes, the turnover of the mine. I will give you the exact figures: 773*l.* 10*s.* was the value of the gold, so that the Crown would have very nearly 8*l.* and the landowner would get 25*l.*, that is to say, the landowner would get more than three times what the Crown gets. But from that same property, the landowner has been receiving for some years past 750*l.* a year. Only very lately he has reduced it to 300*l.* He has received that entirely in consequence of the action of the Crown, in not granting licenses to persons to work mines that belong to the Crown, but sending them to another landowner. In an action, in which I brought the Crown up to the Court of Appeal, it was definitely decided as the law, that the gold belonged to the Crown, and the Crown Law Officers are of opinion that one of the easements of the Crown was to enter upon the land to divert the water, or to do anything that the Crown liked for the development of the Crown property, but as I say, although they put me to enormous expense in trying these questions, they will not insist upon their rights, and grant miners licenses to work Crown mines.

28,142. Do you claim then that the Woods and Forests might have given you permission to go and open a gold mine, without consulting the landlord in any way at all?—Certainly reserving to the landlord, as they should reserve, proper compensation for surface damage, or any damage which the land, qua land, may sustain.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,143. The Court of Appeal decided, I suppose, that there was a kind of easement of necessity, or at any rate that the Crown had a right to enter upon the lands of any subject, in order to work a gold mine?—Yes, and they decided that I should not take away the gold from the freehold farm on which I was working, without the permission of the Crown, and that the whole of the gold belonged to the Crown. I am mining for the Crown to-day, the Crown giving me 99 per cent. of the product for carrying on the works. That is the legal position we are in.

28,144. In the case of a coal mine, for instance, the leases now have assumed practically a settled form?—Yes.

28,145. But there is always, where there is a lease of the surface, for instance, and the minerals are reserved as a matter of course to the landlord, a clause put in that the landlord may pay fair and reasonable compensation for any surface and other damage done by the exercise of the reserved power?—Yes.

28,146. What I understand you to say is this, that it would be expedient in the public interest for the Crown to grant leases direct to men like yourself, who are willing to undertake the operation?—Yes.

28,147. To go and mine under a given area, always provided that fair compensation for any surface damage shall be paid to any person interested in the surface?—That is so; that is my contention.

28,148. But now is there not some difficulty about that, owing to the fact that whereas the precious metals are vested in the Crown, the other minerals under the soil belong to the freeholder, and not to the Crown. How do you propose that the interests of those, in whom the other metals are vested, should be protected against damage?—I will tell you how I propose that. The area containing the base and the precious metals has to be mined; that will be mined at the expense of the gold miner; he, by his process, would only take out of the ore, the gold and silver, both of which belong to the Crown. The ore would be mined and crushed, and there could be a reservation in the lease, that the mine owner should be entitled to put in a tail race and take the whole of the takings, after the gold and precious metals had been extracted.

28,149. Practically you would give everything, except the precious metal itself, to the landowner?—Yes, allowing the man who works the mine to take out his own metals in his own way, because the mercury, which is used in the process, has no affinity for anything except gold and silver.

28,150. And that would be rather a strong interference with the existing amenities,—to put them no higher,—of the rights of property?—I am a large landowner myself, and therefore I speak sympathetically as a landowner. I should not advocate anything of the sort. But where the base metals are not there in any appreciable quantities, nor in any workable quantities, the working of a gold mine does the landowner no harm. On the contrary, it is doing him good, because it is settling down population in his district.

28,151. I suppose you would not object to a further provision in the interests of all parties concerned except, perhaps, that of the mining adventurer, viz., that he should give some guarantee?—For surface damage.

28,152. For surface damage, and for other damage?—Certainly, I should have no objection to that at all. Then there is another instance; I am paying 150*l.* a year dead rent now to a landowner, being forced into that position again by the Woods and Forests Office, in order to protect myself with regard to a waterfall that is on an adjoining farm. In another instance, I paid a landowner, through the practice of the Woods and Forests Office, 400*l.* for allowing me to look on his farm to see whether there was any gold there, and I did not find any. This is the position that the Crown agent puts the miner in, with regard to other landowners.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,153. Would you allow a mine to be opened in the middle of a park, or before the windows of a mansion ?—No, certainly, that I should not allow, and the law has already provided for that, in the old cases where leases were granted by the Crown to work these mines. Many people have worked in the Welsh mines before me, hundreds of years ago. There were always reservations with regard to park lands.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,154. You do not, in fact, object to any reasonable restrictions, conditions, and covenants in the licenses ?—I do not in the slightest degree, but taking the case to which I have just referred, where the lands were locked up for 30 years against the miner, to the detriment of the interests of the public, the case is as strong a case, I think, as I could bring before this Commission, with regard to the conduct of the Woods and Forest Commissioners in the past.

28,155. A good deal turns, does it not, in regard to the policy of a department like that of the Woods and Forests, upon the question of whether an industry of this character is likely to be profitable, looking at it from a certain broad point of view ?—Yes; that is a question which should be taken into consideration no doubt; but the fact remains, and the evidence of it was brought before the House of Commons the day before the House rose, in answer to a question put by Mr. Molloy, that the average value of the yield of gold in Wales is greater than the average yield of gold in Witwatersrandt.

Chairman.

28,156. In South Africa ?—Yes, in South Africa, a pennyweight to the ton greater than the milling returns in South Africa. They treat their tailings afterwards, and their concentrates. That we have never done to any great extent, because we have not got to that condition yet, when we can save our tailings. We have no concentrating machinery. I would like to call the attention of the Commission to a few lines in the "Engineering and Mining Journal," of New York, to which my attention was called two or three days ago. It says, in speaking of the prospect of a revival of gold mining in England, and so on: "If these veins were in a "new country like America or South Africa, "they could undoubtedly be worked at a profit, "but the condition of things in the United "Kingdom is such, that all profit would be "swamped by the landlord and the Crown." That is the opinion of the leading scientific journal in New York.

With regard to a question which his Lordship, the Chairman, put to me, as to the amount we had to pay last month. I should say that last month and the month before were the two first months that we have had profit for a very long time. We had lost, not the veins, but lost the run of gold, and we have been over two and a half years practically looking for it. But the figures are these: about 120,000*l.* has been spent upon the mine altogether in machinery and development, and we have taken out of that mine 80,000*l.* worth of gold. The shareholders have had 10,500*l.* in dividends, and we have upon the ground, 60,000*l.* worth of machinery, buildings, and erections. That will show that the industry (although people have not made a great profit out of it, they have, as it were, the profits upon their shelves) is one in which the profits are there expended upon the ground, because it is obvious that if we only had 40,000*l.* worth of capital available, and we have 60,000*l.* worth of machinery and buildings upon the ground, and have paid 10,000*l.* odd in dividends, that the industry itself must have been a profitable industry, notwithstanding the fact that it has not paid a great dividend.

28,157. There was 120,000*l.* spent on the mine ?—On the mine, and buildings and machinery, on everything.

28,185. Then 80,000*l.* worth of gold was taken out ?—Yes.

28,159. 60,000*l.* went into buildings, I understand ?—60,000*l.* of the 120,000*l.*

28,160. Then, out of the 80,000*l.* worth of gold taken out, how much went to the shareholders ?—10,500*l.*, and all the rest has been spent upon the mine.

28,161. 40,000*l.* original capital ?—40,000*l.* was the total cash capital.

Lord Kenyon.

28,162. In how many years is that ?—It extended over about five or six years since we got the machinery there. It is about three years since the new mill was completed.

28,163. Do you mean to say the 80,000*l.* has been made in five years ?—No, since we started originally 80,000*l.* is the produce of the mine. What I am about to say does not altogether refer to this one mine; it refers to other mines. There are three other mines in a small way in Wales. The answer in the House of Commons was, that 43,650 tons of ore had been worked in North Wales, and it yielded 23,716 ounces of gold, or nearly 11 pennyweights to the ton.

28,164. What is the name of that mine ?—This had reference to the whole of Wales. That was inclusive. The question was, what were the returns of Wales, not the returns of a mine; but most of it, I may say, came from this one mine, the great proportion of it.

Chairman.

28,165. What is the name of this mine that you mention, that the 120,000*l.* was spent on ?—The Morgan mine. Then, consequent upon the action of the Woods and Forests Office, I have been compelled to buy lands in order that I might get these easements, so as not to be harassed and not to be (without putting it too strongly) imposed upon by the landowners, encouraged as they are by the Woods and Forests Office. I have paid, in the purchase of freehold lands in Wales, altogether 40,500*l.*, and most of these lands I should not have bought at all, if I could have obtained from the Woods and Forests Office licenses to work mines, which they are supposed to administer. Then, again, there are large areas of Crown lands in Wales to which I particularly desire to call the attention of the Commission. Competent authorities say that in this particular locality, there is a gold-bearing zone of 20 miles in length by about four miles in breadth, and those lands have for all time, most of them, been reserved by the advisers of the Crown, knowing that they contained gold, and waiting for science to develop some cheap means and processes, and those lands I would desire to throw open, as they are thrown open in America and Australia. I am speaking now of Crown lands, in which the landowners have no interest whatever, and where the Crown has the surface rights; and I contend that those mines should be thrown open, so that the prospector may go out with his pick and shovel and find gold, and go about from place to place with a license, for which he should pay a sum of 12*s.* or 15*s.*, or something like that, instead of, as now, having to go to the Woods and Forests Office, and they inquiring whether he has 1,000*l.* or 2,000*l.* in the bank, and then telling him he must take a lease from them of 3,000, or 4,000, or 5,000 acres of land when he only wants five acres; that he must pay for that lease to the Woods and Forests Office 20 or 30 guineas; that he must pay a dead rent; and that he must send in his reports and make declarations, and all that sort of thing. If those Crown lands had been opened in Wales, as I have been contending for many years past they should be, many men would have obtained not only for them, perhaps, large sums of money, but a very much greater number of men would have obtained regular employment. It is impossible to open up a gold field, unless working miners have access to it.

Mr. Grove.

28,166. Could the working miners do much good without capital?—Yes. The way in which all gold fields of Australia and America have been opened out is this: There are two miners together—they always run in pairs—and one miner goes to the butcher, and the other miner goes to the baker, and they are paid, each of them, one-half the ordinary wages—what is called "backing money." They go out ferreting and prospecting, and if they find a place which comes to anything it is divided by four; that is to say, they have received sustenance money—half wages—and then the other men stand in with them; and so all the gold fields of Australia have been opened out in exactly that way.

28,167. Are not the geological conditions very different in Australia, to what they are in Wales?—With regard to the geological conditions of the principal gold fields of Australia, every geological feature is identical with that of North Wales.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,168. Is the gold at all near the surface?—Yes, it is near the surface, some of it, and then it goes down in "shoots" or "chimneys" as they are called.

Lord Kenyon.

28,169. You have had great experience in gold mining, I think, in Australia and other places?—I have.

28,170. On sentimental grounds do you think that gold mining is good for the community in general?—That is a very great question. I do not think it is good for any member of the community to have too much money.

28,171. No doubt every member of the community would agree to that. What I mean is this: In your experience of Australia and all other countries, does not gold mining conduce rather to bring the scum of the earth together?—Not necessarily so.

28,172. Is there not a peculiar lust about gold?—It follows as a natural consequence that if gold is announced to exist in a particular district the most daring men will go there after it, and the desperadoes go to gold fields, but they find their level, because there is a code of honour which is far more effective than any of the laws of England, if a man, however great a scoundrel he may be, is found putting his fingers upon another man's gold, he is hung upon the nearest gum tree.

28,173. Certainly, because, perhaps, that sort of law is more fit for those countries than for England. But take a little peaceful village in a valley; do you think that an ordinary gold mining population, such as exists perhaps in Australia, would be of benefit to the population there?—In a peaceful village such as your lordship refers to, the men have come to me, and the women too, with tears in their eyes, begging me to give them 2*s.* a day for them to exist upon, and I have been in the habit of paying in that way for stores and wages, 1,000*l.* a month at this gold mine.

28,174. Then you are of opinion that it would be a distinct benefit to the community?—A distinct benefit, certainly, by giving employment. The men, who work in that mine, are as honest as you could possibly desire or expect any class of men to be.

28,175. I do not say for a moment that they are not, but the fact remains that in other countries it has brought, as you say, desperadoes and ruffians together?—Certainly.

Chairman.

28,176. But not in every instance?—Oh, no.

28,177. I know the miners of Broken Hill very well; I went there when there were only six policemen in the place; there was no magistrate and no mayor, and there was not a six-shooter in the whole community?—I have seen 6,000 men, a per-centage of them being these desperadoes, and perhaps with one policeman and the policeman would form a ring, if there was a row and keep order whilst the fight was going on.

It is really a mistake to believe that the miners of precious metals are desperadoes.

Lord Kenyon.

28,178. I do not mean to say that they are, as a whole, at all?—Of course a desperado is as likely to be attracted there as a capitalist.

28,179. What I mean to say is this, that some people may have that in their minds, when they charge you an excessive rent?—I might admit this proposition, that there are a great many residents in North Wales, who would much prefer reserving their lands for shooting in the winter, and their streams for fishing in the summer, to seeing an industry created in the district, which would give employment to thousands of men.

28,180. I do not see why it should interfere with either the shooting or the fishing. I have seen a number of places opened on the hills, and I cannot see that it has affected the shooting in any way?—Well, with miners walking across these hills, the grouse do not appreciate being kicked, I suppose.

Mr. Grove.

28,181. I suppose they never poach, do they?—I do not suppose there is much poaching. When I say "poaching," of course they take all the ground game they can find; I mean so far as preserve birds are concerned, I do not think there is, and I do not think there is very much poaching with regard to fishing.

Lord Kenyon.

28,182. You think that the landowner on that account charges an excessive rent?—I think, perhaps, if I were a landowner, qua landowner, and had plenty of money, and I devoted my life to sport and pleasure, I should not be at all pleased to see a large number of miners continually walking over my land.

28,183. How do you account for the large coal fields which are worked in Wales. They have been opened by the landowners, to start with?—In some few instances they have.

28,184. There is no objection made to them, in fact, I think that landowners rather rush to coal whenever they can get a chance?—Yes, that is perfectly true, they have no Crown interference.

28,185. What you would suggest would be a fair rent, or a fair per-centage for the Crown and for the landowner?—I have made various suggestions to the Woods and Forests Office. The suggestion which I am most in favour of is this; that in the case of the lands being Crown lands the Crown should receive 5 per cent. of the profits of those lands; that in the case of their being private lands, the landowner should receive 2½ per cent. of the profits, and the Crown 2½ per cent. of the profits, and I think that is an equitable distribution. That is one of the suggestions which I have made to the Woods and Forests Office. Then I have suggested also, that if they cannot see their way to varying the principle of royalties, by taking a proportion of the profits instead of a proportion of the product, then the Crown should receive 2 per cent. in the case of Crown lands, and 1 per cent. in the case of private lands, and that the landowner should receive 1 per cent. in the case of private lands.

28,186. I suppose, you are aware, that on the opening of those gold fields in North Wales, a great number of small people invested money in them?—Yes, they did.

28,187. And I think they have not actually been receiving much dividend, and it has been a great loss of money to them?—Yes, there has been a great loss of money.

28,188. In the case of small people?—There has been a great loss of money; I do not deny that fact. There has not been a return of money. But when I make this observation, it must be taken in conjunction with what I have already said, that the mine has made a profit, and that the mine has in stock double as much as the capital it had.

28,189. As will recoup them?—Double as much as the working capital which they had at their disposal; that is to say, 40,000*l.* minus 10,000*l.* leaves 30,000*l.*, and it has got 60,000*l.* worth of machinery and buildings upon the ground.

28,190. I suppose those machinery and buildings, are only applicable to gold mining?—Most of it, of course, will be applicable to gold-mining, but the steam engines and boilers will be applicable to any other industry.

28,191. I do not quite know how to put it, but do you think those people were over confident in investing their money?—Well, gold mining is more peculiar than any other class of mining perhaps.

28,192. It is very attractive?—It is attractive. I refused 40,000*l.* for one-fourth interest in my discovery in North Wales, a fortnight after I struck that gold. The gold happened to be so rich there, that I took more than my own weight in gold from the mine in less than a fortnight, and that, of course, is necessarily somewhat exciting.

28,193. Am I right in thinking that it was rich to start with, and became less rich as you went on?—Yes, that is so. It was rich for a very considerable time, and then we lost the run of the gold, we lost the shoot of the gold, as it is called.

28,194. I do not know what you call it technically, but it was a pocket, I suppose?—No, the gold runs in shoots, it has been shot about in different ways, and after this it had taken a turn and all our explorations for the last two years, or very nearly all our explorations for the last two years, have been with an object of finding that shoot. I will read you, if I may be allowed to, a line from the manager's report.

28,195. Could you give us also the ounces that were taken out in the first instance?—I cannot give you the ounces taken out in the first instance.

28,196. I mean what relation they had to the per-centage of ore?—It varied. We have had it as high as 200 or 300 ounces to the ton.

28,197. And as low as?—As low as even the tenth of an ounce to the ton, and even one-tenth of an ounce to the ton will pay our cost of milling and tramming and a little over, so that, supposing you spend 5*s.* per ton on your mining, and 5*s.* per ton on treating your ore, if you throw the ore away you have lost 5*s.*, but if you work the gold, you reduce your loss per ton of ore to half a crown. So that in gold mining, you may be producing gold at a loss, and still it may be a profitable operation to you as a miner, —you understand what I mean—you reduce your loss and it is a quality of stone which must be removed, in order to look for the better quality of stone. With regard to the question of the gold, the manager says, "The bulk of the exploration "during recent years has been westward, and the "ground in which we are now sinking and "driving has been comparatively unprospected." You see we anticipated that the gold would have gone west. Then, "We are carrying before us in "virgin ground a fine body of fairly high grade "ore and take out almost every day good speci- "men rock carrying a high per-centage of visible "gold. During the month we have mined and "milled 322 tons of ore which has given us a "yield of 221 ounces of gold, an average of 13 "dwts. 17 grains per ton." Now we have the last six or eight weeks come upon this, as I say old shoot of gold, rich gold. It has taken two or three years to find it. In the meantime, if I produce a little bit of gold, the Woods and Forests want it and they, by their conduct, urge the landowner to want his rent all the time. We were paying 750*l.* a year rent, without getting a pennyworth of gold there. I am pleased to say that latterly, since the change has taken place in the Woods and Forests Office, and the administration of it, there is a sympathetic ear now, and we hope to have a little better treatment in the future than we have had in the past.

28,198. You said that many of the miners could work at the mine and attend to the farm as well?—They work eight hours a day mining, and that would enable them to look at the farm in the morning, and tell their children what to do with the sheep, and what mountain to put them on. I know that unless many of them were miners as well as farmers, they could not possibly pay their rent. I know to my cost what farming means in that mineral part of Wales and on those mountains; I have offered many of my tenants, that if they would pay the interest on the mortgages, they could have the farms for nothing, but they much prefer my paying the interest on the mortgages.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,199. I do not quite follow what the 750*l.* was for?—Given to the landowner in lieu of royalties, because he originally claimed one-twentieth of the gold, and it was an agreed sum given to him, because we anticipated the mine would go on as it was. My point is that the administration of the Woods and Forests Office drives us into that position.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

28,200. That includes the rent of the premises upon which your buildings are as well?—Yes, but then we have to pay 20*l.* an acre for every acre of surface damaged, that is to say, every acre occupied by a building. Of course, when the buildings are taken away, we cannot take away the land with it.

28,201. When you put up a building on the land, you pay 20*l.* for every acre?—Yes, and for tramways as well.

28,202. 750*l.* is the permanent sum you agreed to pay?—It was. It is now reduced to 300*l.*

28,203. You bargained to pay 750*l.* because of the method adopted by the Office of Woods and Forests?—That is so.

28,204. As I understand it, your opinion is that it is a profitable industry?—There is one set of working miners down there, who paid 500*l.* to go into a mine the other day, and bought up the machinery, and they have divided something like 10,000*l.* of profit between them.

28,205. In Wales?—Yes, in Wales; not my mine, another mine; I have no interest in it whatever. Professor Crooks, who is supposed to be the greatest living authority on metals, is at his own expense not only developing a mine, but putting up machinery there now.

28,206. One of the principal points which struck me as advantageous, looking from the thing from the point of view of the community, is that it provides additional work. That is one point you made?—It does provide additional work. When I went down to Wales the miners were glad to work for 2*s.* a day; now they get 3*s.* 6*d.* and 4*s.*

28,207. You think the present is a good time for the development of gold mining in Wales?—I think so, and I am glad to say that the Woods and Forests, since the appointment of Mr. Stafford Howard, have lent a sympathetic ear to it, and the office now seems desirous of encouraging industry. But previous to that there was, to my mind, every possible desire to discourage it by every official.

28,208. Was that as regards every applicant or as regards yourself alone?—As regarded the whole industry, there seemed to be no desire to open it up; it was pooh-poohed at one time when it suited them. It took one of two forms, either the industry is not worth consideration, or else the gold is so rich that you can afford to pay any price that we choose to charge you.

Lord Kenyon.

28,209. As to the ancient history of gold mining, what was the reason it was given up. It is an old industry in Wales?—It is. The mint existed at Aberystwith only 200 years ago, all the gold it got was turned into coins of the realm at Aberystwith, and the gold got not only in those parts, but in Carmarthenshire as well as in Merionethshire. The machinery we have at the

Morgan mine will take one ton of ore in large blocks, and treat it, and take the gold out of it for 1*s.* a ton. That machinery has only been invented since 1847, the date of the Californian rush. The machine is called the Californian stamp, and not before they found the lodes in California was such machinery invented.

28,210. It is not the expense of working that has caused the decay?—No, the alluvial gold of Wales has not been worked out; it can be got in the streams, I can get it as a matter of curiosity, a teaspoonful at a time, in the streams where it accumulates. The alluvial gold was principally worked, and there were very large deposits of alluvial gold in Wales. When the Californian rush took place, they had alluvial gold there alone. That was the first rush. When the alluvial was getting down, the stream of prospecting miners went to the Australias, and then these men, in looking for deep leads, that is old river beds, came across these veins, and then they invented these stamps which have now been used throughout the world for the treatment of ores. I may tell you, even in my time, it used to take an ounce and a half of gold to the ton to make it pay, and now in Wales we can make, with 5 dwts. to the ton, a profit of 7*s.* 6*d.* a ton—that is, a quarter of an ounce to the ton, mining and milling—consequent upon the fact that we have plenty of water and ample facility for working.

28,211. And owing to the fact of its being practically worked out all over the world?—Yes, practically.

28,212. Until more is found?—Yes, and they will go on finding it, I have no doubt. May I make one observation, with your Lordship's permission? Here is an article in the "Mining Journal," of last Saturday, in which they make a comparison between the working of some mines, and there is a property, the Langlaagte Estate in South Africa, and their produce per ton is 1*l.* 13*s.*, that is their average value of the ore per ton. The average value of the ore in Wales, as stated by Sir John Hibbert in the House of Commons, is 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* There, their expenses must be greater than in Wales, so that when the industry gets, as it will get, fair treatment and capital at its disposal, we shall be in exactly the same position as in South Africa. Our gold is of the same value as the South African gold. It varies up and down to within a shilling or two an ounce.

Chairman.

28,213. There is a question put in by Mr. Stafford Howard, the Commissioner of Woods and Forests, "Did Mr. Pritchard Morgan recently "purchase the mine from the liquidator"?—Yes, I did.

28,214. "Have you any objection to say what the price was"?—I did not purchase the mine from the liquidator, I purchased the machinery from the liquidator. I purchased the movable machinery, the mine reverted to me under the lease. The mine, the buildings, could not be removed. I purchased the machinery from the liquidator for 2,000*l.*, that was the movable machinery.

Chairman—continued.

28,215. Mr. Owen Wynne has handed in two or three questions. He asks: "Does not the "Dolmelynllyn Estate you referred to belong to "Mr. Williams"?—It does.

28,216. "And was he not particularly anxious "not to have his beautiful grounds disfigured "by a mine"?—The application to mine, was (I say it for the information of Mr. Wynne) on the Berthllwyd farm, which is not within sight of the house, and is away from the site of the house on the hill, a long way off.

28,217. "How many farms does the landowner "you refer to own, I mean the landowner to "whom you paid the 750*l.*"?—I really do not know.

28,218. You cannot answer that?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

28,219. Is he a large landowner?—No, I do not think he is; he owns another farm adjoining, I know, but beyond that I do not think he owns any more. I never heard of any.

Chairman.

28,220. There is another question by Mr. Wynne. "Did you say that the Morgan mine "ever paid a dividend to the shareholders, "because Mr. Owen Wynne was a shareholder, "but his money is gone"?—Perhaps it was at the wrong time.

28,221. "He does not quite know where, but "he thinks the first company lost its capital"?—Yes, that is so; the first company lost its capital, or rather it was spent in machinery and development.

Lord Kenyon.

28,222. On Mr. Stafford Howard's question, may I ask this? You say you paid 2,000*l.*?—Yes.

28,223. Was that for what you said was valued at 60,000*l.*?—You must remember there are tramways, electric lighting machinery, compressed air carried a mile in hermetically sealed pipes.

28,224. All this you became possessed of for 2,000*l.*?—All that was movable. Under the laws of England there are certain fixtures, which I presume you know, are not movable by the liquidator or tenant, and revert to the landowner or leaseholder as the case may be.

28,225. You said that 60,000*l.* would be the value to the shareholders in respect of their shares, but you bought it for 2,000*l.*?—Yes, I bought the movable machinery for 2,000*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,226. You took possession on the liquidation of the company?—Upon the liquidation of the company, the lease ceased and determined, and nothing could be moved from there except the movable plant, tools, and so on. The fixtures could not be moved.

Lord Kenyon.

28,227. Supposing the mine was wound up now, what would it represent?—Supposing it was to stop?

28,228. Yes?—It would depend upon me to a great extent what it was worth, because there is no road to the place, except through my own freehold land, and I need not necessarily, I suppose, allow anyone to go over my freehold land. There is practically no road whatever to the place. There is a parish road, but no vehicle has ever to my knowledge traversed it; you have to go through three private farms before you get to the mine.

Mr. Grove.

28,229. If it was taken at what is called a breaking up price, it would be only very small?—It would be small at a breaking up price, and for anyone to take it over the parish road it would be perfectly valueless, because they could not get it away.

Mr. Grove—continued.

28,230. As a going concern?—As a going concern. Assuming the mine to go on there is nothing unnecessary there.

28,231. Your expenditure of 60,000*l.* would cover the work of opening the adits, and so on?—No; to repeat myself, the mine has had available from the public, including myself, 40,000*l.* of cash. We have obtained 80,000*l.* of gold; that makes 120,000*l.* We have paid 10,000*l.* in dividends, and the rest of the money has been expended upon the property and in the administration. I do not say some of it may not have been badly spent; I do not say that some of it might not have been wasted, because when it was a company the expenses of directors, and secretary, and managers, and managers' agents, and managers' female typewriters—all things of that sort—were very great, something like 5,000*l.* a year altogether.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. RUSSELL SOWRAY recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

28,232. Is there anything you wish to rebut?—I desire to say a few words, my Lord. I should wish, if the Commissioners are of that mind, to avoid saying anything at all on the subject of royalties, because that subject has been so thoroughly thrashed out by the Royal Commission on Mining Royalties, and their views have been given at such great length that it seems going over the ground again, which has been very carefully gone over by a Commission specially appointed to consider that question. But as regards any effect upon the surface which mining may have, I should wish to give some words of explanation on behalf of one who, I grieve to say, cannot give that explanation himself; I refer to my lamented chief, the late Mr. George Culley. Of course, Mr. Pritchard Morgan, whose evidence you have just heard, takes one view of the subject, and takes the view of the mining prospector, but the Office of Woods or Mr. Culley, who was then the Commissioner, had not only to take the view of the mining prospector, but also to take the view of the landed proprietor. And Mr. Culley's feeling was this, that this right of the Crown to mines royal was not like an ordinary right of property, which the Crown exercises on a particular property while the subject exercises the same right on some other property, the Crown being very much in the same position, as a landowner, as the subject; but that this was a prerogative right of the Crown, over land which the possessor had a right to consider as his freehold and inheritance, and that any high handed interference with his freehold and inheritance would be irritating and annoying to the proprietor. Mr. Culley, therefore, felt that such a right, a prerogative right of the Crown such as this, should be exercised with some caution and with some consideration for the landowner. Therefore, when the revival of gold mining in Wales took place, on the discovery of a shoot of gold at the Morgan mine, Mr. Culley, after visiting the mine, had to consider what attitude he should take as regards the searches for gold upon land, the freehold and inheritance of which belonged to the subject. Speaking of the general policy, no words of mine could give such a happy description of it, as the words of an authority who wrote upwards of 200 years ago, and whose words I should like to give in place of any words of my own. Sir John Petters, in his Fodinæ Regales, says, "for I conceive the King and kingdom's "interest is first to be considered; next how "the proprietors may be sweetened, by profit to "them, that they may not only concur in the "voluntary discoveries, but assist in their "operations (and this may be done without "diminution of the King's prerogative)." That, I think, describes in very happy language, the policy which Mr. Culley pursued after this fresh discovery of gold in Wales. This is the mode in which Mr. Culley proceeded, (I am speaking now entirely of mines royal in private lands, not in lands in which the Crown had mineral rights otherwise). A notice was published warning "all persons searching for gold "and silver not to raise or remove any gold or "silver, or any gold or silver ore or quartz, "without having obtained the requisite authority from the Commissioner of Woods." And when our local agents reported, that any searches were going on in private lands, a

Chairman—continued.

"your right of soil, and of your becoming res-"ponsible for the payment of the Crown dues." That letter sometimes produced a reply in which the proprietor stated that he was disposed to take a lease, and the conditions of such leases were that the royalty was fixed at a rate which it was considered would allow the proprietor to enjoy about half the full royalty payable by the tenant. That was a concession which was made in consideration of the peculiar nature of the Crown's right. In some cases, of course, the landowner did not concur, and in those cases as Mr. Culley felt that it was very desirable that any applicant for the gold should also have the right to the baser metals, he usually suggested to the applicant that he should obtain from the proprietor a lease of the baser metals, and then he would have a lease of the gold from the Crown. I think that generally explains the policy which Mr. Culley pursued, and as to any future dealings, Mr. Stafford Howard is here, and I have no right to speak for him as to the future.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Stafford Howard called and examined.

Chairman.

made, not for the first time, that the royalties have been entirely prohibitive, I have only to refer the Commissioners to the report of the Commissioners on Mining Royalties, where they come to an entirely different conclusion. But I do think it would be an advantage, if something could be done to carry out one of the recommendations of that Royal Commission as regards the settling the question of wayleaves. We have several of those questions now coming up, and I do think that some of those who have properties, which have to be crossed over for purposes of this kind, are asking something which is unreasonable, and it does put those who wish to mine and honestly carry it on as an industry, not merely for the purpose of speculation or floating companies, in a difficulty where these claims are made. I would venture to refer the Commission to that part of the report of the Commission on Mining Royalties, because I do not think anything has been done, and I think it should be done, to carry out the recommendations they made. I think it will be found on page 20 of their report, paragraph 83, at any rate the one to which I particularly refer on the question of wayleaves. If some simple method of assessing surface damage could be established, I think that would be a great help to the industry. I do not know that I have anything more to say, unless any of the Commissioners desire to ask me any questions.

Mr. Grove.

28,234. Would you mind expressing an opinion as to whether you consider the imposition of 750*l.* a year a very heavy sum on the part of the landowner?—I do.

Lord Kenyon.

It has been modified to 300*l.* since.

Mr. Grove.

28,235. Yes, but it was 750*l.* It appears to be most unreasonable?—I do consider it very heavy.

28,236. The wish of your department would be to develop this industry within reasonable lines?—Yes, wherever there is a reasonable prospect of its being carried on.

28,237. Do you agree with Mr. Pritchard Morgan, when he says that the particular reason why he is driven to go to his landlord and to agree to that is, because the Woods and Forests deal with this in a particular way?—I do not think he was necessarily driven to that, because I think he may have gone to the department and explained that he could not get terms. Of course I was not responsible in those days, and I do not know exactly what happened. It is some time ago. The view I take, as I have told Mr. Morgan, is, that he ought not to have taken this if he thought it was an improvident bargain; he should have refused and then he may have put it against the department: "You put such "terms upon us by giving it into the hands of "the landowner, that we cannot mine at all."

28,238. Supposing the same thing happened now at the present moment, would the department be able to make some reasonable condition with Mr. Pritchard Morgan, to prevent him going to the landlord, or would you still send him to the landlord to make a bargain?—I think if another case occurred, knowing what I do of what occurred in this particular instance, I should take good care that a similar arrangement was not made, if I could help it.

The other point that Mr. Morgan appeals for is, what he calls, fixity of tenure. With regard to that, all I can say is, I have a letter which he has written me on the subject now under consideration and I have promised to give him an answer next week. I do not think I can say more than that. That is with regard to his own particular mine. I am considering it with the best intentions of doing what I believe to be right, with the advice of our professional advisers.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,239. Have you not had an opportunity of considering the question whether it is likely to be an industry of considerable importance and advantage in Wales?—I do not think I ought to express an opinion; I have been there so short a time. With regard to Mr. Morgan's mine and the other mine which is working, there has been a great quantity of gold got out, and there is no reason why they should not get a lot more out, except that as everybody who knows the industry, is perfectly well aware it is a very speculative thing, because sometimes you find it very rich, and sometimes you may work for years and find very little. I do not think I can say anything beyond that.

Mr. Grove.

28,240. I suppose the very uncertainty of that working, would make the department more reasonable in the terms and conditions that they would impose?—So far as I understood Mr. Culley's evidence before the Mining Commission, he was ready to take into consideration the particular circumstances of any mine, even after the royalties had been fixed.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,241. Has the department ever sent any practical experts to examine into the general question?—It depends upon what you call "practical experts." I think the men who have advised the department have been their professional advisers up to the present time.

28,242. What I meant by "practical expert" was a man who not only simply had experience in coal mining for instance, but someone who had some experience in gold mining in other countries?—I do not think any special report has been got from any expert upon gold mining in other countries, not so far as I am aware; I am speaking now apart from the professional advisers who gave evidence, Sir Warrington Smyth and the present adviser, Mr. Forster Brown. With the exception of those two, I do not think anyone has made a special report for the department.

28,243. I suppose you will consider the advisability of sending one down?—Yes, the question has been before me.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Pembroke, Pembrokeshire, Tuesday, 6th March 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (CHAIRMAN).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Unfortunately, Lord Carrington is unable to be present to-day, but Lord Kenyon will be here presently to take the Chair. Before commencing the proceedings, I may say we hope to go to the different parts of the county of Pembroke, according to our published list, and during the five days that we have at our disposal we hope to be able to hear all witnesses who desire to come and give evidence before the Commission. It may be that we shall not be able to finish all the witnesses who offer to give evidence at a particular place, and so complete the evidence upon one day, but in that event we shall be glad to take the evidence of those witnesses on the following day, if unfortunately they are crowded out in point of time.

Mr. WILLIAM GIBBS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

for leases at the present rents. They are granted if tenants will comply with the terms. The tenants are afraid to take leases. Farming prospects are bad, and rents too high to be continued without a proportional rise in price of produce, which seems unlikely to happen. You ask is the condition of the leaseholders and of their farming superior or the contrary to that of yearly tenants. I say old leases encouraged and enabled some to improve their position. Land held thus has generally been well farmed, and become more productive than where there was no fixity of tenure. I have had no experience of planting, mining, &c. Then as to agreements and leases, I may say the usual conditions of tenancy are annual.

Mr. Grove.

28,245. Do you produce a copy of an agreement?—Yes (producing same). There are clauses which are considered very oppressive, and prevent land being properly farmed. Penalising clauses are common, and would probably be enforced if the agreement was broken.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,246. You mean penalising clauses are common?—Yes, they are common. Tenants are usually given a copy of the lease, but have to pay for it.

Mr. Grove.

28,247. Do we understand that you have to pay for a copy?—Yes, pay for the draft of the lease. That which I have just handed to you cost me 15*l.* My father paid for it, and I think the sum he paid for it was 15*l.*

28,248. That is a lease for 21 years?—Yes.

28,249. To 1892; consequently it has run out?—Yes. Then as to rents, I may say the rents are usually fixed at a gross sum. There is no uniformity in the rents of land of similar qualities on the same or neighbouring estates whatever. The small holdings let higher than large. On upland from 10*s.* to 20*s.* and lowland from 2*l.* to 4*l.* per acre. You ask whether there are any services other than the payment of rent rendered by tenants in respect of their farms. I say there is no service demanded, but in many cases tenants or their sons are expected to join the Yeomanry.

Lord Kenyon.

28,250. Willingly or unwillingly?—Oh, willingly. The rent is fixed sometimes on the basis of a valuation and sometimes by proposal followed by private treaty. If it is fixed after a proposal followed by a private treaty, the holding is let to the highest bidder. This does not result in fair rents being fixed. Rents are often exorbitant because persons with no knowledge of farming, but of some little private means or a superannuated Government official will give more than what the land is worth. Arbitration is not often resorted to. The rents have varied generally. In some cases three times the amount is paid for land that it let for within 50 years.

28,251. Do I understand the valuation generally means to raise the rent. Is that what you mean?—Yes. My own farm was risen from 150*l.* or 152*l.* to 475*l.* There have been some permanent reductions in my district and many abatements (some conditional) from 5 to 30 per cent. if paid on rent day. No notice is previously given to the tenants of such intended abatements. As a rule when the rents are raised or reduced the change does not depend on the re-valuation.

Mr. Grove.

28,252. Are there any permanent reductions to your knowledge?—Yes, there are some permanent reductions. I myself had one.

28,253. Could you tell us what it was. What was the rent, and what was the permanent reduction of it?—The rent by the lease I have just handed to you was 475*l.*, but to be quite fair to the agent and the landlord I may state that for several years I had an abatement commencing, I think, with 1881. I appealed to the Court of Chancery. They had a surveyor to go over the farm, and he reported favourably on the condition of the farm, and on his statement they reduced the rent 50*l.*

28,254. To 425*l.*?—Yes. Would you wish me to read the letter?

28,255. No, I think not?—I have the letters here if you would like to have them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,256. How came you to go to the Court of Chancery?—The landlord was a ward in Chancery.

Lord Kenyon.

28,257. Is he still?—No, he is of age now.

28,258. Are you under an agreement or under a lease now?—My lease expired in 1892.

28,259. Now you are under a yearly agreement?—I am under a yearly agreement.

28,261. Is there much wheat grown here now?—There was at that time, but there is not at present.

28,262. Are these the prices obtained by yourself?—Yes, my own. In 1872 oats fetched 2*s.* 9*d.*; in 1882, 2*s.* 6*d*; and in 1892, 2*s.* Wool I have not the prices, except in bulk for 1872; in 1882 it was sold at 1*s.* 3½*d.* per pound, and in 1892 10*d.* Then two-year-old cattle in 1872 fetched 18*l.* each; in 1882, 11*l.* 10*s.*; and in 1892 7*l.* 10*s.*

28,263. The same class of animal?—They were brought up under the same conditions. Lambs in 1872 fetched 34*s.* 6*d.*; in 1882, 33*s.*; and in 1892, 22*s.* Sheep in 1874 (I have not a quotation for 1872) fetched 45*s.*; in 1882, 48*s.*; and 1892, 35*s.* 4*d.* on an average. Then as to the payment of rent, the rent is paid according to arrangement three or four or even six months after it falls due. The preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally has this effect: it creates more competition for farms. It makes the landlord more independent, and often less careful in selecting a capable tenant who is likely to be able to farm a holding properly and for a long period. Then as to other charges on land or on incomes derived from lands, I say the tithes and land tax are in many instances paid by the tenant. The local rates are always paid by the tenant. The income tax is paid by the tenant, but refunded. The rates have not increased very much, and where any increase has taken place, such as water rate, it is paid by the occupier.

Sir John Llewellyn.

28,264. What is the water rate?—There is one case I know of of, water being brought into this district.

28,265. By a sanitary authority?—No, by the landlord, and I think in that case it was paid by a certain rate of interest being put upon the outlay.

28,266. Not a public rate?—Not a public rate.

Mr. Grove.

28,267. But by a mutual arrangement between the landlord and the tenant?—Yes, it was, but there may be a case of a local rate in a parish where water was ordered by the sanitary authority; that would be a local rate; we have a case pending now.

Sir John Llewellyn.

28,268. There is no public drainage rate like there is in some parts of England?—No, no public drainage rate. Then as to the size of farms, they vary from 50 to 450 acres, and average about 200 acres. Holdings have not of late years been consolidated. Where consolidation has taken place it has been done to save the expense of keeping homesteads in repair; consequently many are tumbling down. The effect of consolidation on production has been less production. Manual labour has been replaced by machinery. The rent is not affected by the change, and the population and inhabited houses have been reduced. I know of no subdivision. There are cases of sub-letting. With regard to small holdings, small holders are more skilled in the practical work of the farm, and are better able to cope with bad times. The children of small holders frequently have to go to service, which they are fitted for from having to work from childhood on such holdings.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,269. May I ask you what you call a small holding; what size have you in your mind?—From 20 to 40 acres we should call a small holding. With regard to cultivation, labourers are scarce in harvest and haymaking times. Fences, &c., are not properly attended to. The land is not going out cultivation. Hundreds of acres are reclaimed by tenants. Then in answer to the question whether there is much land still waste which is capable of profitable reclamation, I say yes.

Lord Kenyon.

28,270. That is, there is still some capable of it?—Still some capable, my lord, not a great deal. With regard to ploughing up marsh land, I should say not a great deal. Then draining marshy ground—yes, there is much draining required. We have no tidal rivers. Then with regard to the changes in agricultural methods, there is much land laid down at the expense of the tenant. There is not as a whole a larger area, but more in proportion to that now cultivated. That relates to the amount of root crops. Fallowing has gone out of date. The land is more productive, but from the free use of artificial manure the cost of cultivation is much greater, and present farming requires more capital than formerly. The improvements by landlords are draining, supplying water and building; by tenants, draining, laying out in pasture, fencing and reclaiming.

28,271. Does the landlord supply the pipes, and the tenant the labour for the draining, or something of that sort?—I have not had any experience of that, my Lord. There is a large estate where there is a good deal of draining done, and probably you would get a reply to that question presently, but I could not give it to you. With regard to the question of co-operation, I say in case of co-operation the tenant provides material for building and draining, and pays the landlord an agreed sum per cent. on his outlay. The landlord finds materials. Where improvements are made by the tenant he is seldom remunerated. There are cases where the landlord has contracted out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

28,272. Of what date?—Of 1883, I presume, my Lord. I think there is one clause which has been taken notice of.

28,273. Yes, one clause as to the six months?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,274. Do you mean that is the only clause as to which there is contracting out, and that there is no attempt to contract out of the general clauses?—It has been done, but I believe it is not practicable at present.

Lord Kenyon.

28,275. There is only one clause out of which he can contract?—Yes. Farmers do apply for consent for certain things, and such consent is often given on certain conditions.

28,276. What do you mean by "certain conditions"; what are the conditions?—There would probably be a covenant drawn up; but do you wish me to specify any particular case?

28,277. If you know of any I think it would be as well?—Which question do you now refer to, my Lord.

28,278. You say that consent is required for improvements, and that the consent is given under certain conditions. I was wondering what you meant by that, that is all?—A question would crop up as to the amount which would be paid as compensation when the tenant went out, and I believe that unless you have the consent of the landlord for any improvement that you make, you do not come under the clause.

28,279. There is a schedule under which the consent of the landlord is required?—I believe so, my Lord.

28,280. But it does not say anything about conditions?—But the consent could be refused, except on certain conditions. It would be impossible for me to name the conditions, but the landlord would be in a position to name his own conditions, and the tenant would be left to accept them or not.

28,281. It is sufficient that the consent is given and the improvements are carried out?—Then as to the custom of the country; allowances to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops, such as turnips and mangolds, are paid for—not tillages, as a rule; in fact, we have none. Manure, hay and straw are generally paid for by the incoming tenant. Then with regard to permanent improvements, they are not paid for unless they are claimed under the Act of 1883. With regard to the respective rights of outgoing and incoming tenants, and also with regard to the liabilities of a tenant as to mode of cultivation, dilapidations, and sale of produce, this depends on what agreement the holding is taken under. There are cases where the tenant has failed to obtain compensation. There is no recognised right, except where a lease exists. There is no custom as to sale of sheep. The Agricultural Holdings Act is not satisfactory. With regard to game preserving, in answer to the question as to whether rabbits are preserved, I say yes. Tenants generally kill rabbits, but not all game. Sometimes much damage is done, but I never knew of compensasation being paid. With regard to the question of whether tenants are expected to beat coverts when the landlords go out shooting, I say that no services are rendered by the tenants of large holdings. The next question is as to the effect of the preservation of game. It prevents land being cultivated near covers unless the tenant goes to the expense of putting wire down, it often creates jealousy, and makes many of the labourers poachers It provides the public with cheap rabbits.

28,282. That is an advantage, I suppose?—Yes, my Lord. With regard to the proportion of offences against the Game Laws, there is a large proportion of such offences, but I could not say what amount.

28,283. That would be for the magistrate's clerk?—Quite so. I consider the law of trespass in other respects unsatisfactory.

28,284. Incidentally I will ask you is there much trespass by tourists, or anything of that sort in this neighbourhood?—Not so much from tourists. We do not object to them.

28,285. What sort of trespass do you refer to?—Well, mushroom gathering would be one thing, and going in search of game.

28,286. Do you think that the law of trespass should be more stringent?—The law of trespass with regard to poachers seems to be not very clearly defined. There is a great difficulty in getting hold of them.

28,287. Do you think the occupier ought to have more power?—Yes, I think he ought. With regard to agricultural education, no particular attention has been paid to fruit culture, horticulture (including market gardening), forestry, poultry farming, and bee-keeping. Poultry farming has most attention paid to it. I do not consider these matters are sources of profit.

28,288. Do you think they might be, that that condition of things might be improved?—I think it might, and that attention should be given to some of the things mentioned here.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,289. Is this country suitable for bee-keeping?—I should think it would be. We grow a good deal of clover in the district.

Lord Kenyon.

28,290. Is there any instruction given in those matters?—Lectures are delivered only, and they are not very well attended; there has also been instruction given in butter making.

28,291. Is butter making satisfactory in the district?—It ought to be. There is a great deal of attention paid to it.

28,292. What is the price of butter now?—It varies very much. I should think at present 1*s.* 5*d.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* a lb. would be the value at our markets. With regard to the facilities for the carriage and disposal of agricultural produce, and how they are affected by railway rates, the farmer at present is adversely affected by them. Then as to co-operation and combination, I know of no instances, being either ancient survivals or modern experiments, where profits or risks are shared either between landlord and tenant or between employers and employed. There is very little co-operation among farmers for purchasing or analysing farm stuffs, that is, manures, or for the purpose of production, that is, in butter factories. Then with regard to co-operation among farmers in selling produce or in farming operations generally, for instance, threshing, harvesting, and sheep shearing, I say there is none. In answer to the question as to what extent, if at all, farmers insure their stock, crop, implements, or buildings, I say farmers insure for a sum agreed on if they have a lease; if not, it is left to discretion; many do not insure. Then as to combination: "Is there any combination "in the nature of trade union among landlords "not to accept tenants of a certain description?" That is rather a vague way of putting it. What do the words "certain description" allude to, my Lord?

28,293. I am sure I do not know?—I do not.

28,294. Is there any trade union amongst landlords?—No, not a trade union.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,295. Is there a combination of the landlords?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,296. That is what it means; are there combinations among the landlords, and the question is put in a perfectly abstract form. Is there any combination among landlords for any purpose?—Do you consider landlords meeting in a certain club, and talking matters over, and agreeing, a combination?

28,297. I only ask you the question?—I should like to exactly understand the question before I give a reply.

Lord Kenyon.

28,298. Let me put it the other way; do they accept tenants of all descriptions of politics, religion, and so forth?—I can understand it in that way. If two men were going to apply for a farm, all other things being equal, I presume that the landlord would accept the man who was of his own creed, my Lord. I am judging the landlord by myself; there is a great deal of human nature in us in all classes. There is no combination among farmers or labourers to fix wages. Then I say that farmers have no such organisations as benefit societies or life assurance societies. The farmers are assured against accident or death. Then with regard to the question of provident institutions, savings banks, and so on, they cannot at present use the banks for want of savings. The money is sometimes borrowed from building societies, but it is a last resource. Then as to the general condition of the farming population, there are but few proprietor farmers; they have decreased; they have mortgaged their property, which has led to foreclosure. I know of no purely tenant farmer who has with money made by farming bought his own holding for his own occupation in this district; some have with money left them, and they have done so to prevent their store getting wholly into the landlord's pocket. Then with regard to the general condition of tenant farmers, in answer to the question of to what extent the tenant farmers and their wives take part in the manual labour of their farms, I say that the farmers and their wives work very hard and for long hours, particularly on small holdings. Children work, for which work they only receive pocket money and clothes, no wages. Little or no provision is made for them by their parents on marriage or independent settlement in life. Some go abroad when they marry, and many go because there is no prospect of their being able to settle at home. Present rents could not be maintained if the children received their due.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,299. By "children" do you mean grown up sons and daughters?—Yes, all ages.

28,300. They are remaining on the farm up to the age of 30 or 40?—Yes, I know many 30 years of age working on farms at home.

28,301. Without wages?—Yes, they cannot get wages. As to the proportion of hired farm labour as compared with that rendered by members of the household, in some cases it is not a fourth; it depends on circumstances. With regard to the proportion of hired labourers lodged on the farm premises, and the proportion of those settled in cottages, this depends on the accommodation; some have no cottages. Then I am asked to state the amount of the labourers' cash wages, and the total estimated earnings; this depends on agreement, accommodation, &c.

Lord Kenyon.

28,302. Could you not give us what the average wage is in this part of the country?—I put the average wage from 15*s.* to 16*s.* per week. Would you like me to give the items which, put in the aggregate, make up the amount, my Lord?

28,303. Yes?—I will give you my own agreement. Cash, 12*s.*; money for extra harvest work, 1*l.* 10*s.* Then there is driving culm. It means allowing them the use of a team of horses to fetch their own culm from the pits; I put that down as 1*l.* Then, setting of potatoes, 15*s.* extra payment for Sunday work, and I mention beer. I do not know whether that would be admitted; perhaps that would come under the Truck Act, 2*l.* 10*s.* Houses and garden, the rental of it 3*l.* 10*s.*, and they get a load of manure given them too, for their gardens. I think you will find that makes a fraction over 15*s.* 6*d.* per week, my Lord.

28,304. Would this agreement be with your waggoner, or with the ordinary labourer?—With the whole of them. They get the same wages.

28,305. The waggoner does not get higher wages in this part of the country than the others; they are all the same?—They do not. There are some perquisites, I may mention; if the man drives an entire horse in his team he would get the groom's fees.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,306. Would you give us the wages of the men employed in the house? Perhaps you have none?—Do you mean employing a man weekly, living in his own house?

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

28,307. No, living in your own house?—These are in my own house.

28,308. Then have they board in addition?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,309. You do not board them?—None of them have food in my houses. Labourers' wages have increased 25 to 40 per cent. during the 33 years that I remember, to ordinary farm labourers. The accommodation provided for labourers at farmhouses is the use of the kitchen, and the accommodation for sleeping purposes varies very much. In some places it is very bad. As to cottage accommodation, the cottages are not so many as formerly; more could be employed if there was sufficient capital to do so. With regard to the situation of cottage accommodation, and as to whether it is concentrated in villages or dispersed on farms, I say it is both; but it is mostly dispersed and at easy distances. The condition and construction of many cottages are bad, but better than formerly. There are good gardens attached to cottages; in some cases the tenant keeps a cow.

Lord Kenyon.

28,310. Is that common?—Not common in this district. There is provision made on Lord Cawdor's estate for some tenants keeping cows. Cottages are rented from a tenant farmer, the rent constituting part of the wage; most of the labourers work for the farmer whose cottages they live in. Some give three months' notice, some a month. Then as to general matters, and what is the relative standard of comfort, first as to estate owners, they live in mansions, and live too well for their health; they have plenty of opportunities for self-improvement, which they do not seem to take advantage of, and recreation without limit.

28,311. Are you an estate owner?—A very small one, my Lord. I will come to that part next. With regard to proprietor farmers, large and small, some have good and some bad houses. They copy the estate owners as far as their incomes will allow them. Tenant farmers are fairly housed, their diet is plain, and homely; opportunities for self-improvement are offered, but not fully taken advantage of. Recreation is generally of such a character as will bring in some profit.

28,312. Would you include hunting under that head?—Yes, my lord. I should not expect you to ride a "green" horse. Labourers are often badly housed; they have plain diet, and have no special means for self-improvement. They get recreation on summer evenings, and on certain days which are looked upon as holidays, such as Christmas Day, Good Friday, Michaelmas Fair Day, and a few hours given now and then to go to some other amusement. With regard to migration, I say that both farmers and labourers have gone out of the country because they had not even a living there. Farmers have gone into Herefordshire, Wiltshire, Hampshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Northamptonshire, and Gloucestershire, from this district.

28,313. Do they do better where they have gone?—We shall have one gentlemen here who perhaps will be able to give his experience.

28,314. Anyhow they have not returned?—No, my Lord, I know of no case. Labourers go to Glamorgan where they can earn better wages in the mines. Then I am asked to what extent are diaries kept. I do not know. I keep mine. Prices of stock have gradually fallen from 1879. The causes of depression are foreign competition, and increase in the cost of labour without a corresponding reduction in the burdens the land carries. The farmer is adversely affected, and the consumers are benefited. The remedies that I suggest would be the following: Substantial reduction of rent, and the rent to be the only liability of the tenant, the landlord paying all other outgoings, except working expenses; payment for all improvements; freedom from hurtful restrictions; conversion of tithes to some more useful purpose; and a land court to settle cases where tenants have to deal with arbitrary landlords; that agents should have proper training, and pass an examination at some agricultural college to prove efficiency, every agent to farm at least 100 acres under the same conditions as the tenants on the estate he manages, and to show debtor and creditor accounts that he makes it pay; where he fails to do this, and he obtains relief by abatement or reduction, that all tenants on the estate shall be relieved in the same ratio. With regard to the general relations between landlord and tenant, they are generally most friendly. Then I am asked in what circumstances are they most friendly, and I say where the tenant can make a personal appeal to his landlord, and where the landlord personally interests himself in the general well-being of his tenants; where the landlord attends to a reasonable complaint or a desire for some improvement shown to be actually beneficial to the tenant in the management of his holding; where, too, the landlord shows the consideration which is much needed at the present time, and which encourages the tenant to struggle on against misfortune and adverse circumstances over which he has no control. A tenant thus treated uses his best endeavours to show he is worthy of his landlord's kindness, and desirous of retaining his favour; but more particularly this feeling exists where the land has been let so reasonably as to enable the tenant to tide over the bad times, where, too, such tenant could farm as he was accustomed to, and not find himself obliged to reduce his labour or general outlay in seed, manure, &c. for want of means.

28,315. Did I understand you to complain of the agreement you are under?—I am under no agreement at present. I marked certain things in that agreement in red ink.

28,316. In the lease?—In the lease, such as a heavy fine being placed upon breaking up certain pastures.

28,317-8. You say now that a great many more chemical manures are employed. I suppose the restrictions as to sales of manure, wheat and straw and so on, are not so much enforced as they used to be?—Not so much, but there are restrictions still on some estates.

28,319. Have you ever known of a case of those restrictions being enforced except against bad tenants?—I think any tenant would be careful that he did not give an opportunity of enforcing them, my Lord. I never knew of a breach of the agreement.

28,320. But do you not think, supposing a tenant were to apply for leave and to show that he had good cause for that, it would be granted?—I think it would in many cases, not in all.

28,321. It is an opportunity, as you said, for the landlord and tenant to meet. Has there been any reclamation of land by landlords in this district by draining or otherwise?—I am merely giving evidence upon the area covered by Castle Martin Hundred as near as I can; I do not know it all.

28,322. I only want you to speak of what you know?—I do not know of a case of reclamation except by a tenant.

28,323. You say that the Agricultural Holdings Act is not satisfactory. Could you mention any particular part of it that you think might be amended. Do you know the Act?—I have not a copy of the Act before me. One thing that I think is an objection would be the provision as to a tenant neglecting to give two months' notice in writing to his landlord.

28,324. You mean that if he does not he loses all right of claim?—Yes. I think there is an objection, too, to a tenant being obliged to get the consent of his landlord to certain improvements.

28,325. Yes; on the other hand a rich tenant might overburden the land—there are such cases—by building houses, and so on?—Excuse me, but do you know the case of a rich tenant, my Lord?

28,326. I am referring to what you said in the beginning of your evidence—men who have no experience of farming, and have a certain amount of capital; they want a large house to live in and extravagant buildings to look at, and so on, and if they were not obliged to apply for consent they might go to very extravagant expense and throw the place on the landlord's hands. I know of cases in point which makes me suggest it to you. Do you not think some sort of restriction is necessary?—Yes, to a certain extent.

28,327. To a certain extent, of course. I mean to say I do not suppose that a landlord would withhold consent for anything that was a real improvement to his own property, would he?—Some would; they do not know what are improvements and what are not, I am sorry to say—many of them.

28,328. Then you said, I think, that the agents are not educated?—I do not say that, my Lord; they are highly educated, most of them.

28,329. I mean in agricultural matters?—Quite so.

28,330. But there are surely agricultural colleges, like at Downton, Salisbury, and so on. Have not any of the agents in this part of the country studied at them?—I do not know anyone who has.

28,331. Because it is very commonly the case now that when an agency falls vacant there are many agents apply, and they produce all sorts of diplomas?—It is not general in this locality.

28,332. Have you any remedies for bad prices?—Not to increase the prices; I do not think I could suggest a remedy. My contention is that the burdens on the land should be reduced.

28,333. You do not think the prices could be be maintained that have fallen?—I do not think they ever would be.

28,334. They will not return to their old standard?—Except by artificial means. I know a means that could be adopted, but I do not think it is practicable—I mean protective duties.

28,335. I do not mean that. Did you see by any chance the report on the marking of foreign meat that was lately issued?—Yes, I have read the report.

28,336. Did you see that a great deal of meat was sold as being Welsh, and so forth, that never was seen in Wales?—Yes.

28,337. Do you think that a system of marking it would be a good thing?—Yes, I think that would be a good thing.

28,338. Would it insure that the buyer got what he wished to buy?—Yes.

28,339. Do you think that the class of stock can be improved at all. Is there attention paid to it in this district?—There is a good deal of attention. Our climate would not suit all kinds of stock, neither would the accommodation we possess for housing them; some are too delicate.

28,340. I suppose what you breed in this part of the world are the black Welsh cattle, are they not?—A great many of them.

28,341. A great many of them are sent into Leicestershire?—A great many of them go to Northampton.

28,342. Yes, I have seen them. Do you think the size and breed of those beasts might be improved?—In some districts there might be. There has been a good deal of attention given to the improvement of them.

Lord Kenyon.

28,343. I am more conversant with the North Wales cattle, but I have seen the South Wales breed at several shows.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,344. You referred to the lordship of Lamphey, I understand?—Yes.

28,345. And you said—what we have heard from other witnesses—that the restriction upon alienation and so forth in the case of copyhold properties makes it less valuable than freehold property?—Yes.

28,346. Can you give any specific instances in support of your proposition?—I can. I hold in my hand a valuation of a property which was valued at 2,350*l.*

28,347. What is the acreage?—Acreage 140, more or less.

28,348. In what manor?—In the manor of Lamphey. This property was bought for 1,980*l.*

28,349. What was the fine?—The fine was considered to be uncertain by many, and they would not bid for it. There is nothing satisfactory with regard to the fine. I may mention that the fines have varied from 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre up to a demand for three years' rent, and to bear out that I should place this in your hands bearing upon that question. [Handing in document.] The sums mentioned in those cases that are stated there are 2*s.* 6*d.*, and even 2*d.* an acre in one isolated case, whereas the landlord now claims a two years' improved rental.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,350. May I ask what you mean by an improved rental?—The question as answered here is—"The poor rate valuation;" that is what I was led to suppose would be the improved rental.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,351. I will not delay by asking you any questions upon this now. I see it is a case laid before counsel on behalf of the lord of the manor?—Laid before three high authorities. I can place before you also this correspondence.

28,352. I should like to look through it, but I will not delay by asking you questions on it now, because there are several matters that I want to ask you about. Now about this lease. This is a lease under seal for 21 years, and therefore the covenants are to some extent different from the stipulations that you generally find in agreements for tenancies from year to year, are they not?—Yes, different from what anyone would accept a farm on at present.

28,354. No, I will read you the clause: "These presents are upon the express condition "that if and whenever any part of the said "several rents," and so on, "reserved shall be "in arrear for 28 days, and whenever the "lessees or either of them or their or either of "their executors, administrators or assigns "shall during the said term be adjudged bankrupt, or take the benefit of any Act or Acts

"now or hereafter to be enforced for the relief "of bankrupt or insolvent debtors, then the "reversioner or reversioners for the time being "may re-enter upon any part of the said "premises in the name of the whole, and there-"upon the term of 21 years shall absolutely "determine." We have had conflicting evidence about the effect of that clause?—I should consider it would be hurtful to the tenant, because such a thing might have transpired when he had a lot of capital in the land.

28,355. You are speaking, I think you said, for the Castle Martin District. You know pretty well the condition of Pembrokeshire from a farmer's point of view, do you not?—Yes.

28,356. I have before me the report by Mr. Culley in the year 1869. He says: "The farm-"ing of this country" (Pembrokeshire is one of the counties he was dealing with) "is a mixed "system of breeding, dairying, and tillage, about "one-fifth of the total acreage being annually "under the plough and less than one-fourth "subject to it." Would that be true at the present time, do you think?—There has been a great change in this district. A great deal of land has been laid out to pasture—very much more so than there was ten or fifteen years ago.

28,357. Do you mean during the last twenty-five years then?—Yes, even within fifteen years.

28,358. And is that change going on now?—I do not think there has been much change within the last four or five years.

28,359. Mr. Culley goes on to say, "Nor is any "great change likely to take place in this respect; "neither the climate, which is very wet, especially "in spring and autumn, nor the formation of the "surface, which is very uneven, are suited to the "cultivation of corn." Do you agree with that?—No, I do not know of any land ever so hilly but what it has been cultivated here when it has been proved to be productive—sufficiently productive to pay for labour.

28,360. "While on the other hand," he says, "the continual moisture and mild winters are "very favourable to grass, and, in fact, except in "favoured spots, such as Laugharne Marsh or the "limestone district near Stackpole, if it was not "that the moisture and mild winters are favour-"able to the growth of root crops, still less land "would be under the plough, and still less labour "would be required." Do you think that is a sound conclusion?—That has been brought about to a great extent.

28,361. That is the change you are referring to in fact, then?—Quite so.

28,362. Then, having regard to the farm labourers, is it still true that farm labourers in the sense in which we use the term in England, as a man providing his own food and that of his family, and depending altogether on the wages he receives from his employer, is a comparatively small quantity in the counties of Pembroke and Carmarthen. Is that still true, do you think?—There are a great many less now here than there were 10 or 20 years ago; cottages are to

28,363. Then that statement is practically true still, I suppose; that statement was made in 1869 by Mr. Culley?—A great many of our agricultural labourers have migrated within the last five to six years, or five to ten years.

28,364. But I do not think Mr. Culley is so much talking about the total number there as the relative proportion of those who are paid money wages and money wages only, and those who either are hired by the year and get board and lodging, or those who, while living away from the farmhouse, receive their wages partly in kind and partly in money. Is there a tendency going on to pay money wages only?—No.

28,365. That is not so?—No.

28,366. I will just read you what, 25 years ago, Mr. Culley said about the cottages. "The "ordinary form of cottage in South Wales is a "rectangular building about 20 feet by 12 "(inside measurement), with walls of mud (clay "and straw mixed) or stone, about 8 feet high. "The mud cottage is almost always covered with "straw thatch, while the stone cottage is now "more usually slated. In the middle of the front "wall is the door with a small window on each "side. Running back from each side of the "door for 6 or 8 feet, and about as high as the "door, are partitions, often formed by the back "of a box bed or chest of drawers, by means "of which partitions the inside space is divided "into two small rooms, in one of which is a "wide fireplace surmounted by a conical "chimney. The whole interior is open to the "roof, except where boards or wattled hurdles "are stuck across the heads of the walls to "support children's beds. The floor is usually "of mud or puddled clay. The only outside "office is the pigsty, generally built against the "end of the cottage. Such is a description of "probably four-fifths of the labourers' cottages "in the districts I visited. There are worse, "and there are a few better, though where it is "said, as it several times is in the evidence, that "the cottage accommodation is improving, or "that the old mud cottages are gradually dis-"appearing, the improvement more frequently "arises from the total disappearance of old "cottages than from the fact that they have "been replaced by better ones." That being a description in 1869, is it, generally speaking, accurate now?—No.

28,367. There has been a great improvement, you think?—The mud cottages are done away with. There are some relics of them to be seen I believe, but I do not know of one.

28,368. The ruined cottages are generally of that description, the ones that we see generally about the country?—Yes, better-class houses are now being built.

28,369. Are there enough houses for the number of farm labourers'?—Yes, plenty.

28,370. What is the usual rent of a labourers' cottage?—I should say an average of 4*l.* or 4*l.* 5*s.* from 3*l.* 10*s.* to 5*l.* 10*s.*

Lord Kenyon.

28,371. Are they generally let from the farmers or straight from the landlord?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,372. Does the labourer's cottage form part of the farmer's taking in any cases you know. Is that generally the case?—Yes, they are on the farm taken by the occupier. I put them at 3*l.* 10*s.* for my own tenants, but if a tenant had to take a cottage in some rural district he would have to pay 1*l.* more than that perhaps.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,373. Who repairs the cottage?—That depends on the conditions of tenancy. My landlord has never laid out a shilling on the estate farm during the 21 years I have been there. I took on all the repairs; but on large estates the farmers generally do all the repairs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,374. I do not think we have learned the name of your landlord?—The estate is in the hands of trustees now. A solicitor in Swansea and a gentleman by the name of Mr. Morris are the two trustees.

Lord Kenyon.

28,375. Who is the owner?—The owner would be the wife of my landlord at present, because the estate was settled on the wife when he married, and her trustees manage the estate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,376. What is the estate usually called?—Hodgeston Hall.

28,377. Is there any complaint on the part of the labourers, so far as you know it, having to take cottages which form part of the farmer's holding?—There are complaints. Some cottages are not so well ventilated or in a proper sanitary condition.

28,378. Are the complaints numerous, do you think?—It would depend a good deal on the district. I do not think any fault would be found with cottages upon large estates. There are two or three large estates to the south of Pembroke where the accommodation of the labourers is very good indeed.

28,379. With what justice do you consider these complaints to be made—are they well founded or not?—In certain localities they would be. I do not think a labourer would complain if there was no necessity for it. In support of that, I may say that we have complaints before the Sanitary Board very often as to the condition of cottages in districts.

28,380. What kind of complaint is it, of the absence of privies and such like conveniences?—Yes, that is one thing.

28,381. Or is it in the general structure of the cottages being unsanitary?—Both. The general condition of the house not habitable, and they are very often condemned in that case.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,382. That comes from the medical officers, I suppose?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,383. I gathered from the account you gave to Lord Kenyon of what you pay your labourers, that the custom of giving a potato ground and setting up potatoes by the farmer still holds good here, does it?—Yes, I think every farmer does it.

28,384. And that gives general satisfaction, do you think?—Yes; it is given in lieu of wages, of course.

28,385. Do the cottages generally have gardens attached to them?—Yes.

28,386. Is there any demand for labourers' allotments in this part of the country?—I know of none. There has been no application here that I know of. There have been for small holdings.

28,387. For cow holdings; cow allotments?—Coming under the Small Holdings Act.

28,388. About what size would they generally be, do you imagine?—We are restricted not to go over an assessment of 50*l.* a year (I think it is) by the Act.

28,389. Yes, I was not thinking of the Act, but how many acres do you think the person who wants that kind of small holdings would as a rule like to have?— Sufficient to keep a cow or two.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,390. You said that your landlord has not spent a penny on the farm since you have taken it?—No; I took it under those conditions. My lease specifies that I am to do all repairs.

28,391. Did he put your place in thorough repair when you had it?—No.

28,392. Were all the sheds you occupy now, built by him, or have you built them yourself?—There were none built by my present landlord. I put up temporary structures.

28,393. On what ground do you say that prices are never likely to go back to their former figure?—Personally, I believe on account of the vast competition with foreigners, and there are vast tracts of country not already opened up which will be sending further supplies to us.

28,394. You said you had your rent reduced to 50*l.* Who held this farm before you? Did he pay the same rent that you did?—No, he paid a great deal more. He did not pay very long.

28,395. Why not?—Because he could not. Mr. Garrick was my predecessor, a Scotchman.

28,396. Then he could not make it pay?—No.

28,397. Have you handed in a table of the prices you gave us just now? I should like to have a table of those prices; we have had so very few witnesses come before us who keep any account?—I think it is in my evidence. I drew out a statement showing the variation of my rent from the first year I entered on my holding till the present time, but I can give it you from memory, I think.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,398. We should like to get that?—I applied in 1879 or 1880 to the Court of Chancery, and I have a letter here dated the 23rd December 1879, which says, "Mr. Rule Owen "having advised that a temporary allowance for "drainage, cake, or manures should be made you "of 50*l.* per annum, Mr. Hulm, as the present "trustee of Mr. Bowen Robertson's estate, has "been authorised by the Court of Chancery to "concur in an allowance." I got that deduction for two years.

28,399. That was the result of a valuation, was it?—The result of a valuation.

28,400. Will you kindly tell us by whom the valuation was made?—The valuation was made by Mr. Rule Owen.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,401. Of Haverfordwest?—Of Haverfordwest. If you wish to know, I can now give you the variations in rent.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,402. Will you hand it in?—I have the amount of rent from 1873 to 1893, and the amount of wages in this list. (The witness handed in the following table.)

Wages.	Amount of Wages.	Rent.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1873	272 4 5	475 0 0
1874	241 7 4	475 0 0
1875	243 4 2	475 0 0

1890	287 3 5	443 2 6
1891	285 11 4	475 0 0
1892	333 2 0	431 0 0
1893	304 1 2	400 0 0

28,403. You have spoken of a good deal of cornland in this neighbourhood being laid down to pasture. How do you think the rent is made up of that land, land that used to produce at least 30 bushels or 40 bushels an acre, wheat, barley, and so forth—how is the rent made up of that land that is laid down now?—It is not made, because the cattle that the land would carry the last four or five years would not be of sufficient value to pay for it at the prices we have sold at these last two or three years.

28,404. Is the land reduced in rent accordingly?—No, I know of no case except by abatements.

28,405. Do you think labourers would like to have all their money in wages—would they prefer it, do you think?—No, I have heard some speak differently, that they consider themselves better off when they have things in lieu of wages.

28,406. You said that they would require more capital as the result of holding large farms in the present day than they did formerly. On what ground do you consider that that is so?—That really with most farmers it is not ordinary farming upon the produce of the farm, the farmer keeps a great deal more stock than the farm itself would carry, and therefore he has to resort to artificial feeding and manures. He carries a heavier stock, but he has to employ more capital to do it.

28,407. You have produced a table of your expenditure of wages, a debtor and creditor account?—I can produce it, but I should not care to make it public. I will submit it to you if you like.

28,408. We should very much like to get that?—I can submit to you my book of returns.

28,409. Of the different years of your farming?—Yes, my book of returns for every year.

28,410. We have not been able to get that, and shall be very glad if you will give it to us.

Mr. Grove.

Would you send an extract from that to the Secretary?

Professor Rhŷs.

But he does not want to make it public.

Lord Kenyon.

I think we might fairly take that privately.

Witness.

My Lord, this would be most misleading unless I explained. You would see such a difference in certain years that I could explain perfectly well. For instance, we have a very bad season, and we hold on our cattle through the summer months, we cannot sell them, and we hold on to them and feed them, so that in the following spring these cattle go out fat, and in one year you may find 400*l.* or 500*l.* more than in another year, simply from the fact that the previous year's cattle are kept and fed out, and the two lots are sold in the same year.

Professor Rhŷs.

You might give a few notes to that effect with the book, which would explain that kind of thing.

Lord Kenyon.

28,411. Would you like to go to the trouble of making a sort of abstract of that for us?—I began to do it, and really I got so confused that I could not work out the thing in the time. It would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer.

28,412. But if you can do it in your own time it will be very valuable to us?—The first thing I should have to do (which I could not honestly do now) would be to take stock on the 29th September every year that I have held the farm, to see whether I had a sum of money lying in stock more one year than another, in order to get a basis to start from.

28,413. I know it is very difficult to get farming accounts?—Then, I have been conducting a business outside my farm, that is, buying and selling horses, and I have taken the trouble to run a red line through every horse transaction in this book, to show the profits I made on them. If I take one particular case or one particular year I can see by my banking book how many weeks each horse was with me; that would all have to be looked out, and I should have to look out the hay and corn that I had bought during that time. In Jubilee year it cost me 20*l.* a week for hay and corn.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,414. Then the mere figures by themselves would be delusive?—Just so.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,415. Still you could possibly take it out?—If you will give me one year, or take three years, I will endeavour to do so.

Mr. Grove.

28,416. Suppose you take three years yourself—three fair average years of working—the nearest to the average that you can get, and give us those three years?—Yes, I can do that.

28,417. That would be less trouble than an analysis of the lot?—Then comes the difficulty of what would be the amount of capital on the farm at the time that you start from, and the rise and fall in the value. There are a number of things you have on the farm representing capital. There is also the depreciation of price which you have to contend with.

Lord Kenyon.

28,418. Especially if the horses are connected with it?—Yes, and everything else.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,419. In addition to what you have said with regard to valuations, do you know of farmers having any compensation for allowing corn to be sowed on their fields with the barley?—No. According to my agreement I had to sow it. I was to be paid for the seed. I will not be certain whether it mentioned cultivation, it is in my agreement, you can see it there.

28,420. In some estates they allow the seeds to be sown?—Some landlords give the seed, but I think in such cases where the landlord gives the seed the tenants have no right to break up their pasture again; that is their object.

28,421. Is it a general thing to give the seed in laying down land to pasture?—No, I met a case in England, that is all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,422. You have answered one question here, "Politics would be a great consideration with

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

" many; religion not considered"?—I do not know that a landlord would ask a man whether he was a Parthian, a Mede, or a dweller in Mesopotamia, as long as he could pay the rent, but sect would have something to do with it.

28,423. What are the sects here then?—Oh, numerous—too numerous to mention.

28,424. And that is no obstacle to a tenant?—I think I have qualified that by saying that, all other things being equal, a man would go to the person who was of his own accord. I spoke then of both politics and creed. Some landowners use strong language. I have here a statement of a landlord to the effect that we are all to be boycotted if the disestablishment question becomes law. Perhaps you would like to see it (handing in copy of the "Record").

Lord Kenyon.

28,425. Does it say who the landowner is?—Yes, it mentions the name.

28,426. You had better give his name?—The name is given in the paper.

28,427. How long ago is this?—It is in the "Record" of the 2nd March 1894.

28,428. Then he has not yet had time to deny it?—No. He may have an opportunity when you go to Narberth.

Lord Kenyon.

28,429. What is the name given in the paper?—He is the owner of glebe land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,430. What is the name of the landlord who is making the speech?—It is not a speech. It is a written opinion given.

Lord Kenyon.

28,431. Was it given publicly or privately?—This article is headed "The Welsh Clergy on "the position and prospects of their Church." The points on which correspondents were invited to supply information were: "(1. The nature of "the endowments of each parish, their origin "(if known), their value, and the purposes to "which they are applied. (2.) The estimated "effect of disendowment on Church work, with "regard both to the support of the clergy, the "future and maintenance of Church fabrics, "parochial organisations, and missionary enterprise, both at home and abroad. (3.) The "social results in regard to the feeling likely to "be engendered alike amongst Churchmen and "Nonconformists. (4.) The prospects of the "Church in Wales if she is left to pursue her "work undisturbed." I merely want to point out the spirit which animates some of these gentlemen.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

28,432. I suppose these are the sentiments of a clergyman?—A clergyman and a landowner who possesses glebe land.

28,433. He is only a landowner in the sense that he possesses glebe land?—Oh, yes.

28,433*a*. What is the extent of the glebe?—80 acres.

28,434. You would hardly call that a landowner?—You wanted to make me one, my Lord, and his 80 acres are worth more than my 120.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,435. Are those 80 acres in Pembrokeshire?—I think so. I could not answer that, but the paper gives the full particulars.

Professor Rhŷs.

I think it had better be read.

Mr. Richard Jones.

"Now, Dissenting tradesmen are supported "mainly by Church people; then, as is already "talked of, a league or organisation will certainly "arise here, binding Churchmen to support only "those of their own communion. This will be "the bankruptcy of half the Dissenters in these "parishes."

Lord Kenyon.

28,435*a*. What is the gentleman's name?

Witness.

John Morris. He is a brother to the poet.

28,436. Brother to Mr. Lewis Morris?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,437. You say in one of your replies here that the rent varies very much; that on upland farms it is from 10*s*. to 20*s*., but on lowland farms from 2*l*. to 4*l*. per acre. Do you contend that the land which costs 2*l*. to 4*l*. an acre will not maintain cattle like the Hereford class of cattle?—Yes. We have land good enough in the valley of St. Florence and other districts for any cattle. Climate is the only thing to contend with: the land is quite as rich as you can find anywhere. I am only giving that as a fact. I do not contend that one is too dear or the other too cheap. I am only showing the variation; the want of uniformity is another matter.

28,438. Of course I was only drawing that deduction from it—that it seems to me if the land will not permit the farmers to keep Hereford cattle it is rather high to have to pay from 2*l*. to 4*l*. an acre. That is as it strikes me?—We contend that our black cattle would yield quite as much profit as Herefords.

28,439. What class of sheep do you keep here?—Generally Shropshire.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

28,440. Does the climate suit them?—Yes, very well.

28,441. You say that no service is demanded from the tenants excepting in some cases where the sons are expected to join the yeomanry?—There is no pressure brought to bear on them.

28,442. That is what I was going to ask?—It is generally an understanding on some estates that the landlord would like the sons to join the yeomanry.

28,443. It is not felt a hardship?—No, I think not; they are very military in this district.

Lord Kenyon.

28,444. Do you think that it creates a good feeling between the landlord and tenants whenever the tenants do join the yeomanry—that is certainly my experience?—Yes, I think so. There are convivial meetings and so on. I have never had any experience.

28,445. I have a lot of my own tenants who belong to the yeomanry, and it does create a very good feeling all round?—There are other services that may be mentioned. You may have a case presently where straw is expected to be delivered, and things of that sort.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,446. You say here, farms are let to the highest bidder. Have you any authority for saying that?—It is a generally accepted fact, but it would be difficult to point that out, because you do not always know really the terms that exist—whether the highest bidder has the farm or no. There are cases where land has been let by auction; in that case there is no question about it. I mean accommodation land.

28,447. Accommodation land, but not farms?—I know of a whole farm that is let out every year by auction.

28,448. That is a very rare thing?—Yes, that is a rare thing.

28,449. When a farm becomes vacant, what is the usual course pursued in the letting of it?—I must admit that the landlord is generally besieged with applications if it is a good farm, and he selects his own tenant.

28,450. He selects his own applicant?—The one he chooses, or the agent for him.

28,451. And I suppose he takes the trouble to inquire into the means of the applicant?—Not so much as he would if he were not protected by the law of distraint. We have had a case in our neighbourhood where the tenant had only been in his holding for three years, and he became bankrupt, and all the tradespeople of the town had to suffer for it—had to take so much in the pound.

28,452. I see you refer to persons who farm for pleasure, and you say that is the cause of having artificial rents—competition rents. Are there many of these farmers who farm for pleasure?—Just in this immediate neighbourhood there are a good many, retired dockyarders I allude to more particularly; they have a superannuation of 80*l.* or 100*l.* a year, and they do not mind giving that all to the landlord to have the pleasure of a little country life.

28,453. And that is also, to a certain extent, to the detriment of other tenants?—Quite so, to the detriment of other tenants. They cannot compete with them.

28,454. Is the competition for farms here very keen?—Competition would be keen for anything that was good, and not too large. Large holdings there would not be the keen competition for that there has been.

28,455. Are there many large holdings in this end of Pembrokeshire?—A great many on Lord Cawdor's estate, and the Orielton estate.

28,456. Supposing that those farms were distributed into smaller holdings, what would be the effect, do you think, on agriculture in general?—I believe that they would be made more productive; there would be a different class of yeoman farmers.

28,457. Should you think the farmers would thrive better?—Yes.

28,458. There would not be so much competition, would there?—Yes. It would be a different class of farm; you would get small holdings under practical working farmers.

28,459. You think it would not affect competition?—Yes, I think it would. I think large holdings might be split up; I do not mean to say that they may not be too numerous eventually, but more small holdings could be taken at the present time.

28,460. You say that small holders are better able to cope with bad times. Will you explain how they are better able?—They are able to do all the practical work on their farm; they have been accustomed to it, a great many of them, from their childhood.

28,461. It is not because they get some auxiliary aid from some other means of employment to eke out?—They employ their own family, to a certain extent.

28,462. Are there any cases where small farmers eke out a living by taking some other employment?—Yes, a good many of them on small holdings work occasionally.

28,463. What is the nature of that employment?—In many cases where a man holds 20 or 30 acres, the wife will do a good deal of the work at home, particularly if it is a grass farm. She may go and attend to the cows with a child or so; and the man will go on general labour during the summer months' harvesting work, hay making, and so on.

28,464. You think these people are better off than people who live in larger farms of 60 or 70 acres or so?—I do not mean to say they are better off, but they have not yet felt the depression to the same extent; it has not altered their circumstances to the same extent that it has the large farmers.

28,465. You say that much land has been laid down to grass at the expense of the tenant. Is that the case after the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, a good deal has.

28,466. Why have they not complied with the provisions of the Act by giving notice to the landlord?—I expect many would be ignorant that that is necessary, and I could not for a fact say that they might not have done so. In many cases they have sufficient faith in the landlord to believe that he would not do anything that is unjust by them.

28,467. Then they could not claim anything according to the custom of the country?—No, according to the custom of the country they could not.

28,468. Is there much lime used in this part of the country?—Not so much here.

28,469. You do not require it?—Yes, but it is not used to the same extent that it used to be.

28,470. What is the reason, is it too costly?—Yes, and they use artificial stuff; basic slag has taken the place of lime, to a great extent.

Lord Kenyon.

28,471. Is it equally efficacious?—We have not had sufficient time to judge yet; it has a very good effect on low-lying, cold, sour districts.

Mr. Grove.

28,472. What per ton do you pay for delivery here about?—It depends upon when you can pay for it; from 2*l.* to 2*l.* 10*s.*

28,473. It is a sort of sliding scale arrangement, is it?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

28,474. You get a big discount for ready money?—Yes, it is the lamb among wolves.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,475. It depends on the quality, too, does it not?—Well, we are safeguarded now by the Fertilisers' Act.

28,476. It is often said that it is necessary for a farmer to make three times the rent in order that he may have something like a decent margin of profit. Have you ever applied that test to the working of your farm?—Yes.

28,477. How has it worked out?—I never but one year made three years' rent.

28,478. What year was that?—I think it was 1883. I am not certain, I think so, my book will tell it.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,479. Do you mean from your farm proper, or from the other dealings that you were referring to, in horses?—Oh, not from the farm proper. The amount of my returns came to three times the rent one year, I know.

Mr. Grove.

28,480. But that might be one year running into another, just through an excessive sale of stock in one year?—Quite so. I made a deduction of 50 lambs which I found I had fattened that year; that was one item.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,481. You did not take that into consideration then?—Taking from it the amount that I made upon horses, and the extra that fell in to that year, from having a bad season before, it would not be three rents.

28,482. When did you begin farming?—September 1871.

28,483. During those good years from 1872 to 1876, what was the result; were not you able to make the three rents?—I was at a very heavy outlay at that time. I went to a farm in very bad repair, and had to put up a lot of gates and do a lot of building, so that I could not the first two or three years.

Mr. Grove.

28,484. Could you lend us that book of yours confidentially for a few days. We will return it to you, of course?—Do you mean my book of returns?

28,485. Yes?—Certainly. (The witness handed in book.)

Professor Rhŷs.

28,486. You are, on the whole, fairly satisfied with the breed of cattle you mostly have here?—Yes.

28,487. We came through an agricultural district this morning, and I overheard a conversation to the effect that the breed of cattle here was about as bad as any in the whole country. You would not agree with that?—They suit certain districts better than any other, or we should not find so much call for them. There are dealers who will not buy anything except a black beast. They take them down in Surrey, Essex, and Northampton.

28,488. I understood that there had been crossing for many years, and that the old breed of Castle Martins was getting scarce?—It has been very much improved.

28,489. Then I suppose the gentlemen that I heard talking would differ from you with regard to the value of this breed. Do the retired commodores and admirals make good farmers in this part of the world?—I have had no experience of either a commodore or an admiral. I think you misunderstood me, I was speaking of retired dockyard men.

28,490. Do they make good farmers?—Not good for themselves. They do a little experimentalising. They do not live long, thank goodness. They are not turned out of office till they are nearly 70.

28,491. They are turned out to grass, so to say?—They are turned out to rest.

Mr. Grove.

28,492. When people have a pension they generally live a long time, do they not?—They do not take their pension until they get to a good age.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,493. This is another illustration of the climate which we have been talking about, I suppose. I think you said that an average rent for a fair cottage for a labourer would be about 3*l.* 10*s.*?—Thereabouts, that to 4*l.* I should say.

28,494. What would you say a cottage of that sort could be built for? Have you had any built yourself?—I have not, but I have heard a sum stated.

28,495. What would you think it would cost to build a cottage of that sort?—If you were going to build one, you would not build one quite of the same sort that you would occupy yourself. Cottages that would be let as a rule about the rural districts would not be very good ones. If a man were going to build one he would not build it on the same plan at all. I should say a fair labourer's cottage would cost about 50*l.* or 60*l.*, not less than 50*l.* anyhow.

28,496. Then 3*l.* 10*s.* would be a fair return, would it not?—I believe cottages used to be built for 40*l.* I was told so by a mason the other day, that he had built many cottages for 40*l.*

28,497. Of what material, mud?—Limestone.

28,498. Perhaps that would be only the mason's bill?—No, he used to contract for building them, he told me, within the last 20 years.

28,499. They would be wretched rooms, would they not?—No rooms upstairs, just two rooms downstairs.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,500. What kind of floor?—A gravel floor; there would not be much wood about it, and then the limestone can be taken from close by, generally.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,501. That would not fetch a rent of 3*l.* 10*s.*, would it?—I am not in a position to say much about that.

28,502. Would any people in this part of the country be inclined to build a cottage of this sort?—No, there would not be many of that sort.

Lord Kenyon.

28,503. You would not like to say that on the large estates cottages of that sort would be built?—No, I am not speaking of landlords of large estates now. I am speaking of individuals who might have a corner here and there.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,504. Quite so, but I am speaking merely from the money point of view. Would it pay a landlord? Would he have 2 or 3 per cent. on his outlay if he built a decent cottage such as one would have to build in these days?—I question whether the occupier would be agreeable to take the fresh burden on himself of building the new cottages that would have to be built on his farm for his labourers, in addition to his present rent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,505. As a matter of principle, do you consider it a good arrangement that the tenants should have to repair the labourers cottages?

Lord Kenyon.

28,506. First of all, do they do so?—I did.

28,507. I know, but is that the general practice on the estates?—No, it is not on most estates.

28,508. I take it from you that your estate is in rather a peculiar position?—Yes, it is.

28,509. It has been in Chancery, it is now in the hands of trustees, and it is settled on the owner's wife?—That is so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,510. But from a sanitary point of view, it would be much better, would it not, for the landlord to let the cottage direct to the labourer; he is more likely then to do repairs than the tenant, is he not?—Yes, I consider he would be more likely in most cases, and would have more capital to do it with.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,511. You say you have a lease. That was a repairing lease?—Yes.

28,512. The repairs of the buildings and of the cottages you were responsible for; you had to do them according to the terms of that lease?—I do not think there was a cottage on the farm when I took it.

28,513. I took this down from your evidence in chief, that more labourers could be employed if there was more capital for building their cottages?—No, you misunderstood me.

28,514. I was going to ask you whether I took it down correctly or not?—No, not for building the cottages. More labour could be employed if there was capital enough to employ more labourers. Will you allow me to explain with regard to the cottages?

28,515. Yes, I should like to have your explanation?—I was just going to mention this, that my holding was formerly two holdings, so that one of the farm houses was converted by me for the use of my tenants, so that I have three tenants living in the old farm house.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,516. Three cottagers?—They are not actually cottages on the farm. There was not one on the farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,517. Three tenants are living there. Are they labourers?—Yes. I have divided the house so as to suit three tenants, and apportioned it off.

28,518. Are those tenants working on your land?—They are.

28,519. It is in the nature then of a cottager's house?—Yes, they are in the same position as cottagers. It was let as two holdings.

28,520. Your lease has expired?—Yes.

28,521. Do you continue on the same terms?—No, there is no mention of any terms to me.

28,522. Then who does the repairs now?—I have to do them if there are any to be done. I had to do them this winter.

28,523. Is that the custom of the country, that the occupier, the tenant, does permanent repairs?—Not on large estates, as a rule.

28,524. It is not the rule, but it was an exception in your case?—Yes.

28,525. Then you are an exception to the rule, you think?—Well, there are a good many isolated cases besides my own.

28,526. In Castle Martin?—Yes. I think I could mention others if I were to think it over.

28,527. The breed of Castle Martin cattle has been a very celebrated breed, has it not, and it continues to be so still, or are you superseding it?—No, the black cattle hold their own very well here. They are sought after.

28,528. Do you breed many horses?—I do not breed many. There are a few bred here.

28,529. There are some good horses bred in this country, I believe?—I breed one occasionally, not to any great extent.

Lord Kenyon.

28,530. You find it more profitable to buy?—Yes, and to sell to a good customer.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,531. May I ask how many labourers you have to till your 400 acres on your 400-acre farm?—Do you refer to the average for three years, or the number at present?

28,532. The average?—Generally five or six, and two boys; one of them almost as good as a man.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,533. Are you able to manage with five or six on a farm of that size?—Not as it should be managed. I do a good deal of work myself.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,534. I thought it rather a small number.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,535. Do you know of any tenants that have had to leave their farms when they wished to remain, because the rent was too high?—Yes, plenty of them.

28,536. They have left the neighbourhood?—Yes, many of them. There is Mr. White, of Chiffrelton, who left; Mr. Rees, of Kilpaison, left; and Mr. Lewis, of Rowston, left.

28,537. Did they ever apply for a reduction of rent, do you know?—I can only go upon hearsay. I could not prove that they did. There may be others here who can.

28,538. Do you not think it would be a good thing for these farmers in the neighbourhood if they had some place to appeal to besides the landlord?—Yes, that is my conviction.

28,539. I mean in order to have fair rent?—Yes, only as a last resource. I prefer doing it with my landlord.

28,540. If the landlord and tenant can agree, all will be well?—Yes, that is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,541. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act much known in this country? Is it generally known to the farmers here?—I do not think it is.

28,542. You consider that it is not quite satisfactory, and that it may be amended?—Yes, I do. I pointed out one or two things that I thought could be improved.

Lord Kenyon.

28,543. As to the two months' notice, and as to consent?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,544. I wish to return you this document with regard to the Manor of Lamphey. I have glanced through it, and I find that the opinions given by very eminent counsel, Mr. Preston and Mr. Scriven, differ. Mr. Scriven's opinion was the final one. How is the matter settled in the manor now? That opinion was taken in 1839—That is a personal experience, and it is only a matter so far as I have known in my personal experience, but there are many cases in the manor which are considered to be very grievous and very oppressive. As a matter of fact the sum asked me as a fine upon this property was 142*l.*, the admittance formerly paid being 40*l.*, and which 40*l.* was paid to take in 53 acres more than I purchased.

28,545. Then you do not know whether litigation ever did take place with regard to admission to this manor?—I do not think there has ever been a test case.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,546. Have you ever been able to ascertain what was the rent of this farm, say 50 years ago?—It was let to Mr. Parcell for 14 years at a sum of 122*l.*, I think. I had the statement somewhere here.

28,547. Is that the whole of your holding?—Yes. I can give it to you. The rental paid by Mr. Parcell for the whole was 122*l.* a year. That was taken in two lots.

28,548. In what year was that; could you give us the date?—This letter was written on August 9th, 1892. I would rather not disclose the name of the writer of the letter to you, but I can submit the letter to you. He is a qualified man, who writes to inform me that my admittance would not exceed 100*l.* in two lots, whereas the sum asked me was 142*l.* and 40*l.*, in the face of another being admitted at the same time who paid 20*l.* more money than I did for lot 2, and who was admitted at 36*l.* when I was asked 142*l.*

28,549. I will just ask you one more question. Do you think you could have paid your rent during the term of your lease, if you had not had some other source to draw upon?—No, I could not. I was constantly having assistance.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,550. I have one or two questions to ask you upon that. You say that a good many of the farmers from this neighbourhood have migrated to English counties. Are they English or Welsh farmers?—Welsh farmers. I am speaking now in the sense of a Pembrokeshire farmer being a Welshman; he is a mongrel, he is neither one thing nor the other; he does not speak the Welsh language. A lot of men in the south part of the country here cannot speak Welsh.

28,551. Do you find that there is great readiness among the farmers here to migrate? Are they ready to cut their connexion with this part of the country?—No, they would not if they could obtain farms here on the same conditions as there; they would sooner stay here.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,552. Is it the farmers or farmers' sons who migrate?—Both. I know of instances of both. The cases which I mentioned to you each and all of them were tenant farmers themselves. Some of them had been in the county farming, I should say, for 30 or 40 years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,553. Are the farmers here satisfied with the accommodation for housing their stock? You say that the conditions of farming have changed a good deal, and that more land is laid down to pasture, and I take it that the number of the stock is increased. Is there a corresponding increase in the accommodation for the stock?—Yes, on some estates there has been a great deal done in that way.

28,554. The landlords have, generally speaking, fulfilled the requirements of the tenants?—Yes, only I think in some cases, I will not say in all, the tenants have been expected to remunerate the landlord by paying a certain amount per cent. upon the outlay.

Mr. Grove.

28,555. What rate was that?

Lord Kenyon.

28,556. You cannot speak from personal experience?—No. I have heard the sum of 5 per cent. mentioned, and in other cases more, I think.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,557. Then in fact, is it your opinion that this depression is really of a permanent character?—That is my opinion, unless we go to war.

28,558. And that the present rents are impossible?—Yes, that is so.

28,559. I find that but very few tenants intend appearing to give evidence here. Can you assign any reason for that?—Would you understand the reason of "I do not like to"? The reason I get is generally "I do not like to."

28,560. Why not? Have you pursued the inquiry?—There are many reasons.

28,561. Is it because they are satisfied with their lot?—No, it is not.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

28,563. But all your evidence goes to show that this is an exceptionally bad year?—It is an exceptionally bad year.

28,564. And therefore, perhaps it is that the abatements are exceptionally large. There may be that reason too?—There may be, but I have my own individual opinion that if you gentlemen had not come down here the abatements would not have been so large.

28,565. That, if I may say so, must be confined to your opinion?—I only give it as my opinion, my Lord. It is a very humble opinion.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,566. You do not know of positive instances where tenants have been discouraged from appearing?—Well, that is a very difficult question. I do know of many things that have occurred, but which, if I were to apply to the authorities from which I get my information, I presume they would not substantiate any statement they made. That is my position, I must tell you. I believe them to be true, and know them to be true, but the persons who gave me the information are in such a position that they would not care to have their names revealed.

28,567. Have any of the landlords or any of the agents stated publicly that the tenants were at perfect liberty to appear before the Commission to give evidence?—I have not heard of a case. It might be so, but I have not heard of such a case.

Lord Kenyon.

28,568. I have some questions to put to you which are handed in by Mr. Vincent. The first is, "You say that you do not know of agents "with special training and experience. Do you "know Major Wynne?"—Yes, I know him as a major.

28,569. "Do you know Mr. Mousley?"—Yes, my Lord.

28,570. "Mr. Rees Stokes?"—Yes, my Lord.

28,571. "Mr. Sackville Owen?"—Yes, my Lord.

28,572. "Mr. Rule Owen, and others?"—Yes, my Lord. Mr. Rule Owen I would not put in the same category as the others. He is a valuer.

28,573. Do you consider those agents have special training and experience?—What amounts to special training, may I ask, my Lord, is it in the army or in a lawyer's office?

28,574. I know some people consider it is a good thing to have a lawyer as an agent. I do not know whether it is so or not?—I should not think he would be.

28,575. But I take it, it means education in a landlord's office in some way, or in some agricultural college, or by previous experience under another agent?—I should not consider that they had any special training in any way. I should like it pointed out to me what is the special training, if they have any.

28,576. It is difficult to say. Some farmers have no special training beyond living on the land all their life?—Oh yes, they have generally to go through some practical part of farming. Have either of those gentlemen ever ploughed an acre of land?

28,577. Possibly not, but that does not constitute the necessary knowledge of an agent. He does not have to plough land?—You want to put the agent on the same level as the farmer's son.

28,578. The agent has a great deal to do besides attending to the agricultural part of the estate?—But your contention, my Lord, was that the farmer's son, or the farmer, has merely lived on the farm, but I say he has done more than live on the farm, he has had to do with the practical part of the farm, and the land agent has not.

28,579. He has had it before his eyes the whole of his life, possibly?—So have I had the coast of Devonshire before my eyes, and I have never been there.

28,580. It is rather further off than the soil under your feet?—I do not see that, because an agent has had land under his eyes, and is riding about over it, that that puts him in a position to be an efficient agent, or to have any knowledge of practical farming.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,581. What I understand you to mean is that none of the agents round this part of the country have been specially trained as land agents, that is to say, you do not deny—as I see, there is one gentleman mentioned who is a solicitor?—Mr. Rule Owen I do not consider an analogous case at all.

28,582. But I mean one of these gentlemen whose name I recognise as being that of a solicitor?—Yes, he is a solicitor.

28,583. Do you object to solicitors being land agents? Is that one point you make?—Yes, quite so.

28,584. Unless they have also had special training in regard to the land?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

We shall never come to an agreement as to what that special training is.

Mr. Richard Jones.

The witness asserts by implication that no one is qualified to be a land agent, unless he has been farming himself.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,585–6. Yes, or else educated in a place like the Cirencester Agriculture College?—Why should he not be educated for it as he is educated for a lawyer? This gentleman had to pass through certain examinations before he became a lawyer, and I should think that a land agent should have to pass certain examinations before he becomes a land agent.

Lord Kenyon.

I tell you that they have to pass an examination, although they may not have touched the plough themselves. They have to pass an examination in agriculture. However, you would not consider it to be a test at all, I suppose, because it would be simply theoretical, you say?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,587. No; Mr. Gibbs does not object to a man who has been trained at an agricultural college?—No, that is just what I say they should be. Something more than theory is wanted. I do not think I could sail a ship upon theory.

Lord Kenyon.

But in order to test your view there, I understand that there are many other things which an agent has to do besides understanding a farm, for instance, timber and building.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Or drawing an agreement, that may be most useful.

Lord Kenyon.

28,588. Yes, there are a number of sides to it, he cannot always have practical experience of actual labour himself?—Yes, but in regard to the erection of buildings he should acquire a certain knowledge as to what is best fitted for the comfort of the cattle and the arrangement of the houses.

28,589. Yes, but that is all got from other people's experience as a rule; it is learned out of books?—Well, in some instances it has been a failure, my Lord.

28,590. No doubt it has. You say that these gentlemen have not had what you consider special training and experience. That is your answer to the question?—That is my answer to it.

28,591. Then we pass on to the next?—I am quite prepared to be converted if it can be proved to my satisfaction that these gentlemen have been specially trained. I know as much about them as anyone, I think.

28,592. These are still Mr. Vincent's questions: "You say that tithes are paid by the tenant. "Do you mean that the recent Tithe Act is "inoperative, or simply that since the Act the "amount of the tithe has been added to the "rent"?—Will you accept this letter in answer to that question, my Lord?

28,593. I do not know what the letter is?—If you will please look at it you will see in a moment. (The witness handed in letter.) I pay the tithe now as I ever did, only that I pay it through the landlord, and my rent is regulated by the rise and fall in tithes.

28,594. Then your answer to this question is simply that since the Act the amount of tithe has been added to the rent. The letter only says that; it says that the total amount of tithe will be paid by Mr. Gibbs, plus 400*l.* a year, which is the rent.

28,594A. "Where is the land reclaimed by tenants?"—In this neighbourhood that I know of?

28,595. Yes, the land that you referred to?—There is a farm called Lammaston, where it was uncultivated land which was known as Lammaston Hills, which have been reclaimed and made very productive; the same with regard to Kingston; the same with regard to a large piece of land on Lord Cawdor's estate at Flimston.

28,596. "When was the reclaiming done?"—I could not give you the exact date—within the last year or so.

28,597. "Are you sure that the landowner "had no share whatever in this reclaiming?"—No, I could not state that he has not.

28,598. You do not know?—I do not know.

28,599. "In this matter, do you speak from "personal experience or from hearsay?"—Of the reclaiming?

28,600. Yes?—I myself reclaimed 8 or 12 acres. In that case there was no compensation.

28,601. What was the case with regard to the other one?—I can be put in a position before you leave to be able to state whether or not the landlord has paid any part of it. [The witness subsequently handed in the following memorandum:—This is to certify that we, the undersigned tenants of the farms Kingston and Lammaston, received no assistance from our landlords in reclaiming the lands mentioned by the witness William Gibbs, before the Commission at Pembroke. As witness our hands,—(Signed) John Mathias, Abraham Davies.]

28,602. Mr. Vincent also asks,—"When you "say consent is given to improvements on "conditions, do you mean on conditions "as to the character of the work to be "done?" I think that came out of a question which I asked you?—Well, a question would arise between landlord and tenant as to whether those improvements were of such a character as to be remunerative to the landlord, and in that case the tenant may get consent, but I question whether he would be backed by his landlord if he did not consider the improvements of such a character.

28,603. You mean to say that opinions might differ between the landlord and the tenant as to whether they really were improvements or not?—Quite so. The question is whether they would be or would not be.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,604. What would be the nature of those improvements?—Supposing you wanted water taken to your house, or accommodation for your cattle built up in the fields for shelter—many things I could mention.

Lord Kenyon.

28,605. Dutch barns or things of that sort, I suppose?—Yes, my Lord, or even with regard to disposing of straw and hay where there was a restriction.

28,606. "Is not your farm the whole of the landlady's estate?"—I believe not. I think there is a certain property at Hazlebeach, and I think a small property now held by Mr. Thomas, or which was held by him, near Milford, but I do not know to what extent.

28,607. Perhaps it is the larger part of it, is it?—Mine is the larger part, I should think.

28,608. "Was your predecessor in your farm "a competent farmer—was he not a Scotch "draper?"—He might, according to the theory put forward here to-day, be a Scotch draper and a farmer, if he was brought up as a youth on the farm. That cuts both ways, my Lord.

28,609. Do you call him a competent farmer? You have given your opinion about the agent, here is something about the farmer?—No, I should not consider he was a competent farmer, but there were competent farmers there before him.

28,610. And did he make it pay?—They did not stay there 21 years—not one of them, except the one who preceded me years ago, and who only paid a third part of the rent which I pay. The two farms they held were let at 132*l.* up to 146*l.*, and my farm has been let at 475*l.* for 21 years, and it is now 400*l.*, and I could take my farm at the rent which they paid for it and make it pay now, and make a living out of it.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. T. T. Mousley called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

28,611. We have got several witnesses, and our time is necessarily rather brief, so I will ask you to pass over those points which have no special importance and confine yourself to those on which you wish to give more particular evidence?—I shall be very glad to occupy as little time as I can.

28,612. I have no wish to boycott your evidence in the least?—I hope it will not be so elaborate as my friend Mr. Gibbs's has been.

28,613. You are Mr. T. T. Mousley, of Aberystwith?—Yes.

28,614. You are land agent to Lord Cawdor?—I had the honour of being Lord Cawdor's agent for 30 years, but I retired from it in midsummer last year.

See evidence of present Agent at Question 40,241.

28,615. You ceased to be his land agent last year?—I retired from the agency at midsummer last year after 30 years.

28,616. You wish to speak as to Lord Cawdor's Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire estates. Is that so?—That is so.

28,617. Can you enumerate the manors?—Some of them. There are a great number of different manors. In this county there are, I suppose, five or six. I may say that the six parishes of Lord Cawdor's Stackpole estate are in the manors of Stackpole, of Meryon and Castle

Martin—the three manors down in this southern part of the county.

28,618. Are courts held there?—There have been; though for the last few years there have not. There is really nothing to do. There are no wastes.

28,619. Then we may pass on to ownership. Are there any copyholds?—None down here.

28,620. Any enclosures?—None down here.

28,621. Any allotments?—No, none down here.

28,622. Are there any on the estates of which you speak?—I may say that my remarks apply almost as much to the Carmarthenshire estates as to the Pembrokeshire estates. The Carmarthenshire estates are very much more extensive than the Pembrokeshire estates. The Carmarthenshire estates are something like 50,000 acres against nearly 20,000 in this county.

28,623. Do you wish to give evidence as to both those estates now?—I think the same remarks pretty much apply to one as to the other.

28,624. Very well. Have there been enclosures on the Carmarthenshire estate?—Yes, there was a very extensive enclosure about 20 years ago in the Manor of Emlyn uch cych. In some five or six parishes there were wastes enclosed—in the parishes of Llangeler, Penboyr, Cenarth, and Cilrhedyn.

28,625. Enclosed under the Act?—Yes, under the Act, enclosed by the Commissioners' award and valuation and all the rest of it. Lord Cawdor was Lord of the Manor, and of course got very extensive allotments by the enclosures.

28,626. Are the squatters required to pay a small rent?—Yes.

28,627. Has that rent ever been increased?—It is after a time perhaps, or if there is any outlay—if the cottage becomes in a bad state and the landlord has to lay out something in restoring, it is natural that he should charge some little extra rent for so doing.

28,628. Have you anything to say about hill lands, are they let for sheep?—Yes, in one part of Carmarthenshire in particular there are very extensive sheep farms above Llandovery, farms that are calculated for very little else than the growth or run of mountain sheep.

28,629. Is that a profitable occupation or not?—That depends very much on the season. Generally, perhaps for three or four years, it pays very well, but if there is a very bad winter, or bad season, or bad weather at certain times of the year, the sheep are a failure; and the farmer's income depends very much on the sheep.

28,630. Have language or politics anything to do with the choosing of tenants?—We have only the English language down here. In the Carmarthenshire district of course we have to acknowledge the Welsh. I do not know that the language makes any difference. Politics make no difference, unless we get some very rabid gentlemen applying that we do not choose to have. Religious principles make no difference whatever.

28,631. Now, about the training of the agents. Have you anything to say upon that?—What do you wish to ask me on that subject?

28,632. Do you consider them specially trained?—The more training they have the better. I have had considerable training in 50 years. I commenced my agency experience in the year 1840 or 1841, by assisting my father, who was agent to the two last Earls of Dartmouth, in their Staffordshire estates. After being with him a few years, I went to another relative, to my uncle. He had a very general land agency, and he very soon packed me off to North Wales to take charge under him of four extensive estates, three of them in Denbighshire, Lord Bagot's estate of Pool Park, two of Sir Watkin's estates in Denbighshire, and Earl Dudley's Crogen estate in Merionethshire. That was my position for nine years as a resident agent. That brings me down to 1855, when I had given to me, on my own account, the agency of Lord Combermere's estate in Cheshire. That I held for seven years, when I gave it up and came to Lord Cawdor in 1863, to accept his agencies down here. I think a record of 50 years should be considered to have given me some experience. During that time I had a great deal to do with the details of farm management. At Pool Park my uncle had the tenancy of the large domain farm as well as the agencies, and I was acquainted with the management of Lord Dartmouth's farming in Staffordshire in my early years, and I saw a great deal of estate management as to farming in Cheshire on Lord Combermere's estate. All the bailiff's accounts passed through my hands—all the details.

28,633. Were you on that estate at the time those extensive improvements, under Mr. Bailey Denton, were carried out?—You mean the drainage improvements? Yes, they were in operation when I left. They were not finished when I left. I was thankful to have left just before that horrible cattle plague, which made such havoc there among the tenants.

28,634. That was said to have cost Lord Combermere 70,000*l*. I do not know whether it did or not. Now, to pass to occupation. The date of entry you say is the 29th September?—Yes. Twenty-one years ago Lord Cawdor granted on the Stackpole estate either five or six leases for 21 years. I have a copy here, if you would like to see it. It was a lease drawn out first by the landlord, and then it was submitted to the tenants for them to pull to pieces as much as they chose, and to suggest any improvements. It passed through their hands, and came back to us, and was adopted by Lord Cawdor. His Lordship granted either five or six leases; that is 21 years ago; they are just about expiring, and I may say that we have not had an application since that time for any other lease. There are no leases in this country. I think the farmers have begun to find out that in the hands of a good landlord they are in a better position without a lease than with.

28,635. Are there penalising clauses in that lease?—There are very slight ones I inserted. I will hand it to you to see, if you like (handing in agreement).

28,636. You say there is not much difference between the condition of the leaseholders and that of yearly tenants?—Very little.

28,637. Is there much increase in change of tenancy?—I do not think in the 30 years, taking the two counties, we have had an average of one change a year, not an entire change of tenancy. His Lordship's desire has always been to keep as much as possible the old families in the tenancies. Sometimes, of course, there are cases where a change was inevitable—death, and so on; but we always, if we could, afforded a fair chance of re-letting to a member of the family. Where it was possible we never made extreme changes if we could avoid it.

28,638. In resuming occupation of a field for planting, and so on, on Lord Cawdor's estate, is there generally notice given or not?—That is a matter of friendly arrangement between the landlord and the tenant. Of course, fair compensation, as nearly as can be ascertained, is made for any land taken for those purposes.

28,639. Have you had any complaint under that head?—None.

28,640. Then, damage caused by timber cutting—is that compensated for?—Yes, there is always some damage, and generally very rough damage, too, but there is always an endeavour to get a tenant compensated for his damage, either by the timber purchaser or by the landlord. Of course, it is in fairness put generally upon the timber purchaser.

28,641. Then you have spoken of agreements. Do the tenants always have a copy of their agreements?—I may say (perhaps it is somewhat discreditable to myself) we have scarcely ever gone through the form of giving agricultural yearly agreements. Since the recent Agricultural Holdings Acts those agreements have been of little consequence; they are inoperative; they are knocked on the head. It is generally a memorandum between the agent and the tenant, the tenant undertaking to enter into a regular agreement when required. Of course it is not a lease unless it is given to the tenants; then the landlord always keeps the counter-part. That was always the case as regards these 21 years' leases.

28,642. Had the tenant to pay for that lease?—Not a sixpence. Here is a counter-part of one of those leases, dated the 4th October 1875 (producing same).

28,643. How is the rent ascertained and fixed? By mutual arrangement between landlord and tenant at a lump sum, or at so much per acre?—The gross sum ascertained by the value per acre of different parts of the farm.

28,644. It is worked out per acre, and put at a lump sum?—Exactly.

28,645. Is there uniformity, do you think, in the rents on the estate?—No, not much uniformity. To some extent there is, but all farms vary in some respects; there cannot be uniformity.

28,646. The rent varies according to the value of the land. Is that so?—Quite so.

28,647. How about the smaller tenements? Are those rented higher or lower?—I should think, perhaps, as a rule, the very small farms are rather at a higher rent than the larger ones—the very small farms of, say 15 or 20 acres, or something like that—little accommodation farms.

28,648. On account of the buildings and the expense attached to them?—Yes.

28,649. What is the usual average rent?—It is almost impossible to answer this question, most farms being composed of upland and lowland, and varying from say, 2*s.* to 2*l.* an acre. I think that is rather under the figure my friend Mr. Gibbs gave. In Pembrokeshire, on the Stackpole estate, perhaps the average may be about 18*s.* an acre. On estates higher up the county perhaps an average of 15*s.* per acre. As to Carmarthenshire, I put the lowland estates at something like 15*s.* an acre, and the highland mountain farms at 8*s.* an acre.

28,650. That would include sheep walk, would it?—Yes. With these sheep walk farms there is generally some portion of lowland farm to be cultivated.

28,651. Is the right to pasturage taken into account in assessing the rent?—Yes.

28,652. Are there any services exacted?—None.

28,653. As to the basis of rent, the agent forms his opinion as to the value?—Quite so.

28,654. And then settles the tenancy by private treaty?—Then it is settled by private treaty.

28,655. Do you know of any farm let to the highest bidder?—No. I daresay it very often is, if the highest bidder happens to be the best man, it is very natural then that he should be the accepted tenant; it does not follow that because he is the highest bidder he must be accepted.

28,656. Has Lord Cawdor ever let by auction?—Never.

28,657. Arbitration you say is never resorted to?—No, never.

28,658. Has the estate ever been re-valued?—In 1862 the whole estate was re-valued by a professional gentleman, and the first thing I had to do on entering into the agency was to relet the whole property.

28,659. In 1862?—In 1863. It was valued in 1862.

28,660. You mean at those rents?—Well, I could not let them up to those rents. I had a great many things to take into consideration by Lord Cawdor's instructions, where there had been what could be called permanent improvements by the tenants, not exhausted, and where they had an undoubted claim. His Lordship advised me: "I think it quite right that we "should acknowledge and make some allow-"ances in our re-lettings," and I daresay the reductions in the re-letting of the whole property cost Lord Cawdor 1,000*l.* at least a year.

28,661. 1,000*l.* a year?—1,000*l.* a year in the yearly rents.

Lord Kenyon.

28,662. Have there been any permanent reductions or abatements, or both?—Yes.

28,663. Can you give us details?—Here they are. I daresay this may be sufficient. For the year ending Lady-day 1886, abatements 15 per cent.; Lady-day 1887, 15 per cent.; Lady-day 1888, 15 per cent. Then there was a change. In 1891 the tithes were allowed, 7½ per cent. on the rents; in 1892, the same; Lady-day 1893, 10 per cent. and the 7½ per cent. for the tithes, making about 17½ per cent. That was up to Lady-day 1893, and that is going on for the present year, up to Lady-day 1894.

28,664. That is all, is it?—With reference to those abatements.

28,665. Is notice given when an abatement is to be given?—The sub-agents are always authorised previous to the rent days to make it known to the tenants that there will be so much abatement out of their rent at the rent day.

28,666. How much notice?—From 10 days to a fortnight, or something like that, in giving notice of the rent days to be held at different places.

28,667. The rents have not been raised, you say?—Not since that time, 30 years ago, excepting an occasional change. If there was some real ground for it, there might have been some slight increase of rent, but it has happened very seldom.

28,668. What was the general result of that re-valuation; was it to raise the rent or not?—A very considerable increase; by the valuation I daresay the increase would be about 6,000*l.* a year, but the actual letting did not amount to an increase of 5,000*l.*

28,669. What do you say have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years?—The low price of cereals for many years, say 10 or more, the falling off of the demand for store cattle for the Midland pastures during the last four or five years, those two reasons, and the bad seasons we have had.

28,670. The rent is paid, you say, six months after it becomes due?—From five to six months.

28,671. The preferential claim, you say, is a benefit to the tenant?—This preferential claim upon Lord Cawdor's tenants is as a rule very cheerfully acknowledged.

28,672. The tithes, land tax, &c., are paid by the tenants, and the income tax by the landlord?—Just so.

28,673. The rates have increased, you say?—I ought to say perhaps with reference to tithes at the present time, the last couple of years, since the Tithe Act, the tithes, of course, have been paid by Lord Cawdor as the landlord, and since that time he has not charged them to his tenants. At the present time Lord Cawdor continues to pay the tithes on his whole property.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,674. Only he takes it into consideration when he is making abatements?—No. These yearly abatements have been abatements on the rents. The tithes have not been re-charged up to this time to the tenants.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,675. But the 17½ includes the 7½ per cent. tithes?—The 7½ per cent. is the per-centage of the tithes upon the rent, and with the addition of the 10 per cent., 17½ per cent. would be the entire allowance in the year by the landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

28,676. Have there been any consolidations of farms?—Not to any great extent.

28,677. And no sub-division?—No.

28,678. What do you say as to small holdings in regard to practical skill in farming?—Small holdings may answer for keeping dairy cows, if the land is chiefly pasture, I think if it comes to mixed tillage, the small holdings have not a fair chance at present prices.

28,679. Have you more demand for small holdings than for large?—Yes.

28,680. Is there a scarcity of labour?—A general scarcity of labour, there is no doubt, throughout the country—agricultural labour.

28,681. Is that owing to the scarcity of labourers, or the difficulty farmers are in that they cannot employ the labourers?—There is a great deal said about bringing the agricultural labourers back to the land, but I do not think I ever knew it to answer, "to put the cart before the horse." If you put the farmers in a better position than they are at the present time it may answer, if you can bring the labourers back again, well and good, but I do not see the use of bringing the poor fellows back until the farmers can employ them and pay them.

28,682. You say tillage has been reduced of late years?—Yes.

28,683. More land laid down to grass?—No doubt, and I am afraid too many farmers found when they had done that that they had made a mistake, that they had laid down their land to grass to reduce their tillage, and thereby to reduce the expenses; then, of course, the next thing to do was to increase their stock, and they no sooner increased their stock than the demand for the supply to English pastures ceasing in consequence of there being no money on that side of England to send to this country, they had to keep their stock, and they were overstocked.

28,684. Is there any reclamation?—Very little in this country—very little in either county.

28,685. What improvements does the landlord do?—Most permanent improvements. The permanent buildings Lord Cawdor insists on doing. He says: "I cannot approve of my tenants going "to any great outlay in improving permanently "my property, unless they get some considera-"tion for it—unless they get something in "the shape of a lease or security for their "outlay." His instructions have always been to me, "Let me know when you consider there

" is anything necessary as accommodation for the " farmers, anything that they really require and " is necessary, and if it is possible, if we can " afford it, we will do it." That has always been his Lordship's desire and his instructions to me.

28,686. The tenants do the haulage?—Yes.

28,687. Willingly?—Willingly.

28,688. Does the landlord do the draining?—The landlord drains, and when he drains he charges—not always—for the outlay 5 per cent.

28,689. He supplies gates and posts?—Yes.

28,690. Then as to embankments. Is there anything as to that?—That is done by the landlord. In Carmarthenshire we have a great deal of that in the River Towy.

28,691. Is there any co-operation in improvement?—No, sometimes the landlord provides timber or iron for fencing, the tenant erecting the fences.

28,692. You say the estate is subject to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

28,693. What is the estate custom?—The old established customs of the estate as admitted by the Agricultural Holdings Act. Where there are established customs of the estate, I think the intention of the Agricultural Holdings Act was that it should not interfere with those old established customs. There are these old established customs on Lord Cawdor's property. I do not venture to say what are the customs of the country, but as regards his Lordship's estate, there are those old established customs which are enforced willingly, and are now admitted by both parties.

28,694. Is the landlord's consent asked, for specific improvements?—I must say, in reply to that question, that since the Agricultural Holdings Act I have never been once asked for permission to make a permanent improvement of that description with reference to compensation for that improvement; not once.

28,695. The allowances to the outgoing tenants, you say, are met by the custom of the estate?—Yes.

28,696. Have you anything more to say on that?—The growing crops are valued by arbitration if the outgoing tenant and incoming tenant fail to agree. They generally do agree.

28,697. Then we can pass to the subject of tenant right. Do you know of any tenant right?—None. We do not admit any.

28,698. Then the sheep on sheep farms are taken by the incoming tenant?—Yes, generally. That applies to the hill farms in Carmarthenshire and the upper country. They are generally hill sheep farms, and the stock is taken by the incoming tenant at a valuation.

28,699. You do not think much of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not much. It is all very well as far as it goes.

28,700. Do you think it might be amended?—I think it might be improved; but if it was worth while to pass an Agricultural Holdings Act, it might have been a more generally beneficial Act—more useful.

28,701. How about the game on Lord Cawdor's estate. Is there much?—On the Stackpole estate game is preserved, of course, to a very considerable extent, and only on that estate. The tenants do not make any complaint or grievance of it. They will admit that Lord Cawdor is very generous with his game. He never sells a head of game. The game is always given away, chiefly to his tenants and tradespeople and neighbours and friends. All that he does not consume is given away to one or the other. He never sells a head. There are no complaints about game. According to the Ground Game Act, the tenants have now the joint right of rabbits and hares. If we have any complaint to make as to that, it is that they do not keep them down close enough.

28,702. And they are not expected to beat?—No.

28,703. What is the effect of game preserving on cultivation?—That depends upon the extent of the game. Of course, every head of game would do some small amount of damage, but, as I say, there is no game on Lord Cawdor's property of any consequence except on this Stackpole estate. There must be occasionally some slight damage, but it is never made a grievance of by his tenants.

28,704. Has compensation ever been applied for?—Very seldom. Lord Cawdor is fortunate in having as loyal a body of tenantry as any great landlord in the country, and I do not think they are in the habit of complaining when they have no reason.

28,705. Do you consider the law of trespass satisfactory?—Yes. Our present law of trespass is quite sufficient to deal with all cases.

28,706. Do you think it is sufficient to deal with cases that we have heard of with regard to mushroom gatherers?—It is difficult to say. I should be inclined to say that the tenant is the person who has the best claim to the mushrooms, and if he chooses not to exercise that and to allow poor people to come and gather them, it is charitable on his part, and I think is a sort of thing that might be allowed to drift as far as possible, not to be made a grievance of.

28,707. You think the law is sufficiently stringent?—Yes, I think so.

28,708. Is there any agricultural education?—Very little in this country.

28,709. Do you think there is any need for any?—Yes, the more education in agriculture the better. It is difficult in these days to keep pace with the improved agriculture required without some extra education.

28,710. Is there any instruction in butter and cheese making?—Yes. Some methods answer, some do not; there are different systems, butter factories and creameries, and that sort of thing. I am inclined to think that the better way is to educate young girls well in dairy management, and then let them go all over the country and instruct others. I think that is better than collecting milk in different districts and having public factories.

28,711. There are factories in this country, are there?—Oh, yes.

28,712. You consider the railway rates excessive?—As a rule, I suppose they have been excessive. I could not go into the details of that question.

28,713. Do you think co-operation among the farmers might be made useful to them in purchasing manures and so forth?—In that respect I do.

28,714. In any other way?—As I have said, there might be some, but I do not think to any great extent. It might be extended to great advantage as to purchasing manures and farm stuff, and I have always thought farmers might lay their heads together to co-operate in these matters, and especially in obtaining the most expensive implements, might be turned to a very good account. Some of the best implements cost a great deal of money, and I think that by a little care and organisation tenants might combine so as to get hold of these best implements as their joint property. I have always thought that they might benefit one another in that way.

28,715. Now as to freeholders. Do you think they are better off than the proprietor farmers or the other way?—I think a great many farmers who have of late years become freeholders would be very glad indeed to go back again to tenancy. When there was such a rage for buying land some 20 or 25 years ago, a man with 1,000*l.* would very foolishly buy a place that cost 3,000*l.*, and he would borrow his other 2,000*l.*, for which he would have to pay rather a hard task-master. I should think he would be very glad to get himself out of that position and go back again to tenancy. I think that is very often the case.

28,716. How about the labour of the farmers' wives and children?—Farmers and their wives take part in the manual labour on their farm to a large extent, the farmers in outdoor work, and to a very large extent the wives in the home management. I do not know in this country, particularly, what farmers would do unless they had good wives.

28,717. Do the children work?—Yes, if it does not interfere with the age for schooling. They have schooling to attend to, of course. They work at home, but there can be no fixed rule for their remuneration. I do not see how that could be; it depends on circumstances.

28,718. Do you think it has any effect upon the rents?—No, none. As to whether present rents could be maintained if wages were paid in respect of the children's labour, I should say this could not make the difference between present rents and low rents. Children's labour is a very variable quantity. Some farmers have large families and some have none.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,719. I should like to know whether the children, after they attain a certain age, go on living with their parents? The word "children" is rather vague.

Lord Kenyon.

28,720. How long do the children generally stay at home in this country and work at home?—They stay at home, of course, for their schooldays, and as soon as their schooldays are over, they hire themselves to service in farmhouses and so on.

28,721. You are speaking of the children of small farmers?—They go to service of some sort as soon as their education is finished.

28,722. And the sons of the farmers, do they work on the farm?—Yes, when the parents can retain them; they stay at home until they are in a position to take smaller farms themselves.

28,723. Until they marry?—Until they marry, or something of that sort, and farm their own home.

28,724. Then do the farmers start them in life?—If they can—as much as they can, of course. It depends on the number they have to start, and on their own means.

28,725. Have you anything to say about labourers' wages?—As to the amount of labourers' cash wages, they are very variable; if in cash, the average would be, as have said, about 14*s.* a week.

28,726. The cottages are pretty good, are they not?—They are very much improving, I am thankful to say.

28,727. They have good gardens?—Yes, it is no good having a cottage unless there is a good garden to it.

28,728. Do they have any land in this part?—Yes, some have a few acres, just to keep a cow or two.

28,729. How are they held? What is the tenure, under the landlord or under the farmer?—Some of each. Of course, it is preferable where they can be tenants to the landlord, but in many cases the cottages are part and parcel of the farms. That gives the farm tenants a better control over the labourer. But in some respects that is not so satisfactory as when the cottage tenant is tenant to the landlord.

28,730. When do you consider the depression began?—I should say about the year 1885; in 1885 for three or four years; then again in 1890 to the present time.

28,731. And the causes you have stated already?—Several bad climatic seasons, unfair competition in the wheat trade and other cereals, especially in foreign flour. I cannot comprehend why our mill industry should be knocked on the head, as it is, by the importation of foreign manufactured flour. Another cause is the greatly diminished demand for store cattle to go to the Midland pastures.

28,732. Have you considered any remedies?—No, it is not for me to talk politics. We must try to get a little more backbone into some of our statesmen to do that.

28,733. What are the general relations between Lord Cawdor and his tenants?—Excellent; could not be better.

28,734. Can you give details as to money spent on improvements on the estate?—Yes.

28,735. Perhaps you will hand in a table of that?—That is a very serious question. Lord Cawdor has expended, as my yearly accounts prove, in buildings and repairs in Carmarthenshire in the 30 years, nearly 119,000*l.*; in Pembrokeshire during the same time over 91,000*l.*; making about 210,000*l.* in the 30 years expended by his Lordship in improving his houses and buildings on the estates in the two counties.

28,736. You gave us the acreage; what is the total rent?—The total rent of Lord Cawdor's estates?

28,737. Yes?—With due submission, I do think that is a question that ought not to be put to me. I am not at liberty to answer that. I have had no instructions about it, but I think it is too delicate a question to be answered in open court, and, with your permission, I do not choose to state it.

28,738. Many people have withheld it, and some have given it?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,739. I ought to say, in support of the chairman, that many landowners have given the rental. We are not in the least going to press you to give the amount?—Well, some landlords are perhaps less scrupulous; but I do not think I should be justified. I have ceased to be Lord Cawdor's agent.

Lord Kenyon.

28,740. That, no doubt, makes a difference.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,741. The withholding of that information diminishes the value of what you have said as to the amount expended on the estate. It gives us no idea as to the true economic position of the estate during the last few years?—Well, I think I might add to the figures which I have just stated that there would be in those 30 years as nearly as possible a similar sum spent on Lord Cawdor's property in other ways under different heads.

28,742. This conveys very little meaning to our minds so long as we do not know what the profits of the estate are.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,743. Could you give us some proportion or some idea?—It would be a matter of very easy calculation when I had done that.

Lord Kenyon.

28,744. It would not be difficult to arrive at the whole under those circumstances?—There would not be much difficulty, but I think I may state that in addition to this sum of over 200,000*l.* there has been about the same amount expended in different ways, such as woodland management, fencing and draining, river embankments, rates and taxes, keeping up the domains, and under those different heads, always in my accounts kept distinct, which would amount in those years to as near as possible about the same amount as has been expended for buildings and repairs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,745. But it is absolutely irrelevant evidence, if I may say so, until we know what amount has been received by my Lord Cawdor or his predecessors?—Well, sir, I am sorry I cannot be more accommodating.

28,746. Oh, we do not press you in the least about it. I am only intimating that others have given us the full figures?—I do not think it is very important. I do not know what it can signify to this Commission to know what Lord Cawdor's income is, or what the income of any other gentleman in the country is.

28,747. But if we do not care about the income we do not care about the expenditure?—Lord Cawdor expends as much as he can afford out of his income—you may shake your head, but I am, perhaps, better acquainted with that than you may be.

Lord Kenyon.

28,748. May I ask this question: What sort of proportion does the mountain land bear to the whole? You have given us the acreage as 70,000 odd acres?—Well, I do not know. You very soon get to a great number of acres when you have got on to those large mountain farms. I daresay the mountain farms would be a fourth of the whole.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,749. A fourth of the whole acreage?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,750. Would the mountains alone comprise one-fourth, or is that with the farms?—The side land, mountain farms—what may be called the sheep farms—those on the hill sides which you can do nothing else with, I daresay would be (making a random guess) about that proportion; I think I may say that.

Lord Kenyon.

28,751. You give us the average rent, and in that way we arrive at some sort of a rough guess.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,752. You told us that the landlord's consent to specific improvements was never asked for?—Would be given if asked for.

28,753. I think you told us it has not been asked for?—No, not asked for.

28,754. But I think in another part of your evidence you informed us that compensation for permanent improvements had been taken into consideration in fixing the rent?—That was 30 years ago, when I had the duty of re-letting the whole property. These were my instructions:

"Here is the valuation of the whole property, "farm by farm, but you must exercise your "discretion as to whether there should be "abatements or reductions from these rents in "consequence of permanent improvements "recently made by the tenants."

28,755. Have specific improvements been done by the tenants since that date?—No, not to any very large extent. We set our faces against it. Lord Cawdor said it was not reasonable to expect the tenants to improve his property unless they got some compensation for it.

28,756. You say that the rates must have increased 25 per cent. That seems rather a high figure?—I think I have been slightly wrong there. I have been informed since that time that it can hardly be said that they have increased to that extent. There must have been some increase, but not to that extent. I withdraw that.

28,757. May I ask you why you say there must have been an increase. I think we have heard in some places that the rates have not increased, or even that they have gone back?—There have been extra rates, extra causes for rates, education rates, and different things. I think there must certainly have been some increase of rates in this country, but not to the extent I have stated. I was doubtful about it, and I have made inquiries, and I have recently heard, only this very day, that that is outside the mark.

28,758. What would you now say it was?—I do not know that I can venture to say, perhaps from 10 to 15 per cent.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,759. I have only one question I should like to ask. You stated, I think, that you had several manors on the estate, and Stackpole one of them, but that there were no copyholders?—No copyholders down here. In Carmarthenshire the very extensive manors there on the estate of Lord Cawdor extend to pretty nearly, I think I may safely say, one-half the county of Carmarthen. There there are only a few copyholders, a very few.

28,760. The question I wished to ask you was whether, looking at it from a landlord's point of view, you would say it would be an advantage to get rid of copyhold tenures altogether by legislation?—Oh, certainly, I think so. They seem to be thoroughly unsatisfactory.

28,761. And it would be satisfactory to get rid of them?—Exactly, so that a man might know what is his own.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,762. You mentioned just now that the leases were submitted to the tenants for their approval?—Yes.

28,763. Did they suggest any improvements?—I believe they did, but they were very slight.

28,764. Were they adopted?—Yes, I think they were entirely, from what I recollect; you see it is 21 years ago. I daresay my friend Mr. Roberts, of Loveston, would tell you whether they were or not. The leases were submitted to the tenants for any of them to see.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,765. Do you ever invite tenders?—For what?

28,766. For the farms that are to let?—It has never been necessary. Generally, if there is a farm to let, there are ten or a dozen applicants for it. The last two or three years they have not been so numerous as they were previously to that.

28,767. You do not accept any offers from tenants until you have accepted your tenant?—No, of course not. We generally try to make our selection, and then come to terms.

28,768. What is your opinion as to labourers keeping cows—do you think it is a good or a bad thing?—If it can be managed, no doubt it is of very good service to the cottager's family that they should, if they are so inclined, have a chance, if possible, to keep a cow; but you know that the Stackpole cottagers have what is called cow land. Where a lot of pasture land runs together there are, perhaps, some five or six cows in one large field, the tenants agreeing together. In another case there will be perhaps two or three cottagers agreeing together.

28,769. Do you not think that it would tend to keep the labourers in the country and prevent them running into the towns and villages?—No doubt it does; they have an extra stake. The more they have at stake the more likely they are to remain in the country to benefit by it.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,770. Is not that a much easier way of giving them a run for their cows than giving them each so many acres individually?—It is, where the circumstances admit of it, where there are, as at Stackpole, a great many people employed. Most of the labourers are labourers on Lord Cawdor's own farm and the domain garden, and so on; they run their cows together. They pay, I think it is, about 3*l.* a year for each run of a cow, and it is supposed that they have about four acres each of the land for the cow. They pay that in addition to their small cottage rent. The cottage rents are very small, from 1*l.* to 30*s.* a year for the cottage and garden.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,771. Is it not the fact that the children of these tenants who keep cows are more adapted for farm service in future life?—I should not think of disputing that in the least. I have no doubt they are. It gives them in their earlier impressions some acquaintance with those details that are necessary.

28,772. You say no tenants have asked for any consent to improvements?—Not one, I believe. I have no recollection of having been asked by one since these leases were granted. A tenant has never come to me to say, "Well, I "propose to do this; shall I have security for "so doing," or made any reference to compensation in case he loses the tenancy—never one.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,773. Suppose the tenants did often do such things, would you not consider them rather tedious?—What is the use of having an Act of Parliament if you do not pay attention to it and take benefit by it? That Act gives the tenants the opportunity. If they want to spend money, if they think it worth their while to spend a certain sum of money in making an extra improvement which they do not like to ask the landlord for, or which the landlord does not feel at liberty to do, it seems reasonable that they should come and ask permission to do that, and have it settled in a business-like way.

28,774. Do you not think that the tenants are rather timid in doing so?—Why should they be?

28,775. They fear the displeasure of the landlord?—They may have this reason for not falling in with that proposal, that as long as they feel that the landlord will do it for them I dare say they are better satisfied with that than doing it themselves, and as long as they can get the landlord to lay out the money for them and charge them no interest.

28,776. How are you able to obtain the general improvement of the farm?—Of course, a wise tenant on taking a farm will first of all set to work to make improvements, so that he may, during his term of 21 years, derive some benefit from it.

28,777. Did you ever give a tenant notice to quit when he had the promise of a lease?—Never; there have only been those five or six leases; we have never been in the habit of giving notices if we could possibly avoid it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,778. You gave me what I consider not a very courteous answer to a question that I put to you incidentally a few moments ago?—Did I give you an uncourteous answer?

28,779. I think so?—I am sorry if I did. I did not intend it, I assure you.

28,781. Just follow another way of putting it. Supposing it is alleged that in this business of agriculture the landlords have for years been receiving higher rents than they ought, having regard to what they were entitled to receive, then, unless we know the profits the landlord has got—the total amount that he has got—is it not irrelevant in regard to that question to say what expenditure he has made?—That sounds to me rather like admitting the right to have something out of what has been called Land Courts, which I hope to goodness we shall hear very little more of. It will not come in my time, and I hope it will not come in the time of many others that will follow me—that the management of landed estates will have to depend on Land Courts. It will be one of the greatest curses to the country, and I do not think the landlords will be likely to submit to it. I hope they will not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

28,782. Supposing it is alleged that the rents we will say on Lord Cawdor's estates—I am not saying whether it is so or not—are fair and have been fair; it is perfectly clear that the mere statement of the expenditure which has been made by Lord Cawdor can give us no information relevant to that question unless we know what he has received?—Just so, I admit that.

28,783. That was the proposition to which I was respectfully shaking my head?—I admit that.

28,784. Now, I gather from your evidence that, on the whole, you think the present land system is fairly satisfactory?—I think so, and I think that it is not more serious but that the landlords and their tenants can rectify it—can keep it going, keep it on a sound footing, without any intrusion from outside parties. I do not see why the landlords should be deprived of exercising their judgment themselves, or their agents, in the letting of their property, and I think with the good sense of the tenant farmers in the country they are able to take care of themselves.

28,785. Then the system is satisfactory, you think?—I think it might be. Unfortunately, with present prices, of course the farmers are suffering very much in consequence.

28,786. But the prices are part, in a certain sense, of the existing situation?—Quite so.

28,787. Do you think that that system is satisfactory when you find the landlords complaining that they are bound to make abatements, when you find the tenant farmers complaining that their rents are too high, and when you find the labourers complaining that their wages are too low?—Well, it is very easy to understand why the labourers complain because the farmers cannot afford to employ them. It is very natural that farmers should complain, because they cannot get what they consider a fair remunerative price for their produce; and if the landlords try to meet their tenants, as the landlords pretty much as a rule in this country do, by kindly giving them abatements, that, I think, is admitting a fair share of the landlord's responsibility—that he is trying to do his duty by his tenants—and I have no doubt they do in general throughout this country. I am only endeavouring to answer for Lord Cawdor. I think these abatements are altogether satisfactory. We have kept hoping and hoping, year after year, that this depression would not long continue, and that these abatements might meet the case, and that there would soon be no necessity for them; but now, if it keeps going on in this way, I do not see what is to become of the question but that the landlords must be satisfied to make a reduction of their rents.

28,788. In fact, with your practical experience, do you say that farmers are saving money; that they are able to pay the rents and save money at all?—I should not say for one moment that they can be expected to be saving money in these days. If they are able to pay their rents at the present time, they must have been having very easy times a few years ago. No doubt they make a very great effort and strain every nerve, and I am sure that our loyal tenants do, to pay their way in the very honourable way that they do to Lord Cawdor, and I have no doubt it is the case all over the country.

28,789. The logical result of what you say seems to be that if there is to be any change in the law at all, it must be in the direction of fiscal reform?—Yes.

28,790. That is what I gather from your evidence?—Quite so.

28,791. You say the position of the landlord is by no means satisfactory, that is to say that, having regard to the abatements and reductions that he has to make, he does not get a fair interest on what may be called the capitalised value of his land?—No.

28,792. And the tenant farmer is not in a position to do much more than pay the rent and keep things going?—No. I think it all depends on the tenant farmer having fairer markets, fairer terms, and better able to pay his way. I think if some little could be done in that way it would make a very satisfactory difference very soon.

28,793. Is there no written agreement for tenancies from year to year on Lord Cawdor's estate?—Scarcely any now. The estates are all under the Agricultural Holdings Act. That and the custom of the country are sufficient.

28,794. The custom of the country, you say?—Customs of the estate.

28,795. Is the custom of the estate accepted in lieu of the Agricultural Holdings Act? Is there any question raised about it?—Oh, no, they run together; they do not clash at all.

28,796. You mean that before the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 there was a satisfactory custom on the estate?—Quite so, and the same customs remain in conjunction with the Agricultural Holdings Act.

28,797. That is to say, you are referring to clause 5 as to tenancies which were current at the commencement of the Act, and where there is compensation by custom that is to be accepted in lieu of compensation under the Act?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

28,798. You have spoken very disparagingly of any kind of Land Court being adopted?—Yes.

28,799. What would you suggest instead, where a tenant cannot obtain the reduction necessary to enable him to live on the farm?—I am only speaking of this country. I have the honour of knowing a great many large landed proprietors in this country and their equally respected agents. I do not think that anybody can say in fairness that the landlords and the agents of this country are not quite prepared to meet their tenants and people wanting farm tenancies, quite prepared to meet them in the very best possible spirit.

28,800. But we had several farms brought before us this morning, some on the Stackpole estate; the Rowston farm, for instance?—There were some valid reasons there. The man (a very good man) died very soon after he came. Then there was the widow. She was to a great extent helpless, and it was not a satisfactory tenancy at all at the latter part of the time, and I think it was the best for all parties that that was brought to a close. I heard that mentioned this morning.

28,801. But there were several farms mentioned this morning, where the tenants could not get the landlords to believe that they could not pay for their farms, and the consequence was that they were obliged to emigrate or to remove to some other part?—I suppose landlords and their agents are at liberty to exercise their own judgment in such a matter, just as much as the tenant.

28,802. Exactly, but it is a very hard case where a tenant has worked on the farm 40 or 50 years, and then finds that he cannot pay his way and has to leave the farm?—For the last 30 or 40 years; I do not think you can name a tenancy where the tenant has been compelled to go from a farm where he has been for 20, or even 10 years, or anything like it. There has never been, that I am aware of, any improper advantage taken of tenants going away under circumstances of that kind. If there has been compensation necessary and fairly due there has been every desire to give that compensation, but we have had so few changes that I have really had very little experience in that sort of thing.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,803. This agreement you have handed in is a form of agreement for a lease of 21 years. Has that been used since the Ground Game Act of 1880?—No; as I have stated, we have only granted five or six leases 21 years ago, and we have had no application for a lease since, or it would have been on that form.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Charles William Rees Stokes called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

28,804. You are town clerk of the borough of Tenby ?—I am.

28,805. Clerk to the Commissioners of Income and Land Tax and a county councillor for your division ?—Yes.

28,806. You are chairman of the Pembroke Farmers' Club, and you are agent for Mr. J. F. Lort Phillips and Mrs. J. G. Lort Phillips, of Lawrenny Park, Mr. W. H. Richards, and Miss Prothero, of Tenby, and Mr. H. G. Allen, of Paskeston, and Receiver under the Court of Chancery of the Alltyrodyn and Heolddu estates. What estates do you wish to speak for ?—I speak for the Lawrenny estate.

28,807. I think we will pass over those things as to which you have nothing in particular to state. You will stop me if I omit anything you think important. First of all, are changes of tenancy frequent on this estate ?—Never hardly, except by death or otherwise. I have a statement here which I should like to read to your Lordship as to the general management of the estate at the proper period, now or later on; it would come in a little later I think. These questions as to occupation you have had fully answered.

28,808. Our witnesses are rather numerous, and time is rather short, therefore I do not want to duplicate the evidence if it can be avoided. I think I had better leave it in your hands, you will get through it quicker than I should ?—I will go to this question, "What are "the usual conditions of tenancy ?" I produce copy of agreement used on the Lawrenny estate, but the conditions relating to cultivation, sale of hay and straw, and repairs are not enforced, the landlords doing all repairs.

28,809. They are kept in terrorem over a bad tenant, I suppose ?—That is all. Then the question is asked: "Are any of the clauses "considered oppressive; what effect have they "on cultivation ?" None, and they certainly have no effect on cultivation.

28,810. May I ask whether they have freedom in cultivation ?—Practically, they treat the farm as their own property.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,811. Are they allowed to sell hay and straw ?—Sometimes they come and ask me, but if they ask me they always get permission.

Lord Kenyon.

28,812. If they do not ask you they take it ?—As a matter of fact, very often they take it without saying anything about it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,813. You do not interfere ?—I never interfere, so long as I have got a good tenant. I allow him to act as he would do by his own land. Then there is the question, "Is the rent "of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than "on larger farms ?" No, the smaller tenants pay the same rents now as were paid before the Russian War. They were not increased at the valuation of the estate in 1877. Then, "Is the "rent fixed on the basis of a valuation, or by "proposal followed by private treaty ?" By the valuation of Mr. Rule Owen, of Haverfordwest.

Lord Kenyon.

28,814. Is he generally employed ?—Always. I always employ him to value and report upon buildings or value in every case. I never take my own figures in any case whatever.

28,815. Are the tenants always satisfied with his valuation ?—They always prefer him to anybody else.

28,816. As to abatements, have you anything to say ?—Yes. I will refer to that in my general statement, my Lord. I have examined the rentals from the time Mr. Lort Phillips came of age, in 1875, and entered upon the property, and find that there are the same tenants now as were then, except in cases where tenants have died or retired, and that not one tenant has been removed or ejected during that period, In 1877 there was a re-valuation of the farms on the estate, other than small holdings, made by Mr. Rule Owen, land agent, Haverfordwest, which, if acted upon, would have increased the rental by over 400*l.* The alterations actually made, however, only show a total increase of 231*l.* That increase was only paid until the year 1880, when the agricultural depression first affected Pembrokeshire. Mr. Lort Phillips then made permanent reductions in special cases, amounting in the aggregate to 131*l.* per annum. The depression deepening, in 1885 he reduced all farm rents to the level of the rents paid in 1853, before the Russian War, as that year was thought to be the worst time known for agriculturists. This alteration made a further reduction of 480*l.* 7*s.* per annum, and was continued to the year 1888, when store stock, which is the staple commodity upon the estate, so advanced in value that the tenants did not feel justified in asking for any further continuance of the 1885 remission; in fact, Mr. Protheroe, of Yerbaston, declined to take it. In 1891, store stock fell in value generally, and the old remissions were accordingly made from the Michaelmas rents. The depression increasing, an additional allowance of 5 per cent. was made from the Michaelmas 1892 rents, increased to 10 per cent. at Lady Day 1893. These allowances were made to all farmers. Between the year 1876 and the present time, Mr. and Mrs. Lort Phillips have expended in new buildings on the estate 13,187*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, and have expended, during the same period, in repairs and drainage 6,443*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* For a few years some of the tenants paid interest at 5 per cent. upon the outlay on new buildings on their homesteads, but by the year 1885 quite half of those who had agreed to pay interest had been excused, and at the present time not more than 30*l.* per annum is received under this head. I have never distrained for arrears of rent except on one occasion, and then only at the request of the tenant, who was in difficulty through having borrowed money of a money lender. Taking the value of the estate when Mr. Lort Phillips succeeded to it in 1876 at 30 years' purchase on the then rental, the net rents received at the present time, after paying 4 per cent. interest on the expenditure on new buildings, only show a return of 2*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* per cent., out of which all expenses of collection, repairs, &c., have to be made. Whenever any change of tenancy has taken place during my agency, I have never re-let without a valuation of Mr. Rule Owen, as my duties have been confined to the receiving of the rents of the estate and keeping it in repair. There was a reference made just now to the question of there being a difficulty in tenants coming forward to give evidence at this inquiry. Some tenants of Mr. Lort Phillips, who are present in this room, wish to present a petition to the Commission either through me or to your Lordship direct, as you may wish.

28,817. I think they had better present it through you. You may present it as rebutting evidence if you wish to?—If you please, but they wish to be called themselves.

28,818. Our rule is that we must have some sort of limit to the evidence, and therefore we have asked people to give a certain amount of notice?—I am afraid that a great many of them are not aware of your directions, and have not, therefore, sent in their names as they would have done otherwise.

Lord Kenyon.

I regret that extremely.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,819. Do they desire to give evidence?—They desire to give evidence in presenting this memorial to the Commission.

28,820. It is a kind of testimonial to the landlord's character, is it?—I have not read it, but I may tell you shortly it is——

28,821. I think that all we can do is to allow you simply to say that you have received this document. We cannot receive it very well now. We may have hundreds of people willing to come forward and say the landlords are excellent; I have no doubt they will. We think the best plan for you will be to simply say you have received this document from the tenants on the estate?—If you please, but will you not hear the evidence?

28,822. We cannot take any more evidence than we have got, or we should never get through what we have to do?—I heard your Lordship say that you thought it possible to take a second inquiry.

Lord Kenyon.

A second court, not a second inquiry.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I perfectly agree in what the Chairman says. We will hear any witnesses who are here to-day as far as we possibly can, but those who have given notice of their intention to give evidence will have a prior right to have their evidence heard.

Lord Kenyon.

28,823. If you choose to say that you have received a certain memorial, as a matter of fact that will appear in your evidence?—As a matter of fact I have not seen it at all. It is brought forward by the tenantry to-day.

28,824. It shows a very nice feeling on their part, and I am glad to hear it?—Only they wish to be called by your Lordship and to be examined and asked questions, if any questions are to be asked.

28,825. We will call the gentlemen you mention at the end of the day if we have time, but there are eight witnesses who have given notice, and we are bound to take them first. Our time is but limited. We will do our best. Will you now proceed with your evidence?—Shall I read the petition now?

28,826. No, you simply make a statement that you have received that document?—I have received a memorial from the tenants on the Lawrenny estate addressed to the Royal Commissioners on Land; that is how it is headed. "We the undersigned tenants on the "Lawrenny estate hereby testify to the Royal "Land Commission," and so on. They wish to give it in writing, and also to give evidence on the subject.

28,827. You can simply state that according to your knowledge Mr. Lort Phillips and his tenantry are on the very best of terms?—Certainly. I think that is well known in the county.

28,828. I think we want nothing further than that. If there is time we will hear any of those gentlemen's evidence ourselves?—If you please, my Lord. As to the payment of rent, and how soon after it falls due is it usually paid, I say it is usually paid about five months after.

28,829. Is notice given to tenants of abatements?—Yes, when the circular is sent to them for the rent. It is generally sent about a fortnight or three weeks beforehand. I see them. It does not depend upon the circular; they know from me very well, as I am constantly with them, when the allowance will be made. In fact it is a matter of arrangement between the tenants of Mr. Lort Phillips and myself, he leaving me to arrange what is fair between them, and what will please them.

28,830. What is the average size of farms?—Between 50 and 100 acres.

28,831. You say the rates are not increased much on the Lawrenny estate?—No, because there are no school boards. I do not think there is any school board in any parish except Neyland in Llanstadwell parish.

28,832. Then we can pass on to cultivation?—It is partly grazing and partly arable. Then the answer to the question as to whether there is any scarcity of labourers, and so on, is, no. Then, to the question of to what extent waste land has been reclaimed by tenants in my district within living memory, I say, not at all.

There is no ploughing up of rough land, and no draining of marshy ground.

28,833. We can pass over those questions. Then the next question is, "Has there been "any considerable change in the nature of "the agriculture pursued in your district "within the last 50 years, e.g., (1) arable land "being laid down in pasture, if so, at whose "expense?"—Arable has been laid down, but not permanently, at the tenant's expense. Then, with regard to whether there has been an increase or decrease in root crops, I say there has been an increase of root crops. There has been no fallowing. Then, the next question is, "What "improvements are generally made in your "district?" The improvements are in buildings for stock, gates and posts, drainage, and manures. There are no permanent improvements by tenants.

28,834. The tenant does the haulage?—In case of new buildings and repairs the landlord supplies everything but the haulage, which is done by the tenant at the times most convenient to himself. No permanent improvement has been made by a tenant. I think I answered that before. Then I am asked whether I know of instances where either party contracts out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act. It is not generally done on the Lawrenny estate.

28,835. I think we may pass over those matters that you have not much to say about. How about the custom of the country?—Hay, straw, and roots are taken at a valuation by the incoming tenant. The outgoing tenant has to sell it to him at a valuation. Permanent improvements there are none.

28,836. Have you anything to say about a tenant right?—No, I do not express any opinion.

28,837. I mean to say, do you know of any?—No, but what we have done is this. If a man is going out (which is very seldom, I do not think I could name half a dozen changes in the last 25 years), but if a man is going out, and he has somebody he would like to put in the farm, if there is no son or daughter or relation to go in (because we always like a relation to go into the farm), if he is a desirable person, we allow him to go in there, and if the incoming tenant chooses to pay the outgoing tenant something, you may call it tenant right, we have no objection whatever.

28,838. You do not inquire about it?—We never inquire.

28,839. Is there much game preserving in your district?—Very little.

28,840. If there is not much, we can pass over that. Is there any attention paid to fruit culture?—None.

28,841. Or is there any paid to horticulture?—There is nothing paid to horticulture, forestry, poultry farming, or bee-keeping. With regard to butter and cheesemaking, there has been some instruction given by the technical education committee of the Pembrokeshire County Council, and by the Bath and West of England Agricultural Butter School at Pembroke.

28,842. Have they had any effect?—Oh, decidedly; a decided improvement wherever they have taken advantage of the instruction.

28,843. Is there an improvement in the price of butter?—Certainly. I can give you an instance where a farmer supplies the Inns of Court Hotel with from 50 to 100 lbs. of butter a week, entirely through the daughters attending at the Bath and West of England School at Pembroke, and they use a separator and delaiteuse, and in fact, they make it in the modern way, so that they can guarantee uniformity, which is a thing we have great difficulty in getting in this country. In regard to other agricultural subjects, lectures have been given at the Aberystwith College on soils, manures, and manuring; but I do not think they have produced much benefit.

28,844. Are the railway rates high?—Yes, very high, and the facilities for the carriage and disposal of the agricultural produce are affected most prejudicially by railway rates.

28,845. On the competing lines?—No, not on the competing lines. You see the Great Western is practically a monopoly, and they just charge whatever they like.

Mr. Grove.

28,846. There is a limit?—Yes, I mean practically. There is a limit under the new tariff, no doubt, but they charge us up to the limit; there is no sort of competition.

28,847. How about the butter factory at St. Clears. Is that a success?—It would be a success if the farmers could be induced to supply it with milk, but since last year, which was, as you know, a dreadful year for milk, there was great difficulty in keeping the factory supplied with milk. Previously to that they had been able to work it for the profit of the farmers who sent the milk there; it is not a shareholders' profit, but the whole of the profit is divided among the farmers who send the milk there.

28,848. The Pembroke Farmers' Club co-operate for the purpose of analysing their manures, and so on?—Yes, to that extent the Pembroke farmers do co-operate. The Pembroke Farmers' Club have manures and food stuffs analysed for the members free of charge.

28,849. That is an instance of combination?—Yes, but there is no co-operation amongst farmers for any other purpose.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,850. Except with regard to the butter?—That was in Carmarthenshire. That was not in Pembrokeshire.

Lord Kenyon.

28,851. With regard to the general condition of the farming population, and as to the freeholders?—There are very few small freeholders, and as a rule they are out at elbows.

28,852. Are there many tenant farmers who have bought either their own or other holdings for their occupation in this district?—Some farmers have purchased their holdings, but under what circumstances I am unable to say. None of these cases are on the estates I am agent for.

28,853. I suppose the children work on the farms?—On all the farms they assist, and then in return for that the parent puts them out whenever a fitting opportunity arises on other farms, or assists them to be married, and so on.

28,854. Do you know whether the children ever receive or have received wages, as wages?—I never heard of their being paid in the way of wages, but the cost of keeping a child is pretty expensive, my Lord. I have a good deal of experience in that way.

28,855. You say the wages are from 10*s.* to 12*s.* That is rather low, is it not? Is that in addition to other things?—Yes, that is without the perquisites. You see, I have put down the total estimated wages at 15*s.*, and I think that about agrees with the previous witnesses.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,856. Could you say what the wages are if they are lodged on the farm premises?—That, I think, you had better have from a farmer, if you would allow me to suggest that. Of course, I know by hearsay, but that is not evidence.

Lord Kenyon.

28,857. You say that wages, on the whole, have gone up, but at the last hiring fair the boys' wages went down?—Yes, that is so.

28,858. And the girls' wages were higher?—They were as high or higher.

28,859. Is that the wages of dairymaids or female farm servants generally?—Female farm servants generally.

28,860. Is there any scarcity of dairymaids in this district?—There are very few who call themselves specially dairymaids.

28,861. There is no cheese making?—There is a little on the Stackpole estate. Mr. Roberts, of Llyserry, makes cheese, but it is not generally done. Mr. Rees, of Kilpaison, made cheese, but Mr. Griffiths would know better on that point than I should.

28,862. The cottage accommodation you say is about the same as usual?—Yes, about the same.

28,863. And what is the standard of comfort?—In the cottages?

28,864. All through among the proprietor farmers and tenant farmers, and as to the houses and so on, I suppose the houses are better all round, are they not?—Decidedly.

28,865. The time for recreation is possibly less—is that so?—I have no experience.

28,866. What are the principal causes of depression in your opinion?—Railway rates, giving the foreigner an advantage over the home producer; the sale of foreign meat as English, and allowing beer to be brewed from other than malt and hops; and loss by cattle disease.

28,867. What do you mean by cattle disease?—There are animals that die from tuberculosis, for which they do not get any compensation. That is not within the Animals' Diseases Act, and

I would venture to suggest that that should be amended so that it should be included, because I think a larger number of animals die in this district from that than they do from anthrax or pleuro-pneumonia.

28,868. Do you think that is from the dampness of the climate?—No, I cannot tell you that, but I think there is a good deal of loss from it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,869. Do you get any loss from black-leg?—I think you will hear about that from a farmer better.

Lord Kenyon.

28,870. Have you any cases of abortion here?—Yes, but I could not give you information on that subject from my experience. You had better ask that of a farmer. The general relations between landlord and tenant are most friendly; the tenant always tries to meet the landlord and the landlord to meet the tenant. That is my experience of them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,871. There are only one or two questions that occur to me. This is the form of agreement which you have put in on the white paper, which is usual, I believe you said, on the Lawrenny estate—That is so.

28,872. I do not quite like the clause about the game: "All game, wild fowl, and fish in or "upon the said lands, with liberty for the land-"lord and his friends, companions, gamekeepers, and servants at all reasonable times of the year "to hunt, shoot, fish, and sport over the said "lands." Is that clause enforced irrespective of the Ground Game Act, or do you allow the tenant to exercise the privilege of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, the tenant has the privilege of the Ground Game Act. As I say, that agreement is never really enforced. I have never had to enforce the agreement, for the best reason, that we never change.

28,873. I see some penalties are imposed for divers breaches. Are they ever enforced?—Never. They have never been in my time. You asked, I think, just now the rental of the Stackpole estate. I have no objection to give it on behalf of Mr. Lort Phillips.

28,874. That was a mistake of Mr. Mousley's. I only pointed out to him that it was no good giving the expenditure without the rental?—I thought I would give it to you.

28,875. You may give it to us if you like privately?—There is no objection to giving it now; I do not know of any reason why I should not.

Lord Kenyon.

28,876. Are you agent for the Stackpole estate now?—No, Mr. Mousley is.

28,877. Is it that rental which you are proposing to give us?—No, the Lawrenny estate rents. I gave you in my statement the amount expended on buildings and materials.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,878. Mr. Mousley was quite under a misapprehension in thinking I was endeavouring to force him to give us the rental of the Stackpole estate. I was only pointing out to him that the expenditure was useless without the rental, and that many landowners had given the rental?—You said it was of no value to you without that, and I should like the statement of the amount expended on the estate to be of value to you, therefore, with your kind permission, I would state that the rental of the Lawrenny and Nash estates is as near as possible 6,000*l.* a year; that would be without the Honeyborough and Neyland estate, upon which none of that expenditure has been made.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,879. I think you stated what the expenditure was?—Yes, the expenditure in permanent buildings was 13,000*l.* odd.

28,880. In how many years?—From 1876—18 years—and 6,445*l.* in repairs.

Lord Kenyon.

28,881. In the same length of time?—In that time, since Mr. Lort Phillips came of age.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,882. I make that about 20 per cent.?—I daresay. I have not worked it out, but I have no doubt it is so.

28,883. It is a very large per-centage?—Yes, it is a very large per-centage, because the estate was in a very dilapidated state when he came into it. You have not asked me any question as to whether religion has any effect.

Lord Kenyon.

28,884. Has it any effect?—Certainly not. I wish it to be distinctly understood that Mr. Lort Phillips never thinks of such a thing, in fact it would make no difference to him whether a tenant was a Nonconformist or Churchman so long as he was a good man.

Mr. Grove.

28,885. Nor politics, I think?—None whatever. The point is never considered by me or by anyone else.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,886. Are there many Nonconformists?—I happen to have taken an analysis this morning, and I find there were 46 Nonconformist farmers and 67 Churchmen.

Mr. Griffiths

28,887. Is there not a close time for killing rabbits on the Lawrenny estate? Are the tenants allowed freely to kill the rabbits whenever they like?—Just round Lawrenny, in Lawrenny parish, before Mr. Lort Phillips beats the covers for game, he asks the tenants not to disturb the hedges near the covers, but they are allowed to kill the rabbits, and they can have the keeper at any time to assist them.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,888. The keeper kills them earlier, does he not?—I do not know what arrangement he makes with the tenants, but I mean to say that the rabbits are never kept by the landlord for his benefit, but entirely for the tenants, practically, because beyond the sport of killing them they have them all.

28,889. I have heard some tenants complaining that they are not allowed to kill the rabbits as early as the keeper is, and a rabbit saves bacon, and they are very anxious to have the same chance?—If any tenant were to complain to me Mr. Griffiths, you may take it from me that I am certain Mr. Lort Phillips would meet him at once, and do away with any complaint, but no such complaint has been made to me.

28,890. Then are you still of opinion that butter factories would be beneficial if they were established in different districts?—In order to get uniformity, as you know, it is almost impossible to compete with the foreigner without a factory. There is no doubt about that, and the more one thinks of it the more convinced I am that, without the factory, we cannot possibly compete with the foreigner. It is a fact that the foreign trade has been made by the factories.

28,891. Then do you think that there is no good butter made here?—I would not like to say that, because you know there is a great deal of very good butter made in this country; but there is no uniformity in it.

28,892. But will you admit that there is a good deal of bad butter made in this country?—I have seen butter that is only fit to grease the wheel of a cart.

28,893. Just one question more. Is it not the fact that you are opposed to tenants combining?—In what way.

28,894. With regard to the reduction of rent?—Certainly not.

28,895. Did you not attend here at Pembroke when the tenants approached the landlords as to having a reduction of rent?—When—how do you mean?

28,896. At a meeting here about three years ago, did you not say that you wished that none of the tenants of Lawrenny should attend?—No, certainly not. I never said that to a tenant. All I said was, "I do not think it is advisable for "you to attend any meeting which would appear "to be a combination against landlords, because "you know perfectly well that if ever you came "to your landlord he would be ready and willing "to meet you at any time."

28,897. Certainly; but was it a combination against landlords? I say it was nothing of the sort.—No. Of course you know possibly more about it than I do, because I was not at it, but it was a meeting of what you call a combination.

28,898. Did you not attend here at the meeting, where the meeting was held, to prevent the tenants on the Lawrenny estate coming forward?—I never prevented a single tenant from going there.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,899. Did you tell any of the tenants not to go?—I certainly said I thought it would be very unwise of them to do so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,900. You say, as I understand, that the lectures given by Prosessor Parry were little availed of. Do you find that there is a keen desire among the farmers in this neighbourhood to improve their position in life?—I think there is—the natural ambition; and I think I may safely say that there is not a more intelligent body of farmers in the kingdom than there are in Pembrokeshire.

28,901. Then what is the reason that they would not avail themselves of the lectures delivered by Professor Parry?—They thought they were not practical enough. That is what they explained to me—that they could not digest, I suppose, or understand, the terms that were used by Professor Parry. I attended one or two lectures, and of course you must have a certain knowledge of chemistry before you can follow a lecturer on chemistry.

28,902. I have attended some of Professor Parry's lectures, and I thought they were very elementary, in fact, I have heard complaints in some neighbourhoods that they were too elementary?—Well, possibly that might have been another reason that they did not go.

28,903. I should think if the Pembrokeshire farmers are an intelligent lot of people they would be able to understand Professor Parry's lectures?—Well, when you get a farmer here he will possibly be able to explain to you the reason why he did not appreciate Professor Parry's lectures. I am only telling you from hearsay, which is nothing.

28,904. What sum of money does the County Council vote for agricultural and technical education?—The amount that is received in this country is mostly applied for the intermediate education scheme. A very small portion—I believe it is 200*l.*—is voted for technical and agricultural education.

28,905. And you would not consider it is well applied?—I would not say that, because we have had not only instructions in butter making, but cookery classes and other classes besides these lectures of Professor Parry's.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

28,906. Are those other classes well attended?—They are very successful indeed, and we hope to continue the courses this year. I am a member of that committee with Mr. Griffiths.

28,907. I see you say here that there is no migration of labourers now?—Of course there has been a migration of labourers to the hills—boys going up to the hills, but not the grown-up men—not men 30 and 40 years of age; they do not go up.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,908. I did not understand the answer with regard to the hills?—Up the Rhondda Valley, what we call going to the hills is to the Rhondda Valley, where the collieries are.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,909. I thought you would be prepared to qualify that statement to a certain extent?—I may tell you that question is in the printed form; it is: "Has there been any considerable migra-" tion of farmers or labourers from your district " within the last 50 years?" The words "or labourers" I have taken out from my copy, and put underneath the answer, No, that is to say, that there has been no great migration of farmers from this country.

Lord Kenyon.

28,910. You did not refer to that in your evidence at all before?—No. You did not mention that, my Lord.

28,911. I have one question to ask you which is handed in by Mr. Gibbs. "Mr. Rule Owen " was spoken of in conjunction with Mr. Stokes " as an agent. If they were equal in competency " why was Mr. Rule Owen asked to value, and " not Mr. Stokes?"—Is that for me to answer?

28,912. I suppose so?—I do not see where the argument comes in.

28,913. It is not for me to point out the argument?—I do not think there is any answer necessary to a query that is put before your Lordship, unless your Lordship directs me to give an answer to it.

Lord Kenyon.

It is not for me to direct you to do anything

The witness withdrew.

Mr. George Williams called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

28,914. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

28,915. Who is your landlord?—The Earl of Cawdor.

28,916. What is the size of your holding?—253 acres.

28,917. And your rent—you need not state that if you have any objection?—It is about the same number of pounds.

28,918. What do you especially wish to draw our attention to?—I wish to say concerning the depression in agriculture, that it is impossible to pay present rents, the principal cause I believe to be foreign competition; the remedy must be one of two, either protection or substantial and permanent reductions of rents. As to the farmers, I know from personal experience that they are very industrious, economical, and capable, with, of course, some few exceptions. The state of cottages are not good, but very greatly improved of late years, a great many without any sanitary accommodation, which is a cause of great dissatisfaction to the labourer and his family. The relationship between landlord and tenant is good, no ill-will existing between them, grievances very slight, with the exception of the one great grievance, namely, failing to make enough money out of the land to meet the rent and all other expenses. The district to which my evidence applies is that contained by the six parishes, which are nearly all the property of the Right Hon. the Earl of Cawdor, of Stackpole Court, Pembrokeshire.

28,919. Have you anything further that you wish to bring before the Commission?—If you wish me to say anything before you ask me any questions, I have only to say that I have been a tenant on the estate of the Earl of Cawdor for the last 17 or 18 years, and I have been brought up on the estate, and my ancestors before me have been on the estate for 200 years, and no unpleasantness has ever taken place between us as landlord and tenant during the whole of the time to the best of my knowledge and belief, and I have to say that I have no fault to find with our landlord or with his agent at the present time, only that they have so far failed to recognise the great depression in agriculture as to give us that permanent and substantial reduction in rent which I think we need.

28,920. Have the rents varied, have they been raised?—We have just had Mr. Mousley's evidence, and he could state better than I could, perhaps, as to the dates.

28,921. 1862?—Yes, in 1862 or 1863 there was a re-valuation of the estate, and the rents were advanced considerably, some of them. Personally, I was not very much advanced, as from different circumstances our farm was always considered very high in the olden times, and, therefore, I did not get so great an advance as some others did, but we got an advance.

28,922. You have had abatements of 15 to 10 per cent.?—Yes, and Mr. Mousley stated the case exactly. I could not state it any better. The only thing that I can correct Mr. Mousley in, perhaps, knowing a little better than he does about it, is this: He says that the depression in agriculture commenced in 1885, I say that the landlords began in the year 1885 to believe that there was a little depression in agriculture. The real depression in agriculture began in 1879, and in 1879, in that one year alone, I think I could venture to say that I gave my whole labour, and the labour of my family, for nothing, and that we never made a shilling of rent during the year 1879, and we never could recover that. I have not seen a year equal to 1879 as to loss until the year 1893, so that the real depression in agriculture began in 1879.

28,923. Things got a little bit better in 1880?—Yes, we were working on the loss in 1879, and we could not recover before the other great depression in 1885.

Professor Rhŷs.

28,924. What is your parish?—The name is St. Twynnells.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

28,925. Your farm is rather bigger than the average, is it not?—No, it is about an average farm, much smaller than some of them.

28,926. Do you know some of the smaller size? Have you any small farms from 50 to 100 acres?—Not very many in that district.

28,927. Then I do not think I shall ask you any question. I wanted to ask you something about the way in which small farmers live in your part?—I could not answer you any question as regards the living of the small farmer. I could state as to how I have lived myself, and how I have worked myself.

28,928. Would you mind doing that? I have been in the habit of asking what food people have lived on, and so on. It is a question of some interest?—If it interests the Commission, I shall be happy to state it.

28,929. This is the first day we have been in the English part of Pembrokeshire?—If it is interesting to the Commission, I would state that I went to school, to which I had to travel five miles to Pembroke, from the time I was nine years of age until I was 12. I left my school at 12 years of age, and I went home to work upon the farm, and I worked upon the farm as a farm labourer from 5 in the morning till 7 or 8, or sometimes, 9 o'clock at night, for 25 or 30 years, continually doing all kinds of farm work. The work that any man could do, I was capable of doing, and better than most, and at the end of that time, when my father retired and gave the farm into my hands, I farmed it myself. Do you wish to know how I lived during the time?

28,930. We should like to know?—During those years, if you like to know how I lived, I had breakfast of barley bread, and skim milk, with a little butter. I had dinner sometimes of rice and milk and a little bread and butter, and sometimes potatoes and bacon and cabbage. That was my living.

28,931. Any fresh meat?—Perhaps we had a little fresh meat three or four times a year, a fowl or rabbit oftener.

28,932. What did you have at the afternoon or the evening meal?—I came home from my work at 7 o'clock in the evening, and had my barley bread and butter, and a cup of tea, the bread sometimes being made of tail wheat.

28,933. And those were all the meals of the day?—Those were all the meals of the day, except, I think, a bit of bread and butter again before I went to bed at 9 o'clock at night.

28,934. How long ago was that fare usual?—That was the usual fare from the year 1852 up to 1870 about.

28,935. Is there an improvement now?—I live the same yet.

28,936. The fare is the same?—Yes; well, instead of living on barley bread now, I live on whole meal bread, and I prefer it to white.

28,937. But not any meat now?—Oh, we have fresh meat occasionally, oftener than we did. Now in fact there is a difficulty in selling beef, and I have been glad to sell a little bit where I could, and we have eaten the remainder. Certainly the living is different rather to what it was in those days. I think my experience is pretty well the same as that of most working farmers in the neighbourhood. Of course there are some larger farmers, and where there are smaller families it is different. I was one of a large family, you see, therefore we had to work harder and live harder, and not to work, say, for wages, because we could not get wages for any work; it was plenty of hard work and very little for it.

Mr. Grove.

28,938. Do you know cases where the children of small farmers work away from the district, and send money home to help their parents to pay the rent?—Not much of that in our district. We have not many small farmers in our district. What I have to say about the farmers' sons in our district is that they have had to work for a great many years, and they have had nothing for it.

Mr. Seebohm.

28,939. Would there be a large proportion of farmers who would be in that position, and whose sons stayed on and worked with them?—A good many. Some emigrate to foreign countries, and some bring their sons up to drapery and some to ironmongery, and put them off in that way. I had a brother that was younger than myself, and he worked along with me for several years; but he saw no prospect of getting on better than myself, and although he was three years younger than me, he went off to New Zealand, and now he is worth about 10,000*l.*, and I am not able to pay the rent.

28,940. We may take it, Mr. Williams, that the abatements which are made at present are not sufficient to meet the necessities of the case?—They are not sufficient to meet the necessities of the case the present year, because we have had a very deplorable year, but if we could have a permanent and substantial reduction of something like 20 to 25 per cent. that would put spirit in us to go on again, and we would still work the land. But at the present time improvements are at a standstill, because we as a class of farmers know not what to do. We have tried everything, and we have failed to meet our expenses. Those who had landed property have brought that landed property to help them to pay the rents, and unfortunately I have not got anything but my two hands and my head, and perhaps my head is not so good as some others, but I can work pretty well with my hands. I have nothing to assist me but my own head and hands, and I find I am unequal to the task of making the money out of the land.

28,942. Are you in a position to say whether farmers are drawing upon their capital in order to pay the rent?—I am certain about it. I have not paid my rent myself without borrowing for a great many years, and I am very sorry to say it, but I have not paid this last rent. My agent is present, and if he puts in a distress I hope I shall be able to stand it. I hope I shall not say anything to offend him, but I am in arrears of rent at the present time. I may say this, that Lord Cawdor and his agent have treated me very kindly. The real secret of it is, they have never been brought to believe the depression we are under—that is it.

28,943. Personally you have no hostile feeling towards your landlord?—Not in the slightest, and when I have finished farming under the Earl of Cawdor I hope I have finished for ever. Lord Cawdor is a perfect gentleman, and I have received great kindness from him of late—great kindness, I must say.

28,944. You say that you are not likely to obtain an improvement unless you either get protection or a substantial reduction of rents?—That is what I say—one of those two.

28,945. Do you think that you are likely to get a substantial reduction in rent without the interference of the State?—Well, I hope so; but I am speaking now for myself, and for all the tenants on Lord Cawdor's estate. I do not think there is a man on the estate that has come forward to give evidence but myself, and I have had long conversations with most of them, and some of them are of opinion that it would be better even for landlord and tenant to agree to have some place that we can refer to, something like a Land Court. I do not mean to give that as my personal opinion, because I am not very decided about that, and I should like an Act of Parliament passed at the Stackpole Court, or at the Court of Westminster, that would give me a permanent reduction of 20 per cent. or 25 per cent., so that I should be able to meet my landlord twice a year with the rent.

28,946. We will dismiss the question of a Land Court; but do you think that you are likely to get a reduction of rent without the principle of some intermediary authority?—I stand in good hopes of it. I think, seeing that our landlords have been educated so much in the way that they have this last year or so, they are improving, and I think it is quite possible that we may. I would not go in for a Land Court just yet.

28,947. You would wait a little longer?—Yes, and would try them a little bit more, but, you know, when I speak for the tenants on the Stackpole estate there are differences of opinion amongst them; but I know they all feel the depression very much, and they all to a man have got a strong opinion of their landlord, yet still they think that even the landlord himself would feel a certain relief in leaving that to a man or to a commission that would appoint a court to look into the estate, and to see that he is not overcharging. I do not think it is the wish of Lord Cawdor to press upon any of us.

28,948. Have you made any complaint to Lord Cawdor, or his agent, that your rent is too high?—Yes, I have, at different times.

28,949. What reply have you got?—Well, the very good promise and hope for better.

28,950. But there is an old saying that he who lives on hope will die of hunger?—Yes, but I am not free to speak very plainly on that, because I have been in correspondence with his Lordship and his agent lately, and they have been kind to me, and I hope that they will show greater kindness yet. I have applied for a reduction of 20 per cent., but I have not received it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,951. Have you had abatements?—We have had abatements very often lately. I may say we have been treated very well, because Lord Cawdor gives us 17½ per cent., and it is a considerable item out of his income.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,952. Then it is not from not knowing your circumstances that Lord Cawdor does not make you a reduction?—Perhaps they put me down as a bit of a groaner or a bit of a grumbler. Perhaps they did not believe really what I said, or perhaps they did not take it in exactly, and they do not appreciate the case, very likely, as it stands. They say farmers are a lot of grumblers, and perhaps they put me down as a bigger grumbler than some men. The meetings which were held were referred to, here to-day. There were some meetings held with a view to get our rents reduced. I acted as chairman of that meeting, and I may be put down as a bigger grumbler on that account. I was not the originator of the meetings—of the association if you would call it so—it was not intended to be an association at all; it was a meeting we held to talk over our grievances, and almost at the last moment I was asked to take the chair, and I said, "Rather than the meeting "should go down for want of a chairman I will "take it," and I may have been considered a bit of a grumbler more than the others owing to that, because I took the chair at that meeting where the tenants met together. But I should say this, that at that meeting one of Lord Cawdor's tenants proposed that every one should approach his own landlord separately, and another of Lord Cawdor's tenants seconded it, but the meeting overruled us, and therefore we had to send a circular to our landlords from that meeting, which many of us considered a mistake at that time, because some of us had not approached our landlords separately and personally at that time.

28,953. What was the result of the communication of the landlords?—They gave us an abatement.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

28,954. In answer to it?—Yes, they replied to the circular—they answered our call, and they gave us an abatement—not while we acted as an association, but we went privately each one to his own landlord afterwards, when we saw that the landlords did not like to be approached in that manner; we approached them separately, and we got the abatements.

28,955. Did you specify any sum when you were making application, that, is as to abatement?—No, we did not specify any sum, to the best of my knowledge and recollection, but still we talked about 20 or 25 per cent. as what was required.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,956. How long ago was that?—I think that was in the year 1889. I cannot say exactly, 1889 or 1890; I have not got the dates with me.

Lord Kenyon.

28,957. Was it 1891?—Yes, 1891.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Lord Kenyon.

28,959–60. I am sure they will quite understand that?—Because I have been a tenant for many years, and my father before me, and I remember my father saying many years ago that the law of the land was always the law of Stackpole, and I know when the Agricultural Holdings Act passed, some landlords contracted themselves out of it, but Lord Cawdor did not, and when the Ground Game Act passed, Mr. Mousley sent us a copy of the part of the Act which affected us, and therefore this Commission being appointed by the Government, I think Lord Cawdor would be rather pleased than otherwise that one or more of his tenants should give evidence before it and speak on the subject.

Lord Kenyon.

I am sure he would.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,961. Do the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, we do not suffer from ground game, in consequence of that Act, except just by the covers.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,962. Do you think farmers are able to make as much now out of the land in pasture as when it was arable?—No, they cannot now. If sheep and cattle had continued to sell at the rate they were selling when we laid the land down to pasture we might do so, but I noticed in Mr. Mousley's evidence, that he said what we had done wrong in, as he thought, was in laying so much land down to pasture, and robbing ourselves for the time being, I believe, while this land was coming to grass.

Lord Kenyon.

28,963. Do you not save yourselves in labour?—I was just going to say that. Mr. Mousley will not be offended with me for saying that it was by his advice we laid the land down to grass.

Mr. Mousley: I should like to say that the witness has rather misunderstood me, my Lord.

Lord Kenyon.

We cannot receive any statements, you must put it in the form of a question, and hand it in.

Mr. Griffiths.

28,964. You have told us with regard to Stackpole. But is it your opinion that the landlords in general do not recognise the position of the farmers in the present depression?—Yes, that is my opinion, they do not recognise it.

28,965. Do you think they would deal more leniently towards the farmers if they really knew their position?—Yes, that is my opinion. We do not like to plead poverty if we can help it, because it tells against us in various ways.

28,966. Yes. I was going to ask you a rather delicate question, that is, have you as much capital quite now as you had at one time?—I am very sorry to say I have not.

28,967. You have sunk much of it?—I have sunk a good bit of money, and I am sorry to say I have sunk money which was made in another county and in another business.

28,968. You said just now it was difficult to sell cattle. You find a difficulty in this neighbourhood now in selling old cows and bulls, do you not, to what you formerly did?—We cannot sell them at anything like the price.

28,969. What is the reason?—I think one reason for that is that the contractors for the army are not allowed to buy anything now but what is young. They used to buy up such cattle for the army, but I suppose the soldiers have lost their teeth, and they cannot eat anything tough. They must all go in for young cattle, and the Government will not allow them to buy anything but young steers and heifers, and therefore all the cows which we have had for eight or ten years, and gone to a great expense in feeding, are left upon our hands and we must kill them and eat them at home, and sell a few of the best pieces perhaps to our neighbours, and sell them at a great sacrifice.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

28,970. Is there much stock coming across from Ireland landed in this neighbourhood?—I should think there is. I do not know very much about the boat trade, but I believe a great many are brought here from Ireland.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

28,971. I do not think we are going to have any labourer called to-day, Mr. Williams?—I shall be happy to answer any question about the labourers.

28,972. Do you find among the labourers any complaint about the state of the cottages?—Yes.

28,973. Is that so still?—Yes.

28,974. Do you remember what the state of the cottages was say 25 or 26 years ago?—Yes.

28,975. I notice that Mr. Mousley, for instance, the agent of the Earl of Cawdor—the gentleman who has given evidence to-day—writing at that time says: "The state of cottages throughout the "country in Pembrokeshire and Carmarthen is "most disgraceful, and the loss of the best "labour to the agricultural interest may thus be "accounted for." Do you think that is true at the present day?—It is true of a few of them, but the greater number of the cottages have been tumbled down and rebuilt and improved, and a few of the old ones left, and those old ones are in a bad state yet.

28,976. Do you find a difficulty in getting labour?—No, personally I have not found much difficulty. Sometimes it runs a little scarce in the harvest time, but as a rule I can always get men. I never fail to get men when I want them, if I can pay them.

28,977. What do you pay them generally?—I consider that what I pay my men is as good as 16*s.* a week.

28,978. What do you pay them in cash?—13*s.* in cash.

28,979. How is the other 3*s.* made up?—There is a house and a large garden rent free, the planting of 2 cwt. of potatoes, the driving of three or four loads of culm in the year, 30*s.* each at the hay-making or the harvest, plenty of straw, when I have got it, to put under their pigs, a few turnips to help them to feed their pigs, and so make manure for their garden. They cost me about 16*s.* a week, I consider.

28,980. Do they work well—have you any complaint against them?—No, I have not. Certainly labourers do not work as hard now as when I was working with them 30 years ago. They do not work so many hours, and perhaps not quite as hard.

28,981. What are the hours of a labourer who was paid in the way you describe?—My labourers come about half past 5 in the morning, and they work till 6 o'clock at night. They have half an hour for breakfast, and an hour for dinner.

28,982. Saturdays they work the same time?—Yes, they work the same time on Saturdays.

28,983. Sundays?—Sundays, during the winter time, they get several hours' work. They do an hour's work Sunday morning, and perhaps half an hour Sunday afternoon, and an hour or so Sunday night, and we give them a half sovereign extra for the winter work.

28,984. What is the size of the garden?—I cannot say exactly what the size would be. I do not hear any man complaining of the size of the garden, except that it is too large to cultivate. Most of them complain of their garden being too large, because the farmer plants in the field, and carts the potatoes home for them, and there is a good deal of labour done. But I do not think there is any labourer in Castle Martin who has complained of his garden being too small. They would like a little bit more wages if we could afford to give it to them, but I think they are quite contented otherwise.

Lord Kenyon.

28,985. I suppose the wages have gone up?—They have gone up considerably during the last 30 years. 33 years ago we were paying them 8*s.* to 10*s.* a week.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

28,986. And the price of their food has gone down?—The price of their food has gone down, so that labourers are doing much better. With regard to indoor labourers, there is a greater fluctuation, and there is more advance in the price of indoor labour—those that live indoors than those that live outdoors.

Mr. Richard Jones.

28,987. What do you give those that are indoors?—We give them from 10*l.* a year up to 18*l.*, and young boys 8*l.* or 9*l.*, 11*l.* or 12*l.*, 15*l.* and 18*l.*, sometimes nearly 20*l.*, and girls 10*l.* to 12*l.*, and 30 years ago we were paying boys about 7*l.* and 8*l.* a year, and girls, 3*l.* or 4*l.* We give about as much to one team's boy now as we gave to 3 boys 30 years ago.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. LAWS called and examined.

Witness.

I should say that my interest in Pembrokeshire land, although important to me, is really so small that I should not have come here to trouble you to-day, except that I had been asked to come, because I have worked at the history of the county, and I am supposed to know something about it, but not very much; you must not expect very great authority from me.

Lord Kenyon.

28,988. You are the owner of some land, and are the chairman of a charity trust in the district of Tenby?—I live at Tenby, and I am a chairman of trustees there; I have a little land, not very much there, and I have three holdings of my own of about 100 acres each. They are all freehold. My two farms were under lease for 21 years, which expired last Michaelmas. In 1892 I proposed to the tenants that they should renew their leases, and that Mr. Rule Owen, of whom you have heard before, should value the farms and fix the rents, and this was done. With regard to the Tenby Charity Trust, you have asked the question several times if land is ever put up to auction. Now we did put ours up to auction in order to be able to answer the Commissioners when they came down, and we have just gone through the flaming, fiery furnace, and we have come out like Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, I think.

28,989. I am very glad to hear it; what has been the result?—The result has been favourable, I think. With regard to that, we have given them back 10 per cent. We have done that this year, but they are nearly all accommodation lands.

28,990. Do you let them yearly by auction?—No. When they go in there they stay as long as ever they like, as long as they pay, and they always do pay; we have never had any trouble.

28,991. It is accommodation land near Tenby?—Yes.

28,992. Perhaps that makes a difference?—It is high priced land. There is one small farm, but it is supposed to be high priced land.

28,993. What is the rent?—I will put a paper in with regard to that (handing in a document).

28,995. As to the district being English, why and how has it become so, do you think?—It never was Welsh. I speak under correction; Professor Rhŷs is here, but I do not think it ever was Welsh. I think that before the Welsh had comfortably settled themselves on top of the Gael, whom they conquered, they were haycocked out of it again by the Scandinavian and the Saxon, and I do not think the Welsh made a permanent settlement there. Then Pembrokeshire was held by law as part of England, whereas Wales was in the eye of the law no part of the kingdom of England; but Pembrokeshire did not come under that Statutum Walliæ of Edward I. Wales was made shire-ground in 1535, 27th Henry VIII. Previously to that it was ruled over of course by the Earl of Pembroke, who was the Earl Palatine, and in fact Viceroy. Sometimes the Crown held the Earldom of Pembroke—not infrequently—there were several of the monarchs

there, but when they did hold it they carried on the Pembrokeshire Palatinate distinctly from the Crown of England. There were no Crown lands in Pembrokeshire before 1535, 27th Henry VIII., because they were Earl's lands. Then with regard to the difficulty in ascertaining the value of land in old days, and at present I should state that a Pembrokeshire acre was four English acres nominally, and identical with the Welsh acre, and the customary acre of Cheshire and Staffordshire, 10,240 square yards, but the pole in Pembrokeshire varied in almost every parish, and as this was the real standard the acre actually varied from about 2¼ to 3 English statute acres. The value of land in Pembrokeshire until the middle of the 16th century was very little, about 1*s.* per statute acre, but of course the shilling represented more than it does now. The country was all unenclosed or champagne land (Owen calculated that in his day 3,000 young people over ten years of age were employed in feeding cattle), and in certain places there were common rights over it, for instance the Burgesses of the Borough of Tenby had rights of common over all the Earl's land in the borough (let or unlet) from the cutting down the corn or hay growing thereon to the 2nd of February. Inquisitions taken before Commissioners and a sworn jury respecting the Earl's rents and profits of the town, the earliest I have seen is 1473. Welsh surveys are to be found in the Record Office. Before the middle of the 16th century leases seem to have been almost unknown, the ordinary tenure was that of tenant at will, and this would not have been from any desire on the part of the owner to keep his tenants under his thumb, for Owen states "The greatest number were " tenants at will, few sought leases, for most " commonly the landlord made suit for a good " tenant to take his land, than the tenant to the " landlord, such was the scarcity of good tenants " in those days." But the tenant at will was protected to a certain extent by custom. They were not removable without two lawful warnings, one to be given on March the 24th, the other on April the 30th, then the tenant had to quit the hall-house on Midsummer day—the hall-house was the farmhouse, but the pasture was held in common by old and new tenant until Michaelmas. If the house was slated the landlord kept it in repair, if thatched the tenant. If the tenant suffered houses, hedges, or buildings to grow ruinous the landlord could swear a jury of six other tenants at will to appraise the damage, which he could then recover by distress. Whether private owners exercised this power we cannot tell; probably they did; the Earls, however, did not do so, and the result was that the houses and tenements of Tenby had become so ruinous that the Crown in 1588 leased the whole of the Crown rents to the corporation on a repairing lease for 60 years. About this time land became much more valuable in Pembrokeshire. I think the reason was that there was an immense emigration from Ireland. It was after Tyrone's rebellion. In other parishes a third were Irish, and I think that the population increased and the value of land with it. Also, I think the value of wool had a good deal to do with it. Leases began to be given and much sought for, and the evil system of fines enforced (strangely enough the tenant at will paid a heriot at death), and it is said to have cost a tenant more to get into a farm than to marry two daughters to his neighbour's sons. There were 13 lordships in the county in which Court Barons were held every fortnight, in which any controversy as to land was settled. Court Leets twice a year were held for the punishment of crimes. So that there was, apparently, a good deal more litigation about land than there was about criminal matters. Of these 13 lordships in which Court Barons were held I believe but four remain, Lamphey, Manorbier, Penally, and St. Florence. The three latter are derived from feudatories of the Earl; the former from the bishop, who being independent had the powers of the feudal chief. Lamphey is therefore a stronger manor, having rights of free warren, jetsam, flotsam, and so on.

Lord Kenyon.

28,996. Have you anything more that you wish to say in your general evidence? You have something to say with regard to reductions, I think. You say one is 26 per cent.?—Yes, but then that, I should tell you, is under a lease of 21 years ago, and I let the farm myself. I was younger then than I am now, and I thought I had done a very good thing, but we never got it—it was never done.

28,997. It has practically come back to what it was before, has it?—Yes, or rather Mr. Rule Owen's valuation comes very much to what I was getting. I think the tithes are a little different, but they are very much the same as they were before. I have not found that tenants want to have leases. My tenants did not at all want to have leases. I paid for the leases, but they would not have them, I think. They wish to be in a position to leave a sinking ship, I think, and besides that the expense of a lease is a consideration to them. I pay for my own leases. In the country I know we have not got any timber. I have got quarries, and of course the land that was taken for the quarries the tenant received compensation for. Arbitration certainly is used occasionally for adjusting rents, as you have heard to-day. There have been permanent reductions, I think, and temporary reductions. I do not think there is anything more upon those general matters that is important. I may say one thing, that although I am not very much interested in land in Pembrokeshire, I am considerably interested in it in England; I look after two large properties for a relation of mine, one in Gloucestershire, and the other in Somersetshire, and my impression is that the Somersetshire farmer—hard up as the Pembrokeshire man is—the Somersetshire cheese-making man is harder up perhaps than the Pembrokeshire farmer.

28,998. Do you see any difference in tenure in land in England and Wales?—Not the smallest, not the very smallest difference in any way, and you could not tell one from the other, I do not believe, line from line and letter from letter.

28,999. You say you have been a magistrate for 20 years?—Yes.

29,000. Have you anything to say about offences against the game laws?—Yes, I think there is something. In the neighbourhood of Tenby there is no game preserving, or hardly anything worth mentioning. In my district the tenants all avail themselves of the Ground Game Act, and take an exceedingly liberal view of their powers under that Act. I have sat on the bench for about 20 years, and I have not had more than six cases of game preserving brought before me, and those were nearly all about rabbits, mostly brought by the tenants to punish men who were selling their rabbits.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,001. There is a considerable portion of Pembrokeshire in which the Welsh language is spoken, is there not?—But it has never been under Welsh custom; it was all held under the Earldom or under the Lord of Kemmeys. The Earl claimed over the Lordship of Kemmeys.

29,002. Can you tell me whereabouts the boundary is between the two? Could you roughly give the parishes, the chief places?—I will show you on a map. If you have a map you may take a line from Amroth and draw it out at Newgale, and I think that that would as nearly as possible give you the definition.

29,003. You mean St. Bride's Bay?—Yes.

29,004. Amroth is just about a mile or two from the Carmarthenshire boundary?—Yes. Well, you may take the Carmarthenshire boundary there, I think, almost.

29,005. You say if you carry a line from Amroth to Newgale and St. Bride's Bay you get at it?—You roughly get at it, but the line is very hard and fast if you follow it.

29,006. I know, but north of that line the probability is that inhabitants of the villages speak Welsh habitually, and south of that line they speak English habitually?—Yes, that is it.

29,007. How do you account for the Welsh population in the northern part in reference to your historical evidence? I mean you are the author of a well-known book, are you not?—Well, I do not know that it is very well known.

29,008. At any rate, I have read it or the greater part of it. I do not remember whether you give an account of how the northern part became Welsh?—I think the Welsh did take that and hold it, that the Norman overran them, but I do not think the Scandinavian had touched them there; he had not got so far from the seaboard.

29,009. In the customs of the manors you find nothing to distinguish them from the customs of the ordinary English manor?—No.

29,010. So far as you know there are no traces of an older Welsh tenure?—No, I think not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

29,011. We have had some evidence in Glamorganshire, particularly with regard to the case of Coity Wallia and Coity Anglia, in which one manor had got apparently what might be called English manorial customs and the other different customs which were supposed to refer to an older Welsh tenure?—I do not think that is so here.

29,012. You have found no evidence of that?—No, not the slightest.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,013. With regard to the Welsh names you mentioned, how do you account for such a name as Pwllcrochan?—They were here for about 300 years; the Welsh were supreme here for about 300 years.

29,014. For 300 years before you mean?—Yes, and that one has remained in use.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,015. By here you mean in the other part?—Yes; you must not understand me to say they were not ever lords of the south, but they were here for a short time, there is no question about that.

29,016. You spoke of enclosures of open field farms. Can you say when the enclosures took place, roughly?—Yes, I think so. I should say about the time that the land became more valuable that I was talking about. That is the beginning of the 17th century. In Speed's map there are no enclosures and no roads, but in the later maps you begin to see enclosures.

29,017. There is nothing of it going on now, I suppose?—Oh, no. Of course, Precelly mountain is unenclosed.

29,018. You spoke of the Saxons and the Normans, but you did not mention the Flemings?—I think the Fleming is a fraud myself. I think the Fleming was simply a man-at-arms who fought in Stephen's wars particularly; they were wandering about pretty well as banditti. Henry II. wanted to get rid of them, and sent them down into Wales in hopes that they would first kill a Welshman and then get killed themselves. But I do not think that they came more from Flanders than from Brabant and from France and Germany or anywhere else; I mean they were simply foreigners. I think they brought no women with them, and so they died out. I do not think they are so very much marked. One fancies one sees a little of it.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,019. From what part of England would you say the English language was brought into the district?—Somerset.

29,020. Somersetshire?—Yes.

29,021. And Gower would be much the same, would it?—Yes, I should think it would be the same.

29,022. You have alluded to George Owen's account of the whole district, or a great part of it, being so thickly overrun by the Irish after Tyrone's rebellion. Did those people remain?—I think so.

29,023. So that the present population of the English part of Pembrokeshire would be largely Irish?—Ah, but I do not think the Irish you are talking about were Gaels. I think they were people who had gone over from Wales into Ireland and then come back again, because, if you remember, he says that all of them could speak English after a fashion of their own, which I suppose meant a strong brogue, but he especially mentions that they could speak English.

29,024. But he alludes to their tutoyer, which is a habit in Irish, which they had probably transferred to English?—Yes.

29,025. But that would scarcely make them of English descent, would it. It would make them Welsh I should think?—I think it was the Welsh of the Geraldines who came from this country. As you know all the Geraldines went from Pembrokeshire into Ireland, and I think it was a return wave.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,026. There was one remark you made which I do not think you really meant. You said that Wales only became shire land in 1535, that is under the statute of Henry VIII.?—Yes.

29,027. You meant to limit that to Pembrokeshire, did you not, because you remember that the counties are constituted by the statutes of Rhuddlan—some of the counties, not the whole of them?—I was quoting George Owen then. He calls them shire land, but I suppose by that he means that they were then put on a footing with all the other English shires.

29,028. Yes, except for the purposes of the jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench and the Common Pleas?—Yes.

29,029. But as I understand it Pembrokeshire was a County Palatine, was it not?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

29,030. That was the legal position?—Yes.

29,031. Then some other counties were constituted counties by the statutes of Rhuddlan?—Yes.

29,032. Some portion of what is now Wales and Monmouthshire was not shire land at all, and that afterwards became shire land by the legislation of Henry. That is how I understand it. Do you agree with that?—Yes, I think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,033. Coming back from history to the present time, you are one of the trustees of the Tenby Charities?—Yes.

29,034. There are eight altogether I think. Are the whole of these different portions of property let by auction?—Yes.

29,035. The whole of them?—Yes.

29,036. There are some 30 tenants, I think, here?—Yes.

29,037. And the properties are all let by auction?—Yes.

29,038. Do you consider that it works well?—Very.

29,039. I suppose it is all accommodation land?—Well, there is one farm—a farm at Carswell.

29,040. What is the acreage of that farm?—It is not a large farm.

29,041. Is that near Tenby?—Yes.

29,042. Do you look upon that as accommodation land?—Yes, I do, because it cuts in and out of other lands.

29,043. It is all more or less accommodation land. You would hardly recommend, I suppose, the system of letting anywhere by auction land that was not accommodation land?—Oh, no, I simply mentioned it, because the question had been asked to-day if anyone ever let their land by auction. I think that is the only case in the county in which it is done.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Ormond called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,044. Are you a landowner or a tenant farmer, and where do you live?—A tenant farmer, and I live at Williamston, Carew.

29,045. What is the size of your holding?—200 acres.

29,046. Under whom?—Under the Honourable Arthur Trollope.

29,047. What is the rent?—1*l.* an acre.

29,048. You have heard what the previous witnesses have said. What is your opinion as to the present state of things? Have you any statement you wish to make?—I have not a statement, but I will answer any questions.

29,049. Do you think that rents can be paid as they are now?—No, I am sure not.

29,050. In your opinion they must be reduced?—Yes, or something else in its place.

29,051. What remedies do you suggest?—Well, I have no remedy except some kind of protection I think in some way.

29,052. You think the foreigner unfairly competes with you?—Yes.

29,053. Do you think that the landlords and tenants in this neighbourhood are on good terms?—Yes.

29,054. The best?—The best of terms.

29,055. Do you think the landlords have endeavoured to meet the depression?—Yes.

29,056. By giving abatements?—They have.

29,057. But not by giving permanent reductions?—I have not heard of permanent reductions.

29,058. Are you acquainted with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I cannot say that I am.

29,059. Do you think it is of any use?—I do not know much of it.

29,060. Do you think any Act could be of any use. Do you think an Act of Parliament could do you any good?—Well, as regards improvements on a farmer leaving his farm, something could be done towards him being paid for improvements.

29,061. He can under certain conditions according to the Act now; certain improvements are always paid for?—Yes.

29,062. Does religion or politics enter into consideration?—No, not that I am aware of.

29,063. It makes no difference?—I never heard of any.

29,064. Are you in favour of a Land Court?—No, I am not.

29,065. Why not?—I think it is both unfair towards tenant and landlord.

29,066. Do you think that they get on better with each other, meeting together?—Yes, I do.

29,067. Without outside interference, is that what you mean?—Yes.

29,068. I do not want to put words into your mouth; kindly speak up for yourself. The first witness to-day said that some of the farmers did not come forward; he would not give his reasons, but I take it he meant because they were afraid of what the consequences might be. Do you think there is any reason to think that?—No, I do not, certainly. They all come forward and say they cannot pay their way now, any way.

29,069. But do you think he had any ground for saying that landlords had been extra kind to their tenants this year, because of the Commission coming here?—I do not know; we have been treated the same these last eight years.

29,070. The same for eight years, and no difference has been made this year?—Not a bit.

29,071. I think he used the expression "a mother giving a bit of sweetstuff to the children"?—I heard that.

29,072. Nothing of that sort?—No.

Mr. Grove.

29,073. You say you think a Land Court would be no good?—Yes, I do not agree with it. I do not see any good in it.

29,074. But there are two sorts of landlords in some parts—they may not exist in Pembrokeshise—that is, good landlords and bad landlords; you admit that, I suppose?—Yes, I admit that.

29,075. How would you deal with a bad landlord, unless you had a Land Court or some process of that sort?—Well, I do not know. I have not had experience of a bad landlord. I have only known a good landlord, and do not know what a bad landlord may be.

29,076. Then you do not want to go into the realms of speculation?—No.

29,077. I think I gathered you have had no difference in the last eight years in your treatment?—Not a bit.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,078. You say that you think we should have protection as a remedy?—Yes.

29,079. Do you think it is likely that we shall have protection?—I cannot say, I am sure, as to that; I am afraid not: but it ought to come.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

29,080. What would be the effect of protection on the labourer?—I think it would be better for the labourer.

29,081. How?—Because we could afford to give him more wages, and should have a better price for produce. A penny in the pound is a lot to us, and 2*s.* a week would be very well for the labourer to meet it.

29,082. What is the position of the labourer now, is it good?—Better than that of the farmer.

29,083. I suppose you have read a little of history. What was the condition of the labourer before the year 1846—before the repeal of the Corn Laws?—I cannot say, I am sure, what it was. Of course it had not been so good as it is now, I know.

29,084. But you think the condition of the labourers has never been so good as it is now?—Yes, certainly I think that.

29,085. Is that in consequence of free trade?—No, I do not think so.

29,086. Then what is it?—I do not know, I am sure—well, it is owing to the cheapness of our produce, of course, in one way, but his wages would be higher; we want to give our labourers the same wages as any other skilled labourer or dockyarder, but we cannot afford to do it as times now are.

29,087. Then you admit that it is owing to the cheapness of produce that his position is so good?—No, I would not admit that at all, because it is owing to that that the other labourers are so good, but the farm labourer is not quite so good as other labourers I do not consider.

29,088. You say that a Land Court would be unfair to a tenant?—Yes, I do.

29,089. How would it be unfair to a tenant?—Because if one tenant overran his farm, and could not pay his rent, he would go to the Land Court to get his rent reduced; an old tenant that had improved his farm, and who had got an interfering landlord, the landlord might say, "You are not paying enough rent," and he would get the farm valued on the tenants' improvements.

29,090. But the Land Court, I take it, would have competent valuers who would know whether a piece of ground was outrun or whether it was improved?—I do not know about that. With an old tenant they would not know what the farm was before.

29,091. But I take it if there was such a thing as a Land Court there would be local valuers who would be acquainted with the district?—Yes, but they would not be acquainted with all the farms.

29,092. You say that the reductions are not greater this last year than in previous years?—Not as far as I know: I do not know what it may be with others, but not with myself.

29,093. What reductions have you had in past years?—10 per cent.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

29,094. What had you this last year?—10 per cent.

29,095. 10 per cent. all along?—10 per cent. all along.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,096. Are the abatements made by the landlords in general sufficient to meet the present depression?—No, not at present.

29,097. Is it your opinion that a tenant on leaving a farm should be paid for all his permanent improvements?—Paid for permanent improvements.

29,098. In which way would you recommend a tenant to get redress when his landlord says that his rent is low enough and the tenant says he cannot pay it?—That is a difficult question to answer. I am sure I do not know.

29,099. Would it not be well to have some place to appeal to?—I do not know that. As to my landlord, at any rate I am not afraid to go to him and say——

29,100. Quite so with your landlord, of course, but there are other landlords that are rather different to yours, I think?—Well, I think they must speak for themselves. I cannot say, I am sure.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

29,101. Do you know of any farms being unlet in this neighbourhood now because they cannot get sufficient reductions of rents?—No, I do not.

29,102. Tenants would not take them because the rent is too high?—Yes, I do.

29,103. Can you name any?—I do not know, without you mean Lumphey.

29,104. What is the reason those farms are not let?—I cannot say, I am sure.

29,105. It seems rather strange to see so many farms unlet and so many applicants for farms?—It is not the case with the landlords that I know of, because there are generally about 20 people after a farm as soon as one gives notice.

29,106. What is the reason that it is not the case here?—I do not know, I am sure; he cannot be a very good landlord I should say.

Lord Kenyon.

29,107. Do you think a Land Court would make a good landlord out of a bad one?—No, I do not believe in a Land Court at all.

29,108. And there is the risk that it might make a bad landlord out of a good one. Is that it?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Major WYNNE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,109. You are agent to the Orielton estate?—Yes, Colonel Morgan Saurin's estate.

29,110. You have qualified under Professor Curtis, of Downton College, Salisbury?—Yes.

29,111. So I presume you passed an examination?—I can show you my certificate. I have got the original here. I also studied under an architect (handing in two certificates of proficiency).

29,112. You think you might fairly describe yourself as an agent who has learnt his trade?—I think so.

29,113. You wish to give evidence with regard to the Orielton estate?—Yes.

29,114. 3,200 acres?—About 3,200 acres.

29,115. Have changes of tenancy become more frequent?—No, I cannot say they have.

29,116. Have you any leases?—We have three still running and one about to expire, four you may say.

29,117. Will either of those be renewed, do you suppose?—No, there is no desire, the tenants do not wish to have them renewed I have heard.

29,118. Do you treat your leaseholders and yearly tenants the same?—Precisely the same. We did not at first, but now we do.

29,119. You have several forms of agreement, you say. Can you show us any of them?—I can show you one that we adopt now. I have had the form printed, but I wish to state that that is subject to alteration; I alter every clause in it to suit the holding under any agreement.

29,120. Have you any schedule in that?—Yes, there is a place for the schedule.

29,121. You allow your tenants a free hand as to cultivation and sale of produce, do you?—Quite free, never interfere with them at all.

29,122. Are there any penalising clauses in this?—There are some, but they are never enforced.

29,123. They are kept in case of bad tenants?—Kept just to fall back upon, but we never enforce them.

29,124. Are there any services required?—Nothing, except a little covenant about a couple of loads of straw, which we take if we can get. If the tenant does not choose to send it we do without it.

29,125. The tenant has got to supply the straw?—To supply a load or two of straw if he has it. If not, we go without.

29,126. I have never come across it before in Wales. Is that a common custom in this country?—No, I do not think it is, but it has been a custom on this estate for a very long time.

29,127. You always give a copy of the agreement?—Always.

29,128. The rent roll amounts to 3,049*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*?—That is so.

29,129. Including cottages and small holdings, and cottages occupied by men employed in Her Majesty's dockyard?—Yes.

29,130. Are those the people the first witness referred to?—I fancy that is what he referred to, these men that come over to us from the dockyard and take small places and houses.

29,131. What would his objection be to that?—Oh, none whatever. Some of them have been brought up on farms.

29,132. He says they pay too much rent, is that so?—Oh no, they do not pay a bit more, not above the average of other tenants

29,133. How is the rent decided?—By agreement generally between the tenant and myself, and with reference to the landlord.

29,134. Have the rents been raised?—No, not at all.

29,135. Have you given any permanent reductions?—Yes.

29,136. Have you a table of them?—I cannot give it you. I can give you the lump sum of the permanent reductions, but I would rather not specify the particular abatements. The permanent reductions amount to about 224*l.*

29,137. That is within the last 10 years?—Since I became the agent.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,138. Per annum?—Per annum.

Lord Kenyon.

29,139. Have many of them been made recently?—Some of them recently.

29,140. Reduction of rent is made on representation of tenants to landlord through agent?—Yes.

29,141. What is the average size of the farms?—The average size of farms, excluding small holdings, is about 100 acres, that is, taking the agricultural farms, excluding dockyard men's small holdings.

29,142. You say, "No consolidation; the opposite policy pursued of late years." That means trying to subdivide farms?—Trying to subdivide them as much as we can, but the great difficulty is the buildings.

29,143. It entails a lot of building?—Yes, our policy is in favour of subdividing if we can work the buildings in.

29,144. Have you prepared any schedule to show what you have expended on buildings?—I tried to do that, but found it very difficult, owing to the way we work the improvements and the way the estate management is carried on. It is carried on with a staff of men who are working a certain time on the estate and a certain time on Colonel Saurin's house, so that it is difficult to divide their time, but I find the money spent on the estate averages about 800*l.* or 1,000*l.* a year, as near as I can gather. That is pretty nearly correct.

29,145. That is on buildings and improvements; not on keeping up the estate?—On keeping up the estate buildings and everything.

29,146. But it would not include keepers or gardeners?—No, excluding that; entirely on the farms of Colonel Saurin.

29,147. You say the cultivation is not good, as a rule?—Latterly it has not been so good as it might be on some farms.

29,148. Is that from want of labour?—From want of labour entirely, and nothing else.

29,149. Have any applications been made for improvements?—No, I cannot say there have. There are some few. We always carry out what improvements are asked for as soon as we can, as soon as we can get the men available to go on the job.

29,150. What is the custom of the country?—As to what?

29,151. As to the outgoing and incoming tenant?—The custom on the different farms varies a good deal, but I may say, as a rule, that if the tenant comes in and the outgoing tenant goes out, whatever he has been allowed for on coming in is allowed for on his going out.

29,152. Do they make use of this Act ever?—No, it is a dead letter, except with regard to that one clause. I ask a tenant if he will prefer to have six months' notice or 12 months; I give him his choice. Then they hesitate; sometimes the tenant will take six months, sometimes 12; but they do not seem to care much.

29,153. Do you think any amendment of this Act might be of value?—No, I do not think so.

29,154. It would not be of any use in this district, you think?—No, not the least, not a bit.

29,155. Do you know of any cases of inadequate compensation being given?—None whatever.

29,156. You think there is no hardship as to that?—No, I never heard of any.

29,157. Is there any such thing as tenant right?—No, we are against that; we do not allow it at all.

29,158. You think it would be an evil custom?—Yes, it would lead to complication.

29,159. How about the game?—We preserve the game at Orielton, but I never heard any complaints about it. The tenants have the rabbits, and they know that, and they avail themselves of the Act to the full.

29,160. Does it promote friendly feeling or otherwise?—Oh, most friendly feeling.

29,161. We have heard a good deal about agricultural education; I need not ask you about that. Then as to railway rates, are they high?—Very high. I consider them very high; the farmers complain a good deal about it.

29,162. Are cottages improved?—Cottages have improved beyond anything in my time We have spent a lot of money on them, and every cottage we take in hand we improve as much as it is possible to improve it.

29,163. Mr. Gibbs told us this morning that he thought a cottage could be built for 50*l.*; do you agree with that?—No, it could not be built for anything like that.

29,164. Would you say 120*l.*?—120*l.* or 130*l.*

29,165. What would the rent be then?—The rent would be about 4*l.*; 4*l.* to 4*l.* 10*s.*

Lord Kenyon.

29,166. Do you consider that a profitable investment for money in building cottages?—No, it is not an investment at all. They are necessary to a farm, the same as when you build a shed for your cart you cannot expect your cart to pay for the shed. They are necessary for the men who work on the farm to live in. We do not look upon them as an investment at all.

29,167. When do you think the depression began?—Well, I believe about 1879. That was the first bad year, and since then it has been going on.

29,168. What do you suggest as the remedy?—There is only one remedy, and that is a measure of protection and an import duty on everything we grow ourselves, all home produce. I should let everything we do not grow ourselves come in free.

29,169. Would you tax corn?—Yes, I would put a small tax on corn.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,170. Are you not also agent of the Bush estate?—I am.

29,171. How is it you do not include that in your evidence?—Well, I have no authority from my landlord to give evidence, no instructions from him whatever.

Lord Kenyon.

29,172. That is, Sir Thomas Meyrick?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,173. How do you justify the land not being cultivated properly—is it for want of labour?—It is for want of labour that the land is not thoroughly cultivated.

29,174. But are you justified in allowing it to get back in that way?—It is not so bad as all that. Unless things go very bad we do not interfere with tenants, we leave them alone; as long as they do their best and that, we do not interfere.

29,175. Do any labourers on the estate keep cows?—Yes.

29,176. How do you find them doing?—Very well indeed, the few who have cows.

29,177. Rather better than those who have not?—Well, I do not see any difference. Very few of them have cows.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,178. Is this clause in the agreement in force, "The tenant shall not, under any circum-"stances, mow any of the meadow or pasture "land for hay more than once in any one "year'?—No. Well, it is not looked after; it is not done; it is not enforced rigidly. Nothing in that is enforced rigidly or strictly.

29,179. Is it not enforced because the clauses are complied with by the tenant. Is that so?—Well, it has never been done; and if it is done and I ask, I find the land has been dressed, or there is some good reason for it, and I say no more about it. They are very good farmers; they farm up to the best of their ability. There is no bad farming.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

29,180. Last summer were there any second crops of clover, for instance, mown?—No, I do not know of any.

29,181. Was it because of this clause in the agreement, do you think?—No, no such thing. I am certain it was not anything of the sort. They had none to mow. That was the reason. It did not grow.

29,182. I think you said there was free sale of produce, did you not?—Yes, I did; pretty well free sale of produce.

29,183. That is not according to the agreement?—I know; but as I said before, we do not bind them strictly to that agreement.

29,184. And the same thing applies to that clause where the tenant is supposed to bring two loads of straw?—Yes.

29,185. Have you had any complaints about that clause?—No, none at all, not a bit; they are only too delighted if they have the straw to give it to the landlord; in fact, they have given me a load of straw without asking or anything else for it, when they have had a lot of it.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,186. Not this year?—No, we have not had a handful this year.

Mr. Grove.

29,187. You say that railway rates are rather high. Are they higher than they were two years ago? Have there been any advances since this recent legislation?—I am not quite certain about that; I cannot answer that very clearly, because I do not send away much stuff myself, but I know from the farmers that they complain of their railway rates, and say they would very gladly send their cattle to Swansea and Newport markets only that the railway rates take the gilt off the gingerbread.

29,188. But what I wanted to know rather was the effect of the recent legislation, whether the railway companies are now charging up to their full maximum. That you cannot tell me?—No, I really cannot tell you.

Lord Kenyon.

29,189. Mr. Gibbs has handed me a question, "Did Major Wynne sell me three cattle two "years old for 7*l.* 10*s.* at 2*l.* 10*s.* each?"—I believe I did; not two years old, oh no. I recollect that transaction; it was some years ago; they were little better than calves.

29,190. "Does he consider such a fact "points to his knowledge of rearing stock "or giving them the comfort and attention "they would have received from a practical "man without a diploma?"—Oh, that is too sharp! The fact of the matter is this. I had over-reared myself, and I was overstocked, and these things I had on my hands; they were worth nothing to me. I sent them to the fair, and I told my man, "Do not bring those things back again." Mr. Gibbs came across them I heard afterwards (I was not at the fair) and bought them. I said, "Take anything you can "get for them; I am overstocked and cannot "use them." They were poor things, not very much good.

29,191. I suppose an agriculturist, with or without a diploma, will rear some bad stock?—Oh, yes.

29,192. "Does Major Wynne's diploma speak "as to proficiency as an agriculturist?" That, I think, you can answer from your diploma?—I do a little farming myself, and I am very fond of it. I have gone into it and have been very fond of it all my life. Mr. Gibbs can see this diploma if he likes.

29,193. Perhaps you will satisfy Mr. Gibbs afterwards as to that?—He and I will not differ about most things.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Sackville H. Owen called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,194. You are a solicitor and county councillor?—Yes, my Lord.

29,195. You have owned and farmed land for 35 years. You are agent to Sir Charles and Lady Philipps, of Picton Castle?—Yes.

29,196. An estate of 25,000 acres, is that so?—No, 22,500 acres.

29,197. You wish to speak as to that estate in particular?—I do.

29,198. Have you anything to say with regard to fines in connexion with copyholds?—The fines for copyholds are 5 per cent. on alienation and on death they are very small.

Mr. Grove.

29,199. Five per cent. on what—on the rent?—Five per cent. on the purchase money.

Lord Kenyon.

29,200. Are you trying to extinguish copyholds?—No, but every facility is given for enfranchisements.

29,201. Do you think tenants feel more secure on a large estate or on a small one?—Oh, on a large one, certainly.

29,202. Language, creed, and politics, we have heard often enough, are not taken into account?—Quite so.

29,203. Two-thirds of the tenants are Nonconformists, are they?—Well, a great many. I should think I might put it at about two-thirds.

29,204. Changes of tenancy are not more frequent?—No.

29,205. Have you had many demands this time for a reduction of rents?—No, very few, a few old leases unexpired.

29,206. Have you got a copy of your agreement?—I have (producing same).

29,207. Have you any leases?—Very few.

29,208. Any applications for leases?—None.

29,209. And the tenants have the opportunity of considering the agreements before they sign them have they?—Always, and they take them home if they wish to.

29,210. You say rents vary considerably?—Rents vary considerably.

29,211. What is the average rent?—The rents of smaller tenantry are higher per acre. Uplands vary from a few shillings to 15*s.* per acre. Lowlands from 10*s.* to 30*s.* per acre. The estate is 22,500 acres, and the rental is 21,500*l.* I have not averaged it; lands vary very much. There are a considerable number of ground rents to be taken out of that.

29,212. Town property?—Yes.

29,213. Land is not let to the highest bidder of course, is it?—Never.

29,214. Has there been any revaluation?—Not within memory of anybody living; we do not know when there was one.

29,215. Have you had any permanent reduction?—10 per cent. generally, in some cases 15 or 20.

29,216. That is abatements?—Yes.

29,217. Any permanent reductions?—A few, not general.

29,218. Will you state them?—No, I cannot. There are a few permanent reductions, a dozen cases, perhaps.

29,219. How long has this temporary abatement been going on?—For the last 10 or 12 years.

29,220. What is your opinion as to the preferential claim for rent?—I think it enables the landlord to give more credit often to the tenants, and the tenants are kept on.

29,221. You think it is a benefit to the tenants?—I think so.

29,222. What is the size of the farms?—They vary from 50 up to 300 acres.

29,223. Who are the most successful, the large farmers or the small ones?—In these bad times the small ones I think.

29,224. You say sub-letting by tenants is considerable?—Yes.

29,225. Do you allow that in your agreements?—We do not prevent it.

29,226. What do you mean by sub-letting?—The tenants on large farms under-let, perhaps 10 acres, sometimes 10 or 15 acres, or 25 acres—let it to some of the labourers or some people in the neighbourhood.

29,227. At the same rent?—Oh no, they get more rent per acre by it; they make money out of it.

29,228. Do you think that is a good practice?—Well, we never prevent it.

29,229. Do you "wink at it," if I may say so, or do you take no notice of it?—We never object to it, we never take any notice of it.

29,230. Is land reclaimed by the tenants at all?—I think there is very little.

29,231. Is labour scarce?—Scarcer than in former years.

29,232. Do you think there is any land that might be improved?—Yes, by better farming.

29,233. Do you think the attempts to educate the farmers have been successful—the lectures and so on?—The education of the farmers has only been going on under the County Council in recent years. The attendance of the tenant farmers at the lectures has not been very successful, they have not been very well attended, rather a failure.

29,234. Do you think it is the method of teaching?—Well, they do not seem to take as much interest as I think they ought to. I do not know as to the method of teaching. I have heard it found fault with, but I have had no experience, and therefore cannot give you an opinion.

29,235. The landlord does all the buildings, I suppose?—Yes.

29,236. Supplies the pipes for drainage and gates?—Yes.

29,237. Do the tenants do the haulage?—They used to do the haulage, but latterly we have paid for everything except in a very few cases.

29,238. There is no contracting out of the Act, I suppose?—No, except as to section 33.

29,239. Do the tenants ever make application for consent to improvements?—Never; I have never known an instance. The Agricultural Act has been a complete dead letter so far as this district is concerned.

29,240. Compensation for improvements is generally arranged between the agent and the tenant, you say?—Yes.

29,241. Not by means of the Act?—No, certainly not.

29,242. Is there any clause in the agreement as to that?—No.

29,243. What about game preserving?—There is no game preserving or very little except on the home estate at Picton.

29,244. What about offences against the game laws?—In my district, where you are going to-morrow, I ascertained that there had been one case a year, I think, on an average of nine or ten years. Game offences average about 1 per cent.

29,245. You will be at Narberth to-morrow?—Yes.

29,246 And if the Commissioners wish to ask you any questions to-morrow you would not mind being recalled?—Not at all.

29,247. Are the railway rates high?—I hear they are very high. I have no personal experience.

29,248. You say fruit, horticulture, and forestry are neglected. Do you think any profit might be made out of them?—I do not think so.

29,249. Then as to poultry keeping, could any profit be made out of that?—It might be, but it is very little adopted here.

29,250. Are benefit societies used by the agricultural labourers?—Yes.

29,251. Are those benefit societies, as a rule, sound?—I think they are—the ones we have in this county.

29,252. Have there been any cases of failure?—No, not to my knowledge; they are all on a very small scale, small benefit clubs.

29,253. I have known several cases of benefit societies failing, and great grief being caused thereby?—Quite so.

29,254. Freeholders, you say, are numerous?—Small freeholders.

29,255. Do you think they are better off than tenant farmers?—No, I do not think so.

29,256. They borrow two-thirds, you say, of the purchase money?—That is in cases where they do purchase. There has been some property sold in the other parts of the county where the tenants have purchased, and they have borrowed about two-thirds In one case the gentleman allowed two-thirds of the money to remain on mortgage. That gentleman will be before you. He has got a larger income since he has sold than he had before out of the property.

29,257. Who was that?—That was Mr. Bowen, of Llwyngwair. See 32,8

Mr. Seebohm.

29,258. Was it he who let at 3½ per cent.?—At 3¼ I think it was. You will have him before you in a day or so, and he will, no doubt, explain it.

Lord Kenyon.

29,259. You say, "The men work out of doors, "women within, children sometimes receive "wages, and, on Picton Castle estate, sons fre- "quently obtain holdings. Parents find capital "to start children on farms"?—That is so.

29,260. The labourers' wages, you say, are 14*s.* to 15*s.* per week?—Yes.

29,261. Do you think their condition is improved or not?—Well, I think the labourers are perhaps better off than they have been. Food is cheaper.

29,262. And cottage accommodation better?—Cottage accommodation is getting better yearly.

29,263. Is there much migration of labourers?—A good many people, not perhaps so much from Pembroke as from Narberth and that neighbourhood, go to Glamorgan.

29,264. The causes of depression, you say, are foreign competition and bad seasons?—I think so.

29,265. Can you suggest any remedy?—No, none.

29,266. The relation between landlord and tenant, we have heard, is very friendly?—It cannot be better.

29,267. The Commissioners will defer any questions they may have to put to you till to-morrow. No doubt some of the tenants on the estate may come forward, and it would be advisable to ask you questions after we have heard them?—I shall be in attendance to-morrow.

29,268. I have one question handed up by Mr. Vincent. "Is there any truth in the "suggestion that landowners have been actuated

" by fear of the Commission in making abate-
" ments ?"—I do not think there is a single case.

29,269. You have already told us the abatements have been going on for the past 10 or 12 years ?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

29,270. " Sir Charles Philipps' rental from " farms only is about 14,000*l.*, is it not ?"—that is, apart from house property ?—I will give it to you to-morrow exactly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,271. You are a tenant farmer ?—Yes.

29,272. On the Lawrenny estate, is that so ?—Yes.

29,273. What is the size of your holding ?—About 260 acres.

29,274. And the rent ?—About 150*l.* roughly. There is a lot of cover in the acreage.

29,275. What do you consider it per acre ?—About 15*s.* or 16*s.* an acre.

29,276. That is your workable land ?—Yes.

29,277. You come here to testify to the good feeling between Mr. Lort Phillips and his tenants. Is that so ?—Yes, on behalf of all the other tenants as well.

29,278. They all wish us to know that ?—Yes, I have brought a petition to that effect.

29,279. We are very glad to hear that that is the case. In your opinion, would outside interference by a Land Court or anything of that sort be of any advantage ?—On that point we have got this. I should like to read it to you.

29,280. We have decided not to take any memorials. I would rather take it by your word of mouth. I will take you as the mouthpiece of the tenants, which will come to exactly the same thing ?—It is to this effect, that we prefer the continuance of the present relations between landlord and tenant to the adoption of of a Land Court, so long as we are situated as we are at present with the present landlord and agent.

29,281. Do you think in other cases a Land Court would be advisable ?—I can only speak from experience. When I commenced farming I went to where I am now, when I was 21 years old, and I have been there 22 years. I have had no experience of any other landlord or agent.

29,282. Can you suggest any remedy for the present depressed state of agriculture ?—Foreign competition and bad seasons I believe are the causes of depression the last few years, and we are hoping for better times. Of course if things do not improve we must get an abatement in rent, certainly, a permanent reduction; in fact our landlord has made us an abatement now the last few years.

29,283. He does make abatements ?—Yes, something like 25 per cent.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,284. Have you no tenants on the Lawrenny estate that cannot come to terms with your landlord or agent ?—I do not know of any, if they try to.

29,285. Do not they try ?—I have never heard of a case failing between landlord and tenant about the taking of a farm, or anything of that sort.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

29,286. Do you know Mr. William Thomas, of the Lawrenny Farm ?—Yes, perfectly well.

29,287. Has not he failed to come to terms with the landlord ?—I do not know his exact circumstances, but I do not think it was anything about the price of his farm, or anything of that sort.

29,288. Did not he have a wish to remain ?—Really I do not know. He asked to remain one year, and he had permission to remain a year. I think it was about some grazing of horses or something or other in an agreement that he took on the home farm, something about the grazing of horses that they differed about, not about rents or anything of that sort.

29,289. Would it be fair to have someone to come in between them and settle that question if the landlord and tenant cannot agree ?—Well, that is a case that is very seldom met with.

29,290. They are on good terms in everything else, are they not ?—Yes, I believe on perfectly good terms, but we as the other tenants know nothing at all about it. It was on the home farm, and it is some difference about grazing horses at a certain time. I believe that is what they differed about.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,291. As I understand it, you are content with the present rent you are paying ?—We are content as far as our landlord is concerned, yes. Of course this last year was a very disastrous year; if we had it for nothing this last year we should hardly be content, as far as that goes. We hope not to see a repetition of last year again.

29,292. What I understand you to say is that you are on perfectly good terms with your landlord ?—On the very best terms.

29,293. But do you say it is possible to farm at a profit upon the present rentals ?—Well, not these last two years, not the last year or two, certainly not. No man can say that, I think.

29,294. Then you would be quite content with receiving a notice to quit because you did not pay the existing rent, as I understand you ?—Well, so long as the existing relations exist between landlord and tenant we know we should not get that.

29,295. If you did not pay any rent you would not get a notice to quit. Is that what you say ?—Well, I do not think we should this year; it is an exceptional year; I do not think we should. We know our landlord to be a man of reason and sense, certainly.

29,296. But still the rent is too high at the present time ?—Well it is. It is this last year, as I say.

Lord Kenyon.

29,297. You must take one year with another, I suppose?—Just so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,298. I do not quite understand your attitude. Do you not think that the rental ought to be a rental fixed at such an amount as would make the business a paying business to the farmer as well as to the landlord?—Certainly it should, yes.

29,299. But as I understand it, it is not now, and yet you are content?—Well, it is bad seasons this last couple of years, they have been so very bad years.

29,300. Then what I understand you to mean is that you do not mind going on trusting to the rent being abated from time to time if seasons become very bad?—Well, they have been doing that for us; then if the seasons continue we expect that they will do more, and I have no doubt they will.

Lord Kenyon.

29,301. May I take it that the rent is not fixed at the highest possible, but it is fixed at an average of good and bad years: sometimes you make a bit?—Well, not these last few years

29,302. But you do not always get such a bad one as this last year has been?—Certainly not.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,303. What you mean is that you would rather trust to the good relations between you and your landlord, and you would expect to get justice done in that way, as well as, or better than you could, by the interference of some third person?—I would, so long, as I say, as we have our present landlord and agent that we know and can depend on, but I do not say the same for everyone. Certainly I only speak for ourselves on the Lawrenny estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,304. Are you satisfied that your landlord takes his share of the loss owing to bad times?—I think you gentlemen as Commissioners should be satisfied, as you have heard here explained to-day, from the time our landlord came of age what his income has been and what he has spent on the estate, that his share that he took was so far very fair.

29,305. We will see about that presently. Are you satisfied that he bears his share of the loss?—Well, I think he has this last couple of years. He has allowed us a reduction of about 25 per cent., and I do not think we can expect more. The landlord must live as well as ourselves. Although it is not enough to meet the times at present, we cannot expect the landlord to bear it all, and he kindly promised us that if more was required another year we should have more abatement.

29,306. Have you made any profit out of farming this year?—Profit?

29,307. Yes?—Certainly not—a great loss.

29,308. I suppose your landlord has had something from his farm, has not he?—Of course he has.

29,309. So that really he is better off than you?—Well, he is certainly. I have paid my rent, thank goodness, so far, but we cannot expect with disastrous seasons that he must stand it all—certainly he did not make the seasons.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Hughes called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,310. You wish to corroborate the evidence of the last witness?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Odyerne Hulm called and examined

Lord Kenyon.

29,311. Are you the Town Clerk at Pembroke?—Yes, and Magistrates' Clerk.

29,312. I think you have some figures to give us with respect to poaching cases?—Yes, I can give them to you as I am the Magistrates' Clerk for the Division of Castlemartin.

29,313. Will you please do so?—I have taken the numbers for the last 10 years from my register. Shall I give them seriatim?

29,314. Yes?—In 1884 there were two cases.

29,315. Please give the total first of all?—59 cases altogether in 10 years.

29,316. Poaching cases?—Yes, principally trespass in pursuit of game in the day time.

29,317. What per-centage do they represent?—They would average six. In one year, I must tell you, there were four defendants in each of three cases, so that there would not be so many cases. These are the number of defendants. In 1888 there were 12 defendants, and they made up five cases only. In 1893 there were 15 defendants, making also five cases. But the total average of defendants would be six.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,318. Could you tell us out of how many cases?—I should not think there would be more than three or four dismissed.

29,319. I meant out of how many cases which came before the Bench are the 59 in 10 years. What per-centage of cases are game cases, that is what I want to know?—These are all game cases. Do you mean out of the total number of cases heard?

29,320. Yes?—I cannot tell you unless I have the register here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,321. You can give us an impression of the per-centage?—I really cannot without seeing the register. I can let you have it.

29,322. We have the perfect figures for 10 years, and it would be very useful to know what ratio the total number of game cases bears to the total number of misdemeanours punishable at Petty Sessions?—I will send it to you at your Haverfordwest sittings.

29,323. Those were trivial cases, I gather from what you say, simply ordinary trespass, nothing serious?—Quite so, nothing serious.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

The witness subsequently handed in the following table:—

Year.	Poaching Cases.	Total No. of Convictions.	——
1884	2	91	Average 11·17.
1885	2	60
1886	4	62
1887	5	93
1888	12	52
1889	6	54
1890	5	56
1891	4	64
1892	4	55
1893	15	85
—	57	672

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard White called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,324. Do you live at Warren Farm, Guildford, Surrey?—Yes, my Lord. I am very sorry that I was not aware of this inquiry before, as I am not very well prepared to give such a good statement as I should like to have given if I had had proper notice of what I was about to say. However, I should like to give you my experience during the time I was a tenant with R. W. Mirehouse, Esq. I took the farm in the year 1879, at a yearly rent of 300*l*, which was, I am told, 120*l*. a year more than the old tenant was paying. When I took the farm it was a good season, and there was plenty of grass. There were a lot of rabbits on the farm, which I was allowed to kill, according to the agreement; they were reserved from the old tenant, I believe. When the Ground Game Act came into force, Mr. Mirehouse sent the keeper to my farm to trap rabbits. When I met the keeper before he commenced trapping, I asked him who had given him instructions to come and kill my rabbits. He said Mr. Mirehouse. I said to the keeper that I was quite willing for Mr. Mirehouse to enjoy sport in killing my rabbits when he was shooting; but I should certainly not be agreeable for him to trap the rabbits, for I paid dearly for the farm, and as the rabbits ate the grass——

29,325. Were you acquainted with the Act?—Not very well.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,326. This was in 1879?—Yes, in 1879.

29,327. That was the year before the Act was passed?—But this killing of the rabbits took place afterwards, during the tenancy.

Lord Kenyon.

29,328. You do not say the date of that?—No, I do not know the date.

29,329. You had certain rights under the Act?—I wish to show the advantage he took of me after my having been given the rabbits in the first place. I took it under that understanding, that with the rabbits I paid such a high rent. I thought I had the greater right to them. The keeper then said to me that I had better get on my horse and go to see Mr. Mirehouse about it. I went straight and saw him; he at once said that he was taking the advantage of the Ground Game Act, and that he had sent Thompson, the keeper, to kill the rabbits. Then we had a few hot words, and I told him I would leave the farm, so I returned and told the keeper that what he had said was quite correct. He then went on trapping the rabbits, and I gave Mr. Mirehouse notice that I should quit the farm. Some time after, we came to terms, and I stayed on, when he discontinued trapping the rabbits. Through bad seasons and depression in trade I kept complaining that the rent was too high; he afterwards allowed me 15 per cent., so this went on. I still complained, and gave him a second notice; he then gave me a permanent reduction, when I paid him 230*l*. a year. After having such a bad summer in 1887, I found it impossible to go on without living at a great loss. I then gave notice, and left the farm. At the last audit before my leaving the farm Mr. Mirehouse said, "Well, White, as you are leaving the farm, I "shall not allow you per-centage"; so I thanked him, and told him that my last reduction was a permanent one. When he looked at my last receipt he found his mistake. During the tenancy he gave me permission to plough two fields about 10 acres, which were full of rush and awfully poor, which I considered was a great improvement to the land. Mr. Mirehouse afterwards refused to settle my valuation, saying that he should compel me to pay for damage done to the two fields which I had ploughed. It was at last settled by arbitration, he having to pay all costs. I am glad to say I am now living under the Earl of Onslow. At the same time I cannot thank Mr. Mirehouse for his goodness, for he would not give me a reference, nor even reply to his Lordship's agent. I am sorry to say, my Lord, if it had not been for my banking account, that being one of my references, I should have lost the farm. After treating me in such a manner, if he can prove in any way I was a bad tenant during that time, I should have been only too pleased for him to have said so while he was in the room, and I think I could have contradicted him by proving I was a good tenant. I gave notice three times.

29,330. Did he rear a quantity of game?—No, my Lord.

29,331. Did he go in for shooting much?—Yes, he used to come round the farm occasionally. I remember an incident that took place on one occasion. I had the right to kill the rabbits. One of his relatives whom I was not aware of at the time came along the bottom. We were rabbiting, and I said, "I am sorry you did "not come a few minutes before, because if you "had you would have had a good shot at a "woodcock." He said: "Well, I can quite "understand Mr. Mirehouse being angry with "his tenants for interfering in such a way as "this by ferreting the rabbits, because he can "never expect to have any shooting." I said: "I have not the pleasure of knowing who you "are, but as you are a stranger to me perhaps "I may have the greater right of the two here, "and I should be glad to know who you are "now." He did not tell me his name, but I found out afterwards that he was a relative of my landlord. I was partly sorry in one way that I said what I did to him; however, tempers will rise, I suppose, and I am rather a ready-mouthed customer, but I am always open to state to the best of my knowledge without telling lies what really does happen. I should like to have given the proper notice in time, and then for him to have contradicted any statements that I have made here. Afterwards, that is, during the tenancy when I had given him notice, I tried to take a farm under Colonel Saurin. We came to an arrangement about the rent and everything else except the agreement. I then had an agreement sent to me to overhaul, and it took me some time to do it, I assure you. There were one or two clauses there I did not like, and that was the claiming two loads of straw to be driven every year to the stable, which, if he had demanded, I might not have been in a position to have done. Another thing was that there was a clause in the agreement that I was to pay for the drawing up of the lease and stamp and the counterpart thereof, which I thought a most unreasonable thing. Therefore, as I found I could not get a farm to my own liking in the district, I left. Otherwise I should not have left.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,332. Did you give notice to him?—I gave him notice three times.

29,333. When you left did you give him notice?—Yes, I did three times altogether.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,334. Where is the Earl of Onslow's property?—In Surrey.

29,335. Have you come all the way here from Surrey to give evidence?—Yes, I have, and I am sorry I was not aware of this before. I did not know anything of it until Thursday afternoon, otherwise it would have been a pleasure to me to come down and tell you what I knew, after having given you proper notice, if I thought it was for the advantage of improving the tenantry in this neighbourhood. I am here without any prejudice whatever. I can thoroughly say, and I think others in the neighbourhood will say the same of me, that I never left with any grudge to any man, or the other way about. I do not think anyone can speak disrespectfully of me in any way.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,336. Was this estate re-valued?—Yes, I believe it was the year before I went in.

29,337. Was the whole estate re-valued?—Yes, and that is one thing that I think is wrong in the valuing of farms in the different districts; if you want a farm valued I think the only men to value such farms are local men.

29,338. Was it not re-valued by a local man?—No, I believe not. I cannot say where they were from, but I do not think they were Pembrokeshire men, and when the farm was valued, it was full of grass, which deceived me considerably too.

29,339. You know the neighbourhood around. What is the reason we have had no tenants of that estate coming forward?—I cannot say, I am sure, what is the reason; but I know when I was there I sometimes felt that I dare not open my mouth.

29,340. Do you think they are highly rented?—Yes, I am certain of it. If I was not highly rented, how is it he has the farm on his hands, and the only farm in the neighbourhood? That is a proof, I think, that the farm must be highly rented.

29,341. You think the farms round are too highly rented?—They were all valued under the same system. It is a great question whether the valuers who valued knew the place, and whether it was adapted for the purpose to which it was put.

29,342. You think the tenants are doing well?—I do not think there is one doing well on the estate, and in fact I heard different reports in the town of Pembroke, when I have been in here at the time I was living on the estate. You could come in here and hear everything that was bad; they were oppressed in every shape and form, in a manner of speaking. When you come to books, especially when the rent agitation was here, it was all a fine thing until it came to the point, and then they all drew out, which I think everyone in the room is well aware of.

29,343. Have you been down to that part of the country during your present visit?—I have not. I have gone quite far enough to see the state of the country, and I do not think I shall go further, unless it is to see a relative.

29,344. Have you heard what is the state of affairs there?—I did hear that the estate was very, very bad.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,345. Is the farm still on the landlord's hands?—Yes, it is.

29,346. Do you know of any cases where farms are advertised in the newspapers to let in the neighbourhood?—I cannot say for the neighbourhood; it is a matter I have not thought of until I thought of coming down here, which I was asked to do.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,347. Have you heard that the tenants have been promised an extraordinary reduction this year?—No, I have not.

29,348. It has come to my ears, whether it is true or not, I cannot tell?—I cannot tell.

Lord Kenyon.

29,349. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent: "Do you know that Mr. Mirehouse has refused "a tenant for your late farm?"—I do not.

29,350. "May he not prefer to keep it on his own hands?"—He has decidedly a right to do so.

29,351. Do you think that is the reason?—That I cannot say, I am sure; in fact, on one occasion at the time I left the farm there was a certain gentleman went and applied for it He asked the rent of it, and he said "The same rent "as White was paying," and the tenant said, "Well, from what I hear, if he cannot pay for it, "I am sure I cannot, so I will have nothing to "do with it."

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Harris called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,352. You live at Lamphey?—Yes.

29,353. What are you?—I am a small holder, and I complain that I am charged too much rent. I occupy a holding of 3½ acres, and a cottage at a rental of 20*l.* a year gross. I also complain that I am not allowed to kill rabbits on my holding by the landlord.

29,354. You are allowed to do so by the Ground Game Act?—When I was trying to do it last Saturday he came and carried away my net.

29,355. Then you should summon him.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,356. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Charles Mathias, of Lamphey Court.

Lord Kenyon.

29,357. Is there any special reason why your land is so highly rented? Is it near a town?—It is two miles from this town exactly.

29,358. How is it you came to pay so high a rent?—I was anxious to have a little bit of land.

29,359. I am afraid you were too anxious?—Perhaps so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,360. Has Mr. Mathias still got your net?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,361. Has he not given it up?—No.

29,362. Why did you let him take it?—It would not do for a poor man to fight with a gentleman.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,363. Have you a lease of the place?—No.

29,364. You did not build the house yourself?—No, nothing.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,365. I think you should consult a solicitor.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,366. Does he treat the other tenants in the same manner?—Well, there are not many tenants left now.

29,367. How is this?—They have gone away somewhere, I do not know where.

Lord Kenyon.

29,368. Has he much land?—Yes. That is the difficulty with the rabbits; there is no tenant to catch the rabbits, and they are coming on from his other land to my little bit and tearing it all to pieces.

29,369. How many farms has he of his own?—I cannot tell, but there is Cleggars, West Hill, Lamphey, Lamphey Court, Lamphey Mills, and others—about 10 farms.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,370. How many labourers does he employ on the farms?—About 10 now, I think.

29,371. How many did the others employ?—There were more upon two farms, Mr. Morgan's and Mr. Williams', of Cleggars, in days gone by than upon the whole now.

29,372. Did you set the net on your own lands?—In the boundary hedge; in 3½ acres you are bounded on each side.

29,373. Were you ferreting?—Yes, with a purse net over the hole.

29,374. Do you think he makes a good thing of the farms?—I cannot tell.

29,375. Is he turning the place into a rabbit warren?—It looks like it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,376. Is your house rather a superior house?—Well, it has four rooms and a dairy.

29,377. Do you keep anything more than a cow there?—Yes.

29,378. What stock do you keep?—I keep six cows altogether.

29,379. Six cows on 3½ acres?—But I have extra land besides.

29,380. You take land under some other people?—Yes, under some other landlords, at a much cheaper rent.

29,381. Why do you not give this place up?—I have not got any other house. There is no cottage belonging to the rest of the land.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,382. Why have the rest of the tenants given up the farms?—I should think they could not pay for them.

Lord Kenyon.

29,383. I do not like to advise anyone to go to law, but I think that is your remedy?—Thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Narberth.

THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

County Court Buildings, Narberth, Pembrokeshire, Wednesday, 7th March 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFTHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Lord Kenyon.

Before we begin our proceedings, I wish to draw the attention of those present to some remarks made by Lord Carrington at our first meeting. He said: "There is only one other "matter upon which I need touch, that is "concerning the protection of witnesses, which "has been referred to in Mr. Vincent's letter. "Experience has shown that, unless witnesses "speak out boldly and without fear, inquiries "like the one we are engaged in are futile. "We have no reason to believe that undue "pressure will be brought upon any class of "witnesses or any individual witness; nor "have we reason to think that the giving of "evidence by any person in this country will "lead to his being in any way injured. But it "is, of course, possible—we cannot shut our "eyes to what has before now taken place in "regard to affairs of this kind—that some men "are less scrupulous than others, and that it "is possible that witnesses who speak here what "is in their minds may be subjected to loss "and annoyance. We desire, therefore (and it "is our duty to do so), to point out that the "recent Act, the Witnesses Protection Act, "1892, affords a remedy adequate to meet any "ordinary case." And in reference to that statement I have been asked to read a letter which was written to Lord Carrington by Mr. Vincent on behalf of the Landowners Association of South Wales, in which he says, "First the Association, albeit young in point "of time, represents a large number of land-"owners possessed of great and small estates, "and I am expressly instructed to say that "it is the desire of this Executive Committee "to afford all possible assistance to the Com-"mission towards the common object of dis-"covering the truth. Secondly, an idea seems "to prevail in some quarters that this Com-"mission exists for the purpose of bringing "contentious issues either between political "parties or between landlords and tenants as "opposed to one another. The corollary to "this wrong idea is the suggestion that, in "some form or another, tenants who offer "evidence may suffer resentment from their "landlords. On the part of my Association, I "am instructed to repudiate this idea absolutely, "and to say that, apart from the fact that "witnesses before Royal Commission have "abundant protection, it is the desire of the "owners composing this Association that every "witness should give evidence with a feeling "of absolute security that he will not suffer "in any way."

Mr. JOHN HILLING called and examined.

See evidence of Mr. Vickerman and others on 50th Day.

Lord Kenyon.

29,384. Are you a tenant farmer now?—Yes, at Bramley Lay, not at Vatson Moor.

29,385. Not at the place about which you wish to give evidence?—No.

29,386. You wish to give evidence about Vatson Moor?—Yes.

29,387. You became tenant of this place in the year 1891?—Yes.

29,388. It is a holding of 20 acres or thereabouts, I believe?—Yes.

29,389. Did you have notice to quit in 1892, and did you leave in 1893?—Yes.

29,390. I think your complaint is about your having notice to quit?—Yes. Vatson Moor has been my home for the last 33 years, and I regret to say that in 1891 I became a tenant to Mr. Vickerman through a notice being given my father to quit the above-mentioned place. Terms concerning the landlord and me proved to be very fair during those few months until voting time drew near, and then I was visited by Mr. C. Vickerman, junior, who was canvassing for votes; and seeing that father was still residing on the above premises he appeared to be in a very disagreeable passion. On the following rent day I had a sharp warning that notice should be given me to quit for not putting father from his home. This was rather unsatisfactory to do, as mother for the last four years had been laid on a bed of affliction and not able to be moved, and she desiring to be left in her home, which they had made comfortable through their own hard labour and expenses, I again appealed to the landlord, entreating him to let us remain in the home, and received a letter, dated 1st March 1893, stating such.

29,391. Is that a letter you wish to hand in?—Yes. "Sir, in reply to your inquiry whether "the notice will be enforced at Michaelmas next, "I have to inform you that much will depend "upon what may happen in the interval of seven "months from this date." After this I formed a ploughing match. The landlord tried to get an injunction against this, but failed to do so, and employed a solicitor to stick up bills that no trespassing should take place upon the said farm. This caused many teams to withdraw from the match, which proved to be a great expense. I still entreated to be allowed to remain there, up till the last week, but each time received a denial.

29,392. The agent said there were to be no trespassers on the farm?—Yes.

29,393. What farm was it?—Vatson Moor Farm.

29,394. Which is a farm of about 20 acres?—Yes, or thereabouts, and I have a letter, dated 2nd March 1893, which I received from the agent to Mr. Vickerman. "Sir, referring to my "letter of yesterday, I have just heard that you "are about to plough up the pasture and "meadow land. I therefore give you distinct "notice not to do so, and failing your compliance "with this notice, I shall take the requisite "proceedings to recover substantial damages."

29,395. Is that the whole of your statement?—No, I should like to say this. Vatson Moor has been occupied by William Hilling and his relatives for centuries past. The land became for sale, and Mr. Vickerman being the purchaser, and refusing that any widow's name should be entered on his books, caused many widows to become destitute and homeless. William Hilling being the son of the widow, and they were residing together at the said farm, and the landlord refusing to let it remain in the widow's name, caused William Hilling to become tenant of the said farm, the rent before the sale being 8*l.* per annum, and after 12*l.* 10*s.*, in the course of a few years six acres of land being added to the farm. This caused the rent to be 20*l.* per annum. William Hilling then agreed with the landlord for a term of 21 years for the sum of 1*l.* a year in addition to the rent. William Hilling cultivated this farm from pits and banks to plain ground, built his dwelling-house, together with all the outhouses, with the exception of the widow's old dwelling-house, and fenced it all respectably and drained a little over 1,000 yards of draining. Hilling entreated the landlord to sign the said agreement, but the landlord passed it off with a slight conversation, and told him to do his best with the farm, as he felt very satisfied with the condition it then stood in, and nothing should disturb him. Therefore the signing not being issued, Hilling six years ago endeavoured to sink a small pit, and after some months was fortunate to strike on a small vein of coal, which afforded him little wages. This being envied by the landlord, he was visited by Mr. C. Vickerman, junior, threatening him that for so doing he should have notice to quit his premises. On the following rent day the landlord warned Hilling that unless he closed up his colliery he should certainly be driven from his home as he was robbing his pocket daily, who was then earning less than a mere labourer.

29,396. Was he sinking a pit on Mr. Vickerman's own land?—No, on Lawrenny land.

29,397. Had he got a take-note or what?—Yes.

29,398. He had leave to sink a pit?—He had leave to sink a pit.

29,399. Nothing whatever to do with Mr. Vickerman?—Nothing whatever to do with Mr. Vickerman.

29,400. What was the complaint Mr. Vickerman had against your father?—For sinking this pit—under-selling him—robbing his pocket daily—when he was just getting wages.

29,401. Mr. Vickerman is a colliery proprietor is he?—Yes.

29,402. Then it was a private quarrel between Mr. Vickerman and your father?—Yes.

29,403. Was your father ever the tenant of this place?—He lived there 59 years.

29,404. Then he gave him notice to quit?—Yes, and then I took it.

29,405. He took you in as tenant?—Yes, I was in after that.

29,406. At the same time I suppose he told your father that he did not want him there—was that it?—Want him at the colliery.

29,407. No, did not want him in his house?—No.

29,408. Did he tell you so when you took the place?—No, he did not say anything to me; he did not say anything to me about father when I took the place.

29,409. It was the outcome of a quarrel about coal?—Yes, about coal.

29,410. Then about the ploughing match, had you any agreement?—No, none whatever.

29,411. So that you thought you had a right to plough up pasture if you liked?—Yes. Well, it was not ploughing up pasture at all; it had only been laid down, some of it, about 10 years; 15 years ago it was all drained and planed and nothing but coal pit banks there.

29,412. You had your ploughing match?—Yes, I had my ploughing match.

29,413. Was any further notice taken of it?—No.

29,414. Mr. Brinn says in the letter of the 2nd March 1893, addressed to you: "I have just "heard that you are about to plough up the "pasture and meadow land. I therefore give

" you distinct notice not to do so, and failing your " compliance with this notice I shall take the " requisite proceedings." Did he take any proceedings?—Yes, here is the paper I had. (Producing document.)

29,415. What was the result. Never mind the paper?—I ploughed it up.

29,416. Did you have to pay any damage for ploughing it up?—No; he tried to get an injunction for me to stop ploughing it up, and he failed to do so, and then he posted up these bills to stop the ploughmen coming there. (Exhibiting placards.)

29,417. You were under no agreement?—I was under no agreement whatever. These are the bills he stuck up after he could not get any injunction.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,418. He failed to get an injunction?—Yes, and then he stuck those bills up after.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,419. I do not quite understand the circumstances of this case, Mr. Hilling. How long do you say your father had been tenant?—My father had been tenant from the time that the land was sold—the time that Mr. Vickerman bought the land. My grandmother was tenant there before that, and then Mr. Vickerman would not allow any widow to keep the land in her name; then my father became tenant.

29,420. About how many years ago is that? That is somewhere about 21 years ago. My father was born there and lived there 59 years; and my grandmother was born there before; she lived there 84 years.

29,421. Then I understand there was some dispute between your father and Mr. Vickerman?—Yes.

29,422. What was the nature of that dispute, had it anything to do with agriculture—had it anything to do with the use of the farm by your father?—No, it was about this little colliery.

29,423. Was your father carrying on colliery operations?—Yes, a small pit—just getting wages there.

29,424. Was he a tenant from year to year?—Yes.

29,425. Where did he get his right to take the coal from there?—From Lawrenny—he was not taking coal on his own farm.

29,426. I understand; he had got a mining lease on the Lawrenny estate?—Yes.

29,427. Then because of his carrying on these mining operations on the Lawrenny ground his landlord objected?—Yes.

29,428. Then notice to quit was given. Is that so.

29,429. But you were taken on as tenant, as I understand?—Yes, I did not turn my father and mother out and then I had notice to quit.

29,430. What was the date of the notice to quit that you got?—1892.

29,431. Michaelmas 1892?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

29,432. Then you had to go out when—Michaelmas 1893?—1893.

29,433. What was the objection to your father's living with you?—Because of this little colliery that he had got.

29,434. When you took the farm—the 20 acres—was anything said about what was to be done with your father and mother?—No, nothing then.

29,435. I suppose that the point about the dispute was that your father's colliery was competing with Mr. Vickerman's colliery. Is that it?—Not competing with it—he was not selling at the same price as Mr. Vickerman, he was under-selling him—selling ½*d.* per cwt. cheaper, but he had no money to stock his coal, and he had to sell it for what he could get.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,436. Will you kindly tell me, Mr. Hilling, what objection Mr. Vickerman had to widows being tenants of the place?—I do not know. I cannot tell why he had any objection to widows; I do not know, but that was not the only case that time; there were several more.

29,437. Several widows besides?—Several widows besides that.

29,438. It was not because they had no votes, was it?—Indeed, I cannot say. There were several widows besides that one.

29,439. What was the first offence of your father?—That was because of this little colliery.

29,440. While he held this little farm in the first place I mean. He opened this little colliery before you were tenant of that at all?—Yes.

29,441. Some years before you held it?—No, not long—about six years since I commenced.

29,442. What was the reason given by Mr. Vickerman that your father should leave?—Did he give no explanation?—It was because of this colliery. He told me when I paid the rent he was robbing his pocket daily, and my father was only first getting a mere labourer's wages then.

29,443. Still he allowed you to remain on the farm?—Yes, he allowed me to up to the time that he knew my father was there.

29,444. So you determined that your father must leave the place?—Yes.

29,445. How many years had he been tenant before you took possession?—Somewhere about 21 years.

29,446. He was tenant of this Vatson Moor Farm years before Mr. Vickerman had it, was he not?—No, his mother was.

29,447. Then was this land where you had the ploughing match ever ploughed before?—It was about 10 years since it was ploughed up.

29,448. Oh, it had been ploughed up?—Yes, and drained, most of it—1,000 yards of draining on it, and all fenced in.

29,449. At whose expense was the draining done?—My father's.

29,450. Did not Mr. Vickerman do any draining?—He gave the pipes and then promised father an agreement only to put on 1*l.* a year more for it, but he would not sign the agreement after he had been paying 1*l.* a year up to the time he gave it up.

29,451. Mr. Vickerman would not sign, or your father—which?—Mr. Vickerman would not sign. He agreed to sign when he commenced draining the land, and after he drained the land he would not sign, only told him to go on just the same as ever; and there was nothing more about it, and he paid 1*l.* a year up to the time he left. He paid 21*l.* from the time the lease was promised.

29,452. In 1893 you were obliged to leave as well?—Yes.

29,453. For the only reason that your father lived with you?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

29,454. Did the coal when it was hauled away from this colliery pass over the land which was in the occupation of your father?—No.

29,455. Not at all?—No, it was not near it.

29,456. It did not damage this land in any way?—No, it was half a mile from the land.

29,457. Did the landlord give the reasons for getting rid of your father in writing or by word of mouth?—By word of mouth.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,458. In answer to Mr. Griffiths you say the only reason was the competition with regard to the coal. That had nothing to do with you, I suppose?—That had nothing to do with me whatever.

29,459. What was the reason of your having to leave. Was it that matter with regard to the ploughing up of the pasture and meadow land, which was so called?—No, the reason I had to leave was—

29,460. I will refer to that later, if you please. This is the letter which you have handed in which is written to you by Mr. Vickerman's agent, Mr. Brinn. He gives you warning not to plough up the pasture and meadow land?—There was no pasture and meadow land there.

29,461. Did you say so to him?—To Mr. Vickerman

29,462. Yes?—He sent me this letter; I did not give an answer back to him.

29,463. Whether it was meadow land or pasture land, or not, you did plough it up?—I did plough it up.

29,464. And it was in consequence of that that you had to leave?—No, I had to leave because of not turning my father and mother out of the house. Notice to quit had been given.

29,465. Yes, that is so. This was in answer to a letter inquiring as to whether it was to be enforced or not?—I went to him to inquire whether I should remain there.

29,466. "In reply to your inquiry whether "the notice will be enforced at Michaelmas next "I have to inform you that much will depend "upon what may happen in the interval of "seven months from this date?"—Yes, the last seven months, I had had notice to leave then.

29,467. And then it was during that time that you ploughed this land up?—Yes; after that I ploughed this land up.

29,468. At this time, March 1st 1893, it was still uncertain whether this notice to quit was going to be enforced or not. Looking at that letter it seems that it was still in question as to whether the notice to quit should be enforced?—Yes, I asked him whether it was going to be enforced or not.

29,469. During this time you ploughed up this land?—No, I had not ploughed it up then.

29,470. No, you had not ploughed it up then, but after that you ploughed up this land?—Yes, and then I had this letter threatening me not to do it.

29,471. The very next day?—The very next day. There would be no hay grown there on the land, and I had to pay the rent, and I thought the only way to pay it was to plough it up and put corn there.

29,472. Meadow land and pasture land?—It was not meadow land. Some of it had not been laid down longer than ten years, and some of it, not three years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,473. Was it laid down with permanent grass?—Nothing but rye grass and clover was put on it.

Mr. Grove.

29,474. At whose expense was it laid down?—My father's.

29,475. Entirely at his expense?—Yes, and he built the dwelling-house which we lived in, and all the outhouses.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,476. When Mr. Vickerman purchased this little farm was there any advance in rent. Did your father pay 20*l.* a year before Mr. Vickerman had it?—No, 8*l.* a year—at least his mother paid 8*l.* a year.

29,477. Then it was advanced from 8*l.*?—It was advanced to 12*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, and the railroad went right through the centre of it.

29,478. How much land did the railway take?—I dare say it took nearly two acres. I do not know exactly.

29,479. Then your father must have improved the land from the time it was taken?—Oh, yes, he did improve it. Before there was nothing but coal banks and pits.

29,480. Then on your father's own improvement the rent was advanced from 8*l.* to 20*l.*:—Yes, but then there was another 6 acres added to it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,481. Did not the railway improve the value of the land?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,482. What quality of land was this that was added to it?—Most of it was rush.

29,483. Wet?—Wet.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

29,484. That is the piece he drained?—No, that is not the piece he drained. He stopped draining that when he did not get the agreement. He was to drain that if Mr. Vickerman gave the agreement; but then he did not give the agreement, and my father stopped. He would not drain any more.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,485. Was there a station made anywhere near your land?—There was a station at one time about a quarter of a mile from there.

29,486. What was the name of it?—Saundersfoot. Then it was removed further up this road here.

Lord Kenyon.

29,487. I have a question put to you by Mr. Vincent which I think has been answered: "Your father is or was a colliery proprietor, is "not that so?"—Yes, a very small one—just getting wages.

29,488. It was a little surface coal, was it not?—Yes, a little surface coal.

29,489. "Had there not been some quarrel between your father and Mr. Vickerman concerning coal?" You said there had been?—Yes.

29,490. "In fact were they not rivals in business?" You say your father sold coal cheaper than Mr. Vickerman did?—Yes—at least not cheaper than him; he had some which he was selling 4½*d.* a cwt., and some 3½*d.* a cwt., and my father was selling his at 4*d.*, so that he was ½*d.* under him, and ½*d.* above him, you see.

Mr. Grove.

29,491. What depth were the pits sunk to?—Some of the pits 22 yards.

29,492. How did he bring the coal up to the surface?—A horse pulled it up.

Lord Kenyon.

29,493. Mr. Vickerman will be communicated with in case he wishes to take any notice of this evidence. It is our method always to inform anyone who has anything in the nature of an attack made against him that he may offer rebutting evidence, which we will accept at the first opportunity.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined on 50th Day.

The Reverend CANON ALLEN called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,494. You are the Rector of Porthkerry, Barry, Cardiff?—Yes.

29,495. You are a landowner in this neighbourhood?—A small landowner in this neighbourhood.

29,496. Is your estate about 500 acres?—About 500 acres.

29,497. Have you any statement prepared?—I only wish to offer a very brief statement. I have been a small landowner for about 48 years in this neighbourhood, and my father was before me, and my elder brother is still, and we have always been on perfectly good terms with our tenants, and never had any serious difficulty with any of them, and have found our relations always satisfactory.

29,498. Have you had any changes in tenancy?—Very few.

29,499. When there are changes how do you generally fill up the farms?—By personal inquiry.

29,500. Would you give preference to the families on the farms at the time?—Yes, as much as possible.

29,501. Have you ever given notice to quit, or had reason to do so?—Never in this county. I have a small property in Carmarthenshire, where I once gave notice to quit.

29,502. Has any difficulty occurred owing to difference of language, religion, or politics?—Never.

29,503. Are any of your tenants, may I ask you, Nonconformists?—Most of them are Nonconformists—very good Nonconformists.

29,504. Have you a copy of your agreement which you make with your tenants?—No, I have not.

29,505. Have you any agreements with them?—We generally draw out an agreement. I have no lease with any tenant at present.

29,506. Is your agreement a written one or a printed form?—Generally a written one.

29,507. Have you had any complaints about it?—Oh, no.

29,508. Who keeps that agreement, the tenant or yourself?—We generally keep a copy each.

29,509. You could not let us have one?—Unless my agent, who is here, happens to have one about him; I cannot now.

29,510. What is the average rent?—I have land varying very much in value almost from 3*l.* or upwards down to about 10*s.* in this county, and varying still more in Carmarthenshire.

29,511. That is rather a high rent 3*l.* or 4*l.* Is that accommodation land?—No, farm-land, good meadow-land.

29,512. Are there any complaints about the rent being too high?—No more than during the last two or three years; things have been in a very depressed state, so that there is a case for mutual forbearance.

29,513. Have you given them abatements?—To a small extent. I believe my rents have been moderate, and have never been exorbitantly high. I have been able to give some small abatements.

29,514. Has it been asked for, or have you done it without being asked?—I have generally given notice a little beforehand that I should make some such abatement according to the state of each year.

29,515. I mean it has not been asked for by the tenant beforehand?—No, generally speaking it has been the case that I have volunteered to say I should make some abatement.

29,516. Have your rents been raised at all in your memory?—Very slightly in this county. In the case of one farm which I inherited at the end of a very long lease—a least granted in the last century, which was than rented at 50*l.* a year—it is now rented at 80*l.* a year approximately.

29,517. I suppose you do all improvements?—Generally.

29,518. In the way of buildings and repairs?—Yes.

29,519. Have you done any drainage?—Yes, some years ago I have done some drainage.

29,520. Did the tenant help in any way?—He helped by driving and hauling, and so on.

29,521. Did he cut the drains or give any labour?—No, I think I provided the labour myself for that.

29,522. And the tenant repairs the fences, I suppose?—Yes.

29,523. Have you any knowledge of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is there any claim for compensation under that?—No. No difficulty or special case has arisen under that.

29,524. You know of no case of failure to to obtain compensation for unexhausted improvements?—No.

29,525. What is your opinion with regard to tenant right?—I should limit it to a claim for fair compensation for improvements.

29,526. You would not consider a man has any right to dispose of his interest in a holding?—No, I should say emphatically not.

29,527. As to game preserving, do you preserve much game. Have you any complaints about that?—No, we have had no difficulty about that. One of my tenants has the shooting over my small property, and he has held my house, and he has had no difficulty with the other tenants at all about it.

29,528. Have you anything to say about agricultural education?—I think that would be better answered by more competent witnesses.

29,529. Do you know of any proprietor farmers—any freeholders?—One of my own late tenants is now the possessor of a small portion of land that I sold to him myself a few years ago, and I believe he is doing very well upon it.

29,530. You consider there is not much difference in the condition of freeholders and tenants. Which would you say were the better off?—Ceteris paribus, the freeholder.

29,531. What is your opinion of the labourers in this district? Do you think they are well housed—that they are well off?—It is capable of improvement in some instances, but they are fairly well off.

29,532. Their condition has improved?—Yes. The wages of labourers have risen more than two-fold within my own memory from about 6*s.* a week to 12*s.* or 14*s.*

29,533. Is there plenty of labour to be obtained in this district?—I think so. Other witnesses could answer that more competently.

29,534. Are there plenty of cottages—plenty of accommodation for labourers?—Yes.

29,535. Are the cottages good in your opinion?—Many might be improved. A cottage only fetches a very small rent; that is the difficulty.

29,536. Could you state what your expenditure has been on repairs?—About 2,000*l.*, I think, in 48 years.

29,537. Could you give us what your rental is so that we might form some opinion as to the proportion. Of course, that is just as you please?—My small rental in this neighbourhood is about 500*l.* a year.

29,538. Have you ever charged interest on any improvement?—In the case of a watermill power that I set up on one farm, I charge 5 per cent. interest upon that, and it has been paid by the tenant ever since.

29,539. It has always been paid ever since?—It has always been paid ever since.

29,540. Was that put up at the request of the tenant?—It was by mutual agreement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,541. In what year was it, Canon Allen, that this farm which you have spoken of as to the long lease having fallen in became vacant?—It became vacant very soon after the time I came into my property. That was in 1846, and this was a short time after that—about three years after that.

29,542. Then was it a building lease. Had the repairs been upon the tenant previously to that?—Yes, it was an old lease for three lives granted in the course of the last century. The tenant was bound to repair if the landlord found timber for repairs.

29,543. Then it was partially done. Since that time who has done the repairs?—I have.

29,544. And it was advanced shortly after 1846?—It was advanced shortly after 1846.

25,545. Then at that time the rent was raised from 50*l.* to 80*l.*?—It is now raised to 80*l.* It was raised to about 70*l.* then.

25,546. It was raised from 50*l.* to 70*l.* then?—as near as I can say—approximately.

29,547. The landlord then taking upon himself the permanent repairs?—Yes.

29,548. Has the landlord done the permanent repairs since that time?—Yes.

26,549. When was there a further increase in the rent from 70*l.* to 80*l.*?—About 10 years ago, not more than that I think.

29,550. About that time was there any competition for the farm, or was it let to the sitting tenant?—No, it was re-let after the end of the lease.

29,551. To whom; to another tenant, or to the same tenant?—It was re-let to a fresh tenant; two or three tenants in succession they held that small farm in this neighbourhood. But it was not let to anyone of the family.

29,552. Not to the same family?—The family who had previously held it could neither repair the house nor pay the rent, so that I had to take possession of it myself, and then I let it to a fresh tenant.

29,553. And at 70*l.* you found a more satisfactory tenant?—Yes, I am speaking approximately. The rent now is as near as can be 80*l.*

29,554. Can you give me the year in which the increase took place from 70*l.* to 80*l.*?—About 1850 or 1851.

29,555. I mean the increase from 70*l.* to 80*l.*?—That was more recent.

29,556. Can you give me approximately the year?—About 12 or 14 years ago.

29,557. We have it in evidence that the agricultural depression began in about 1879. Can you say whether it was before or subsequently to that?—It was before that to the best of my remembrance.

29,558. Has the 80*l.* been paid regularly since that subject to the abatement you have named?—Yes, subject to the abatement.

29,559. Is it upon that land that the water mill was erected?—That was upon a large farm.

29,560. Have any important improvements taken place on that farm?—I am speaking of the farm that has been raised from 50*l.* to 70*l.* and subsequently to 80*l.*?—No, it is in much the same condition. I had to rebuild the house upon it and some buildings.

29,561. When was the house rebuilt?—In the early part of my tenancy, about 1850 or 1851.

29,562. You rebuilt the house then?—Yes, I rebuilt the house then.

Mr. Grove.

29,563. I think you stated that you sold a small farm to one of the tenants, and he became his own freeholder?—Yes.

29,564. Has it been successful, or does he regret the purchase do you think?—He is in the room and would answer for himself. I think it is remarkably good land, some of the best land in the neighbourhood.

29,565. You spoke about that water arrangement you entered into. Would you mind telling us the costs or thereabouts?—My impression is that the cost was about 80*l.* It was a mutual agreement made beforehand with the tenant, and he paid me 5 per cent, in addition.

29,566. 4*l.* or thereabouts?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,567. You told us that within your recollection wages had been pretty nearly doubled?—Yes, as near as can be, I think.

29,568. That would apply to outside labourers, those not living in the house?—Yes, I have no special experience myself of labourers living in the house. I can state only in general terms the wages of those living in cottages.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

29,569. Would you say in general the labour is the labour of persons living in the house or of those living in cottages?—I think more commonly living in cottages.

29,570. In this neighbourhood?—In this neighbourhood, but other witnesses could tell you that.

29,571. Do you know of many instances of labourers becoming farmers by saving and getting into a little farm in this neighbourhood?—Only on a very small scale, one or two of my own farmers have been labourers, but they occupy small farms of about 10 acres. I remember one instance where one had been a labourer on the property for many years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,572. Are we to understand that the rent was raised from 50*l.* to 60*l.* on that farm in consequence of the erection of a house and building?—Are you speaking of the farm about which I mentioned the raising of the rent from 50*l.* to 80*l.*?—Yes.

29,573. No, in consequence of the rent being very low under the old lease. It was an old lease granted in the last century about 1780, and the fair rent of the farm was felt to be much more than the stated rent on the lease.

29,574. You raised the rent and the lease fell in?—I raised the rent soon after the lease fell in.

29,575. Was this farm which you sold to one of your tenants valued before it was sold?—I bought it by auction myself about 20 years ago, and I sold it to my tenant for exactly the same sum that I bought it for myself. We agreed between ourselves; we did not call anyone to value between us. I sold it for exactly the same as I had given for it; he accepted it at once, and our sale took place on that.

29,576. What was the rental of the farm?—It was about 30*l.* a year. There again I may say my tenant to whom I sold it is here in the room, Mr. Levi Morgan, of Brynglas, Penllan, and he would tell us at once.

29,577. What was the amount it was sold for?—A little over 2,000*l.*

29,578. That would be between 60 and 70 years purchase?—Then I am wrong in my figures, but Mr. Levi Morgan is here, and would give you full information at once. It was to his father I sold it, but he can give you full information on the subject. I am afraid my figures are shaky on that.

29,579. I am afraid they are?—It was about 30 years' purchase.

Lord Kenyon.

29,580. The fact remains that you sold it for exactly what you gave for it?—The fact remains that I sold it for exactly what I gave for it, and there was no difficulty in valuation.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,581. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act made use of in this district?—I believe so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

29,582. Have you had notice from any of your tenants with respect to specific improvements?—No notice in the way of complaint.

29,583. Notice of improvements under the first schedule?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

29,584. Mr. Richard Jones means notice that they wish to improve?—No, I have had no formal notice of that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,585. I suppose the landlords make the permanent improvements themselves?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,586. I did not catch what you said just now with regard to the cottages. Do you let the cottages yourself or the tenant?—I let one cottage with the farm of Penllan, which is paid for by the tenant of the farm. I have one or two detached cottages at Black Aldern, which I let single as cottages.

29,587. What is the rent?—About 2*l.* 5*s.* a year is the general rent for cottages.

29,588. They are not these old thatched cottages. Are they thatched or slate roof?—Mostly slated.

29,589. Have you given your tenants any abatement just lately?—Yes, I have made some small abatements, not such as a rich man can afford to give, but some small abatements.

29,590. Do you often come down among your tenants here?—Yes.

29,591. You are well acquainted with the farms?—Oh, yes.

29,592. Do you think there is so much capital expended now in labour on the farms as there was years ago?—I think that question could be better answered perhaps by other persons more competent. Of course, it has been a depressed time both for landlords and for tenants.

29,593. Have you observed as you have been round the farms whether the fences are kept up as they used to be?—I think very fairly on the whole.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,595. How many farms or holdings have you?—Including small holdings about ten, of principal farms three, and some small holdings, and some of them fields only.

29,596. Do the farms include the cottages for the labourers employed upon the farms?—In one instance only.

29,597. Do your tenants ask for a larger abatement than you have given them?—Partly, but we have settled that without any difficulty.

29,598. Do you say that the farmers in this neighbourhood are hard-working men?—Yes, many of them work as hard as their own labourers.

29,599. Most of them do work, I suppose, more or less?—Yes, most of them.

29,600. What is the ordinary rate of wages for the agricultural labourers here, or would you prefer our asking someone else?—For this neighbourhood I think other witnesses would tell you. In Glamorganshire I think it runs about 14*s.* a week.

29,601. We have had evidence about Glamorganshire, but I daresay you would rather some of the farmers answer that question?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

29,602. I have one or two questions handed in. One from Mr. H. L. Stephen, which is: "You named 4*l.* an acre as your average rental. "Is not the average 1*l.*, and 4*l.* the highest "rental"? I do not think you did say that?—No; I wish it was with all my heart.

29,603. The average is 1*l.*, and 4*l.* is the highest I think you said?—Yes.

29,604. I think you said that was the highest limit, and somewhere about 7*s.* 6*d.* or 10*s.* the lowest limit?—Yes.

29,605. Then these are questions put by Mr. Vincent: "You would have no objection to "sending a copy of your agreement to the "Commission, would you"?—Not the slightest.

29,606. "You are well acquainted with Pembrokeshire, are you not"?—Yes.

29,607. "Can you tell us whether the relations of landlord and tenant are generally "friendly or not"?—I have always found them so.

29,608. "Do you think landlords would spend "money on their lands if a land court were "established"?—I think less so. I think landlords and tenants are quite competent to settle matters between themselves without the need of a middleman.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JAMES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,609. Do you live at Sodston, near Narberth?—Yes.

29,610. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

29,611. You wish to give evidence as to your own farm?—Yes.

29,612. What is the size of your holding?—155 acres.

29,613. And the rent of it?—The present rent is 180*l.*

29,614. Has the rent been raised?—Yes.

29,615. Did your father take the farm in 1869?—Yes.

29,616. Did your father live there long?—He lived there about 18 years.

29,617. Did he take the farm at 180*l.*?—Yes, the first start.

29,618. Did he get a reduction?—Yes.

29,619. When did he get that reduction, and what was it?—After he took the farm the landlord died the Christmas following, and it went into the hands of another gentleman, a Mr. James from Southport, and he applied to him for a reduction, and he had it.

29,620. What year was that?—That was the year he took it, 1867.

29,621. The same year?—Yes, the same year.

29,622. Did he pay the 180*l.* at all?—No, he had it from the Michaelmas.

29,623. Then he did not pay it once?—No.

29,624. What was it reduced to?—To 160*l.*, and an allowance of 40*l.* for manure.

29,625. So that the rent was 120*l.*?—Yes.

29,626. Was it 40*l.* per annum for manure, bone, or something of that sort, to be expended on the farm?—Yes.

29,627. How long did that state of things last?—Until the year 1890.

29,628. Who was the tenant of the farm then?—I was the tenant.

29,629. What happened in 1890?—In the year 1890 the farm was sold, and bought by Mr. Lewis, solicitor, of Narberth.

29,630. What did Mr. Lewis do?—In the year 1891 I had notice to have a new agreement, and also an advance in the rent.

29,631. What was it advanced to?—It was advanced to 180*l.*

29,632. You had been paying 120*l.* before that?—Yes.

29,633. It was advanced back again to the original rent?—Yes.

29,634. Do you know what the sale price of the farm was?—Not for certain. I was told by Mr. Lewis, 6,700*l.* I do not know whether that is correct. I cannot say as to that. I should say there was another farm with that, a farm called Kilrath, and there is a mansion in connexion as well called Sodston.

29,635. Has Mr. Lewis, the solicitor in Narberth, any other property?—Yes.

29,636. Does it adjoin his property?—It does not join there; Kilrath adjoins Sodston Farm, and the Kilrath Farm and the mansion he bought altogether, and the whole cost 6,700*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,637. Mr. Lewis has recently died, has he not?—Yes.

29,638. Your complaint is that you did not get anything for your labour and expenses on the farm?—That is the complaint.

29,639. Did you do much in the way of improving the farm?—Oh, yes; and cultivated it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

29,640. Have you any statement to give us of money expended?—No, no statement of money, only that we laboured there all this time.

29,641. You did not make any more draining improvements, or anything of that sort?—Oh, no; the land was pretty well drained before we had it.

29,642. You simply kept it in a high state of cultivation?—Yes; in fact the place has improved since.

29,643. Therefore it fetched a good price at the sale?—Yes.

29,644. Have you any other statement you wish to make?—No; but I should like to say that they built an addition to the house before we had this new agreement—two rooms down and two rooms up.

29,645. Recently?—Yes; that is, after I had notice to have a rise in the rent.

29,646. Who built it?—Mr. Lewis.

29,647. After he gave you notice he made this addition?—Yes, this addition to the dwelling-house.

29,648. Did you ask him to make it?—Yes, this addition to the dwelling-house.

29,649. Did you ask him to make it?—Yes; the dwelling-house before was a very small, bad house.

29,650. Did you tell him at that time you objected to pay the extra rent?—No. I did not know what the rent would be, only I should have to pay interest for what would be laid out for building. I was not told what the rent or the interest would be.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,651. That is included in the 180*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

29,652. What was the cost of this addition, roughly about?—About 230*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

29,653. You thought your rent was still going to be 120*l.*?—Yes, and a little addition for interest.

29,654. Some 10*l.* or 12*l.* a year?—I should have been satisfied with four or five per cent.

Mr. Grove.

29,655. When this 40*l.* was allowed for manure, that was under an arrangement for you to expend that amount on the land each year?—Yes, we had to produce receipts for 40*l.*

29,656. You did not expend anything upon the farm—you or your father—for permanent improvements. Did you do drainage or buildings?—No.

29,657. Only the general improvements in the land?—Only the improvements to the land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,658. Do we understand that your only complaint is this, Mr. James, that the rent was raised to such a pitch that you could not afford to pay?—Yes, that is it; and it was raised on my own work.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

29,659. That must be qualified to some extent, because you were allowed 40*l.* a year?—Yes, but it was dear at 120*l.* before. It was land adapted for corn. Another thing, Mr. Lewis was the one that helped my father to reduce the rent from 180*l.* down to 160*l.* I have a letter to prove that here.

29,660. When he became a more interested party, he helped to raise it?—Yes, I have the letter.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,661. When your father took this farm was it in pretty good times?—Yes, corn was selling well at the time.

29,662. Is your farm a corn farm?—Yes, it is a corn farm, only we have turned it into grass now, because we had no sale for corn.

29,663. Are you able to make as much money upon the grass land now as you could when you used it for corn when corn was selling well?—No.

29,664. How about labour; does it cost you more for labour now than it did then?—Yes, a good bit, double nearly.

29,665. Have you any difficulty in getting labour?—No, we cannot complain of that in our district.

29,666. Do you keep a dairy?—Yes.

29,667. Do you find any difficulty in getting dairymaids?—Yes, a little difficulty.

29,668. They are not so plentiful as they used to be?—No.

29,669. Do you pay more wages for them now than was paid when your father took the farm?—Yes.

29,670. How much more?—We pay 12*l.* and 13*l.*, and the wages then were 6*l.*

29,671. More than double?—Yes, especially if they are good girls.

29,672. Do you keep labourers or servant boys?—Boys at present.

29,673. How about their wages; have their wages advanced as much?—Yes, quite as much, if not more than double.

29,674. Yet your rent is put back to the old price?—Yes.

29,675. You think you cannot make it out of the land—I mean the 180*l.*?—I cannot say exactly, because the last season has turned out bad.

29,676. Suppose your landlord and you cannot agree, as you say you cannot make it up, and the landlord says if you do not you must leave, would you be satisfied to go?—No, I would not be satisfied to go, because it is rather hard to leave all the labour behind, but it would be quite as well for me to go as to be there.

29,677. Have you any remedy to suggest?—Well, I do not know. We ought to have security of tenure, to have a chance to fight for the place. Now if you make a complaint before the landlords they will tell you to give it up; that is what we get.

29,678. You would not like someone to come in between you and the landlord to try and settle the question?—Oh, yes, I should be quite willing to have that.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,679. Is there much competition for farms in this neighbourhood?—Yes, we very often hear of a dozen going after a farm.

29,680. You have heard of as many as a dozen men wanting to take a farm where it is vacant?—Yes.

29,681. You are still upon this farm as I understand?—Yes.

29,682. Have you paid the increased rent since the alteration was effected?—Yes, I have paid one year.

29,683. Do not answer the question unless you like, but did that year's work pay you, looking at it from a business point of view?—Oh, no.

29,684. You mean to say that during the last year when you have paid this increased rent you have really lost money?—Yes. As I said before I cannot tell exactly; the last season was dry, and I could not exactly tell, but my opinion is that I shall have nothing for myself.

29,685. You know most of the farmers round about you, I suppose?—Yes.

29,686. What do you think their condition has been during the last year or two. Have they upon the whole been losing money upon the present rental?—That is the general complaint when you speak to them.

29,687. People may complain, but what do you think as a man who knows the farming business in this neighbourhood, and have known it for a long time? Is it a well-founded complaint, do you think? Do you think they have really lost money?—Well, I believe they have on the whole. Of course we have some farms that are doing well, because they have good landlords who treat them properly.

29,688. Who make abatements that is to say, or deductions?—Yes.

29,689. Now as to the other farm which Mr. Lewis bought, did he raise the rent upon that?—No.

29,690. What was the extent of that farm?—Somewhere about 100 acres, or something like that, I cannot tell you exactly.

29,691. Did he make any abatement in the rent, or did it remain the same upon the other farm?—That I cannot say.

29,692. Have you any children?—Yes, I have.

29,693. Do they help you in the farm-work?—They are rather young yet.

29,694. How many hired servants have you in the house, on the premises?—As girls do you mean?

29,695. Boys and girls together?—Four.

29,696. Was that the same number that your father started with in 1867? Did he have the same number then, or more?—He had more. He kept two boys and two labourers then, and also two girls in the house.

29,697. He did not farm quite in the same way as you are doing. There was more corn grown then, I suppose?—Yes, there was more labour then.

29,698. Have the wages gone up from 1867 to the present time to your knowledge?—Yes.

29,699. What do you pay your servants now by the year?—Well, 10*l.* Do you mean the girls?

29,700. No, the men?—I pay 21*l.* to the men.

29,701. And 10*l.* to the women?—Yes.

29,702. Do you remember what was paid in 1867?—I could not say exactly that, but I should think about 6*l.* or 7*l.* There was my sister there at the time.

29,703. 6*l.* or 7*l.* for the women servants in 1867?—Yes.

29,704. What were the men servants paid?—About 8*l.* or 10*l.*

29,705. In the Narberth Union, and round where this farm is situate people usually speak Welsh, do they not?—This lower side of Narberth they all speak English, but the upper side they speak Welsh.

29,706. Which side are you?—The north side.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,707. How many of your men are servants?—Two.

29,708. And they live in the house?—Yes, they live in the house.

29,709. Where do they sleep?—They sleep in the house too.

29,710. Is that the usual arrangement in this neighbourhood?—Not always, they sleep out. There is room for the boys, part of the sheds as a rule.

29,711. But not in your case?—Not in my case.

29,712. What sort of shed—is it somewhere near the stables?—Sometimes above the stables.

29,713. Then your servant men spend their evenings sometimes indoors in the house?—Yes.

29,714. But that is not the usual arrangement about there, or not the general arrangement?—Not the general arrangement.

29,715. What do they do generally? They have their beds in the shed; where do they spend their evenings, do you know?—Sometimes they spend their evenings in the house, and at bedtime they go out.

Lord Kenyon.

29,716. Who is your present landlord?—It is a landlady now, Mrs. Lewis.

29,717. The widow of Mr. Lewis?—Yes.

29,718. Have you approached her, and asked for a reduction from her?—Yes. I ought to have said the first half-year I paid I had 10 per cent., and the last half-year was only a very small trifle.

29,719. I have some questions to ask you from Mr. Vincent: "Was the former owner of the "farm related to your father"?—Yes.

29,720. It is the same name I notice?—Yes.

29,721. Was he a near relation?—He was my father's uncle.

29,722. "Are you related to Mr. Lewis"?—The late landlord, do you mean?

29,723. Yes?—No, I am not.

29,724. "Do you not know that the rent of "180*l.* was fixed by an independent valuer, a "Mr. Hughes"; do you know whether that is the case or not?—I was told so; I cannot say more than that.

29,725. "Have you offered to buy the farm"?—Well, I have been inquiring if they would sell it.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,726. You mentioned the name of Mr. Hughes, did he not walk over your farm to value it?—I was told by Mr. Lewis that he did.

29,727. But not with your consent?—But not with my consent.

29,728. You were not aware of his being over it?—No.

29,729. That is rather an unusual thing. Who was this Mr. Hughes?—Mr. Hughes, of Mounton.

29,730. Is he a professional valuer?—That I cannot say, I do not believe he is.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,731. Does it often happen that there is a farm to let in this neighbourhood?—Oh, sometimes very often.

29,732, When there is a farm to let there is generally considerable competition?—Yes.

29,733. Is that competition from farmers' sons or labourers wishing to get a farm, or both?—Farmers and farmers' sons, as a rule.

29,734. Are there many cases of labourers saving money and then getting a farm, and afterwards rising the ladder?—Yes. I could not refer to one straight off, but there are some.

29,735. In your lifetime you remember several such instances in this neighbourhood?—Yes.

29,736. It is an uncommon thing?—No, it is not an uncommon thing.

Mr. Grove.

29,737. I suppose they would be small farmers, would they not?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

The Reverend GEORGE BANCROFT, called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See re-examination on 50th Day.

29,738. Are you a Calvinistic Methodist Minister of Bethesda, East Williamson?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

29,739. You have lived in this neighbourhood as a missionary for 31 years?—Yes.

29,740. You have been a member of the St. Issells School Board for 21 years?—Yes.

29,741. You have some statement you wish to make?—I wish to say, my Lord, that I am not a farmer's representative. It has been stated in a local newspaper that I was to come here to-day as such. I have had no commission to appear in such capacity. I have not the necessary knowledge, if our district from Tenby to Narberth had been represented by farmers, I would not have come here at all. I hope that you will not ask me any very deep questions, because I have not the necessary agricultural knowledge, and if I am led into deep water I shall not be able to swim. What is impressed upon me is that very few farmers come from our district before you, and I think there are reasons to be given for this. One is that they have good landlords, full of practical sympathy, and have no complaints to make. So far as their position as tenant and landlord goes, I think no legislation could improve it; that is with reference to some of them. They suffer but from bad seasons and the low state of prices. Others think not much good will come of the Commission; at any rate not in the near future; we shall have to wait for a long time. I am sure of it that others think that you are limited to a discussion as between landlord and tenants, and some of them are afraid of the landlords. Others look upon the inquiry as dangerous. Those who have complaints to make are afraid to come down because they think they will be marked men. I should like to submit with reference to what Lord Carrington has said, and which you have read this morning, that it is not possible for the Commission to protect the tenants. I submit that the landlord could inflict a wound, perhaps not at present, but in years to come that this Commission could not heal. If you could be approached as one of old, you would find many Nicodemuses and Josephs of Arimathea would come. The farmers look upon coming here to complain of landlords as dangerous as the mice to bell the cat. A tenant must be very bold, or one who has fallen out with his landlord, or in independent circumstances. Then legal rights may be moral wrongs. I submit that a landlord's responsibilities are such, the kind of property he owns is so bound up with the interests and even existence of many that he must exercise his rights with prudence and forbearance, if he does not he injures his fellow creatures in such a way as the possessor of no other property can. This prudence and forbearance has not been exercised in our neighbourhood. Landlords have studied self and no one else. They have injured widows and the poor. In 1871, Sir Pryse Pryse of Gogerddau sold his estate in our district. This comprised 5 farms of 100 acres each or thereabouts; 12 or 13 smaller holdings of from 15 to 40 acres and about 14 cottages, some of these having 2 or 3 acres, some 1, some with gardens only. The tenants had been long on the land, were much attached to their homes, and hoped to make terms with the new landlord. The sale did not take place until August 28th. Though there was only one month to Michaelmas Day the merciless instruction was issued that no widows would be allowed to retain possession of land. Four had to leave, one Hannah Griffiths, of North Park, kept a cow, she lost the land and was obliged to sell her cow. Elizabeth Thomas, of South Hill, cultivated 25 acres; her husband built the cottage, it was but moor land when he took it; they made the hedges and did all. She had a son of 40 years of age, a steady, sober, industrious man, who could and did cultivate the place as well as any farmer in Pembrokeshire, and, yet, because his mother was a widow, and had the place in her name, they could not keep it. Mary Thomas, a neighbour, held 15 acres; her husband built the cottage, and did the same with the land, and she had the same severity meted out to her. Mary Owen, of Moysland, had 25 acres; she kept a labourer and looked after her place, but she too had to leave. They may live in cottages, but not on the land. None of these widows were on the parish before, but, having the means of livelihood taken from them, some of them had no other resource. Elizabeth Thomas died in one month. Mary Owen kept off the parish for a few years, and Mrs. Griffiths was an early recipient. The other Mary Thomas found refuge with her son-in-law. Here, my lord, I wish to say that I wrote to Mr. Vickerman, the new landlord, to say that I would appear here to-day to speak of this, so that his not being present is not my fault. I would emphasise the following, if Mr. Vickerman should reply to-morrow or the next day, that the places were small and such as a widow could control, that in the case of one she kept only a cow, in the case of the other two a labourer was kept on one and the son lived on the other; that widows may be as successful farmers as others. Three of the best cultivated places I know of are controlled by widows.

29,742. Did Mr. Vickerman state any reason for his objection to widows?—No, not that we know of. It was dealt out all round.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,743. What was the inference in the neighbourhood?—That I do not know. I never heard of any inference.

Mr. Grove.

29,744. Was there notice given to every widow upon the estate without exception?—Oh, yes, you have heard from this young man this morning that his grandmother was a widow and that his father was allowed to remain on, but in these four cases they all had to leave.

Lord Kenyon.

29,745. It seems very hard indeed. I was wondering whether he gave any reasons?—I know of no reasons whatever, and I sent to him to-day to come here and state his reasons.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,746. Are these in the same parish?—No, St. Issells and East Williamson.

29,747. Are they contiguous?—Yes.

29,748. Near here?—Yes. I know of three of the best cultivated farms controlled by widows. I know one on the Picton estate and they were dealt with kindly. One who when her husband died was in involved circumstances and yet with industry and care she has freed herself and is making for prosperity. Then I have to say this. The tenants of Sir Pryse Pryse had no leases granted them, but it was felt that tenants would never be interfered with. This feeling was so strong that no less than 14 houses were built by tenants. When the estate was sold no consideration was allowed in respect of these 14 cottages. The tenants put every stone and stick there and did not receive one farthing. William Davies, of Moreton, built a stone structure; he had lived in it 17 years and had to turn out. Joseph Ollin, of Stonybridge, built another; he still lives in it, but the old man must pay and has paid 5*l.* a year since 1871 for the privilege of living in a cottage he built and paid for. To be fair I wish to state in connexion with this cottage, there is quite an acre and a quarter of land, so that I should think that the value of the land would be 2*l.* and that would apportion the 2*l.* that he really does receive in value and 3*l.* as the portion of the cottage. Mary Owen's husband built four, she lost them all; she was allowed to live in one, but had to pay 4*l.* a year. Though for the last 10 years of her life she was on the parish yet she paid her rent.

29,749. Are they built out of the waste of the manor?—No, on the farms. It was felt once on Sir Pryse's land they would never be interfered with, and this grew to an assurance. They built, they would not trouble the landlord, he was a very good landlord, and they only wished that they had another like him. Mr. Norris, of Rhode Wood Lodge, built one for his labourer which he likewise had to surrender. This was so in the case of 14. Not a groat was given to them. Then as to judicial rents. If we had only the good old-fashioned landlords there would be no call for such legislation, but we have them now who answer nearer to Shylock. The rents of many farms were assessed to meet the very good times. I submit if a landlord demands the same rent in adverse as in good times he reaps a benefit, as one can certainly live cheaper now than in 1871, when things were so very high. I can see nothing fairer than that men who understand the nature of the soil and know what profit it could yield under ordinary circumstances should say what a man can pay.

On this estate of which I have spoken some of the rents were raised double, and one even four times the amount to what it was under Sir Pryse Pryse. I wish to call the attention of the Commission to this, that the rural parts are thinning very alarmingly, and I think this is bad both for town and country. For instance, St. Issells in 1881 had a population of 2,000, and in 1891 it had fallen to a little over 1,700. Begelly, where I minister every Sunday, is a parish of not more than 500 or 600, and the last 30 years we reckon 28 cottages have been permitted to tumble down and only two have been built in their place. I do not mean that only two houses have been built. Two or three good farmhouses have been built instead of the little dilapidated houses which used to be. What I mean to say is we have in Begelly 26 fewer cottages now than 30 years ago. With regard to legislation needed to bring the people back or prevent more going, I would like to see the two great parties in the State sink their differences for a session or two and do something to save the people. There are many with whom there is but a step between them and ruin. Then as to burthens being more equally divided, in St. Issells the landlords receive from 500*l.* to 600*l.* a year ground rent, from which they contribute not one farthing to local burthens. One builds a house. Until he built it the land was not worth more than a shilling. By the capital of another the land is raised in value from 1*s.* to 2*l.* and 3*l.*; in one case, in Saundersfoot, it is raised to 8*l.* The rate collector goes to one; demands out of his rent 3*s.* 4*d.* in the pound, and now with parish councils it will be 4*s.* in the pound. If one rent must pay to the poor and to local burthens, why not the other? Every one who is benefited by a property should help to carry the burthens of that district. If the landlords of St. Issells paid their fair share of rates they would pay 120*l.* a year more than they do. I have great faith in "3 acres " and a cow." I have observed as regards those persons who have a little land attached to their homes, it enables them to eke out a living; you will seldom meet with abject poverty. If a person is idle and aimless, of course no legislation would aid him. Such surroundings are of great advantage to one of industrious habits. Again, it acts as a magnet and keeps a person to his home; a very few of these leave even in properous times, when high wages are given in Glamorganshire. Then again leases are too short. The landlords do not build. I know on the Picton estate they build a public-house or a hotel (I suppose that would be the respectable name for it), but I know of no other house that the Picton estate has built. They do not build, and they give no encouragement to others. If you spend 300*l.*, the Picton estate will give 99 years. Mr. Vickerman will give you no more than 60. I think Begelly estate gives no more than 40. A great deal of labour is lost to the community. Then, as to whether wages can be paid and present rents paid, I am assured it is not possible. I know one young man who is on a large farm, but his father cannot afford to pay him wages, and if he were to stay there for years he would not be recompensed; he is determined to go into the police force. Another farmer has two sons on the farm; one is in a good situation, and sends money home to pay the rent. There are young men who never receive wages. There are farmers who have to sink money every year. It cannot be made out of the farms. Those who have no capital, unless rents are reduced, will soon be brought to absolute poverty. Then with regard to the Ground Game Act, this is not honestly carried out. The landlords are averse to the tenants using guns. I know a case of a gamekeeper making a tenant to understand that it was not agreeable. The landlords preach loyalty to the law when it suits them. When, on the contrary, it does not agree with them, no one is more ready to break it. They say nothing themselves, but the gamekeeper knows what they wish. Of course the tenants may do so if they choose, but they fear the consequences. As to cottage dwellings, I should like to say: Mr. Vickerman thinks they are nice, comfortable, homes. In the "Tenby Observer," a local newspaper, he calls attention to them. I am quite the other way of thinking; they consist chiefly of two rooms only. In some of them as many as 10 live. Where they sleep I am at a loss. The windows of most are too small; the floors often damp and broken. They are answerable for much of the sickness. I should like some of the Commissioners just to come into our neighbourhood, and see the kind of cottages, and whether you think they are such comfortable ones as Mr. Vickerman has made out.

29,750. Do you happen to know what is the rent of those cottages?—About 4*l.*

29,751. What would be the expense of building it, if one put up such a cottage now?—I do not know. I should think it would be dear at 30*l.* I would not like to give 30*l.* for a good many of them that I could show you.

Mr. Grove.

29,752. Do you mean to say that the cost of building a cottage would be about 30*l.*?—I do not know. I cannot say. I have had to do with buildings too, but not of that kind.

29,753. There is no upstairs. It is all on the ground?—Yes, no upstairs at all, and only a mortar floor.

Lord Kenyon.

29,754. Surely there are no such cottages built now?—Yes, that is just what I am complaining of.

Adjourned for a short time.

Lord Kenyon.

29,755. You cannot tell me who replaced these widows in these cottages and farms?—Yes.

29,756. Was it men employed in Mr. Vickerman's works or collieries or anything of that sort?—No. With reference to Hannah Griffiths, of North Park, Mr. David Thomas, a farmer of North Vatson, took that land. With reference to Elizabeth Thomas and Mary Thomas, of Upper South Hill and Lower South Hill, that was taken by Mr. David Thomas, another farmer of a bigger tenantry, in addition. The cottages were let out to labouring men.

29,757. Minus the land?—Minus the land. With Mary Owen, of Moysland, that was let to a new tenant, one Martin Lawrence.

29,758. It seems hard that these widows should be turned out of their places I think without any sufficient reason Is there any demand for what are called allotments, or is it mostly grazing land?—There is no demand for working men's allotments with us,

29,759. They would like, you think, a certain amount of grass land?—They think that one acre is too much to cultivate with the spade, and too little with the plough.

29,760. And in fact a cow would be very useful?—Yes, I think so, a great deal more so.

29,761. Two or three acres of grass land sufficient to keep a cow?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

29,762. They have gardens attached to these cottages?—Yes, as a rule good gardens.

29,763. Do they make use of them?—Oh, yes.

29,764. Do you think there is any room for improvement in the way of poultry farming or fruit farming, or anything of that sort?—I should think so.

29,765. They might make a little money that way, you think?—I should think so.

29,766. Is there any bee keeping in the neighbourhood?—Not worth speaking of.

29,767. Sometimes it can be made profitable. Do you think it could be in this district?—I should think so.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,768. Can you tell us whether Mr. Vickerman requires any service from his tenants besides rents that the widows could not perform?—No, he requires none that I know of.

29,769. Does he still insist upon the same treatment?—Oh, no.

29,770. It was only just when he came into the estate?

29,771. Any who become widows now are not turned off?—No.

29,772. The evidence you have given with regard to all the cottages is such as you are personally acquainted with?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

29,773. It is not hearsay evidence?—No, I was there at the time.

29,774. You have told us the rents were advanced very much when Sir Pryse Pryse sold these farms. Could you give us the amount of rise?—Not accurately, but I know it was considered severe.

29,775. Could you give us any estimate as to the value of the cottages on the estate, and the amount of money which the tenants must have lost?—Such an estimate as mine would be of no value. Some of them were good stone structures, slated roofs.

29,776. Were any of these cottages round Begelly that have tumbled down built at all on the Commons?—No.

29,777. You say that the people are going from the rural districts. What remedy do you suggest for that?—I would like to see—of course it must be a slow growth, a little land attached to each workman's cottage. Of necessity it must take years to bring about, but I should like to see the tendency in that direction.

29,778. Do you think the children brought up in these cottages with three acres and a cow are more thrifty as a rule than those who have no land?—Mr. Norris, a gentleman in our neighbourhood, and myself spent an afternoon together on this subject. He and I had been there for many years, and we knew almost everyone, so that we could observe that where there is a home with these three acres you will not find the poverty as you will where a person must live on bare wages.

29,779. The children as a rule are brought up to habits of early rising, and doing a little work when they are very young?—Yes

29,780. I find at the present day, in our village anyhow, that they are kept in school until they are 14 or 15, and it is rather a difficult matter to get them to work when the time comes?—I find it the other way, that education rather encourages industry. They are compelled to go to school early now, and they pass their 4th or 5th Standard by the time they are 10 or 11 years of age, and then they leave school.

29,781. If you come to our schools you will find they are children advanced in years, that is to say 13 or 14?—Here they get through the standards by the time they are 11 years of age.

29,782. We have them 14 and 16, I am sorry to say?—We have not.

29,783. Some schools are better than others?—Yes, our exemption standard is the fifth.

29,784. With regard to the two-roomed cottages did you say there were as many as nine people lived in the two-roomed cottages?—Yes, in some cases, and of both sexes.

Lord Kenyon.

29,785. At the present day?—Yes, my Lord, if you will come round I will show you some.

29,786. I should be sorry to see them?—Well, it is so.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,787. Has it never been brought to the notice of the medical officer of the district?—He is paid for looking into it.

29,788. Well, a good many people are paid, but does he see into it, do you think?—It is a well-known fact.

29,789. That there are such places?—Yes. They obey that command with us, "Be fruitful "and multiply."

29,790. Do you consider the evidence given by Mr. John Hilling this morning to be correct evidence?—Yes, I should think so.

29,791. You heard it?—Yes.

29,792. You think it is quite correct?—I agree with it every word. I think it was very unfair for Mr. Vickerman to go to this man's little colliery he earning a couple of shillings a day, and he with his output at his collieries to envy that poor man. I think it was a very sad thing.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,793. Do you think there is a genuine demand for small holdings of about three acres?—I do.

29,794. What is the position of things in your neighbourhood. Are there facilities for a labourer to rise to the position of a fairly good tenant farmer. Is there a ladder for him to mount. Are there small farms?—I should think not. Suppose he is handicapped with a family I should think there is not a ladder.

29,795. You think there are not sufficient small farms varying in size from three up to seven or eight acres, or up to 15 or 20 acres?—He cannot get them.

29,796. They are very limited in number, I suppose?—Yes.

29,797. Do you think there would be more demand for small farms if they were to be had?—Yes, I am sure of it. If there is a small holding to let of three or four acres, it is looked upon as a prize of life to secure it.

29,798. Do you not think that the Local Government Bill will remedy this state of things to some extent?—No, I do not. I must say honestly that I am afraid of the farmer with reference to the Parish Councils Bill.

29,799. You say in your statement you would convert Common land into allotments?—Yes, I would do that. There is a Common with us of quite 300 acres.

29,800. Do you think it would be just to the farmer to come and take his best land to convert it into allotments?—No, I wish to be just to farmers, and all round. I do not go into that kind of legislation. I say the thing must have slow progress, but I would take Commons, and uncultivated land. If land is not cultivated labour is lost, and the country is poorer.

29,801. There is some land it would not pay to cultivate. Of course, you would not bother with land of that sort?—I believe it would pay.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

29,802. You think all uncultivated land would pay?—I say that. I was afraid, in coming here, that you would lead me into deep water, but I think that supposing a person knew that he would not be turned out, and he was an industrious man, with his life before him—there may be exceptional cases—but I believe in the most cases it would pay. A tenancy from year to year would never pay. Where a man felt security he could work, and his labour in the soil would not be taken from him. I think it would pay, but I may be mistaken.

29,803. Do you think it would be better to make him a small tenant or convert him into a peasant proprietor?—If he was a small tenant—

29,804. With security of tenure?—Yes, that I think would be more advantageous.

29,805. You say, I think, in your evidence, that farmers at present are farming at a loss?—Oh, yes.

29,806. What is the explanation you have to offer. Why do they not give up their farms?—Well, what can they do. They cannot go and live in the moon.

29,807. They could go as labourers, could they not?—I put it to you, could a man 50 years of age go as a labourer after he has been on his own farm, it may be for 20 or 30 years. I do not think he could do it.

29,808. He would get something by labouring, but he seems, according to your statement, to be going through his capital by farming?—None of us like to go down the ladder; it is up-hill we like to go. I wish to say, standing in the public capacity I do with reference to Vatson Moor, without a doubt I would be blamed were I not to tell the whole truth with reference to this matter. I can show no links, with reference to it, but since this place has been given up, another tenant of Mr. Vickerman has taken it. He did not go into this cottage to live, but the public found one morning that the roof was on fire. It was repaired. Then the person who took the holding put a cottager in this house. He brought a plough there and ploughed, and on going for it the next morning he found it was gone. The tenant who lived there says he heard people digging at his foundation at night as if they were taking the foundation stones out. He told me so last week. This man got frightened, he left and took another cottage. Then one of the tenants on the Picton estate, I think, applied to the Picton authorities whether he might give up his holding at Wooden to go there; his name is George Hilling. He went there, and he wanted to plough the land, and a man brought his plough in a cart and did some ploughing one day. The next morning, on going to continue his work, he found the wheel of his cart and the plough gone.

29,809. What is the place?—This place is Vatson Moor, which Hilling first gave evidence about. Of course, I come here in a public capacity to state fairly all round, and without speaking of any links. It may be said to me by Mr. Vickerman that I came here to tender evidence and did not tell all, therefore I told those whom it concerned if I came here I should relate all that I knew.

29,810. Supposing these farmers who have been farming at a loss were to give up their farms, do you think they would be taken?—Oh, yes, people will take farms if they are ruined—and they do so.

29,811. What is your explanation of it?—I do not know. There are plenty of them here present, and they had better explain it themselves. To me it is a mystery, but they will do it. They will take land, although they know it will not pay.

29,812. You find the competition very keen? Severely.

29,813. Have you any remedies to suggest to meet the competition?—No, you put a question which is too deep for me.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,814. Following up Mr. Richard Jones's questions, I understand you to give the reason that a farmer does not like to descend to the position of a labourer, very naturally. Is it not a fact that supposing the labourer were earning his 14*s.* or 15*s.* a week, that the farmer, although he may have found he has been farming at a loss, after having paid for his living, really is earning a great deal more than 14*s.* or 15*s.* a week on his farm?—No, that could not be, for I hear from many of them that they are losing year by year.

29,816. It seems to me the answer you give is perfectly natural, that a farmer would not willingly descend to the position of the labourer. He hopes to do better, although he may not in the result of any particular year do better. That leads me to another question. Would you be in favour of anything which would entice the farmers to stay on longer as farmers in their holdings, if with superior intelligence or superior thrift or enterprise they would better themselves in other ways, say, for instance, by going into counties where there were other trades besides farming?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

29,817. I do not understand your answer then. Do you mean you would be in favour of anything which would encourage them to stay as farmers?—Yes, I would.

29,818. Will you explain why?—I think it would be a sad thing for our country to lose the farming class. I consider them the most useful of all.

29,819. There might be two countries, one of which, by a sort of hot-house legislation, increased the farming population of a nation until it was too thick, and you might have another country which did not do that, and therefore whose sons went into other enterprises, or perhaps emigrated. Would you not say that the second country was the better of the two?—I think the towns will always give attractions for decreasing the population in country places. There are certain persons who will always be drawn towards the towns, but very few are drawn towards the country from the towns. I think there would be that danger which you intimate.

29,820. It must be manifest to anyone, I think, that as you decrease the cost of production, a smaller fraction of the people are necessary in any particular trade, for instance, in growing corn, and therefore no nation could be prosperous which kept too much of its population in the position of corn producers?—I think there is no danger in that way. Some are sure to go to the towns. The country places are too monotonous for certain classes of men.

29,821. You think the natural tendency to towns is sufficiently strong to drain off that portion of the farming population which is unnecessary?—Yes.

29,822. I suppose in your district these farms are held from father to son for many generations?—Yes, I think it is a rule on the Picton estate to keep it to the family if there are no serious objections.

29,823. Is it not also found of necessity, in order to keep that up, if the old families are to retain the farms, that the number of farms to let must be very small?—Yes.

29,824. And the younger sons must almost of necessity migrate or go to some other employment?—Yes.

29,825. Then returning to the question I asked you before, you would not consider it was a good thing, by what one may call hot-house legislation, to keep the competition for these farms too great?—I do not say that.

29,826. You have admitted yourself that you wonder why people should have this land hunger—why they should go into farms when they almost know they will not pay. You state that?—Yes, I state that.

29,827. That being so, does it not show that there is either a want of intelligence or want of knowledge or enterprise to drain off sufficiently quickly those who now are wanting farms, but who ought to be doing something else?—I cannot explain why it is that everybody likes land. It is labour, and labour in a great measure without profit; but still they like it.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

29,828. In the first place it provides them with a home?—Yes.

29,829. And a home with much more enjoyment and much more freedom than the ordinary labourer's home?—Yes.

29,830. So that there are many things which would entice a man to become a farmer, I think one may say. But what I mean is this. In asking for any legislation would you, looking at it from your public position, say, taking your village, that in the long run its interests would be helped by any legislation which would tempt people to cling too closely to the land, and prevent them using other opportunities of making a living, which perhaps would be better for them?—I am certainly in favour of multiplying those who live on the land. I am greatly in favour of it. I believe where persons are attached to the land, that if it can be made profitable there the greatest loyalty is found.

29,831. One question about the labourers and the three acres and a cow, which you said you were in favour of. Have you any instance in which, instead of their having the three acres in a ring fence, they join together and have a field, three or four of them, and have their dozen cows on it?—No.

29,832. Would that not be the easier thing to bring about what you wish than to divide it into small allotments of three acres?—I should say not. I never heard that view advanced before, but taking a momentary glance at it I should think not. One man's cow might eat more than another's.

29,833. We had an instance the other day of a case in which a field was let to a certain number of labourers. About four acres were allowed, if I recollect aright, to each cow, and they were charged so much a year for putting their cows in, but they were limited to a certain number. We were told that answered extremely well. I ask whether it would not be an easier way to do it than each person having his own land?—I have never seen a practical proof of it.

29,834. You consider the three acres and a cow is a better thing to go in for than arable land, as I understand you?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

29,835. Do I gather from you that you consider the land, generally speaking, could carry more labour on it than it has at the present day?—Yes.

29,836. Advantageously?—Yes.

29,837. You speak for a certain district, because no tenant farmers, or very few, are coming to give evidence from that particular district?—Yes.

29,838. Is there a general disinclination to come forward and give evidence. Do we gather that?—It is one thing for a person to think, and another thing for a person to prove. I think that the tenantry in our district know that the landlords do not want them to come.

29,839. Do I understand that they do not come because there are no grievances that they wish to bring before us, or that they think there is a general feeling that it would be better for them not to come?—I am sure of it, that they think it would be better for them not to come.

29,840. As to the cases where those widows had notice to quit, you quote one case where there was a son 40 years of age, and of course he could do everything that was absolutely necessary for the farm, so that it was no detriment in any sense to have that farm let to a widow. You cannot say, of course, whether those facts were brought before the new purchaser of the land?—That I can say.

29,841. That it was brought prominently to his knowledge?—Yes, by the son himself. The place can be seen. It was one of the best cultivated places in the locality, and the man went to the landlord and stated it.

29,842. And he had cultivated it and brought it up to that state?—They hedged it in. It was nothing but moorland when his father went there, and they hedged it in and built a cottage and did all.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,843. You have not heard of any landlords in this district who have intimated to the tenants that they were quite at liberty to come before this Commission, have you? You have not heard anything of that sort?—Well, I would rather not be asked.

29,844. Have you heard of any landlords who have intimated to their tenants that they would be willing for them to come, or that they were at liberty to come. We have heard that that has been done in some parts of Wales?—Will you put that question again?

29,845. That the landlords have intimated to their tenants that they were quite free to come before this Commission?—No. There has been no intimation of the sort.

29,846. You have not heard of any landlord having done so?—No; nothing of that sort.

29,847. With regard to the plots of ground you spoke about just now; I do not think you mentioned the Small Holdings Act. Has that been taken into account at all. Have you paid any attention to that?—I have not read the Act. I am very hazy over it.

29,848. It is different from the Allotments Act?—Yes. That is where they must find one-fifth of the purchase-money, I believe—and that would be a difficulty in the way—and to stock it. Then another difficulty would be that there must be willingness on the part of the landlord as well as on the part of the tenant. Well, those are insuperable difficulties.

29,849. So far as you understand it, it is not workable here?—I have seen no proof of it as yet.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,850. To go back to the year 1871, with reference to the sale of Sir Pryse Pryse's estate, I think you told us that in the case of 14 tenants the houses had been sold?—Fourteen houses or 14 cottages, because in the case of one tenant he owned four.

29,851. Fourteen cottages, not 14 owners?—Quite so.

29,852. Can you tell us how long those cottages had been built?—Yes, I think I can tell pretty well. In the case of William Davies, of Moreton, he had been a tenant for 11 years, and in the case of Mr. Norris, of Rhode Wood, now, it had been built not more than five or six years—that is, five or six years before 1871.

29,853. Who bought them. Did Mr. Vickerman buy them all?—It was bought with the estate.

29,854. Was the estate sold in one lot?—In two lots, Moreton and Trevaine. One gentleman bought the whole lot.

29,855. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not.

29,856. That has been passed since those days?—Yes.

29,857. You cannot offer any opinion as to whether that has worked satisfactorily and prevented the evil?—No.

29,858. With regard to those widows who received notice to quit, was that confined to the year 1871, immediately after the sale, or has it continued since?—Oh no, it has not continued since.

29,859. In regard to competition for land in your district, you have told us that it has been severe?—Yes.

29,860. We also heard yesterday that it was "undue"; that is to say, there were people who were connected with Government places who applied for land, such as dockyard labourers and dockyard people?—We do not find it so with us.

29,861. It might be severe, but it would not be undue?—No, it would not be undue.

29,862. It was there called an undue competition. Then again, coming to the agricultural labourers' wages, I suppose they are paid weekly or fortnightly?—No.

29,863. How often are they paid?—I think with us—we have very few what we may call agricultural labourers—they are paid by the year.

29,864. Then they would live in the house with the employer?—Yes.

29,865. Are there many agricultural labourers living in labourers' cottages?—No, not with us.

29,866. Not many?—Not many.

29,867. I think you said you would like to see them increased, that the population was thinning alarmingly?—Yes.

29,868. And that there were fewer cottages and people on land than used to be the case?—Yes.

29,869. I think you said legislation was needed to keep the people on the land?—Yes.

29,870. And you would like to see it?—Yes, in that direction.

29,871. What kind of legislation would you like to see in regard to that?—Of course I take greater interest in the labourers. I would like to see the labourer's condition improved. I have great faith in the three acres and a cow.

29,872. That would imply a house as well for them to live in?—Yes.

29,873. With whose money do you think that that house ought to be built?—I should like—well, this is just what I was afraid of, Sir John, that you would lead me into deep water.

29,874. Do you think it should be the landowner, or the farmer, or the State?—The State. I think it could be done safely with good security if 50 years were given to repay the State.

29,875. Then you went on to tell us that you thought the country life was too monotonous for some men, and that they migrated off to the towns for the sake of society and other comforts?—I mean to say that I think that would be one preventitive against over-population in country districts, that we have to live a very monotonous life, and unless one is fond of books or something of that kind, he will find it very dull in the winter.

29,876. I suppose the attraction to the towns and the works district of Glamorganshire and other parts is on account of the wages?—Yes, the wages are sure to drain.

29,877. That is one attraction, and the other attraction is the society obtained by going to these places?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,878. One or two questions upon the point you were making as to the reason why so few tenant farmers have come before us yesterday and to day. I understand you to say that they are afraid to come forward?—Yes, I know it.

29,879. That is to say that even if they come forward and state simply what is the truth, they still fear that they may receive notice to quit on some pretext or other at a future time?—I do not know whether it goes so far as that, but I am sure that it would be disturbing the kindly relations between the landlord and tenant, but whether they would go so far as to give notice I cannot say. I hope that some would be too gentlemanly for it, but some I know would not be.

29,880. I was struck with this, that you said upon the whole the landlords in this neighbourhood were very good landlords?—I did not say upon the whole. I said some were good landlords, and we have some very good landlords who are willing for the tenants to live at their cost, and when a landlord will do that I think he is a very good landlord.

29,881. The reason I ask the question is this: it struck me there was some inconsistency between the statement that the landlords are very good landlords, and at the same time that the tenants are afraid they will receive notice to quit if they come forward to speak before us?—I say some are good landlords, but even those would rather have this Commission boycotted; I am sure of it.

Lord Kenyon.

29,882. With regard to that, you heard the letter I read out, I suppose?—Yes, but I maintain, my Lord, that you cannot give protection.

29,883. I do not mean that. I mean the letter I read out from the Association, saying that they did not by any means wish to boycott the Commission?—Even landlords have one voice for the public, but another for private.

29,884. I cannot look into their inner minds, but I understand they express the truth in that?—I am sure of it.

29,885. You mean the Association cannot speak for everybody?—Yes.

29,886. It speaks for its members?—Yes. If there was the willingness and the earnestness on the part of landlords for opinion to be fairly represented, and if they took as much trouble to get farmers here as they do to get farmers to the poll, there would be plenty of them here to-day.

29,887. I know it has occurred to me very often whether it might not seem intimidation if it was put the other way. I know in my own case (and the Commission is coming into my part of the world), it has occurred to me, shall I ask them to give evidence or not. Supposing I ask them to give evidence, they might think they would not like to offend, and they must give evidence such as I would like. On the other hand, if I leave the matter entirely open, and say nothing about it, but trust to their sense of what they know of my character, it might be the better way to do it. You see the difficulty. I can see that view might occur to many landlords?—I can say nothing of you, my Lord, but if the landlords of our district chose to have their tenants come here to give evidence, they could give permission, and they would be here at once.

29,888. Would it not be some intimidation to them if the landlord were to say "Go and "give evidence." Would not the tenant perhaps say, "I must give such evidence as the "landlord would like"?—I do not think so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,889. Has any landlord within your knowledge publicly stated that his tenants are at perfect liberty, so far as you are concerned, to come and give evidence?—No, not one, and I live there, and mix with the farmers.

Lord Kenyon.

29,890. Possibly it may be for the reason I have stated?—It may be.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,891. There are two points upon that, that they not only might come, but they are at perfect liberty to do as they like?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

29,892. You think they would come if that had been said?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,893. Your evidence is, that the insecurity of the tenure is such that whatever is done by the landlord, the tenant feels at his heart he may prejudice his pecuniary interest?—Yes, I have been told that dozens of times, when it was known that this Commission was going to sit.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,894. Do you think that the landlords want to quarrel with their tenants in these days?—Well, they do not want these sore points brought up.

Mr. Griffiths.

29,895. I am pleased to hear you say that we have so many good landlords in this neighbourhood, and I quite endorse that opinion, but you have given us a somewhat inconsistent account. You have given us an account of something which looks rather Irish, carrying away cart wheels and ploughs, and burning houses?—Not burning houses, burning a house.

29,896. Burning a house anyhow. I should have thought you would have taught them better morals up in that neighbourhood. I am quite surprised. Do you consider that it is the public feeling of the neighbourhood that this man Hilling had been injured by taking the farm away from him. Was it in consequence of that?—I should like to answer for myself that I think so. I would not say that the Hillings were without fault, but I think the quarrel began, in an unfair way by a gentleman; that he had no more right to go to this poor man's colliery and dictate to him, than the poor man had a right to go to his colliery and dictate to him. Therefore the quarrel was begun by Mr. Vickerman.

29,897. Are you aware that labourers in the present day will not cultivate land which is growing gorse and that sort of thing, if given to them rent free?—No, there is no such case with us.

29,898. I have it upon my own farm, and have offered the land for three years free, without any rent, if they would only clear it as I did, and not one would accept it?—I wish you would offer it to me then.

29,899. You are welcome. I will give you an acre of it. Is it not a fact that many tenants will take farms, knowing at the very time that they are too dear, but they are in hopes of some day being able to pay the rent?—That is the only reason I can give. I cannot understand any other reason.

29,900. Did any of these tenants purchase some of the plots when the land was sold?—No, they had not the opportunity.

29,901. Then you consider that very much of the capital belonged to the tenants and to the labourers which was then put into the pocket of the landlord?—Yes, that is it.

Lord Kenyon.

29,902. I have some questions put in by Mr. Vincent, 'Were there not collieries in or near "Begelly parish 20 or 30 years ago? Were "not the cottages now disused occupied to some "extent by colliers?"—Collieries?

29,903. Yes?—No, not since I am there.

29,904. In or near. You said there were 26 cottages less than there had been. Were some of the cottages occupied by colliers?—Yes, of course they were.

29,905. Did collieries cease to exist?—There was a small colliery at Shipping which employed a few, but there is quite work enough now, and more colliers would come into our neighbourhood now if there were cottages for them. It is not owing to the shutting up of a small pit that these cottages have been allowed to tumble down.

29,906. Were any of them occupied by farm labourers before?—No.

29,907. Never?—No. I cannot speak of every one, but in the main they would be colliers' cottages.

29,908. "Do you say that there is any demand "for cottages on the part of the Picton Castle "estate which you know"?—That workmen would be willing to go there to live, do you mean?

29,909. The question is, "Do you say that "there is any demand for cottages on the part "of the Picton Castle estate which you "know"?—Which way shall I answer that?

29,910. Do you know of any demand for cottages on that part of the estate?—On the part of people?

29,911. Yes?—I do.

29,912. You know that there are people who wish to have cottages there?—Yes, I do.

29,913. Agricultural labourers?—No, colliers, and in the case of some agricultural labourers. I would very much like to show the Commission some of the wretched cottages in which these people are obliged to live, and no doubt they would like to live in other parts.

29,914. Is that on the Picton Castle estate?—Yes, some of them are on the Picton Castle estate.

29,915. "Do you mind telling me how and "when you gave notice to Mr. Vickerman of "your intention to come here"?—I wrote a letter to Mr. Vickerman last Thursday to this effect, that I intended to appear before the Commission, and that my evidence would be of such a nature that I thought he would like to be here to answer, and that I did not like to come without being open and above board.

29,916. "Do you know anything about the "conditions of sale under which Mr. Vickerman "bought. Have you ever see them"?—No.

29,917. Do you not think that an intimation by landlords to their tenants such as Professor Rhŷs suggests would have amounted to a claim to greater authority than landlords can claim to possess. Would it not amount to giving men leave to do what they have, an absolute right to do already?—Well, I know this, that the delicacy of feeling is such as a rule between a tenant and landlord that there is no one on earth that he is more afraid of than the landlord. It may be laughed at and sneered at, but I am sure it is right.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,918. Even if he has a good landlord?—Yes, even if he has a good landlord.

Mr. Grove.

29,919. Do you mean to include agents as well as landlords in that, generally speaking?—Yes, indeed I rather emphasise it with regard to agents.

Lord Kenyon.

29,920. "Do you mean to say that Sir Charles "Philipps, Baron de Rutzen, Captain Brook, "Captain Allen, or Mr. Beynon, are unwilling "that their tenants should come forward"?—I know nothing of the last four. I know of Sir Charles Philipps, and all I can say is I can repeat what I have said, that so far as I know Sir Charles has given no intimation, either himself or through his agent, that he would like his farmers to appear here. That is all I can say.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

29,921. You could not say whether he was willing or unwilling?—No, all I can say is what I have heard from the farmers themselves. I have had much talk with them with reference to this Commission, and I have heard over and over again from their own lips that they are afraid to come. I can therefore give no other evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,922. You live at Oaklands, Begelly?—Yes.

29,923. You wish to give evidence as to your own case?—Yes.

29,924. Is this your statement?—Yes.

29,925. I will ask the Secretary to read it for you.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"In answer to the question as to whether there has been, or still is, anything in the form of tenant right or good will paid for by an incoming to an outgoing tenant on estates in my district over and above the customary valuation for unconsumed crops, unexhausted fodder, or manure, I say that the following is my own case: I lived at a farm called Moneybank, of 96 acres, 63*l.* rent, in the parish of Coedcanlas, in this county of Pembrokeshire. I improved it much by cleaning, manuring, fallowing, laying down with seed, &c., but was turned out without any compensation. I began to take steps to recover compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act; but seeing the determined attitude of the agent, I was advised to withdraw, as the law costs would probably be more than the amount recovered if in full. So I thought prudent to drop it, and leave the fruit of my labours and money to others. Then upon the heading of religious and political opinions in answer to the question which is put: 'Do you know of any cases 'of evictions from farms for political or religious 'reasons?' I say I was asked sometime after I had entered on the tenancy to sign an agreement with stringent clauses as to repairs. No mention of any agreement was made at the time I took the farm. I said I was willing to sign the agreement if he would put the place in repair first, that I would undertake to deliver it up in that state when I left. This he refused to do. I refused to sign without. I had notice to quit as the consequence. But the real cause was I believe political. The case created much public notice at the time, about eight years ago."

29,926. Have you a copy of your agreement here?—No; it was taken back.

29,927. Do you remember what the clauses were which you objected to?—Not particularly; only it included everything.

29,928. Everything of what nature?—From a pane of glass to all the repairs on the farm.

29,929. You had to repair everything?—Yes.

29,930. That was the clause that you objected to. Was there any other clause?—All the clauses were objected to with the exception of one; but that one was crossed out.

29,931. What grounds have you for saying that you think the real reason was political?—There was a vestry meeting held in the neighbourhood, and friends sent to tell me: "Do not "attend that vestry, or else you will have "notice;" but I did attend, and it was the only vestry meeting I attended in my life. I happened to be the speaker on one side, and the agent the speaker on the other side, and in a very short time, that is actually after that, the copy of the agreement was sent to me, and the very first Michaelmas after the copy was sent to me I had a notice.

29,932. What was the vestry meeting about?—School rates.

29,933. Is there a school board in the district?—No.

29,934. Did you wish to establish a school board—was that it?—I do not live in the neighbourhood; I live 10 miles from there now.

29,935. I mean to say when you attended the vestry I suppose you lived in the neighbourhood?—I lived in the neighbourhood.

29,936. Then was it a question of establishing a school board or not?—No, it was a question of rate to support the National School.

Professor Rhys.

29,937. That would be a voluntary rate?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

29,938. I do not quite see what reference this has to tenant right. You say that you did not recover compensation under the Act?—No.

29,939. You were advised to withdraw. Were you advised by a solicitor or by whom?—Oh, by friends that knew more about farming, and knew more about the Act than I knew.

29,940. Did the agent say your case was a good one?—Yes.

29,941. Had you kept the accounts?—I had them then. Of course I have destroyed them after I have been upset eight years. I had the accounts then, and even the agent came to the house to examine the accounts.

Mr. Grove.

29,942. What amount did those accounts show that you had spent in the improvements you are speaking of?—I was living in the neighbourhood, and I was in receipt of about 70*l.* a year, and for the first three years I was in this place I sank that amount in the place.

29,943. Then do you consider that you spent 210*l.*?—No, about 195*l.*

29,944. When you made those improvements did you give notice to the landlord or did you get his consent as you were supposed to do under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

29,945. I do not think they were matters that required consent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

29,946. The laying down of the permanent pasture required notice. Were you aware that it was necessary to give notice to the landlord and to obtain his consent?—No, when I was improving the land and meant to live and die on the place.

29,947. Who was your landlord?—No, it was the agent I went to, I ought to say, and I am sorry to say it, that he is not here to defend himself. He is dead. But I want to exonerate the landlord and the present agent. I have had the offer of the farm back with the full consent of the landlord by the present agent.

29,948. Have you named the landlord. Who was the landlord?—Major Stanley.

29,949. Then you think that Major Stanley was not aware of the circumstances under which you left the farm?—Well, yes, he was aware of them, because I spoke to him myself.

29,950. Did he make any explanation to you?—Not exactly, but the agent probably was too strong for him. I suppose there are gentlemen here who can bear me out and say that that is a fact.

29,951. How long after you became tenant were you asked to sign this agreement?—About six or nine months. He intimated first of all that I would have to sign an agreement, but that there was nothing in it, only that I would not be allowed to sell neither hay nor straw—it was only a matter of form, and I said that I would sign that because I did not believe in selling either.

29,952. How soon after then were you called upon to sign this agreement?—After being there about two and a half years, because at the end of the third year I had a notice.

29,953. And you had laid out very much of your money in improving the farm, I suppose?—I laid out all that I was in receipt of for those years.

29,954. Can you bring anyone to prove it. You see those are matters of account; can you bring anyone to prove the value of it?—My valuer when I entered and the one that I selected as a valuer when I left are present, and the present agent is present. I do not believe that one of them will say a word contrary to what I have expressed.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,955. What was the date of this vestry meeting?—About two or two and a half years after I took possession; to be exact, in February 1884.

29,956. How long after the vestry meeting had you notice to quit?—In September 1884.

The witness withdrew.

Sir Charles Edward Gregg Philipps called and examined.

The Witness.

29,957. I only ask leave to intervene at this moment, my Lord, in order to explain that the feeling which I had with respect to mentioning the Land Commission to the tenants was exactly that expressed by your Lordship, namely, I felt it was a delicate matter to tell the tenants that they might come before you, for I felt distinctly it would be giving them a leave to which they had every right, and that it would be insolence on my part to give them a leave which the law already gave them, and which I feel perfectly confident any who knew my character would know that I should never abuse in any way whatever.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,958. You are a member of the Landlords' Association?—I am.

29,959. So that, that letter really emanated from your association itself?—Exactly. I am on the executive of that association.

Mr. Grove.

29,960. And you have a knowledge of that letter, when it was penned and written?—I am afraid that very sad circumstances prevented my being at the meeting, but I acquiesced in it. That was the simple and sole reason which I wished to explain.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

29,961. I should say that what appears to me is this, that the landlord's discretion as to sending a tenant is so very great that something more is required, or might be required on the part of the landlord; that is the point, something in the nature of an assurance that so long as the tenant speaks the truth you would not be indisposed to his coming before the Commissioners?—I think, Mr. Brynmor Jones, I may say at once that I have expressed an opinion to others that there were many tenants whom I should be extremely glad to see here, but I felt a delicacy about mentioning the subject even to them. I had a feeling of delicacy in mentioning the matter in any way whatever, because I have always felt, I am glad to say, that even with tenants who have differed in politics or in any way whatever from me there have always been the most friendly relations that are possible to exist between landlord and tenant.

29,962. It is a pity that that letter of the association is not more widely known; it was read by Lord Carrington at our very first sitting, but I should be glad if it were more widely known, because it has an important effect?—I think so, too; I quite agree in that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. D. Richards called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

29,963. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

29,964. You wish to give evidence under various heads. Have you a statement prepared?—I have a statement.

29,965. I think if you would read it it would be the quickest way?—The first evidence I have to give, my Lord and gentlemen, is with reference to a holding which I held in 1859, and another holding that I was the fourth generation brought up on. I took this small holding, containing about 30 acres, at the request of our landlord to the other farm that I enjoyed, of the name of Gernos.

29,966. What was the size of that other one? 200 acres.

29,967. Then there were 240 acres altogether?—Somewhere about that. A lot of it was very poor land and mountainous, by the sea shore. Concerning this small holding I took a lease of it for 14 years. It was a farm that had been run out; nothing whatever would grow upon it but weeds. Many and many a time have I sown corn and never reaped it. It contained about a dozen small fields of, it might be, an acre or an acre and a half, and some might be two acres in extent. The farm buildings were entirely in ruins, and on that condition the landlord pressed me to take it to our holding. The rent was not high, but it was quite high enough for such land on the top of the sea shore. I promised to pay 19*l.* a year rent for this land.

29,968. For 30 acres?—For 30 acres. You may say there were 15 acres of them which were worse than nothing—worse than useless. In the first year of my tenancy of that farm I spent—shall I state the facts as I have them noted down here?

29,969. Yes, please?—In the first case I spent upon a cowhouse and cottage, and a little farm that was for an under-tenant, 60*l.* I was allowed

Lord Kenyon.

40*l.* for that by the landlord. Then 40 perches of new stone fences at 4*s.* 9*d.* per perch of 8 yards, digging and carting, 3*s.*, that makes it up to 7*s.* 9*d.*; that cost me 15*l.* 10*s.* These were of a different nature attached to the farm. Another 10 perches ditto, they are all stone fences, 3*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; ditto, 15 perches, 5*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* Then mending old fences, 10*l.* Fallowing and and other cultivation on 14 acres, at 25*s.* per acre; that was a very low charge, 25*s.* per acre; lime for same, shell sand, what we used to get from the sea shore, six boat-loads of that at 15*s.* per load. Then, the second year, reclaiming and fallowing 10 acres of land, at 25*s.* per acre, which brings the whole lot of that little holding to 149*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* within two years. That was after four years had run of that lease of Gernos, the farm I was brought upon, and on which I was the fourth generation there, and built every house, and there were fresh houses built when the lease went out, all fresh houses; and it was only four years of the lease of this small holding that had run by this time. We had a valuation on this farm at Gernos when the old lease went out, and the landlord asked me if I would give up the lease on the small holding, Pengraig, and I said, yes, if I was to be a tenant of the other. Well, it was valued between the two. Then the rent of Gernos was 10*l.* My family has been living there something over 84 years.

29,970. What was the size of it?—Close on 200 acres.

29,971. And the rent was 10*l.*?—10*l.* When my great grandfather, whose name was David Rees, of Granant, took the farm the people said in the neighbourhood at the time—this is quite a fact which is known—he had taken Gernos and the rent was 20*l.* and there was another little farm belonging to this and he put that farm to a sister of my grandfather, and it was said that David Rees, my grandfather, had taken that farm at 20*l.* rent and he would never pay for it. That was the remark made when he took the farm. Of course my grandfather lived there and had eight or nine children there, and I was the grandson that lived some years afterwards there. I am going to another holding now. In Michaelmas 1862 the old lease of Gernos expired and a new lease was granted for 100*l.*, a 21 years' lease optional every seven years.

29,972. For 100*l.* a year?—Yes, for 100*l.* a year. I had objection to the exceptional terms of the lease and did not like it very much. They said "It is only a matter of form. It is "a matter of law too if he likes," thought I. I thought the farm was of a very hilly value, so that reluctantly I signed the lease as it was—optional every seven years. I am going now to some of the most certain facts concerning this place and the expenditure I made there. I was a young man then, full of energy, and I went in then headlong for good farming. In 1863 I built a new outhouse at a cost of 35*l.* In 1865 I built another at a cost of 25*l.* 10*s.* In 1866 another which cost 18*l.* In 1875 (that comes now to the fourteenth year of my tenancy at this place) I renewed the stable at a cost of 30*l.*, and I had only the pleasure of that stable during the six months in the winter. Then here again I put up new fences to the extent of 20 perches at 7*s.* 9*d.*, all stone fences, which amounts to 7*l.* 15*s.* Thirty-five perches of bank fences (that is made up of earth), that cost 4*s.* 6*d.* per perch, and that amounted to 7*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Ditto 15 perches of stone fences at 7*s.* 9*d.* per perch, 5*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* Forty acres of mountain furze land cleared in the course of 14 years—I consider the first cost of that 2*l.* 10*s.* per acre, and I have been many times that I would not plough an acre in a week. That brings down the cost on this holding to 238*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* With the outlay on the other holding, Pengraig, it brings the cost to 398*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Many items of permanent improvements I have not mentioned, such as two dozen stone gate posts and many other little things which I did not put down.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,973. Might I just ask you to give me the date; the old lease was out in 1862, when the new lease began?—Yes, Michaelmas, 1862, the old lease of Gernos expired.

29,974. Are these items which you are giving us items of outlay before that or since that?—Since that. In February 1876, that is the very year that I laid out 30*l.* on the stable, I received a notice. When consulted it was a notice for 20*l.* advance in rent, to which I objected and left.

29,975. That is 14 years after 1862—the end of the second period of seven years?—Yes. I have a short statement to make again concerning the last holding I was in. I had not learnt the lesson well enough in my last holding.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,976. Do we understand that the rent was raised 20*l.*?—I left because it was, and took another holding. Now, I am going into that matter with your permission. Then I took a farm of the name of Cwmgloyne, containing 325 acres at first when I took it.

Mr. Grove.

29,977. At what rent?—At 35*5l.* rent, taken without agreement, repairs promised, nothing done but little in the first year of tenancy. This will be a short statement, but all facts. Farm entirely out of condition—as many as four white crops taken—all the straw and corn were sold by auction the last two years in succession, and no manure made. Roads so much out of order that they could not be travelled over; previous tenant carting through the fields; large outlay in improving the roads; had to leave after 15 years' tenancy owing to bad state of the buildings. My wife and son narrowly escaped with their lives through the falling-in of the loft.

Professor Rhŷs.

29,978. When was that?—That is three years ago.

Sir John Llewelyn.

29,979. Fifteen years after 1876—that would be 1891, would it not?—Yes, three years ago I left. My wife had a compound fracture of the leg, which laid her up for eight months.

29,980. Owing to the falling of this building?—Yes. It laid her up for eight months, and made her a cripple for life. My son also was laid up for eight to ten months. He was under 18 bags of wheat when I had him, but of course the wheat was not on him or else it would have killed him. All I have to say concerning this is I had to leave without compensation for improvements or for damage. The land was brought to a good state of cultivation, and it could carry close on double the stock as when I entered. I have nobody here to bear out those facts, but I think there are gentlemen in this room who can testify to them—that the farm was well-managed when I left.

Mr. Grove.

29,981. Did you tell us how much you spent in improvements on that second place?—I did not spend much, you may depend.

29,982. How much?—I did not count it.

29,983. You did not keep an account?—I did not keep an account. I had to fallow the farm, 300 acres, all over it in five years except 80 acres of pasture land.

Mr. Seebohm.

29,984. Why did you leave?—Owing to the bad state of the buildings.

Lord Kenyon.

29,985. Why did you take this second farm?—I was obliged to take the farm to get my living.

29,986. I mean you knew it was in a bad state?—I knew very well, but I had a lot of growing-up children and I speculated just for them. That is one reason.

29,987. Could you not get another farm?—Not one that would suit me.

29,988. Did you not complain about the buildings when you took it?—I did complain and the master promised.

29,989. He promised he would do something for you?—He did. I do not mean to blame the landlord much. He could not do it, it may be; the landlord is very heavily mortgaged. I do not mean to say anything against him; the landlord is a gentleman all through; he is very heavily mortgaged.

29,990. He had not much to spend?—I never had but the best respect for him.

Mr. Grove.

29,991. Did you call his attention specially to the condition of the land?—Not specially, because I thought it was safer than anything about. I always thought that safe because I had as much corn on it many and many a time and more than I had at the time it went down. There was no granary in the place. I then was obliged to make the best I could of the empty rooms that were in the old mansion.

Lord Kenyon.

29,992. Have you any other statement to make?—That is all the personal statement, I think, my Lord.

29,993. I think we have a great many witnesses to call. Shall I go through this with you so as to cut out what we have heard already?—Very well, my Lord.

29,994. I do not want to interrupt your evidence at all, but there are some things which we have had before us yesterday and it is hardly worth repeating them I think. Do you think that Nonconformists and Liberals are at any disadvantage in obtaining farms?—Is that question put to me?

29,995. Yes, I see you have mentioned that subject here?—I do not think it is so to a great extent. There are cases that I could prove, but I do not think that is the case very much.

29,996. Are the majority of farmers Nonconformists?—The majority are this side and the other side.

29,997. Do you know of any cases of hardship or anything of the sort. Have they come before your notice?—Do you mean with regard to Nonconformists?

29,998. Yes, of a case in which a man has been treated unfairly, do you know anything of that sort?—Well, not much. I have no case to mention.

29,999. What I want to know is whether you have any concrete case, a definite case. Do you think agents are specially trained for their purposes?—Not as a rule, my Lord. Lawyers are good enough, but I do not think they are fit to be agents.

30,000. You object to lawyers being agents?—Unless they have been trained; they are hard chaps to deal with.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,001. They would be harder still if they were trained, would they not?—Yes, they would.

Lord Kenyon.

30,002. Have you a copy of your agreement?—Of my present agreement?

30,003. Yes?—I have not, but I have nothing to complain of in my present agreement.

30,004. You do not think the rents of the smaller tenants are any higher than those of the larger farmers you say?—I do not think they are in our district. I know of some small holdings there that are rather cheaper than the large ones, some of them.

30,005. There is a case you mention in your statement of Lower End Town?—Yes.

30,006. Is there anything special with regard to that that you wish to say?—It shows how land is getting up, and that it is getting up to its more than normal value.

30,007. It was taken on a lease rented at 200*l.*?—Yes, at 200*l.* rent.

30,008. When the lease expired was the rent raised?—Yes, there was an allowance for drainage. The lease expired and it was sold, and then the rent was raised to 340*l.* and tithes. In 1880 it was let to a new tenant at 350*l.* In 1886 the rent was raised to 375*l.* and tithes. All those raisings are within a short period.

30,009. Do you know the farm?—I do.

30,010. Do you think it is much too dear?—I do.

30,011. Then you know several other cases?—Yes, Llwyn Gwaddon in the same parish.

30,012. And Penback?—Yes, I can tell you about those if you like to question me.

30,013. They are all much the same—they have been raised. Then there is one at Pentroydin fach?—Yes, the rent was raised too.

30,014. Then there are some in Llandewi parish too?—Yes, there is a farm there of Fron in Llandewi Velfry. That is right abreast of my holding.

30,015. Have there been temporary abatements?—There is an abatement of 50*l.* in two years at Fron. It is a farm which is rented at 200*l.*

30,016. There has been 50*l.* allowed in two years out of 200*l.*?—Yes.

30,017. You think the place is valued too high, do you?—Very high for any man to make a living.

30,018. Is the man there still?—He is still there. He is too much attached to the old home, he says, to leave.

30,019. Do you know of any cases of rents having been reduced permanently?—Yes, I can state one at present, namely, my present holding. It has been reduced a little since the tenant was there, but then I suppose it is so much less value too. The landlord himself farmed it for many many years and farmed it to a very high state of cultivation worth it may be 50*l.* or 60*l.* a year more rent then, and there were good times also then.

30,020. Do you think the cultivation of farms is as good as it was?—Generally it is, but there is an exception to it. There is more land now under grass by three-quarters than there was.

30,021. You say that most landlords in these districts have contracted out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Mostly.

30,022. But they cannot do so except that one clause—clause 33 I think it is—the clause about the notice?—I could not say anything with regard to that Act. It is not a bit of good to South Wales.

30,023. It is not made use of?—It is not made use of—we cannot make use of it either. There are two great points.

30,025. Do you mean it is too much trouble to go and ask for his consent?—No, for an improvement I think; permanent improvements ought to be done by the landlords, and the tenant should have security for his labour. That is what I should like to see in our land—some kind of security to the tenant for the labour he puts in the land. Now the landlord has reaped all the benefit of my labour all through my life so far.

30,026. Have you anything to say with regard to railway rates?—They are very high about this neighbourhood; so much so that we cannot send our produce abroad to compete with other countries as we should. I do not see why the English farmer, or the Welsh farmer should be charged higher than the foreigner. I know they compete with us very tight in every other way. I think when the railroad again goes to favour them the tenant farmer and the landlord too are in the same place—it is hard upon us.

30,027. How about the labourers; are they well off?—Pretty well off; but I should like to see them better off.

30,028. Is the cottage accommodation pretty good?—Middling; I cannot say it is over good. In some cases they are very good, but there is a great scarcity of labourers in the land. I am very lucky; I have my own children to labour for me so far.

30,029. When do you think the depression began?—Well, it began as far back as the eighties, and it has never given over, with the exception of one good year perhaps. There have been three very very bad years, and we have never seen the like, one following the other, and one is going worse than the other, I am afraid.

30,030. You mean these last three years?—Yes; in the seventies the times were exceptionally good, and almost all the farms were risen in that way, except in the case of some lenient, good landlords who left their tenants alone. There are also some farms in the parish of Llandewi Velfry, where the same rent exists now as there was 100 years ago, and they are making a good thing of it, even in these hard times.

30,031. Have you any other remedy to suggest besides the improvement of that Act?—I should like to have a law that could protect the tenant for his outlay on another man's land. I do not know how to get it of course. Some will say security for tenure, that would be very well; but I think it would be a very good plan if farmers could buy their own farms; it would give them a new spirit to find if they could get Government to give them a mortgage at a reasonable rate—3½ per cent. say.

30,032. Do you think they would rather pay the mortgage than the rent?—Yes, they would. Of course they would have the inducement of working on their own holding.

30,033. They would be working for their own holding, and for their own property?—For their own interest, and their children's interest.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,034. The buildings you speak of were all built at your own expense?—Every house that was at Gernos—every single house that was there. There was only a small cottage when my grandfather took the farm. He took the farm to his own holding—he had a farm adjoining it—a farm of his own.

30,035. Did you appeal to the landlord for payment for the improvements you made upon it?—What was the use. He knew it very well—no, I could not claim it. That was years ago.

30,036. I do not think you gave us the name of the landlord, did you?—I cannot give it, but I believe he is across the other side.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,037. Where do you mean?—In the higher world, sir.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,038. When you left the farm did you get notice of advance of rent?—I had notice to advance the rent 20*l.* a year, and, instead of paying that advance I left the farm and took the other holding.

30,039. Do you pay wages to your children?—Nothing whatever, only they get a little clothes.

30,040. How many have you?—I have six at home.

30,041. How many boys?—Two boys and four girls.

30,042. Do you find them very useful?—Of course I do.

30,043. Do you think you would be able to pay your rent if you had not them?—I do not think I could, and I could not these last two years because the times have been so very bad. I work as hard myself as any one does.

30,044. Do you think that more labour could be employed upon farms if there was something to pay the labourers with?—Yes, I think double the labour ought to be employed on the farms, and the farms would pay for it too if farmers had the capital.

30,045. The farmers have not got the money to pay them?—No. I really believe that our little island, if every inch of ground is properly farmed, would support us, or very nearly—at least, I have done about the same myself on some lands—produced more than double the quantity.

30,046. Do you think if tenant farmers were able to purchase their farms, and get a reasonable mortgage for them, they would be able to pay out that mortgage in time?—I do, if they had a reasonable mortgage. I do really believe they could pay it up.

30,047. Do you know of any instances where farmers have purchased their holdings that they have farmed them better than those who are merely tenants?—Many instances. I know there are a lot of small proprietors up in the north part of Pembrokeshire, and they have been multiplied now these last few years; but they are under a great disadvantage. They bought their farms too dear, and the mortgage again is too high, so that they cannot carry on as they ought to, and as I should like them to. That is a burden on them.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,048. I suppose there would not be any desire amongst farmers to purchase their holdings if they got security of tenure?—Well, I do not think there would be so much then. What I have felt since I began farming is that I wanted some security in respect of the labour I did on the land. That is what I think is very much needed.

30,049. I will just follow up that question of Mr. Griffiths' with regard to the labour of your children. I think you said you do not pay them wages?—Not direct wages

30,050. Now it has been repeatedly stated by the agents and also by the landlords that if the children do not receive wages they are started in life on new farms. I will just ask you this question: which would it be best for your children, to be out in service at other farms or to go and start farming on the money which you have stored for them. Which do you think they would have done best?—Decidedly on earning wages of course; but then there is this preference; they can have a day now when they like—they are almost their own masters; if there is a ploughing match or a fair or anything of that sort, they can go to it, and besides, there is a family circle, and there is a great tie in that. Of course, I mean to say every farmer will stretch his utmost when one of his children is setting up in the world to do his best for him, especially after he has been working his best days with him I mean. I have two children married; one lives in Worcestershire, and I wish there were more of them there; and there is another living up in North Pembroke.

30,051. But are you prepared to say that so far as their future prospects are concerned they would be better in service?—Yes, they would if they behaved themselves as they do at home—far better too.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,052. Are you in a farm now?—Yes.

30,053. In spite of your previous experiences?—Yes.

30,354. Who is your landlord now?—R. S. Shield, Esq., who lives close by Narberth.

30,055. It is three years ago since you went into that farm? I am going on there three years now.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,056. Have you lived mostly in the English parts of Pembrokeshire?—I was brought up in the Welsh.

30,057. Do you speak Welsh?—I do, better than English.

30,058. You have come to live among the English now?—They are "shippris" where I live—mixed.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,059. Do you consider that your son who went to Worcestershire is doing better than he would have if he had been farming in this part of the country?—Yes, I do. My daughter lives there, and they do a great deal better.

30,060. You think the land is let cheaper?—The land is let cheaper, and there is not so much competition for it.

Lord Kenyon.

30,061. Is it arable?—A deal arable

30,062. Hops?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

30,063. And orchards?—Yes.

30,064. There is fruit grown?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,065. That 398*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, which you mentioned just now, would be a very nice little sum to set up another to farm with?—A very nice little sum indeed.

30,066. But you cannot get at it?—It is spent on that land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,067. You say, I think, that the people are mixed; that there are some English and some Welsh in your neignbourhood?—In my present neighbourhood.

30,068. Do you find that the Welsh tenants are more attached to their homes than the English?—I have not been long enough amongst them to give a proof of that. I know this much, that the Welshman is too much attached to his home; I know that through experience. He ought to be ready to emigrate anywhere, and I would be competing against the English farmer now if my wife would have followed me when I had notice to leave that Gernos through advance in the rent.

30,069. Is your wife a Welsh woman?—She is thorough Welsh.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

30,070. And unwilling to leave her home?—Yes, unwilling to leave her home. She loves the old Welsh too dear to leave her home to go anywhere.

Lord Kenyon.

30,071. I have a question to put to you which has been handed up by Mr. Vincent. He says, "I understand that you complain that you "entered a farm to find that several white crops "had been taken, and the farm generally "exhausted?"—Yes.

30,072. "Do you not think it would have been "better if your predecessor had been under a "stricter agreement?"—I do.

30,073. He also asks another question, "Did "not your landlord become bankrupt, and you "fall into the hands of the trustees?"—I did, but I do not blame the landlord in the least.

30,074. Have you anything further to say?—Nothing particular.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOSHUA WATTS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

30,075. You are a farmer at Longlands, Wiston?—Yes.

30,076. Are you living there now?—Yes.

30,077. You wish to give evidence as to your own case?—Yes.

30,078. Will you tell us what you wish to say please?—What I have to complain of is that I had my rent raised in 1885.

30,079. What was the rent previously?—The rent previous to that was 98*l.*

30,080. And the acreage?—143 acres.

30,081. And it has been risen to?—To 110*l.*

30,082. Did you complain?—Yes.

30,083. What answer did you get?—I will read this letter.

30,084. You are under Lord Cawdor?—Yes. The letter is as follows:—"Longlands, Wiston. "March 9th, 1885. T. T. Mousley, Esq. Sir, "I feel very uneasy since my last rent day "when given to understand that my rent is to "be raised 15*l.* a year, which I consider unfair "and have no chance to pay these bad times. "I considered that I was figured up pretty well "before. My wife was born at Longlands, and "she would like to die there. Her father laid "out hundreds of pounds in building and other "improvements at Longlands, for which there "was nothing taken into consideration in Hall's "valuation in 1863. Now, Sir, I beg to call "your attention to the fact that I pay up to "the full amount of Hall's valuation, a rise from "64*l.* a year to 98*l.*, that is a rise of 34*l.* a year, "and that for 22 years will amount to 748*l.* "In 1872 I had another rise of 6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* tithe "or rent charge. That for 13 years will "amount to 83*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; including rent and "tithe it will make a sum of 831*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, which

I was always under the impression was to "meet the expense of the repairs done at "Longlands. At any rate, my rent is risen "40*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* a year since Hall's valuation, ex- "clusive of the 15*l.* which I hope you will "never enforce, and I do consider that a "handsome rise on 143 acres of common land, "15 of which is not worth 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre, "neither is it capable of any improvement. I "am prepared to lay before you tradesmen's "bills to the amount of over 80*l.* which I "have paid out of my own pocket for build- "ings and repairs done at Longlands ex- "clusive of all haulage for the whole of the "repairs done there. Now, Sir, I believe if you "would kindly give my case your careful con- "sideration it would have the desired effect. "I am, Sir, your obedient servant Joshua "Watts."

30,085. That was the letter you wrote. What was the reply?—The reply was as follows:—"Stackpole, Pembroke. 11th March, 1885. "Dear Sir, I have all the Longlands' particulars "before me—and considering what has been the "recent outlay on your premises, I cannot alter "my figures, as proposed for your future rent. "Yours faithfully, T. T. Mousley."

30,086. What was the outlay that he speaks of?—The outlay was not a great deal. I had a cowshed built for 15 cows—that was all that was not there before—and roofed. There were some two or three houses roofed, the walls of which were built by my father-in law.

30,087. What did they spend—500*l.* or 600*l.*?—No, I should not think that.

30,088. Did you write any further letter to that?—Yes. I asked him about it at next rent

What I have referred to was in February. At the August rent I paid him the rent and he received 49*l.* on account and I said "Pardon me, "now have you anything against me as a tenant?"—"No, I can assure you, Mr. Watts "I have nothing whatever, I think very highly "of you as a tenant" he took his glasses down [illustrating]—he did not seem to want to talk, but I will give you the words he said verbatim. He said, "When did you see your brother last?"—I said I have not seen him these three months. Then he said, "Did you see Mrs. Lewis, of "Slebech, out there, Mr. Watts?" "I do not "know her," said I. That was another tenant who came in. Then he said "I will settle you "up in a very short time." The settling of that was a notice to quit. [The witness produced the notice to quit.]

30,089. You need not read that; that is the notice to quit?—I wrote to him the following letter, "Longlands Wiston, Haverfordwest, Oct. 20, 1885. T. T. Mousley, Esq. Sir, I am anxious "to have an interview with you about my farm. "Would you kindly propose a day when you "could see me on the point and where. If I "could see you at Carmarthen or at Pembroke "it would be a great saving to me, as I am "afraid I could not contain the journey all the "way down to Stackpole, as I am not at all "times sound on my feet." Then there is a letter of the 21st October 1885, written in answer to my letter. "Dear sir, I do not know "that you need to take the trouble of meeting "me anywhere. If you wish to retake your "farm as from Michaelmas 1885, I beg to offer "it to you at the yearly rent of 110*l.* To this "you can send me a written reply." And I did so; and that is what I complain of now—that "I am not entitled to the abatements the same as the other tenants. There have been some abatements made in the rents. Of course my rent was risen, and I do not have the fair play as they do.

30,090. Did you send any further reply to that?—I sent a reply to accept it, of course.

30,091. You accepted the terms?—Yes, I accepted it.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,092. But you have not had a reduction?

Lord Kenyon.

30,093. Have you had whatever abatement there was—10 per cent.—given you?—Yes; but the first abatement was in 1886; that was 20 per cent. abatement. August 17th of the same year, 10 per cent.; and February 18th, 1887, 20 per cent.; August 18th of the same year, 10 per cent.; February 15th, 1888, 20 per cent.; August 17th of the same year, 10 per cent.; February 16th, 1893, 10 per cent.; and August of the same year, 10 per cent.; and on February 28th now past, 10 per cent. By that 10 per cent. reduction it makes my rent 10*s.* more.

30,094. How do you make that out?—I was raised from the old rent.

30,095. I understand—it is 10*s.* more than the original rent?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,096. In addition to that I think Lord Cawdor took the tithes upon himself, as we were told yesterday, did he not?—Yes, in addition to that.

Lord Kenyon.

30,097. How does your farm bear comparison with the neighbouring farms?—Well, pretty fair.

30,098. Is it higher or lower?—There are some higher and there are some lower. I consider that I have lost altogether by this job—having my rent raised in 1885—154*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.*, which is the total with the abatement; and if I am a tenant of Lord Cawdor I should like to sail in the same boat as they all do. I have nothing to complain of only that I am not treated the same as other men.

30,999. What I want to get from you is whether your rent was higher in proportion or lower in proportion than the neighbouring ones?—There are some that would be cheaper—a good bit cheaper.

30,100. Then you wish to say nothing further?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,101. The landlord paid for the buildings, did he not, for the last improvements?—Yes, he paid for the buildings, but I have built a good deal on my own account.

Mr. Grove.

30,102. The landlord pays the tithes, does he not, now?—Yes.

30,103. Do you know how much that comes to on the rent—about?—6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* the tithe was.

30,104. Because we have had it in evidence yesterday, I think, that the tithe equalled 7½ per cent. upon the rent?—Yes.

30,105. So that if you get 10 per cent. abatement, and the tithe, that is 17½ per cent. abatement upon the rent as it was a few years ago, is it not?—Yes, I suppose somewhere about that.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,106. Have you any explanation of why the rise was made?—Nothing, except the landgrabbers—the land hunger; they like to have a farm well tilled. We have some in our neighbourhood that could not live an hour on Irish soil.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,107. Do you think it would be a good thing to have some court to appeal to or some place to appeal to?—I should think that something of that sort would be better than as it is

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

30,108. Mr. Mousley told us yesterday that he had no difficulty in settling with all the tenants. I suppose that is the way to settle—to advance the rent and make you pay?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

30,109. Did you improve this land at all?—Yes, certainly. I have laid down thousands of loads of earth and dung in these last few years. I could give you pretty nearly the quantity too.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William James called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

30,690, 073*a*. 30,110. You are Mr. William James, of Stubbleborough?—Yes

30,111. You are a tenant of Lord Cawdor's?—Yes.

30,112. You wish to give evidence as to the raising of your rent, do you?—Yes.

30,113. When did you become a tenant?—I joined my mother about 15 years ago as joint tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,114. Was that on your father's death?—He died in the year 1860.

Lord Kenyon.

30,115. Your father was tenant there before, was he?—Yes.

30,116. He was tenant, and you say up to 1863 the rent was 52*l.*; is that so?—Yes; my father died in 1860. In 1862 the land was valued.

30,117. What is the size of the farm?—133 acres odd.

30,118. The rent in 1860 was 52*l.*; the rent in 1863 was risen to 72*l.*; and in 1872 5*l.* more was added for tithe?—5*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*

30,119. Which was not paid before?—Just so.

30,120. How was that? Had the landlord paid the tithe before?—The landlord paid it previous to that. We did not pay the tithe regularly; we paid it if it was a good summer; if there was a little depression we did not pay it; it was not called up.

30,121. In 1885 another 3*l.* was added; what was that for?—That is what I cannot say. I asked Mr. Mousley what was the reason that he should have risen the rent, and his reason was that no man has his farm over 21 years for the same rent; but I knew that was a falsehood on the face of it.

30,122. Do I understand that the rents are not the same for over 21 years?—That rents are the same on some estates upwards of half a century, while my farm has been raised three times in 22 years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,123. What is the rent now?—75*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

30,124. It has been reduced again, has it?—Yes, it has.

30,125. The tithe has been taken off?—Yes. I may mention that this last rise has just been swept away lately—this last week.

30,126. Do you consider that the farm is too dear now?—I do.

30,127. Is it poor land?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,128. Were any grounds given to you for the rise in rent of 20*l.*, from 52*l.* to 72*l.*?—Nothing; the land was valued at that time.

Lord Kenyon.

30,129. Were any large improvements with buildings made at that time?—Not at that time; the improvements that were made at that time were made by my father.

30,130. When were improvements made by your father?—Some years before he died.

30,131. That would be previous to his death in 1860?—Yes.

30,132. Lord Cawdor takes the payment of tithe upon himself now, does he?—Yes.

30,133. What reason was given you for the 3*l.* reduction of rent last week?—Oh; I had been agitating to get it off.

30,134. You had been asking to get off the 3*l.*?—Yes.

30,135. Had you asked for a larger reduction than that?—No.

30,136. And that has now been given?—Yes, after six months of agitation.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,137. Was the rent day last week?—Yes.

30,138. So that what you mean is, that the last rent was reduced by 3*l.*?—Yes, this rise of 3*l.* that was put on in 1885.

30,139. Did he take it off for the past half year?—Yes, for the past half year.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,140. Is it the general custon on the Stackpole estate to raise the rent indiscriminately every 21 years?—No.

30,141. What was the explanation that was given to you when the rent was raised that 3*l.*?—What I have already stated. I will repeat it again. I asked him what was the reason that he raised the rent, and he said that no farmer has his farm for the same rent over 21 years, or something to that effect.

30,142. That no farmer pays the same rent for 21 years?—For over 21 years.

Lord Kenyon.

30,143. I suppose he said he thought the farm was cheap, did he?—Well, he differed from what I did.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,144. Are we to understand that the other farms on the Stackpole estate are raised in rent?—No, only two or three; that is where the grievance comes in, that is the cause of my appearing here to-day before this Commission, because we think that we have been wronged and slighted.

30,145. Some two or three of you?—Some two or three.

30,146. What are you; are you a Nonconformist?—I am a Nonconformist.

30,147. What are these others; are they Nonconformists?—Churchmen.

30,148. You can assign no other reason—no reason at any rate—why you should be raised 3*l.*?—Well, I cannot satisfy myself, unless it is that land-grabbers have been applying; I have no reason—I cannot give any definite reason whatever. We are in total darkness to get at the reason.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,149. By whom was the land valued?—By a gentleman of the name of Mr. Hall.

30,150. Where from, do you know?—No, I do not.

30,151. Was he a regular land valuer?—I could not say.

30,152. Did he walk over the whole length of the farm?—Well, I cannot say. I was very young at the time; I was not more than five or six years of age.

Lord Kenyon.

30,153. That was in 1862?—In 1862.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,154. May I ask what you mean by "land-grabber"?—Land hunger I should think.

30,155. Do you mean to say that there are people who would go to the agent and bid high, to try and oust the sitting tenant?—If they thought there would be any chance—if they thought he would be likely to give up the farm.

30,156. Do you think they would be likely to be successful with Lord Cawdor?—I should hope not.

30,157. A man would hardly be likely to go behind the back of the sitting tenant to try to get him out by offering a higher rent; is that what you meant by a land-grabber?—I should think something to that effect.

30,158. Do you think that is done in this country at all?—Oh yes, I believe so.

30,159. You think it is done?—Oh yes.

30,160. Do you think it is successfully done?—In many instances undoubtedly, if they offer more rent.

30,161. Can you give me any instances?—I could not remember just now perhaps a special case, but it is my opinion there are applications sent in, especially if they hear that any man is agitating for a reduction of rent.

30,162. If a man is agitating for a reduction of rent he would go to his landlord?—Yes, and others would go as well.

30,163. And then what would happen, do you consider?—The tenant has to give the old rent, or else has to leave.

30,164. You think that the old tenant would have to leave even if the same rent as he had paid up to that time was offered by somebody else?—Undoubtedly.

30,165. You think it would be so?—Yes.

30,166. Do you know any instances where that has been done?—Yes, I do, but I should not like to mention them now.

30,167. Do you think any such instances have happened on Lord Cawdor's estate?—Yes.

30,168. You think so?—Yes.

30,169. Can you give instances?—I could, but I should not like to do it.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,170. Are you of the same opinion as Mr. Watts, that it would be a good thing to have some means of appeal to some person or persons to settle this question of rent between you and your landlord?—Yes.

30,171. That is when you cannot agree; in many cases it would not be required, but you think it would be well if there was such a method of appeal in some cases?—Yes; I believe if there were such a thing this would not have happened to us.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,172. I think you said in your statement that you did not think Lord Cawdor would turn you out when another farmer applied for a farm and offered a higher rent?—I do not know. I believe that if the farmer did not give his rent he would have to go.

30,173. But yet he would demand the higher rent, you think?—The landlord would bring that on as an argument. He would tell him that he had another person who would give the rent, if not more.

30,174. Do you think that Lord Cawdor would take advantage of that position?—Well, I should not like to answer that question, although I possibly could.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,175. He did not take advantage of that position in regard to your own case. You can speak with regard to that?—No, he did not in that respect.

Lord Kenyon.

30,176. You got the reduction that you applied for?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,177. Can you mention any case where the tenant has had to leave because he could not have the rent reduced?—I know one case—one of those that had the rise in 1885. He has left, anyhow.

30,178. He would not pay the rent that was demanded of him?—Well, he did not pay it for a few years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,179. Do you know whether the tenants on the Stackpole estate are generally satisfied?—Oh, yes, I believe they are, and so were we before the last rise, perfectly satisfied, and very proud of our landlord.

30,180. When was this last rise made?—In 1885. In 1885 it was enforced, I believe. We refused to pay it for a year or so, but we had notice that we had to pay, and the consequence would have been that we should have had to leave, I suppose.

30,181. Was that rise made after a valuation?—No.

30,182. Was it a general rise on the whole estate?—Only two or three, as I before said.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,183. I suppose you and your landlords are on the best of terms, except on this question of rent?—Oh, yes. Of course we never quarrel, because we never see each other.

Lord Kenyon.

30,184. I have a question sent in by Mr. Vincent, "Do you mean to say Lord Cawdor "has made no expenditure or improvements on "your farm within your memory"?—I do not. He has made very much improvement, but not more than in other places, if so much—some places of the same rent.

30,185. Have you anything to complain of in the way of your buildings?—No, nothing whatever.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN BEYNON called and examined

Witness.

My Lord, I have no connected statement to put before you These are merely the answers I sent to the Landowners' Association, and I was not aware at the time I did so that it would lead to my being called upon to give evidence. As far as my own estate is concerned I shall be very happy to give any information you wish.

Lord Kenyon.

30,186. Thank you; that is very useful to us. You are the owner of the Trewern estate?—Yes.

30,187. Four thousand acres or thereabouts?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,188. Is Trewern the name of the parish?—No.

30,189. What is the name?—The two estates are the Trewern estate in the parish of Llanddewi Velfrey, Pembrokeshire, and the Manoravon estate in Carmarthenshire.

Lord Kenyon.

30,190. Some tenants have a right of pasturage have they?—Yes; I do not know exactly what it is. They have a right of pasturage on the Carngoch Common, and on the Black Mountains; but I believe they run a few sheep and ponies on them.

30,191. Have you given any abatements?—For the last two years I have given abatements at each half-year's rent, and occasionally before, but I have told all the tenants that I thought the day for abatements was passed, and that we ought now to go in for permanent reductions; and on every farm that I have, except on the home farm at Manoravon, to which 30*l.* was added in lieu of the tithe rent-charge, the tenants have been informed that they may have their holdings revalued if they wished. I may here say that when I let the farm of Manoravon four years ago I let it at 100*l.* a year below the parish valuation for rating. On the rest of the property the whole of the tithes have been remitted as permanent reductions on rent. The tithes remitted last year amounted to 148*l.*, and other permanent reductions of rent that I have made have amounted to 248*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, making altogether 396*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* since 1890. That represents as nearly as possible 11 per cent. on my rental. All of the tenants have been informed that any one who gives a fair reason for thinking that his farm is too highly rented may have it revalued during the present year. Out of 45 tenants, only one has applied for a valuation.

30,192. What was the result in that case?—In that case a man sold his farm in 1887 to my predecessor for 2,500*l.*, and he has continued on the farm as a yearly tenant at a rent which barely pays 2 per cent. So far as that part of his holding is concerned, I think he has no ground for an application for a valuation; but he also holds some other grazing land, which is some of the finest grazing land in the Vale of Towy. He has it at 55*s.* an acre, free of rates and tithes and everything. I think that, deducting the outgoings, I must get less than 2*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.* an acre for it, which I consider is very fair; but I promised him that I would look into that part of his taking during the coming spring, when I shall have an opportunity of seeing it.

30,193. Have you any leases?—Well, there are two leases on the Manoravon estate, one of which has not yet been signed; that is the Manoravon home farm; and the other will expire next Michaelmas.

30,194. That will be renewed, I suppose?—The tenant came to me about two months ago and asked permission to select a tenant who would give him the value of the whole of his crop and stock. It was to avoid making a sale there at Michaelmas. I said of course I must find out whether any of my own old tenants would like to have it, and one of them did take everything at a valuation. He gave him 1,220*l.* for it. The man pays only 110*l.* without any tithes.

30,195. You say in 1892 some farms were revalued?—Mr. Davis, of Frood Vale, a man of very great experience in the whole of Wales, valued nine farms. The total of the old rent was 625*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* The valuation by Mr. Davis came to 594*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* plus tithes. I have remitted the tithes, which brings it back of 573*l.*, which is considerably below the valuation of 1892.

30,196. Have you left the rents as they are?—Oh, they have been reduced, some of them. The farm that I was speaking of, Newfoundland, I found on Mr. Davis's valuation was 20*l.* too high, and I at once knocked off the 20*l.* There is another farm, Glantowy, the old rent was 150*l.* It was valued at 142*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* plus tithes; and I have let it at 140*l.* free of tithes, but of course on the understanding that I am not to be asked for temporary abatements again. Of course another valuation may become necessary in time.

30,197. You say the rents were raised in two cases on the expiration of three-life leases?—That was in my father's time.

30,198. Are there many three-life leases?—They are all gone now. The bulk of them expired somewhere about 1858, I think.

30,199. The land is a mixture of sheep land, grazing, and arable, mostly grazing?—Yes.

30,200. Any evictions?—There have been two cases in my time. One, the first year I got the Trewern estate, was the case of a man who had let the farm go to rack and ruin, and, acting upon very good advice, I gave him notice. The farm was afterwards taken, with several other parts attached to it, and it was let for 365*l.* a year, tithe free. It had been previously let for 365*l.* The man got into very intemperate habits and became bankrupt. Then another tenant came and offered 400*l.*, provided I would do certain buildings. I spent about 700*l.* upon that. One of the conditions of his agreement was that he was to reside himself personally on the farm. As soon as I had enlarged the house and put up the buildings, I wrote and inquired whether he was prepared to carry out that arrangement for the following Michaelmas. He said, no. He tried to foist upon me a son, who I thought would make a most undesirable tenant; in fact, poor fellow, he has been in a lunatic asylum several times since, and is there now. I refused to take him, and I said, "Well, "if you do not choose to carry out the terms "of your agreement, you must go."

30,201. Have any tenants become insolvent on your estate?—There is the one I just mentioned.

30,202. Any long periods of tenancy?—I know there is one man on the Manoravon estate—whether his family had been there before him or not, I do not know, but I know he has been on the estate for 53 or 54 years.

30,203. Do they provide for their families, and establish them in other parts?—Yes. This man has three sons out in large farms; one of them is a tenant of Lord Dynevor's, another of Lord Cawdor's, and the third had a large farm somewhere in Breconshire.

30,204. Has there been any purchase of holdings?—By the tenants you mean?

30,205. Yes, by tenants in the district?—In the neighbourhood?

30,206. Yes, in the neighbourhood?—Yes. I should imagine considerably more than one-half of the land which has been offered by auction of late years has been purchased by tenants. I can give you an instance. Sir Owen Scourfield sold, a couple of years ago, a great many outlying farms, and, I believe, in every case the tenant was the purchaser.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,207. Were they given the right of pre-emption?—Yes. About 18 months ago another estate in my neighbourhood was sold by auction at Whitland. It consisted of about 1,600 or 1,800 acres, and, perhaps, ten or a dozen farms. Every farm was bought by the tenant by auction, except one, and that was bought by a man who had been a tenant there; and the purchase money exceeded the reserve price by 2,400*l.*

30,208. Was that money borrowed?—That I am not in a position to say. However, they must have had something, or else they would not have been able to purchase; they could not have borrowed the whole of the money on mortgage.

30,209. You do not know that?—No; but the men had the reputation of being well-to-do.

Lord Kenyon.

30,210. Can you give us your expenditure on improvements?—I cannot give it you exactly, but I have no doubt since the year 1860 I have spent upon the Trewern estate very nearly, if not more than, 4,000*l.* Since 1890 I have spent on the Manoravon estate 525*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*; and I shall have to spend 1,000*l.* on it this year. I have got to put up a new farmhouse, entirely new buildings, upon a pretty good large farm.

30,211. What do you consider the interest on money invested in land?—One farm, which was purchased by my father in 1851, pays 3 per cent., and the repairs on that farm cost about 600*l.* Another I bought in 1870, in which I made rather a lucky bargain; it had been offered for sale by auction two or three times, and no purchaser found; and I bought it by private contract. That pays me 4 per cent. Immediately I gave the tenant a lease upon it. That lease expired in 1892, I think, or 1891. I offered him a fresh lease at the same rent. He said he did not want one, and he is still in the farm now, at the old rent, except that his tithes have been remitted.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,212. He is there as a yearly tenant?—As a yearly tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

30,213. Have you considered any remedies for the bad state of things?—I think the best thing is to let well alone. If the land is permanently depreciating in value, it will find its own level. I think the less interference between landlord and tenant the better. There may be some slight alteration required—I am not prepared to say what it should be—in the Agricultural Holdings Act, but beyond that I think a Land Court would be more dangerous to the tenant than it would to the landlord.

30,214. When do you think the depression began?—It began to be severely felt here about eight years ago. I entirely fail to see why a Land Court should be necessary in Wales and not in England, where the depression has been of much longer duration and much more severely felt.

30,215. Do you know of any cases of sub-letting?—Not on my own estates.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,216. Practically you are challenging a comparison between England and Wales?—Well, no. I say what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; and if we have to have a Land Court in Wales, I do not see why we should not have one in England too.

30,217. You talk about depression that is felt in England. Have you read Sir Michael Hicks Beach's evidence before the English Land Commission?—No, I do not think I have.

30,218. In his evidence he stated that his rents had been permanently reduced 50 per cent. Do you know of rents being permanently reduced in Wales to that extent?—No, I do not, and I hope I never shall hear of it either.

30,219. With regard to repairs, you say I think that you will spend 1,000*l.* on the Manor-avon estate this year?—Yes, I am afraid it will be quite so.

30,220. Do you propose to charge a percentage on that?—No. These are all old buildings that have fallen down. It would be different if I was putting up new buildings in addition to what was there when the man took them. I might then consider whether I should charge interest or not; but there are old dilapidated buildings which require entire renewal, or else the farm would be unlettable.

30,221. In one of your first statements you said that if the tenants were dissatisfied with the reductions made, you were quite willing to submit to a valuation?—Perfectly.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

30,222. Would you be willing for the tenants to appoint a valuer to meet your valuer?—I think we had better agree upon one man.

30,223. Are you willing for the tenants to have a voice in the matter?—I should say: "My valuer would be Mr. Davis, of Frood Vale, "or Mr. Rule Owen," and I should say, "Which "one will you have?" They are the two most experienced men in Wales—at least, they have had longer experience, I believe, than any other valuers in Wales.

30,224. But do you not think it would be a matter of justice to give the tenants at any rate a voice in the matter?—I do not think it would ever come to a valuation. I think if the man was reasonable, we should come to an arrangement without a valuation at all.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,225. I did not quite understand whether the percentage of 3 per cent and 4 per cent. on these estates was the percentage of interest after or before the expenditure of the 5,000*l.*?—Oh, before.

30,226. Is it that they had not let at anything like that before?—No; not if I take out what I spent in repairs.

30,227. You could not tell us at all what it would be if you took that out?—No, I could not at the moment.

30,228. I thought it would create a wrong impression if you said 3 and 4 per cent without reckoning the outgoings?—That was my meaning—the farms paid 3 and 4 per cent. before the outlay.

Mr. Grove.

30,229. You do not get many changes, I suppose?—Well, there is one farm and one farm only on which there have been a great many changes. That is the farm I spoke of just now. I am afraid it has been partly my fault, for thinking myself wiser than my father and my grandfather, and making the farm too large for the present country; and also there is another reason why it should not be a large farm; there is not sufficient land there to grow roots.

30,230. You gave an instance where three sons had gone away and taken large farms in another district?—Yes.

30,231. Do we gather from you that you think that was from money which had been saved by the father or the grandfather?—That is really what I cannot answer. He has a very cheap farm I know, and he has been there a long time.

30,232. He has been fairly successful?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN LEWIS, of Blaen Cilgoed, Narberth, called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

30,233. You wish to give evidence as to reducing the charges on land?—As to reducing the public charges on land.

30,234. What is your occupation?—I am a farmer, occupying my own land.

30,235. A tenant farmer?—No, I farm my own property. I want to reduce the charges on land so as to put the producers of food in this country on the same footing as foreigners. Secondly I want the basis of assessment for Poor and other rates to be the same for land which produces food as it is for the growth of forest trees. The landlord not to be charged income tax on what it costs him for collecting rents. All buildings and agricultural fixtures put up by the tenant for the purposes of agriculture and trade, which shall have been erected by him at his own cost and expense, to be the property of the tenant, and shall be removable by him, provided in making such removal he does not in any way injure the land or buildings belonging to the landlord, or otherwise, to put the same in like plight and condition, or as good plight and condition, as the same were before the erection of anything so removed. The tenant to have the right to remove all fruit trees planted by him on the same conditions.

Mr. Grove.

30,236. With regard to fruit trees, do you consider the climate suitable for the growth of fruit?—Oh yes, there is a good deal of fruit grown in this country in some of the vales.

Lord Kenyon.

30,237. What do you mean by reducing the charges on land? You must put them somewhere?—Well, the rates, and so on, and the income tax.

30,238. How would you levy them?—Take the charges off land—just the same as Goschen has done. He relieved local taxation. Anyway, only leave us free. Put us on the same footing as the foreigners. They pay nothing for producing so much food for this country, and we have got to pay about 25 per cent.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

30,239. How would your proposal work with respect to fruit trees?—If a tenant plants them, it is only right he should take them away; that is all.

30,240. Would they grow if he took them away somewhere?—He should have the right to take them away. They ought not to become the property of another man who never spent a sixpence on them. It is some satisfaction if he can merely sell them for firewood. It is only the justice of the case that I am looking at.

Lord Kenyon.

30,241. Would not that be rather dog-in-the-mangerish?—It would; but I have been a tenant farmer for 30 years, and have found no fault with my rent and yet I think it a tenant's right.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,242. You think a reasonable landlord would pay to have the fruit trees?—He would pay. Then the tenant would not have to go hat in hand and beg for payment; he would go as a matter of right. I do not think it is well to make people too dependent.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at Haverfordwest.

THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

The Shire Hall, Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire, Thursday, 8th March 1894.

Present:

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart. (in the Chair).

Mr. David Brynmor Jones, Q.C., M.P.
Professor Rhŷs, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederic Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. Morris, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Gentlemen, as it was stated in the evidence yesterday by one witness, and by one witness only, that it was considered that there were some tenant farmers in Pembrokeshire who had been prevented from coming forward to give evidence which otherwise might have been laid before the Commission, I desire to recall what was said by the Chairman of this Commission, Lord Carrington, in opening the proceedings at the first of our sittings. His Lordship explained that there has been an Act of Parliament passed for the protection of witnesses, and the Commissioners are determined to do all in their power to make that Act effective. We desire, without any favour on either side, to hear any witness who chooses to come and give evidence without any fear or favour. As I say, there is protection to witnesses under the Witnesses Protection Act; if that Act is insufficient to protect the witnesses that is not our fault. We desire to make the Act as efficient and as effective as it can be made. There is a further passage which I am desired to read in Lord Carrington's speech, referring to a letter which had been received from Mr. Vincent on behalf of the Landowners' Association. He said: "On behalf of the Landowners' "Association of South Wales and Monmouthshire,

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

"I offer my respectful thanks for permission "given to make this brief statement. It is con- "cerned with the following points: First, the "Association, albeit young in point of time, re- "presents a large number of landowners "possessed of great and small estates, and I am "expressly instructed to say that it is the desire "of this Executive Committee to afford all pos- "sible assistance to the Commission towards the "common object of discovering the truth. Se- "condly, an idea appears to prevail in some "quarters that this Commission exists for the "purpose of bringing contentious issues either "between political parties or between landlords "and tenants as opposed to one another. The "corollary to this wrong idea is the suggestion "that, in some form or another, tenants who "offer evidence may suffer resentment from their "landlords. On the part of my Association, I "am instructed to repudiate this idea absolutely "and to say that, apart from the fact that wit- "nesses before Royal Commissions have abundant "protection, it is the desire of the owners com- "posing this Association, that every witness "should give evidence with a feeling of absolute "security that he will not suffer in any way."

Mr. T. Rule Owen called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,243. You are, I think, Mr. T. Rule Owen, of Haverfordwest?—I am.

30,244. You desire to give evidence generally upon the various heads into which we desire to inquire, and of which we have issued a list?—I do.

30,245. The first of those, I think, is with regard to your own position and personalty. Would you kindly tell the Commission your position?—I will. I am agent for several estates in South Wales, and have for over 40 years practised as a land agent and valuer in Pembrokeshire. I am a Fellow of the Surveyors' Institution, and Diocesan Surveyor for the Diocese of St. Davids. I acquired my knowledge of farming in Lincolnshire, between the years 1851 and 1855, and subsequently in Pembrokeshire. I may say, incidentally, that I have valued about two-thirds of this county, either for letting, rating, sale or mortgage purposes, and have business connexions as valuer in all parts of South Wales.

30,246. Do you speak with regard to certain special estates?—I am prepared to speak more particularly with regard to those estates for which I am either in part or wholly agent, or with which I am connected in divers ways. Among those I may refer to the Picton Castle Estate, about 23,000 acres or thereabouts, the Penty Park Estate, comprising 2,500 acres or thereabouts, the Withybush Estate, comprising 2,000 acres or thereabouts, and other similar property if necessary, or if I am called upon to do so.

30,247. In regard to the ownership of land in this district, do you speak to various tenures?—I am prepared to speak to some. In answer to one of your questions as to, in what manor, honour, or lordship is the land in which I am interested situate, I have given you more particularly the description of it. I may say there is a question also as to the extent of such manors. I do not propose at all to touch upon anything with regard to manorial rights, because there are others more competent in this hall to deal with them, such as the stewards of the manor, and gentlemen of that kind. I may merely mention that the owners of the Picton estate are lords of several manors, but as I am not a steward, I prefer your getting the evidence, if necessary, from those who can speak more accurately.

30,248. Can you speak especially with regard to Letterston Common?—I am prepared to do so, because I enclosed it myself. Letterston Common, in the parish of Letterston, was enclosed between the years 1856 and 1864, under the Enclosure Act. Parts sold to pay expenses of enclosure, and the remainder allotted to adjoining farms, to which the right of common was previously appurtenant. The enclosures of this common, in some parts of it where taken in hand by the superior landlord, resulted certainly in improved productive power of the land. In other parts it is in much the same state as formerly.

Mr. Grove.

30,249. What was the total acreage of that?—I should think there must have been about 260 acres altogether.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,250. High ground mostly?—It is a high level ground. I daresay I might say 400 or 500 feet above the level of the sea, but level ground generally, and not mountain ground as far as regards the greater part of it.

30,251. Overrun with gorse or marshy?—Decidedly poor land, overrun with gorse, and some of it marshy. The next question is "Were "recreation grounds or allotments for the use "of the labouring poor apportioned. If so, how "used at present"?—Yes, there is a piece of recreation ground marked out by me, and it still remains as it was then.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,252. Has it been useful to the public?—Merely as a recreation ground. It is in the middle of the village, and used by the boys of the school and for other purposes. I believe fairs also have been held on the same plot.

30,253. I suppose when you say it remains as it was, you mean that no money has been laid out in smoothing it or improving it. Is that what you mean?—Not to my knowledge. It was a piece of fairly good land, in fact, the only good piece in the whole common.

30,254. It has been useful to the inhabitants as a recreation ground?—Very much so.

30,255. Has it been used as a recreation ground by them?—Yes.

30,256. Then it has in fact been used for the purposes to which it was devoted?—Yes, there were no squatters' cottages.

30,257. The next question is as to sheep runs?—As to sheep runs, I may say generally that sheep runs, such as have come before you in North Wales and in the mountainous part of South Wales, do not exist in this country, the mountain land almost invariably being part of and belonging to the adjoining owners and enclosed.

30,258. Private property, do I understand?—Private property. The next question is as to the rents of adjoining farms. Such open mountain land would be worth from 6*d.* to 1*s* per acre, dependent on situation and quality. The general condition of sheep farming I should say was good.

30,259. Then with regard to the management of the estates?—It is difficult to lay down a rule as to this. Much depends on the capability of the tenant. The question to me is not quite clear—perhaps it is my stupidity—as to its meaning; but presuming that it refers to the effect upon cultivation or management of farms under small or large owners, my answer is I think a sufficient one. As to absentee or resident landowners, in the case of a good tenant I fail to see that it would make any great difference to an incompetent tenant the landlord's presence might increase his chances of removal. I am of opinion that "absenteeism" is for many reasons most objectionable, but I am happy to be able to state that in Pembrokeshire it is very exceptional. Then as to "where there is a "difference of either language, politics, or religion "between the landlord (or agent) and the "tenant (or proposed tenant)." After a long and extensive experience I do not find that the difference of language, politics, or religion has any compromising effect on the relationship between tenants and their landlords or agents, and I state it as a fact that with regard to Pembrokeshire it does not influence them in their choice of tenants. As a corroboration of this I positively state my belief that two thirds of the tenants of this country hold different religious views from their landlords.

30,260. We have heard some divergent views about the capacity of the agents. What is your experience about agents?—Well, as an agent, I am rather diffident as to saying very much on that subject. But I may say this, in answer to your question, "Where agents are employed, "have they received any special training for "the supervision of agricultural land? If not, "is there any inconvenience or hardship expe-"rienced?" Some of them, at any rate the supply of qualified men is quite equal to the demand. The Institution of Surveyors has, and is, doing good work in educating young men for the business of land agency and land valuation, and now no one can become a fellow or associate without passing a stiff and critical examination in agriculture. I may mention that I have been since its foundation one of the fellows of the Surveyors' Institution, and one of the debaters occasionally.

30,261. May I ask upon that whether complaints have come to your knowledge as to the incompetency of agents?—No; I have never had any made to me. The next question is as to occupation. "What is the usual date of "entry?" That stands as Michaelmas in this country always. Farms are let sometimes on leases, principally from year to year. Then as to the question as to demand for leases, there is not that demand for leases that there was formerly. I have never known unwillingness on the part of a landlord to grant a lease to a good and substantial tenant. During the last few years tenants have not cared to bind themselves to pay fixed rents for a long period, and many (especially on the larger estates) consider themselves quite as secure under a yearly tenancy. As to the condition of the leaseholders, and whether their farming is superior or the contrary to that of the yearly tenants. I should say that it was entirely dependent upon the character and capabilities of the tenants. As to changes of tenancy, I see no increase or decrease in the number of changes. On most of the Pembrokeshire estates the tenancies have continued and still are in the same families who have occupied the lands for generations. Where changes have taken place, they have often arisen from the family dying out or its sole representative seeking larger and better farms.

30,262. While you speak upon the family question, is it usual that some relative succeeds?—They are always, on the estates that I have to do with given the first offer at all events.

30,263. Or removing to a larger farm?—Or removing to a larger farm.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,264. And as a matter of fact, I suppose in the majority of cases the family does come to terms?—Almost always.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,265. And in the case of removing to a larger farm, yesterday one of the points that was raised was the natural desire of a man to move upwards rather than downwards. Do you think that the tendency generally has been for a tenant to move to a larger farm, and the labourer or a smaller farmer to move into his farm, or do you think there have been many instances of farmers going down from larger to smaller farms, or out of farming operations altogether?—Almost invariably to better and larger farms.

30,266. Do you think that many of the labouring class have been enabled to take farms?—I have known many instances of it.

30,267. So that the tendency is an upward tendency?—It is decidedly.

30,268. An improving tendency rather than a decaying tendency, in your opinion?—You mean as regards the tenants taking more land.

30,269. Yes?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

30,270. Do you consider that that still applies up to the present day?—I have no hesitation in saying that there is no difficulty even at the present time in letting farms at fair and reasonable rents, and if they are let at those fair and reasonable rents, my remarks which I have previously made would apply to the present time as well.

30,271. But still I suppose you consider that there is a considerable wave of depression over the country this last two years?—Oh, most certainly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,272. Now with regard to hardships, have you known cases of hardship?—Not on any estate with which I have had connexion, unless traceable to the tenant's own negligence or misdoings, or for which he has been wholly responsible. As far as regards resuming possession of any land taken out of a field, either for planting building, or other purposes, there is always an allowance made to the tenant for the piece of land that is taken. That is an invariable rule. "If damage is done to the land in timber cutting, "is the tenant compensated." With myself, and in the case of most properties, I believe, the usual custom is to make the purchaser of the timber responsible for any damage to fences or fields, or to landlords or tenants by felling or carting away. I always, when it is sold on property I have to do with, invariably get an agreement signed by the purchaser of the timber to do those acts which I have stated. As far as mining, brick fields, and quarries are concerned, the same applies. I say, yes in the few cases they have occurred. "Agreements and leases. "What are the usual conditions of tenancy." The agreements generally are pretty much the same, but if you wish to see a copy of an agreement, which is in very general use with me, and more particularly on the Picton Castle estate, I will give it to you (producing agreement). "Are any of the clauses "considered oppressive? What effect have "they on cultivation?" I do not think any of the clauses are oppressive, and as far as they have come under my observation, they are beneficial.

30,273. The question is rather, whether the clauses are considered oppressive. Do you think that any of the clauses are considered oppressive?—No, I do not think that any of the clauses in the agreement that I have handed to you, and which I generally adopt, are at all oppressive.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,274. I see you have stated that they are beneficial, beneficial to whom?—I think beneficial to agriculture generally; that is to say, to the tenants and landlords, and that if a tenant acts up to the clauses in his agreement, it will be better for him and better for the landlord. I think they contribute, as far as the agreement that I have handed to you goes, to good farming.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,275. Are there any penalising clauses in that agreement?—Yes.

30,276. Are they enforced?—I have never known them enforced.

30,277. You have never known them enforced?—Never.

30,278. We have heard in evidence that they are inserted against a very bad tenant in case such a man is found. Is that your opinion?—You will see what the clauses are. In that agreement which you have, I fancy there is a penalising clause as to breaking up old meadow land.

30,279. You have had no very bad tenants?—I have never had a tenant who has dared to do it, for his own sake as much as his landlord's. "Are tenants usually given a copy of the agree-"ment or lease, or if Welsh-speaking, are their "contents explained to them." Most certainly, and if asked for, a copy of the agreement is given them to take home and consider. If a Welsh tenant (I mean a tenant who speaks little or no English, the latter being an exception in Pembrokeshire), he generally brings a friend who can speak English; that is, if the landlord or his agent cannot speak Welsh.

30,280. When you say that a copy is given to the tenant is he charged for the copy?—Certainly not.

30,281. Is it given in every instance?—In every instance where it is asked for; and if not, it is always read by me or by someone in my office to them. Generally they have brought a second party with them, for safety's sake I suppose. Rent varies according to locality and soil. Where fixed by me also I take into consideration distances from railways and markets. Then I am asked whether the rent is usually fixed at a gross sum, or at so much per acre. It varies in different localities, generally at so much an acre.

30,282. You have had a large experience in valuing land?—Yes.

30,283. When you fix these rents is that done after a field-to-field visit and valuation?—A field-to-field visit, and not only visit, but a field-to-field valuation sent in. I have never made a valuation in which I have not done that. As to the rent, it is usually fixed at a gross sum, or at so much per acre; it varies in different localities, but generally at so much per acre.

30,284. Do you consider that there is much uniformity in the rents of land of similar quality in the neighbourhood?—Some are cheaper than others.

30,285. Is that divergence very marked?—In some cases it is.

30,286. With regard to the smaller tenants, is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than on the larger farms?—In many cases partly consequent on the greater proportionate expenditure that has to be made by the landlord in building and partly by the greater competition for small dairy farms.

30,287. Can you give us the usual rent of average lands of different qualities in your district, that is to say on upland and lowland farms?—It is extremely difficult to say with certainty, as no county has a greater dissimilarity of soil. I should say that from 5*s.* to 10*s.* per acre on upland farms and from 10*s.* to 20*s.* on lowland farms would be about an approximate calculation. Of course in very favoured situations and circumstances or for what is called accommodation land much higher rents are obtainable. Taking out mountain and common lands I should put the average of Pembrokeshire at from 16*s.* to 17*s.* per acre.

30,288. But you told us that common lands are not common, I mean there is not much common land in the county?—I explain that in my answer to the next question. I am asked, "Is the right of pasturage over a "common, &c., taken into account when the "rent is fixed?" Occasionally. But the common lands in this county are generally of so little value that that would not materially affect the rent.

30,289. Are there any services other than payment of rent rendered by tenants in respect of their farms?—In old leases they were very common, but scarcely ever heard of now—the carriage of a load of coal and one (or two) couple of fat hens at Christmas—both of which are too small to take into consideration in the calculation of rent.

30,290. How is the rent fixed?—Generally on the basis of a valuation.

30,291. Is that valuation followed by any proposal to the tenant?—Where it is fixed on the basis of a valuation, as far as my experience goes, I have never had any difficulty in letting to a Pembrokeshire tenant at the valuation which I have put upon the farm. Where it has been by private treaty I have always found, as far as my experience goes, that a mutual arrangement is generally arrived at satisfactory to both parties.

30,292. Is that usually by private treaty?—Generally by private treaty, I should say.

30,293. And sometimes by some other means?—Not upon any properties that I have to do with.

30,294. Is it in your knowledge that sometimes there has been a tender made?—Yes.

30,295. Which of the two systems do you consider the more satisfactory?—I believe and consider letting by tender a most objectionable form of letting.

30,296. The private treaty is in your opinion the most satisfactory system?—I think so, especially in my experience of it, because it has generally been satisfactory to both parties.

30,297. On the question of letting by private treaty, is the holding practically let to the highest bidder?—No.

30,298. What are the considerations then?—I have known it in Pembrokeshire in some places let to the highest bidder, but those have been under peculiar circumstances. As a general rule I do not think landlords in this county are foolish enough to accept the highest bidder for a farm.

30,299. We heard at Tenby, I think, of trust land being let by auction?—Oh! dear me, yes. Lands are let for grazing purposes by auction constantly in this part of the country in all parts.

30,300. Is that usually accommodation land?—Accommodation land let from year to year, at least, up to November or Christmas.

30,301. Would that remark refer to farms?—No.

30,302. To accommodation land in the neighbourhood of towns?—Accommodation land both in town and country.

30,303. But accommodation land, not farms?—Not farms.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,304. Only for a few months?—No, it is let generally from about April on to December or Christmas, or some time in January of the following year.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,305. Then with regard to the capital of the tenant, do you consider that that is usually adequate or not?—I am afraid not.

30,306. And with regard to your own experience in the fixing of rent, is arbitration ever resorted to?—I have several times, often and often, been called in and been appointed by landlord and by tenant to settle the rent, my decision being final.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,307. It being stipulated beforehand that it should be final?—That is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,308. How have rents varied?—Well, they have varied during the last 40 or 50 years a good deal according to circumstances—according to the ups and downs and fluctuations in prices—but not so much so as in many counties that I have had to deal with. The question asked is: "Have rents been raised generally or in "individual cases within the last 50 years?" I say in individual cases, yes, where old leases have expired or where new tenancies have been created in the more prosperous times. On many properties I have had to deal with, however, I find the rents nearly approximate to those that existed in the time of the tithe commutation.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,309. What year was that?—Somewhere between 1834 and 1844, or something like that time.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,310. Have there been any permanent reductions?—Yes. As far as my personal knowledge goes, I know of a few permanent reductions of rent on each estate I am agent for. As to temporary reductions, they have been general on these estates during the worst years of agricultural depression, and I also, as a matter of fact, know they have been done on other estates than those that I have managed.

30,311. They have been general in bad years?—They have.

30,312. When do you consider that those bad years have been particularly prevalent?—I think it is generally accepted that the agricultural depression began somewhere about the year 1879. I think in many parts of this country it was not felt so soon as that, because we had some very good years in which the prices of cattle kept up fairly. I should take the period as regards Pembrokeshire to be between the years 1886 and 1889, and between the years 1890 and 1894. Allowances have been made upon properties that I have had to deal with during those years at rates varying from 10 to 25 per cent.

30,313. Has notice of that abatement been given?—Yes. On all properties with which I have been connected, and in some cases that that abatement would be made for a term of two or more years.

30,314. May I ask upon that, are the tenants in a position when the abatement is promised over a series of years to go to the Assessment Committee and get their rates reduced?—I am afraid not.

Mr. Grove.

30,315. When you say a series of years, what may we understand by that?—As to what?

30,316. As to the promised abatement in rent?—Two or more years.

30,317. For two or more years, extending up to four or five years, shall we say?—No, I have never had it done for more than three years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,318. Is the notice of abatement given to them in writing?—The notices of abatement in those cases that I have mentioned have been given by me to them at the rent audits previously.

30,319. Verbally?—Verbally.

30,320. In those cases when you have given a written notice, would they not be able to get a reduction of the rates if they appealed before the Assessment Committee?—I understand not, but I am not quite positive as to the regular aspect of that. I understand that they have declined to reduce the rates unless there is a permanent reduction. I may be corrected, because I really do not know for certain.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,321. Would not three years satisfy them?—I do not know.

30,322. I have heard that in some times?—I cannot say. I daresay somebody is here who could tell you. I know there were applications made for reductions, but whether they have been granted or not, I really cannot say.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,323. Has there been any variation of rent made on a re-valuation by competent land valuers?—Oh yes, several, as far as my experience goes, such re-valuation having been made by my own firm or other competent land valuers, but it has generally affected particular cases, and not at fixed intervals. As far as fluctuation of prices is concerned, no attempt to raise rents on a sitting tenant was made in the most prosperous times on any property I have been connected with.

30,324. With regard to the fluctuations in prices, I should like to have your experience?—I have taken some little trouble to go through that. Perhaps I shall weary you if I go into details.

30,325. Oh, no?—Then I will give this table as to cereals—

	Wheat (Average).	Barley (Average).	Oats (Average).

As to live stock, it is more difficult to fix definite years of fluctuation. Prices have continually risen and fallen, affected by dry or wet spring and summer, independently of the import of foreign stock. Suffice it to say that cattle which were selling a few years ago for 14*l.* and 16*l.* per head have for the last two years not realised much more than half that amount. Sheep have varied in prices considerably, but not to so great an extent. Pigs have sold well, and still do so.

30,326. Taking those figures that you have spoken to generally, can you give the average of the fall in prices; would it be 25 per cent. or more?—I should say quite that.

30,327. Would you put it as high as 30 per cent.?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,328. From what date do you take the prices?—From the year 1848.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,329. When is the rent payable?—On large estates the rent audits are fixed from three to four months after the rent accrues due legally. I have known it a month or six weeks later even than that. In fact my general rent audits on properties that I have to do with are these: the Michaelmas rents are received somewhere about the end of December or the beginning of January, and the Lady Day rents somewhere about the end of June or the first or second week in July.

30,330. Are the rents paid pretty promptly?—They have been before now very promptly, but we do not expect them to be paid promptly now. In fact, I was told only just before one of my rent audits that if any tenant came and said that if he paid his rent he would have to sell his stock at a great loss, or that his cattle would starve, the answer from the landlord was 'keep your stock alive and leave the rent."

30,331. What effect has the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally?—It induces landlords to give tenants an opportunity of realising the best prices they can for their produce, and enables them to take advantage of the rises in prices that often occur between one fair or monthly market and another. Without a preferential claim some landlords might think themselves justified in demanding their rents when legally due. Take as an example (perhaps you are more cognizant of it than I am myself) the abolition of the Law of Hypothec in Scotland, which I hear has resulted in landlords enforcing prepayment of rent. I think a similar result would follow it if the preferential claim was done away with here.

30,332. What have you to say with regard to other charges on land, such as tithe, land tax, local rates, and income tax?—Tithes must be paid by the landlord—by the owner—whoever pays them afterwards. Land tax is paid by the owner, chief rent is paid by the owner in most cases I have ever come across; local rates are paid by the tenant, income tax is paid by the tenant and allowed again by the owner.

30,333. Have local rates increased or decreased within the last 25 years?—They have increased I should say about one-third, chiefly caused by school board rate and increase in highway rate.

30,334. Are the local rates paid by the tenant or by the landlord?—By the tenant.

30,335. As to the increase of one-third can you say whether that one-third increase has taken place within any definite time: what are the times in your mind?—Within this last, I may safely say, 20 years.

30,336. What is the average size of farms?—It is very difficult to form a correct opinion in Pembrokeshire. They are so varied, I should really not like to give an opinion as to the size; not in the whole of the county.

30,337. Have any holdings been consolidated?—No, I know of no county in Great Britain where there has been less alteration.

30,338. That would apply, I suppose, to the sub-division of farms as well as to consolidation?—It would.

30,339. Is sub-letting common or not?—I should not say it was common. In those cases of sub-letting that have come under my notice the lands sub-let have been grazing lands, let often by tenants who have not sufficient capital to stock the lands themselves. These have suffered thereby to a considerable extent by overstocking, want of top-dressing, and damage to fences.

30,340. Then you think that the effect of sub-letting is not a good one?—It is prejudicial.

30,341. What have you to say with regard to large and small holdings?—As regards the relative effects of large and small holdings on the respective skill of the farmers, as a rule I should say the balance of skill lies decidedly with the larger farmer, but there are many exceptions.

30,342. Is it the larger farmer or the small farmer who feels the depression most?—I should say, more capital being invested, and more labour employed, the depression is felt most by the larger farmer.

30,343. Which of the two do you think requires the more capital for establishing his children in the world?—I presume that comes under the head of "their ability to provide for "their families." It is very difficult to give a positive opinion, but I should put it thus. The large farmer lives in better style than his smaller, and perhaps poorer neighbour, and their families require, as a rule, more outlay on education and setting up in the world. The smaller farmer lives harder, and his children cost him less to place in the world or assist him on his farm.

30,344. What have you to say with regard to the state of cultivation and the nature of farming which is pursued here?—The course of farming which is adopted in this country is almost universally the four-course system.

30,345. More than one variety of the four-course system?—Oh, yes, a great many.

30,346. Would you give us some details?—I should say the general rule was taking in a field to grass to lay oats. Sometimes I have known instances where there is such a variety; another crop of lay oats afterwards. Then a green crop and barley, seeds and barley. There are so many varieties dependent upon the vagaries and fancies of the tenant farmer.

30,347. Is there any scarcity of labour?—Oh, yes, and a corresponding difficulty in farmers keeping up fences, ditches, water courses, &c., in many districts; while in others no great change is perceptible. There is a difficulty in obtaining maid servants.

30,348. Is there any difficulty in obtaining female servants?—Oh, yes, and that is unfortunate in Pembrokeshire, because as a rule it is exceptional for men to do milking; therefore it tells more upon the farmers where there is scarcity of labour.

30,349. I think you say the milking is not often done by the men?—Very exceptionally. I have known one or two instances of it, but no more.

30,350. What is your opinion as to the reason of the scarcity of labour?—The scarcity of labour there are one or two reasons for. The principal reason is the desire of the labourers of course to obtain as much money as they can. Able bodied men leave this country and go to what we call the hills, the colliery districts——

30,351. To the coal fields, Glamorganshire?—Yes, finding that they can get a very much higher rate of wages, even if they have to do harder work for it, that induces them to leave.

30,352. Is there also the temptation that was mentioned to us yesterday of going into towns, migrating towards the towns from the country districts?—Oh, yes. I think that is another very great reason for it, the desire to be in a large place instead of in the country; but I do not think that affects it in Pembrokeshire so much as the anticipation of realising better wages.

30,353. Do you think that the fences are materially deteriorating then for want of labour?—In some parts of the country, more particularly in the south of the country, I think they are.

30,354. And the ditches, the consequent draining of the land?—Anything connected with either fencing, or draining, or the ditches, as you have put it.

30,355. What presses me is that the ditches are rather connected with the water courses, so that my question was rather directed to the question whether the drainage of the land was so much interfered with for want of clearing out the water courses?—I do not think that that has arisen yet.

30,356. Is there land going out of cultivation?—Not to any great extent.

30,357. Or any insufficiently cultivated?—Yes, I think some land in some places is necessarily insufficiently cultivated, because there has not been the labour there to get it done, but not to any extent.

30,358. I suppose a good deal of land has been laid down to grass?—Yes, within the last 15 or 20 years a considerable quantity of land.

30,359. Has any waste land been reclaimed by the tenants?—It is difficult to say. Knowing all Pembrokeshire well I should consider that a fair proportion of land had been reclaimed by tenants, i.e., furzey fields grubbed up and cultivated, and pieces of mountain land enclosed and cultivated. With regard to wet moorland drained, the landlord has generally found material and the tenant labour.

30,360. Do you draw any distinction here between waste land and moor land in your answer?—Yes.

30,361. You state here "some waste land "reclaimed by tenants; in case of moor land "landlord has co-operated." Has he not generally co-operated?—I think my answer should read thus: Furzey fields grubbed up and cultivated, and pieces of mountain land enclosed and cultivated. With regard to wet moor land drained, that is rather a different affair; there the landlord has generally been asked and almost invariably found material and the tenant labour.

30,362. How has the rough land been reclaimed?—By grubbing up the furze if it is rough land.

30,363. And ploughing?—Then ploughing and corning.

30,364. Has there been any embanking of rivers?—No, nothing very tangible in this part of the country.

30,365. When the arable land gives place to pasture land, at whose expense is that done?—When the arable land is converted into pasture land you mean.

30,366. Yes?—By the tenant.

30,367. Does the landlord ever find the seeds?—I have known cases in which he has. I do not think it is general.

30,368. Has there been an increase in the root crops?—Considerable.

30,369. And the summer fallowing?—That is now very exceptional.

30,370. What do you consider the general effect of these changes has been?—It has been very beneficial.

30,371. Would you specify any improvements that have been made by landlords and tenants?—By the landlords building new homesteads and increased shed accommodation, finding pipes or stones for draining, or gates and posts when required. Then as to the tenants, they do the hauling, and the cleaning of land where they think it will pay them.

30,372. In cases of improvements partly or wholly effected by the tenant, is there any compensation obtainable?—I have answered that in the answer to the previous question, which was "in the case of co-operation in improvement what is the part usually undertaken by each, and how is remuneration secured to either party." I say with the exception of draining I know of no co-operation in improvements, nor, with the exception of a few cases where interest has been charged on increased out-building accommodation, do I know of any remuneration to the landlord. In the same way in the case of improvements partly or wholly effected by a tenant.

30,373. That is the point?—I do not know of any remuneration given to the tenant.

30,374. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, could you speak to that Act and its application in this county?—Yes. The question is "Do you know of instances "where either party contracts out." The answer is, only out of section 33, I should say.

30,375. That is as to six months' notice?—Six months' notice. Then I am asked, "Do farmers often apply for their landlords' "written consent for specific improvements." No, because those improvements are generally done by the landlord in this county.

30,376. What is the custom of the country?—As to what?

30,378. Are there any liabilities on the tenant for dilapidations?—That is dependent on leases or agreements.

30,379. Are there any cases of compensation being given by the valuers which in your opinion has been insufficient?—I know of no compensation being given, permanent improvements being (as before stated) made by the landlords. In the case of ordinary improvements they are never asked for, the tenant deriving the benefit of them by increased production. I have, however, in some cases, been called in to value between landlord and tenant for small improvements on a tenant leaving. I have known of that in some places this last year.

30,380. I have it here in the précis of your evidence which has been submitted to me that you know of no cases of insufficient compensation, but that you would explain?—That is the only explanation I have. I have never had any applications or seen any written applications for compensation made.

30,381. Have any applications been made for compensation for general improvement?—No.

30,382. Is there any tenant right?—No.

30,383. He has no right to dispose of the goodwill of his tenancy?—Oh no.

30,384. Do the farmers know of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I think there is great ignorance on the part of the farmers with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act.

30,385. You have experience of the Welsh part of Pembrokeshire as also of the English part?—I have.

30,386. Do you think that they would be likely to know more about it if it was printed and published in Welsh?—Not in its present state. If you will allow me, I will give you my opinion of the Act.

30,387. Yes, by all means, I shall be very glad to hear your views?—In my opinion and experience, I cannot say that it is actually not workable. I think it is partially so, and partially satisfactory, but might be made much more so. Few tenant farmers in this county understand its provisions. On this point I would respectfully suggest to the Commissioners that an amended Agricultural Holdings Act would in my opinion do a very great deal of good. The great want of the present Act is, that it does not deal sufficiently with the compulsory clauses so far as the items of valuation are concerned, which should be uniform throughout the country. The Act is overburdened with legal phraseology of uncertain intention. Now almost every county has its own particular customs. The Act deals mostly with those seldom needed, and I would suggest most respectfully to the Commissioners that if they would call a meeting or a conference, I might call it, of members of those associations who have constantly to administer the Act, I think with their assistance, and with the knowledge of the Commissioners, they would be able to recommend one for universal use. I do not believe that any Act that may be the outcome of this Commission will do any material good unless all parties connected with agriculture work together with a will and with a real intention of just concession on every side. Of course any Act that renders a farmer's position more secure must also protect the landlords' interests. Hence my suggestion to you, gentlemen, that you take into your counsel those men who have constantly throughout Great Britain the administration of the Act, such as it is.

30,388. I am sure your suggestion will receive the very greatest attention at our hands?—I can only say that I am sure, on behalf of the Institution of Surveyors, which represents all the landed interests of Great Britain, there is not a man among them any more than myself who would not most willingly give his time and place it at the disposal of the Commissioners here, or anywhere else where it was wanted.

30,389. Have you anything further to say with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I think not now.

30,390. Then we can go on, perhaps, to the next item upon the syllabus, which has to do with game?—Game is generally preserved by the large landlords. Rabbits and hares are not preserved on lands farmed by tenants as a rule. Tenants do generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. With regard to the damage done by game to the crops and pastures of tenant farmers, I should say home farms immediately surrounding preserved covers are damaged in some instances. I have known compensation paid by landlords either in specie or reduction of rent. In every case where I am connected with an estate, the tenants have and exercise the right to kill the rabbits on their farms. With regard to the next question: "Are tenants expected to beat coverts, "&c. when their landlords go out shooting," I can only say "No," but they often ask permission to do so. Then I am asked, "How does "game preserving otherwise affect cultivation." With the exception of what I have mentioned, I should say in no perceptible degree in this county except in immediate properties surrounding large covers, where, no doubt, they at one time, more especially before the Ground Game Act was passed, have done considerable damage.

With regard to the relations between landlord and tenant, how game has affected them, I should say that it has in former times given rise to unpleasantness, which has been modified by the Ground Game Act. As to winged game, I find tenants always anxious to preserve them. Then as affecting labourers, in no way, excepting as I heard a friend of mine say in Pembroke, that it turns out more poachers than there were before. To the public generally, I think, the preservation of game is a benefit.

30,391. Then about offences against the Game Laws, have they increased?—Oh, a very minute proportion indeed in this country. Offences against the person, I may say none.

30,392. What is your opinion as to the law of trespass?—I do not think it is satisfactory. I think it ought to be a great deal stricter than it is for the benefit of the farmers.

30,393. In what way has the law of trespass given trouble?—In this way. They have a difficulty in keeping people off their farms who go there now, we will say, the mushroom gathering for one thing, and the blackberrying. Many of them would not object to the children doing it, but, what is worse than all, the breaking in of dogs, and tearing down fences by those half of whom have no business to have a gun or a dog in their possession.

30,394. You think the mushrooms and the blackberries ought to belong to the occupier?—I think they ought to do most certainly.

30,395. In respect to agricultural education, what is being done. Will you tell us about that?—I am asked what attention is being paid in regard, first of all, to fruit culture. None, except by market gardeners. With regard to forestry, none. With regard to poultry farming, none; principally supplied by farmers and cottagers, but no poultry farms as generally understood by poultry rearing and farming.

30,396. Any bee keeping?—Bee keeping very little, and increasing. Some of these are sources of profit, and might be made more so. With regard to butter and cheese making, instruction has been given lately, principally by lectures on same, and butter making exhibitions.

30,397. Is that the work of the county council under the Technical Instruction Act?—No, I think they were not introduced by the county council; I think it was by private enterprise more than anything else. Instruction by field experiments, none. In other agricultural subjects, yes, by courses of lectures delivered throughout the country.

30,398. Where are the lecturers from, are they from the college at Aberystwith?—They are. "To what extent are they being availed of?" To a small and increasing extent. "Facilities for the carriage and disposal of agricultural produce; how affected by railway rates?" Very much in this district, railway carriage being exceedingly high and for some goods almost prohibitive.

30,399. Have they been increased of late years?—Yes. We all expected a decrease after the Commission upon Railway Rates and everything of that sort, but we have not found it help us down here yet. As for instances of co-operation and combination between landlord and tenant, none; between employers and employed, none; as to co-operation among farmers for purchasing or analysing farm stuffs and manures, I think little, if any; but I think samples of manures have been more frequently sent away by individual farmers than formerly. Then "For purposes of production, e.g., in butter factories," in a few instances—but butter factories, I fear, are not succeeding as they deserve to do.

30,400. Can you give any reason for that?—Old-fashioned notions among people who live 267 miles away from London as to their own system being better than what anybody else can show them. "For selling produce?" No. "For farming operations generally, threshing, harvesting, sheep-shearing." Nothing but an indefinite mutual arrangement to help one another. Then I am asked to what extent, if at all, do farmers insure their stock, crops, implements, or buildings; many insurances are, no doubt, effected, but it is not so general a movement as it should be. With regard to combination in the nature of a trade union, I know of no such combination as that referred to. "To what extent do farmers and agricultural "labourers avail themselves of benefit socie-"ties?" To a very small degree. "Life assurance societies?" To a very small degree.

30,401. Are the benefit societies in this country that do exist in a sound condition?—I should be very sorry after what I have read in the papers lately to say that they were all in that favourable position; it is very doubtful, but the benefit societies so far as I know them, I think, are in a pretty sound condition.

30,402. I am glad to know that, but have any of them closed their doors?—No. Then I am asked "What other provident institutions are "used by them?" Savings banks, but not very largely, and for this reason, that since the joint stock banks have given interest upon small deposits the deposits in savings banks have greatly decreased.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,403. Does that apply to the Government Savings Bank?—I think in all savings banks the deposits have been less than they were before the bankers gave interest upon small sums.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,404. How small an amount would they receive, generally speaking?—Oh, 5*l.* if you like. Then I come to the heading, "The general con-"dition of the farming population." The first question is, "Are there in your district many "peasant proprietors or small freeholders who "have inherited their holdings from their ances-"tors." In some parts of the country there are several, but the number of small freeholders who have bought within the last forty years is in excess of the former class. Their number has not decreased in any sensible degree lately. Then, "Are there many tenant farmers who "have bought either their own or other holdings "for their occupation in this district? If so, by "what circumstances were they induced to do so?" Yes, I would suggest the following motives. To add to lands already their own. To become owners of land and enjoy in perpetuity the fruits of their outlay. A desire to remain in the house in which they were bred and born. "Was the purchase money "excessive; what proportion of it (if any) did "they borrow, from what source, at what "interest, and how soon (if at all) were they able "to pay off such incumbrances." Well, being an auctioneer myself, and having sold three-fourths of what has been sold in this country, I think I may give this answer; in some cases where competition was great the properties sold fetched a high price, in other cases prices were in my opinion as a land valuer, reasonable, and in some cases less than the actual value. Many bought and paid from their own private resources, many borrowed half and two-thirds the purchase money at, I should say, an average rate of 4 per cent., but I know cases where farms have been offered to and bought by the tenants at much lower prices than the tenants subsequently realised for them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,405. Is it that they have sold again at a higher price, or improved price?—Yes.

30,406. An average price of 4 per cent.?—An average price of 4 per cent.

30,407. Therefore, you know of some cases, I dare say, in which the money has been borrowed at 3½ per cent., as we were told yesterday?—Yes, I have known lately, I dare say, 3½ per cent.

30,408. But 4 per cent. would be about the average?—About the average over the time I speak of. "What is the present condition of such "freeholders, as compared with the yearly "tenants about them?"—Well, it differs a great deal, but where money was borrowed (say in the proportion of half or two thirds) and at 4 per cent. interest, I should unhesitatingly say that the tenant farmers about there were better off than the purchasers, a mortgagee being a harder man to deal with than a landlord, and demanding the interest on his money, whereas a landlord would give considerable time for his rent.

30,409. As against that the landlord has security of tenure?—He has security of tenure, but the question I was answering was, what was the present condition of the small freeholders?

30,410. Quite so; they have security of tenure for which they have paid?—Excepting the security which they have secured by buying their farms, I should say they are not a bit better off, or as well off as the tenant farmer who is living on his farm, and who has not invested money and borrowed money to pay for his farm. Then "to what extent do tenant farmers and

"their wives take part in the manual labour of "their farms." Many of the class of small farmers and their wives work very hard, and since labour has been so difficult to obtain, do the principal work of the farm themselves. In hundreds of cases the farms are so small that the tenant is able and willing to do the work himself, and has always been accustomed to do so, his wife also managing the household and dairy department. I have known such men do well, and have been applied to by them for larger farms, or for farms for their sons, whom they have set up in them. "Do their children work "at home?" Often. "If so are they in receipt "of wages, or how otherwise remunerated?" Generally, for their keep and clothing.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,411. Does that apply to the last ten years, what you said just now as to their being able to set up their sons?—I should think it has been gradually increasing in the last ten years most materially.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,412. When the children work at home do they get any wages?—Generally they work for their keep and their clothing. That is my opinion, but a farmer witness would be able to tell you better than I. That is my experience.

30,413. Then will you kindly go on to the next question, which is as to the provision made for them by their parents on marriage or independent settlement in life?—I am not in a very good position to say what the provision is, but I have let many farms to the sons of tenants whose fathers have set those sons up and given security for the rent if necessary.

30,414. In regard to the labourers what proportion of the farm labour is hired as compared with that rendered by members of the household?—I am not really in a position to state that nor to answer the questions bearing upon that.

30,415. Cottage accommodation is the next point. We have been told in some parts of the country that it is exceedingly bad?—The old-fashioned "Clom" cottages are in many districts disappearing and have been replaced by stone and slate ones. The immigration of labour to the colliery districts and large centres of population have caused many cottages to be vacated. I find good cottages springing up rapidly throughout the country wherever there is a requisition for them. Then as to the requirements of thorough cultivation. I find that lately the demand is not equal to the supply, and that the farmers have more difficulty in getting the occupant than the cottage. Three years ago I did up four cottages on a large farm near Haverfordwest, two only of them have since been occupied, and one has gone out of occupation within this last three weeks.

30,416. Is there usually any land attached to these cottages?—On large farms a small holding is generally attached to the cottage and always a garden.

30,417. From whom does the cottager hold the house—from the farmer or from the landlord?

—It is generally held of the tenant of the farm, most often with a restrictive condition as to employment. As to length of notice, I believe it varies.

30,418. That is to say that the farmer would only let it to a man in his own employment?—Just so. Then with regard to the relative standard of comfort. I do not presume to give an opinion upon that. The next thing is "Has "there been any considerable migration of "farmers or labourers from your district within "the last 50 years. If so, owing to what cause "and whither have they migrated." No, not of farmers to any considerable extent. I know of several men who have gone away from this country to farm, but not in my opinion to any considerable extent. But a considerable number of labourers, as I have stated before, have gone, and they have gone principally to the colliery districts. With regard to the extent of dairies and farming accounts which are kept by the farmers, I should say they kept to a very small extent by the ordinary tenant farmer. With regard to the different periods of the depression of late, as I have already stated, I think universally in Wales it might be considered to be from about 1879 or 1880; but it has been felt most by the farmers in this country from the year 1885.

30,419. What are the causes of the depression in your opinion?—Foreign competition, increase of rates, increase of wages. The classes chiefly affected are the owners of the soil, the tenant farmers, and naturally the trade in agricultural districts.

30,420. In your opinion what are the remedies?—Better methods of farming; more attention to the breeding of good stock; stricter economy and care with regard to consumption and waste of provender; more attention to the making, keeping, and increased use of manure, for I consider that a large proportion of the land of this country might be made to produce half as much again as it now does; equalization of rating and taxes, because I consider the land is overtaxed in proportion to anything else in this country, and has to pay far more than its fair share of rates and taxes. I would suggest, but I do it with all becoming spirit, that there should be universal free trade, or until that time arrives a sufficiently operative protective duty to enable the farmer to carry on his calling at a fair remuneration with a minimum of loss to the general public. I must also add that I do not consider that anyone can well say what would be the proper remedies to suggest, because I do not think that up to the present time we have quite found out what the disease is, and until we do so it is difficult to suggest a remedy. I think it is a matter of the gravest consideration to all who are interested in the agricultural prospects of the country, and that it will require the united wisdom of gentlemen like yourself to put us right on that matter. The next point is as to the relations between landlord and tenant, and whether they are friendly or otherwise. I should say they were very friendly through the country as a rule. Where the ception exists it is chiefly due to the idiosyncrasy of the individual landlord or tenant.

30,421. Is there any other point, Mr. Rule Owen, upon which you would like to give us any information?—There are some further questions I should like to refer to. I wish, as you have listened to the complaints that have been made, to give you some instances to show that we in Pembrokeshire do not all deserve the complaints, at all events, and as you have asked a question "What money have you spent in "repairs and improvements. Specify the period "over which you have spent this money and "whether you have charged interest." I would, with your permission, state some of the instances which have come under my immediate cognizance. On the Withybush estate, which is an estate of 2,000 acres or thereabouts—the gross rental—I give the gross rental, which, as you know, gentlemen, very often is not approximate to what the net rental is, for many reasons, which I need not mention—the gross rental is 1,800*l.* a year. The expenditure during the last 13 years has been 3,578*l.* in improvements and repairs, independently of fencing, making an average annual expenditure of 275*l.*, equal to 15 per cent. on the gross rental. There has been no interest charged to the tenants in any case. On the Pent-y-park estate of 2,500 acres or thereabouts the gross rental being 1,430*l.*, the expenditure during the last 13 years has been 2,118*l.* in improvements and repairs. The average annual repairs have been 163*l.*, equal to 8 per cent. on the gross rental. There has been no interest charged the tenants in any case. On the Picton Castle estate I have no doubt you have had or will have other evidence, but with regard to just passing a remark about it, I would say that the estate consists of about 23,000 acres of land or thereabouts, the gross rental of which is about 21,000*l.* a year, including house property, which is very extensive, in several of the towns in this county. The expenditure on improvements and repairs during the last 15 years on which no interest has been charged has been 26,358*l.* and the average annual expenditure 1,757*l.* On this sum (which has generally passed through my hands, I having to inspect the buildings after the repairs, and so on, have been done) there has been no interest charged whatever. There has been a still larger amount paid in repairs in some instances in which interest for increased accommodation and new buildings has been charged, but that has not been taken into account in my figures. The general run on the Picton Castle estate I found from calculations furnished by one who is better able to supply the information than myself, that, calculated on the annual outlay for repairs, leaves 13*l.* 2*s.* per cent. of the income of the estate.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,422. Of the gross rental?—Of the gross rental.

30,423. Does that imply the landed property mostly the land?—Oh, yes, the landed property.

30,424. It does not include the houses?—It does not include the house property.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,425. The house property would be land let on building leases and rents?—A great many of the houses in this town belong to the Picton Castle estate. With regard to another estate, the Stanley estate, with which I have had something to do for a few years, I can only say that on the two farms which were out of lease there were reductions made of 10 per cent. three or four years ago, permanent reductions of rent, and since then there has been 15 per cent. and 20 per cent. allowed on the estate. Repairs are done by the landlord on the farms which are not under lease, and no interest charged for any outlay on them.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,426. Those last ones are abatements rather than reductions—the 15 and 20 per cent. are abatements, I suppose, are they not?—Yes, abatements.

Mr. Grove.

30,427. But they are on the top of the reduction?—On the top of the permanent reduction that was made some years before. I could mention half a dozen others; but there is only one other question that is asked, and that is, "How many and what cases have you on your "estates, of families having held the same farms "for generations." I could give you that if you wish to have it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,428. We should like it very much, if you please?—On the Picton Castle estate many families have continued tenants for many generations. Speaking from actual knowledge, during the last 40 years the changes of tenants have been few, considering their number, the rule of the estate being never to disturb a tenant unless for some justifiable cause. Should a tenant die, it is also the rule to give a member of his family the first chance of taking it, provided they are able to do so. The above remarks equally apply to all the properties I am connected with, and I believe it to be generally so, on all the large estates of this country. Gentlemen, I do not know whether there is any other information that you require of me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,429. Mr. Rule Owen, you have been good enough to call our attention to the Agricultural Holdings Act. Can you tell me whether there have been many cases under that Act?—Very few indeed, sir.

30,430. In this part of the country?—I scarcely know one—not in Pembrokeshire. I believe there have been two or three, but not that I have had to do with.

30,431. Have they come into court at all. I mean, as distinct from arbitration?—I do not think they have.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

30,432. Among the improvements that you suggest in the Agricultural Holdings Act, is there any improvement with regard to the procedure that you would suggest. Let me remind you first that a tenant has to give two months' notice?—Yes.

30,433. And then the machinery of the Act as to the appointment of referees and umpire is a little complicated?—Very much so.

30,434. It makes a difference; you may have either to go to the Land Commissioners for England or to the County Court?—Yes. I think both these points I should have suggested improvements on.

30,435. Do you think there would be any complaint on the part of land owners if the two months' notice were got rid of?—I do not think so.

30,436. You do not see any substantial advantage to the landlord in the requirement of the two months' notice, do you?—I do not, so long as there is sufficient time; I think there should be some notice.

30,437. The point is this, that if a tenant omits, whether by carelessness, or momentary forgetfulness, or else trusting to his landlord's generosity, to give notice he loses his claim for compensation, under the Act?—I think, sir, that if they understood the Act better, they would be very much more careful about doing those things; they would see the advantage of it, and they would understand the Act, and, subject to any amendments which you gentlemen may suggest, they would be very much more likely to adopt it than they have ever done before, and I think it would be then one of the most satisfactory Acts if you could have those alterations.

30,438. I am coming to what may be called the substance of the Act in a moment or two, but what I want to know from you, as a gentleman of very great experience, is whether there would be any sensible objection to getting rid of this requirement of notice. I may tell you, the points as to notice of these claims under an Act of this kind and under the Employers' Liability Act are matters which are attracting a good deal of attention just now. Under the Act of 1880, for instance, notice had to be given. Is there any reason that you can suggest for making the giving of this notice a condition of the right to compensation?—I think it would be only fair to the landlords that they should have an opportunity of doing those things themselves.

30,439. But I am not talking of the notice that has to be given before the improvements in Part 1 of the First Schedule are done?—I beg your pardon.

30,440. I thought you did not quite follow me?—Which is the one you are referring to?

30,441. It is the clause as to procedure—Section 7 "a tenant claiming compensation "under this Act shall, two months at least before "the determination of the tenancy give notice "in writing of his intention to make the "claim"?—I think there ought to be a notice because in the same way the Act, if honestly drawn and properly applied, would be one for the mutual arrangement and accommodation of both parties, and I think that the landlord should have the same opportunity if his tenant is going to make a claim, of considering any just and fair claims which he would admit to be just claims on his part, and of which he would not know or might not know, unless the tenant gave him notice himself.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

30,442. But the thing falls equally upon the landlord, because if the landlord has a counter claim he must give notice of his counter claim before the determination of the tenancy, or within 14 days?—Yes.

30,443. And if he forgets, he has lost his counter claim. What I am putting to you is, do you not think it will be much fairer, if at the end of a tenancy either party might bring a claim for compensation against the other?—I do not see that really it is a matter which would be very much fairer.

30,444. I do not think the notice is objected to myself?—I have no doubt if we were considering it together, and I was honoured by your persuasive abilities, it might make me think differently to what I do, but at present my opinion is that it is not necessary.

30,445. I have not made up my mind on the point, but I want to know whether you could suggest any reason for the abolishing of this restriction?—Not at the present time, sir.

30,446. What improvement in procedure would you suggest as to the appointment of a referee?—I do not know. I have not made up my mind at all more than to offer these general remarks and suggestions now, but as a rule I think that the Act is not as good as it ought to be, and that it might be made very much better, but I am not prepared to day to go with any suggestions further than those I have already made.

30,447. Then of course if you are not prepared it is hardly worth while my asking the questions that I was going to ask you on this point. I intended to ask you whether you thought that the tenant might be allowed to make the improvements in Part 1 of the First Schedule, or any of them, without the consent of the landlord being required?—No, I do not.

30,448. Not formation of silos, for instance?—No, I think that they ought to give the landlords the first chance of doing those works in Schedule 1, and I am certain of this, that many of the landlords, taking into consideration the bad times, would be prepared to do so.

30,449. Yes, but then if a landlord refused to do so, the tenant cannot get any of these things done?—Then the tenant can give notice to the landlord that he is going to do them himself.

30,450. Where do you find that?—Can he not—under the first Act?

30,451. In Part 2 as to drainage, for instance, all that is required is that the tenant should give notice to his landlord, and he may drain then and get compensation for it?—Yes, that is so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

30,452. But supposing he wants to enlarge a cowshed, for instance, and he gives notice to his landlord, and the landlord does not consent, he must do it at his own risk?—Yes, to a certain extent.

30,453. What do you say about that; do you not think it would be for the general benefit of all parties that if a man is willing to enlarge a building, or to form a silo, he should be able to do it?—I do not wish to commit myself to the principle at once, but I think it is capable of being, with proper reservations, applied.

30,454. I will tell you what is in my mind, that in case the tenant gives notice to the landlord to do one of those improvements in Part 1, and the landlord says "No, I will not "consent; I do not think it is really reason-"able under the circumstances," that there should be an appeal to a third person or referee?—I am not prepared to say that I would approve of the alteration yet. I think it might assume a tangible form that would be beneficial to both parties.

30,455. Where is the particular vagueness which you are referring to as to the nature of the improvements for which compensation is to be given?—The vagueness is with regard more particularly to the difficulty that a small tenant farmer would have in understanding the verbiage of the Act.

30,456. Certainly, I quite agree in that?—I think that it might be made much simpler and that the improvements which, generally speaking, are done now either under the custom of the country, or anything else, are not ones with which the Act deals as it should, and that it should specify the allowances that may be made in a clearer way than it does. I think I must, with all due deference to you, say that I would prefer not giving any more answers upon this just at present, but I shall be only too pleased at any future time to do so.

30,457. Very well. Now would you kindly give me your opinion upon this clause in the agreements upon which we have had a good deal of conflicting evidence. There is a proviso in this agreement which is very much in the same terms that we have seen it in many other agreements?—I presume it is.

30,458. It is to this effect. Provided that in the event of the tenant becoming bankrupt, or insolvent, or having a receiving order made against him, or of any proceedings being instituted for liquidation, or arrangement with his creditors, or making an assignment of his goods or on breach by the tenant of any or either of the foregoing stipulations, it shall be lawful but not obligatory for the landlords to re-enter and expel the tenant from the holding, and the tenancy shall be determined. Do you think this power of re-entry upon insolvency is fair or just to the parties concerned, and to the persons who are to deal with them—tradesmen and others?—It seems a little hard upon the face of it but it is one that has acted very well up to the present time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

30,459. The Inspector-General in Bankruptcy told us in London that he considered it, upon the whole, detrimental to the interest of all parties concerned. It may discourage giving credit to a tenant farmer, for one thing, may it not—the knowledge which people have of this clause being in his agreement would have that effect, would it not?—Yes, it might. I have not made up my opinion at all upon that.

30,460. What advantage can you suggest has come from the proviso in that clause?—One judges generally things by how they work, and I have never heard any objection made either by the landlord or the tenant as to the working. I am not prepared to suggest a remedy for it now.

30,461. Do you find still that there is no difficulty in letting farms?—None whatever.

30,462. There are many applications for a vacant farm in Pembrokeshire?—Well, I have not a vacant farm on any estate that I have to do with. There was a sign of one being vacant at Michaelmas next, and just before I had the pleasure of meeting you gentlemen I had an application for it.

30,463. How many applications do you generally get, Mr. Owen?—I generally get one or two applications.

30,464. We heard yesterday, I think, that there were generally five or six, or even more?—I have known it in more prosperous times that there have been more, but I think I do not perhaps get so many as a great many people do on the estates that I have to do with, because they all know that till the tenant's family has been dealt with there will be no acceptation of any tenancy whatever.

30,465. Then we can hardly say that the death of a particular farmer creates a vacancy. I am referring to the case where there is a vacant farm to which nobody has any particular pretension?—Yes, I have no doubt, I should have two or three applications for it, if it was on any estate I had to do with.

30,466. Do you think that what is called land hunger has increased or decreased lately in Pembrokeshire?—I cannot fancy it is increasing.

30,467. You think that the depression in agriculture does tend to make people more careful about taking farms?—Yes, to make people more cautious in taking farms.

30,468. In comparing the condition of the tenant farmer and the freehold proprietor you referred to the security of tenure as one of the advantages of the latter's position, did you not?—Yes.

30,469. Then I may take it that, upon the whole, you do think security of tenure a good thing for a person who has to develop the land?—It depends entirely upon what security of tenure means, and that I have never had properly explained to me yet.

30,470. Well, I will give you an instance. There was a bill brought in, the Tenure of Land (Wales) Bill, which I should like to call your attention to. This, of course, is not an Act of Parliament, but it was a Bill that was brought in some few years ago?—Yes, I understand you.

30,471. You may have seen something about it. This is the sort of security of tenure that I suppose is meant by the witnesses who have given evidence before us, as we have had evidence which shows a strong desire for security of tenure on the part of the tenant farmers of Wales; a tenant is not to be removed except for breach of certain statutory conditions. That is to say, for instance, he is to pay his rent at the appointed time, or within three months thereafter; he shall not commit or permit persistent waste or dilapidation of buildings or fences, or after notice has been given by the landlord to the tenant not to commit such a waste; then that the tenant shall not commit any breach of the judicial conditions of tenancy after notice by the landlord to desist from the particular breach complained of. It is also provided by this Bill that there can be a court to which both parties can have access?—So I thought when you read the first part.

30,472. That is the sort of security of tenure, I suppose, that people are asking for?—I distinctly and positively disagree with the advantage of a Land Court to decide these things. I think it would be most prejudicial, both to the interests of the landlords and of the tenants.

30,473. Will you tell me why it should be so to the tenant?—Because I think they could make very much better terms with their landlords, and they would be much more likely to get what they want with the one than with the other.

30,474. Then if tenant farmers can make better terms with a landlord why do tenant farmers continually come to us and say they want a Land Court?—I do not think that as a rule they do; I think if you were to canvass Wales, 90 out of 100 would probably object to a Land Court.

30,475. I want to know why the tenant should object to a Land Court?—Why the tenants object to a Land Court?

30,476. No; why should he object?—For the same reason that I do, I presume. I am a tenant farmer too.

30,477. What is that reason?—I will give you my objection if you wish. I thought I might be asked by you this question, at least, not by you personally, but by the Commission. I think that a Land Court assumes a state of things which does not exist in Wales, and that is, that landowners and tenants are more dishonest and incapable than in other parts of the kingdom, and that the present state of agricultural depression is the result of past arrangements between them, also that a Land Court would rectify the evil. This, I submit, is not nor would be the case. Tenants have thriven and would do so again under present arrangements, provided their burdens were lessened and they were given fair play. I think the result of a Land Court would be to make landowners simply annuitants on their properties, and that the doing away of freedom of contract would result in the loss of all individual enterprise and the driving out of the country part of the spending element in it, and instead of "union of hearts," would lead to estrangement and bitterness which does not now exist. I do not believe there are a dozen farmers in this country who would not rather make their bargain with another individual of business capacity than with any other authority under the sun, especially when that other authority has to make his bargain for and not with him. That is my opinion.

30,478. Part of those reasons we have had suggested before. Mr. Wynne, of Peniarth, put in language very much the same, one of the main points that you make there; but still let me put this case to you: Suppose a landowner gives a tenant farmer a notice to quit, saying: "I am not really wishing you to go away, but "you must pay 10*l.* a year more rent, and that "is a fair rent," and the tenant farmer says: "Well, I do not think that is a fair rent; I do "not think I can pay 10*l.* more;" how would the tenant farmer be prejudiced by having some impartial valuer, I do not care whether it is a court or a valuer, but some impartial third person to decide the question of whether the proposed increase of rent was or was not fair?—I do not think there would be any objection to an impartial person.

30,479. No objection to an impartial valuer?—No.

30,480. Well, really that is the question of principle. I was interested in your evidence concerning the freehold proprietors. My attention has been attracted to an article upon Pembrokeshire, which appeared in the "Western Mail" some time ago?—Yes.

30,481. It is an interesting article, and the truth of the following passage I am assured of by the writer of the article, the correspondent of the paper, namely, that "Whole tracts of "country in those three counties are hampered "beyond description, because all the money is "sent out of them to pay interest on mort-"gages." Do you think that is the case?—No.

30,482. Not so far as the larger estates are concerned, you mean?—No, not in a great degree. No doubt there are cases which do exist in which a great deal of money goes out of the country, but not to affect it in any great degree, or so much as that would imply.

30,483. I understood you in your evidence to say with regard to the small freehold proprietors that it is the case, they are heavily mortgaged?—They are, no doubt; there is no doubt in the case of small freeholders who have bought their farms, and borrowed money to pay the interest, a certain amount of that money must go out of the country, but it does not apply to the larger estates as a rule.

30,484. That is to say, that you have no reason to believe that the larger estates in Pembrokeshire are mortgaged to a greater extent than estates in other parts of the country?—I do not think they are.

30,485. But with regard to the small freeholders, you think that they are pretty heavily mortgaged?—I think a great many of them are.

30,486. Have you not in your experience come across any cases in which the buying of a farm by a family has led to prosperity, for instance, a sitting tenant, we will say, on an estate buying his farm when lots are sold?—Yes, I have known many instances.

30,487. In which it turned out well?—In which it turned out well.

30,488. Upon the whole, taking the whole number of years that you have been practising in this part of the country, would you say that it has turned out well in a larger proportion or in a smaller proportion of cases?—Well, really I could not tell you, but I should say there were a great number of cases in which it had turned out well where they were bought, as I mentioned, at reasonable prices, and where the money had not to be borrowed, but they paid for it out of their own pockets, and I think there is no reason to suppose that, with the exception of the agricultural depression which exists, they have had any great cause to regret their purchase; I do not think they have.

30,489. Has there been much change in the methods of agriculture in this part of the country during your residence here?—Yes, I think I stated that when I knew this country first—I was born in it, of course, but I mean since my business career—I should say there was about one-third of the country under pasture, that is leaving out the mountain lands and the common lands, and two-thirds under arable—corn lands. Now I should say it was exactly the reverse, that there are two-thirds under pasture and one-third under corn.

30,490. Thank you, that is all I wish to ask you; but I should like to add that I should be personally very much obliged to you if you would go through the Agricultural Holdings Act some day and write what notes may suggest themselves to your mind upon the different clauses?—When I have time I shall be most happy to do so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Thank you, I entirely endorse your view as to the verbiage of the Act.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,491. Is it not true that you have been asked to come forward on behalf of the Landlords' Association to give evidence?—No, I have not, and out of those I have represented here to-day there is only one who knew I was going to give evidence at all.

30,492. Have you been asked by the tenants to come forward?—Yes, I have been asked to come by the tenants, and I declined to act for either of them, wishing to come here as a totally independent witness to give such evidence as I thought was correct, without fear or favour of either.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

30,493. How then is it that Mr. Vincent, the Secretary of the Land Owners' Association, in the opening statement of the summary of your evidence says that he has called you?—I do not know that he has stated so.

(Mr. Vincent.) I do not say that.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,494. The opening statement says: "Respectfully addressed to the Commission. This witness, from the length and the area of his experience, is the most important I have called before the Commission, and I do not think time spent upon him can be better employed"?—Mr. Vincent wrote to me to ask me if I would act on behalf of the land owners of the association, and I wrote back to him and distinctly told him I would not, and he has my letter to that effect.

(Mr. Vincent.) That is quite right.

Witness.

He may have considered that I was an independent witness, and he may have been glad to get me, and I have no doubt he did so consider. I am very pleased to have given any information to the gentlemen who are here present. There was not a single landowner ever asked me to come.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,495. We will pass on from that, Mr. Owen. Has there at any time been 25 per cent. abatement given on any of the three estates you bring before us?—I should not have said there had if there had not been.

30,496. Will you kindly mention the estate?—Yes, I will; Major Stanley's estate.

30,497. That is not one of the three you mentioned?—I mentioned five, that is one of the five. If you will particularise the estates I will tell you. Which one do you mean? I say that per-centages have been given, varying from 10 per cent. to 25 per cent. That is my answer now.

30,498. You say that the agricultural depression commenced about 1886?—I said 1879 generally, but that it was not felt in Pembrokeshire until 1886.

30,499. I mean to say with regard to the depressed times—could you give us the average on these different estates of reduction for each year?—10 per cent.

30,500. It would amount to over 10 per cent.?—Yes, till this year, in which it would amount to more because two estates have given back 15 per cent.

30,501. We find that there is a great deal of arable land laid down to pasture in this district?—Yes.

30,502. What do you say the difference per acre in the value of the land which has been laid down to pasture is. In some places I know it does not come to grass but very slowly?—Yes.

30,503. Would you kindly tell us what you consider would be the difference in the value of that land to when they used to grow corn extensively?—Do you mean the comparative value with regard to when you got your corn crops and what you could do with your cattle now?

30,504. Yes?—If so, I should say that when the corn crops were of a proper and paying value it would pay better to keep them under corn. Many of the lands have been laid down with corn because they were what they called corn lands and better suited for that than pasture, therefore I should say they would pay better as corn lands; but taking on the one hand the good price of corn at the time and the bad price of corn now, what I mean to say is this, that it would pay them better now to have them under pasture than under corn, but that previously corn lands paid better under corn. I do not know what your question relates to.

30,505. The farmers we have had before us have said that they cannot nearly make the money out of the land now that they could when they used to corn it?—Yes, I think that is correct, Mr. Griffiths.

30,507. I quite agree with you that land varies very much. As to increase of roots, how do you account for the increase of roots grown in this neighbourhood. They are decreasing with us the other side of the water?—They are increasing all over the country. I think it shows the tendency there has been to good farming, and providing in sharp winters for food for cattle which they have never had before, and that is the principal reason. I think the assumed best system of farming is the best system everywhere, and root crops have paid in other parts of the country, and no doubt they are a most important addition to the farmer's profits here now.

30,508. Do you know of any instances in which farmers had compensation for allowing seeds to be sown on the farm?—Yes.

30,509. Is it general?—On one estate it is universal, and in other parts of the country it is used.

30,510. In your experience, Mr. Owen, do the landlords encourage the tenants by repairing or building better poultry houses, and the like?—Poultry houses?

30,511. The poultry houses are rather neglected everywhere, I think?—Yes it is so. I must confess I do not think the tenants pay sufficient attention to poultry houses, and I do not think that in all the different properties I have had to do with, with the exception of making a goose cot, or something of that sort, that is all I have been asked by a tenant to do; so that they do not appreciate the blessings which you would give them, Mr. Griffiths, I am afraid.

30,512. Do you not think they should be encouraged to build them?—Yes, I think that should be done. I think in all probability the same reasonableness would be exercised with regard to goose cots and fowl houses as there has been with regard to others if they were asked for.

30,513. It is useless to get the best of fowls unless we have proper places to put them in?—I quite agree with you that to encourage that system of farming would be a very good thing.

30,514. Then what has been the effect of the dairy teaching in this neighbourhood?—I think beneficial.

30,515. Do you think that the butter generally in this neighbourhood is satisfactory now?—I think in your neighbourhood it is particularly so; I never tasted better butter than in your house.

30,516. But I mean in the country in general. You have had some experience; I think you have taken some butter from this part of the country to London, have you not?—I did. I believe there is a great improvement in the butter that has been made, and in the rules and regulations which the butter factories adopt, and they have been so ably carried out by your daughter.

30,517. Are not the farmers very slow to adopt them, as a rule?—I think they are very slow, and I think it is a great pity for them, because one of the great impediments to our sales of butter is that there is not evenness of sample, and consequently there is a difficulty in getting it taken by those who would give the highest prices for it.

30,518. We want more uniformity in our butter?—We do.

30,519. Do you not think it would be a good thing if we could get the Government to come to our rescue, and establish butter factories in the district?—I do not want to force anything upon anybody, but I think it would be a good thing if we could get Government to give us the means to do it.

30,520. If we could have some little assistance it would be a great help, and it would be a very good thing if we could get money advanced at a low rate?—I think it might be, I think Pembrokeshire men are generally as wide-awake to their own interests as most people, and that they would soon appreciate what you proposed to do.

30,521. Then what about the dairies on the different estates. Are there any modern dairies built on these different estates round about?—I am happy to tell you they are very much improved in my experience of late years, but still there is room for improvement.

30,522. Do you consider that dairies should be disconnected from the dwelling-house?—I should like to see them in every case disconnected, as far away removed from the farmyard as you could possibly have them.

30,523. Then I should like to know what you consider to be a considerable number of farmers migrating, how many would you regard as considerable?—I was trying to count them over on my 10 fingers the other day, and I could not fill up more than nine, so far as people were concerned whom I was acquainted with on my side of the water.

30,524. I think you are acquainted with a great many, but I think I can count nearer 50, farmers' sons and farmers?—Oh, yes, farmers' sons, I quite agree; I think it is very likely that there have been as many.

30,525. Then with regard to large farmers, I think you said they were treated much alike, and that there was as much demand for the large farms as for the small ones?—No, I think not. I think I said there was more demand for small farms than for large ones.

30,526. I misunderstood you if you did?—Yes, that is what I said, and the reason you would know without my telling you.

30,527. You spoke with regard to what we in this country term by-hold land just now?—Yes.

30,528. Is not this land generally let at a time when farmers are rather short of keep—of fodder?—Yes, I think I said so. I said they were let at a time when farmers had not even means of keep for their lambs, and therefore they were glad to let them out to other people who had.

30,529. Perhaps you do not remember this, but was it not in the year 1879 that the farmers of Pembrokeshire lost such a number of sheep?—I think there was a nasty complaint among sheep in that year.

30,530. We have heard that the landlords did not quite see that this depression had commenced until about five or six years later on?—I do not know what they saw, but I do not think they did appreciate it.

30,531. They did not see that the tenants suffered?—If they did see it, they did not appreciate it.

30,532. Do you think that in the country in general new cottages are built where old thatched cottages have tumbled down?—Yes, I think they are increasing wonderfully. I was never more surprised than when I had to be four days in the north and midland part of this country, and I saw that there were many more cottages springing up than I had seen when I was there last. I believe generally when there is a demand made for a cottage now there is no difficulty in getting it.

30,533. I know there are several villages in which the cottages are vacant?—Yes, they are vacant.

30,534. In some parts?—Yes.

30,535. Do you consider that it would be well for most agricultural labourers to have what we call three acres and a cow?—It depends upon where the three acres and a cow were to begin with, but I think that I should like to see every agricultural labourer keeping a cow. I think it would be a very beneficial thing. I think it might have a tendency to induce him to remain on the property.

30,536. Induce him to stay on the land instead of running into the town?—I do.

30,537. Is not very much of the land that was in years past cultivated up in the mountainous districts in this country now out of cultivation. Is it now out of cultivation altogether, land in the upper part of the country, bordering on the mountains?—I have been up a good deal about the mountains these last two or three months, and I was surprised to see a great deal of land up there that had been, since I was previously there, enclosed.

30,538. Have you not also seen a lot of land enclosed and left to go back into its former state?—Yes, I have seen that in some cases.

30,539. It does not pay to cultivate it?—But I have not seen it to any great extent.

30,540. Have you ever seen a written custom of the country in this part of the country, Mr. Owen?—I think I have.

30,541. I hold in my hand the tenant right in Glamorganshire, which is considered better than the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

30,542. Have you ever seen a written one in Pembrokeshire?—No, I have not.

30,543. Neither have I. I did not know whether you had in the course of your business transactions?—No, I have not, Mr. Griffiths.

30,544. Do you not know of any permanent improvement that would be done by the tenant in improving the land that he has not been paid for on leaving his tenancy?—That he has not been paid for?

30,545. Yes, that he could not get any compensation for, that he has farmed very well and improved the land very much?—No, I have not known any cases where a claim has been made for permament improvements such as good farming. I have not known any case where the claim has been made, and I am sure I have not known any case where it has been allowed.

30,546. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, I believe you to be more of a lawyer than I am, but I will ask you this one question: Are not most of the Acts of Parliament, as well as this Act, written in such a manner as that an ordinary farmer cannot understand them?—Well, sir, what would be the use of our having lawyers if we did not pay them for explaining the Acts to us.

30,547. They are useful in their place, but I think the less we have of them the better. Then you have spoken of a good deal of land that has been sold?—Yes.

30,548. Could you give us an average of how many years' purchase it has been sold at; I know you have sold more land than any other man in this country. About how many years' average of purchase do you put it?—Over how many years do you want to go, say 40 years?

30,549. Yes?—Over 40 years, I should think the average is from 27½ to 28 years' purchase.

30,550. You have spoken of waste on farms; do you know of many instances where landlords have built manure tanks and the like for the use of the tenants?—No, not manure tanks. There are very few about the country at all. I should like to see them thoroughly used and employed.

30,551. You consider there is much waste in letting manure run away and in letting the rain take away the best part of it?—I think it makes the difference between 1*s.* and 3*s.* 6*d.* or 4*s.* per cube yard in the value of the manure.

30,552. Then you would recommend us to apply to our landlords for tanks, would you not?—Oh, certainly.

30,553. And manure sheds as well. In some parts they have sheds, but in others it is all kept under roof?—My recommendation is that you should apply to them for everything you want, and depend upon their generosity to give it to you.

30,554. If a Land Court were instituted is it supposed that every farmer must bring his case to the Land Court if he can agree with his landlord without?—I do not think after they have tried it once or twice they would ever try it again.

30,555. That is not quite an answer to the question?—Well, I would answer you, but I did not quite catch at first what you said.

30,556. It is not supposed that every instance, every case, should go to a Land Court?—I think very few of them would.

30,557. That is what I believe myself?—Yes, I think very few of them would; hence there is no necessity for it,

30,558. It is only intended for those who cannot agree with their landlords?—Yes, who cannot agree. Then I think you should adopt the same principle as Mr. Brynmor Jones mentioned with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, that it is referred to an honest man and a competent man to decide the difference between them.

30,559. That is the very question I was going to ask you. Do you not think that there would be a competent man appointed if there were a Land Court adopted?—I do not think there would be. I cannot say. My experience and reading of the Irish courts are not sufficient to justify me in supposing it would be so.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,560. I am not very sure, but I was under the impression that you told us in your evidence that there was a keen desire among tenant farmers to go to larger farms?—I do not think I said a keen desire. I said that I had let farms—larger ones—to the sons of old tenants upon the estate who were anxious to take them. I do not think I said there was a keen desire, but that I had done so, that I had let farms to the sons of tenants who had been on the estate for years and whose fathers had gone security to me for the rent and set them up on the farm.

30,561. Then you find that there is not an undue anxiety among farmers to go to larger farms because they think they are cheaper, and that, in consequence, they are obliged to borrow capital?—There is not an undue anxiety of farmers to go to larger farms? Is that what I understand you to say?

30,562. Yes, because they are cheaper takings as a rule?—I do not know that there is any preponderant wish to do that. I think that the farmers and their sons are sensible enough to know about what sized farm they could properly cultivate, and I have never found any great anxiety on their part to go to a farm which they thought they could not manage. The fact is that there has been nothing of the sort, I think they have never attempted it, and I think every man who has come to me for a farm has been in his own opinion and in that of his friends fully competent to farm that farm in a proper way.

30,563. I think you stated that there are farmers who have inadequate capital?—Yes, I did state it.

30,564. Do we understand that to refer to farmers who are commencing farming, or that farmers have become poorer?—Oh, no; I meant farmers commencing farming. It is like every other profession; we have a lot of men who think they know how to farm, and they have not the least idea of it, and they take a farm with the prospect of doing what others have done before them, but they are not able to manage it.

30,565. What is the effect of this upon rents in general?—I do not think it has so much effect upon rents as upon farmers and their landlords. If you put a man into a farm who has not capital enough to farm it, it must be a bad thing for him.

30,566. Certainly it is a bad thing for him?—Yes.

30,567. But has it not a tendency to stimulate rents?—The fact of a bad farmer going in with too little capital?

30,568. Yes?—No, I do not think so.

30,569. But would not the landlord put this interpretation upon the question: that his farm was considered cheap, and that, in consequence, there were a great many applicants for it, and would not he raise the rent according to the competition for the farm?—That is rather another question, is it not, whether competition for farms does not tend to increase rent; is that what you mean?

30,570. Well, yes, it amounts to that?—It amounts to that. I should say that competition for farms did tend to increase rent.

30,571. Do you think that rents at present are abnormal?—No, I think the times are abnormal.

30,572. You think that the present depression is only temporary?—I hope so.

30,573. Is that your opinion?—My opinion is that it will never recover itself to the condition that it was in, but that it will improve.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

30,574. Have you any reason for your opinion?—I have a number of reasons.

30,575. Will you kindly state them?—No, indeed, I do not think I will, and I will tell you why, because, really, it would be trespassing upon your time too much, but I will give you one of the reasons. Take, for instance, last year, in which we suffered more grievously than any year that we have had for many years; I think that, perhaps Providence will be kinder to us than we are to ourselves, and that we may not have such a dry year, which was the ruination to a certain extent of a great many of the farming interests in Pembrokeshire.

30,576. I will ask you a question to this effect: what share have you, as an agent, in determining the amount of abatements or the amount of reductions on the different estates?—Very little.

30,577. So that, really, it is determined chiefly by the landlord?—The generosity of the andlord.

30,578. And not by the merits of the case?—I will not say that. Some men, you and I for instance, may have a good deposit at the bank that we can draw from without drawing upon our tenants; but there are many landowners who are placed in this position, that the charges upon their estates equal half their rental, and they cannot afford to be so liberal as you and I, who are landlords who have money in our banks that we shall not miss.

30,579. But do you think that the landlords take their proper share of the present depression?—I think they will have to.

30,580. Do you think they do?—I think it would be for their interests to do so eventually.

30,581. What is your personal opinion; are the present abatements adequate?—In some instances yes, and in some instances no; it depends upon when the farms were let.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,582. When you say "when the farms were let," I suppose you mean with regard to the times?—Yes, whether in the extreme of prosperous times or in ordinary times.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,583. Then if that is the position of affairs, practically the tenant has only to take what the landlord chooses to give him?—Well, of course, he has only to take what the landlord chooses to give him. I see your point; you are quite right.

30,584. You say that the agreements are so constructed as to be beneficial to agriculture generally?—I do.

30,585. To the tenant and to the landlord?—I think the one I had the pleasure of handing in to you is one that if its covenants were kept would be beneficial to agriculture generally.

30,586. Do you not think it would be of greater benefit to the tenant in a year like the present to sell the straw off his farm instead of consuming it?—I do not think any tenant has any straw to sell.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

30,587. But supposing he has. I have some to sell?—You are lucky. You think it would be better to sell it; well, yes.

30,588. And I propose selling it because I think it is better. I have no agreement with my landlord?—I see your point, and I think, under the circumstances, I should advise you to sell. It would be better for you if you have no agreement, because you can get a tremendous price for it, and it would be a good thing for yourself.

30,589. But according to this agreement, you know, a tenant could not sell?—According to that agreement I find that the landlords in every case form no objection whatever to the tenant selling a moderate quantity of hay and straw off the farm, and in some instances, within five miles of Haverfordwest, the landlords have themselves purchased that hay and straw, and given a good price for it. I think that a great many of these covenants are considered by the landlords to be more honoured in the breach than in the observance. There is no doubt about it.

30,590. Do you know of cases where tenants do drainage on a farm entirely at their own cost?—Yes, I have known cases.

30,591. Do they in those cases write to the landlords to obtain their consent?—No.

30,592. Do they give notice?—No.

30,593. Supposing a tenant were to carry out a certain amount of drainage without giving notice to the landlord?—Yes, 30,594. Of course he could not claim compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

30,595. What course would he take?—He would suffer the penalties of a very foolish action.

30,596. Does that often occur?—No, very seldom.

30,597. Does the landlord carry out the drainage?—He generally supplies pipes and gives full permission to use any stone on the estate for that purpose; he very often finds the stone.

30,598. Supposing that a tenant drained a certain field, and he was supplied by the landlord with pipes, and he left, say, in the course of two or three years?—Yes.

30,599. Would he make a claim for compensation under those circumstances?—I think in all probability he would, and I think in all probability the landlord would allow him for it.

30,600. Supposing that a valuer, you, for instance, were called in, for what period would you consider the drainage would be an improvement; when would it be exhausted?—I should say, with regard to a matter of drainage, it would depend upon how it was done and with what material it was done. Of course I need not tell you as a farmer that if the tenant put pipes, for instance, into peat land, I should advise the landowner not to allow him a single penny, because he would deserve to pay for his stupidity; if he was draining heavy clay land, I think, in some cases at a moderate depth and not too low, the pipes would be as good as anything else; but with regard to good drainage, which I suppose you refer to——

30,601. Yes?—Well carried out——

30,602. Yes?—I should say that any landlord whose tenant did those repairs ought to allow him the bulk of the cost of drainage for doing it.

30,603. And you as a valuer would recommend it?—I should recommend it.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,604. Do you know of any instances, Mr. Owen, where a certain sum of money has been added to your valuation before a tenant takes the farm?—I do not think you ought to ask me that question, and I will tell you why.

30,605. I shall not ask you to name the case?—No; but when I send in a valuation to the gentleman who employs me, say as a landlord, I consider myself bound in secrecy to keep that valuation to myself. It may or may not happen, I will not say it has never occurred, that I have heard that the farm has been let at a greater amount than my valuation. It has occurred, but seldom.

30,606. You are very well acquainted with the county of Pembroke and all the counties around it pretty nearly in England and Wales, but is it not a fact that there is a greater area in proportion under cultivation than in any other county in England or Wales?—Yes, I think so in all probability.

30,607. I am taking it from the agricultural returns?—Yes, I should think it would be so; at all events it was so. I question whether it is not decreasing or has not decreased lately. At one time I should say there was a far greater amount under cultivation.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,608. By "under cultivation" you mean arable land, I suppose?—Yes.

30,609. None has gone into a prairie condition, I suppose. It is all either arable or grass land under cultivation?—Oh, yes.

30,610. There is no derelict land in the county is there?—No.

30,611. Like there is in some parts of England?—Oh, no.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,612. The following is taken from the Government agricultural returns. "The average "size of the total number of holdings is about "50 acres, though the farms range generally "in this county from 100 to 300 acres. Pem-"brokeshire has, according to Table 10, in the "agricultural returns for 1886, 1,105 acres "allotted for cow runs, which is more than "any other single county division in England or "Wales"?—Allotted for what?

30,613. For cow runs, whatever that means—that is the wording?—I do not know exactly what that is. I never heard the expression before.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

30,614. "Lincolnshire, which is more than four "times as big, has only 611 acres allotted to the "same purpose, whilst the three county divisions "or ridings of Yorkshire, which in total area are "almost 10 times as big as this county, have only "1,272 acres so allotted"?—Of cow runs?

30,615. Yes?—I lived in Lincolnshire, and farmed there for two years, and I never heard the term used.

30,616. It is in the Government returns "To "show the disproportion in actual figures, "Pembrokeshire with a total area of 393,682 "acres, has 1,105 acres allotted for cow runs, "and Yorkshire with a total area of 3,882,851 "acres, has 1,272 acres allotted to the same "purpose"?—Do you understand what it means, Mr. Griffiths?

30,617. Not fully. I only just had it put into my hand, and I have not had time to look over it?—I mean, that perhaps by putting the proper name to it I should be able to understand it better.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,618. I am sorry to add to the length of your examination; I have only one or two questions which I should like to ask?—I shall be only too pleased to answer you.

30,619. I think from what you said in answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones' questions, you admitted that there was considerable ground for alteration in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I do.

30,620. Do you think it would be possible to draw any schedule which would cover the varying conditions of all the different parts of England and Wales—one schedule?—Yes, I think it might be quite possible.

30,621. For instance, with regard to sheep, we have had evidence that in some mountainous districts it is necessary for the sheep to be taken by the incoming tenant?—I do not think I have given evidence to that effect. I said I knew nothing about sheep runs.

30,622. But we have been told in different parts that the sheep born and bred on a particular mountain are more valuable on that mountain?—That I know myself, infinitely well.

30,623. Then that gives rise to a custom or right, or provision that would be useful, that the incoming tenant of the landlord should take those sheep from the outgoing tenant?—Quite so.

30,624. That does not apply to the whole of England?—Oh, dear no.

30,625. Therefore, would it not be necessary that the schedule should provide some sort of elasticity as to the things which the outgoing tenant is to take?—You see if it did not apply to England it would be like a great many other things which we put in the schedule; it would be left to wait until the time and to remain as a matter for calculation as to where it did apply. It would overburden the schedule a little, but I do not think it would do any harm.

30,626. But would not the fact be that the just right of an outgoing tenant as between him and the incoming tenant would be different in different parts of the country?—I think it is universally acknowledged both in Scotland and the north of England and the mountainous district in Wales where those sheep runs are that the same conditions would apply. I think that in all those cases you would find that where the sheep are bred and born on the farm, the very fact that they are being sold off the farm would ruin that sheep farm, and therefore it would apply to all mountainous districts as well as Wales.

30,627. All that you say ought to be included in the schedule?—Yes, certainly.

30,628. In France, perhaps you may be aware, that each department or each commune has its own little code?—I know, and I think that is detrimental to the general interest. I think that is a great mistake.

30,629. Passing from that, supposing that the Agricultural Holdings Act and the Improvements Act were made perfectly just so far as possible, the next point would be to get some form of settling disputes about it which would not be open to litigation?—Just so.

30,630. I think you made a suggestion that instead of a Land Court settling points of difference of that kind, some sort of a referee might be used?—Yes, I think that might be done. I think a properly qualified professional man who was, as we will assume he would be, fair and honest, would be more acceptable to the tenant farmers and to the landlords than any court that you could have, because it would be less expensive on the one hand, and in my opinion he would be fully capable and confident.

30,631. Would there not be another great advantage, that it would not be public—that there would be no public litigation?—Just so. That would be a great advantage.

30,632. And therefore it would not interfere with the good feeling between landlord and tenant so much as application to a court?—And I think both parties would mutually agree.

30,633. Then I wanted to ask a few questions with regard to fixing of rent. You have had very large experience with regard to questions of rent?—I have.

30,634. Could you in a few words state the principle upon which a just rent under present circumstances could be got at?—I am afraid if I began at the beginning of what a surveyor's duties are, and a valuer's duties are, it would take a very long time. A man, I contend, cannot fix a just rent unless he is fully acquainted with the principles of agriculture. A man must know those, and he must also know something of the geological formation of the ground, because it is so easy for a man to make a mistake going over land which perhaps looks green and flourishing, and that land may not be worth perhaps more than 10*s.* an acre, and he will go over another field where he knows the soil is deep and of good quality, and that field would be worth perhaps 30*s.* an acre, and yet look worse than the one that is 10*s.* It is the same with land as with men, you must not judge them by their looks.

30,635. You would agree, of course, that the competition rent is not the rent that you would like to be fixed as between landlord and tenant?—It is a thing which would be most unfortunate for the country.

30,636. On large estates and well-managed estates at any rate you would say that the rents were not anything like near the competition price which land hunger would induce people to offer?—I do not think they are as a rule. I think that the highest rents paid are those in this country where men have made their money in other businesses, and have been accustomed to good percentages, and have bought land and expect to get something like the same percentage out of it as they did when in business. Landowners are generally accustomed to a return of about 2 to 2½ per cent. upon their land.

30,637. Then with regard to the point of fixing a just rent, of course you would not go simply on the past, but you would really have to go upon the prospective value, would you not?—To a certain degree, yes.

30,638. And that would be exceedingly difficult for a Land Court to entertain?—Yes.

30,639. A Land Court would be in the long run almost driven, would it not, to go to the competition rent?—I think it would result eventually by a Land Court, with all the powers that they have, in the rents being raised considerably higher than they are at the present time.

30,640. And it would be very difficult to lay down any principle by which, unless they took the rent which was fixed by the outside laws of supply and demand, to frame any rules by which any court could be guided?—Yes.

30,641. So that, on the whole, your distinct opinion would be that it is for the advantage of the tenant, as well as of the landlord, that the more private mode of obtaining the result should be continued?—I think so. I do not think that the rent forms nearly such an important element with regard to farming in this country now as the purposes for which the Agricultural Holdings Act was made; that was to protect tenants on their farms, and to give them the full benefit of their improvements, and that the matter of rent, although an important one to a certain extent, is not so important to them as the full capability of realizing, and seeing their way to realize, the outlay of capital they make on their farm. A man has often come to me saying, "I am paying "10*l.* a year too much rent, or 20*l.* a year too "much rent." I think for the future that that 10*l.* or 20*l.* is a comparatively small issue at stake compared with what I should take to be meant by an improved agricultural holding.

30,642. Referring to the Agricultural Holdings Act, the difficulty of making it compulsory for the landlord to pay for improvements done by the tenants to which he has not given his consent lies very largely in regard to that class of landowners who might not be able to pay liberally for improvements that were made?—Just so.

30,643. Would you think there would be anything in such a suggestion as this, that in certain cases where an improvement was made which was substantially for the advantage of the farm, but which the landlord, let us say, was too poor to conveniently make, instead of a lump sum being charged either at the end of the tenancy or at the present time, it should be dealt with by a reduction of rent for a certain number of years. Could the difficulty be met partially in that way?—Well, I think it could be done. I am not prepared to say how it would act, but there is no doubt it could be done in that way.

30,644. Because if the question of whether this improvement was to be compensated for or not, or to be made or not, were left to an outside referee, such as you mention, it might be perfectly easy to a large landowner, and a landowner with large capital, to comply with the conclusion of that referee, but, on the other hand, with a landlord who is in difficult circumstances, there might be a bar to his complying, unless some mode was found by which it could be done without a capital sum being expended?—Just so, hence the necessity on that point of keeping that portion of the Act intact as it is, and with regard to notice to the landlord, because a man who felt he was not able to compensate his tenant for any outlay he made afterwards would not enter into such a contract with him.

30,645. I should just like to put one further question, which I put to a witness yesterday. Would you not say that we had to look from a broader point of view than simply the advantage of the present sitting tenants in considering these questions, and that supposing, as I put it yesterday, there were two countries, one of which by a sort of hot-house legislation encouraged the farmers to stay on the land longer than they ought to do, and under adverse circumstances, until you had a larger population on the land than, according to the ordinary laws of supply and demand, you ought to have, and another country, where the laws were such that it threw more upon individual enterprise, and did not nurse a population upon the land which was not needed, would you not say that the second was really the best, looking at it from a national point of view, and from the point of view of every one concerned?—Yes, I should.

Mr. Grove.

30,646. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, you said you would like time to think it out?—I should very much.

30,647. If we had a sitting in London, say in two or three months, or something like that, would you come up and appear again before the Commission?—I should be very happy to come, only I should like before doing so to thoroughly study the Act.

30,648. That might be very useful. We gather from you that the preservation of game causes no unpleasantness between landlord and tenant in this county?—It has caused unpleasantness, but I think the passing of the Ground Game Act has rectified that a good deal.

30,649. When you spoke of railway rates; you say you think they have been increased of late?—They have always been high, and that is always the case, I fancy, in a country where there is no competitive line, because we find the rates after we get into contact with the Midland and London and North-Western are moderated considerably, but, say, from Carmarthen or even Swansea down, the charges are remarkably high, in fact, so as to be almost prohibitive.

30,650. You could not say that they are charging more than they are entitled to by their maximum charge, under the recent legislation, could you?—I do not know that they are. I should not like to say that at all.

30,651. You are aware of the Fertilisers Act, which has been passed recently for the protection of the agriculturists?—I have heard so.

30,652. Has the County Council appointed an analyst under that Act, do you know?—I do not think they have at present.

30,653. They are going to, I suppose. In fact, it is compulsory upon them to do so. Is there any combination amongst farmers—farmers' clubs?—We have farmers' clubs, but landlords and farmers mutually join in them.

30,654. Have you any Chamber of Agriculture for the county?—Not in Pembrokeshire. There is one in Carmarthenshire, but not in Pembrokeshire. There is a Farmers' Club.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,655. We have heard some contradictory accounts of the breed of cattle in this county. What is your opinion about them. You did not say much about that in your evidence in chief?—No, I did not, because I felt that there were others more competent to say, but at the same time, if you ask my opinion, I think we cannot do better for our country, for our own selves, than to stick to our own Welsh breed—the Castle Martin breed. We can improve upon them sometimes by a cross, but I think the pure Castle Martin breed is better fitted for this country than any other breed we have got.

30,656. You touched also on the question of cottages. I think you said that you had built some, or seen some built?—I have built a great number of them. When I say "built," I mean superintended the building of them.

30,657. Yes. Those cottages, I take it, would be up to the requirements of the present day?—Yes.

30,658. What would the rent be?—The rents of them would be from 3*l.* to 4*l.* a year, which is as much as I should expect to get, knowing that we should have to pay rates and taxes ourselves, they being under a certain rent.

30,659. Would that be a fair interest on the outlay?—Oh, no. Every cottage that is built by a landlord he never expects to pay.

30,660. That would be to accommodate the farmers?—Yes, to accommodate the farmers, because the cost of an ordinary cottage, such as would meet the requirements of this age, would not be less, in my opinion; at least, I have never been able to get them done for less than 80*l.*, and they have reached 110*l.* and 120*l.*

30,661. Still, if you could get one built for 80*l.*, and got 3*l.* a year rent for that, you would consider that to be a good return?—I should not consider that to be so. We have to keep it in repair, of course.

30,662. Yes. The old cottages are admitted, I believe, to be very bad. There are some old ones still existing, are there not?—There are some specimens of ancient architecture.

30,663. I think you mentioned, and other witnesses certainly have mentioned, that the things which induced men to leave the country and go to the towns are the higher wages and the society, which they like better?—Yes. I think the education of the present day has had something to do with it. Every man can be educated highly if he likes to take the trouble to go to school, and every boy, and they begin to prefer fine clothes and fine towns more than they do their much better and healthier occupation of living in the country.

30,664. Would you say that the education in the elementary schools is carried to that extent in this country?—I think the education in the elementary schools now certainly is frequently carried to a very great extent, and, I think, very often has the effect of rendering many of those who are educated there unfit for the states of society in which it pleases Providence to place them. I think I would give them the best education, and a fair education, to enable them to do their work in life in the best way, but I think there is no occasion to force them to learn things which hereafter may not be of any use to them.

30,665. I am surprised rather to hear that. They must have made great progress, or at least some people would call it progress, since the time I was Inspector of Schools myself. My great difficulty then was to find that boys left school with any adequate knowledge of arithmetic for the ordinary purposes of life in rural districts?—Was that in England or Wales?

30,666. North Wales. You do not suppose that men left the country on account of the bad accommodation of the old cottages—you do not think that had anything to do with it?—I think very little to do with that, in fact nothing, for this reason, that when I have built new cottages on different properties the greatest difficulty I have had is to get the people to come in from the old ones into the new ones.

30,667. And, I suppose, at first they keep the new ones in as bad a state as the old ones?—They take a long time to learn how to live in good houses.

30,668. That I can quite believe. There is one other thing I wish to ask. You have to do with both the parts of the county, the English and the Welsh parts?—Yes.

30,669. Would you mind mentioning some points of difference between the people in those two parts. I suppose there are points of difference besides the language?—Distinctions and points of difference?

30,670. Yes. For instance, is it not the fact that the farmers and their labourers in the English parts of Pembrokeshire fare better than in the Welsh parts. I have heard it said that it is so—that they have better food?—I think that depends greatly upon the size of the farmer himself. Do you mean the farmer and his family.

30,671. Yes?—I think there are many farmers in the north parts, the Welsh parts of the county, who have fared equally well in this year, and in the past better than in the north part of it.

30,672. Then you would not say that it was true that in the English part they fare better?—Not in that respect. I think that many in the north part of the county are equally well off, and equally well supplied with all the comforts of life, as well as in the south part of the county.

30,673. And are they as good workmen in the north as in the English parts?—Quite.

30,674. Do you know of any points of difference between them that have ever struck you. I ask you as you know the county well?—Well, I really do not think I do know of any.

30,675. Do you ever have tithe difficulties in the English parts of Pembrokeshire?—No, we never do.

30,676. Do you have difficulties in the Welsh part sometimes?—Yes, we have had, and still, I am sorry to say, have a little; but I think that is principally consequent upon the farmers in the Welsh parts being more liable to influences that are brought to bear upon them than they are in the south.

30,677. Are they more completely Nonconformists in the Welsh parts than in the English in proportion to the number. Is there any difference of that sort?—No, I do not think that makes any very great difference.

30,678. As a matter of antiquarianism I think we have heard that Pembrokeshire was a great sheep county at one time. Do you happen to know when it ceased to be so?—No, I do not—not in my time.

30,679. Oh, no; but I thought possibly you might know, but that is merely antiquarian?—No, only one has read something about it being a good sheep county, but I have never heard that it was so. I have known that it was particularly celebrated in the London markets for the Welsh mutton, but I did not know that it was particularly celebrated for the quantity of sheep which they have grown here.

30,680. I think it was once rich in sheep?—You may be right about that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,681. Do you know anything of a custom which is called "hafod," or sometimes called "maerwriaeth"?—I do not know it by that name.

30,682. Mr. Lleufer Thomas in his report says that it is a custom which is a survival of older tenure on the Carmarthenshire borders

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

He says, "It is called in the district by the "Welsh name, 'hafod' (which when properly "applied means an entirely different thing, "namely, summer pasturage), but the term "'maerwriaeth' is used for it in other parts of "Carmarthenshire. The custom is that the "cattle are hired at so much per head, the "aggregate sum raised thereby being accepted "as the rent of the land, and all the implements "and utensils are let with the land. The "tenant is obliged to return the cattle and "other things in the original state, due allow-"ance being made for the wear and tear and "natural depreciation"?—Yes, I have heard of it.

30,683. You have heard of such a custom?—Yes.

30,684. Where have you found traces of that custom, or where have you found that that custom exists?—Not in any place that I have had to do with, but I have been on farms professionally for valuation, where I have been told that the custom did exist in some parts of Carmarthenshire.

30,685. You do not know whether there are any traces of it in Pembrokeshire or Cardiganshire?—I do. I think I have heard of some places where the tenant dairymen hire their cows, but not in Pembrokeshire. I think it exists in some parts of England.

30,686. Which parts of England?—In Herefordshire and Worcestershire.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,687. I have two questions handed up by Mr. Vincent. "I take it your view is that any "system of involving a judicial rent would "reduce landlords to the position of annuitants "or owners of a rent-charge. Is that so"?—That is my impression.

30,688. In your experience do the owners of a rent-charge ever spend money for the benefit of the land from which the rent charge issues?—Not that I am aware of.

30,689. I have also a question to put to you which is handed up by Mr. William Williams. "How many farms in Pembrokeshire rent "higher now than they did 50 years ago"?—I am sure I cannot tell.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. T. P. Mousley called and examined

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,690. Mr. Mousley, you wish to rebut something that was said yesterday?—Yes, Sir John.

30,692. One question asked was this. "You "can assign no reason, at any rate, why you "should be raised 3*l.*," and the answer was "Well, I cannot satisfy myself, unless it is that "land grabbers have been applying"?—Yes, but such was not the case. There was a lot of money laid out on the farm in question. I left home before I saw the evidence, and therefore I cannot give you the figures. I can furnish them if you wish, but of course the slight increase of rent—3*l.* I believe—was on the improvements which had lately taken place in buildings.

30,693. By whom were those improvements made?—I think it was about seven or eight years ago.

30,694. By whom were they made?—By the landlord.

30,695. Subsequently the question was asked, "Do you think that the old tenant would have "to leave, even if the same rent which had "been paid up to that time was offered by "somebody else"?—Certainly not.

30,696. The answer was "Undoubtedly"?—Certainly not; as long as the old tenant can pay his rent there he stays, and there I hope he will always remain.

30,697. Another question was, "Do you think "any such instances have happened on Lord "Cawdor's estate? A. Yes."?—No, not that I know of.

30,698. Could any have happened without your knowledge?—No, I think not.

30,699. Those are the questions which I have marked here, and which are handed up to me?—There was another point; there was something said with regard to the rents being raised periodically every 21 years, or rather that that was one of my father's reasons given at the time of this increase of rent on Mr. James' farm, that he might expect, having been on the farm for 21 years, that it was time for the rent to be raised. Such was not the case.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,700. Do you remember whether you have received any application from persons for a farm at that moment let to someone else?—Yes, I believe that has happened when the question was unsettled—hardly gone into— and nothing certainly decided upon as to the farm having been given up. There always have been applicants for farms likely to become vacant.

30,701. Has it ever happened that the rent of a farm has been raised after such an application has been made?—No, most certainly not, not to my knowledge.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,702. Would you kindly tell the Commission how long you have been agent?—I only succeeded my father last year. He gave all his evidence at Pembroke on Tuesday, and that included this part of Lord Cawdor's property as much as it did the Stackpole estate.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John George called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,703. I may say a statement has been handed up to the Commission, which is signed by Messrs. John George, Joseph Gibby, David Bowen, William Davies, John Warlow, and John Llewellin, and I propose as a convenient course to invite those other gentlemen besides Mr. John George to listen carefully to the evidence that is given, and then, instead of traversing the whole of the ground that Mr. George covers, I will ask them whether they generally approve of or agree with what Mr. George may say, and then ask them whether they have anything to add to that statement. That is the course which, with the sanction of my brother Commissioners, I propose to pursue now, in order to save travelling over and over again the same ground. At the same time I wish to give every facility to those other gentlemen to add to anything or to contradict anything, that they may think is either left out or wrongly stated in Mr. George's evidence. I will ask you, Mr. George, to kindly give us your statement, or put it in any form that you choose?—I am a tenant farmer, and I may say that I earn a pound or two at anything that I can pick up, butchering or anything of that sort. Is it necessary for me to give the area that I am giving evidence about?

30,704. Just as you like. State in your own way whatever you think of importance?—I will deal with the question of management, and then, perhaps, I might travel a little further than the Hasguard district into some of the adjoining parishes. Management: Agents have received no special training for the supervision of land, with few exceptions in this town. They are all very nice sociable gentlemen, but their knowledge of land is nil. The gentlemen are all very nice and sociable gentlemen, but I maintain that they know nothing whatever about the value of land.

Professor Rhŷs.

See 30,808–9.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,706. Would you kindly hand in the letter to the Commission?—I will. [Witness handed in letter.] He advises the Unionist landlords not to contribute to the preacher or to let the lands to Radical tenants. The latter portion of the letter applies more particularly to it. Occupation: The date of entry is the 29th of September. Farms are let from year to year generally. There are no great demands for leases, and when applied for they are not readily granted. Leases: Rents are too high for a desire for a lease, and covenants are apt to be more strict as to repair, &c., and I consider short leases, say for 7 or 14 years, more harm than good, for by the time you get the farm into a bit extra good cultivation you must begin to tear it to pieces to get back your extra outlay, or at the expiration of such lease, if times are good, you would have to pay an increased rent on your own industry. Single life leases are objectionable, in my opinion, as one's family would be more likely to be disturbed at the death of the father, as it would be generally his life that had been in it, and the family would be likely to be disturbed in their weakest moments. There are exceptions, of course, where this would not apply under good landlords. Agreements: Some of the penal clauses are severe and objectionable. I know of some cases, gentlemen, where the outgoing tenant has to pay for mowing hay, or he is not allowed to do so at all, and that if he does he will have to leave the aftermath in the land for the landowner, which is equivalent to cash payments. In other cases the rotation of crops is not strictly adhered to. I can give a case, Mr. Chairman, where there is an agreement for only one white crop, and the tenant, after laying oats or wheat, put in rape, and he thought that was a green crop, but at the time there was a great demand for land, and the landlord came upon him, and the consequence was that he had to pay 75*l.* for ploughing up 15 acres. I am pleased to say, gentlemen, that those landlords have not continued on this side, and the farms have changed and gone into much better hands. He was charged 75*l.* for 15 acres, and he is only allowed one white crop. Most tenants receive copies of agreements, but on some estates they only sign one, which the landlord keeps, and when they come to leave they find they have signed a very objectionable document. That is, very often the agreement is in a pocket-book, which I am prepared to prove to you, and very often the servant girl is called in to witness the signature. I have a gentleman here that can prove the statement as I go on. Rent: Rent is fixed at the gross, and not so much per acre. There is no uniformity of rents of similar quality. It varies very much on adjoining estates, as much as 50*s.* per acre. This could be borne out, and it makes a vast difference whether the tenant is a taker or is letting the land. I could give an instance where he takes a farm at 16*s.* 6*d.* on one side of the road, and lets his own for 3*l.* 10*s.*

30,707. Sub-letting?—No, not sub-letting; purchase. Other services: In some cases, such as driving coal, but they are not irksome; but not taken in account of rent; farmers generally think it a pleasure. There is nothing objectionable in that. Rent, how fixed: Rents are not fixed on a basis of valuation, but too often the highest bidder or the selected tenant has to give such highest bid. It does not result in fair rents being fixed. There are some tenants who have applied for reductions, and landlord and tenant have agreed to have it valued, but when valued reduced by about 30*l.* or 40*l.* per year. But landlords stuck on 15 per cent. more than valuers' valuation; so the rent is not fixed by valuation. Rise in rent: Rents have been raised lately from 50 to 250 per cent. Permanent reductions: I know of only one or two. Temporary abatements: There are temporary abatements from 5 to 20 per cent., but these occur at irregular periods, and always stop much too soon. Some have received abatements in the way of manure. The most rack-rented farms get no reduction or very small reductions. There are notices given by some landlords or their agents of such abatements, but not by all. Rents are more frequently raised than reduced, and it does not depend on a revaluation generally, but in some cases it does. But, as I have before stated, it is not always acted upon when it is against the landlord. I know where a tenant has found it difficult to get the rent about, and the landlord to help him took away about half his land, and charged him nearly the same rent. The raising of rents depends upon no principle, rather unprinciple. It often occurs when land is sold, or where owners have lived beyond their means and have got themselves involved, then they raise the rent on the tenant. I can give cases. I am not speaking out of book, gentlemen. I can give cases where the landlord went to ask the overseer to raise his assessment. That is another dip, I suppose. Subdivision: Subdivision has largely been resorted to on some estates, with the result of very much increased rents and starvation of many tenants. I may refer to a farm of about 150 acres. The farm used to be let for 125*l.* a year. Now it is let for 300*l.* There is an old barn made up into a dwelling-house, and some other outbuildings for the pig.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,708. Those made up for the pigs I suppose are better than the old barn?—Very possibly indeed. The pig fares much better; the pig is always fat and the man is looking very poor.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,708*a.* Then as to small farming?—The farmers' ability to provide for their families is nil. Their children have to leave home to seek a livelihood elsewhere. This refers to holdings of from 30 to 50 or 60 acres. I find I have omitted a portion of my notes; my notes may not be so regular as some other gentlemen's as I am not used to it, but I have evidence here to prove that the children are occupied on the farms, and that without the labour of the children the rents could not be paid. There is evidence here to prove that. State of cultivation: There is no scarcity of labour, but the land would take more than it gets. There is certainly not any scarcity of labour, at least not scarcity of labourers; there may be of labour on the farms. I believe the farms would take more, but there is no money to pay for it. There is no scarcity of labour in the district that I come from. I know of men almost starving now for the want of work, but the farmers cannot employ them. They are under close-reefed topsails. The land would take more than it gets. There is no land going out of cultivation in our district. There has been a change in the nature of agriculture; more is laid down to pasture at the tenant's expense. Root crops: There is a large increase of root crops grown. There is no fallowing in consequence of low price of wheat and other grain. Improvements are made in buildings by landlords. Some do it gratuitously except that the tenants have to do the haulage. Other landlords charge from 5 per cent. to 7 per cent. and the tenants do the haulage free. This is very objectionable where the tenant has to pay interest on all moneys laid out, as tenure is so insecure and changes may happen from so many other causes. Suppose he pays interest on 300*l.*: in many cases to accomplish this the tenant would have performed from 40*l.* to 60*l.* of work for which he will get nothing. Where buildings are erected at landlord's cost, the tenant would willingly do haulage. Where charged interest, the tenant ought to be paid for haulage and the whole sum capitalised. The tenant would then be secured from loss if he had to leave in a few years. I believe the land is better cultivated now than heretofore. Some landlords give manure. There is no compensation obtainable in our district and no custom. Landlords contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. In 1875 the times were good, and some landlords took advantage when giving notice to contract out of the Act, and raised rents. I am not aware of tenants applying for written consents to perform specific improvements under these Acts. Landlords do grant permission in many cases, such as to plough fields where forbidden in their agreements. Having to apply for permission to do improvements would be likely to cause friction and unpleasantness. Then, as to valuation. There are no allowances to outgoing tenants for improvements in buildings or on land. In some cases there are great hardships. I can bring before you, gentlemen, this case. I know a farmer, who was compelled to build outhouses for his stock; the stable was coming down on his horses, and the landlord would not do so, and he was compelled to do so. In a few years he had to go out and he had no compensation. If you wish it, you can get that gentleman before you. There is sometimes a valuation of roots and manure, and sometimes straw and hay, but more often the tenants are allowed to sell by auction all crops and even manure. Sometimes straw is left, but the incoming tenant has to thresh it, &c. Then as to disposal of interest in holdings. There is no right that a tenant can dispose of in his holding, may he have laid out ever so much in labour and cash to improve his holding. A tenant ought to be able to do so. As to game preserving, at present there is no excessive game preserving. A few years ago there was, to the great injury of tenants, but happily this is done away with. Rabbits were were very destructive, but there was no compensation paid. As to agricultural education, there has been some in dairying, and lectures on manures and manuring and feeding stuff. Railway rates are very high and so uncertain that we can hardly know what anything will cost. It is against sending our products to other markets. Then as to the general relations between landlords and tenants. The relationship between landlord and tenant is generally good, and there is a general desire to remain so. The chief cause of discontent is high rents and bad times. We feel that the time has come when both parties should look the matter squarely in the face. We as tenants are crying out for fair rents, and what we mean by fair rents is fair rents for landlord and fair rents for tenant, and that the landlord should receive a fair share of the produce of the farm as rent, and that the tenant should receive a fair return for his labour, and for that of his family, and something for his capital invested in his stock. To arrive at this, there should be uniformity of rents. I do not say that all lands should be at, say, 20*s.* per acre, but according to the quality—not one farm at three times as much as the other of equal quality. Then, if we could arrive at a uniformity of values as rent, and then fix a proper graduated scale, such as is in force regarding tithes at present, this would do away with any friction between landlord and tenant, and would be fair to both alike. Many of the landlords have acknowledged by their abatements this principle; it is only to arrive at a proper basis, and I have no hesitation in saying that such a basis could be arrived at. Then on this graduated scheme landowners would benefit from any advance of prices as well as tenants, and both would also suffer together. No one would have anything to fear from such an arrangement, but the rack renters and speculators in land, and I may say gamblers in land. What I mean by that is that they really go in and buy land and break it up and let it again. I could name many cases where they have received hundreds and hundreds of pounds that never came out of the land. Land would then be bought as an investment, not as at present as a speculation, and it would make a more safe investment for those who have cash to buy with. It is the speculators in land who are to a great extent making the burden unbearable, and they have had thousands of pounds out of hard, working, industrious people. Such speculators raise rents so as to pay interest and live as if they were some great people. Then security of tenure. Again, the tenants should have security of tenure that they may feel secure in their holdings, and then they would do their utmost to get the very greatest amount of produce out of the holdings. As to free sale of produce, they should be permitted to sell the produce of their holdings in the best market, and the whole of that produce. Then as to free sale of improvements, the tenant should be paid for all improvements, whether structural or improvements in the fertility of the soil. If a tenant should cause two blades of grass to grow where one did before, or two bushels of corn where one grew before, by his industry and perseverance and capital, I maintain he has a just claim to this, and should be able to reckon it as capital as if it were in his pocket or in a bank. If we had these things we should feel secure. There are changes that no one can have control of, and circumstances which no one can foresee. I know a farmer who had farmed from day to day, as it were, for he knew that his landlord or landlady were getting old, and he also knew that the farm would have to be sold at their death. The consequence was that the farm became very much reduced indeed in fertility. It was worth less when it came to be sold, and the farmer did no good to himself, simply because there was no security in his tenure, and consequently all suffered. That is the end, gentlemen, except any one likes to ask me questions.

30,709. You talked about speculators in land, and even gamblers in your evidence. Do you know of any people of that kind in this part?—Yes, but the land has gone out of their hands. I know a gentleman that bought land, and let it. It used to be let at 150*l.* a year, and it was let for 303*l.* I can positively state that there have come hundreds of pounds out of the family's pocket to keep people in the farm. There was a lease taken on it. It was on that estate, which is a small one, that there was the case where the party went and asked the overseer to increase his rates.

30,710. What was the object of that?—Oh, I think you can see through it as well as me—to get another dip—to have another mortgage.

30,711. What do you mean by another dip?—To have a bit more on the mortgage, I should think. It is in the mortgagee's hands now, and they have got a white elephant.

30,712. But have there been many of these land speculators as you call them in this part?—Unfortunately, there have. I can bring a gentleman forward that went on to a small holding on one of these estates; he went there with an ample stock; he had a tidy little balance at the bank, and in a few years he had to take a hoe and work as a labourer in the garden to get a bit of food for his children.

30,713. That was the tenant?—That was the tenant; he went there with ample stock, with ample ability; his stock went altogether. As he said in his own words, he would not like anybody to have known how he was situated, but he had to go to gardening, and he was brought up to a better profession.

30,714. That is the tenant, but who was the land speculator. Had his landlord bought that land recently?—Yes.

30,715. He raised his rent?—No. He went into the farm, and he found the rent was too high, and before he could pull himself together, he found that he was on his back.

30,716. You mentioned just now that some landlords charged from 5 to 7 per cent. on outlays which they had made on their farms?—Buildings.

30,717. Is that common?—Well, about half I should think do it in what is rather a small district. There are some landlords who do the buildings all themselves, that is, Lord Kensington and other landlords in the neighbourhood. My own landlord does the buildings, and we do it between us, and there is no interest.

30,718. But when you pay interest, you pay at least 5 per cent. on the building?—Yes.

30,719. Do you really know any case where you pay 7 per cent.?—I have been told by the tenant that paid 7 per cent. that he could not make it anything better, but I could not get such tenant here to-day.

30,720. Are you quite sure that that would not be a sufficient reason for his not coming. Do you really believe it?—I believe that it is only slavish fear—that there is no reason for it, only it is the slavish fear of the tenants.

30,721. But really do you believe that any number of the landlords in this part of the world have been charging 7 per cent. recently?—Oh, yes.

30,722. Do you know of any?—Yes, certainly, or I would not have mentioned it.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,723. For how many years, you do not mean a permanent addition to the rent?—I am referring now to one case in my mind of about 14 years. There was 300*l.* outlay, and 5 per cent. was paid on it, and the tenant did all the haulage.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,724. He paid the 5 per cent. all that time?—He pays it now. It is bundled in with his rent. He paid it separate for several years, and now it is all in his rent.

30,725. Do you know whether his rent was very low?—No, it was not low.

30,726. I mean low at the time?—It was let by tender—at least, it was advertised to be let by tender. The gentleman had to leave home by a certain date, and he sent for the tenant that was in, and asked him what he would give, and he agreed upon a certain amount, but there were tenders came in afterwards with 20*l.* a year more, and he had to pay 20*l.*

30,727. We have heard that it is not very usual here to let the land to the highest bidder. Do you think this was a very exceptional case?—I cannot say. At this time, times were very good. Farm produce was selling very well, and we were all anxious to keep in our holdings. I could give some statistics of how farm produce was selling about this time, gentlemen. There was a lease which expired on this farm, and there was a new tenant who had taken the farm, and then it came to be sold; the farm had to be sold again. It is not in the same landlord's hands at the present time. I know for a fact that he took the farm at 150*l.* a year, but he really had to pay 170*l.*

30,728. How was that?—Because there was a tender went in for 170*l.* That bears out my statement that the selected tenant has got to pay the higher rent.

Mr. Grove.

30,729. You say that leases were not very readily granted when they were asked for some time ago. I suppose now leases are not wanted?—Leases are not wanted.

30,730. Then you say that you have known a case where the lease was put on to a pocket-book?—The agreement.

30,731. The agreement was put on to a pocket-book?—Yes.

30,732. Is that sort of thing at all usual?—It is usual on the estate I believe.

30,733. Is it?—Yes, and I know a man that was there for six years, and never got one new jacket all the time he was there.

30,734. No copy was given at all?—No copy.

30,735. Then at the time when someone might be leaving, they would find that there were conditions in their agreement which they had not dreamt of?—Yes.

30,736. You go as far as that, do you?—Yes. They found that they could not mow the hay, and if they had mown the hay, they had to come to terms and pay so much for doing so. So the general rule was that they had to leave the aftermath behind. It is done in several cases on this same estate. I am glad to say it is not a very big one, but the hay generally came handy for the wind up.

30,737. But would it not be rather a foolish thing for a man to sign an agreement of that sort without knowing fully what it contained?—Well, it happens like this. On a man leaving to go out of a farm, very possibly because it may be sold, or from some cause or other, the tenant can take no other farm; there is on other farm to be got, and the one he takes is at any rate a little hole to shove his head into; besides, they want to keep things together very possibly in consequence of bad times, and again they want to keep in their old homes.

30,738. You said that notices of abatement are not always given?—No.

30,739. Do you know cases of that sort, where a farmer would sell his stock at very low prices on purpose to get the money ready to pay his rent, and then when he goes with his rent he finds there is an abatement coming to him?—No. I do not know of such a case, for I am happy to say that the landlords generally do not press to a day or two, or even to a month.

30,740. But still, if an abatement is to be made in the rent, is it not reasonable that the farmer should know of it some little time before?—It would certainly be right. I know a case so far as this: that a landlord asked the party who paid the rent when she went there how they were standing; it was a farm just bought; she told him that if she had known before she would have sold her cask butter and paid him. He said, "How much have you got left?" She said, "Two shillings," and the landlord paid her back 5*l.* Had she known the 5*l.* was coming, she would have paid him perhaps a month before, nearly up to scratch.

30,741. Do you think there are cases where the children of farmers go up into the hills in various places and earn wages, and then remit the money back to their fathers to pay the rent?—I have known such cases.

30,742. Are they general at all, do you think?—They are not general, but I can prove that that statement is correct.

30,743. You have not said anything about a Land Court in your statement?—No. Well, it is very objectionable to lots, and we do not like to put our heads into hot water knowingly.

30,744. People generally put their feet into hot water, rather than their head?—Very possibly objection may arise from something that Mr. Owen has been trying to set before us, but we want rents fixed properly—uniform rents.

30,745. You want security of tenure?—Security of tenure.

30,746. And free sale?—Free sale, as that gentleman over there said.

30,747. And full compensation for your improvements?—Yes.

30,748. Those are the main points, are they?—Yes, as that gentleman over there said about the straw, if I could sell my straw, I should have had 6*l.* a ton for it this last year, and I should have been able to sell and buy hay too.

30,749. Just let us go to another point for a moment. How is that when you send goods by railway you are very uncertain what you have to pay for the carriage?—They are more uncertain coming than sending. I sent for some barley to Bristol, I heard that the freight had been reduced, but by the time that I came to pay for it I had to pay about 19*s.* 6*d.* for six quarters, whereas if I had sent for it by sea I should have had to pay 8*s.* 8*d.* or 8*s.* 9*d.* So we cannot tell what it comes to.

30,752. Of course, that is a matter of policy; but still, there is a limit to which they can go and no further?—I know.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,753. On the question of free sale, I am not quite clear. What free sale do you mean?—Free sale of a farmer's improvements. If he will turn his land into pasture and get it into a good state of cultivation he ought to be paid for it.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,754. Following out that point about free sale, do you mean that the outgoing tenant should have free liberty of selling to the incoming tenant his holding with the improvements?—Not the holding—only his improvements. If he sold to a solvent tenant there should be no objection by the landlord. Certainly I should not wish to take the power out of the landlords, but you ought to be able to sell the improvements. Land would be in a very different position if that were so.

30,755. You do not mean the goodwill—you do not mean selling the holding?—No.

30,756. You mean you ought to be compensated for all the improvements you make?—Yes.

30,757. If you sold your holding the result would be, if you sold it to the highest bidder, that the incoming tenant would be rack-rented?—Very possibly.

30,758. And that as I understand it in Wales is not what is wanted?—That is not what we want.

30,759. Then with regard to a Land Court, you know what the feeling of the tenant farmers about you is?—Oh well, I have not referred to a LandCourt, but I know what the mind of the farmersabout me is. The political side is a Land Court, but it would not do for me, for I am considered a bit of a Home Ruler, and possibly it might not come with good grace from me to say so; but I know the feeling of all the political parties which I mix up with is that we should have some court to which we could refer our grievances and the adjustment of rents.

30,760. But did I not understand you to say a little time ago that you did not want to put your head into hot water?—Yes.

30,761. That you did not want to have litigation, you wanted some simpler way of getting a fair rent?—Yes, but you must please understand that you introduced the Land Court, and I am replying to you.

30,762. I only wanted to get at the bottom of what the feeling really is. What is the feeling?—The feeling is that we ought to be more secure on our holdings; and if we do any improvements, and if anything can be arranged less objectionable, I am certain that everyone would be glad to fall in with it, if there could be such a thing devised.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,763. I will just follow up those questions of Mr. Seebohm. I am not anticipating a Land Court, but I will ask you a question to this effect. You say that many of the tenant farmers are rackrented. What suggestion have you to offer for having those rents reduced except by the principle of a Land Court, or something of that sort?—Well, I fear rather that the principle would be adopted; where there is rackrenting there is no principle.

30,764. Is this fact that there is no demand for leases an evidence that farmers are doing well, or that they are not doing well?—God bless me, Sir, it is no good talking about that these bad times, or there will be somebody picking us up. We are doing the best we can. The fact is, the rent is too high for us to have leases. We should be afraid to take them on the present prices. There is no question that the rents are actually too high, and produce is actually coming down. If it would not be retracing my steps, I could give you an instance of my own. My farm was let about 22 or 25 years ago, and I should like to tell you what the value of the produce was at that time. The landlords, I maintain, were justified in raising the rent then, in consequence of all produce selling well. I entered on the farm where I am at the present time 22 years ago. The rent of the farm was risen 25*l.* to me from my predecessor. I say this, that the landlord was justified in raising the rent. I sold butter that winter at 1*s.* 8*d.* a lb in the rolls, and the previous year just the same, and butter in the cask went at about 16*d.* up to July. We sold stock of about 18 months old at from 9*l.* to 13*l.* each. I sold mine for 11*l.* 10*s.* Now, such stock is not worth scarcely half the money. The farm produce, I maintain, is not worth more than half at the present time that it was 22 years ago. So I give the landlords credit that they were justified then; but we ought to have had it down long ago. When we get abatements they are stopped a lot too soon. It is not begun in time, and is stooped too soon They do not help us over our weakness long enough.

30,765. You think that the landlords really have not realised the state of things?—That is my opinion; that they have not, or else I know we should have abatements from a lot of them. They have not realised the state of the times. We have got a lot of good landlords in Pembrokeshire, there is no doubt of it; but they have not realised the state of the times.

30,766. You think if they had realized it, they would have recognized the state of things by making reductions?—Yes, and I hope that this will quicken the recognition, too. I can state as a fact that a difference of 55*l.* was made up quick last week, when the party was coming here before the Court. I can speak as a fact that the difference between the landlord and the tenant was made up quick, a difference of 55*l.*, on account of the Land Court coming here to-day.

Mr. Grove.

30,767. No, you do not know that. They were perhaps in a very good humour with each other?—Well, they talked and they quarreled, and they talked and they quarreled, and then they became greet; and they were in a pretty good humour when they left.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,768. You say that there is not sufficient liberty for the tenant in the cropping of his farm according to the agreements?—No, well, that would apply in some cases. I mentioned a case where he could only put in one white crop. The fact is this very gentlemen gave me liberty to bring this case forward. That farm had changed into much better hands, and this year he has liberty to plough and break through that agreement, in consequence of no seed coming. We get so to believe that the one white crop system is the proper one, but the fact is he broke through it, and tried to get it a little further, as he thought to call in the red crop and green crop.

30,769. But are there not circumstances when it is better for the tenant to take two white crops in succession?—There is no doubt of that especially before the land lying down if the land is a little too old and spongy. It would improve under the process in my opinion.

30,770. Ploughing up an old pasture for instance, it would be better to have two white crops?—Yes.

30,771. You think there should be more liberty in cropping left to the tenant?—Yes. If you notice, in my statement, I did acknowledge that landlords were allowing tenants to break up land when it was really prohibited in their agreements; landlords allow the tenants to do that. Anything, sir, only not come down with the rent. That is about the fact of it.

30,772. You say you know of a case in point where the farm was let to the highest bidder?—Yes.

30,773. When perhaps there were more desirable tenants applying for the place?—Well, I think the illustration I gave you will be quite sufficient.

30,774. On whose estate was that?—The party owns no land now. I can give you the name of the estate. The party owns no land now; they have gone the other side. This was a farm that was changing hands at that time very often; it was changing owners, and it was bought no doubt at a bit higher rent for certain private purposes, but the fact remains the same, that the party took it for 150*l.*, and it was risen to 170*l.*

30,775. You say the rents in some cases have been raised from 50 up to 250 per cent.?—Yes.

30,776. Under what circumstances would farms be raised to that extent?—The one case in which it was raised 250 per cent., was no doubt an old lease. The farm had let at 28*l.* a year, and now it is let at 108*l.*

30,777. Did the landlord build extensively?—A little, not much—not extensively.

30,778. When did the lease fall in?—About 40 years ago, I should think—about 39 years. There are several cases I could give you to bear out those statements which are quite correct. There is one farm that was raised from 110*l.* to 180*l.* I think you have got my notes there. The names of the places are there.

30,779. You had better read them or else they will not get on the notes [handing back to the witness his notes]. If there is any gentleman that is not satisfied with the statement, I am prepared to give them. I should not give it publicly unless I am asked for it.

See 30,797. 30,780. Are you willing to hand over that document for it to appear on the notes?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,781. You said that as a rule farmers have no interest for their capital?—That is my opinion and experience. Well, in some cases they may, certainly.

30,782. Can you give us the name of the gentleman you referred to who made the statement that he had no compensation whatever when he left?—Yes, Mr. John Llewellyn, of See 30,890. Walton West. He had built a barn, and he put a roof on his house, and he did up the cow-house, and was allowed 14*l.* for it. He is here.

30,783. That was not sufficient?—Oh, certainly not by a long way.

30,784. Did he apply for more?—He is here and can answer.

30,785. Is he one of the people whose names you have given us to-day?—Yes, but they will not all come before you. It is only to bear out my statement. I could give you evidence of cases where the children are employed on the farm, and where they could not pay the rent except the children were working on it for nothing. There is a gentleman here that is prepared to give that fact, and there is another here prepared to give evidence that he could not pay his rent at a certain time except he had had money from his sons.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

30,786. Do you consider that more might be made out of farms if you had security of tenure and compensation for improvements?—Certainly. There is an instance there that I gave you. I know that man. He was farming from day to day. Naturally he knew the landowner was getting old, and on the death of the husband it was very possible the farm was to be sold. He was only just farming from day to day, and that was no good to anybody. Certainly the farm would have been in a much better state if there had been security there.

30,787. I know you do a good deal in the butchering line?—Sometimes.

30,788. We had a complaint at Pembroke that farmers could not sell their bulls or cows, that they cannot sell them now, I believe?—That is quite right. That is our experience, and the farmers are reduced.

30,789. Do you think we should petition the Government?—No, certainly not. It is only carrying out the arrangement that we used to have, but it is more strict. If it is carried out to the letter it is alright. It is right for them to have the best that the land can produce They have to go down to be shot very often, and they ought to be well fed to get a bit of pluck in them.

30,790. Who do you consider ought to eat the beef?—The soldiers that are to be shot down. Was not that what you were referring to?

30,791. I mean the beef that we cannot sell?—Well, sell it a bit sooner. Let it be younger.

30,792. At what age must they be sold according to you then?—You can keep them a good bit when you are selling the stock out.

30,793. As beef I am talking of?—They would never be more than eight years old when they are on the butcher's block.

30,794. Have you sold beef to the army at eight years old?—No, four years.

30,795. Then they are not killed at all?—No, certainly not, that is what I said.

30,796. I think it is a great loss now that we cannot sell our cows?—We shall find a better market. If we have rules laid down we must stick to them. It is no good finding fault and wanting to get out of them, not a bit—look it square in the face.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,797. I find there are others in Court who desire to have these names out, so perhaps I had better get you to read out in court those names where you say there has been a rise in rent?—The rise in rent of 250 per cent. will be found in the parish of Talbeny on a farm called South Hills. There is another farm that used to be let at 110*l.*; now it is let at 180*l.* That is Middle Broad Moor. The glebe at Talbeny used to be let one piece at 14*l.*, now it is 28*l.*; Upper Hasguard used to be let at 108*l.*, now it is 192*l.* That is a good bit back, but it has changed hands. The other farm, Lower Hasguard, again has risen from 130*l.* to 185*l.*; that is, including the building. Walwyn's Castle Farm has risen from 125*l.* to nearly 300*l.* Those are the cases I have just in my mind.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,798. I do not think we have the particulars of your own case quite. When did you enter upon your present holding?—22 years ago.

30,799. What is the size of it?—100 acres.

30,800. I think you told us that the rent was raised 25*l.* upon the old rent when you entered?—Yes.

30,801. Has there been any increase in your rent since that time?—No.

30,802. Have you received any abatement or reduction?—Yes.

30,803. When did you receive the first abatement?—Oh, be hanged, I cannot tell you—about the same time as most of the rest of them did.

30,804. But was that about the time that Mr. Rule Owen thinks the depression spread to Pembrokeshire, about 1887?—I think you must come down a little bit earlier—no, 1887 is about it.

30,805. What abatement has been made to you?—From 10 to 20 per cent.

30,806. Regularly?—Well, we got manure as an abatement. I was at my landlord to give me some abatement pretty well a year or two ago, and he said to me "Have had some manure," I said, "I beg your pardon, I have not had any these two or three years." He said "That is your own fault." Of course, that would never occur again for the want of asking.

30,807. Who is your landlord?—Sir William Davies.

30,705. 30,808. Is the letter you referred to a letter signed by R. W. Esmond White, Lieutenant-Colonel, Principal Agent of the Pembrokeshire Conservative Association, and published in the "Haverfordwest Telegraph" of the 5th October, 1892?—I believe that is it; you will find the date on it.

30,809. I have just glanced through it. Is this the paragraph you are referring to: "Unionist "landowners can materially assist, if only they "band themselves together, as the Radicals do. "Why should the former grant land, or give "money, to support chapels so long as their "congregations are avowedly hostile to the "Unionist cause; why should they assist the "preacher so long as he is the deadliest enemy "of their class; and why should they give their "farms to Radical tenants so long as good or "better Unionists applied for them Why "should they (as is often the case) give a pre-

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"ference to a Radical applicant, who will vote "against the principles and the interest they, "the landowners, profess to have at heart." Do I understand that you challenge that statement. Is it the fact that preference has never been given to a Radical applicant?—No, I do not. As I said in my remarks, I was happy to think that it was not acted upon, and I am of opinion that the gentleman would be sorry that he wrote it. He was rather under excitement at the time.

30,810. I thought you meant that this was an evidence that difference of politics and difference of creed had some effect with regard to agriculture?—Well, we are not to know what is behind the scenes when he was inciting the landlords to do so.

30,811. Now the inference I draw from Colonel White's letter, is this: he is complaining that landlords will not give preference to Unionists and Church applicants for farms. Do you think from your knowledge of the district that landowners have given preference to Conservatives or Church applicants?—I should not like to say so but it is an incitement.

30,812. Have they acted on it?—Not that I am aware of.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,813. There are some questions handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Will you name the landlord who charges seven per cent. on improvements"?—I am prepared to give it upon paper. It is said that it is charged on the St. Botolph's estate.

30,814. You do not know it of your own knowledge?—Yes, I have reason to believe it is correct in one instance whatever.

30,815. "Will you name the landlord or landlords who charge five per cent."?—Yes, my next-door neighbour does.

30,816. "Is he still the landlord"?—Yes, it has not changed hands since the building has been done.

30,817. "Who is the landlord who kept his "agreement in a pocket-book"?—Mrs. Somers, Rosemore. I have an old tenant here who can speak of it.

30,818. Do you know that of your own knowledge, or is it hearsay?—I have heard it often, and I have had relations living on the estate.

30,819. "Do farmers in your parts make a "rule of signing agreements without having "any idea of the contents of them"?—I hope they do not.

30,820. "With regard to the cases you have "named of rent being raised, have you taken "into consideration the question whether "money has been spent by the landlords"?—In some cases. In my own case there has been money spent by the landlord, but in the majority of cases very little, nothing to approach the increasing rent.

30,821. "What is the period of time covered "by these increases of rent"?—One would be about 39 years, and the rest would come within about 22 years.

30,822. Mr. Vincent also supplements his previous question with this, that you have mentioned only Mrs. Somers as keeping the agreement in a pocket-book?—That is the only name.

30,823. You do not say who the next-door neighbour was in regard to the five per cent.?—Mr. Charles Matthias. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I omitted this letter that I ought to have read to prove my case as to the insecurity of tenure. I have a letter here from an old tenant on the estate that he had his rents raised four times in 11 years 70*l.*, and had notice every two years.

30,824. This is a letter from a gentleman whose name we have down on our list of witnesses?—No, it is not, he used to live in the district. He had notice every two years, and his rent was raised 70*l.* in 11 years.

30,825. This is not Mr. Llewellyn, of Little Haven?—No.

30,826. This is a letter from a gentleman who might give evidence if he liked?—Oh certainly. It was pinned in my notes, and I must refer to it: "Dear Sir, In reply to your letter, father "was rose four times at Mullock in 11 years; "in 1864, 25*l.*, in 1866, 25*l.*, in 1867, 5*l.*, in "1868, 20*l.*, and one notice to leave besides, "but was never rose. He paid 330*l.* when he "took it first, and was rose to 405*l.* during "that time. I remain, yours truly,

"J. Llewellyn."

30,827. One other question by Mr. Vincent, "Can you tell us whether these increases which "you have named were upon old leases in any "cases." You told us one case?—Yes, in one case.

30,828. Have you any other names to give?—Yes, there was a lease of one of the Lower Hasguards—there are two Hasguards—from 130*l.* to 170*l.* I believe, and the late owner was the gentleman who stuck on the 20*l.* a year.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,829. In reference to some question that Mr. Seebohm asked you, I should like to ask you a few more questions. What do you mean by "security of tenure" when you use the term. You have told us that you do not care for leases?—Not at present rents.

30,830. Times are so depressed, you say, that it would be very imprudent to take a lease for a term of years at the present prices. If that is so, what kind of security or fixity of tenure do you wish to have?—We ought to have more than from year to year.

30,831. Do you mean a longer notice than one year's notice which is now given by the Agricultural Holdings Act?—That I cannot say; but there is no security when we can go in one year and come out the next.

30,832. Do you think there is a general feeling in favour of the provisions put in the Land Bill brought before the House of Commons by the Welsh members a year or two ago as to security of tenure. The provision was very much this: "A sitting tenant could not be evicted as long "as he paid his rent and performed certain "statutory conditions"?—I believe that would be a very good thing.

30,833. Do you think there is a general feeling amongst the farmers of the district in favour of such a provision?—Yes.

30,834. Has it been discussed among you?—Yes, and I move about amongst a good many of them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,835. Do you know any instances of farmers who have lost their holdings who have paid their rents?—Yes, Mr. Llewellyn had lost all he had on the farm too.

30,836. Is he the gentleman who pays 405*l.* a year?—No, that is another gentleman.

30,837. The same name?—Yes.

30,838. Mr. Llewellyn is coming as a witness?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. GIBBY called and examined.

Sir John Llewellyn.

30,839. Do you live at Talbenny Hall?—Yes.

30,840. You have heard Mr. John George's evidence?—Yes.

30,841. Is there anything you would wish to add to it, or take from it?—No. I think we pretty near agreed at the meeting that it would be best for our locality that Mr. George should come. I would say one thing, however, as to taking the evidence of the agents at Haverfordwest; they certainly are the agents of A 1 landlords. But you are not then getting at the No. 2 landlords, that is the rack-renters. You must take that into consideration. Mr. Rule Owen is a nice gentleman, and he gave evidence with regard to the estate he lives on, but we cannot all live on that estate. As to the farm

I hold I never got a penny back in percentage. I pay a rack rent, and I do not get a penny. The landlord complains of bad times and says he cannot afford it.

30,842. Are you under a large or a small landlord?—A small landlord; that is the worst of landlords in Pembrokeshire, the landlord who buys farms and lets them out. With the landlord I lived under before this he lived that side of the hedge and I lived this. He lived under Sir Charles E. G. Philipps, of Picton, at 16*s.* an acre and charged me 3*l.* 10*s.* for mine. I had to make a living for my small children somehow, and I tried, but those cases are great hardship. This free trade gives the landlord the benefit as well as the tenant. He goes and buys everything by free trade too. Why should not they lower the rents to meet the case. My landlord tells me he can eat foreign mutton, and that is very nice, but I cannot; indeed I would rather not have anything to do with it. Everything Mr. George has said I should like, so far as I am concerned, to agree with.

Mr. Grove.

30,843. What size is your farm?—109 acres.

30,844. What rent do you pay?—160*l.* There are nine acres of that you may call waste land and about 100 acres of good land.

30,845. The 100 acres you call fair arable land?—Yes.

Sir John Llewellyn.

30,846. The name of your farm is Talbenny Court?—Yes. Within the last 30 years there have been three tenants before me who have been sold out, so I think I have a strong heart in me to go on after them as they never paid their last half year's rent.

Mr. Grove.

30,847. Have you asked for any abatement?—Yes, I have even offered to build outhouses, if they would allow it back in the rent, at my own expense. If it was not for my family (I have three sons and two daughters) I could never have lived there. They work the farm for me; it is not my working for them.

30,848. Do they give you their services free?—Certainly.

30,849. Do you give them nothing in return?—I can hardly pay for clothes for them out of the farm. That is all I give them, and perhaps a shilling in their pocket when they go to a fair, or something of that sort. That is all I give them.

Mr. Grove—continued.

30,850. Are they grown up?—One is 24 and the other 18.

30,851. Is the one of 24 a boy?—Yes—a man.

30,852. He is entitled to go where he likes?—Yes, and the penny paper is encouraging him to say he is not going to work for the landlords much longer; then I am afraid I shall have to go to the Union or somewhere else.

30,853. Have you anything else to say?—No, I think the rents should come down just as the tithe comes in, as Mr. George says. As for a Land Court, well, it would be a good occupation for the lawyers very likely at the end if you had one.

30,854. At the same time from what you have said the appeals to your landlord have not been successful?—No, not only in my case, but I think, with the exception of two farms in the parish, there is no abatement made in Talbenny parish, and it is no use appealing to the landlords.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,855. As to your son, do you mean to say if you had to pay a labourer the average rate of wages for what your son does you could not make both ends meet at all?—No, I could not.

30,856. So that the position is this, without the voluntary help of your family you could not carry on the farm?—I could not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID BOWEN called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,857. Do you live at Monk Hill, Milford Haven?—Yes.

30,858. You have heard the evidence given by Mr. George and Mr. Gibby?—Yes.

30,859. Have you anything you wish to modify?—Not anything particular. I can bear all his statements out because we live in the same parish.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,860. What is the extent of your farm?—Including all, I should rather think it is 120 acres.

30,861. What is your rent?—164*l.*; and I have then about 20 acres of cliff land.

30,862. Out of the 120 acres?—Yes.

30,863. You have about 100 acres of cultivatable land?—Yes.

30,864. Is that good land?—Part is fair and some very inferior.

30,865. Is there a convenient market for your produce?—Not very convenient; we live opposite Dale, and I have to go to Milford and Haverfordwest; it is about seven miles to one and about 11 to the other.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,866. How many horses do you keep?—Four as a rule.

30,867. How many servants have you on the farm?—Not one, but I keep my own sons and daughters, the same as Mr. Gibby says.

30,868. Do you pay them anything at all?—I pay them nothing, only food and garments, and that is very inferior, like my own.

30,869. Has there always been that rent to pay?—Yes, always that rent. I have a lease of it for 21 years.

30,870. Have you asked for any abatement?—I did have an abatement on one occasion. That was last June; and I have asked this Christmas, and have had none.

30,871. Does your landlord own much land besides?—Yes, but I am rather under a difficulty. I live under two landlords; I live under the son and the mother.

30,872. Then I am not surprised?—The son, my landlord, is a good one; he is a man to live and let live, but I cannot say that the mother has the same feeling concerning the times, and perhaps she does not understand it the same as the gentleman does himself.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

30,873. We have heard of the difficulties of persons with two masters before?—And we can hardly ever please them both.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Davies called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,874. Do you live at Talbenny, Little Haven?—Yes,

30,875. Do you confirm what Mr. George, Mr. Gibby, and Mr. Bowen have said?—Yes.

30,876. Do you wish to modify what they have said in any way?—No, nothing, only lower the rent.

30,877. What is your holding, and what is your rent?—My grievance was settled this week before I came into court to say what I was going to speak of. I am under two landlords, and one of them had a bit of a grievance, and he settled it before it should come to the Land Court. I invited him to come along with me here, and if I should make any false statement he could hear it, and before he would come here he said he would give me it, that was 55*l.* There was a difference of that betwixt us. That was interest on repairs, double interest—two fines.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,878. You said "the Land Court;" did he call this Commission a Land Court?—No, I called on him to come.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,879. Could you say roughly how many of your neighbours, farmers, think the same as you do?—I do not think they care about putting in an appearance here, but I think they would be glad to have it.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

30,880. Would there be 25 of them, do you think?—Oh, yes, I think 50 of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,881. What parish or parishes is that in?—In the neighbourhood, not in Talbenny alone, but in the neighbourhood around.

30,882. Between here and Milford?—Yes, or a smaller district than that.

30,883. What parish is it chiefly?—In Walwins castle.

30,884. Are you in Talbenny parish?—Yes.

30,885. Is Little Haven a parish?—No, Talbenny is the parish.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,886. Is nearly the whole district under small landlords?—Yes.

30,887. Is that the great reason, do you think, for the difference?—There is no doubt that is the reason.

30,888. Is this state of things the result of a sale some few years ago, or has it been going on for a very long time?—Not lately; it has been going on for a very long time.

30,889. Was it a large estate cut up into small farms?—The parish of Talbenny, where we live, is not cut up, it is the same as it has been for many years. It has always stood the same.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Llewellyn called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,890. Do you live at Little Haven?—Yes.

30,891. You have heard the evidence given by these other gentlemen, and do you agree with it?—Yes.

30,892. Do you wish to modify it in any way?—No, I do not.

30,893. Or add to it?—May I make a statement with regard to my landlord's treatment of me; will you permit me?

30,894. Certainly?—I lived at a farm called Walton West; my father lived there before me, my grandfather, and my great grandfather. It was left to a gentleman in America by the late owner, of the name of Mr. Henry. When he came in and took possession of it I had notice to quit. I had built several houses up that had partly tumbled down, and when I had notice to quit from him without the option of staying I never had any compensation, with the exception of 14*l.* for one carthouse; that was all the compensation I had.

30,895. How long ago was this?—Sixteen years ago. That was a gentleman from America; he lived 3,000 miles away from here, and of course did not care what became of anyone here. I think nearly everyone that he had under his thumb had notice to quit.

30,896. Do you know what the object of giving you notice to quit was?—I cannot say exactly what the object was. The agent told me that he believed he had too little money for it.

30,897. Was the rent raised to the next tenant?—Yes, it was for a little time. It was let for five years at an increased rent, and after that, and at present I believe it is reduced to the old rent, and he had the houses I had built without any compensation to me whatever.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,898. Did he offer you the farm at this raised rent?—No, I did not have the option of paying.

30,899. Were you considered a fair, an average farmer?—There is Mr. George, he can speak for me.

30,900. Did anyone say you did not farm well?—No, they did not, and I defy them to say it.

30,901. Are you a farmer now?—I have been ruined by rack-renters, that is the truth of it. I believe our present land laws are a disgrace to civilisation. They simply allow the greedy foreigner to come in from thousands of miles, as in my own case, and send the tenants away.

30,902. How many tenants had the American?—He had the whole of the estate of the late James Griffiths.

30,903. What amount of money do you consider you had spent on the farm?—Hundreds of pounds; not only the house, but I reclaimed a great deal of waste land, and set up machinery as well, and I got not a penny for it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Walters called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,904. Do you live at Southwood Rock?—Yes.

30,905. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes, I am.

30,906. What is the acreage of your farm?—294 acres.

30,907. And the rent?—It was 200*l.* in the year 1879, when I took it, and in the year 1885 my landlord made me a permanent reduction of 20 per cent.

30,908. Making it 160*l.*?—Yes, and since that he has allowed me from 10 to 25 per cent. back of that.

30,909. After the permanent reduction you had an abatement upon the 160*l.*?—Yes.

30,910. Do you believe that differences of language, creed, or politics make any difference to the relation between landlord and tenant?—No, I do not believe it.

30,911. Do you prefer a tenancy from year to year to a lease?—From the year 1885 I have held my taking on a lease.

30,912. Do you prefer the lease or a yearly tenancy?—My landlord very willingly granted me a lease, and I accepted it.

30,913. How many years?—My life and 14 years.

30,914. Which of the two systems do you prefer?—I would just as soon have it during the life of my landlord, but I do not know what may happen then.

30,915. So that you have it for your life instead of his?—Yes, for my life instead of his.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,916. Who is your landlord?—William Stancomb, Esq., Wiltshire.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,917. Do we understand that the reduction from 200*l.* to 160*l.* was after you had taken your lease?—The reduction was made in the year 1885, and my lease was granted in 1890.

30,918. But the abatements have been since?—Yes, and before. I had from 15 to 25 per cent. before I took the lease on the 200*l.*, and besides that, my landlord has spent considerable sums of money from time to time in building. He has spent altogether since the year 1879 nearly 1,500*l.*; he did not charge any interest, and in some cases he has paid for the cartage.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,919. Judging by your own experience, do you think tenancy is reasonably secure in Wales?—In my neighbourhood I think it is.

30,920. Are you familiar with the terms upon which you occupy your holding; you have a lease?—Yes.

30,921. Do you put your lease in before us?—I have not got it with me.

30,922. What is your opinion about a Land Court?—I should prefer myself to treat with my landlord, because he has never refused me anything that I have asked him.

30,923. What is the class of work that has been done by your landlord in the way of building or draining?—He has built cottages and repaired them, and he has built farm-yards, and partly built and repaired others, and he has fixed up a lot of gates for myself, paid for the gates, and paid for the mason work.

30,924. Was that done prior to the time you took a lease?—Before I took the lease.

30,925. Is there any custom of the country in your part; in other places besides the one you hold?—In what sense do you mean?

30,926. I think we have heard from Mr. Rule Owen there was no particular custom of the country?—I am not aware of any.

30,927. I suppose the custom is embodied in the agreement, whatever it is, and there is no special agreement. Can you tell us whether there is any ground for saying, as has been said by some witnesses, that the farmers are afraid to come forward?—I am not aware of any ground for saying so.

30,928. Have you anything else to say to the Commission?—That is all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

30,929. Leases for lives are very uncommon, are they not, in agricultural holdings now?—Well, I cannot say much about that, but I have a lease on my life and 14 years.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

30,930. Have you known your landlord very long?—I remember him from a child; I mean since I was a child.

30,931. Were you in his service before he gave you this lease?—No, my father was a tenant of his.

30,932. In Wiltshire?—No, in Pembrokeshire.

30,933. You regarded this as a favour; you were glad to get the lease?—Well, I accepted it.

30,934. Who suggested it; did he offer it to you, or did you ask for it?—My landlord some years before suggested it to me.

30,935. Was he under any obligation of any kind to you?—None whatever; I to him, if there was any obligation.

Mr. Griffiths.

30,936. At the time you had your lease rents were coming down very rapidly in Wiltshire, were they not?—I could not tell. I do not know, that may be.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,937. Has Mr. Stancomb an agent?—No, he acts for himself.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

30,938. Has he a large estate in Pembrokeshire?—Yes, he has a pretty large estate. I could not give you the acreage I forgot to look. I could tell you.

30,939. Do you think the other tenants are as favourably situated as you are?—Yes; I receive the rents for him from a few of the tenants.

30,940. You act as a sort of agent for him down here?—No, but I receive from four or five, and I send the rent away along with my own, and he has allowed them the same as me.

30,941. Are the others under lease as well?—No, only myself on the same estate.

30,942. Is the landlord an old man?—Yes.

30,943. Do you think he offered this as a protection for you for fear you might fare worse after he had gone?—That I could not tell.

30,944. Do you think the tenants on the adjoining estates are as favourably situated as you are?—That I could not say.

30,945. You are not prepared to speak to that—No.

30,946. Only as to your own?—That is all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. P. BUSHELL called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

30,947. Do you reside at Park East, New Mote?—Yes.

30,948. Can you give us any information as to whether, in your opinion differences of language, creed, or politics are of importance in this district?—I do not believe the difference in language, creed, or politics makes any difference to the landlord—the majority of the landlords in Pembrokeshire I mean; I cannot speak for anywhere else.

30,949. Are you a landowner?—Very little.

30,950. Do you occupy any land?—I do.

30,951. Would you tell the Commission whether you consider a lease or a yearly tenancy is the best tenure?—I prefer a yearly tenure.

30,952. Will you say why?—Because of the changing in markets, and such like, that we can go to our landlords for abatements, as we have to do in these days now.

30,953. A man does not care to take a lease in the face of a falling market?—No, certainly not.

30,954. Do you consider tenancy in this county to be reasonably secure?—I believe the majority are reasonably secure.

30,955. We had a sad instance of an American gentleman having turned a man out of his farm. Do you know any other instances?—No, I never heard of an instance of the kind before.

30,956. Are copies of agreements usually given to the tenants?—They are generally given, but there are lots of small holdings without any written agreement whatever.

30,957. What have you to say about a Land Court?—I do not approve of it.

30,958. You object to it?—I object to it.

30,959. Will you give your reasons?—I will. If you had a Land Court, I do not believe that the landlord would be inclined to spend any money on improvements on his property, and as I told you just now, we could not go for abatements as we go in bad times. The markets are very changeable in these years.

30,960. Are the improvements on the buildings usually made by the landowner or by the tenant?—It is sometimes done by the landlord free of charge, at other times it is done in this way, that we have to pay so much, that is according to the agreement between the landlord and the tenant before they commence.

30,961. What are the terms on which they are made?—An extra payment, and sometimes the materials are given by the landlord, and the tenant does the labour which is generally speaking done.

30,962. Is that usually the case, or do you think the landlord usually makes the permanent improvements?—The landlord usually.

30,963. Without any charge?—Very seldom to my knowledge. My knowledge is not very extensive. I have always been on the same estate and my father before me.

30,964. How has it been in your own case?—Well, we have had to pay a little, but very little too.

30,965. What is the custom of the country?—Do you mean with regard to the letting of the land. It is let by the year, the tenancy to commence in September, and I believe the majority of the small tenants are under verbal agreements, merely guided by the custom of Pembrokeshire.

30,966. What is the custom of Pembrokeshire?—That is 12 months' notice. I believe different counties have different customs, and they say sometimes that custom is before law, but I do not know.

30,967. We wanted to know what the custom was here. An outgoing tenant receives a certain sum I suppose from the incoming tenant for inexhausted improvements, Is that so?—They generally on our estate allow for improvements, but indeed I never left the estate in reality. We have a very good landlord.

30,968. Who is your landlord?—Sir Owen Henry Philipps Scourfield, Bart.

30,969. Do you know of any instance of farmers being afraid to come forward to give evidence before this Commission?—No, I do not. I have not heard anything to that effect whatever.

30,970. Have you anything else to say to the Commission?—Nothing.

Professor Rhŷs.

30,971. What acreage of land do you hold?—Between 300 and 400 acres.

30,972. What rent do you pay?—I pay 331*l.*

30,973. Have you many servants and labourers on your farm?—I have.

30,974. Where do you house them?—I have the single men in the house.

30,975. In the farm house?—Yes.

30,976. How many?—Four generally.

30,977. And the others?—They have cottages.

30,978. Which you let to them?—Which I let to them.

30,979. Do you find any objection to housing the single men in the house?—No, none in the least.

30,980. Is that the usual arrangement in this part of the country?—No, they do not sleep in the house, they have a room outside to sleep in.

30,981. Where is that?—It is near the house.

30,982. A loft above?—Yes, a loft above.

30,983. A stable or barn; that is the usual arrangement, is it, in farms in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

30,984. Where do they spend their evenings?—In the house.

30,985. In the kitchen?—Yes, in the kitchen.

Mr. Grove.

30,986. I suppose you would consider security of tenure, as it is called, desirable, would you not?—Well, no. I take it year by year.

30,987. You say you take it year by year now, because prices are low and things are depressed, but taking the average over a number of years, do you not consider that security of tenure is desirable?—Not these last 12 years.

Mr. Seebohm.

30,988. May I ask what wages single men in your house would be getting besides their board?—They vary according to age. I have a boy of 14 or not 14 quite, and from that age up to 22 or 25, and the highest of them have 22*l.* a year.

30,989. How much does the boy of 14 get?—He only gets 7*l.*, and it is quite enough to.

30,990. Do you know many instances in which labourers, single men like those, saving money when they are young, put by capital enough to take little farms?—Oh, yes; many times.

30,991. There are a great number of instances in your district?—Oh, many.

30,992. Is there a great deal of competition for farms when they are to be let?—Generally for small farms.

30,993. And the competition is between farmers' sons and the labourers?—No.

30,994. Do the farmers' sons pretty easily get farms?—Some of them go to the collieries if they cannot get farms.

Mr. Richard Jones.

30,995. What abatement has Sir Owen Scourfield made during the last two or three years?—10 per cent.

30,996. Are you satisfied with that?—Well, we are satisfied; I am satisfied anyhow.

30,997. And you think the others are all satisfied?—I believe so.

30,998. How do you manage; do you make an application for the abatement or take what the landlord chooses to give you?—No, we make an application; ask him for it.

30,999. Do you specify any amount?—No.

31,000. Are the holdings on Sir Owen Scourfield's estate let cheap?—They are let very moderate, but not moderate considering these last two years.

31,001. You are not in favour of security of tenure?—No, I am not.

31,002. Would you like to be disturbed at your place and turned straight off?—I do not know. I do not think there is any fear of that so long as I can pay my rent and be a good farmer.

31,003. But supposing your landlord took offence against you for some insufficient cause, and sent you a-going, would you be satisfied?—I think I would be the first on the Mote estate that he would have treated so—the first to be disturbed on the estate.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,004. The first who has been heard of?—I should be the first on the estate these last 20 years to my knowledge to be done so by.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,005. Speaking generally, would you consider it a bad thing for tenants in general?—I do these last 12 years. Before, I would take a lease if I had a chance, but now, these last 12 years, I would not take a lease.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

31,006. But now you see it is possible for you to get sufficient security of tenure, without taking a lease, by legislation; what do you say to that?—I would rather not.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,007. How often, Mr. Bushell, have you had an abatement of rent?—The last two half years.

31,008. Have you had no abatement until the last two half years?—No, I have not.

31,009. You did not apply for it?—Well, no.

31,010. You said you knew no tenants who had suffered from insecurity of tenure?—Not on the Mote estate.

31,011. But did they on the estate you mentioned just now?—Not on the Mote estate I said just now.

31,012. The question was asked whether you knew of other instances besides this one. Was not that so?—I do not know of instances of the kind.

See 32,618. 31,013. Are you not acquainted with the farm next door to you, Posty Farm?—I am.

31,014. Was the farmer turned out of his own accord?—I do not know. He had notice, I believe.

31,015. Did he wish to remain there?—I do not know. I am not aware.

31,016. Are you not aware that he applied for the farm?—No, I am not.

31,017. You are aware, I suppose, that he had built a good many houses there at his own expense, are you not?—I do not know. I know there were some small buildings done there. I do not know what it was.

31,018. But did you know or not that Mr. Evans built them at his own expense?—I was not aware, or did not know it till now.

31,019. And you never heard of it?—I never heard of it till now.

31,020. How long has your present rent been fixed; how long had you paid your present rent before you got a reduction?—I think it is somewhere about 22 or 23 years, Mr. Griffiths.

31,021. You gave us the wages you pay the labourers now and your servants; what is the difference between the wages you are paying now and the wages you paid when you commenced?—I have no doubt it is from 3*l.* to 4*l.* a piece more now than then.

31,022. No more than that?—3*l.* or 4*l.* each.

31,023. What used you to pay your servant girls in those days?—I cannot say now. I can remember them very low.

31,024. What is the lowest you can remember?—2*l.* 10*s.* for a girl outside.

31,025. Could you get the same dairymaid now for 12*l.* 10*s.*?—I do not speak of a dairymaid.

31,026. Well, let it be a dairymaid or any other; can you get the same sort of maid now for 12*l.* 10*s.*?—No. I should be very sorry to have one, too.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,027. I did not quite understand that last answer. Do you mean that you would be very sorry to have to pay that?—I should be very sorry if I could have them at that now—at 2*l.* 10*s.*

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

31,028. I understood you to say there was 4*l.* difference in wages, and that you paid 4*l.* more per head now than you did a little while ago. This would be a great deal more than 4*l.* more, would it not?—Yes, but I was speaking of 40 years ago to Mr. Griffiths, and he asked me what wages I paid, and I said 2*l.* 10*s.*

Mr. Grove.

31,029. What wages did you pay 40 years ago for that particular help you spoke of?—2*l.* 10*s.*

31,030. What would you have to pay for the same sort of labour exactly?—Female labour?

31,031. Yes.—9*l.* or 9*l.* 10*s.*

31,032. 9*l.* 10*s.* as against 2*l.* 10*s*?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,033. I have three questions handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Are not Sir Owen Scourfeld's rents notoriously low?"—No.

31,034. You said just now that they were moderate?—Moderate rent, but that is different, I believe, to notoriously low.

31,035. "Have his rents been raised within the last 50 years?"—Yes.

31,036. "Would you not rather be on his estate without an abatement than on some estates with a large abatement?"—Indeed I should.

31,037. "Are you aware that the tenant of Posty was not turned out at all?"—I am not aware that he was not turned out; I know that he had notice to quit; I heard that he had notice to quit.

31,038. Was he turned out at all?—I do not know. They had a sale afterwards. I was at the sale.

31,039. "Have you not heard that he bought a property for 130,000*l.* from Sir Owen Scourfield, and that Major Colby simply declined to let his son have Posty?"—I knew Mr. Evans had bought the property, but I did not know that that was the reason that Mr. Colby would not let Mr. Evans' son be there.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,040. Was not Posty Farm let by tender?—I believe it was.

31,041. Are you aware that Mr. Evans tendered for it?—No, I am not; I do not know.

31,042. Are you sure he did not?—I am not sure he did not and I am not sure he did, for I heard somebody say that there were 60 tenders came in for it—that is all I know—59 or 60.

31,043. Is it likely that he should have left of his own accord then?—No, not when he had sons. I do not see why he should leave of his own accord. His son could be there.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Morris called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,043*a*. You are Mr. Richard Morris, I think?—Yes; will you permit me to explain that my brother had intended offering evidence here before you, but owing to the presence of an infectious disease in the house, it was thought advisable for him not to do so. If you will accept my evidence I shall be very glad to tender it. I have had but very little and very short notice to prepare any evidence to put before you, but if you will accept it I will endeavour to answer any question which you may wish to ask me.

31,044. Are you prepared to speak upon the same headings that your brother would have spoken upon. We were informed that they were substantially as follows: the cause of depression, remedies for the cause of depression, small holdings, labour, and the yeomanry?—Yes, and the whole of the questions that are on that sheet, Mr. Chairman.

31,045. Would you kindly tell me what your opinion is with regard to the differences of language, creed, or politics, and whether they make any difference to the relations between landlord and tenant?—As regards the first part of that question, language, it does not concern us at all; we all speak the same language here. But the other two points in that question, I most unhesitatingly say do not make any difference whatever, and if you will permit me I will endeavour to give you a case in point, to show why I say so. My late father, who died some three years ago, was a tenant on the Lawrenny estate. He had been a tenant on the same farm for a period of 58 years, and I may say in passing that the rent at the time that he died was the same that it was when he took the farm first, namely some 61 years ago. My mother, who was a member of a chapel in the little village, on one occasion applied to the landlord, who was a Churchman, to aid the chapel funds, and in reply she had a note from him to say that she could put his name down for five sovereigns towards the funds of the chapel. The same gentleman not only did this but the burial ground was found to be too small, and, of course they wished to extend it; he not only gave this 5*l.* towards the funds of the chapel, but he also gave a free gift of a piece of land to extend the burial ground, and allowed the sitting tenant 10*s.* a year for the land taken away from his farm. So much for creed. I can give you another instance of my own landlord who had a farm that came into his hands, which I believe was the last farm that came into his hands, where there were no family connexions to follow on, and out of a number of applications, among whom were a number of Churchmen and I believe pretty good farmers, a Nonconformist was selected. I can give you a number of other cases if you call upon me to do so, but I think those instances will suffice to show what the state of feeling which exists is.

31,046. Generally you state that creed and politics make no difference in the relations between landlord and tenant?—I certainly think they do not.

31,047. Do you prefer a tenancy from year to year or a lease?—Speaking generally, I certainly should prefer to have it from year to year. I should be very sorry to have taken a lease three or four or five years ago. I do not think I should have been any better off now, in fact, I think I should rather have been in a worse position than I am, and should have got nothing back. I should have, perhaps, had to maintain the farm in a state of repair, and not have got gates and posts as I do now free of charge.

31,048. By your own experience do you think that tenancy is reasonably secure in Wales?—I certainly think so, especially on our estate, and on other large landed estates in the county. I most certainly think that the tenancies are reasonably secure.

31,049. How big is your holding?—160 acres.

31,050. Have you a copy of your agreement?—I have no agreement.

31,051. But are you familiar with the terms on which you occupy your holding?—It is a year-to-year tenancy, of course, and I am at liberty to farm in any manner I think most profitable. I have free toleration.

31,052. What is your opinion about a Land Court?—Well, I have some solid objections to a Land Court which I could urge before the Commission, such as if a Land Court was introduced it would perhaps cause the cordial relations that exist now between landlord and tenant to cease.

31,053. Who is your landlord, Mr. Morris?—Sir Owen Scourfield. Then again it would cause the landlord to take less interest in the tenants and in the holding, and it would cause him perhaps to spend a little less money on the estate, and one thing and the other. But, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Commission, when the middle classes, such as farmers, lawyers, tradesmen, and doctors, get hold of the land, then I say that some sort of authority is necessary to fix the rent. I think that these gentlemen make it a purely commercial matter, and they extract high rents from their tenantry, and I think that some authority is necessary to fix the rent, or step in and mediate between those gentlemen.

31,054. In connexion with the questions which have previously been put about a Land Court, you are asked to state whether, if there was a court to fix the rents, landlords would be inclined to spend any money on their estates?—I rather think they would not be inclined to spend any money. It would interfere with the freedom of contract, and perhaps upset the cordial relations that exist between landlord and tenant at the present moment. But, for the reasons I stated before, I think there should be some sort of authority. I would not wish to see it in the shape of a land court. There was a witness before you who urged that this authority should take some other shape; an independent valuer. Now, for the purpose of adjusting the matter between petty landlords and their tenants I say some sort of authority is necessary, but as regards the large landed interests of the county, I should for one resent the introduction of a Land Court, and do not think it at all desirable or necessary.

31,055. Will you mention the class of work done by the landowners in the way of building, draining, and so on, the terms on which it is usually done?—The landlord, as a rule, puts the building up, and the tenant does the hauling. The landlord supplies gates and posts, and the tenant puts them up. I have had buildings put up on my place; the landlord has put them up; I did the hauling; he did them all free of charge. I paid no per-centage.

31,056. You paid no per-centage?—I have not done so so far, and I hope not to do so.

31,057. Any draining?—No, I have not done any draining, and I do not know the conditions under which it is done.

31,059. Is there any ground for saying that farmers are afraid to come forward to give evidence?—I do not think so, speaking for myself. I believe that on the large landed estates the matter does not apply at all. I do not think there is a single farmer on the estate on which I farm who would be afraid to come and give evidence, providing that evidence was unfavourable to his landlord.

31,060. What is you opinion of the cause of depression?—There are several causes in my opinion for the depression. The first and the chief is, of course, free importations—foreign importations—excessive, and I may say unfair, railway rates, and the unjust charges on land, so that land has to bear the largest proportion of the rates, and the maintenance of the poor, and the highways.

31,061. Can you suggest any remedy?—Yes. I could suggest a remedy, Mr. Chairman. I think there are several things that could be done to relieve the depression. For instance, I would cause a small tax, a just and equitable tax, to be placed on barley and on oats, so as to enable the home producer to compete favourably. I would allow wheat in its raw state to come in free, but I would tax flour, so as to cause the foreigner to send us his wheat in free. I would make the maintenance of the poor a national charge, and I would have the Vanand Wheel Tax re-introduced, so as to make those who use the roads most pay for them. There are several other little things which it is not, perhaps, necessary for me to mention.

31,062. Have you anything to say about small holdings?—There are several small holdings in our district but I believe they are tenanted by the wrong class of tenants altogether. Nearly all the small holdings in our district—I speak of my own immediate district, somewhat adjacent to Her Majesty's dockyard—which I consider ought to be held by labourers or farmers' sons, are held by mechanics and artizans in Her Majesty's dockyard. I do not consider that a proper state of things at all.

31,063. Have you anything to say about labour?—Well, certainly the labour is very high. It is one of the causes of the farmers' depression. The labour is at least 50 per cent. higher now than it was 33 years ago.

31,064. What about the yeomanry?—I believe that some witness somewhere or other made some allusion to the yeomanry, and insinuated that undue influence had been brought to bear upon the troopers to induce them to enter the regiment. I do not think such was the case.

31,065. I do not think that was stated; I think it was suggested by somebody rather in the shape of a question, if I remember right whether services were required of the tenants on large estates that they should serve in the yeomanry I always understood that it was perfectly voluntary?—Of course it is perfectly voluntary. That is just what I wish to refer to; I consider the service in the yeomanry perfectly voluntary. I was a member of the foot service for 20 years before I joined the yeomanry, and there was no influence brought to bear upon me with regard to joining the yeomany, neither do I think it is ever used.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,066. Where is your land situated, Mr. Morris?—If you know Her Majesty's dockyard, it is about half between this town and that establishment.

31,067. About how far from here?—About three miles.

31,068. You would put a little tax, as you said, on barley and oats?—I would.

31,069. Are you not rather cruel to the wheat growers in leaving them out in the cold?—What can we do? Protection we cannot have in its entirety. We must admit the wheat to come in, so as to fill the mouth of the masses in the towns. They will not have protection. We wish them to sympathise with us and help us, so as to enable us to compete on fair terms and equal terms in the way of barley and oat growing, which we cannot do at the present moment.

31,070. Yes, but you know there are other parts where they grow wheat extensively. It would be rather hard, I think, to leave them out, would it not?—Yes, it is hard on them, but we cannot help it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,071. A question is sent up by Mr. Gibbs, "How long has the present witness farmed." How long have you been a farmer?—Seven years.

31,072. " Were you previously to that till five " years ago a sailor " ?—I beg your pardon ?

31,073. Were you a sailor before that ?—Well, I have been to sea, Mr. Chairman, but I was brought up on a farm; I was following the plough and mowing before I went to any other business, so I know a little bit about it.

The witness withdrew.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,073*a*. There is a letter handed in to the Commissioners which I will read, because I think it is interesting as clearing up a difficulty that arose to day. It is a letter from Mr. William James, of Stubbleborough, who gave evidence yesterday, and whose evidence was rebutted this morning by Mr. Mousley. Mr. James says, " Mr. Chairman, Sir: The Commissioners must " have misunderstood my evidence yesterday, or " I must have misunderstood the questions put to " me. I did not wish to convey the idea that

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

" if any farmer under Lord Cawdor was agita- " ting for a reduction of rent, and another " come forward and offer the rent, that the " sitting tenant would have to leave. What I " wanted to convey was that when a farmer is " agitating for a reduction of rent, and this " comes to the ears of the landgrabber, that they " inform the agent that they will give the " rent. This happened very lately." Then we have handed in to us something in the nature of a memorial. We do not accept memorials, but if any one of the gentlemen who signed this memorial thinks fit to go into the witness box and inform us of the fact that such a memorial has been prepared, we shall be glad to see him and hear him. It looks to me as if it were a testimonial of character to Mr. Lort Phillips, therefore I think it is absolutely unnecessary. A large number of gentlemen have signed it; Mr. George is one of the signatures. His name was down on our list of witnesses and if he is here we shall be very glad to hear him upon the mere matter of fact.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Letterston.

THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

National School Room, Letterston, Friday, 9th March 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR),

MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I wish to say we are exceedingly sorry that both Lord Carrington and Lord Kenyon are unable to be present, the former owing to Court engagements in London, and the latter owing to being compelled to return from his duties for a funeral.

There are two things I desire to mention now, one is to repeat a few words which fell from the Chairman, Lord Carrington, on the occasion of the first sitting of this Commission, at Cowbridge, in Glamorganshire, when he said: "Experience has shown that unless witnesses "speak out boldly and without fear, inquiries "like the one we are engaged in are futile. "We have no reason to believe that undue "pressure will be brought upon any class of "witness or any individual witness; nor have "we reason to think that the giving of evidence "by any person in this country will lead to his "being in any way injured. But it is, of "course, possible—we cannot shut our eyes to "what has before now taken place in regard to "affairs of this kind—that some men are less "scrupulous than others, and that it is possible "that witnesses who speak here what is in "their minds may be subjected to loss and "annoyance. We desire therefore (and it is "our duty to do so) to point out that the recent

"Act, the Witnesses' Protection Act, 1892, "affords a remedy adequate to meet any "ordinary case." At the same time the Chairman quoted a letter which had been written by Mr. Vincent, who represents the Landowners' Association for South Wales and Monmouthshire, which, although being young in point of time, has a large number of members: "An idea appears to prevail in some quarters "that this Commission exists for the purpose of "bringing contentious issues either between "political parties or between landowners and "tenants as opposed to one another. The "corollary to this wrong idea is the suggestion "that in some form or another tenants who "offer evidence may suffer resentment from "their landlords. On the part of my associa-"tion, I am instructed to repudiate this idea "absolutely, and to say that apart from the "fact that witnesses before Royal Commissions "have abundant protection, it is the desire of "the owners composing this association that "every witness should give evidence with a "feeling of absolute security that he will not "suffer in any way." I think I may say that the whole method in which this Commission has been conducted has been the one desire to elicit the entire truth.

Mr. JAMES JENKINS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,074. Do you live at Brimaston Hall, Wolf's Castle?—Yes.

31,075. Tell us what your occupation is; are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

31,076. What is the name of your farm?—Brimaston Hall.

31,077. What is its acreage?—About 260 acres.

31,078. What rent do you pay for it?—320*l.*

31,079. I believe you desire to make a general statement before the Commission?—Yes.

31,080. You are a county councilior, I believe?—Yes.

31,081. Do you wish to say anything about the personal or ownership heads of inquiry?—No, I do not know much about that.

31,082. You wish to speak principally with regard to occupation?—Yes.

31,083. With regard to the terms of tenancy?—Yes.

31,084. What is the usual day of entry in your district?—September the 29th.

31,085. Are farms, as a rule, let from year to year?—Yes, as a rule.

31,086. When you say the usual date of entry is the 29th of September, is the notice usually six months or 12 months?—12 months now, generally.

31,087. Do you consider that there is any general demand for leases?—No, I think not.

31,088. Can you give any reason why?—Well, the present rents are too high, and the time and prospects too bad; no one would like to take a lease at the present rents. You had some evidence before you yesterday of persons taking leases, but they were moderate rents.

31,089. Are changes frequent?—I cannot say very frequent in general, but on some estates there are two or three removals every year. On one farm on an estate in this neighbourhood there is a removal from that particular farm about every four years. But in general I cannot say there are frequent changes.

31,090. It is rather the exception than the rule?—Yes.

31,091. Are they more frequent on the rack-rented estates than on larger estates?—Oh, yes.

31,092. Can you give any instances of hardship?—Do you mean persons being turned out?

31,093. You say in your statement there are several cases of hardship through the rents being raised on the tenant's improvements, and farms being sold over their heads?—I can prove the case of a farm's rent being raised on the tenant's own improvements after the death of the tenant.

31,094. After whose death?— His children had to pay more by 5 per cent. after being in the place 25 years; that is a place called Llangloffan by here. The person entered there and had the place in a very bad state. It was held by an auctioneer. When a person fails here he mostly goes to the auctioneer. The auctioneer finances him on, and if there is anything in the place the auctioneer takes it out, and when he takes that and what else the tenant has got he lets him go. This place was taken after that; it was in ruins, in every respect, buildings and lands. He had a good landlord, and he happened to fall into very good terms with him, and they went on, hand in hand, like that, and brought the place to a nice face; and when he died, the agent sent out Mr. Rule Owen, and he raised the rent 50 per cent., from 120*l.* to 180*l.* They held on, and directly the place was sold for 5,000*l.*

31,095. Is that the case we heard of yesterday?—No; that is here in this neighbourhood.

31,096. I thought I remembered the figures as having been given yesterday. Were those improvements done entirely by the tenant?—The landlord built, but the tenant did the haulage. There was a very nice extensive farmyard and dwelling-house.

31,097. Is that the custom in this country?—Yes, that is the general custom. There was a gentleman here, Mr. Llewellyn, of Tregwynt, who always paid for the haulage, but he is dead.

31,098. Can you say what proportion of the expense would be represented by haulage?—That depends upon the conveniences; some have to fetch stone from a distance.

31,099. Does it vary too much to give any approximation?—Yes, I think so. I should say in many instances from 10 to 15 per cent.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,100. Of the whole cost?—Yes. In this case they had to go down to Butter Hill to fetch the timber; the carpenters' work was done down there.

31,101. A long way off?—Yes, a long way off.

31,102. How far?—18 miles.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,103. Can you give any other instances of hardship, of rents being raised on the tenants' improvements?—I can mention the case of another farm called Llangloffan; when Mr. Mathias took possession, it was in a very bad state. He farmed it well; then the place was sold to Mr. Llewelyn, of Tregwynt, and he raised the rent; then they went on improving continually, until Mr. Lewelyn's death, when the place was sold again. Mr. Mathias bought the farm himself now, giving 2,000*l.* more than it was valued by the vendor's valuer.

31,104. You say that was an artificial value?—Yes, 2,000*l.* more than it was valued to be sold at, being in a nice situation and being farmed well. He had brought it to a nice face, and everything that was wanted. When he had it it was only colts' foot. Take this tract of land, down from here to St. David's, nearly half of it has been sold and changed hands within the last 30 years. You can know then that that affects the tenants when it is so insecure as that.

31,105. If land does go to auction, can you suggest any reason why it should not be sold at a reasonable rate?—No, only when it is brought to auction; it depends then upon the competition.

31,106. Does that carry to your mind the suggestion that the rent might have been fixed at a higher rate prior to the sale?—No, I do not think that.

31,107. You think that the rent was a fair one before the sale?—I do not know about a fair one, but I think it was fixed. I do not think it was fixed for the purpose of the sale.

31,108. You really think it was not fixed for the purpose of sale?—No.

31,109. Could you tell the Commission what the circumstances were which called for a sale at all?—Mr. Llewelyn died. There was some talk that he bought an estate in Shropshire and sold this.

31,110. Is it your opinion that the rents are higher on the smaller or on the larger farms?—Higher on the smaller farms.

31,111. Why?—There is more competition, for one thing.

31,112. And I suppose the buildings are larger in proportion to the quantity of land?—I do not know that. The buildings are very poor in general.

31,113 The buildings are very poor in general?—Yes, generally shameful.

31,114. Do you think that has any effect in making the rents of smaller farms greater than those of the larger farms?—I do not understand you.

31,115. I mean this. A landlord would have to build a dwelling-house and certain outbuildings upon the smaller farms, but that, it seems to me from what I have heard, would have more a tendency to raise the price of the small farms per acre than the bigger ones?—Yes, but he would not be able to do it if it were not for the competition.

31,116. You think the competition is the principal ingredient in fixing the value?—Yes.

31,117. How are the rents fixed, by tender, by valuation, or by private treaty, or all three?—In every way: some by tender. I culled two advertisements out of the newspaper circulating in the neighbourhood here, which I will hand to you.

31,118. This is: "Farm to let, Caerwen and "Gwyndy Bach, in the parishes of Llandeloy "and Whitechurch, in the county of Pembroke, "209 acres, 2 roods, 34 perches." Were they let as one farm, Caerwen and Gwyndy Bach?—This last sitting it has been let separately.

31,119. Hendreganol Farm is another farm advertised?—Yes; the first one I call attention to.

31,120. Those are two advertisements showing that these two farms are to be let by tender?—Yes.

31,121. Is the rent fixed by valuation on any of the farms?—Oh, yes, very often.

31,122. And sometimes by private treaty?—Yes.

31,123. Could you tell us which of the three you think the most common form of letting?—Private treaty, I should think.

31,124. Are these advertisements at all common for farms to let?—Oh, yes, I do not say they are common on large estates.

31,125. But upon smaller estates?—Yes.

31,126. You think they are common?—Yes.

31,127. Are the estates in this neighbourhood usually large estates or small estates?—They have been cut up something wonderful.

31,128. Is that by the sale of the land?—Yes.

31,129. There have been a good many purchasers?—Yes, a good many.

31,130. We are told in some instances it is to get the land into more hands. Do you think that is a good thing?—If they could get it for less value, it would be.

31,131. Do you think the rents rule higher on the larger or on the small estates?—Oh, upon the small estates.

31,132. With regard to these tenders which you have spoken of, is the rule usually that the tenders of the highest bidder would be accepted or not?—I cannot say exactly; I never did tender, but I have heard them say like this, that they choose their tenant, and they say: "You are to be our tenant, but we have been "offered this, and you must give so much for "it." It is like that, I have been told.

31,133. That would be, I suppose, a competition rent?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,134. It says in the advertisement that the highest tender will not necessarily be accepted?—Quite so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,135. You think the practice is when a man has been selected, he is told that another man has offered more than him?—Yes, I think that is about it, although I have not had experience of it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

31,136. You have not had any experience of that yourself?—No, I have not.

31,137. Have you known instances of that to your own knowledge?—Yes.

31,138. Has the selected tenant then given the maximum amount that has been offered by someone else?—Well, they might have come to an agreement then on it.

31,139. What is the result of that?—Well, a very high rent.

31,140. Do you consider that rents have been raised generally, or not?—Raised generally within the last 40 years.

31,141. Have those rises in rent been common in recent years. You are going back 40 years Take it over a shorter time than that, say within the last 20 years?—Yes, when we have a period of middling good times, rents are raised, and they forget to take them down when the times are bad.

31,142. Have there been any reductions on the other side when the times have been bad?—No; I think I know of one, but there is very little of that—some give abatements.

31,143. Have you had any reductions?—Not permanently; I have had abatements. I have not paid the tithe; since the new Act the landlord pays the tithes.

31,144. That operates in the direction of reduction?—Yes, and he allowed off my last rent 15 per cent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,145. Besides paying the tithe?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,146. That would be, I suppose, a permanent reduction of the rent?—Yes. Well, I suppose the tithe he will not charge me with again.

31,147. Do you consider the landlords generally give abatements?—Well, good landlords do. A landlord whose rent is reasonable would give it, but these with rack rents do not give a penny.

31,148. What is the amount that they give in reduction as an abatement?—From 5 to 20 and 25 per cent.

31,149. What is the usual time to pay these rents?—About Christmas, about the end of December, and to the end of January.

31,150. How long after the rents became due?—Three or four months.

31,151. What is your opinion about the preferential claim for rent?—Well, I think it a very bad thing. It gives a landlord power to take all that is on the farm, and leaves all the rest of the creditors together without their money.

31,152. Do you think that that is to the detriment of other creditors?—Yes, I know scores of cases in which the ironmonger, the manure merchant, and all those have to give all their things for nothing, and the landlord has his in full.

31,153. Who as a rule pays the tithe?—The tenant.

31,154. Now since the Act?—Yes, I think so in general.

31,155. I am speaking generally?—I have heard that Lord Cawdor does it, and some large landlords take that.

31,156. In your own instance the landlord pays the tithe?—Yes, since the Act came in.

31,157. And the local rates?—The tenant pays the local rates.

31,158. Have they increased or not of late years?—We have a union rate, the Highway Union Rating, and that makes a lot of difference in some of the places. When we come to these places, in 1865 our first half-year's rate was very low, 3*d.* in the £, then it was raised, and we had the Union Rating, and now we pay in all 2*s.* in the £.

31,159. You consider it has increased 1*s.* in the £ within the last 25 years?—I suppose it has, from 6*d.* to 1*s.*

31,160. What are the sizes of the farms generally?—All sizes from 5 acres up to 500.

31,161. Averaging?—I can scarcely tell you.

31,162. Has there been any consolidation of holdings?—Yes.

31,163. May I understand exactly what you mean by consolidation of holdings, two farms thrown into one?—Yes, two small farms.

31,164. What is the object?—As you said just now, saving buildings, very often.

31,165. The effect of that has been that one of the two buildings has fallen down?—Yes.

31,166. Or been converted into workmen's cottages?—Well, often fall down altogether.

31,167. What has the effect of this consolidation been?—It has depopulated the country often.

31,168. Is there any sub-letting of land?—Yes, farmers generally sublet to their tenants, and some, when they go back and find they have too much, let it out to help them to tide over bad times.

31,169. In whose favour does this sub-letting operate?—Well, it helps the tenant to tide over some difficulties sometimes.

31,170. He sub-lets it at an advanced price, I suppose?—Oh, yes.

31,171. You say the relative effect of sub-letting is various?—Yes.

31,172. Explain what you mean by that?—In some cases it is good, and in some cases it is the other way.

31,173. With regard to the labourers, is there a scarcity or not?—A scarcity.

31,174. Are the wages higher or lower than they used to be?—Higher by 150 per cent.; I am sure of it.

31,175. What is the consequence of that?—That a deal of the work is left undone that ought to be done.

31,176. What is the effect upon the fences and ditches?—You had a case yesterday in Haverfordwest where the tenant had to pay 17*l.* 15*s.* for damages that his stock did to his neighbour.

31,177. That was not in our court. That was in the county court sitting there. Was that owing to the neglect of the hedges?—Yes.

31,178. A boundary hedge?—Yes.

31,179. Do you know of any land going out of cultivation?—Very little; there may be some here and there, but very little. I think on the whole there is more reclaimed.

31,180. Do you know any land that is insufficiently cultivated?—Yes, on the farms that are rack-rented they are badly cultivated whatever.

31,181. What is the reason of that?—Too high a rent, and they cannot afford to employ labour, nor cultivate them as they ought.

31,182. What are the prices for farm produce?—Very low indeed, and they are getting lower; beef is falling now, and fodder is so scarce. It has not been so low this last 40 years in Haverfordwest; butter cost 10*d.* a lb. in March, and it used to be 14*d.* in May and June.

31,183. What is the reason for that?—I suppose it is the foreign competition, the Australian and New Zealand produce coming in and filling the market.

31,184. You suggest that the reason of the farms being insufficiently cultivated is: first, high rents; secondly, low prices for farm produce; and thirdly, the high price of labour. That is your opinion?—Yes.

31,185. Have you anything to add to that?—No, I do not think so.

31,186. Within the last 20 years has there been any mountain land reclaimed?—Yes, some waste land, I will not call it mountain land. There is not much mountain land in this neighbourhood.

31,187. Land that used to be unenclosed?—No.

31,188. You called it mountain land?—I took it from the syllabus.

31,189. It is not what in a mountainous country you would call mountain land, but I suppose it was unreclaimed land?—Yes, or land let to go after it had been reclaimed once. Near all these mountains have been corn at some time; you can see the traces of ridges on all of them. I do not know at what time.

31,190. That was at a time when corn was high, and you would get a good price for it?—Labour must have been very low then.

31,191. Has much arable land been laid down to pasture?—Yes, a good deal.

31,192. At whose expense?—The tenants, but we in this part of the country lay it alternately; we lay nearly as much down every year as we break up. That is our mode of farming. Say we break in 18 or 20 acres of oats, and we lay down as much in the seed for the barley. Then we are putting in extra, we are putting down permanently some of the best fields.

31,193. Are the root crops cultivated more than they used to be?—Yes.

31,194. And the fallowing, is that continued?—Very little fallowing now.

31,195. Who does the permanent buildings?—Just as I said; the landlord mostly pays everything but the haulage; that is the rule.

31,196. Do you consider there is a want of buildings in this part of the country?—Uncommonly, nearly half our produce goes waste for want of buildings, or very near it. It is like this. It is an acknowledged thing that it requires about one-third more to feed them out than when in shelter under cover, and then wanting proper accommodation to feed them, of course, tells, and we are put to great disadvantage because we have to sell our stock off lean instead of fat.

31,197. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I know very little about it.

31,198. Do the people here know much about it?—Very little.

31,199. Have you anything to say with regard to it?—No, indeed I do not know much about it myself, but it would be a good thing if it was put in force—with a little amendment, perhaps.

31,200. Do any people about here contract out of it?—Well, I cannot exactly say, indeed, I think there are some in some instances who contract out of it with regard to the notice.

31,201. That is in section 33, in which the option of contracting out is given under certain circumstances. What is the usual custom on leaving a farm?—Well, in general the tenant is allowed to sell off all his crop.

31,202. How does he usually sell?—By auction. Some estates have the agreement to take the crops and manures on valuation.

31,203. What do you say with regard to game preserving?—There is very little game in our part of the country. There is some, perhaps, in some plantations, but very little our part of the way.

31,204. Have you anything to say about agricultural education?—Yes, we have had a little; we have had some dairy schools here.

31,205. Are they useful?—Yes, and they would be more useful if people would stick to them, and attend to them, and follow up the orders; that is the cause of the butter being so low.

31,206. Is that the work of the technical instruction committee?—Yes.

31,207. Are you a member of that committee yourself?—No.

31,208. But they have been doing some good work in your neighbourhood?—Yes, they propose to have a school here this summer if we can get a convenient place for it.

31,209. Have you anything to say with regard to co-operation and combination?—Well, there is a little of it down here—a society called the Western Counties Association have many members here—they have a deal of produce and manure about under it. They think it is a good thing, because merchants have been charging too much profit on things, and much too high.

31,210. Can you give us your opinion as to the general relations between landlords and tenants?—Well, in general very good. In some cases the landlords are harsh.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,211. I gather, Mr. Jenkins, that the district for which you speak is a Welsh district?—Yes.

31,212. Most of the farmers and labourers habitually use the Welsh language?—Yes.

31,213. You made some reference to a sitting tenant buying his farm?—Yes.

31,214. Are there many such instances in this district?—Yes, several.

31,215. How has the thing turned out as a rule?—Well, most of them have purchased very dear, and they are worse off than if they were tenants.

31,216. They have had to borrow money on mortgage, I suppose?—Yes.

31,217. And on the whole, the condition is worse than before?—Yes, and they have had to pay high interest to those Welsh "Jews." They will not allow them a penny these bad times.

31,218. I will first ask you this question: May your farm be taken as a fair sample farm in this district, both as to the method of agriculture and the general way of carrying on the business?—No; it is more of a grazing farm than general.

31,219. Yours is more grazing than the other farms around?—Yes, up in the mountainous part.

31,220. How many labourers do you employ, may I ask?—Four.

31,221. Do they live in the house with you, or are they hired by the year?—Two of them abide with us.

31,222. And the two others?—They are employed, but they do not live in the house.

31,223. In cottages on the farm?—Yes.

31,224. What wages do you pay the latter?—They have got some little bargain; they have some land, and they are allowed the land in consideration of their wages.

31,225. What wages do you pay them?—One of them we pay 6*s.* a week, and he keeps two cows and half a dozen sheep, and we give him half an acre of barley.

31,226. And potato ground?—Yes, potato ground; we do not reckon anything of that.

31,227. Then what he gets is the cottage rent free?—Yes, only 6*l.* he pays rent for that.

31,228. 6*l.*?—Yes, he pays 6*l.* rent.

31,229. And the other labourer?—This year he has got a little place besides where he lives, and we dress that for him, and he keeps two cows at the place where he is, and he pays 3*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

31,230. The cows are his own?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,231. What do you pay the indoor servants?—We pay the biggest boy 18*l.* and the other 8*l.*, a little boy.

31,232. Is the sort of bargain which you describe as existing between yourself and your outdoor servants, common in this part of the country?—Yes, most farmers have got something of the like.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

31,233. What effect do you think that has upon the quality of the labour performed by them?—I think we get better labourers by doing that. We scarcely can have labour without.

31,234. Then you think that an increase in the number of labourers who have got a couple of cows or a few sheep would, on the whole, be a good thing?—Yes, and to have the labour moderate—to have it for its value.

31,235. Have you found any reluctance on the part of the tenant farmers to come forward to give evidence before us?—Yes, a good bit. I have been asking several, and they do not seem to understand what is the meaning of the Commission. Some have been asking: "Have they "done much good where they have been?" I am telling them that that is not the meaning of it, and that they are just like a jury trying a case, and that if we will not come before them to give evidence we cannot expect them to do good. Others do not like to come. They have not much good to say about their landlords, and they do not care to say bad, and to face them again, I suppose. Very few of us have got landlords like Mr. Walters, of The Wood.

31,236. Is he your landlord?—No. I talk of Mr. Stancomb, the landlord down there at the Wood. He allows them 25 per cent., and a moderate rent—that is it.

31,237. There was a common here formerly, was there not, in this neighbourhood?—Yes, it was enclosed before I came up to this neighbourhood.

31,238. What has become of the recreation ground that was allotted?—Indeed I cannot say. Is it just down here, sir?

31,239. We have heard that there was—I have forgotten how many acres, but a considerable number of acres let for recreation ground?—What was allotted at the time is filched from them now.

31,240. Who are the trustees?—I do not know. There are no trustees.

31,241. No trustees?—There are some people who will give evidence upon that, perhaps. I do not know so much.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,242. Could you give us the name of the farm where the rent was advanced from 120*l.* to 180*l.*?—Llangloffan.

31,243. Mr. Mathias's?—No, Dedwith, my father-in-law's.

31,244. How long had it been at the former rent?—I cannot tell you exactly, indeed; something about 25 or 26 years.

31,245. Was it advanced on his own improvements?—Yes, of course.

31,246. This advance was made on his own improvements?—Yes, except the buildings; of course he did the haulage to the buildings.

31,247. Was there much laid out in buildings?—Yes, there was a very nice farmyard here.

31,248. The whole was new?—Yes, the whole that was done was new.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

31,249. How was he induced to give as much as 2,000*l.* for his farm more than its value?—He did not like to leave.

31,250. Do you think the Welsh people are very much attached to the place?—Very, or else half of us would go this long time. I was offered in the autumn a farm in Hertfordshire, worth 400*l.*, for nothing for two years.

31,251. You were not inclined to go?—I should like to myself, but I would not have the family with me.

31,252. What is the object of these advertisements that are issued about farms? Are there not plenty of applications without advertising?—Yes, plenty.

31,253. What is the object?—You must draw your own conclusions, I suppose.

31,254. Do you mean you have no conclusion to draw?—Well, only what you know.

31,255. Do you suppose it is a cheaper way than having a field to field valuation?—No, it is not that exactly, I suppose.

31,256. You spoke about the butter just now. I suppose you have tasted this Australian and Danish butter?—I have tasted the Danish; I have not tasted the Australian.

31,257. You are aware that there is much more uniformity in it than in the butter in this neighbourhood?—Yes, there is.

31,258. I think you know a good deal of this neighbourhood with regard to the butter that is made here, do you not?—Yes.

31,259. It is not all good, is it?—You cannot depend on it. Sometimes you might have a good cask, and then you do not know what it will be next day.

31,260. That is the mischief; we want more uniformity. Do you not think it would be a good thing to have a butter factory?—Yes, but you will never have the people to bring the cream there.

31,261. Why not?—I do not know, but they have too much prejudice. I do not think they will ever come to it.

31,262. It is far more profitable?—Well, if you can prove that to them, perhaps they might.

31,263. They should try it. I was in Wiltshire three weeks ago, and all the farmers there send every drop of milk to the factory?—There are so many small holdings now; the large dairymen could send 20 gallons as well as two, you see.

31,264. Yes, but they generally send a waggon round and take in all the milk daily?—That would facilitate it to some extent.

31,265. But you think the people of this country are very slow to adopt a method of that kind?—Yes, uncommonly so. More than half of them do not believe in the dairy schools at all.

31,266. Do you find that on some of the farms after the daughters have been to dairy schools the mothers will not allow their daughters to carry on the system?—Oh, very little. They are prevented there again.

31,267. I think you said just now that you knew of a good deal of land going out of cultivation alongside the mountains here that had been ploughed years ago?—Yes, I said it was cultivated now; that it had been under cultivation some time before, and left to go down, but now a good bit of it is claimed again.

31,268. Ploughed up again?—Yes.

31,269. They think they can have a little more out of it after a little rest?—Yes, I suppose so. People are turning a deal of their best land on the farm into grass, and then they want something for ploughing.

31,270. Of course. Do you consider it a good practice to sell the crops off by auction?—No, I think it is ruination on a farm.

31,271. Why do not landlords adopt another system?—I suppose they do not like to have the trouble and expense of doing it.

31,272. Then you spoke with regard to a farm that has been sold in the neighbourhood. A great many farms have been sold and purchased by tenants?—Yes.

31,273. Why are the tenants so anxious to buy, knowing that they are worse off than when they are tenants?—Yes, but they are in doubt as to when they will have to go.

31,274. It is because they want security?—Yes, they want to remain, and after a man has been labouring on a place, say, 10, 20, or 30 years, it will have become part of himself, in a manner. I believe that.

31,275. They have seen many of their neighbours that have been turned out after having been a long time on their holdings?—Yes.

31,276. So that they are induced to buy their holding for their own?—Yes, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have been selling here on very advantageous terms.

31,277. And they generally offer pretty fair terms?—Oh, they say that nobody shall have it until the tenant is finished with it. Sir Owen Scourfield, on his estate which he has got here, is now willing and anxious for the tenants to buy.

31,278. It is a very good thing. Then you spoke with regard to labourers. You let them a plot of ground to keep cows, too, do you not?—Yes.

31,279. How do you find they are doing, as a rule?—I find them doing very well.

31,280. How about their children? Are they better adapted for agricultural purposes than other children?—Of course. They are brought up so as to understand the beasts and cattle, and they can do better.

31,281. On a former occasion I see that a witness said that they made far better servants than others?—Yes, and they have reason.

31,282. They have been taught the habits of early rising, and so on?—Yes.

31,283. You have given Mr. Brynmor Jones the wages of your servants, I think?—Yes.

31,284. Could you compare the wages of the present day with what they were when you first took the farm?—Yes, I was thinking of it last night. The first year we went there we were paying the biggest boy 9*l.*, and last year we were paying the biggest boy 18*l.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

31,285. That is double, exactly?—Yes.

31,286. What about the servant girls?—The servant girls are the very same as the boys, or rather more.

31,287. More than double?—Yes.

31,288. Do you find the labourers as efficient now as they were?—I cannot say that they are, indeed generally.

31,289. Do they take a delight in their work. Are they so competent in hedging, ditching, and thatching?—There is a deal of difference in them. We have had some very good men lately.

31,290. But do the young people take to that sort of thing now the same as they used to in former days?—No, they do not.

31,291. Do you think they work so hard now as they did then?—Well, they work a deal less time whatever. Since I can remember it was from sunrise to sunset—from five to seven, but it has come now to just from six to seven.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,292. What is the name of your landlord, Mr. Jenkins?—Mr. Thomas Harris.

31,293. Where does he live?—Haverfordwest.

31,294. Personally you have no complaint against your landlord?—No, he is a very sympathising landlord—very.

31,295. But I suppose you complain that the rent is too high?—Oh, the rent is very high, but a little sympathy goes very far; a man would struggle a good deal for a little sympathy—a kind word would have a deal of effect.

31,296. A kind word will not go very far?—No, but a little with it. Last year we had a terrible year, a year that nobody, I suppose, wants to ever see the like of again. One man was telling me in town one Saturday a fortnight ago that he is paying every week 10*l.* for the stock.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,297. How large is the farm?—I cannot say exactly. It is on the Withybush estate. I asked him whether he had an abatement of rent. He said, "I had 15 per cent., but that nearly goes in one week." But there are many of us, some worse and some better, in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,298. Are there many estates in your neighbourhood, where there is no abatement made?—Yes, on the Sealyham estate they give no abatement.

31,299. Is Mr. Mathias a rich man?—I think he is. He farms about 1,000 acres down at Castle Martin.

31,300. It is not because he is too poor that he does not make an abatement?—Oh no; but I cannot see what that has to do with the tenant, if the landlord be rich or poor; where is the tenant going to have it if the land does not produce it? It is the landlord's part of the contract which has failed this year; the land has not produced the crops, and I think that is a very poor plea, to say that the landlord cannot afford it.

31,301. Of course the tenant is not bound to stay on, is he?—No. To turn out now he is knocked down at once, because there is nothing for the stock, and to carry on is lingering death.

31,302. So that really he has fallen between two stools?—Yes.

31,303. Are these large estates where these farms are let by tender, these Caerwen and Gwyndy Bach estates, which belong to Mrs. Thomas?—Yes.

31,304. Is it a large estate?—No.

31,305. Is it customary on that estate to let farms in that way?—Yes. Last year they let a farm like that.

31,306. But I suppose it is not a general rule in the district?—No. I handed another little advertisement to Sir John. There is a farm let this year which is mentioned in that paper.

31,307. Trefadog?—Yes. I thought you would ask me about waste land, whether the rent increased because of waste land. You see now waste land is mentioned in that.

31,308. What have you to say about it?—That is to prove that they do take the waste land and common land into account in letting farms. It is taken into account if there is a common.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,309. You were speaking of the difficulties of the tenant farmer at the present time. Notwithstanding those difficulties, in case your own farm was to let to-morrow, would there be a great many applicants for it?—I daresay.

31,310. And that is because the hope still remains that the times will be better?—Yes, people are going with their heads against the wall, so to speak; they do not see before them. Things could not be worse; I cannot see any gleam of light whatever.

31,311. So that there is a good deal of what is called land hunger here?—Yes.

31,312. Are they farmers' sons who apply for these farms?—Well, all sorts. A number of children and young men have gone off to the works, and send money home to their fathers, who are labourers now, and they take places—little places, not big ones at first—and like that they supply them with money from up there.

31,313. So that the farm becomes a sort of family home?—Yes, just so.

31,314. Could anyone live in the same comfort anywhere else more cheaply where that is the case—where some, for instance, can send in some money towards keeping them?—They want to raise and better their parents' circumstances, and to have a better place when they come home for their holidays. It is an inducement to them to help them. Where the young men are sober they can do that; they get some money up there.

31,315. So that the whole family are not living out of the farm always, although the farm may be their home?—Just so.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

31,316. Are there many other occupations in this neighbourhood besides farming? Is the fishing of any importance?—No. Fishguard is the nearest place here where any fishing is.

31,317. Yes, but I mean, would young men here from your farms go off fishing?—No.

31,318. How far would they have to go to get the employment that you speak of?—Up to Glamorganshire. There is nothing here besides. There are several labourers who have gone into the towns to drive waggons for the grocers, and that is so in the case of a good many of our labourers that used to be in the country.

31,319. Are there many cases of labourers rising to be farmers?—Yes, just as I mentioned; they have been helped by their own children like that.

31,320. So that you would know of a great many instances in this neighbourhood where people began as labourers and became tenant farmers?—Yes, just so.

Mr. Grove.

31,321. You say that leases are not asked for now. Were they asked for years ago generally, or were they satisfied with tenancy from year to year?—Well, yes, sir, they were more asked for.

31,322. Were they granted freely by the landlords then?—In some cases.

31,323. Not in all cases?—No. They are scarcely asked for now. On large estates a man is quite satisfied.

31,324. You speak of some abatements being made in the rent?—Yes.

31,325. But in other cases there are no abatements?—No.

31,326. Where the abatements are made, do they give notice that they are going to make the abatements on rent day?—Indeed I cannot say; not in general, if ever.

31,327. On those farms where there is no abatement, are the rents supposed to be lower?—No, quite the contrary.

31,328. Rather higher you think?—Yes.

31,329. I think you gave us that point before in your evidence, did you not?—Yes.

31,330. Do you think in some cases a tenant farmer would have to sell his stock at a reduction on purpose to get his rent ready by rent day?—Yes, or to borrow money.

31,331. And then when he goes there he finds that there is an abatement, so that it would be an advantage for him to know of that abatement a few weeks beforehand, would it?—Yes, of course, it would.

31,332. There are not many cases of permanent reduction, did you say?—Well, no, very few.

31,333. Is there sufficient labour upon the land, do you think, to cultivate it properly?—No, not near.

31,334. Do you think that any more cottages are needed to get more labour back on the land?—Yes, and better cottages. There are cottages that are not fit for human beings, many of them; they are small and low. You can see cottages from here down to Llanhowell or St. David's where you would not believe that people would live.

31,335. That is the best they have got at the present time, I suppose?—Yes.

31,336. Just as they are convenient?—Yes.

31,337. Is there much gathering together into villages of the ordinary labourers, or are they scattered pretty well about on the land?—They are scattered.

31,338. Scattered on the land?—Yes, I suppose this is the biggest village anywhere this way.

31,339. I think you said that there is a certain amount of co-operation amongst farmers for buying feeding stuffs and manures?—Yes.

31,340. What principle do they go upon, do they pay cash for those things?—Yes.

31,341. That is understood to be cash?—Yes.

31,342. What interest is generally paid upon borrowed money—just about the average—is it 4 per cent., or getting as low as 3½ per cent. when people buy their farms?—I think 4 per cent. is the average; there would be some, perhaps, at 3 and 3¾, but I think 4 would be the average.

31,343. When they advertise by tender, it, of course, has a tendency to pull out the very best price that it is possible to let the land for?—Yes, of course, that is so.

31,344. In cases of sub-letting, is the consent of the landlord given to that sub-letting?—If there is an agreement they are bound to have it.

31,345. And in an ordinary taking, would the landlord be willing for it as a rule?—Not as a rule, I suppose. I say that without knowing how it is done.

31,346. Do any of the dairy farmers about here use a separator at all?—None in this neighbourhood that I know of whatever.

31,347. You are a member of the County Council, are you not?—Yes.

31,348. Then are you a member of the Main Roads Committee?—Yes, I have been appointed on it now, I had a letter to-day.

31,349. As strangers I will say this, that we did not see a finger post anywhere on the road coming from Haverfordwest here, I think, and if there were a few of those put up it would not cost very much, and it would be very convenient for strangers?—Yes, I will mention it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,350. You all know your own way about, but other people do not as well?—Yes, there has been a deal of talk about it in the Council too, and I do not know why it has been neglected.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,351. Do you breed sheep to any large extent on the farms about here?—No, cattle, and dairy farming is the main thing we do.

31,352. What breeds of cattle have you?—Well, they are mixed; black most of them.

31,353. Castle Martin?—Yes.

31,354. Do you consider it a good breed?—A very good breed indeed.

31,355. It does not want much improving, then?—I do not know indeed. I am making an experiment. I have a Hereford bull to mix with them, to see what they will do.

31,356. Do you know the system which I have heard called "cadw hafod"?—I have heard people talking about it.

31,357. You do not know it in this part?—No, I have heard some talk about it, that there is a system of letting the cows at so much per head.

31,358. They get a rent for the cows?—Yes.

31,359. When do they let them out?—They let them out for the year at Michaelmas, as the land is let. I think I heard of a case down in Roose of a farmer letting his cows out to a labouring man and his wife.

31,360. Roose is in the English part, is it not?—Yes, down below Haverfordwest, Milford way.

31,361. They would pay so much for the cows?—Yes.

31,362. About how much, do you know?—They can agree, about 8*l.* or 9*l.* a cow.

31,363. And whose would be the calves?—I think all would be the tenant's then, the owner of the taking.

31,364. The owner of the cow?—No.

31,365. The man to whom they are let?—Yes, he makes as much as he can out of them.

31,366. You do not know the Welsh name for that, do you? You have not heard the term "cadw hafod" or "maerwriaeth"?—"Hafod" is "dairy," is it not?

31,367. I want to know what you mean by "hafod" here?—Yes, I think so; "hafotty" means a dairy.

31,368. Do you use the word at all?—No, it has gone out of use now.

31,369. You have not any very high hills about here?—No. You saw those at the back there that they talk of.

31,370. Do you find traces of cultivation on the hills about here?—I cannot say that on the highest hills there are many.

31,371. Do you find traces of ploughing?—Well, there are traces on these mountains here. You can see that ridges have been there.

31,372. Have you ever seen them cultivated in your time?—No. Well, upon those up there we have seen something like it, but on flatter ground.

31,373. Lower down?—Yes, flatter ground; we have seen something like it in our neighbourhood here.

31,374. When do you think those ridges were made?—Indeed, I have no idea. Wages were very low then. I heard them saying that people were doing it when they were herding.

31,375. Do you mean herding cattle?—Yes, the herds would be doing cleaning and herding at the same time.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,376. Do you mean ploughing at the same time?—They have been ploughed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,377. Do you mean ploughing with cattle?—Oh, no. The cattle were grazing, and the herds were working, soaking and cleaning the ground.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,378. What do mean by "the herd"—the shepherd?—Yes.

31,379. You use the word in the Irish sense; the word "herd" is used in Ireland?—I meant cattle then, and not sheep.

31,380. You call the shepherd "the herd," do you?—Yes. Well, I did then, because I was thinking of cattle.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,381. But had you a man to look after the cattle independent of the shepherd?—No, but we do not call a man that is looking after the cattle a shepherd.

31,382. It is not after sheep but after cattle, and so you call him a herd?—Yes, cowman, or something of that he is called.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,383. What do you call him in Welsh—"bugail"?—Yes. We have none now; there used to be long ago. All is enclosed now, and there is no need of them.

31,384. I understand. You have had lectures on dairy work, I think you said?—We had a dairy school in St. David's and Fishguard.

31,385. Has the college at Aberystwyth been sending anybody down this way?—Yes, Professor Parry and a lady, a dairywoman, under him.

31,386. Were his lectures well attended?—The lectures and the dairy school are not the same.

31,387. No, but did he give lectures at all?—Yes.

31,388. Were they pretty well attended?—He was here about three weeks ago.

31,389. And did the people take to it?—I think they did indeed very fairly here. It is the first time it happened, and it was a very rough night. I think the Welsh take better to it than the English. They are telling me that the English do not care very much about it.

31,390. You mean in the lower part of the county?—Yes.

31,391. You live just by Wolf's Castle?—Yes, I live just across there, about three miles off.

31,392. I think we came up there to a higher level?—Yes.

31,393. Is your farm on the higher level or on the lower?—When you came there my farm is through that road in going up towards Wolf's Castle, if you noticed a road going up.

31,394. It is on the higher ground?—Yes, on the higher ground.

31,395. How far are you from the English border?—There are some kind of English just adjoining us.

31,396. Is there a village down there?—There is a little rivulet coming between us and Trefgarn Mountain. You noticed that mill on the road there, just down by the rocks; that river divides it from the English all the way.

31,397. It divides you from the English part?—Yes.

31,398. On the road where do we come to the English part—at the village by the bridge there?—By the mill. It is not pure English there, but they are mixed.

31,399. No, but we will call it English; it may be Flemish, I do not know—they go down for English, anyhow?—Yes.

31,400. Do you consider such a name as "Dedwith" an English name or a Welsh name?—Welsh, I consider it.

31,401. Is it a common name on the Welsh side, in the Welsh part?—No.

31,402. Is it a common name on the English side, do you know?—No, I do not know that it is at all. We have none here.

31,403. The Dedwiths are extinct. Dedwith means "happy," does it not, therefore it is rather unfortunate that that sort of man should become extinct. I want to know whether there is much difference between the English and the Welsh part?—We are hardier people, and we live harder.

31,404. You think you live harder?—Oh, a deal; there is no doubt about that.

31,405. You live harder in the Welsh part?—Yes; these landlords—Lord Cawdor, for instance, he is very glad to get a Welshman down Castle Martin way.

31,406. Do you say they are hardier or harder?—Hardier and harder—living harder—we can do with commoner things.

31,407. I asked a man what food they had in the English part—they look pretty well and in good fettle down in the English part; and I asked him what food he had, and he mentioned a very hard fare, I think. Would you have any objection to telling us what the ordinary farmers' family has in these parts?—We are going in for tea now; we have tea in the morning—mostly tea or coffee.

31,408. Do the servants have that?—Yes.

31,409. All the same?—Yes. We do with what we call boiled porridge for dinner.

31,410. What do you have for breakfast—bread and cheese and butter?—Yes.

31,411. Any bacon?—Not especially in the morning.

31,412. And at dinner time?—Yes, we have what we call porridge with it.

31,413. Do you call it "cawl"?—Yes.

31,414. What do you mean by "cawl" exactly?—Boiling water on the fire, and when it boils up, putting meal into it, then meat, of course, bacon mostly.

31,415. In that?—Yes, sometimes it would be beef.

31,416. You do not call that porridge, do you?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

31,417. It is called porridge, but it is "cawl" in Welsh?—Yes.

31,418. I understand that it is called "cawl" perfectly well. That is eaten with bread and so on?—Yes.

31,419. Then I suppose you have potatoes?—In our part mostly they have the porridge first, and then the meat with potatoes.

31,420. What meat would it be, bacon?—Bacon mostly, as a rule; sometimes a little beef or mutton.

31,421. Do you have fresh meat at all?—Well, very little.

31,422. Do the servants have the same fare?—Yes.

31,423. In the afternoon do you have anything?—Supper afterwards.

31,424. About what o'clock do you have supper?—Sometimes it is tea and sometimes it is broth.

31,425. You call the "cawl" broth also?—Yes, I am talking English now.

31,426. Then you mean the "cawl" that is left from dinner time?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,427. You made a mistake; you should have said broth in the first instance?—I was telling you exactly what we call it.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,428. It is rather thicker than the usual English broth?—Yes.

31,429. That is about the usual thing?—Yes, that is about the usual thing.

31,430. And some of the smaller farmers perhaps live a little harder than that?—Well, they have been doing so. We have been living very hard here. People have been treated very badly; there is no mistake about it. I should not blame them a bit if every labourer in the country would go and leave this part.

31,431. The cottages are very bad, you say?—They are very bad.

31,432. How many rooms do they contain—give us some idea of the bad class?—Only one room. They make a sub-division with a bed or something—a settle or something of that sort.

31,433. Is there any room upstairs?—Oh, no, indeed.

31,434. Are the cottages thatched or slated?—Slated, and some are making them now of zinc.

31,435. What sort of floor have they?—Not very good—sods.

31,436. A sort of clay floor?—No, nothing but on the ground.

31,437. A kind of hardened floor?—Sometimes it is made with lime and gravel.

31,438. Do the ducks and hens come in?—Very often.

31,439. And the pigs, too?—Well, they do not house them in the house; they come in, but they are not allowed to sleep in.

31,440. But the ducks and hens do come in?—Very often.

31,441. Do the ducks have pools on the floor? That is the custom in one of the royal villes of North Wales, I fear. Have you anything like that here?—Yes, we see some of them sometimes here, too.

31,442. I heard the other day of cottages being built here within the last few years with only one room downstairs, one room upstairs, and no back door, while the pigs and the ducks all come in, and there are no privies. Do you know of any such cottages being built nowadays?—Well, they are built with one room. It has only four walls, and then there is one room, unless the people make it into two by the furniture.

31,443. How many holes are there in those square boxes. There is a door, and how many windows?—Mostly two small ones.

31,444. What does the inspector of nuisances say to this?—He only enjoys his 50*l.* We never see him.

31,445. He looks after his own health?—Yes.

31,446. But you have an inspector of nuisances, I suppose?—Yes. He has his 50*l.*

31,447. And he does not come round this way?—Well, once I saw him.

31,448 What does he say about these things when he does see them?—I do not know, indeed. I know that the doctor called his attention to a house this spring.

31,449. What was the result of that?—I heard nothing afterwards.

31,450. Does he ever write a report?—I have never seen it. He does not come to the council; he comes to the board of guardians.

31,451. Are you on any council where he should attend?—No, I am not.

31,452. You do not have anything to do with his appointment?—No.

31,453. With regard to servants, some of them live in your house?—Yes.

31,454. Two of them?—No, not in—out in a little loft.

31,455. The girls live in the house?—The girls live in the house.

31,456. And the two servant men live where?—In a little loft over the coach-house.

31,457. Is there a fireplace there?—No.

31,458. Do they not occasionally find it very cold in winter?—No, they do not complain of the cold.

31,459. Where do they spend their evenings?—Well, it is just time to go to bed after they have finished the things in the winter.

31,460. But when they have finished?—Sometimes they take a stroll up to the public-house, or something like that.

31,461. To the public-house?—Yes, there is nothing—no kind of recreation anywhere here.

31,462. Your landlords do not supply you with sufficient building accommodation to give them a room for themselves?—No.

31,463. Or is there room for them in the kitchen?—There is room for them in the kitchen, and they are welcome to come in, too, as long as they like.

31,464. Are they welcome?—Yes.

31,465. In some parts we have heard that they are not welcome, but I understand they are here?—I think they are welcome to remain in, generally, as long as they like.

31,466. But they sometimes go off elsewhere for amusement?—Yes.

31,467. Is that the ordinary custom on farms about here, that they have a bed in a room outside?—Yes, I think so.

31,468. That is the ordinary thing?—Yes, I think so.

31,469. Does that have a good effect, do you know? Does that produce any disagreeable results?—No, I do not think it does.

31,470. You cannot have any control over their movements then?—No, of course not.

31,471. You do not know when they go to bed, and so on?—We would not be able to control them if we tried.

31,472. But if they were wont to sleep in the house, would you not be able to look after them better?—No, we should have to have the door open so that they would be able to come in.

31,473. In some neighbourhoods we have heard that they prowl about the farm-houses. Do you suffer from that sort of thing in this part of the country?—No, we are very fair, very good indeed for that, we are not in a very populous district here; we have the mountains about us.

31,474. Do you happen to know at all what the census shows with regard to illegitimacy in this part of the country?—No, I do not know, indeed.

31,475. Has it a pretty good reputation, do you know, or the other way about?—The other way.

31,476. It has not a good reputation?—No.

31,477. The English part has a better reputation in that respect, perhaps?—I do not think so either.

31,478. You do not?—No, I do not, indeed.

31,479. Both are rather bad?—Yes.

31,480. You would not care to give any details perhaps, so I do not think I have anything more to ask you.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,481. I wish to follow up a matter that Professor Rhŷs mentioned with regard to the dairies—the "hafotty" I think you call them?—Yes.

31,482. Are they going on now?—I do not know of one now.

31,483. In the old times did the farmers combine and put their cattle into one herd, and have one herdsman?—No, that was before my time.

31,484. Is that what the tradition is?—Yes, I think so.

31,485. The herd that you speak of who did the ploughing on the high ground was the herd of the village, I suppose?—Yes, that was so in places which we call Hendre Eynon, and St. David's, Llandeloy parish, and they tell me that that is the old place where they come over for the winter, and that they sent them up in the other places, and they came down to the village in the winter—Hendre meaning the "old town."

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

31,486. Yes. Do you know how long ago it is since that sort of co-operation took place?—No; I suppose it is some hundreds of years since then.

31,487. You quite understand me, do you not?—Yes, I think so.

31,488. That several farmers would put their cattle together into one herd, and appoint a common herdsman to take care of them in the summer upon the high ground?—Yes, just so.

31,489. In the winter they would go to the homes of their own families?—Yes, that is what I heard them saying; but I think they are doing that now in Breconshire—sending them under a herd, as you said—sending a shepherd to the mountains, and some pay him so much per head for looking after them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,490. I wish to ask you some questions; I am afraid we are rather tiring you, but you are practically representing this district?—Anything I can answer I shall be pleased to do so.

31,491. In your exhaustive evidence you have not touched upon any remedies for existing depression. I forgot to ask you what your view was?—It is no good for us to suggest anything between the master and tenant. We could suggest things, but we cannot carry them out.

31,492. But you referred to insecurity of tenure. How do you suggest that might be remedied, with fairness to the tenants and all the interests involved?—I think we ought to have some authority to fix fair rents first of all, and then fix security of tenure.

31,493. Then by security of tenure you mean, first that the rent is to be fixed by some authority at a fair rent?—Yes, at a fair rent and on a graduated scale, so that if things should rise, the landlord should have a share of it.

31,494. You mean that instead of the rent being fixed by this authority for a definite term—say for seven years—that it ought to be fixed by a sliding scale by reference to prices of produce and other considerations of that kind?—Yes, so that if the prices should rise the owners should have a share in it.

31,495. With regard to security of tenure, the mere fixing of the rent at a fair price would not give you security of tenure, would it?—No, but if we did not fix a fair rent, security of tenure would be no good.

31,496. Quite so. Do you mean this, that the landlord should not have the power to send a tenant away except upon certain conditions?—Yes, if he does not use the farm well, and if he does not do as he ought to do on the farm, then he ought to be sent off for the good of the country.

31,497. What kind of authority do you think, as a practical man, might be introduced?—We should have some kind of a court, and I think Government should appoint two or three men, I suppose—I cannot see anything else. We could not rely upon one man to do it, say, for a county now.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,498. Professor Rhŷs has asked very important questions with regard to how people live, but I think he omitted one important question, and that was, although he asked you what you ate, he did not ask you what you drank?—We drink a little of what we call table beer.

31,499. Do you give the men table beer?—Yes.

31,500. Daily?—Well, yes, daily; there might be some days they do not have it.

31,501. But generally in the summer you have table beer to drink?—Yes, and the winter too.

31,502. Have the landlords in this district done anything in the way of building more suitable dairies to meet the modern appliances?—No, I have not heard of it whatever.

31,503. There has been nothing done in that way?—I have not heard of it.

31,504. You think they should?—I think they should indeed.

31,505. We have to fight the battle with the foreigners, and we should try to be well armed for it?—Yes, I was going to say, perhaps you would think me boasting a bit, but we are sending our butter to Bristol, and we are having about 3*d.* or 4*d.* more now than you may have in Haverfordwest; and we are sending butter of others here in the neighbourhood.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,506. Do you send it by sea?—No, by rail.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,507. Do you find the railway rates very heavy?—We do not pay the rates. They have to pay the rates.

31,508. They have to pay it in the price?—Yes, they have to pay about double what they used to be.

Mr. Grove.

31,509. Double what they used to be?—Yes, five or six years ago.

31,510. Do you say the rates are double what they used to be?—Yes, on small things.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,511. What is the price, may I ask you, that you get for butter?—A small cask of butter would cost 1*s.* 6*d.*

31,512. I mean to say, what is butter sold at, how much per lb.?—We ran to 14*d.* this week, and we had 14½*d.* for some time, and 15*d.* before then.

31,513. I understand you said just now we cannot expect more from the land than the land will produce, did you not?—Yes, something like that.

31,514. You consider that this produce of the land should be fairly divided between the landlord, the tenant, and the labourer?—Yes, of course.

31,515. Do you think that the landlord is to have the usual rent that he used to have, the tenant interest for his capital, and that the labourer would be able to have a living?—No We would be all of us, with very few exceptions, bound to go somewhere this year for half of our rent—a full half—and many of us for the whole of our rent.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

31,516. Supposing the labourer has fair wages?—The labourer we have nothing to do with, because he can do what he likes, he goes where he can get money for his work.

31,517. But you cannot pack up yourselves, and be off?—No, we cannot.

31,518. Then the question is, who is to have the first bite of the cherry. There will not be much left for landlord if the labourer has his due?—No.

31,519. And if the farmer has a little interest for his capital?—We are bound to give the labourer what he asks, what is going, or to be without him.

31,520. Then do you think the landlord would fall short if you began at the other end?—Of course he would, and he ought to, too—of what he is having now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,521. You say that at the termination of a tenancy the crops are sold by auction?—Yes.

31,522. Would you think that is a disadvantage to the farm?—Yes, to the farm; it is not always a disadvantage to the tenant.

31,523. Is that really the custom of the country?—There is no custom here.

31,524. Are there no restrictive clauses in the agreements to prevent such a thing?—Yes, on some estates.

31,525. But of course you would recommend that there should be restrictive clauses applying to this sort of thing in every agreement?—What I would recommend is, if we had fair rent, there would be no changing, or not much.

31,526. But under present conditions, would you consider it desirable that there should be restrictive clauses applying to this sort of thing in every agreement?—I think the outgoing tenant does better by selling off, than being hampered with valuers and things.

31,527. Yes, but the question is this: the farm will suffer to the incoming tenant?—No doubt the farm suffers; when farms are changed often, selling off the crop every three or four years, the farms are bound to suffer.

31,528. You see the interests of the incoming tenant have to be considered as well as those of the outgoing tenant?—Yes, but it is scarcely ever the case with an incoming tenant that he is willing to take at a valuation.

31,529. Supposing he is bound to, then the same thing will apply to him when he has gone out?—Oh, yes, if he is bound to there is no thanks to him, but then he would rather not have it. That is the way I have seen it.

31,530. That is your opinion, at all events?—Yes.

31,531. Do you say that the Agricultural Holdings Act is inoperative?—Yes, it is no good for a bad landlord, and the good landlord does not want it.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

31,532. But would it not be a good thing for the tenant when he has got a good landlord ?—No, not a tenant; he would pull him from one court to another, and would kill him before he would have anything from him.

31,533. Do you think the tenants are acquainted with the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act ?—No, I do not think that they are.

31,534. Do you think that they would be if the Act was printed in Welsh ?—I do not know. They could have that now. The thing is, that the tenants are rather afraid of tackling the landlords for anything.

31,535. Do you think the tenants are dull to their own interests; is that the reason they do not read the Act ?—No, but a man must keep things in very good order before he can stand against the landlord, or else the landlord will go in for dilapidations, and such things, and the cry is that the landlords gain the heavier claim.

31,536. Are the tenant farmers here generally an intelligent class ?—There are some of them that are, but as a rule they are rather backward.

31,537. Were Professor Parry's lectures delivered in Welsh or in English ?—In Welsh.

31,538. Were they sufficiently elementary for the people to understand them ?—Yes, I think we were able to understand him pretty well indeed.

31,539. Whether in Welsh or English was he making use of the technical terms ?—Well, he did explain some things in English, but in Welsh the lecture was, you see—very plain Welsh.

31,540. You think the lectures were understood ?—I think the people said so when they came out. This was the first we had here—this one this year.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,541. I have some questions which are handed up to me by Mr. Vincent: "Do you "mean that the tenant referred to entered on a "farm under a fair landlord, but without capital "of his own ?"—I cannot quite understand that question. Do you mean that my father-in-law took Llangloffan without means ? I cannot under-understand what he means.

31,542. What was the name of the farm you spoke of—the first case ?—Llangloffan.

31,543. Who was the landlord ?—Mr. George Roche, Butter Hill, one of the best landlords in his time whatever.

31,544. Did the tenant then of that farm go in without any capital of his own ?—No, he came in from a farm not quite so big, but very near.

31,545. Did Mr. Roche sell the farm ? Who sold the farm—was the farm sold ?—Mr. George Roche died, and the son came into it, and his son did not take much interest in the tenants. He left it all to the agent.

31,546. "Did the auctioneer lend him money upon which to farm" ?—I think Mr. Vincent is mixing matters. What I said was that the tenant before him when going out went into the auctioneer's hands, and you know, or at least we know, that when these auctioneers go into a farm there is not much left in it.

31,547. There is another question: "How "long had the tenant enjoyed the benefit of the "building to which his haulage contributed "before he died" ?—For a few years. He was going on constantly improving it until he died.

31,548. But you told us that the buildings had been erected by the landlord, and the tenant had done the haulage ?—Yes.

31,549. How long did he have those buildings before he died ?—I cannot say exactly how long they were finished before he died—a few years I think. They were years at it, but they were not built for years after he went there, because he had a lot to do to the land first, before he had time to pay attention to the haulage.

31,550. "I think you told us that the small "estates were most highly rented as a rule ?"—Yes.

31,551. "Are there any exceptions to that ?" —I cannot say; there might be some.

31,552. "Do not you think you could find an "exception for Fishguard ?"—I do not know, indeed, but I think I can whatever.

31,553. "How far from here are these farms "which you mention as having been up for "tender ?"—Five or six miles, I suppose, from here—say six miles; I do not think they are more than six. They are not little ones down at St. David's.

31,554. It is some way from here ?—Yes, near St. David's—a small one.

31,555. Mr. Stephen asks the following questions: "Where farms are advertised to be "let by tender is it not often the case that they "are let under the directions of a public body, "such as the Charity Commissioners ?"—No, I do not think that is so. I do not know about that. I never knew of a farm under the Charity Commissioners.

31,556. Mr. Stephen also asks this question: "With regard to the preferential claim for rent, "does it occur to you that the landlord is "obliged to give credit which the tradesman is "not ?"—Well, the tradesman does give credit, or else he should not lose his money.

31,557. Credit is what is put to you ?—Yes, if the money was paid down he should not lose then.

31,558. "Do you know that in Scotland, "where preferential claim has been abolished, "the landlords always exact payment of rent "as soon as it is due ?"—I cannot say, again. I do not know much about Scotland indeed.

31,559. "Will you kindly mention the cases "of consolidation of farms ?"—Well, there are a few about here—down there by a little place they call Tycant. Mr. Williams, of St. David's, is the owner. They have turned two or three or more little places into one.

31,560. How far is that from here ?—It is just in sight over there.

31,561. "If the tenant, who you say is, as a "rule, too highly rented, sub-lets at a still "higher rent, is the sub-tenant in a favourable "position ?"—What I said was that he was in difficulties; I did not say he was excessively highly rented when the man does sub-let.

Mr. Grove.

31,562. Just one question: What weight of butter do you send to Bristol weekly?—We send over one hundredweight now.

31,563. It ought not to cost more than one half-penny a pound to get it into Bristol?—We are not paying it, but they are complaining to us that the carriage is very high.

Mr. Grove—continued.

I am glad to find that you send as much as one hundredweight, because that gives you the lower charge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Mr. Grove will tell you that the maximum is fixed by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Grove.

I am glad you have mentioned it, Sir John. I have touched on it so often that I am rather loath to introduce it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD PERKINS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,564. You are an owner and occupier in the Letterston district?—Yes.

31,565. And you desire to give general evidence?—Yes.

31,566. Would you kindly give the Commission the benefit of your experience. You need not go through the whole of the schedule, but kindly touch upon those points which you consider you can give the most important evidence. You wish to speak first in regard to language. Does the difference of language make any inconvenience?—No.

31,567. You wish to speak upon the question of occupation. What is the time of entry in occupation?—Michaelmas.

31,568. For how long? Is it on leases or from year to year?—From year to year, as a rule.

31,569. Are there leases?—A few.

31,570. Is there a demand for them now?—I do not think there is.

31,571. Are the conditions amongst leaseholders and yearly tenants good or bad?—You will find both.

31,572. Should you say the changes are more frequent than they were or not?—I do not think they are.

31,573. Are there any oppressive clauses in the agreements?—Well, I believe some old agreements have. As a rule there are oppressive clauses in them.

31,574. Are they insisted upon?—Not to my knowledge.

31,575. You say so far as you know the penalising clauses are not enforced?—No, I have never known them.

31,576. What is the amount of the rent?—It varies from 7*s.* 6*d.* an acre to 2*l.* I believe, for some of the best land in the district.

31,577. How is it fixed?—In one fixed sum.

31,578. Do you think any regard is paid to acreage?—Oh, of course.

31,579. Should you say that the rents are generally higher or lower on large estates or small estates?—Lower on the larger estates, certainly.

31,580. Are rents of the smaller tenantry as a rule higher in proportion?—Yes.

31,581. With regard to fluctuations in prices, can you give any examples?—Yes, with regard to cattle there is a great fall to what there was in the sixties and the seventies—a great drop.

31,582. What percentage would you say?—In inferior cattle there is a drop of 75 per cent., and the general drop, I should say, is about perhaps 25 to 50 per cent.

31,583. Have you any other examples of the fluctuation in prices that you wish to give us?—All kinds of corn are much lower than they were in those years.

31,584. Taking all round the fluctuation in prices, do you consider that the general average would be above or below 30 per cent., one with another all round?—I should think the general average would be not far from 30 to 35 per cent.

31,585. About the size of the farms; is there any consolidation?—There has been a little.

31,586. What is its effect?—I think it tends to better farming.

31,587. Does it tend to any increase in production?—Oh, yes, better farming will increase the production.

31,588. Does it lead to more or less labour being employed?—Rather less.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,589. Less per acre?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

But he says it is the same.

Sir John Llewelyn.

He says less now.

Witness.

I said more hired labour, but not more labour—more hired labour now, because in those days the small farmers did their own working.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,590. But what is the difference between hired labour and the labour of your own children if it is the same?—Oh, you are able to economise in labour to a certain extent by having larger holdings.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,591. What is the effect upon the rent?—I do not believe there is any appreciable difference one way or the other.

31,592. Do you consider that it tends to a depopulation of the country or not?—To a small extent, certainly.

31,593. Is there any sub-letting? — Very little, except to tenants who are workmen.

31,594. Does it lead to more skill, capital, and energy on large holdings or not? — Yes. You will find more skill and better directed energy on the larger holdings as a rule — not without splendid exceptions though.

31,595. Do you consider that the smaller tenants have of late shown improvement?—They have, a decided improvement; a great improvement.

31,596. In what direction would you say?—In farming more intelligently and producing more from their farms and managing their cattle and land altogether better—a great deal better. There is a great improvement lately in that respect.

31,597. Who would feel the depression first, the small tenant or the big tenant?—Well, they would feel it alike, but I think the strong man would be able to hold out longer than the weak man. I believe the larger farmers suffer quite as much as the small farmers. In fact their loss is greater.

31,598. Which of the two would you say is best able to provide for his family? — The large one most decidedly.

31,599. Where do the people go: do they stay at home, or go into service, or trade, or what—I mean the children of farmers?—Some of them stay at home and assist at the farm work; others take to trade and professions and different things. As a rule if there is a large family, a large proportion of them go away to different trades and professions.

31,600. You have answered it here that the children of the smaller farmers go into service or trades?—Yes, so they do.

31,601. Do not the children of the larger farmers do the same?—The larger farmer's children take to trades and professions, doctors, and lawyers, and so on.

31,602. With regard to cultivation, what is its nature, is it mixed?—Mixed, yes.

31,603. Is there any scarcity of labour?—Not in my district, so far as male labour goes. Female labour is rather scarce.

31,604. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Oh, no.

31,605. How about reclamation?—In one or two instances there have been great improvements made, and a large area of land reclaimed.

31,606. Do you think there is more that might be reclaimed?—Oh, yes.

31,607. If prices improved?—If prices could only be made remunerative—if prices were better.

31,608. What quality of land would that be?—Light, furzy land.

31,609. What is yours, rough, marshy ground?—Yes, marshy as well; both high and low, dry and marshy.

31,610. With regard to grass, do you suggest that the grass portion of the rotation of crops is allowed to lie longer than it used to?—Yes.

31,611. And with regard to roots, is there an increase or decrease?—A considerable increase.

31,612. And bare allowing?—That is dying out; it is not known hardly.

31,613. What do you consider the causes of the depression?—Certainly low prices is the immediate cause.

31,614. You mean grain and cattle. Is there any compensation given; is it sufficient or not? Where farms have been sold, has there been any compensation given to the farmers?—Not sufficient, I believe, and in many cases no compensation at all has been given.

31,615. Do you know any cases of compensation that has been given for specific improvements?—Not for a certainty, because I do not know other people's business, but I have been told so; I have heard it.

31,616. Do you know of any recognition of the right to dispose of a tenant's interest?—No.

31,617. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, what have you to say about that?—I quite endorse what Mr. Jenkins said. The farmers think but very little of it. I have no faith in it.

31,618. You would prefer a self-acting custom that would ensure compensation?—Yes.

31,619. The Agricultural Holdings Act does in some way ensure compensation to some extent, does it not?—Oh, yes, to some extent; but it is not a very practical thing; and besides, our Pembrokeshire farmers do not care to set the law in motion at all to get any benefit from it.

31,620. Is there any compensation in the nature of a trades union?—Not to my knowledge; oh, no.

31,621. Are benefit societies and life assurance societies availed of in your district?—Yes. There may be others that may be able to speak about it more than I. I do not know much about it.

31,622. Are the savings banks patronised?—Yes, very much by our young people.

31,623. Do the farmers put money into the bank?—Yes, whenever they have any to put in.

31,624. And they take mortgages?—Yes, they let out their money in bank shares, or lend it, or they used to when they had the money to do it.

31,625. As mortgagees you mean? You have it here "mortgagees"?—As mortgages I mean.

31,626. Are there any freeholders here?—There are a good many freeholders, but not the old proprietary farmers, as you may call them; those have died out pretty near. I think the last died out last year. He was sold out.

31,627. Are the freeholders men who have bought their own farms mostly?—Yes, there are a good many of those here that have bought their own farms, but those that have inherited their little farms are very, very few.

31,628. With regard to interest on the purchase money, have they borrowed parts of their purchase money, when they became freeholders?—Yes, in very numerous cases.

31,629. Your opinion is that it would be desirable to provide some system of cheaper loans in case people do desire to purchase their farms?—Yes, it would be a great benefit to those people.

31,630. Would you suggest that it would be a good thing if Government were to advance money at a low rate of interest?—Possibly that would be the best way. I do not know; there may be other ways as well.

31,631. We heard something the day before yesterday as to there being many instances in this county where money had been advanced at 3½ per cent.?—I am not aware of it. I think they fail to get it under 4 per cent., as far as I am aware.

31,632. Do the tenant farmers do much out of door work?—Oh, yes, more or less, according to the size of the farm. Of course, larger farmers can follow the plough and all that sort of thing.

31,633. There is scarcely a farmer in the district who does not do out of door work, I suppose?—Of course he has got to overlook the work and lend a hand when wanted.

31,634. I suppose every farmer has out of door work?—Quite so.

31,635. Do the children work?—Invariably.

31,636. What remuneration do they get?—They get assisted to start on their own hooks when the chance offers.

31,637. Do they get clothes and pocket money?—Of course.

31,638. And are afterwards set up in the world?—Yes.

31,639. Then why do they stop at home rather than go away to the works or to the towns?—They do that when their parents are in fair circumstances, and they know that they can help them on.

31,640. Prospects of remuneration you mean?—Yes; I do not believe it would be right for a farmer to keep children at home, unless he had the prospect of setting them up for themselves.

31,641. Where are the single men and women lodged—the labourers I mean?—Just as Mr. Jenkins said: the single men somewhere in the outhouses, and the females in the house.

31,642. The married couples—where do they live?—In their own cottages.

31,643. Do any proportion of them live on their own finding?—A small proportion.

31,644. Then the larger proportion would be on the employer's finding?—Yes.

31,645. What would be the rate of wages?—The general wages on their own finding is 2*s.* 6*d.* a day, with board 1*s.* 6*d.*

31,646. What would you put the total earnings down to be?—They are able in harvest and other times to make another 2*l.* or 3*l.*, as may happen.

Mr. Grove.

31,647. Do they get any extra for Sunday labour?—Almost every man you have there is some difference, some variety in their wage. If they are such workmen as cowmen and so on, they generally get some privilege or higher wages.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,648. Is there fluctuation in summer and winter?—Not a great deal on our farms.

31,649. What do you say about sleeping accommodation? You state here that the women will be in the house and the men in rooms in the out-buildings. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

31,650. Do you consider the cottage accommodation to be sufficient or not?—Oh, yes; quite.

31,651. Where is it situated?—Well, on some convenient place on the farm.

31,652. Upon that, may I ask this: Are the cottages let with the farm, or are they let direct by the landlord?—Invariably they are let with the farm.

31,653. So that the labourer is the tenant of the farmer?—Yes, that is the meaning of building the cottages.

31,654. What is your opinion about the construction of these cottages? are they good or bad?—I believe Mr. Jenkins said you may refer to a few old-fashioned buildings. I think you will see a few of them within a mile of this place, but, as a rule, they are improving, and are built to suit the convenience and the requirements and the wants of the men.

31,655. Are there any model cottages about you?—Oh, yes.

31,656. Do people like them?—No, they do not seem to like them; they prefer being their own architects, and to have them built according to the usual custom here.

31,657. Have they gardens attached to them?—Invariably.

31,658. Do you consider the small holdings are prized or not?—Oh, yes, very much.

31,659. May I ask what you mean by a small holding?—They keep two or three or four cows.

31,660. Eight or 10 acres; 10 or 15 acres?—Yes, as much as would keep a couple of cows. They like to have two cows, and three or four if they can have them.

31,661. These cottages, you have told us, are held of the farmer. What length of notice are they held at?—I believe the custom is six months' notice, but if the farmer and the cottager cannot agree as to the following year, as a rule they leave at Michaelmas without notice being given.

31,662. Do any farmers migrate?—Very few farmers.

31,663. Labourers?—Yes, sometimes, when trade is very brisk in the coalfields they go off. Pretty nearly all the young men go then. The young people principally go to the coalfields.

31,664. When did the agricultural depression commence?—In 1879 we felt it first.

31,665. What is its cost, do you consider?—The great drop in prices; but this year is a most exceptional year. Besides the great drop in prices the great drought has caused a great deal of suffering and loss.

31,666. Have you any remedies to suggest?—Well, yes.

31,667. We shall be glad to hear your suggestions?—I think with free trade we should have fair trade; that we should not be unduly handicapped against the whole world. We have got to pay duty on everything we grow; imports are brought into this country without paying any duty whatever as far as we are concerned, so we are handicapped against other producers. That is one remedy to get over that. Then Mr. Jenkins referred to Australian butter. They are paying bonuses on stuff they send here, foreign and colonial countries pay bonuses. I think we should remedy that. We could very easily put a stop to it if we chose by putting up an import duty as an equivalent. Those are the principal remedies.

31,668. Are you on the County Council?—No.

31,669. Have you any other suggestion to make as to the remedies for the depression?—I believe those are the principal remedies. That is the radical cure, I believe, of that, and I believe everything else would come round then. I am afraid to go into it, but I really believe that the demonitization of silver has caused a great deal of this depression. Anyhow things were going on swimmingly until then, and soon afterwards we have been going from bad to worse.

Mr. Grove.

31,670. You spoke of reclamation of land in certain parts. You say you know of cases?—Yes.

31,671. And there is still more land that could be reclaimed?—Oh; a lot of it would only pay them to do so.

31,672. When it was reclaimed, at whose expense was it done, at the tenant's or the landlord's?—Well, I have known of both instances.

31,673. By mutual arrangement, was it?—Yes, but principally what I have known lately is by the tenants. That is what I referred to 31,674. Would it pay at present prices to reclaim further land, do you think?—I do not believe it would at the present time at present prices.

31,675. You state also that you have known many cases where compensation was not given?—Yes.

31,676. Do you mean cases where you consider the tenant farmer was fairly entitled to compensation, and he did not get it?—Yes, and the farms have been sold off. I do not know of any evictions, but the farms have been sold over their heads, and bought by neighbouring farmers.

31,677. Then you speak of the Agricultural Holdings Act. You say the farmers have no faith in it. I think those were the words you used. Are they well acquainted with the details and provisions of the Act?—Oh, yes, quite; certainly they are.

31,678. You speak also in your evidence in chief of the way in which farmers invest their money in bank shares and mortgages and various other things that sound quite pleasant to hear even talked about, but I suppose at the present time they have very little money to invest?—Oh, there is none at all, unless they have some very exceptional farm.

31,679. You speak about Government advances to enable tenant farmers to buy their holdings, and you said that other means might he employed?—Yes.

31,680. What would you suggest in that way; what do you think you could suggest?—Well, I really believe, although I am afraid to bring it out, that if silver was brought back into the currency the same as it used to be, gold would be freer, financiers would not have the same hold upon it, and there would be more gold flying about, and they could not control it as they do now, and send it out of the country as they do now.

31,681. A change of that sort would be a long time working down into the country and circulating so as to benefit you, would it not?—Oh, no.

31,682. But have you any more immediate and practical suggestion to make? I quite see your point, and I appreciate a good deal of what you say, too, in that direction; but I thought perhaps you might have something local to suggest?—Well, something on the lines of what is called the Ashbourne Act—something or other—I would not go into details at all, but I do not see why, as Government has money at 2½ per cent., it could not manage some way so as to lend it to the poor peasantry at a lower rate than they have to pay our present financiers.

31,683. You spoke also of parents doing something for their children, that is, the tenant farmers putting them into professions and so on?—Yes.

31,684. I suppose it is not very often that that happens, is it?—No, not very often.

31,685. They go into trade more than into professions?—Well, yes, professions of late have become very glutty themselves, and farmers would not put them there. A good many of my friends and acquaintances have put them into professions.

31,686. But there is not much of that now, I suppose?—No.

31,687. Every one connected with agriculture feels the depression from top to bottom all round?—Exactly, yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,688. You say that the rents of the smaller tenantry are, as a rule, higher in proportion?—Yes.

31,689. Why? If you recollect rightly, Mr. Jenkins told us that it was owing to competition?—That would have been one reason. The other reason is that, as a rule, these smaller holdings are owned by smaller owners, and they let it dearer. Supposing you or I owned a little farm, we should want to get all we could from it. Sir John and other people would let it on different lines. That is, I believe, the principal cause.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

31,690. We have been told over and over again that small farms are high chiefly because of building on them?—Oh, no.

31,691. The cost of building would be greater in proportion than it would on a large farm?—No, it is competition principally, I believe, and of course there is the general law that in retailing things the smaller the thing you buy the more you have to pay for it. I believe that law holds with those small holdings, too. There is a great competition, and the owners, as a rule, are rather a needy lot, and get all the money they can for them.

31,692. Are there no small holdings on the large estates?—Oh, yes, of course, and those I believe are let pretty nearly at the same rate as the large holdings.

31,693. On the large estates?—Yes, that is my idea as far as the big estates go.

31,694. Do you think there are sufficient small farms, and those varying in size, to enable a man to rise up in his calling—that there is a sort of ladder?—Exactly. They go step by step up the ladder, they used to at any rate. Some of our very best farmers now in this county 20 or 30 years ago were farm servants and now they are crack farmers, first-rate farmers.

31,695. I am glad to learn it, because it has been a complaint in some neighbourhoods that there were not sufficient small farms to enable a man to rise?—Well, I think if there were more to be had, more use would be made of them.

31,696. You think there would be a demand for more?—Oh, yes, if there were more to be had.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,697. Has the tendency been for the farmer to go up the tree or to come down as a rule?—To go up as far as working men are concerned, certainly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,698. What was the explanation of this answer of yours in respect to consolidation? You have it down here that more labour is employed on consolidated farms?—I explained it just now. I meant more hired labour. Supposing a farm of 20 acres is cut up into 50-acre plots, then there is no hired labour employed there except it is a servant girl; but if the four were consolidated the farmer would require hired labour.

31,699. Do you think there would be an increase in production?—I think there is an increase in production by consolidation as far as it goes, but not to a very large extent.

31,700. You say that there is no appreciable difference in the rent; but supposing that consolidation was to become a very general thing how would it affect rent then?—Well, that is rather hypothetical. Really I do not know. If you consolidated all the small farms there would be no competition then for the big farms, because there would be fewer people able to take them. It is these small farmers that do drive up the rents in fact. If you consolidated the country and had it all in big farms the big farmers would not pay big rents then.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

31,701. You think it would not affect the competition?—It would affect the competition if you consolidated to a great extent.

31,702. Of course it would, because there would be fewer farms, whereas the number of farmers applying would be perhaps pretty nearly the same?—Yes.

31,703. You say that there is more skill and capital and energy employed on large holdings?—Yes, but not without some splendid exceptions. I mean as a rule.

31,704. I suppose that you believe that there is more machinery employed on large holdings?—Yes, for one thing, and the rotation is better, and better care is taken of the stock. There is better stock and more intelligence shown as a rule, but as I tell you, there is a great improvement of late years amongst the small farmers.

31,705. Does your answer imply that some of the smaller farmers start with insufficient capital?—No, it does not imply that. Of course some do and some do not. It is impossible to know other people's circumstances; but very often they start without sufficient capital, I dare say.

31,706. Do you find there is a very keen desire among labourers to become farmers, and that in consequence they start perhaps with insufficient capital?—I do not believe they are quite so keen upon it now since wages have jumped up and farming pays worse.

31,707. Years ago there was?—10 or 15 years ago they were most eager for it; it is rather less now, I believe.

31,708. But you believe if circumstances changed, the competition would be very keen?—Oh, yes; you can let as much as ever you like now.

31,709. You say that during depression the small tenant goes to the wall first. We have had opinions in other parts that generally the large farmer goes to the wall first?—Well, really I do not know whether you could give any general rule, but as far as my knowledge goes a large farmer is better able to withstand bad times than a small one, as far as my own personal and private connexions with people go.

31,710. The reason that has been given to us was this, that small farmers were able to find some other employment just to help them out on the farm?—Yes, when there are only a few, but supposing there is a county with pretty nearly all small farmers, there is nothing for them to do. Of course, if there is only one small farmer here and there, he can take a contract on the road or butchering, lots of things, hiring horses, and posting I mean; but if you have them very numerous, of course it is only one or two out of a dozen who could do that.

31,711. Are they very numerous in your neighbourhood?—In some districts they are, very.

31,712. Do you find a good many of those people, who get some auxiliary aid in that way to make a living—people who in addition to farming hire their horses out, or themselves work upon the road?—Yes.

31,713. And that in consequence they are able to pay higher rent?—They are able to pay their way better.

31,714. In cases where farmers have been laying down permanent pasture, have they acted in accordance with the provisions of the Act by giving notice to the landlord or obtaining his consent?—I do not believe there is any laying land down to grass in this county in the sense that it is used in the Act, and in the sense in which it is understood in England. Our land falls down to grass; you have only to let it alone and manure it decently, and there it is. It is a kindlier soil. You have to give a little better seed, that is all. For an ordinary seed, say you have to pay 12*s.* or 14*s.* per acre, if you want to let the land down longer you would have to pay 16*s.* or 17*s.*

31,715. From your reply one would infer that Pembrokeshire is very similar to Anglesey in that respect. They told us in Anglesey that it was not necessary to put seeds down—that really the grass would settle of itself?—Yes.

31,716. And I think it is the same thing in Cheshire, where the land is rich?—Yes, most of our land is nice light loam. Of course where there is heavy clay it is not so, but we have not got a lot of that, thank goodness.

31,717. Do the tenants in any case carry out first class improvements?—Well, I am sorry to tell you that I do not remember the schedule now. You mean improvements as to drainage?

31,718. Improvements such as reclamation of waste land. You told us, I think, that there has been a great deal of reclamation of waste land?—Yes, a good deal has been done.

31,719. Have they taken the precaution of obtaining the landlords' consent?—I do not believe they have.

31,720. Were they aware that it was necessary?—I really could not answer that question. I do not know. When did this Act come into force?

31,721. In 1883?—That is ten years ago.

31,722. Ten or eleven?—I dare say it was done, some of it before the Act came into force, and some after.

31,723. Do you know any cases where farmers have been reclaiming their lands and leaving their farms afterwards?—No, I refer to cases where the tenant is still in occupation.

31,724. How would it be when those farmers left their farms; do you think they would make a claim?—Well, that is just what I want to get—a self-acting, nice, easy custom that would give it them. They have always got the old picture before their eyes of one man at the head of a cow and another at the tail, and the bewigged man drawing down the milk into his own pail. They have always that picture before their eyes, and they would suffer loss rather than set the Act in motion. We must tell the truth, too. In a great many cases—indeed in the great majority of cases—they could not claim at all. A great many of our farmers leave now because their farming has been, as a rule, such that they could not claim anything under the Act.

31,725. Under the Glamorganshire custom, of course, they could?—Yes.

31,726. Do you think it would be well if there was a custom like the Glamorganshire custom in this county?—Yes, I know it would be a great encouragement to good farming. I believe we have got wonderfully good farmers here already, and, if they only had a little encouragement, I I believe we should be second to no county in the kingdom. I really believe it. There is great ambition to be good farmers amongst the farmers here—a great ambition.

31,727. You think there would be no necessity for an Act if there was a good custom?—A good custom is better than all the Acts.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,728. You are aware that the Glamorganshire custom was adopted by mutual freedom of action amongst the landlords and tenants?—Yes, but it grew up to be a universal custom.

31,729. Yes, and I believe a universal custom universally liked. It was done without an Act of Parliament, but it was done by mutual concessions between landlord and tenant?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

31,730. With respect to drainage, who carries out the drainage done on the farm; is it the landlord or the tenant, as a rule?—It is very little draining that has occurred. As a rule the land does not want draining.

31,731. As a rule, I mean?—I do not know who would do it in cases where the land required draining very much.

31,732. That is worthless land that would not pay for draining at present prices?—I have drained a good deal myself, and I have had it to pay on my own land.

31,733. Did the landlord supply the pipes?—I did not use pipes. I am an owner and not a tenant farmer. There is very little draining I have observed all my lifetime—very little draining in this north-west of Pembrokeshire. In a great many instances where it was done it was done by the landlord. If it is done to any great extent of course it is done by the landlord, but in the case of little corners of fields, and little things of that sort, possibly it has been done sometimes by the tenants.

31,734. But, of course, if land does not pay to drain, it would not pay any other how?—No, if it requires draining, certainly not.

31,735. In cases where a tenant has been draining, do you know of any compensation being paid?—Well, I really do not know of any instances where the tenant drained and had to leave. I do not remember any.

31,736. We have had hard cases?—I daresay you have, but, personally, I cannot recollect, at present. There might be bad cases here, but I really do not remember any myself.

31,737. Then you say that farmers' children, as a rule, stay at home because their prospects of remuneration are better?—Yes, as a rule. Of course, there is no rule without an exception. I think for a young man to stop at home on his farm without prospect of remuneration would be very wrong of the farmer and of the son.

31,738. It has been repeatedly told us that farmers have kept their children at home and had the benefit of their labour because they could not afford to pay the rent and have hired labour?—My opinion is this, that the sooner those are out of farming the better for them and their children and for all concerned. That is my opinion.

31,739. You will admit this, of course, that it is a bad time for a farmer to sell?—Of course, I do not mean this year, but, as a rule, in cases where that sort of thing is carried on from year to year. This year, of course, and these bad years farmers are glad to get assistance from any source whatever, but I am speaking now not of a thing of to-day or yesterday, or this year or last year, but as a rule for a long course of years.

31,740. You seem to be a man of experience. In your opinion is the present depression temporary or permanent?—Well, I think it removable, myself.

31,741. But will you say it is so without applying that remedy of yours that you suggested?—Well, I do not believe it is permanent myself. The least thing would alter the face of everything.

31,742. Perhaps, inasmuch as you say it is temporary, you would not go so far as to suggest that remedy of yours?—Yes, I would certainly go in for that as a simple matter of justice between man and man, and simply as a sound business matter, leave alone anything else.

31,743. How would the labourer fare, supposing that we had a protective duty?—I do not like the words "protective duty," unless you use the word "protective" as against "injustice." If you use the word "protective" in that sense, I like it.

31,744. I am simply taking the common formula?—It is not in that light I look upon it. What I say is this. Why should farmers pay towards our own revenue and the foreigners' revenue.

31,745. Just answer my question, please. How would the labourer fare under protection?—I believe the agricultural labourer throughout the country would fare infinitely better than he does at present.

31,746. Would you kindly explain that?—Because there would be more demand for his labour, and better pay then, of course, would follow.

31,747. I suppose you know that we had protection before the year 1846?—Yes.

31,748. What was the condition of the labourer then: was it as good then as it is now?—No, not near so good.

31,749. Can you explain why?—Well, I will do my best. You must take into account the great development of steam to begin with, and the great discovery of gold; that had a lot to do with it, although now the financiers with this mono-metallism have been able to control the gold, or else there is plenty of gold and silver to be had. There is the great development of steam, and the great development of works; that of course comes in, in due course after the development of steam. In those days in Glamorganshire they would have a couple of women at a windlass getting up the coal; now they get it up at the rate of thousands of tons a day, which gives a great demand all round for labour.

31,750. What has been the cause of the development of steam and the development of works?—If I understand the question—you ask me, what is the cause—I say, why, the enlightenment of mankind, I should think. It is people getting more enlightenment, is it not? You ask the cause of the development of steam. It is the discoveries of science, and so on.

31,751. The development of works, you say, too?—Yes, that follows.

31,752. Has free trade anything to do with that?—Certainly not. It is the same in other countries. Every country in Europe that has not adopted this free trade has made more progress than we have in proportion to what we were at that time, since 1840, say. When was the great change?

31,753. 1846?—Well, from 1846 to this day almost every country in Europe has increased its trade more than we have in proportion to what it was then.

31,754. Are you prepared to supply the Commission with figures?—Oh, no.

31,755. That is a general statement?—Well, I have got them at home.

31,756. We want them here?—I never thought of bringing them here; but would not you see it in one of these almanacks; it is there, I believe. I do not mean the common almanacks. I believe Whitaker's Almanack or the Statistical Almanack, or any of those; I am not sure where I have seen it.

31,757. You say few farmers migrate into other counties?—Yes, very few.

31,758. Are you in an English or a Welsh neighbourhood?—A Welsh neighbourhood.

31,759. Do you find that the Welsh are more attached to their homes than English farmers?—Well, I think they are as a rule.

31,760. Do you think they would do better if they were to migrate?—Well, a few of them have migrated. I do not know whether they have done better or worse; some, I believe, have done better, and some have done worse.

31,761. Where do they go to generally?—The few that have left us, I believe, have gone on to Worcestershire or Herefordshire, very few; but those are, in fact, after all from the English parts, only they had come up here. I do not know any what you may call true-born Welshmen that have gone there. I do not remember now anyone of them.

31,762. What is the result on the question of rents. Do you think that affects the question of rents?—You would require a very great migration before you would affect it, a very much larger migration indeed, because there are always plenty to jump into their places. We were talking of a ladder just now, as soon as one rung is left, another one steps up to it.

31,763. But still it weakens the competition, does it not?—Well, it is possible.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,764. I have two questions handed up by Mr. Vincent. "You have said that in some cases "no compensation was given to outgoing tenants. "What was the nature of the improvement in "such cases?"—A little reclaiming of the land, good farming all through, and a little reclamation, repairing old fences and building new ones, and that sort of thing.

31,765. "Have not the increase of travelling "facilities, and the improvement of agricultural implements, increased the depopulation "of the country?"—They have, yes.

Mr. Grove.

31,766. What amount of land do you farm. I do not think you gave us that?—My farm is altogether about 300 acres.

31,767. And the part that you rent, how much is that?—I sublet somewhere about 50 acres to my workmen and small neighbours about there.

31,768. That is out of your own freehold?—Yes.

31,769. But you are a tenant farmer of another farm?—Oh, no.

31,770. It is all your own freehold?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Evans called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,771. Are you Mr. William Evans, of Charles Court, Letterston?—I am.

31,772. Are you a farmer?—I am a small tenant farmer, and I wanted to let you know this. I have been away from this place 20 years. I have been in the merchant service, and in Her Majesty's service in India and China. I am now a small tenant farmer in this place.

31,773. For how long have you been a tenant farmer?—14 years.

31,774. The last 14 years?—Yes.

31,775. You desire to give evidence before the Commission with regard to the enclosure of common land, I believe; is that so?—That is one part.

31,776. Would you kindly give us what information you think will be of service?—When I went away from here as a boy all the common land was open.

Mr. Grove.

31,777. How long is that ago?—That was in 1854. I was born in this village. All of us inhabitants of the village used to have our clay from a moor due south from here or south-east, as far as I can guess, 1,100 or 1,200 yards distant. We burnt clay for our fires, and we all had our clay from it at 5*d.* a load. After I came back all the commons were closed up. This moor is now divided between seven—three freeholders and four tenants (I mean by freeholders people living at their places), and the clay is all enclosed in by the Enclosure Acts of 1861 or some other date. Now they left out three acres for the poor or the people of my class, and there was only clay in one acre, and that was exhausted. There is one down here on the said moor I mentioned, due south from here about 1,600 yards at a guess; that is nothing but a bank of rubbish; there is no clay in it. There is another on Waun Swil, over to the north, about a mile from here. That was allotted out; there is no clay in that. My statement was to this point, to ask now if there is any possibility for us to get those two exchanged for where the clay is in this said moor down here now, where we used to have it in former days; because whoever enclosed the common up (I suppose it was under some Commission or other), did quite wrong in enclosing the two acres where there is no clay at all.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,778. Are you aware what power was exercised in the enclosure of the Commons?—I am sorry to say I cannot say that.

31,779. I am afraid this Commission cannot override the Act of Parliament, or an enclosure under the Act?—I am sorry I cannot tell you that.

31,780. I am very glad to have your information, but as a matter of law I am afraid that this Commission has no power to override an Act of Parliament?—I really thought they might be under a mistake, and that it could be remedied. If you ask me for a biscuit and I gave you a stone it is not good to you. There is no clay at all in the other two acres, and there is plenty in the moor.

31,781. I am afraid the hour of protesting has gone by in your absence. Did you wish to state anything further—is there anything else you wish to tell us?—No, nothing particular.

Mr. Grove.

31,782. Was there any public inquiry made when this was enclosed, so that the people living in the district might go before the Commission and explain their position?—From what I have heard there was a notice up in the Harp Inn, near to this place; after I came home I heard that, and all them that were against enclosing were to appear and those for it were to appear. Two persons were against it, one was ill at the time, the last time, and one did. That was Mr. Simmonds, of Skyber, as far as I have heard.

31,783. Possibly these Commissioners were not quite acquainted with the exact facts of the case ?—I should think so.

31,784. But it was done under a proper Act of Parliament as far as you know ?—As far as I know.

31,785. Was any part of this land on this common reserved for recreation purposes ?—I heard it was.

31,786. And does it still exist; is there a part of that common still existing ?—A portion of it, which was all open when I went away.

31,787. It was all open then, but when they enclosed and apportioned it to certain individuals, people whose land abutted on it, and so on, there was a certain portion reserved for recreation purposes for the children of the village to go on and play and so on ?—I understand there was.

31,788. Is that kept to-day for that same purpose ?—A portion of it, I believe.

31,789. A portion ?—Yes.

31,790. What has become of the other portion ?—I cannot tell. The map would tell. I do not know exactly for a correct statement.

Mr. Grove—continued.

31,791. Then as far as you know the recreation ground to-day is much less than it was when it was put down 40 years ago, for that purpose ?—Yes, indeed.

31,792. And you do not know who it is that has taken off that portion that was intended to remain for recreation purposes ?—Oh, I have been playing all round here before this school was built. This was recreation ground in my time.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,793. This schoolroom is on part of it ?—Exactly on this very ground. This was begun in 1852 or 1853.

31,794. Are there any other buildings on part of it, as far as you know ?—I do not know exactly the position of it, and therefore I cannot speak of it as evidence.

Mr. Grove.

31,795. It was not fenced out as a recreation ground when it was reserved ?—I do not know. I was in the East Indies then.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,796. Is there any other statement that you would like to make ?—No, nothing important.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Morgan called and examined.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,797. You reside at Ty Mawr, Ambleston, in this county ?—Yes.

31,798. You wish to give a statement and to give evidence in regard to two cases before us ?—Yes.

31,799. The first case is on behalf of your father, David Morgan ?—Yes.

31,800. Where does he now live ?—He lives at Ty Mawr, Ambleston.

31,801. Where did he previously live ?—On a small holding about a mile from this village, belonging to the late Mr. Lewis Mathias, Lamphey Court estate.

31,802. What was the name of the holding ?—Rhysteny.

31,803. What was the acreage ?—About 30 acres.

31,804. What was the rental ?—30*l.*

31,805. Can you tell us about when he entered on that holding ?—He held it for a period of about 24 years up to 12 years ago.

31,806. That would be 1882 ?—Yes, up to that date.

31,807. And 24 years before 1882 he went into Rhysteny ?—Yes, something like that.

31,808. How did the tenancy determine ?—From year to year.

31,809. It was a year to year tenancy, but who put an end to it ?—I expect it was by private treaty between the landlord and the tenant.

31,810. Who put at end to it ?—The present landlord.

31,811. What is his name ?—Charles Mathias, Esq., the present landlord of the estate.

31,812. Do you wish to tell the Commission anything about the nature of the land ?—Well, it was of medium quality. There was about eight acres waste marshy ground, which my father drained entirely at his own expense, except about 2½ acres. He was allowed for one half acre of those 2½ acres for which he had to pay 1*l.* extra in rent, 31*l.*

31,813. Your father drained about six out of eight acres ?—Yes.

31,814. Can you tell me when he began the drainage work ?—Soon after he took the holding, I believe.

31,815. When did he finish it ?—Well, he did a little at a time; I should say about eight or ten years before he left, something like that; I am not certain.

31,816. As I understand it, Mr. Mathias gave him notice to quit ?—Yes.

31,817. And he went out ?—Yes.

31,818. Was he paid any compensation ?—Nothing whatever, with the exception of this half acre that I have spoken about.

31,819. Was anything added to the rent in respect of the drainage work done by the landlord ?—To the present tenant.

31,820. Not to your father ?—I believe the rent has been risen now to the present tenant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

31,821. Was there any complaint that your father had with regard to any other matter; game, for instance?—Well, during the first 10 or 12 years the rabbits were doing very much damage to the crops and pasture. I do not think it was for the preserving of game, but more owing to neglect on the part of the landlord.

31,822. Have you any other observations in reference to that case?—I wish to say this in justice to Mr. Lewis Mathias, the first landlord, that although he rented his small farms rather high, he was not bad for turning his tenants out.

772. 31,823. What is the other case that you are going to give evidence about?—On behalf of my brother-in-law, William Carey George.

31,824. Let us have the particulars first. What is the name of the holding?—Penfeidir.

31,825. In what parish?—In the parish of Ambleston.

31,826. What was the acreage?—65 acres.

31,827. What was the rent?—50*l.*

31,828. When did the tenancy commence?—September 29th, 1887.

31,829. When did it end?—September 29th, 1893.

31,830. A tenancy from year to year, I presume?—Yes, according to the agreement, but not at the taking. The agreement I can produce.

31,831. Who gave notice to quit?—The landlord.

31,832. What are the special circumstances connected with the case?—With your permission, I will read my statement.

31,833. Yes, if you please?—When the farm was taken, the incoming tenant had the option of a lease for 21 years or from year to year. The landowner to erect suitable buildings, and the tenant to pay 50*l.* rent exclusive of rates and tithes. Shortly after entering on the tenancy, the new tenant was requested to sign an agreement, which was from year to year, the option of a lease having been withdrawn, and no mention of building. The tenant refused to sign this paper, being considered too stringent, and requiring too much of the tenant—one clause being, in effect, that he was to clear and bring under cultivation so many acres of mountain land, of which there were 25 acres out of the 65.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,834. May I ask if you have a copy of the agreement?—Yes (handing same). I wish to say about this mountain land that it had been under cultivation, but it had been left to run waste. Now it was required of him to reclaim it. It was covered with furze. A second paper was prepared similar to the first, but not signed. The third was prepared which the tenant did sign, after being served with a notice to quit; in fact, it was an alternative of signing or leaving. Agreement produced for which he had to pay 2*l.* 10*s.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,835. How do you mean, to whom did he pay the 2*l.* 10*s.*?—To the lawyer, I expect. The landlord was requested to stand in half, but he would not do it. The tenant cleared and brought under cultivation on an average two acres against every year, according to agreement, at a great deal of expense, but was served with a six months' notice to leave, according to the same paper, without receiving any compensation for his labour. The landowner, instead of erecting suitable buildings, covered the existing ones with corrugated iron, which were altogether too small, too low, and badly ventilated for the requirements of farming the place and the proper housing of cattle. The dwelling-house was left as it was, with the exception of a new door, and a lean-to roof rebuilt to serve as a dairy, but there was practically no barn for the first four years, but was afterwards rebuilt and covered with slates, the tenant having to do the carriage of materials for nothing. I wish to give an explanation as to practically there being no barn. There was a building there, but it was totally unfit for the purpose for which it was intended. It was covered with thatch, the rain coming in through the roof and flowing out at the door.

31,836. Why did the tenant receive notice to quit in this case?—Well, I cannot assign any reason. He has been requested to give a reason, but he has refused every time.

31,837. You mean the landlord has been requested to give a reason for serving this notice to quit?—Yes.

31,838. Has politics, or has religion, or views in regard to any economic question, or any other question anything to do with the matter?—Well, I do not know of any reason, but there is a talk in the neighbourhood on that point which I wished to avoid, but I suppose I had better give the evidence now. I am not prepared to substantiate my evidence by any witnesses, because I cannot do it. A paper was brought round about two days before the serving of the notice in the form of a petition to oppose the passing of the Suspensory Bill, which my brother-in-law refused to sign. I cannot assign it to any other reason. Afterwards the landlord was requested to clear himself, and he would not do it.

31,839. But had there been no dispute between your brother-in-law, Mr. George, and his landlord before that?—Nothing of any importance, if there was any; I am not sure that there was any.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,840. You have not told us who the landlord was?—The Rev. Peter Phelps.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,841. He is rector of the parish of Ambleston, is he?—Yes.

31,842. Why does not your brother-in-law come forward?—Well, there are a great many of people that are afraid of putting in an appearance. I suppose a great many—I would not say him because he exposes his name, but a great many are afraid to come forward, fearing that it will go against them in taking places sometime again.

31,843. You know your brother-in-law well, do you?—Oh, yes.

31,844. And with regard to these circumstances, you are speaking of your own knowledge, as it were?—Oh, yes, certainly.

31,845. Do you mean to say that this notice to quit came as a surprise to your brother-in-law?—Not exactly, after refusing to sign the paper; I must say that; but if it was not for that it would come as a surprise.

31,846. Previous to the request to your brother-in-law to sign some paper or petition, there had been nothing said or done on the part of the landlord which induced your brother-in-law to expect a notice to quit?—Nothing to violate that agreement.

31,847. But he had signed this agreement, as I understand it?—Oh, yes; in about two years, that is, the third of course, in about two years after he entered on the tenancy.

31,848. Let us see the dates of these things. When did he enter on the tenancy?—September 29th, 1887.

31,849. He entered?—He entered.

31,850. This agreement that I hold in my hand, that he did sign, is dated Fifteenth day of March One thousand eight hundred and ninety?—Yes.

31,851. Then having signed this agreement, nothing takes place until the autumn of last year really?—No.

31,852. I think you said last year, 1893?—Yes, 1893.

31,853. Do you wish to give any general evidence apart from the two cases you have submitted to us?—Nothing different to what has been already stated.

31,854. You agree in substance with the evidence given by the first witness, Mr. Jenkins?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,855. In the case of the first tenant you spoke of, David Morgan, why was the tenancy there put an end to?—He wanted to raise the rent, for one thing, and bind him not to plough up so much ground, and the amount of ground that he was ploughing up for corn every year was about eight acres; when he was ploughing up the fresh field he was laying out a 4-acre field under seed.

31,856. What is the rent now?—I do not know.

31,857. What was the rent then?—31*l.* when my father left; 30*l.* when he took it.

31,858. How many years did he live there?—24 years—somewhere about 24 years.

31,859. What was the advance in rent?—1*l.* for these two acres of ground that the landlord drained.

31,860. And he left because he would not pay that 1*l.*?—No, he paid it for several years. He was served with a notice because the landlord wanted to raise the rent, I suppose, and to issue an agreement for him to sign.

31,861. And he would sooner leave than do that?—Yes.

31,862. Did he leave in the late Mr. Mathias' lifetime or under the present one?—Under the present one. I do not think the late Mr. Lewis Mathias, the first landlord, would send him away. I know families—in fact, my grandfather and grandmother lived under him for a whole lifetime.

31,863. Has he any farms unlet in this neighbourhood besides—vacant, I mean?—Not that I am aware of.

31,864. Are they considered to be rented high or low?—Well, rather high.

31,865. Had he done much improvements upon this farm, do you know?—Yes, a great deal. It had been run out to a certain extent before he went there, and then this draining.

31,866. He had nothing for the draining?—Nothing whatever, except for one half acre; he was compensated for about half an acre.

31,867. He was not allowed any pipes?—They were not pipes; filling with stones to the depth of about 18 inches or so.

31,868. That is better still. You do not know what amount he expended in doing the drains?—No, I do not.

31,869. With regard to this other place you mentioned, was the rent of this place low when it was taken?—No.

31,870. According to that agreement he was bound down to clean the land. Did he do anything of the kind?—There was practically no cleaning when he left.

31,871. No cleaning done?—No cleaning. All had been brought under cultivation.

31,872. But according to the agreement he was compelled to clean the land?—That is the second case.

31,873. That is the case I meant. I had left the first?—I beg your pardon.

31,874. In the second case where you produced the lease, according to the lease the tenant is bound to clean some land and bring it into cultivation?—Yes, something like two acres every year.

31,875. Was anything of that done?—Yes, I believe if it was measured there were two acres brought in under cultivation every year—against every year of tenancy since the signing of that agreement.

31,876. In which way was this reclaimed; did you breast, plough, and burn, or what did you do?—No, what they call stoking it—furze.

31,877. What per acre did it cost to stoke the furze?—I could not say that; I could not tell.

31,878. Did he do it for more than one year?—Oh, yes.

31,879. He did the whole of it?—No, he did little by little. I should say since the issue of that agreement, about four years, he has done somewhere about eight acres.

31,880. You know of no other reason why he had notice to quit?—None whatever.

Mr. Griffiths.

It is a very hard case.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,881. Have you any knowledge whether this is an isolated instance or at all a general one?—Oh, I believe this case is an isolated instance.

31,882. You said, I think, that you thought that there were many persons who were afraid of coming and giving evidence here to-day?—In that respect I think it does not stand by itself. I know the people's feelings; several of them have spoken to me personally.

31,883. Would you describe those feelings as the desire to remain on good terms with their neighbours, or landlords, or whatever it might be, or would you say that they were actually in fear of some damage to come to them afterwards if they did?—Well, some of them are under very good landlords. I know some of them received 25 per cent. abatement this year. Those were farmers—are farmers rather—whose land is moderate in price at present.

31,884. And they would be the least likely to come here and give evidence?—Yes.

31,885. For fear of disturbing the good relations which exist?—Yes.

31,886. In the case of the others, who might feel that there was some evidence that they would like to give, do you think they are deterred from giving it by fear?—I believe so; I mean generally speaking.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,887. Where is your present farm?—In the second case?

31,888. The farm you hold now?—I do not hold a farm. I give evidence on behalf of my brother-in-law.

31,889. Where is his farm?—He lives now in the village of Ambleston.

31,890. Is that on the Welsh or the English side?—On the Welsh side.

31,891. Do you talk Welsh?—Yes.

31,892. Where is the boundary there—where is the nearest English part to Ambleston?—I should think about three miles.

31,893. What is it called?—Spittal, and Clarbeston Road in another direction.

31,894. What sort of cottages have you in that part? Have you noticed the cottages at all?—Rather small; rather poor, too.

31,895. Have you known any lately built; are they also very bad?—I cannot mention a case now, but those that have been built lately, are not so bad as those that have been in existence years ago.

31,896. What are the old ones like—one room?—One room divided, as has already been stated, by the furniture as a general rule.

31,897. No privies or anything of that sort belonging to them?—No.

31,898. Have you any idea what the rent would be of that sort of cottage?—I could not say exactly; I should think about from 30*s.* up to 3*l.*

31,899. Do you think the wretched nature of these cottages has been part of the inducement driving labourers away to the towns and elsewhere; if they had had better cottages do you think they would have remained more on the land?—No, not by itself; I believe scarcity of labour has more to do with it—scarcity of work I mean.

31,900. There are enough labourers left to do all the work that is wanted?—Yes.

31,901. Or at least all the work that the farmers are willing to pay for?—Yes, the farmers cannot afford to pay for labour.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,902. There are some questions handed up by Mr. Vincent:—"With regard to your second "case, who brought the petition round?"—I believe one of Mr. Phelps' tenants was one, if not the only one; I am not quite certain about it—Mr. Ford, living on a neighbouring farm.

31,903. He is one of Mr. Phelps' tenants?—Yes.

31,904. "Who told you what you have been "good enough to inform the Commission "about?"—My brother-in-law and from what I know myself personally.

31,905. You live in this village, do you?—Yes. I may as well say I have been assisting my father on and off for the last six or seven years.

31,906. What is your father?—My father is a farmer—a small farmer, he occupies Ty Mawr, Ambleston.

31,907. Another question by Mr. Vincent: "If your brother-in-law was turned out by "Mr. Phelps, why should he now be afraid of "Mr. Phelps; what more could Mr. Phelps do "to him?"—Well, I do not suppose he has quite understood that; he is afraid perhaps to give evidence himself, or he is cowed down—all the courage has been taken out of him. I have nothing more to say than that.

31,908. Was his turning away from the farm a loss to him?—Well, I should say so.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,909. Has he really left the farm or only had notice to quit?—He has left the farm since last September.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

31,910. Was he a married man?—Yes, with three children—a wife and three children.

31,911. Is there anything you would like to add?—Nothing besides. On the heads of inquiry I may be able to supplement a little bit of my statement.

31,912. On any specific point that occurs to you, we shall be glad to listen to you?—As regards the tenant farmers, their wives, and their children taking part in the manual labour of the farms.

31,913. I think you said you agreed with what Mr. Jenkins has said about that?—Oh, yes, but I personally have taken part till I was 17½ years of age, when I was put to a trade, and my brother took my place at home.

31,914. You never got any wages for that?—Nothing but my board and keep.

31,915. Do you think that the work you had to do on the farm interfered with your education and opportunity for self improvement?—Very much so. In the days when attendance at school was not so strict as it is now, I lost considerably in my attendance in this very place.

31,916. Do you have much conversation with farmers about the existing law and the existing state of things?—Some, not very much. It mostly crops up in ordinary conversation.

31,917. You heard what Mr. Jenkins said about a desire for security of tenure: You have heard that discussed?—Yes.

31,918. I am not asking about the particular views, but do farmers actually discuss it amongst themselves?—They do.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,919. We heard yesterday, I think it was, a complaint that boys are too much educated nowadays. You do not know anything of that sort?—No.

31,920. That they were too highly educated to go to work and be useful on the farm?—No, I do not.

31,921. You do not take that complaint seriously? You do not think it applies to this district?—No.

31,922. That is not the feeling in the Welsh part of Pembrokeshire?—Not to my knowledge.

31,923. You would think the reverse was the case?—I should say so.

31,924. Do they usually know enough arithmetic to do their business—to calculate the small sums they have to do in connexion with farming for instance?—Well, I believe they do now these later years.

31,925. But they are not over educated?—No, I do not think they are.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,926. Is there any alteration that you can suggest in the style of education?—No.

31,927. Is it too bookish and too little technical or anything of that kind?—Well, it may be in some cases. It might be brought to be more practical perhaps, if that is what you mean.

Professor Rhŷs.

31,928. You would consider that a certain amount of arithmetic was very necessary, would you not?—Yes, certainly I do.

31,929. I found in country districts when I was Inspector of Schools that it was a great difficulty to get boys to learn enough arithmetic, or to such an extent that they kept it up afterwards. Is not that rather the difficulty in country districts like this?—Well, I suppose it has been, anyhow, if not now.

31,930. And then you would consider it necessary that they should be taught English, would you not?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

31,931. Has this landlord any more farms in your neighbourhood?—Oh, yes, he has several small farms.

31,932. Did those tenants sign this petition?—I do not know.

31,933. They have not left?—No.

31,934. And neither have they had notice?—Not to my knowledge.

31,935. Whatever induced your brother-in-law to sign such an agreement as this?—Well, he had put some of his labour in already, and he was persuaded by neighbours that the landlord would be an honourable man, and that he would not turn him off—he would not bind him down so tight as the agreement binds him down.

31,936. The agreement actually contains this clause: "The tenant will in the course of the "current year lay down in pasture the field numbered 31 in the schedule, and will in each year "of the tenancy, except the current year, clean "and bring into cultivation at least two acres of "the field numbered 33 in the schedule, without "being entitled to any compensation for such "cleaning and cultivation, under the Agricultural "Holdings (England) Act, 1883, or otherwise, it "being agreed that the expense and labour to "be thereby incurred by the tenant has been "taken into consideration, and allowed for in "the amount of rent agreed to be paid for the "said premises." So he cannot grumble at that, but all he can grumble at is that he was obliged to leave the place after he had done it?—That is the part which he does grumble most at.

31,937. Then do you consider that there should be more security to tenants for the labour that they expend on the land?—I do.

31,938. Do you say it would be well to have some place to appeal to—some one, or two, or three persons?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Francis called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,939. You are Mr. John Francis, of Carmarthen?—Yes.

31,940. You are agent for estates in the districts of Morvil, Pontvane, Puncheston, Nevern, and Llanychllwyddog, all in this county?—Yes.

31,941. The total acreage of which is 3,117 acres. Is that correct?—That is right.

31,942. You wish to speak with regard to ownership?—Yes.

31,943. Would you give the Commission the benefit of your experience? First of all, with regard to ownership, what is your opinion as to its effects on cultivation with regard to unencumbered estates?—I think the unencumbered estates are the best estates for the tenant in every way.

31,944. What is your opinion where a mortgage exists?—That it cripples the landlord, and he is unable to expend money on the land that he should expend.

31,945. Are the agents usually practical men?—Yes.

31,946. Trained men?—Yes, usually on the larger estates.

31,947. What amount of training is usual?—The agents in this and the adjoining counties of the large estates have had very good office and college training, I believe—several of them. There may be some smaller agents who have not had experience of that sort.

31,948. As to occupation, what is the date of entry?—Michaelmas.

31,949. Do we understand by your answer, Michaelmas, that the notice is a twelve months' notice usually, or a six months' notice?—They vary—twelve months and six months. Some will have it at six months, and some at 12 months—usually twelve months.

31,950. It does not follow then that because you state that the date of entry is one particular period of the year that the six months' notice is not common?—No.

31,951. What is the tenure of land, yearly or on lease?—On this estate it is about even, leases and yearly.

31,952. There are leases?—Oh, yes, several leases.

31,953. Can you give us any particulars about them—how long they are for?—Twenty-one years mostly, and some for lives. I may tell you that these leases were in existence before I had anything to do with the estate.

31,954. Is there any demand for them now?—No, not so much.

31,955. Do you consider that the condition of the leaseholders is superior or not to that of the tenants from year to year?—I think that those tenants from year to year on this estate are superior a long way.

31,956. What do you mean by this estate?—The estates I am speaking of with which I am more intimately connected.

31,957. Are changes of tenancy frequent?—No.

31,958. Do you know of any case of hardship?—No, not one.

31,959. On the resumption of occupation by a tenant, is there any compensation given?—No, there is no compensation.

31,960. Is there any damage paid for timber cutting?—Yes.

31,961. By whom?—By the landlord.

31,962. He makes the arrangement, I suppose, with the purchaser of the timber?—Yes.

31,963. And the compensation is paid by the landlord, and not by the timber merchant?—Yes, by the landlord, not by the timber merchant.

31,964. Are written agreements entered into between the landlord and the tenant?—Yes, written agreements.

31,965. Can you produce such an agreement?—Yes, I will.

31,966. Are your agreements uniform over the different estates you represent?—The same agreement.

31,967. They are written agreements?—They are written agreements.

31,968. Are there any clauses that are considered oppressive?—I do not know whether they are considered oppressive; they guard the farm from being badly treated when a tenant leaves, if he is inclined to do so, but I have never seen any difficulty with regard to them.

31,969. Do you consider that has a good effect or otherwise on the cultivation?—I think it has a very good effect.

31,970. You say the penalising clauses are not adhered to?—No, they are not.

31,971. Are copies of the agreements given?—Yes.

31,972. They are given; the tenants never have to pay for them on the estates under your management?—No.

31,973. How are the rents fixed?—By mutual arrangement; on this particular estate I am talking of; it has never altered, always the same.

31,974. It is fixed on the gross sum, or per acre?—Calculated both ways.

31,975. Do you consider it is uniform or otherwise?—Fairly uniform; there may be a little difference in some farms.

31,976. Are the rents of the tenantry smaller or higher in proportion?—I am inclined to think they are a little higher.

31,977. Can you give the reason for it?—I think the reason is that on the larger farms they have to pay a great deal for labour, and on the large farms the farmer has plenty of work to superintend and go to market and other places whereas on the small farms the farmer does as much work himself as the labourer.

31,978. Any other reason; is there greater competition?—There is greater competition.

31,979. Does the landlord take into consideration the larger proportion of buildings in regard to the number of acres in fixing the rent?—No, I do not know of any such instance.

31,980. As a matter of fact, you do think that the smaller tenants pay a higher rent than the larger ones in proportion to the acreage?—Yes, I do.

31,981. Will you give us an approximate average of the rents paid in this district?—It would be about 12*s.* to 13*s.* an acre; from 5*s.* on the estates I referred to to 18*s.*, I believe it is, of the different farms.

31,982. Are those quite the limits?—Yes, I believe they are quite the limits.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

31,983. Is there any right of pasturage in this district?—Yes, there is, but none belonging to the estates I have referred to.

31,984. Are there any services of tenure performed?—None whatever.

31,985. You say none whatever; may I ask whether it is so in respect of haulage?—Yes, the larger tenants do the haulage gratis, and the smaller tenants are paid for haulage.

31,986. You have experience beyond this county?—Yes.

31,987. Will you tell me whether that is common in Wales?—Yes, so far as I know.

31,988. On other estates with which you are concerned that is so?—Yes. Sometimes even the smaller tenants do it sooner than be without the buildings. That is the real fact of it.

31,989. What is the basis of rent?—It is sometimes on a valuation, and really in most of the cases I have to do with it has gone such a long time I could not go back far enough to see where it started from; the rents have continued in the same way, and it is generally a matter of negotiation with the tenant, and nothing further.

31,990. In accepting a new tenant, would you take into consideration the amount of capital he has got?—Yes, as far as possible.

31,991. Has arbitration ever been resorted to?—Not on the estate I am speaking of.

31,992. Have there been any abatements made in the rents?—Temporary allowances, no abatements, I mean not permanent reductions.

31,993. Would you specify any?—In 1888 there was 10 per cent., and then on to 1892, and in 1892 there was 15 per cent., and in 1893 there was 15 per cent.

31,994. What has been the principle upon which rents have varied?—The principle of fair rents.

31,995. Have they been raised or reduced at all within your knowledge?—Not to my knowledge.

31,996. It has remained the same?—It has remained the same.

31,997. I take it from you that there has been no variation?—No.

31,998. When is the rent paid—I mean how soon after it is due?—Between four and five months.

31,999. Give us your opinion as to a preferential claim for rent?—That is a very difficult question to answer; sometimes it is a protection to the tenant as well as to the landlord. I think if there was no preferential claim that invariably the landlord would have the rent paid in advance. I should think so.

32,000. Have the local rates increased?—Yes, slightly.

32,001. How much?—I am not quite prepared to tell you how much.

32,002. Who pays them, the tenant or the landlord?—The tenant, all except the income tax and chief rent.

32,003. The average size of farms varies very much?—Yes.

32,004. Are they under 100 acres each?—Oh, yes, some as small as 16 or 17 acres.

32,005. Does the sub-letting of land prevail in this district?—Yes, a little. There is sub-letting of farms let on lease.

32,006. Has it a good or bad effect, do you think?—I think it has a bad effect.

32,007. Who suffers?—The smaller tenant.

32,008. The under tenant?—Yes, buildings and everything else.

32,009. I suppose it is never sub-let except at an increased rent?—No, I think not.

32,010. With regard to large and small farms, which should you say were more skilfully managed?—Taking them as a whole, I should say the larger farms.

32,011. As to provision for the families of the tenants, is that better upon larger or smaller farms?—Upon larger farms, I should say.

32,012. In the matter of cultivation, is labour pretty common or not?—It is scarcer than it was.

32,013. Is there any consequence of that?—I think the fences are not well kept.

32,014. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Not in the parishes I am alluding to.

32,015. Any reclamation of land?—Not very much.

32,016. I think we have heard there is not very much here to be reclaimed?—No, not very much; what it appears could be reclaimed is very bad indeed; it is as bad as this, that there was an arrangement in one of the leases that the landlord would drain a large moor, and the tenant prefers his not doing it.

32,017. If there is any land laid down to permanent pasture, who does it?—The tenant.

32,018. Does not the landlord co-operate?—I do not know that it is laid down to permanent pasture in the sense it is considered in some parts of the country.

32,019. Do you agree with other witnesses we have had that there has been an increase in root crops and less fallowing?—Yes.

32,020. Has the price of corn increased or decreased?—Oh, decreased.

32,021. How much per cent.?—I should not like to answer straight off, but very considerably.

32,022. Then with regard to the improvements, what are the landlord's improvements?—Buildings mostly.

32,023. And the tenant's?—Well, general good farming. There are some very hardworking, good farmers in that district.

32,024. Can you give any details as to specific improvements?—The tenant does the gates and posts, the landlord giving timber. With regard to manures and seeds, the usual thing is there is nothing special done in that way.

32,025. Is there much co-operation?—No, not very much.

32,026. Is there any compensation to the tenant for his improvements?—I know of no case on that estate that the tenant has left.

32,027. If he remains on the farm he remains to enjoy the fruits of any improvement he has made?—Yes.

32,028. But if he leaves?—If he leaves he would be paid compensation for anything he would be entitled to. There is nothing in the agreement entitling him to any compensation except what is in the Agricultural Holdings Act.

32,029. Are there any instances of contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes. In answering that I do not know whether you mean the 1875 or the 1883 Act; none in 1883, but in 1875 there were.

32,030. You say there is no compensation by the agreement, but there is under the Agricultural Holdings Act. Do they ever obtain compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Very seldom.

32,031. Do you think that the Act is known?—Yes, it is known, but I believe that from the experience of those that have tried to get compensation, and what it has cost them, the people that would be entitled to get compensation would not attempt it.

32,032. Will you go so far as to say that the Act is a dead letter?—No, I would not go so far as that, because it often leads to a settlement before the matter goes too far. The machinery is too expensive.

32,033. Has there been any application for consent to specific improvements?—No, not that I am aware of.

32,034. What are the outgoing tenant's allowances?—The last crop is allowed to be either sold by auction or taken on valuation—manure and seeds are paid for.

32,035. Upon that I may ask, do you think auction is satisfactory?—Perhaps not as satisfactory as valuation; being a Michaelmas taking it is better than if it were in March.

32,036. Has there been any failure to obtain sufficient compensation?—No.

32,037. Is anything given for specific improvements?—The case has not arisen on that estate.

32,038. Is the tenant's right of disposal recognised?—No, not generally. If a tenant wishes to leave to go anywhere else I have never seen any difficulty.

32,039. Is game preserved?—Yes; not to any great extent. It is preserved.

32,040. Is the Ground Game Act taken advantage of?—Decidedly it is by the tenants.

32,041. Is any damage done by the game?—No, none whatever, not on the estate I am referring to.

32,042. Is beating expected of the tenants?—No, it never has been.

32,043. What should you say the effect of the game is on cultivation?—On this particular estate it has not injured it in any way.

32,044. What have you to say with regard to the mutual relations between landlord and tenant?—I think they are exceedingly good so far as the estates I am referring to are concerned.

32,045. On the labourers?—On the labourers too.

32,046. And the public?—Yes

32,047. With regard to education, and so on, has there been any attention paid to fruit growing?—No.

32,048. Horticulture?—No.

32,049. Poultry?—No.

32,050. Bees?—No, not in this district.

32,051. Butter and cheese?—Yes. There is room for a great improvement here. The principle produce from the farm is butter and store stock, and I think it would be a great improvement if something could be done to put our butter on the same footing as the Irish butter in this district. There is no name or reputation for the butter in this district, and it is sent to the market, and it is bought about half the price of the Irish butter, and I think if butter were classed and there were some system of that sort adopted it would make a great difference in the district here.

32,052. We were just sampling the butter at our luncheon, and we were told that you got 1*s.* 2*d.* for it here on the spot. I believe they get a greater price in Bristol?—Yes, I quite agree, and I think it is a great pity that that butter was not sold in the district and classed in the district from which it came.

32,053. Do you think the district suffers from the want of a railway?—Very much, especially the district I am referring to. There is a railway being made, and it will be a great boon if it is completed.

32,054. Is there any co-operation and profit-sharing?—No.

32,055. Any combination?—No.

32,056. Any insurance?—Yes, a little, not to a great extent.

32,057. Is that the insurance of stock?—No, life insurance; the insurance of stock does not often take place.

32,058. With regard to friendly societies, are they used by the people generally?—Not very much in the district I am referring to.

32,059. Are there any freeholders here?—Yes.

32,060. Many?—These parishes happen to be nearly all owned by Mr. Arden, whom I am acting for; and the neighbouring parishes I do not know so well. I believe there are a few.

32,061. If so, are they freeholders who have inherited or bought their holdings?—I believe there are both, perhaps more that have bought.

32,062. Do you consider that the freeholders or the tenant farmers are the most prosperous?—I believe those who have bought; as a rule the tenant farmers are, especially when the bad times come; they can get a little assistance from the landlord, if not enough.

32,063. With regard to the children that remain upon the farms, are they paid wages?—I believe not.

32,064. Are they provided for in another way?—Yes, so far as the fathers' and mothers' means go to assist them when they get to riper years.

32,065. Without their assistance could rents be maintained?—That is a very difficult question to answer. I have known instances of two people living in adjoining farms with the same advantages in every way, and one man lives, and the other has to sell all he has in a few years.

32,066. Are there many labourers?—Yes.

32,067. With regard to the working strength of the country, are there many paid labourers?—A few, not very many.

32,068. You say, I think, that they form about half the working strength?—Yes. I am talking of this estate. I am taking half the estate, and half is done by paid labour.

32,069. What is the other half done by?—By the farmer and his sons.

32,070. Where do the labourers live; on the farm premises or in cottages?—Some on farm premises and some in cottages; the married men would live in cottages.

32,071. What are the earnings of the labourers?—I should say about 12*s.* to 15*s.* a week. Taking it altogether, it would be 15*s.* a week, I should think.

32,072. What is the accommodation in farm houses for labourers?—In most cases in this particular neighbourhood I believe the men sleep in rooms over the stable or cowhouse, and the maid servants in the house. In some cases the men have rooms in the house as well.

32,073. Do they use the kitchen in the day time?—In the day time and evening.

32,074. Have the cottages been improved or otherwise?—Much improved on what they were 20 years ago.

32,075. Where are they situated?—Some on the farms and some in villages near.

32,076. Can you give us any opinion as to their condition?—Those that remain in that district are in fair condition, a few labourers have left, and the worst cottages have got dilapidated and gone down. I think they are in fair condition.

32,077. Have they any gardens attached to them?—Yes, every one.

32,078. And small holdings?—Several small holdings.

32,079. From whom do they rent the small holdings?—From the landlord on that estate. The small holdings are let from the landlord direct.

32,080. Has there been any migration of labourers?—Yes, slightly.

32,081. To where?—To Glamorganshire and other parts, where they get higher wages.

32,082. Do they keep accounts?—In a very small way, I believe.

32,083. When do you consider that the trade depression commenced?—In 1879, I think.

32,084. What do you consider to be the cause of the trade depression?—At that time I think the bad season had a great deal to do with it in 1879, bad prices and foreign competition.

32,085. Do you consider railway rates have had anything to do with it?—I really think they have a great deal to do with it in this part of the country.

32,086. And high wages?—And high wages too.

32,087. Do you consider that all parties in the State are affected by the trade depression?—Yes.

32,088. What is your opinion with regard to general relations; are they friendly or otherwise?—Most friendly.

32,089. Can you give us any account of the expenditure on improvements?—Since 1888 there has been 2,069*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* expended on that estate.

32,090. In five years?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,091. I think at the commencement of your evidence you referred to encumbrances on estates?—Yes.

32,092. I find in a very instructive article which appeared some time ago in the "Western Mail" about Pembrokeshire this statement: "I am assured that whole tracts of country in "these three counties" (Pembrokeshire being one of them) "are hampered beyond description, "because all the money is sent out of them to "pay interest on mortgages." Do you think that is substantially true?—I do not think so. I do not think it would go so far as that. I believe there is a great deal of money going away from the county for that purpose, but I do not think it is to that extent.

32,093. Are the bigger estates mortgaged to any great extent? Of course, it is not a thing I am asking in reference to individual estates, but I am asking your judgment and opinion as an experienced gentleman?—Some are and some are not.

32,094. Do you think there is any difference between this county and other counties in Wales and counties in England in that regard?—No. Counties in England I could not speak to, but so far as the three counties of Cardiganshire, Pembrokeshire, and Carmarthenshire are concerned, I do not think there is very much difference.

32,095. In regard to the purchase of their holdings by tenants, what is your opinion as to the success of that kind of transaction?—Well, I do not think it is a success, because the purchasers have to borrow so much money, as a rule, and pay 4 per cent. for it, and that cripples them.

32,096. I find from another article that the landlord said to the correspondent: "Why "should not the Government advance money to "enable the Welsh tenant to buy his own "holding? I have myself proposed to brother "landlords that we should sell land to tenants, "and leave two-thirds on mortgage at 3 per "cent., but present tenants who buy often "borrow at 4 and 5 per cent., while their rent "is only 2½." What do you say to that suggestion?—I should have thought it a good suggestion. If tenants could borrow money at 2½ per cent. to buy their holdings, they would get enough money to pay the amount that they require over the mortgage, and at 3½ they would be able to get very near the same rent as before.

32,097. Even in these bad times?—I do not think they would in a year like this last year.

32,098. Supposing there is no general improvement to be looked for in agriculture—a general rise in prices for instance—would you in your experience think it a wise measure on the part of the Government to advance money to tenants on a considerable scale to buy their holdings?—I could not put it in that way, but I should think it would be a good thing for the tenant.

32,099. Supposing the Government should advance it at 3½, the Government gets a freehold security for it. Do you think a prudent tenant would be inclined to buy upon the terms of his paying one-third of the purchase money, and the Government advancing two-thirds at 3 per cent.?—Up to last year he would. Last year has had a very depressing effect on all tenants.

32,100. If there is no prospect of an improvement you could not advise the Government to enter upon a transaction of that kind?—No, not if you put it in that way.

32,101. To go one step further, it would be hardly prudent for the tenant to buy?—No, it would not be.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,102. How long have you been agent of this estate?—On this particular estate, five years. I have a small estate adjoining on which I have been over 20 years.

32,103. You consider it is better that compensation should be paid by the landlord than by the timber merchant?—Yes, I do.

32,104. This is the first instance we have had of anyone saying that. I think it is better?—I always do it.

32,105. This is the first instance brought before us where the landlord treats with the tenant. I think it is far more satisfactory?—I have had no trouble, and I have had scores of instances.

32,106. With regard to the haulage, it is not satisfactory you say. Do you not think it would be better if they were paid for their haulage done towards these buildings? If a tenant has to leave he always grumbles that he is not paid for the haulage?—I think he ought to be paid if he leaves his farm within a long number of years.

32,107. How long do you consider the period of exhaustion should be?—The only instance I had of that was on one large estate where they put it at a period of 20 years, and for the last year it is paid in full. It is on the 20 years' scale. If the last year he would be paid in full, and nothing if over 20 years.

32,108. Do you consider 15 per cent. is sufficient to meet this year's depression?—No, I do not.

32,109. There is no doubt tenants are glad to have it. It shows a good feeling. You do not think it meets the requirement?—No, some instances are worse than others.

32,110. It cannot continue?—No, I do not think it can.

32,111. What is your opinion about butter factories?—I think they are very good things if they could be worked, and if railways went near enough to all districts. I think the drawback at the St. Clear's factory is that people do not support it with their milk, and another thing is, that there is a little distance to bring it to the factory.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

32,112. If we are to compete with the foreigners we must have better dairies and better factories; which is the better for the landlord, to support a butter factory, or go and build fresh dairies all over the country, because the dairies in most places are very inadequate and very insufficient?—I quite agree, they are very insufficient.

32,113. Do you think the landlord should come to the rescue and establish butter factories in different districts, and if they cannot make them pay, do you not think they could apply to Government for a loan at a cheap rate?—I think it would be a very good thing all over these three counties if butter factories could be put up.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,114. I see you admit that the increased local rates fall on the tenant?—Yes.

32,115. What would you say about dividing the rates between the landlord and the tenant? Do you think it would be more profitable to the tenant?—Yes, but I think that if there were an allowance of that sort made it had better be made in another way, and have the rates entirely on the tenant or on the landlord. I think the rates should be left on the tenant, he is always in his parish, and could attend before the Commissioners to appeal, whereas it would be a great difficulty for the landlord to do so. I quite agree with you, that if the rates increase the landlord should bear a share of them, but I would put either the rates on the landlord or the tenant.

32,116. Of course I mean in case of increase that should be so?—Yes.

32,117. Do you think it would be a good thing to establish a system of light railways in a place like this where there are none?—Yes. I have always thought it would be a very good thing.

32,118. That it would benefit the neighbourhood generally?—Immensely. In the district I have been speaking of, when there was a railway which came up to the district, the farmers used to get some lime then, but when they have 11 miles to go to cart it from another station they cannot do it.

32,119. Where do the farmers take their produce to—the butter and eggs from here?—They take them to Haverfordwest, I think, mostly. People come round and buy in many instances.

32,120. Do you think it would be well if the Government took it in hand to have a parcels post for small quantities of agricultural produce, or to be carried by vans, or such like?—I have never considered that. I daresay it would be—for what they call making butter in pounds—they do a good deal of that here. It would be a good thing for that, perhaps.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

32,121. But do you think that it would be utilised if there was such a thing?—Yes, I think it would.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,122. I have only just to ask a question about the butter factories, which seems to me a very important point; are there any disadvantages which prevent the farmers from sending their milk to the factories?—In the winter time they, as a rule, are very short of milk, and the butter gets dear, therefore they see that they can do better by making butter out of the little cream they have and get perhaps one penny per pound more for it, and then there is a question of the labour of sending it from the farm in so small a quantity to the factory. We have but very little experience here; there is only one butter factory that I know of in these counties, and that is the difficulty they have had to contend with there.

32,123. I have heard in one case a difficulty mentioned, namely, that they wanted the skim milk for their calves?—Yes.

32,124. I want to ask whether that really was a valid objection. In sending milk up to a factory, would you get the skim milk back for your calves?—Yes, in a very short time.

32,125. And the double carriage would not be a very serious obstacle?—No, there would be no double carriage. I think it is 20 minutes that they wait for the cream separator to work the milk up. The cart goes there, and after 20 minutes the same cart brings it back that takes the milk down.

32,126. Then is it not a practicable matter to arrange that the cows shall be in milk in those times of the year when there is the greatest demand for butter, and when there is the biggest price?—Yes, and it is arranged in that way in towns, so that you will find milk and butter in the same quantity all the year round. But this is quite in its infancy. It has only been in existence about two or three years, and I think it would have been a great success this year but for the drought, through which people could not get keep for their cattle, and that part of the country has been almost worse off than in the whole of Carmarthenshire, I know.

32,127. Just a point about farmers purchasing their farms; if there is a competition for farms, would not they be likely to purchase at rather a high price?—Yes, they have been in the habit of doing so.

32,128. And looking back ten years, had it been the general practice to purchase, ten years ago, the whole of the wheat the allotment produced, and that kind of thing, and would it fall upon the tenant, who is the purchaser, instead of being shared, as it is now, between him and his landlord?—I quite agree with you.

32,129. So that on the whole, looking at it as a general thing, though in exceptional cases it might be a very good thing for the farmer to buy his land, would it not be wiser to look to making the Improvement Act and that kind of thing perfect, so that compensation should be given for improvements and so on, and make the tenure satisfactory?—It would be very much better, undoubtedly.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

32,130. That would apply to everybody, and the other would be an exceptional thing for certain individuals?—Quite exceptional. The only reason of purchase is that there are several people who want farms and will get them in that way.

Mr. Grove.

32,131. You regard, I suppose, the proper disposal of butter as one of the principal elements in farming in the district?—Yes, and young stock.

32,132. Do you know anything about the yield of milk by the separator as compared with the ordinary way of churning?—I really forget the figures, but it is considerably more. I will not say it is one-fifth, or one-seventh, but something like that.

32,133. About 20 per cent., I think?—Yes, I think something like that.

32,134. The separator is supposed to give 20 per cent. more butter than the ordinary mode of churning?—I believe that is it.

32,135. Have you read or do you know anything at all about the process in Denmark?—I do know a little, but not very much.

32,136. In Denmark they have, I think, 1,000 butter factories among little more than 2,000,000 people. In this country, of course, we have nothing at all like that proportion, and with regard to the point that Mr. Seebohm has touched upon, as to arranging for the calving at certain seasons, they do that to an enormous extent, and with very large profit to themselves?—I have no doubt that could be done here in two or three years if they did it generally.

32,137. You say game is preserved somewhat. Does it cause any unpleasant relations between landlord and tenant, do you think?—Not at all on this particular estate, and very little in the county generally.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,138. I should just ask a question bearing on what Mr. Richard Jones asked you just now about light railways. Where would you suggest a line of light railway, for instance?

Mr. Griffiths.

32,138*a*. There is one coming here now?—Yes, there is, just on the way here now. I know of no better place than that.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,139. From where?—From Clynderwen.

32,140. Is that what you call a light railway?—If a light railway were not coming, I would suggest one to come this way. That is better than a light railway.

32,141. That is better than a light railway, it being an ordinary railway?—Yes.

32,142. Is there any district for a light railway: there is no line to St. David's, for instance, is there?—No, I should suggest a light railway for St. David's, or to take this on to St. David's.

32,143. What about Fishguard from this part?—The intention is to go to Fishguard.

32,144. I think I understand you. I meant light railways in case you could not have anything better?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,145. I have a question handed up by Mr. Vincent: "I see some 20 per cent. has been "expended upon these estates by the landlords. "Was that upon your advice?"—Yes.

32,146. "Would you have given that advice "if a Land Court had existed, or if there had "been any institution for the compulsory fixing "of rent?"—Well, I hardly think I should. I would like to have more time to consider the question.

32,147. "Have you had any experience which "will enable you to say whether money on "mortgage can be obtained as easily as formerly "on the security of Welsh land?"—I know that it cannot be obtained. It was not very long ago that I had borrowed a sum of money to pay off a mortgage, and these unpleasant tithe agitations and things of that sort came into the country, and I failed to get advances, although they were promised and letters written, and it is much more difficult to get money, especially if you go to borrow big sums, than it was a few years ago.

Mr. Grove.

32,148. Do you say that, bearing in mind the cheapness of money, and the probability of money being cheap in the future?—Yes, perhaps it may be only temporary, but that is the feeling at present.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Reynolds called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,149. The document that is handed to me is only a certificate that you, Mr. John Reynolds, chairman of the Mathry Highway Board represent the farmers to give general evidence before the Royal Commissioners at Letterston, and it is signed by Mr. W. G. James, is it not?—That is quite right

32,150. You are Mr. John Reynolds?—Yes.

32,151. What is the name of your place?—Treglemaish.

32,152. Are you the chairman of the Mathry Highway Board?—Yes.

32,153. What is the nature of the evidence that you wish to give us?—I heard Mr. Perkins give part of his evidence.

32,154. Are you a tenant farmer?—No I am partly so.

32,155. What do you mean by partly?—I have some land.

32,156. Are you a freeholder, then?—I am partly a freeholder.

32,157. You are partly a freeholder and partly a tenant farmer?—Yes, more of a freeholder though.

32,158. What is it that you wish to lay before us?—Within the last 10 years or so, since what they have called the agricultural depression has begun, the improvements by the tenants have not been able to be done as they were previously for the 20 or 30 years past; there was more done; so that consequently I cannot say that they can be claimed for the same as they were before. There are some few instances in which there has been a little improvement done, but very little. I cannot in my knowledge of the country in general find but very little done. There is no doubt the depression is caused by bad times, and the lowering of the produce of the farm. You can see the lowering of the produce of the grain crop or corn by what you can see in the Act for the commutation of the tithes; it is somewhere about 27 per cent. Then in meat, beef, I say that beef is down 3*d.* a pound below what we could get some few years ago; we could then get 9*d.* for what we can now only get 6*d.* for. Then butter is rather lower, although it is rather better this year, but the reason we have had it is because of the scarcity of it, because I have known some farmers having to go off their farms entirely this year to fetch butter for themselves; they had no butter themselves, although they had their usual complement of cows, and they used very little, but yet they had to go off their places. Then the dry season was exceptional; I suppose it was exceptional as far back that nobody remembers such a thing. I know that my ancestors have lived on the place where I am now, back to 1740, and I know that water dried up last year that was never dried up before in their time. Whether that affects you is a different thing, but I am only telling you that it is exceptional. There are men that will be 500*l.* out of pocket this year. I know the land and know the families.

32,159. You think that is very exceptional?—Yes.

32,160. You are referring to the year 1893?—Yes. That is a state of things that there has not been for the last 100 years. There is no doubt that the depression is caused by the lowering of the value of the stock. I remember a time, but then when I go back I must tell you that I go back more than 10 years, and I go back to 40 years ago, and I can tell you of those times in which I knew of mutton being sold for 4*d.* per lb.—the half of the sheep—and the beef would fetch then 5*d.* and 6*d.*, and we are backing the beef to that price now. The mutton is a little bit better.

32,161. As you are a freeholder and a tenant farmer, could you give us any information as to which system of tenure you consider you are best off under?—It is in this way. If my father was left under his old landlord he would never want to change. That is a fact, and I know it, and he never would have bought it only that he had an objection to the man who wanted to buy it.

32,162. That does not quite answer my question. Of course I do not want to press you, but we shall be glad to have the information. You being a freeholder and a tenant farmer, which of the two systems do you consider to be the best?—I say you had better be a tenant farmer, because then you have got whatever money you have, and if you have got a family you can divide that, and it is very difficult to divide a farm. If we go into dividing a farm we shall be like the Irish, and we shall have a little bit—a cottage here and there.

32,163. Did your father purchase the farm?—Yes.

32,164. For fear of disturbance?—Yes.

32,165. Perhaps, under the old landlord, whom you thought was a good one, you had no fear of disturbance?—No, we never were disturbed under the old landlord.

32,166. But I suppose he was going to sell his farm?—Yes.

32,167. That would have been a disturbance, you see?—Yes, although he had a lease for his life.

32,168. Your father had a lease for his life?—Yes.

32,169. There, again, that is one form of security of tenure?—Yes.

32,170. Do you like leases?—I do, but they are no use of late years.

32,171. You are afraid of a falling market?—The fact of it is, I know of the biggest landlord in our neighbourhood that he has given leases, and they have been no use, and he has had to lower from those leases.

32,172. As a matter of fact, has he lowered from the leases?—Yes. I know of an instance in a farm next to me. The agent told me that last rent audit he was lowering the farm from 140*l.* to 100*l.*, and I know of another farm that is adjoining which again he has lowered from 60*l.* to 50*l.*, and that is just what it was 30 years ago. Then there is a very great advantage in our country, and I think it helps us a great deal by having small holdings mixed with the big ones. If we have all small holdings they will not do. The poor man has got a cow, and he wants a bull for her, he cannot keep a bull and cow on the same place, and a poor man has a sow, and he wants to go to the boar with her, and he cannot go to the boar with her, because he has no boar himself.

32,173. So that you think there is an advantage in having farms of different size, some small and some large ones?—Certainly. They are like all animals, they want the big and the small to be mixed up, not to put one strain of any sort; that will do wrong. If you bring them all small they will do wrong, and if you bring them all big they will do wrong, because the little ones are very handy for the big ones to help.

32,174. Have there been instances of consolidation of farms where small farms have been put together?—A trifle.

32,175. Do you mean there has been much of it: are they extensive?—Not a great deal but a good deal if we look back for the last 60 or 80 years.

32,176. Do you think that the intention was to save expense in building?—Yes.

32,177. What do you think was the object of consolidation?—To save building.

32,178. Yes, the landlords are hard up as well as other people?—I consider that is a cause for small holdings being rented dearer than big ones, because you will have to spend 200*l.* for building on a very small holding, say of 30*l.* a year.

32,179. And if the landlord has to put up with lower rents as he has been doing, by making abatements, he has less money to spend upon the buildings on his farm?—Yes, it would be an advantage if we could do that. Then there are instances where tracts of land come in a circle, as you may say—neat and convenient—so as to make a big holding of it. Then there are small portions again divided away which will come convenient for small farms, and for smaller still. I have been computing, as near as I can remember, on my place, that of foremen and different workmen on the farm, I can mention about 10 or 12 that are now farmers, and some of them are up as high as 200*l.* a year down to 50*l.*

32,180. Do you consider that the tendency has been for men to improve themselves?—Yes.

32,181. You think so?—Thoroughly.

32,182. Labourers have become small farmers, and small farmers have become large farmers?—Yes.

32,183. Rather an upward tendency than a downward one?—Yes, they are ousting the old farmers out of the land. I will tell you the reason why, too.

32,184. That is what we want to know?—They are living more economically than the big ones. The big ones are wanting to come up to the landlords, and are trying to live better. There is no harm for them to do so, but it is the cause. I heard it talked several times about, that there is no doubt about it that the tenants wish to improve themselves, and we are not very willing to be left down in the lurch if we can help it. There are a few instances of people going off to England, not a great number, but I must say there is a good deal more Welsh going down among the English of Pembrokeshire than the English going among the Welsh. There is a little of both.

32,185. I suppose there is no great feeling of Welshmen against going down into the English-speaking part of Pembrokeshire?—When he can go he will go.

32,186. It is not like going out of the country?—Well, certainly the old Englishmen are going from there. They are losing ground. I do not know what is the matter.

32,187. That is very interesting. Please go on; anything you like to tell us we are glad to hear?—If I knew it, I would tell you. This part of Pembrokeshire, I believe from here down to St. David's Head, is an exceptional part to almost any district of Pembrokeshire, and I think you may say the other counties too. It is very full of small holdings, and within the last 50 or 100 years all the land that has been brought to the market has been bought by the tenants nearly, with very few exceptions. I do not say it is a good thing, but I say that that is the general rule—it has been bought. The parish of St. David's is a very big parish, one of the biggest parishes we have in the county; there are four farms in that parish of 300 acres, and the others are from that downwards. There are in the parish about 9,028 acres, about 1,000 being waste.

32,188. The others are all smaller farms?—All smaller, down to 50 and 25.

32,189. Do you consider it would be a pity to see further sub-division?—Yes.

32,190. You would not like to see more sub-division?—No, I think it would be a pity.

32,191. Do you think it would be a good thing if Government would advance money to men who desired to purchase their own holdings, at a low rate of interest?—I think it would.

32,192. You have seen that that has been done in Ireland?—I have.

32,193. Is there any reason why it should not be done in Wales, that you know?—No, nothing.

32,194. Do you think that if such a system was started, many men in this district would take advantage of it?—I think they would, and I know of some substantial farms that would be a great deal benefited by it. I know of several farms—well, I know of one farm, of which the farmer had a lease for his life, and he bought the farm, and he gave 7,500*l.* for it.

32,195. Was it worth it? Perhaps he made a good bargain?—I would not have had a great wish for it.

32,196. It might be a good bargain, or it might be a bad one?—It was a good farm. There is another farm which was paid 8,500*l.* for.

32,197. Did the man borrow the money to pay it?—I believe he did.

32,198. He borrowed a part of it, perhaps?—Yes, a good bulk of it.

32,199. Then how is he advantaged?—He has worked hard for it.

32,200. Does he consider he has made a good bargain or a bad one, do you know?—Indeed I do not know. I cannot tell you that; he has not told me one way or the other, although I am well acquainted with him; but the other one had plenty of means, and he told me that his reason for purchase was that his money was scattered all over the country, and he was very glad to get hold of a good place to put it in.

32,201. There is no harm in that; I should think that was an advantage?—Quite so.

32,202. I do not know whether he got the same rate of interest?—He did not, because he got 4½ per cent., I am certain, for what he got before.

Mr. Grove.

32,203. You told us about the altered prices of produce. What about the rents now as compared with the time when things were so much better?—They are lowering gradually, but as generally we are not willing to submit to being lowered, so it is that the landlord is not willing to drop at once. He does not feel confident in himself, but they are lowering, and I will tell you why I know it. I was at the Assessment Committee for our Board this week, and there was a lot of them came in there and asked for reduction of valuation.

32,204. Were those reductions granted to them?—Yes.

32,205. Permanent reductions of rent?—Yes.

32,206. They would not, I suppose, grant a reduction on the assessment if it was only a yearly abatement, would they?—No.

32,207. Then what is their rule; do they want three years' permanent reduction before they alter the assessment?—No.

32,208. If they had had two years, I suppose they would do it?—Instanter, if they can prove it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,209. There is one question I have to ask you: Would they reduce the rate if there was an abatement promised for three years?—I have never seen that done. I have been about 10 years on the Assessment Committee now.

32,210. I know they do it in our county?—I must tell you this, that I do not know of an instance.

Mr. Richard Jones.

The custom varies, I suppose, in different unions.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,211. I think it is in the breast of the Assessment Committee; they can do it if they choose?—That is so.

Mr. Grove.

32,212. Is there much abatement? Do you know any landlords about here who give no abatement at all, or is it pretty general that abatements are given?—I think it is very exceptional that one does not give any.

32,213. Do you think there is sufficient labour upon the land?—More can be put, but they cannot find the means to pay them.

32,214. Do you think there is sufficient cottage accommodation, taking it altogether, throughout the district you are speaking for?—Yes, I think there is. There are some empty ones, and, therefore, if there are empty ones, that proves that there is no need of more.

32,215. But they may be in the wrong place, and it does not quite follow that that is so?—Yes.

32,216. As to compensation for improvements that have been made, has that been dealt with pretty fairly by the landlords, or unfairly, do you suppose, as a rule?—So far as I can see, they have dealt with it fairly.

Mr. Grove—continued.

32,217. Suppose that a man were taking a farm of 200 acres, what would you consider would be a reasonable amount of capital for him to have per acre?—That depends exactly upon the quality of his land, and then it would vary so much in the amount he would have to put upon it; were it good land and bad land, there would be a good deal of difference there, but if it was real good land, I should say he ought to have 1,000*l.*

32,218. For the 200 acres?—Yes.

32,219. That is 5*l.* an acre, then?—Yes.

32,220. If it was very bad land for 200 acres, what do you think it would be then?—You must put it down about half.

32,221. About half that; that is 2*l.* 10*s.* per acre?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,222. You stated that you thought it would be a great help to a farmer who wanted to buy his farm if he could borrow money at 3 per cent?—I think it would.

32,223. If it was done by Government, it would be a general thing and generally known, so that anybody could get it, would it not?—Yes.

32,224. Would not that send up the valuation?—I do not think it would. There now, I am afraid I must reconsider my words.

32,225. I mean at the sale, would not the fact that a person could borrow money at 3 per cent. induce him to compete more for that farm than he did before?—Yes, you are right.

32,226. Then I would ask you a further question: Do you think he would get his farm any cheaper from the fact that the Government would lend him the money at 3 per cent.?—The land hunger is so great; there is land hunger, but only in the country down here. I do not know what it is in other parts of the country.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I think it is all through Wales.

Mr. Grove.

32,227. Then suppose we follow that up one step further. Much as one would like to see people the owners of their own farms for many reasons, do you think that a race of farmers who had bought their land too dear, owing to their having given the competition prices, and therefore sitting at the competition rent, would be really a good thing?—I would rather they should leave us under the old landlords, if they can, because I do not want to get the small ones in; I would rather be under the old landlords.

32,228. I will ask another question: So far as you are suffering in this district from the present system, are you suffering from landlords being too small or being too large?—It is too small if anything, not too large.

32,229. And your great danger is sales at competition prices and the purchase by people who have made their money perhaps in commerce, and who do not understand land, and who expect to get therefore 4 per cent. for it?—Yes, even in England you will find it so.

32,230. Can you suggest any remedy for that?—I cannot. You must allow competition. You must have competition between man and man, and you must not do away with that or else you do away with the heart of the Englishman to go and do for himself.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,231. Are you in favour of security of tenure?—With the landlords that we have in our district I would not want security at all, because they never turn a tenant off unless he cannot pay his rent, and indeed some of them have to stop there when they cannot pay the rent.

32,232. You are satisfied then with the landlords generally?—I am, perfectly. I would give you the names of them in private, but I would not like you to go and publish their names. It is no use to do that.

32,233. You speak on behalf of the tenant farmers?—I do, both of them. Most of those that are tenants down our way have got holdings of their own, more or less. They are freeholders, nearly all, from here to St. David's Head.

32,234. I would ask you this question: Which do you think it best for the farmer to become, the owner of his holding under circumstances under which these men have become owners of their own holdings or to be under a landlord with security of tenure and fair rent?—I say that I would be quite satisfied with being a tenant.

32,235. With security of tenure?—Certainly. Please to put one little bit of a clause in there, not the needy landlords.

32,236. You talk about needy landlords; what proportion of the land in this neighbourhood do needy landlords own in comparison with the whole neighbourhood? Does it bear a large proportion?—I believe from here to St. David's Head that the small landed proprietors own half. So far as I can form my judgment now, and throw my eye from here down to St. David's Head, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are sweeping out as far as they ever can do it, and Sir Owen Scourfield is sweeping out as fast as he can do it.

32,237. So that really the majority of the tenant farmers in this neighbourhood do not feel secure in their holdings because they are under needy landlords?—They are in this way: they are safe enough as long as they pay the rent.

32,238. Yes, but are they in danger of advances of rent?—No, not now.

32,239. Supposing the times improve?—Well, I cannot tell you as to that. I should be very glad to see it.

32,240. I will ask you this question: Have there been any advances in rent of late years?—Yes.

32,241. When had you advances of rent?—About 30 years ago. There were a little perhaps 20 years ago.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

32,242. The rents were generally advanced then?—Yes.

32,243. Only by these needy landlords?—Only at some particular spots.

32,244. The large landlords did not advance then?—They left them the same. As long as the old tenant was in they never disturbed him.

32,245. So that really the circumstances of the tenants under large landlords are much better than the circumstances of those who are under needy landlords?—Yes.

32,246. Have you any remedy or any suggestion to offer for bettering the circumstances of these people who are under needy landlords?—No, because I am afraid you will do harm to the big ones, and I do not want you to do harm to them—to send them away from our country—to frighten them away.

32,247. What prompted these people to buy their own holdings?—Well, I do not know. I think one great idea was that they did not like someone else that was likely to take it, or that some other fellow would buy it, and he would come there and put them out.

32,248. In that way it was owing to insecurity of tenure, was it not?—Yes.

32,249. You see, security of tenure, according to your own admission, would be a good thing for a certain class of tenants?—Well, it would act in two ways. Now, take myself, for instance. I have a couple of children, and I have got one farm to live upon; I want to get another farm for my other boy. Now, if I had to buy a farm I would have to turn someone out of it before I put my son in. Consequently then, you would tie me in a curious fix, that it was no use my buying a farm at all; I must go to the big landlords and try to get a farm for him.

32,250. I do not see your point?—Can you not?

32,251. No?—Then you must try again, and hark back.

32,252. Will you repeat it?—Yes. I have two boys: say that someone else has got three. I have a farm of my own, I want a farm for the other boy; I go and buy it. Well, there is a tenant there before me, and before I can get that farm into my possession I must turn that tenant out. Now, if I buy this farm, I shall be dislodging one to put another in. Would it not be a hardship for me or for him about that—one way or the other—it will be a hardship for one of us. I leave you to judge which.

32,253. I cannot follow your process of reasoning, I must say?—Well, you know there is one tenant in the farm when I buy it, and I want to put another one in then. Now, I shall have to dislodge one, so that there will be no security of tenure again.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I must say I do not understand your point.

Professor Rhys.

Security of tenure is supposed from the beginning, and then it prevents his turning out the other man from the farm which he wishes to buy.

Mr. Grove.

32,254. You would have to give a bigger price in order to put your boy into a farm, I suppose?—I suppose I should have to.

32,255. You would have to buy somebody else out?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I understand you partly.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,256. I am in a position to know a little more of you than Mr. Richard Jones, and I know you have a farm in our part of the country?—Yes.

32,257. You are a landlord as well as a tenant?—No, my wife has that property.

32,258. I suppose the tenant has made an application to you—he has applied to you?—Yes.

32,259. In these bad times?—Yes, he has had lowering from the first, from what it was before he took it, of 10*l.* a-year—from 60*l.* to 50*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,260. Was that a permanent reduction?—Yes, it has never been moved.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,261. We are very short of hay in our part of the country, and you are short of hay here also?—Yes.

32,262. Do many of the tenants buy hay? You are talking of the dairy farms here—many of them have to buy hay here?—There is no hay to be sold unless you go to Haverfordwest or down to Milford.

32,263. That is foreign hay?—Yes, foreign hay.

32,264. We have heard to-day that persons are buying some at the rate of 10*l.* per ton?—But what I say is that there is not much to be sold, and when in exceptional instances there is some, it is sold as high as 10*l.* per ton, if not more.

32,265. You are an experienced farmer. Will the butter made from the cows that eat this hay realise as much as the value of the hay?—No, not anything like it—not half. A woman told me yesterday, who lives on a small farm, that her cattle cost her 1*l.* a-week now to keep them alive—she had nothing in the world but meal to give them.

32,266. It is a bad state of things?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,267. The hay you allude to is foreign hay?—I have imported 17 tons of foreign stuff, besides a lot of barley which I had in stock last year.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,268. You spoke of a person that bought a farm?—Yes.

32,269. Had he made the money by farming?—I believe he had.

32,270. Under whom did he farm, if it is a fair question?—Mr. George Lee Hunt.

32,271. I suppose there are persons that have not got the security desired in the neighbourhood. We have heard some cases here to-day, and you know of a good many of that description?—Yes. I do not know of any of them that have got any leases. They have leases, but they have got to cancel the leases because they are too dear.

32,272. The times are too bad?—The times are so depressed. They took them about 20 years ago, some of them, and it is no use now. I mean Mr. George Harris, of Ricaston, Milford Haven (he is the biggest landlord round my way), and there is Lady Hamilton, who has a large portion there, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are large landed proprietors, but they have very nearly cleared off now—I suppose they have cleared off 1,400 acres in the parish of Mathry.

32,273. Would you give us the names of the persons that you represent at this meeting? We had gentlemen before us yesterday who gave us the names of the persons that they came to represent?—I believe it was on the paper which was handed in. I will write the names down if you like.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,274. How many gentlemen were present at this meeting?—Four or five of them.

32,275. What notice was given of the meeting?—I do not know that there was any at all, only that we happened to come together as the Highway Board.

32,276. You came together incidentally?—We came together because of the Highway Board.

32,277. You are Chairman of the Highway Board?—I am.

32,278. Then the other farmers being present you had another meeting in connexion with this Commission?—Yes.

32,279. Then there has been no public notice issued that you would hold this meeting with the Highway Board meeting in the neighbourhood?—No, I believe not—no, none.

32,280. Then it is the other four or five gentlemen that you represent?—Yes.

32,281. That is all I ask you?—If you want the names of those gentlemen, please pass the paper here, and I will put them on it. (The witness wrote the several names.)

Mr. Griffiths.

32,282. What are your remedies for the present depression?—I think that a very good thing is the Trade Marks Act, taken with regard to foreign meat.

32,283. That is one thing?—I was in a certain town in Wales here, somewhere within the last

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

12 months, and there was a butcher there with us. We were talking, and we saw "Eastman's Limited" at the shop right opposite, and a friend of mine said, "Do you patronize him?" Oh, sometimes," he said, "when we get short." "What, you do not pass that off as English meat?" "Yes, certainly." So that then it is not a fair competition.

32,284. But if it was marked, that alone would not meet the depression, would it?—No.

32,285. What else do you suggest?—I think that the Government ought to give us a certain grant to save our rates.

32,286. Do you think that the burdens upon the land are too much?—Yes, very unfair. There are shopkeepers in the town of Haverfordwest who, since they have done away with the turnpike gates, are in pocket some 30*l.* apiece for the turnpike tolls, and now the farmers have to pay that instead of them.

32,287. Is there anything else you would suggest?—I do not know indeed, I cannot tell you exactly at this moment.

Mr. Grove.

32,288. You represent a certain district, Mr. Reynolds?—Certainly.

32,289. How many tenant farmers are there in that district that you represent?—I cannot say—hundreds of them.

32,290. You represent five out of those hundreds, as you call it. Is that so?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,291. From your knowledge of what other farmers think, has your evidence been what you think they would generally agree with?—I think so; I think it is evidence that nearly all of them would coincide in. From the talk we generally have with one another, I know it is so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,292. There is one question, Mr. Reynolds, which I just wanted to know your opinion about. You recommended, or at least suggested, that these rates should be put upon the Government; do you think that would tend to economy in administration?—Well, with a certain proviso. I do not agree that they should be put off entirely, but to subsidise them to a certain extent. I think it would be a good thing for the farmers, as they have got the management of the rates, if they had a certain amount of interest in them.

32,293. Subvention you mean?—An interest in them, because if they have an interest in what they have to pay they would deal with the question, and if they had no interest, then I am afraid they would get rather what we call reckless, and then they will spend any amount.

32,294. I think that qualification of yours is very valuable?—There I will leave it to you.

The witness withdrew.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We have now three or four witnesses who will give their evidence in Welsh. Their evidence has been translated in another room by Professor Rhŷs. As each witness is called I will ask him whether he is satisfied with the interpretation by Professor Rhŷs, and then I shall ask the Secretary to read the evidence aloud in English.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Mr. Benjamin Perkins called and examined through an interpreter.

Questioned by Professor Rhŷs in Welsh, the Witness stated that he was satisfied with the interpretation of his statement.

The Secretary read the following statement of the Witness.

Evidence of Benjamin Perkins, Blacknock, Maenclochog, Treffgarne.

At a meeting held at Maenclochog, where my friend D. Jenkins and I were appointed to meet the Commissioners, several complained that the rent was much too high. There was one tenant who paid 60*l.* a year, and according to the evidence of those who knew the place it is not worth much more than 30*l.* There were but few who blamed the landlords or their agents, however, they greatly blamed those who were ready to take a holding should a tenant threaten to give up his place in order to try to get the rent reduced; there was no sympathy shown. With regard to myself, I do not blame the present proprietor nor his agents, the latter have several times been very good to us (as a family) and have reduced the rent a little 12 months ago, but nothing to be compared with these bad times. The rent of my farm is high compared with that of the farms on the same estate and the neighbouring estate. This farm (of mine) was bought about 50 years ago because, presumably, it bordered on the estate; since then the rent has been raised twice; but years ago both the vendor and the purchaser have died. My complaint is, that it is unfair that there should be such a difference on the estate whatever, and it is very dear these bad years, the price of cattle being under half what it has been. Although having worked hard and having lived economically and carefully, myself, my wife and children, yet at the end of the year we have nothing for our labour, and if we had servants we could not pay them from the farm, without mentioning the interest on the capital (sunk). Another matter, the taxes are very high, and if a holding is highly rented, the taxes are so as well, and that is quite unfair. The road rate is very unfair to those like myself who are without a road approaching their farm, except a very bad one. Again, a tenant ought when obliged to leave a farm, owing perhaps to its being sold, to have compensation for all the improvements he has made on the place. I do not believe in keeping a farm without improving it, especially (when situated) near mountains, and I do so. My holding has changed a great deal compared to what it was 30 years ago, especially with regard to the expense involved in obtaining water and setting machines to work by the water. I could mention other things which create a great loss when a tenant is obliged to leave his farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,295. Who is your landlord?—Mrs. Robinson.

32,296. What was the price the farm was sold at 50 years ago?—I cannot say.

32,297. What is your rent?—It is 85*l.*, or 80*l.* now.

32,298. And do you consider it still high?—Yes.

32,299. Have you made any application for a reduction of rent?—Yes, and I have had a little, but these bad times make it high.

32,300. Have you had any abatement? This 5*l.*, I suppose, is a permanent reduction?—I have had an abatement too.

32,301. But you think that is yet not sufficient?—The farm is still too dear.

32,302. You speak of improvements. Have you made any improvements on the farm?—Yes, many.

32,303. Who does all the buildings, the landlord or you?—The agent has done very well during these latter years.

32,304. What have you done?—I have built a little, about 15 years ago, before asking him. The agent has built a good deal since I have asked him.

32,305. You said something about water. I did not quite understand what you said?—We changed the water course in order to get it to turn the machinery.

32,306. And that is a great improvement to the farm?—Oh, yes, certainly.

32,307. If you had not done so, the farm would be still dearer, would it not?—Yes, of course.

32,308. Did the landlord assist you to do that?—No, I never asked him; the times were a deal better then.

32,309. Supposing you were to leave that farm now, would you be paid for that improvement?—I cannot say; I do not know that the law gives it. I said that there ought to be compensation for improvements. I am quite satisfied with my present landlord and agent, but if the place was sold myself and family would be thrown out, not being able to buy the place.

32,310. Then you think the tenants should be compensated for the improvements they make?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

32,311. You spoke of the difference of rent on the same estate. Would the quality of the and be the same in both cases?—It is pretty much the same.

32,312. Is the road up to your farm a private road or a parish road, and who repairs it?—It is a private road, and I am obliged to repair it. Very often we cannot go in the winter to the farm with a load.

32,313. You gave us the rent at 85*l.* or 80*l.*?—85*l.* it was; it is 80*l.* now.

32,314. How many acres?—115 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,315. A question is handed in by Mr. Vincent:—"When you say there is no sympathy "shown, do you mean that none is shown by "competing tenants to one another?"—Yes, there is no sympathy.

32,316. Between the tenants?—Yes.

32,317. Not between the landlord and tenant?—No, nothing between the landlord and tenant. I mean the tenants themselves.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Jenkins called and examined through an interpreter.

Questioned by Professor Rhŷs in Welsh, the Witness stated that he was satisfied with the interpretation of his statement.

The Secretary read the following statement of the Witness:—

Evidence of David Jenkins, Budloy, Henry's Mote.

Most of the farms of this neighbourhood are small, several of them possessing bits of mountian grazing land not brought under cultivation, but proprietary, and not common land. The work on the farms is done as far as possible by the farmer himself, his wife, and children, but the hired servants are kept for the purpose of assisting if they cannot get on without them. As a rule, the farmers, their wives, and children work hard, getting up early in the morning and keeping at it until late. The children do not, as a rule, receive wages, and the farmer feels glad if he can pay his way, without mentioning the interest on the capital. The landlords generally acknowledge that the rents are too high as compared with the present prices of agricultural produce, by giving abatements of 10, and some 20 per cent., when receiving the rents. But whilst this may be sufficient to assist some farmers through the present depression, it is much too little to others, because there is a great deal of difference in the prices of farms, even on the same estate. This may be accounted for perhaps owing to some of the rents having been fixed when prices were low and there was not much demand for farms, whilst others have had their rents fixed when prices were better and the demand for farms greater, and whilst some farms have continued to be held for the same rent for 50 and 60 years, others have been raised 25 and 30 per cent afterwards, owing to the old tenants having died or left. I can state that landlords have sometimes taken advantage of the deaths of old tenants to raise the rent to their widows and their orphans. Another cause of rents having been raised under some circumstances is the sale of farms, and that when prices were comparatively good and the prospects of the neighbourhood promising. Accordingly I do not think that any particular reduction, so much per cent., or so much in the £, can make the life of a farmer comfortable without establishing some scheme to regulate the rents as well, and to bring them down to their proper value. Besides this, whilst the majority have a reduction in the rents, others who pay high rents get but little, and some fail to get anything. Another matter which ruins the farmer is that if he improves his farm he has no sufficient assurance that he or his descendants will enjoy the advantage accruing from the improvements. Many farmers are afraid of improving their farms for fear they should be sold; and that soon with the result that the farmers would be obliged to leave or pay again for their own improvements. Again, the buildings on some farms are in a very bad state, and it is difficult to get the landlords to undertake many repairs.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,318. Does the lack of proper buildings put you to any great expense, do you think, yearly, or is it a cause of great loss to you?—It creates some loss, but it does not oblige me to spend anything.

32,319. Will you explain how it causes you loss?—We have not a proper place to keep cattle. Then we very often have corn, but we have no storehouse to keep it; we have it threshed, at the same time we would thresh more, if we had room to store it about the time when there was water power; the water dries up towards the spring.

32,320. We have heard that the cattle that are left out in the open air require one-third more food than the cattle that are kept indoors; what is your idea about that?—I do not believe that.

32,321. Do they require more food?—I do not think so.

32,322. Do you know any cases where the children of small tenant farmers live away from home and send money back to their parents to help them to pay the rent?—I annot mention anyone particularly now, but I think I know of one.

32,323. You speak of different rents on the same estate. Could you tell us how much they vary; to what extent, 1*l.* an acre, 2*l.* an acre, or anything of that sort?—Some are let at 10*s.* an acre, others are let at 1*l.* an acre, and the land in the latter case is not a bit better than the land in the former case.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,324. Is there sufficient building to put your implements under shelter? — No, not enough.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,325. What scheme would you suggest to us should be established to regulate rents?—I cannot think of anything better than a Land Court, but that would not be perfect.

32,326. You think it would be a good thing to have some middle place to decide the question where the tenant thought the rent too high?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

32,327. You turn the cattle out in the day-time, do you not?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,328. This is a question handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Why do you say the absence of uni-"formity of rents is a grievance?"—The man who paid the highest rent did not have sufficient abatement, but the others did.

32,329. I suppose there is a difference in the value of the land?—Yes, there is a difference in the value of the land sometimes.

32,330. What you say is that there is not uniformity?—No.

32,331. Do you consider that that hurts you personally?—No. The person who owns my place has no other farm.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID LEWIS called and examined through an interpreter.

Questioned by Professor Rhŷs in Welsh, the Witness stated that he was satisfied with the interpretation of his statement.

The Secretary read the following statement of the Witness:—

I, David Lewis, of Barnard's Hill, Hays Castle parish, used to live at New Farm in the parish of St. Dogwells on the Sealyham estate. I was obliged to leave that place last Michaelmas as the dwelling-house was not fit to live in, and the outhouses were coming down. I could not get the landlord to do anything, so I left. I also wish to give evidence respecting a cottage-house built on the common at (or near) Little New Castle in the parish of Little New Castle. The cottage is called "Fron Haul," and my brother lives in it now. My (late) father built the house at his own expense, and the landowner of the neighbouring land charged him 1*s.* per year rent, although the neighbours grazed sheep over the said common without limit. My father in his last will left the cottage to me, and I have now received notice from the present owner of the land adjoining to pay full annual value in future.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,332. Do you produce a copy of the notice you refer to?—I have not brought the copy with me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,333. I see that you use in the English copy of your evidence handed to me the word "common?"—Yes.

32,334. Is that some unenclosed land upon which the neighbouring farmers depasture their cattle?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

32,335. Upon which the neighbouring farmers in common depasture their cattle?—Yes.

32,336. And that is as yet unenclosed?—A part of it has been enclosed now.

32,337. Who is the landowner?—Mr. Crooks is the present landlord.

32,338. Is he the person who has given you the notice that you speak of?—Yes.

32,339. And is he or was his ancestor the the person who used to charge your father 1*s.* for the land?—Mr. Crooks' father-in-law.

32,340. How came your father to build upon this common land?—There were other houses on the commons which were occupied without any pay, and my father asked Mr. Harris for his consent.

32,341. Who is Mr. Harris?—Mr. Harris of Trefacwn.

32,342. What had he to do with the common?—His land surrounded the common.

32,343. Did your father think he was building on Mr. Harris's land then?—No, I do not think so, but he was there with Mr. Harris working, and so on, and so he asked his consent.

32,344. Was this what we have heard called in other parts a ty un nos?—No, it took some time to put it up.

32,345. How many years ago was it that your father built the cottage?—Fifty-two years ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,346. Has the landlord expended anything in repairing this cottage?—No, nothing.

32,347. Never?—No, never.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

32,348. Has he ever offered you a lease?—No; no mention of anything.

32,349. What rent does he now require?—He has not mentioned any rent, but to pay the full value for it.

32,350. About this Sealyham estate where you live, were the whole buildings in bad repair?—Yes in a very bad state, all of them.

32,351. Did you make an application to have them repaired?—Yes, I asked several times and that is why I gave it up, because having asked several times for it to be repaired and finding it was no good I gave it up.

32,352. Is it a large estate?—Yes, but not very large.

32,353. Are all the farms in the same state as that one?—Yes, they are all just the same, in a very bad state of repair.

32,354. Do they change their tenants like you did, often?—Yes, very often. I know of a place close by and the present tenant is the sixth tenant during the last 31 years.

32,355. Is the rent high as well?—Yes, very high.

32,356. Are you the same as the rest of the people? Would you like some place to appeal to?—Oh, yes, I would.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,357. What is the name of the landlord?—Miss Edwards. She is a young lady.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,358. Do you mean under age?—No, she is not under age.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,359. Has she an agent?—No, she has not an agent; and I would not have been able to pay my rent only that my children are about me and assist me to pay.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,360. But I understand your children are away earning money elsewhere?—Yes, that is what I said, they are away in Glamorganshire and assist me to pay the rent.

32,361. That is why you are able to pay the rent?—Yes, many a time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,362. Who manages the estate for Miss Edwards?—No one, she does most.

32,363. Does she receive the rents personally?—Yes, she has been putting it in the name of her brother, but Mr. John Edwards has promised to reduce the rent for me; Mr. John Edwards offered to let me the land at 1*l.* an acre, but she refused.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

32,364. How much an acre was it?—From 25*s.* to 28*s.*

32,365. Was there any mountain land?—No, moorland.

Mr. Grove.

32,366. Much moorland?—About six acres.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,367. What is the size of the farm?—From 70 to 80 acres.

32,368. Did you get any abatement at all?—Yes, lately.

32,369. How much?—10 per cent.

Mr. Grove.

32,370. Who was it you asked to do the repairs for you?—Miss Edwards.

32,371. If the house had been repaired and the buildings put into decent order, would you have remained there?—Yes, that is why I was obliged to go.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,372. Has the house been repaired since you went away?—Yes.

32,373. It was repaired for a new tenant?—Yes.

32,374. Buildings and all?—The stable and the barn had been repaired; there are seven windows and not one of them perfect; all with holes in.

32,375. Is it the same rent now?—Yes.

32,376. When did you leave the place?—Last Michaelmas.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,377. Have the seven windows been repaired?—Yes, they are all new now.

32,378. If there had been six tenants in one holding during 31 years, was that in consequence of the bad state of repairs?—I do not know that that was the only thing, but the rent was far too high.

32,379. If the buildings that have been made since last Michaelmas had been made for you would you have stopped?—Yes.

32,380. At the same rent?—Yes, I have always been there and I should try to stay on there.

32,381. A question is handed in by Mr. Vincent, "Had the late Captain Edwards any money to speak of?"—I cannot say indeed.

32,382. Is Miss Edwards the agent of the owner?—I cannot say. She seems to do most; she may be the agent. She has the most money on the place.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Lawrence called and examined through an interpreter.

31,771, 18*a*, 31, 22*a*. 32,382*a*. Questioned by Professor Rhŷs in Welsh, the Witness stated that he was satisfied with the interpretation of his statement.

The Secretary read the following statement of the Witness:—

Re Common Land in the Parish of Letterston, County of Pembroke.

My name is William Lawrence, and I am a blacksmith by trade. I have resided in Letterston for the last 16 years; and I desire to make a statement relating to the above common. I understand that in the year 1861 or 1862 about 273 acres of common land in this parish was closed in and divided between the adjoining landowners, and nearly the whole of this land is still uncultivated, and in my opinion is of but very little value (as it is) to the landowners or the tenants. Previous to the above date the parishioners had a right to the common for turf, clay, and grazing purposes. When the above common was divided, sold, or given away, there were three acres in different parts of the parish allotted to the parishioners for clay, but am sorry to say two of which never yielded a shovelful, and the little that was in the other has been exhausted long ago. Consequently about 50 of the parishioners (all householders) are deprived of their rights, and are now obliged to go from four to seven miles for same and every load costs them from 4*s*. to 5*s*. delivered, while there are scores of acres of good clay close at hand but only in the possession of the few. I beg to ask if anything can be done in the matter. I may also mention that there is a piece of land (about two acres) left out (as they call it) for the poor of the parish to cultivate for potatoes, &c., but as it was never completely fenced in the land is still in its original state, viz., heath and small furze. Whether this bit of land was intended to the poor as a substitute for their rights taken from them I do not know.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,383. How old are you?—37.

32,384. You must have been only about five or six years old when this happened?—Yes.

32,385. Do you remember it at all?—No, I do not, but my complaint is that the place has been divided without any clay in it.

32,386. Do you know whether the enclosure was made under an Act of Parliament?—Yes, it was done by Act of Parliament.

32,387. I am afraid we have no power to override an Act of Parliament. I do not want to stop you; I want to hear any complaint that you have got to make; but I want to disabuse your mind as to any powers we have to help you. We shall be very glad to hear what was done and embody it on our notes. Do you contend that the enclosure was made contrary to the Act of Parliament?—No, but this I would say: On the Swil Moor there is an acre set aside, but there is not a grain of clay in it.

32,388. Is it the acre that was given to the parish at the time of the enclosure?—Yes, at that time.

32,389. It is the same one?—There were three acres.

32,390. Have they been changed since that day?—No, nothing has been done to them.

32,391. One witness told us that one of the three acres did contain some clay, I think?—Yes, I say so, too, but there is no clay there now.

32,392. It has been worked out, I suppose?—Yes, and there is a gentleman now who is ready to give us another acre instead of it if we could get a law to allow it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,393. Who are the trustees? Is it the rector of the parish and the churchwardens or the churchwardens only, or were two or three of the parishioners appointed?—Mr. Mathias, of Letterston, is one of them.

32,394. Mr. Charles Mathias?—Mr. Moses Mathias, of Letterston farm.

32,395. Is he a churchwarden?—Yes.

32,396. Is he sole churchwarden?—No, there are two churchwardens.

32,397. Is not the other churchwarden a trustee as well?—I cannot say.

32,398. How is it that nothing has been said at the vestry during all these years?—Well, people are so silly, and now we are obliged to suffer in consequence.

32,399. Can you identify the two acres given to the poor?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,400. Are they the acres that we see in front of the hotel here?—No; one is half a mile from this building one way, and the other about three-quarters of a mile the other way.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,401. We have heard that some portion was given for a recreation ground as well?—Yes, that portion which is round here.

32,402. How does that house on the other side of the road come to be built there?—Do you refer to the Jubilee hotel?

32,403. No, I mean just outside this enclosure. The school is built in a little enclosure; then you get a public highway seemingly; then close against the public highway a house, a comparatively new house, built between the road and the pond that I see below?—Mr. Harris, of Tregwynt, put these up on the commons, and because he was a gentleman he was allowed to do as he wished.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

32,404. Who allowed him, do you mean that the churchwardens allowed him?—In old times a gentleman and a squire could do anything he liked; that is what I in the smithy have heard that people say.

32,405. Is the house that we see opposite on the other side of the road, this isolated house, built on what was given as recreation ground?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,406. May I ask if you speak of your own knowledge? You said you were five or six years old when this was done. Do you speak of your own knowledge?—I speak of what I have heard from others.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,407. At any rate I see no one else has built close by. Is that pond on the recreation ground?—There were over eight acres; now there are only four acres.

32,408. Is that pond on the recreation ground?—As far as I understand, and as far as I have heard.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,409. That is with regard to the water, to the pool?—Yes, it is there in order that the cattle may have water in summer, because in summer it is very dry here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,410. Was any land allotted for the building of a church or the building of a schoolroom by the Award of 1861 so far as you have heard people tell you?—I cannot say that, but this school and this bit of land here are on the recreation ground.

32,411. Do you mean to say that the land on which this schoolroom is built and the enclosure round the schoolhouse formed part of the ground allotted for recreation purposes?—I have heard them say that.

32,412. Do you see anybody in the room who could give us any further information about this to explain the neglect of the trustees?—Mr. John Davies, of Clovers, is here. He is an old man, 80 years of age nearly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

32,413. How long ago was this schoolhouse built?—I cannot say for certain. I have not gone very deeply into this matter, but my complaint was about the clay.

32,414. Do you know whether the house that we have been referring to on the other side of the road was ever the parish pound?—I can only say that Mr. Harris built them, and that Mr. Morris, of Newton, bought them about 12 or 13 years ago perhaps.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,415. What was Mr. Harris' title to sell, the Award of the Commissioners?—I heard them say that he had no right.

32,416. Have you anything else to say to us?—No.

Mr. Grove.

Is there anyone in the room that knows anything of their own personal knowledge about this matter?

Sir John Llewelyn.

I have a note just sent up to me that the Rev. Mr. Rees, the rector, can explain at once about the school.

Mr. Seebohm.

And the witness mentioned an old man of 80, Mr. John Davies.

Mr. Grove.

32,417. Is Mr. John Davies in the room?—He was here just now.

32,418. Is there anyone else in the room to your knowledge who could give us the information?

The Rev. Thos. Mathias: May I assist the Commission? I shall be very pleased to do so. I am a native of the parish.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Presently, please. We will first of all hear what Mr. Rees has to say.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. JOHN REES called and examined.

Witness.

See 31,771, 32,382*a*, 32,431, 32,522*a*.

32,418*a*. I have only just come into the parish, but I can say this, that the site of this school has been conveyed 40 years ago by the late Bishop; it is on what they call Bishop's land, which is now vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,419. Is the school now vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—No; but it was conveyed by the Bishop of the Diocese; it is on church land.

32,420. In whom it is now vested?—In the rector and churchwardens.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,421. That was for the building of the church, I suppose, was it not?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

32,422. The church had been built before that, you think?—Yes.

32,423. More than 40 years ago?—Oh, yes.

32,424. Is there a map on the conveyance?—There is a map of the parish. I have only seen it once, only opened it once.

32,425. Then your impression is that whatever may be the quantity awarded for recreation purposes this particular land upon which the schoolhouse is built did not form part of the eight acres allotted?—Quite so. I understand there are two or three little plots belonging to the parish—that little common here where they hold the fair, and some plot down there and some plot down here.

32,426. How many acres altogether do you know?—I cannot tell you. I daresay my friend here who is a native of the parish (the Rev. Thomas Mathias) can tell you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mr. Grove.

32,427. Was the conveyance of this land for the school made before the division of the common?—Oh, yes. I have only read the deed once.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,428. Have you the deed?—Yes, I have the deed. See 32,522*a.*

32,429. Could you produce it to the Commission?—I could. Shall I go for it?

32,430. Yes, I should be very much obliged if you would?—Very well.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. Thos. Mathias called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,771, 32*a*, 18*a*, 22*a*.

32,431. You are a native of this parish, I believe, are you?—Yes. I am the Rector of Henry's Mote, Trefgarne. I had no intention of giving evidence before the Commission.

32,432. Can you give us any information with regard to this enclosure and the part that was reserved for the public?—I believe, as far as I can remember, that it was all done according to the Act of Parliament.

32,433. Was there an inquiry down here and a Commissioner?—I am afraid I cannot remember that.

32,434. What age were you at that time in 1861?—I should be 20.

32,435. It is said to have been in 1861 or 1862?—But then I was at school or at college.

32,436. Have you a clear recollection of the circumstances?—Yes, to a certain extent, and as far as I remember, it was all done by people appointed under the Commissioners and under the Act of Parliament.

32,437. Was there a map?—Yes, there is a map.

32,438. Of the enclosure?—Yes.

32,439. In existence?—Yes.

32,440. Do you know where that map is?—It is at Great Letterston with Mr. Moses Mathias.

32,441. Is he a trustee?—I think so, as churchwarden for the parish. Lawrence, who has just given evidence before you, mentioned his name as being a trustee as churchwarden of the parish.

32,442. And he has the map?—Yes, he has the map.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,443. I do not think there is any suggestion that the direction of the Act of Parliament was not carried out and that the Award was not properly made. The question is the identification of the sites—the identification of the recreation ground is the point?—Yes. I should not think there would be any difficulty at all about that. If you saw the map by and by the churchwarden possibly would explain it; there would be no difficulty at all about it. The whole thing was done regularly, I believe, in every way.

Mr. Grove.

32,444. Do you know the boundaries of what they call the recreation ground or the part reserved for the parish?—No, I do not know. I do not know whether there was anything reserved for the parish beyond the pieces adjoining the village. There is a piece just below here on which the village fair is held once a month, and then there are small pieces high up in the village, I think, but that I do not know. The map will show that, and it can easily be seen whether the same pieces are reserved still or not.

32,445. You do not know whether Mr. Harris built this house or these houses upon the reserved land, or not?—That was just one of the things that made me come forward. Mr. Harris is dead, and I think he has not been properly dealt with. As far as my recollection goes, Mr. Harris did not build the house. It was built after the property was sold by Mr. Harris's successors.

32,446. And Mr. Mathias, as one of the trustees, has been in the neighbourhood, I suppose, for a great many years, and is a gentleman that you would calculate upon to protect the interests of the parishioners?—Certainly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,447. Do you know anything about the place on the other side of the road here?—That is the house we have just been talking about.

32,448. When was that built?—It was built after the property was sold by Mr. Harris or Mr. Harris's trustees. I am not sure whether the property was sold during Mr. Harris's lifetime or afterwards, but the house was not built by Mr. Harris at all, but by the present proprietor.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,449. When you talk of Mr. Harris having sold the land, you mean the land adjoining, do you not, because if the land was a part of the recreation ground he could not have sold it?—Just so, but I am afraid I could not go into the question of a foot or two one way or the other with regard to the boundary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,450. Are you able to speak as a matter of fact as to the amount of land that was reserved to the public?—No, I cannot. I presume the map would show that.

32,451. Is the map here in Letterston?—Yes, in the village.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES EDWARDS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,452. What is the name of your holding?—Fagwreilw, Penycwm; in the parish of Llanhowell.

32,453. Are you a farmer?—Yes.

32,454. What is the size of your farm?—I believe it is, altogether with the moorland, about 65 acres.

32,455. What is your rent?—My rent is 44*l.*

32,456. Would you read your evidence?—I cannot. I have not got my spectacles.

The Secretary read the following statement:—

The cause of the great distress amongst the farmers.

Our grievance as small plodding farmers in this part of Pembrokeshire is: That the land is let to the big farmer, who can for a time afford to give more for it, and who sometimes has and holds as many as three or four holdings, aye, and ofttimes more, of different landlords, who is able to work the last holding maybe with only a horse or two extra and an extra boy; the late occupier having died or otherwise left the farm; the living house and out-houses being left vacant; the wet and damp weather sets in, they soon tumble down and, in a short time, are a heap of ruins; and generally there are on these holdings one or two labourers' cottages, the occupiers of which are not employed by the new tenant or occupier, as the work on the new holding is imperfectly and improperly done by his own staff, and the extra boy and two horses; consequently the cottagers are compelled to go elsewhere to earn their living, and the empty cottages are soon a wreck; and frequently this last holding, as well as the others occupied by him, owing to the inadequate and sparing labour thereon, gets out of order, from bad to worse, the hedges crumble down, two or three fields are made into one by the cattle trampling on the fences, furze grow on the uplands and lowlands, and acres of the best ground get unfit for tillage; the lowland instead of being a rich marsh becomes gorse, and the whole, instead of being a fruitful and prosperous habitation for man, becomes a hiding place for vermin and foxes. Now this occurs almost yearly within a circle of five miles from where I live, and I am here to-day to prove what is herein stated to be true. I do not blame the landlords so much for this miserable plan of letting farms; I have as good a landlord as I could wish; but if I gave up my farm or holding to-day my landlord could have fifty offers for the same in less than a week. My opinion is that we ought to have an Act of Parliament, a Land Bill, to prevent this wretched system of taking and letting land, which is depopulating our agricultural districts, and causing ruination to many an honest farmer.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

32,457. Do you think, Mr. Edwards, that any Act of Parliament can prevent competition?—Yes.

32,458. You think it could?—Yes.

32,459. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not.

32,460. It is an Act that was passed about ten years ago, with the intention of protecting the farmers?—Well, I know a little bit about it—that if a farmer was improving his farm, and had notice to leave, he would have compensation for it, and otherwise for the master as well. I quite agree with that Act so far.

32,461. How do you think that Parliament could prevent competition for farms when they chance to become vacant?—In this way: I think one occupation for one occupier. There are plenty of big farms and middle-sized and small farms, suiting all classes of people

32,462. You would prevent consolidation?—Yes; but when I see people that do not require more than one who have no family nor children growing up, taking two or three and four holdings, which I now see in my district, when other people cannot get any, I say they are against the moral law—that is the moral law of "Woe unto them that join land to land." That is a thing which the moral law condemns, and it is reckoned a glorious thing under this dispensation.

32,463. Is it done much in this neighbourhood?—Yes, it is.

32,464. In many instances?—There are many instances of it.

32,465. What is the object of it?—Well, I do not know what is the reason of it, but people have got drunk on land. That is the reason that the land is holding so high in the rent. Now, if I were to leave, or something happen to my place, I have got stock and implements, and some other place to let out. There were four or five before me, or perhaps a dozen before me, applying for it, and I was bound to give more than the value for it. I do not blame the landlords at all, because they are forced by other people bidding for it.

32,466. You are blaming then those tenants who were competing with you?—Yes, I do blame them. That is the reason that big farmers are taking the small holdings adjoining their farms.

32,467. Was the rent increased to you?—I do not say anything about my landlord. I have no claim against my place personally.

32,468. It is a hypothetical case you are putting?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,469. What is the name of your farm?—Fagwreilw.

32,470. What parish is it in?—Llanhowell.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,471. Do you hold two holdings yourself?—There are two holdings with me, but I did not have it, nor the present landlord, but it was a land shark about 40 years ago. I call him a land shark, and all that act like that the same—joining land to land. There is increasing in the rent owing to that, and two families could live in comfort on it, I should think—well, they could rear a family up there.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,472. Two families could live comfortably on it, do you say?—Of course by working it, and they are not joining now together; they are very inconvenient.

32,473. Have you ever felt inclined to give one of the pieces up?—Well, I cannot, or else I must give two up, because the building is all in one piece now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,474. Can you give any information as to whether the one building being now made sufficient for the two holdings is in consequence of the expense of keeping up the second building?—I do not really understand.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

32,475. Did the landlord let the one building fall down to save expense?—I suppose he did, or the tenant that was living on the furthest one. The tenant took the one that has the whole of the buildings on it now, and that was going down then.

32,476. Have they gone down altogether?—Yes, altogether but one little house.

32,477. Is that house, the little house, that you speak of, inhabited?—No, I keep cattle in it. It has a run for cattle to shelter them in the winter.

32,478. Can you give any details, or names of the owners, and the firms, where there has been consolidation?—Yes, I can give the names and the owners.

32,479. In the last few years?—I will commence, first of all, with what did happen to me personally on that line. Perhaps you will allow me, gentlemen, to go as far back as 20 years from this time. Twenty years from this time I was living down in St. David's parish.

32,481. So that he made a profit on the subletting?—He made a profit. I was having the out-house, and only a kitchen I had to live in. He built an addition to the house. There were two rooms under the same roof where I was living, all under kitchen, I call it. He and his wife only were there, and he had two rooms in the new addition on the floor, and two upstairs, and another one on floor, and one upstairs again. I only had that little kitchen, and my children went sick of the whooping cough this time in the year, and of course we were eight in family altogether. I made application to him for me to have another room, or else I must give the farm up. Well, he showed to me that he was willing to let me have the room, but he went up to the town of St. David's, and so soon as he met Mr. Williams at the hotel, he heard that I was going to leave unless I had the room, and he took it at once, and he had a whole island before that, and several farms about St. David's, and turned me out like that.

32,482. Yet you had been paying him 17*l.* on improvements?—I was paying him 17*l.* clear profit, and the lease went out that year. The next year that Williams had it, the Parson Jefferson died.

32,483. Several witnesses have told us that sub-letting is not a good thing for the country. Perhaps you do not agree with that?—I can prove another in Llandeloy parish; there are three farms with buildings, and there is one man there who is a widower; he has no children now. Then there is Ros Grannog which belongs to Mr. Mathias, and he has another farm at Llandeloy and another at Mabus. I can mention a dozen like that in my district close beside me.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,484. All belonging to Mr. Mathias?—No, some belong to Mr. Phillips, of Carmarthen.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,485. You are speaking now of sub-letting?—Yes; and they would charge more for sub-letting than what they pay if they let out.

32,486. I suppose that is always the case. My question was rather with regard to consolidation, as to whether there are many cases of consolidation, and you said yes. I asked you whether you could give instances of owners having consolidated farms in that way; by consolidation I mean when a man holds two farms. Can you give us an instance?—Yes. Mr. John Reynolds.

32,487. Who is the owner of his farm?—He himself is the owner of his farm, and he takes another farm on belonging to Mr. Harris, of Rikeston. Then Mr. Rees, of Clegirn, two farms; and Mr. Evans, of Llanwngar, two farms; and Mr. Nicholas, Trecadrogan, two farms.

32,488. And there are several more, I suppose?—Mr. Thomas, of Trevigan, two farms.

32,489. Do you think it is a good thing or a bad thing?—A bad thing; I consider it is the ruination of the country.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,490. How many acres do you consider sufficient for a man?—I do not confine to any if he is a competent man. Farms are divided mostly by nature, by the brooks and the roads, and if a farmer is able to take a large farm he is welcome to do it, but not to take another with it. I do not like the feeling of, "I do not care who drowns if I swim."

32,491. Are the owners of these estates wealthy men?—Yes, many of them are wealthy men.

32,492. Quite capable of putting up buildings in each of these places?—They ought to, but they say, "To save, perhaps, building a pig-stye, I will let it out to another farmer," to save something on that.

32,493. Your contention is this, that consolidation, namely, putting two farms together, causes a quicker competition, and there is more competition because there are less farms and the same number of farmers applying for farms?—Yes, more farmers applying for farms. There are 12 demands for every one supplied.

32,494. You say further that farms will not pay a competition rent?—They will not pay any better; I cannot get better produce from the farm, because it leaves a run for cattle, for stock and sheep, and when the prices are coming down, in the long run the owner and the tenant are under loss. I can mention several people now that were small people, and where are they now? The farms and they went to ruin.

32,495. I suppose it is difficult to persuade landlords that the competition is bad for landlords?—It is bad for landlords in this sense, that a landlord rents his place out, but he will have to build to rent another one after he has let it run to ruin, or if he has sold it he will sell it for less money than if he let it to a proper farmer. I can mention others like that that have been running out with three farms, and Mr. Reynolds, of Treglemaish, bought one lately, and I think he had it with no buildings, because it was all in ruin; it used to be a very tidy place; and the best part of it has gone into wilderness.

32,496. Do you not think the landlords are sufficiently alive to their own interests not to let farms at competition rents?—No, not all of them, indeed they are not.

32,497. I suppose they think a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush?—That is the idea, to save building a pig-stye, or a fowls' house, or something of that.

32,498. Are you in favour of having some authority to regulate the rents?—Yes, I am, because there is no sign of people to regulate themselves.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,499. As to that authority to regulate rents, you would rather have it without litigation if you could, would you not?—I do not thoroughly understand you. I am a Welshman, just trying to speak a little English, just to accommodate the gentlemen here.

32,500. Would you rather have some two or three persons specially appointed to act as a sort of arbitrator between you, or would you rather have a Land Court?—Well, I do not know about that as to which is best. Of course it is not a matter between me and some people, but it is the country all through.

32,501. But had you rather that it was done, and that any difficulty that you had was settled in public or in private?—Of course it will not act in private at all. I think you must have authority in public to do it. Act of Parliament I think is the only remedy that can come to its face, I think.

32,502. But Parliament might either provide a public law court, or it might provide an arbitrator who would act in private?—I do not go so far as that, because I should go before the Parliament if I were going to say that. I should leave them to say what is best.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I think this is what he means, that he wants the principle of a Land Court, but that he is not prepared to swear by a Land Court himself. He wants the principle of judicial rents.

Sir John Llewelyn.

According to his evidence-in-chief, he wants to do away with competition.

Witness.

Yes, I want to do away with that. The rent would be regulated then. That is the reason the rent is keeping so high now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

This is what he says in his statement: "If "I gave up my farm or holding to-day, my "landlord could have 50 offers for the same in "less than a week. My opinion is that we "ought to have an Act of Parliament, a Land "Bill, to prevent this wretched system of taking "and letting land."

Mr. Grove.

32,503. But you would like, I suppose, to be on the very best terms that you could with your landlord, every tenant would?—Of course I am on the very best terms with my landlord. I can praise him very highly here to-day; I do not say anything against my landlord.

32,504. And you, of course, naturally, all of you want to preserve that feeling. Now if there was a Land Court, you would still wish the tenant and the landlord to go together first and to try and agree?—Yes.

32,505. And if they could not agree, then you would go to the Land Court to decide between you?—Yes.

32,506. Is that what you mean?—Not exactly. What I mean is to prevent large farmers occupying small holdings adjoining their farms. That is my idea.

32,507. Then you want a Land Court not only to fix the rent between the landlord and the tenant, but also to fix the number of acres that he should have, and the number of farms that he should have?—Number of farms, not number of acres.

32,508. Do you want a Land Court to prevent a man taking more than one farm?—Yes.

32,509. That is your idea?—That is my idea.

32,510. You have two holdings, you say?—Yes.

32,511. What is the total acreage of both your holdings?—It is a small place after all—very small; the arable land and the grazing land is only about 39 acres, but there is more then; one more is 19 acres, I believe, and there is about six or seven. Altogether that is not just the same as the Dyfrog Moor, St. David's.

32,512. You gave us 65 acres, 44*l.*?—Yes.

32,513. That is both your holdings put together?—Put together and all.

32,514. That is very small indeed?—Yes.

32,515. When your lease expired a good many years ago, near to St. David's, you were paying 47*l.*, were you?—57*l.*

32,516. And a certain gentleman in St. David's took it at once?—Yes.

32,517. Did he give more rent, or the same rent?—No, the same rent.

Professor Rhŷs.

32,518. What kind of land does the country consist of in those parishes, Llanhowell and St. David's, mostly?—They are mixed—every sort.

32,519. What is the value of that moorland that you mentioned?—About 6*d.* an acre. I am willing to let it out for 6*d.* an acre to any one.

32,520. Do you call that moorland in Welsh, "gwayn"?—Yes, "gwayn."

32,521. You said it was like the Dowry of St. David's just now. What is the dowry?—It is a moor through which you would go down on the road past to St. David's from Mathry.

32,522. Is it extensive?—Yes, it is extensive.

The Witness then withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,522*a*. I should like, Mr. Chairman, to say that through the courtesy of Mr. Rees I have had an opportunity of looking at the conveyance of the ground upon which this National School is built. This is, of course, in reference to the evidence given by Mr. Lawrence. The state of things appears to be this: The Bishop of St. David's was Lord of the Manor, and in the year 1852, it being necessary to obtain the site for the school, the Bishop of St. David's by virtue of an Act of Parliament which was passed in the fifth year of the reign of Queen Victoria, conveyed a certain portion of the common, which he could not have done except by means of that Act for facilitating the purchase of school sites, to the minister and churchwardens of the parish of Letterston, and the bit of the old common of the manor that was used for this purpose is the bit that was coloured pink adjoining the churchyard in the map of this conveyance. I have looked at that, and I identify the pink plot as being the plot upon which this National School is built, and the yard surrounding it enclosed by the wall. So that the position is this, that long before the enclosure of the common of Letterston, several years, at any rate eight years before, the conveyance had been regularly made of this piece of land upon which the National School is built. See 31,771, 32,382*a*, 32,418*a*, 32,431.

Then, with regard to the other portion of Mr. Lawrence's evidence, so far as the map annexed to the Award of the Enclosure Commissioners is concerned, the Award appears to have been carried out perfectly regularly. The only bit of recreation ground I can find is the plot No. 71, which is a plot just the other side of the road where the pound is. In the year 1863, when that map was made, there was a bit of ground which appears to have been freehold land, and to have belonged to Mr. Harris. How Mr. Harris's predecessors in title acquired a right to a bit of freehold in the middle of that common is a thing which, of course, must necessarily be obscure. It is necessarily left obscure by the evidence which has been given to-day, but, so far as the matter in the year 1863 has gone, there seems to be no doubt as to the regularity of the proceedings. With regard to the clay—the pieces of land awarded by the Commissioners for the inhabitants to obtain clay free—those are properly displayed on the maps and appear to be the very bits which have been used since. So far as I understand Mr. Lawrence's evidence now, the clay is exhausted. Unless Mr. Lawrence has something to say, I suppose we must leave the matter there, and thank the gentlemen for producing the documents.

Mr. Grove.

May I just ask one question of Mr. Brynmor Jones? There appear to be one or two old houses across there, and a new house. You could not identify, I suppose, the difference in the land by the new buildings and the old buildings.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Oh, yes. On the map there is a kind of oblong piece of land in the middle of the common, which appears to be private property not dealt with by the Award at all, and at the end of that is a pound-house marked there.

(Adjourned to Eglwyswrw.)

FORTIETH DAY.

The Magistrates Room, Eglwyswrw, Pembrokeshire, Saturday, March 10th. 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR).

MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. T. E. MORRIS, acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

In opening the proceedings this morning I ought to mention that Lord Carrington and Lord Kenyon are unfortunately both compelled to be absent on account of important business engagements. To-day I hope we shall be able to complete the sittings in the county of Pembroke, and we shall have visited all those places which have been selected by the county council.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

That was the authority that we asked as to the places in which we should meet in order to best suit the convenience of the county generally. Eglwyswrw is the last of the places so indicated. We have a great number of witnesses, and it will be necessary for us to devote our time as concisely as possible to eliciting the whole truth.

MR. DAVID THOMAS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,523. You are Mr. David Thomas, of Carmarthen?—I am.

32,524. You are a land agent?—Yes.

32,525. Would you state to the Commission what districts they are to which your evidence will refer?—North Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire.

32,526. What special estates do you represent?—I intend dealing with three of the estates that I am agent for; I think that will be sufficient for the purpose. The others that I have the pleasure of managing are under the same management. The first will be the Fynone estates in North Pembrokshire and Carmarthenshire.

32,527. What is the acreage?—The acreage in Pembrokeshire will be 7,000, and in Carmarthenshire 3,000, making a total of 10,000 acres. The second estate in the Blaenpant estate in Carmarthenshire, owned by Mrs. Maria Brigstocke. That estate is 2,500 acres. The third estate is called the Macnamara estate, owned by Richard Edward Jennings, Esquire, and the area is 1,000 acres.

32,528. What is your opinion with regard to encumbrance of estates?—The owner of an unencumbered estate is better able to assist his tenantry, and is not tempted to let his farm to the highest bidder. The tenants on the other hand have greater confidence, and cultivate the land better, believing that their landlord will not increase their rents for want of a sufficient income to maintain his establishment.

32,529. Do you consider that consolidated estates or scattered estates are best?—It is an advantage to farmers to have resident landowners. The landlord's own tenants derive greater benefit when the estate is consolidated.

32,530. Do politics, language, or religion, make any difference?—None whatever; not to any material extent at any rate.

32,531. Are the agents experienced men or not?—There are experienced agents.

32,532. Do you think that an inexperienced agent is a bad thing?—Well, I may say that in my own case, I am the son of a tenant farmer; I have been articled to a surveyor; afterwards I went for some years as an improver to a large land agent in Pembrokeshire, where I obtained special training in the management of estates and in land values. I have valued for assessment purposes in the Union of Carmarthen something like 50,000 acres, and for the last 12 years I have had under my personal management several estates in the three counties, Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Pembroke. I fear that some agents have not had that special training.

32,533. You think that an inexperienced agent would be a bad thing?—Well, inconvenience and hardship is the possible result.

32,534. Is there any demand for leases?—Leases are not asked for, and landlords and tenants get along better, especially during bad seasons, with an open tenancy. Tenants believe that land will decrease in value rather than otherwise, so a lease would be of no benefit, and I have known a tenant to beg to be allowed to give up his lease (which he on entry pressed for), and his request was acceded to.

32,535. Have you anything to say about the agreements; can you produce a copy of your agreement?—I have one here.

32,536. May I ask if that is a copy of the agreement in general use?—No, this is an agreement which is a revised copy of my own drafting. I drafted this agreement some years ago, and it has been since twice revised by myself, and it is the one in use on all the estates I represent.

32,537. On what estate is this in use? All the estates with which you are connected?—Yes.

32,538. Do you consider the clauses fair?—The clauses are considered fair.

32,539. Are penalties ever enforced?—Never. I have not known a single instance.

32,540. Is a copy always given to the tenant?—It is my invariable rule to give to each tenant a copy of his agreement duly executed and free of charge, and in the case of Welsh-speaking tenants I always explain its contents.

32,541. How is the rent fixed?—On the basis of valuation. Old rentals remain undisturbed when low, and in case of complaints a tenant may at any time obtain consent to have his farm revalued.

32,542. Do you consider that they are uniform or not?—Generally uniform.

32,543. What would be the average rent?—It is a difficult question to answer. I see you have said here between 10*s.* and 20*s.*?—I have got farms let at 6*s.* to 7*s.*, some at 20*s.*, some at 22*s.* and one, which I think the cheapest of the lot, is let at 27*s.* an acre.

32,544. Varying, of course, with the quality of the land?—Varying according to quality.

32,545. Do you consider that the rents which have been fixed are fair rents?—Yes.

32,546. I see you have put it so here in the précis; is the letting to the highest bidder common?—It is my invariable rule to ascertain the fair annual value, and select the most suitable tenant naming the future rent. The practice of letting to the highest bidder is liable to injure landlord and tenant. In my opinion, further, the letting to the highest bidder is the surest way of securing a tenant with insufficient capital.

32,547. So that you consider that that would be injurious to both parties?—I do.

32,548. How long has your experience lasted?—18 years.

32,549. Has there been any great variation in the rents?—No, the rents have remained generally the same.

32,550. What are the abatements that have been made in the rent?—The following are the particulars:—

32,551. May I ask you what the practice of your assessment committee may be when abatements are made over a series of years; can the occupier go before the assessment committee and get a reduction of his assessment?—No, he cannot.

32,552. He could do so in the case of permanent reductions?—In the case of permanent reductions that would be so, yes.

32,553. But even in the case of abatements continued for a series of years he does not get that reduction of the assessment?—He can by having valuers to go over his farm, and state that that is the annual value. An assessment committee cannot assess on the rent; they can only assess on what is supposed to be the fair value of the holding.

32,554. What the place would let for?—Of course they take the rent as a basis; but still if the man can prove that the rent is excessive he can get the rent reduced to what is fair and reasonable in accordance with the Act.

32,555. I was asking you not exactly what the law was, but what the practice of the assessment committee was?—The practice is, I believe, to take rent as a basis, but in the Carmarthen union it is on the basis of the valuation of experts. I was one of the valuers for the Union.

32,556. When is the rent paid, how long after it becomes due?—From three to four and a half months after it falls due.

32,557. What is your opinion as to the preferential claim of a landlord for rent?—It enables tenants to get three or four months extra time to pay, thus enabling them to select the best markets and fairs, for Lady-day and Michaelmas are not suitable periods to realise stock and farm produce. The tenants are enabled to secure farms without finding securities or paying rents in advance.

32,558. You tell us that the average size of the farms is about 80 acres?—Yes.

32,559. Is there any consolidation of holdings?—No, none.

32,560. Are large holdings preferred to small ones?—Yes, they are.

32,561. You think the large holdings are preferred to small ones?—They are preferred to the small ones.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,562. By the landlord or the tenants?—I think it is both in the interests of the tenants and of the landlords.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,563. You say "on sundry grounds"?—The tenants of small holdings, as a rule, are short of capital, and not skilled farmers, and in bad times they have nothing at their back.

32,564. What is the state of cultivation?—Labour is getting scarcer, and many neglect fences and ditches in consequence.

32,565. Is there any reclamation of land by the tenants?—Not that I am aware of.

32,566-7. Is the grass land increasing in comparison to the arable land?—There is now more land under grass than in former years.

32,568. I suppose a good deal less land is ploughed?—A good deal less land is ploughed; yes.

32,569. And it is laid down to grass?—Just so.

32,570. Who would be at the expense of laying it down in recent years?—The tenants do that, but beyond the cost of seed, the expenses are not very much in this country.

32,571. Do you consider that the soil here takes kindly to the grass?—It does; it is not so foul as a rule as the English corn land where there are heavy looms.

32,572. Who does all the permanent repairs—the buildings?—The landlords keep the buildings in repair, and erect additional ones when necessary.

32,573. Do they provide water-supply?—Yes, by sinking or by gravitation.

32,574. Do you consider that any of the permanent improvements are made by the tenants?—It is a very rare occurrence.

32,575. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act known in the country?—No, it is never referred to in this district, so far as my experience goes.

32,576. You say that there is a custom of the country which is to refer any dispute to arbitration?—Is that a written custom or an unwritten custom?—It only refers to unexpended manures or unconsumed crops. I have never known it in any other case. Of course the manures remaining on the yards would be taken at a valuation of two farmers as a rule, I have known that. Beyond that I have not known anything referred to arbitration.

32,577. You say consent to the improvements is not asked because the landlords make them?—Exactly.

32,578. What is the custom of the country with regard to outgoing tenants?—The outgoing tenant is always allowed to dispose of his crops as he pleases, and the general rule is to sell all by auction.

32,579. Do you consider that it is a good plan to sell by auction?—It benefits the tenant. He makes the best of his produce when leaving. I should prefer myself if the tenancies were determinable at Lady-day instead of Michaelmas; thus the crops would be consumed, the land would benefit; but as they are at Michaelmas, it is an advantage to the outgoer undoubtedly to dispose of his crops to the highest bidder.

32,580. The unexhausted manure is paid for by the incoming tenant at a valuation?—Yes, that is so.

32,581. Has the tenant any right to dispose of his interest in the holding?—No, I always find a tenant, when wishing to leave, agreeably, giving up his farm to his landlord; that is my experience.

32,582. Do you believe in freedom of contract?—I do. Freedom of contract, I think, in the long run will work satisfactorily.

32,583. Is game preserved?—Winged game and hares are protected from poachers, but no birds are reared; rabbits are not numerous, and tenants farming under my principles kill rabbits without any restriction whatever, and a keeper is sent to assist them whenever requested.

32,584. There is not much game preserving?—Very little. It does not affect the crops at all.

32,585. Are there any offences against the game laws?—Those are very rare. I think I had one or two this year. For the last five years I have not had one. They would not average two cases in the year.

32,586. What about railway rates?—They are very high. There is a monopoly here with the Great Western, and there are general complaints of high rates for the carriage of produce and cattle, especially between here and the Midlands.

32,587. There is a butter factory, I think at Carmarthen, and the farmers are the principal shareholders?—We have one butter factory in Carmarthenshire with a capital of 1,000*l.* in 1*l.* shares, the majority being held principally by farmers a few of the landowners have subscribed for shares.

32,588. Are there many proprietary farmers here—freeholders?—There are a few, but they remain much the same.

32,589. Are the farms inherited, or are they farms that the sitting tenant has purchased?—There are some inherited, but a great many have purchased their holdings. If their holdings have been offered for sale, and they are anxious to retain occupation of the farms that they have held for many years, they purchase their holdings.

32,590. And you think that some of the purchase money has been borrowed when they purchased their farms?—In the majority of cases they borrow somewhere about two-thirds, and pay interest from 3¾ to 4 per cent.

32,591. How would freeholders be as compared to yearly tenants, would they be better off or worse off?—They are not so able to start their children in life. Yearly tenants are infinitely better off, and can do more for their children. This fact is now becoming generally recognised amongst farmers.

32,592. Do the children upon the tenant farmers' lands receive any wages for their work?—Not as a rule, except that they get pocket money and clothes and food.

32,593. If they do not get it directly do you think they get it indirectly?—They get a start in life which I think fairly meets the wages.

32,594. How about the hired labourers. I suppose like everyone else that we have heard you will say that the single labourers are housed on the farm premises, and the married ones in separate cottages?—That is so, and as a rule in this district they are all fed by the tenant farmer.

32,595. What would be the wages should you say?—As far as I can see they go from 8*s.* to 10*l.* per week. In addition to that they get a cottage and garden, manure, and potato land, and use of cart, making it up altogether generally to something about 15*s.* a week, I should think, if a man boarded himself.

32,596. I suppose you would agree with all the other witnesses, I think without exception, that we have heard, that the wages have rather tended to increase?—Oh, yes, I quite agree—there has been a considerable increase.

32,597. What sort of condition are the cottages in?—We have cottages on the larger farms on the dispersed holdings.

32,598. Have they gardens attached to them?—Yes, always, and some of them have a little land to enable them to keep one or two cows.

32,599. Are they under the farmer or under the landowner?—They are generally held under the farmer. The object is to secure their services for harvest work at the current rate of wages.

32,600. Is there any migration of farmers' sons?—A few have gone to England. Large farms are limited in this country and the sons of the larger farmers have had to go to England before they could secure a similar class of farm.

32,601. The labourers go to the towns?—The labourers go to the towns and colliery districts. That is the general tendency.

32,602. What is your opinion as to the causes of the depression in the agricultural industry?—The causes of depression, in my opinion, are foreign competition, excessive and unfair railway rates, scarcity and increased cost of labour, adulteration of produce, the sale of foreign meat as British, distance from large centres.

32,603. Can you make any suggestions as to remedies?—Yes, I am going to offer a few suggestions. The first will be the marking of all foreign produce as such; prevention of adulteration; abolishing preferential rates for the carriage of all foreign produce over British railways; construction of light railways where needed; giving a premium to encourage wheat growing; more direct representation in the House of Commons for the largest industry in Great Britain. While the suggested Land Courts might give sitting tenants the right of having their rents judicially determined they would at the same time afford them an opportunity of selling their interests in the holding to the injury of the future tenant. Again, landlords would be merely possessors of a rentcharge and the mutually pleasant relationship between landlord and tenant would certainly be destroyed.

32,604. Then is the relation between landlord and tenant at present friendly in this district?—Most friendly.

32,605. Can you give us any particulars of the expenditure upon the estates you have referred to?—During the last nine years since my appointment to the agency we have spent on the Fynone estate as nearly as I can make out 3,150*l.* in repairing buildings which were at that time generally in good order.

32,606. In how many years?—Nine years; averaging something like 350*l.* a year.

32,607. Do you mind saying upon what income?—I have the income here.

32,608. What is the proportion; that will do. It has been suggested that those figures are not of much value unless one knows what the proportion is?—I have not worked out the proportion.

32,609. Is it 20 per cent.?—It is my wish, as well as that of my clients, to give every detail in our power to the Commission.

32,610. Thank you. You say 350*l.* a year upon an annual income of what?—The total expenditure will be 3,150*l.*. The total income—I exclude mineral property, and I exclude house property—the total income in Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire would be 5,300*l.*

Professor Rhŷs.

32,611. Is that in one year?—That is the total rental.

32,612. Each year?—Each year.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,613. And the average outlay is about 350*l.*?—Yes.

32,614. That is 10 per cent.?—Roughly.

Mr. Grove.

32,615. 350*l.* on the whole of the 5,300*l.*?—That is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,616. What can you speak of as to the family succession in tenancy. Is it the custom that the tenancy goes down from father to son?—In the case of the majority of the tenants their families have held their farms for generations. The rule has been to select the nearest suitable relative; failing that another tenant's son has preference over any outside applicant. It is the exception, not the rule, to have outsiders on the estate at all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,617. Have you had occasion to give notice to quit to any tenant lately?—Not lately.

32,618. Within the last two or three years. I am thinking of Mr. Evans, of Posty. Is not that on Mr. Colby's estate?—Mr. Evans left of his own accord. If you will allow me, perhaps, I will explain who I found in that farm, and I will bring it down to the present day.

32,619. Is not that Mr. Colby's signature [handing a notice to the witness]?—I do not deny the notice, but I think it is only fair that I should be allowed to explain.

32,620. You shall explain presently. That is the notice, is it?—That is the notice to quit, but this notice was served with the object not of quitting the tenant. It has a little printed leaflet attached to it. It runs thus: "It has "been decided to rent all the farms and lands "on the above estate free of tithe, and in order "to arrive at an amicable arrangement with "regard to future rent it was necessary to serve "notices to quit." You will find that attached to the notice.

32,621. Is that also Mr. Colby's handwriting [handing another notice to the witness]?—It is.

32,622. That is a year later, I think?—Quite right.

32,623. What is the explanation of that notice to quit?—Nine years ago I found Mr. William Evans the tenant on this farm. Mr. William Evans took the farm of Bletherston; that is William Evans, the father.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

32,624. He entered, I think, on the 27th February 1858, did he not?—William Evans was there nine years ago. I do not know anything beyond that. Then he took Bletherston, and desired me to secure the tenancy of Posty for his son, J. M. Evans. I made the application, and the late Mr. Colby, who was then owner, agreed to the son having the farm. He held it for some years.

32,625. Was that under an agreement dated 20th August 1888?—Very likely.

32,626. Is that the agreement [handing same]?—That is the agreement. Before the tenancy was entered into Mr. Colby died, and his son succeeded to the property. Therefore the letting to him was strictly in the present Mr. Colby's name. Mr. J. M. Evans took the farm of Bletherston his father having purchased another holding, Bletherston being a much larger and a better holding than Posty. He desired to give up Posty, and the notice that I served upon him was a formal one, having had intimation that he wished to give it up. He suggested at the same time my letting the farm to his brother. His brother's application was submitted. He being a mere boy, single, Mr. Colby did not feel disposed to let him the farm. Therefore, we did not turn out Mr. J. M. Evans from Posty, but he went himself, the notice being a formal one.

32,627. I do not understand what you mean by a formal notice. It had a distinct legal effect, had it not; it is in the usual form?—But Mr. J. M. Evans had left the holding. He had taken Bletherston. He was in Bletherston at the time so he could not hold Bletherston and Posty.

32,628. Why not?—Well, he told me that one was as much as he could manage. He said he could not stock them both himself.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,629. A man who bought a farm for 13,000*l.*?—I mean the son; I am not dealing with the father.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,630. Let me see that I am perfectly clear about it. The father entered as far back as 1858 on the farm called Posty?—Yes, I think that was so.

32,631. I have the agreement here. I do not know whether you know the signatures?—That is going back 35 years. I have not seen that at all. I cannot give evidence about that.

32,632. The father was tenant from year to year down to 1858 from some time that you do not know?—He was there till my time.

32,633. Then did the father die or move to another farm?—He moved to another farm.

32,634. Then his son J. M. Evans enters under the agreement of 1858?—Exactly, but then J. M. Evans went away to the same place as the father did when he left Posty. Then we let the farm to a new tenant. I should not have given him notice if J. M. Evans had had any wish to remain at Posty. It was he himself gave me the intimation that he wished to give it up because he had taken Bletherston.

32,635. But he also wished his brother to become tenant, did he not, of Posty?—Oh, yes, naturally.

32,636. Is it not the fact that what you virtually did was this, that you enforced this provision 8 in the agreement—"Also will not "during the continuance of this demise, hire, "occupy, carry on, or be concerned in occupy-"ing or carrying on any other farm or lands "without the previous written consent of the "said landlord, his heirs or assigns, but shall "make the dwelling-house on the said farm his "usual place of residence?—I did not enforce that because J. M. Evans left of his own accord and he did not wish to keep on the two. I fail to see that I enforced it under the circumstances.

32,637. When did he tell you that he wished to leave the farm?—After he took Bletherston. It was after the sale.

32,638. Has he made any complaint since?—Mr. J. M. Evans.

32,639. Yes?—May I ask about what.

32,640. About being turned out?—No.

32,641. I am only anxious to get at the facts it is very likely there is nothing in the complaint, but I understood from something said by one of the witnesses at Haverfordwest that he had complained?—Oh, no, J. M. Evans I have always found very very nice and we have been always on friendly terms both after he left and before.

See 31,013–43

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,642. Are Posty and Bletherston very large farms?—Posty is 103 acres Bletherston, I suppose, would be more than double that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,643. You have never received any complaint from him, then, since he left the farm?—No. Of course he was particularly anxious that his brother should have the farm.

32,644. Was any compensation paid to him?—No, he never claimed any compensation from me. I am not quite sure whether he did or not. I am not quite clear about that; but the ingoing tenant paid him for some things—all the improvements belonging to him, I believe the manures and liming—the unexpended manures—were settled by valuers.

32,645. I understood from something said at Haverfordwest by one of the witnesses——?—I have nothing to conceal.

32,646. I am sure you have nothing to conceal. I was only asking a series of questions upon that case. That is all I wish to ask you, thank you.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,647. How long had Mr. William Evans been tenant of this farm, can you tell us?—I do not know. I cannot go back further than nine years. I found Mr. William Evans there.

32,648. I think Mr. Brynmor Jones read the date as 1858?—Of course I was only born about a year or two before that.

32,649. But I thought you being agent of the estate would have seen the agreement?—Neither Mr. Colby nor his father had occupied property at that time, so we have no books to refer to.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,650. The agreement I have handed to you, which is signed by you, David Thomas, is the original, is it not?—Yes, it is my agreement.

32,651. And there is a counterpart of it, I suppose?—Oh, yes, I have got it.

32,652. Do you stamp the counterpart?—I stamp the counterpart always.

32,653. It struck me, because none of the agreements before us are stamped, and I did not know whether it was an omission?—I always stamp the counterpart.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,654. Did Evans never complain that you were dealing hardly in turning him out of that place?—He could not.

32,655. He could not?—No, he could not do that.

32,656. Did Mr. Colby do all the buildings on that farm?—There was nothing done during my time. When I was appointed those buildings were in very good order.

32,657. But who put them in that order?—I could not say. I heard Mr. Evans say that he had put up some little things; but after he had left I found the buildings in a very deplorable state. It cost the landlord a good deal to put them in order for the new tenant.

32,658. He had done all the carriage for all the buildings that had been there, had he not?—It is a custom on the estate to do so, and the tenants I always find agreeably doing it.

32,659. All the carriage was done for a cow-house for 12 cows, and for a calves' house, and two pigstyes, hauling of timber from Blackpool, 7 miles; slate, 5 miles, stones, 1½ miles; cart-house and loft above?—Mr. Evans held other land besides Mr. Colby's, and I believe he put up some extra buildings to meet the requirements of that land.

32,660. On what farm?—On Posty, on Mr. Colby's; but he put up, I believe, more than was necessary to manage the amount of land that belonged to my principal.

32,661. That is very doubtful?—Of course I give that as my opinion.

32,662. At an estimate the value of that was considered to be 36*l.* Then the house was renewed in Evans' time, was it not?—I do not know. I believe there was an addition made to the house at some time. Of course that is evident by looking at it—one room extra built.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

32,663. To the amount of 126*l.*?—I do not know who paid for it.

32,664. Mr. Colby allowed 66*l.* for that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,665. Are you asking that as a question, or are you stating that?

Mr. Griffiths.

I am stating that.

The Witness: Would you kindly tell me which Mr. Colby did that?

Mr. Griffiths.

32,666. I should think it was Mr. Colby, senior?—We have had three to cover the last 50 years. We have the present Mr. John Vaughan Colby, his father, the Reverend Robert Colby, then the late Mr. John Colby. Of course I have only acted for the two former.

32,667. Are you aware that it was Evans who built the wall in front of the house?—I am not.

32,668. At a cost of 5*l.* Are you aware that it was he who built the large wooden shed, he being only allowed the slates for it?—Mr. Evans has not built anything to my knowledge except what he has told me himself. I cannot prove that he did anything at all. I wish to be accurate, but I really cannot go into that.

32,669. Also a coach-house and closet in garden, and extending the garden to twice its size, and improvements on the farmyard—all that at an expense of 36*l.*?—I have no means of verifying that.

32,670. Are you aware that he planted an orchard with 50 trees?—No.

32,671. You were never told any of these things?—Possibly I was told—I cannot say. I have no distinct recollection. It is quite possible though.

32,672. I should be very loth to leave a place where I had laid out so much money, without telling my agent what I had done?—If I had had these questions a few days ago, I might have been able to look up the thing. Of course I have a lot of work to do, and I cannot carry every little detail in my mind.

32,673. Did he ever ask your consent to remove those trees?—Now that you ask me the question, I am inclined to think he did.

32,674. Do you know if he did any draining on that farm?—I have no recollection of his even telling me that.

32,675. Was there any compensation whatever for draining four acres of moor at a cost of 20*l.*?—There was no draining done in my time.

32,676. The draining was done before. Did you happen to see any manure about—any compost—any mud that had been carted from the field?—Yes, I heard him say so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

32,677. Was there much done in that way?—What is usual on farms of that size. They consume their crops on the yard, and naturally manure would result from the consumption of the crops.

32,678. Are you aware that he carted about 100 loads of stones from Rosebush?—No, that, again, is before my time.

32,679. Are you aware that he built three calves' cots at rear of cowhouse?—I am not.

32,680. Are you aware that he built a stable?—No. Of course I may say at once that I am not aware that he has done anything in the way of improvements that I can prove, because he did nothing during my time—during the last nine years.

32,681. Then slates, stones, and lime, all the labour he did himself at a cost of 35*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,682. You are asking this as a question, I presume?

Mr. Griffiths.

Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Then let us have the answer, please.

The Witness: I am not aware of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,683. May I ask, upon this, how long it is that you can speak to of your own knowledge?—Nine years.

32,684. Could this have happened without your knowledge during those nine years?—Oh, no.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Probably the questions apply to something prior to that time; is that so, Mr. Griffiths?

Mr. Griffiths.

Oh, yes, I think so. Some undoubtedly do.

The Witness: Then without previous notice it would be very difficult for me to verify any of them.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,685–6. Could you give us the present rent of Posty?—Yes the present rent, which includes the tithe rentcharge, is 120*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,687. It appears to have been let at 100*l.* in 1858?—Nine years ago it was let at 105*l.* with 10*l.* tithes; that would make 115*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

32,688. I thought you said just now that you have no penalising clauses on this estate?—I did not say that.

32,689. Or that they were never carried out?—No, never.

32,690. Do you not think they are rather severe?—I do not think there is any danger of any such thing happening.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,691. This is the clause Mr. Griffiths is referring to: "And also paying the increased "rent of 20*l.* on the 29th day of September in "each year for every acre, or part of an acre, of "the fields mentioned in the schedule hereto, and "also of any ancient meadow or pasture ground "which the tenant shall plough or break up "without the previous consent in writing of the "landlord," and so on?—That is for the benefit of the future tenant. The breaking up of old pasture is a very serious matter indeed for the future tenant, but I have never had occasion to enforce it, although that agreement is in the hands of many hundreds of tenants.

32,692. There is a subsequent clause, clause 5, which says that the tenant is not to "plough, "break, or convert into tillage more than 20 "acres of the hereby demised land or plough, "break, or convert into tillage any pasture or "grass land after a notice to quit shall have "been given as aforesaid, nor will, during the last "year of this desmise, mow more than 30 acres "of lay and seed hay combined without first "obtaining a written consent from the land-"lord, and for every breach of these covenants "shall pay to the landlord, his heirs or assigns, "the rent or sum of 10*l.* per every acre"?—I do not think you will find that in my revised copy.

32,693. Yes, it is in the copy you handed in?—I beg your pardon. You are right.

32,694. It does not say 20 or 30 acres, but there is a penalty of 10*l.* for a breach of clause 5?—Exactly, yes. The 20 acres was the quantity of land: there was a blank and that was filled in by the tenant himself.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,695. What really was the reason you would not accept this young man as a tenant. The father had been about 40 years on the estate. What really was the reason?—He was too young, and unmarried.

32,696. But he had his father and brother living near him?—Well, he had his father.

32,697. They could assist him the same as the other son?—No doubt.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

32,698. Both those defects you mention could easily have been cured?—But we had such a large number of applications for this farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,699. But why should you have refused him. If a tenant's son applied for a farm, is it your custom to go and ask the whole neighbourhood to tender for that farm?—But we put in a far better man.

32,700. I very much doubt it. I know both of them very well—I very much doubt it—this was a man who could pay 13,000*l.* for a farm?—I think we put in one of the best farmers in Pembrokeshire.

32,701. Would you kindly tell me by whom he was recommended?—I could not tell you now, but I knew the man very well myself. I knew him personally. I knew the family.

32,702. Do you not think it is a great hardship to turn the farmer's son out of a farm where so much has been expended?—We did not turn him out. We simply declined his application, and elected another man who we considered would make a far better tenant.

32,703. You turned the man out who was on the farm—you gave him notice?—No, he turned himself out.

32,704. Did not he apply for the farm?—He applied for the farm.

32,705. Of course he did, and you gave preference to another, and turned him out and had another tenant?—I did not turn him out. I selected what I considered a more suitable tenant.

32,706. Is it a good custom to let farms by tender?—I do not think so. I disapprove of it. We did not let it at the highest tender. We let it at the lowest tender.

32,707. I did not say the highest tender?—The one we selected was the lowest tender.

32,708. But you have not given us the real reason why this young man was turned out of the farm. His father could have paid for the farm if he could not?—I do not doubt that.

32,709. Why did you not do the same thing as you did in the former case when Mr. William Evans took the farm; he had his father to sign the agreement along with him; why could not you have done the same thing along with him?—I did not wish it. There was sufficient security; the landlord was sufficiently protected.

32,710. It is a great hardship—it is considered in our district a great hardship?—I fail to see it myself.

32,711. I have just one other question. With regard to the preferential claim of the landlord, what is your custom generally there?—My custom.

32,712. Do you approve of the landlord having the preferential claim?—Yes, I have given evidence upon that. I do.

32,713. On what ground?—It enables the tenants to get more time to pay their rents. They are enabled to keep their stock until they meet with suitable fairs. I often find the tenant not turning up on the rent day, although it is three months after time, and then he says: "I "have got some fat beasts in the house; if I "must pay up the rent, I will take them to "market to-morrow, but if you will allow me "to have another fortnight or three weeks, I "shall get better prices; then they will be "prime." I always allow that.

32,714. But do not the tradesmen do the same thing if a farmer comes and asks for more time to pay?—I am speaking in the interests of the tenant farmers. I am not studying the tradesmen. The advantage to tenant farmers, I say, is that the preferential claim should be continued.

32,715. You have lately had one of your tenants in the Bankruptcy Court, have you not?—That is so; but the cause of bankruptcy was not connected with agriculture. He traded very largely in butter, cheese, and seeds, and he contracted a loss, I believe, of something like 1,100*l.* in Glamorganshire some years ago. That was the cause of insolvency.

32,716. Would you kindly give the Commission the amount of his liabilities?—I do not know what they were.

32,717. I think you were at the Court?—I was, but I do not remember. Of course I wish to be accurate.

32,718. I am not sure myself, but I think it was something like 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.*?—Possibly.

32,719. There was a writ issued against him, was there not?—Yes, there was.

32,720. By an outsider, not by the landlord?—No.

32,721. And a sale was advertised?—That is so.

32,722. But it did not take place?—This is so. The sheriff was in possession.

32,723. Was he in possession on behalf of the landlord?—No; Ward, of Bristol.

32,724. But the sale was stopped by you, was it not?—The sale was stopped, because I had given notice of non-payment of rent to the sheriff.

32,725. With regard to the rent, how much was he in arrears?—One year and a half: one year was payable, but the half was not payable until the following January.

32,726. But do you not think it makes to the prejudice of the rest of the creditors that you should allow him to go on in that way?—I could not very well help myself. Possibly I was a bit too lenient. He begged very hard. He was a respectable man. I did not know he was so deeply involved. He assured me that the landlord would have every penny if I allowed him time. In fact he was promising every month. He used to make special journeys to urge me not to take proceedings against him, and I knew Mr. Colby would be very reluctant to unduly press him, or put in any distress unless he was compelled to.

32,727. You cloaked him by leaving the stock upon the farm to the prejudice of the rest of the creditors?—I never interfered with the stock at all.

32,728. Did you not sell the stock?—Yes, but I did not protect the stock, or in any way ask him to keep the stock on the land, or anything of that kind.

32,729. Did you get all the money that was due?—I have had it, but there is a question I believe pending, as you are probably aware.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

32,730. You got all that the law allowed you, at any rate?—Yes.

32,731. How much remained after?—Above paying the landlord.

32,732. Yes—I mean for the rest of the creditors to the extent of the 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.*?—Something like 20*l.*, I believe.

32,733. Would that be sufficient to bring the case through the Bankruptcy Court?—He did not file his own petition so he had nothing to pay; I believe a creditor filed his petition for him. He did not seek the protection of the Court, as far as I understand.

32,734. It was no use, was it?—No, not much use.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,735. Are the farmers on the estates with which you are connected able to pay the rents—they are not in arrear?—The arrears are very trifling indeed. They would not be a quarter per cent. they are very trifling. On most of the estates there are no arrears at all.

32,736. What voice have you in the determination of the abatements made on the different estates?—I advise my clients as to the amount of the abatement to be given. I might say this, that during the last nine years I have not had a single request from a tenant on any estate for abatements. We have always spontaneously given it, and named the amount, and it has always been most acceptable. In fact on some estates they have sent in a kind of testimonial or memorial to show their appreciation of the kindness and the liberal allowance that has been given them. We generally give them as much previous notice as we can.

32,737. Your advice is generally acted on by your client?—Always.

32,738. Do you make the abatement on any well-defined principle?—I try to make it as liberal as possible.

32,739. According to the price of produce and stock?—Exactly—having regard to that at all events. I do not work it on a scale or on a principle.

32,740. But you consider that it is adequate for the necessities of the case?—Well, I do not think it meets a year like the last one, but it goes a long way towards keeping the tenants up. It cheers them up, and helps them to make that little which possibly they may be short in their rents.

32,741. You say that if a Land Court was established, the tenant when he left the farm would be able to sell his interest in the holding, and that the succeeding tenant practically would have to pay a competition rent; but that would not follow of necessity, would it?—Well, it would give them that opportunity.

32,742. No, it depends entirely upon legislation. Are you acquainted with the Crofters' Act in Scotland?—I am not.

32,743. Under that Act a tenant is not able to sell his interest in the holding; he is able to bequeath his interest to the nearest relative; it does not follow of necessity that he is able to sell his interest in the holding?—But I fail to see how legislation could prevent it being done.

32,744. But it has been done?—As you are aware, there many ways of bequeathing—bequeathing for a consideration, and many ways of selling—many ways of evading the Act. I fail to see that a sitting tenant would be prevented from selling his tenancy to the highest bidder. That would cripple the future tenant, undoubtedly.

32,745. If a tenant bequeaths his holding to his nearest relative, I should hardly think that he would sell his interest at a competition value to the nearest relative. I hardly think that would be a likely thing to do?—Well, there are two ways of looking at that. A man may not have any relatives, or if he has any relatives, I think he would treat himself first, rather than consider his relatives.

32,746. This is the clause: "A crofter may "by will or other testamentary writing bequeath "his right to his holding to one person being a "member of the same family, that is to say "his wife, or any person, who, failing nearer "heirs, would succeed to him in case of in-"testacy, herein-after called the legatee, subject "to the following provisions: (a.) The legatee "shall intimate the testamentary bequest to the "landlord or his known agent within 21 days "after the death of the crofter unless he is "prevented by some unavoidable cause from "making intimation within that time, and in "that event he shall make intimation as soon as "possible thereafter." So that I hardly think what you fear would be likely to happen?—Is that compulsory?

32,747. Yes, it is compulsory?—I mean that clause; is he compelled to bequeath it when he wants to dispose of his holding?

32,748. No. It is not compulsory on him to to bequeath it. He can give it up without bequeathing it?—Or to anybody else?

32,749. Or to anybody else?—I think you would find that tenants would consider themselves first.

32,750. I do not see how under this clause he has the power of selling his interest in his holding?—Human nature is such——

32,751. I think the law has been made so stringent as to prevent human nature having its own way?—I believe such are the results in Ireland.

32,752. Oh, yes, I know. Free sale operates in Ireland, under the Irish Act, I know that?—And that, of course, cripples the future tenant, and that is the person who I am particularly anxious should not be crippled.

32,753. I think that is one of the weak spots in the Irish Act?—Certainly, so I hope it will remain there, and not come nearer.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,754. But, perhaps, the Crofters' Act might do something.

Mr. Grove.

32,755. Have you made any permanent reductions in connexion with these estates?—A few, but limited.

32,756. When you make abatements, is notice given to the tenants that such abatements will be made?—Yes, we give the notice as soon as we have determined what to give them.

32,757. May I ask how long that is before the rent day; is it just about the rent day?—Sometimes it would be three months, sometimes it would be 12 months. We determined on Mr. Colby's estate for the whole year, and gave an intimation at once. That was, before the payment of the first half year, they knew what was to come in the second. On another estate, some years ago, we determined it for three years, increasing the abatement for the three years, that is each year.

32,758. Is there sufficient labour upon the land, do you think, or would it carry profitably more labour than could be got now?—I think it could carry more.

32,759. Do you think it is shortness of cottages in any sense that brings that about, or do you think there are sufficient cottages?—No, it is the tendency of labourers going into the colliery districts and into the towns.

32,760. But how are the cottages. Are the farms well provided with cottages?—I think they have sufficient number, but they might be of a better class.

32,761. Is the tendency to improve cottages on the estates that you manage?—That is the tendency, especially when new ones are built on modern architecture.

32,762. You speak of the railway rates being excessive and unfair. You mean, I suppose, local railway charges as well as the preferential railway rates to foreign produce, do you?—Yes, I say that foreign produce should not be carried over British railways at a lower cost than would be charged the Britisher.

32,763. That is a question of preferential rates, but what about the local rates?—Cattle and horses from this district are generally taken to the midland counties. The rates are very high. There is a monopoly, and we are at the mercy of the railway company. The amount that is in excess, of course, is taken out of the price paid for the produce or for the animals, and therefore the producer is the person who suffers the loss.

32,764. But you do not know of any case where the railway companies charge more than they are legally entitled to, I suppose, under the recent legislation?—I could not give you a case.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,765. There are three questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Can you give me an idea how much in Pembrokeshire is owned by or let to the Evans family"?—I could not say.

32,766. "May I take it that your view is that "in making an agreement with a tenant, your "business is to see to the interests of landlord

" and tenant, and that outsiders may take care " of themselves "?—Yes, that is so.

32,767. " Do not other creditors know the " existence of the preferential claim quite well, " and therefore give credit at their own risk "? —Perfectly well. The landlord gets naturally something like 2½ per cent., whereas the trade creditor on account of the risk, gets from 15 to 25 and 30 per cent.

Mr. Griffiths.

32,768. I have one other question to ask. Did you not have those claims before you, before you sent the tenant away—before he left?—Do you mean at Posty?

32,769. Yes?—I had a claim; I had a paper containing a claim.

32,770. I thought you said just now that you knew nothing about them?—Of course you give them specifically and I cannot say. I remember having a claim, but its nature at the present moment I cannot say. The whole matter was referred to the ingoing tenant.

32,771. But the claim was not on the ingoing tenant, the claim was upon you?—Of course there was nothing done in my time and I did not admit the claim.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Reverend PETER PHELPS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

31,823. 32,772. You wish to give some rebutting evidence I believe upon what was said yesterday. Will you give it as shortly as possible, confining yourself to the point that you desire to clear up?—Yes. John Morgan, a brother-in-law of a tenant of mine called Carey George, stated I believe at Letterston yesterday, that I gave him notice to leave, because he refused to sign a petition against the Suspensory Bill. That is in the " Western Mail," and that brought me here. I wish to deny that. I let him the farm, about seven years ago on a lease of 21 years. He went in before he signed the lease, and after he went in he refused to sign it.

32,773. He refused to sign what?—To sign the lease for 21 years. Then, after he was there for 12 months I saw he was not a tidy person, and I thought to bring him to terms, I would give him notice to leave. After I gave him notice to leave he began to plough up some of the meadows. Rather than go to law I agreed on certain terms for him to continue as yearly tenant. He did so, and he was there for four years. He was so bad a tenant that for two years I thought of giving him notice; I have one witness here—and I could bring half-a-dozen neighbours—to say that I intended him to leave last Michaelmas twelvemonth; but they asked me to give him another chance to improve. After I gave him new gates he would not put them up; when he left all the slops were open.

32,774. Do I understand you gave him some new gates?—Yes, I gave him new gates, and he would not even take the trouble to hang them up.

32,775. Your reason for giving him notice was not because he declined to sign a petition against the Suspensory Bill, but because he declined to sign the lease?—No: I beg pardon. He signed an agreement afterwards as a yearly tenant.

32,776. Then it was because he was a bad farmer?—He was a bad farmer—a pig of a farmer. His father-in-law used to supply stones for the parish, and he used to spend the best part of his time breaking stones to sell, instead of working on the farm. I have a witness here and I could have brought half-a-dozen to corroborate what I say. I would have made him go last Michaelmas twelvemonth if a neighbour of mine had not asked me to give him another chance for another year.

32,777. Is there any other point that you wish to state to the Commission?—No.

Mr. Grove.

32,778. Was there a petition for or against the Suspensory Bill about that time?—Yes, there was.

32,779. Do you know whether he was asked to sign it?—I believe he was asked.

32,780. And he refused?—I was told he did refuse.

32,781. Are you the rector or the vicar of the parish?—I am vicar of the parish.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,782. You deny that it had anything to do with the notice to quit?—Nothing whatever. I should like you to call my witness——

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,783. Oh, no?—He would corroborate what I say, and I could have brought half-a-dozen.

32,784. There is no necessity for it. You state as a matter of fact, that you have others who can substantiate what you say?—Yes, and one is present in Court now.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. E. VINCENT recalled and further examined.

Witness.

I hand in a statement of abatements, reductions, and observations as to history of rents in Pembrokeshire, so far as they are known to me. The source of them I think is already known to the Commission. I have it here for the most part, but some of it is contained in letters, which can be produced if the Commission desires.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,785. You will give us further details if necessary?—Any details you like.

32,786. Have you summarised these?—Do you mean for the whole of Wales?

32,787. Yes?—No. What I propose to do about that is this. I ought to have explained this before. The statement I now hand in is as to Pembrokeshire. It will be found when the whole lot of my tables of abatements have been handed in, that they all come up to something like March 1893, because I thought it would be better to keep them all to the same date. Then, towards the end of the labours of the Commission, I propose to bring the whole lot of them up to date—at one date.

32,788. The question I asked was, whether you had summarised them?—No, I have not codified the whole lot, but I will if the Commission desire.

[The witness handed in the following statement.]

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Rev. Canon Allen, Porthkerry, Barry	Blackalden (in Pembroke and Carmarthen, 750 acres).	I have made abatements from 4 to 7½ per cent. in bad years.	No. All are to the best of my knowledge and belief reasonably low.	——
George Baugh Allen, Albert Terrace, Regent's Park.	Cilrhiw (580 acres)	March 25th 1880, 5 per cent.; September 29th 1885, 15 per cent.; March 25th 1886, 15 per cent.; September 29th 1886, 15 per cent.; March 25th 1887, 10 per cent; September 29th 1887, 10 per cent.; March 25th 1888, 10 per cent.; September 29th 1888, 10 per cent.; March 25th 1889, 10 per cent.; September 29th 1891, 15 per cent.; March 25th 1892, 15 per cent.; September 29th 1892, 20 per cent.	I have not since 1877 permanently reduced any rents.	There has been no increase in rent for 50 years, with the exception of a slight increase from 223*l.* to 275*l.* on the expiration of a 30 years' lease following on a 20 years' lease.
Hy. George Allen, Q.C., Paskeston, Pembroke.	Paskeston (440 acres)	Abatements have been granted on half-yearly rents (not uniform) ranging from 10 to 20 per cent. I think nearer the latter amount.	Permanent reductions, since I bought the property at the close of 1879, have been made, which reduced the rental from 530*l.* to 426*l.*	——
James Bevan Bowen, Llwyngwair.	Llwyngwair. (In Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen, 3,303 acres.)	In 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888, I returned 10 per cent. to tenants. In 1891, 5 per cent., and in 1892, 10 per cent.	In 1885 I reduced 15 per cent. on two large farms permanently, and again in 1890 on another farm because the tenants depended so much on corn, the lands being dry and less adapted for permanent pasture than most of the land in the Pembrokeshire district.	I came into the estate in 1856 (37 years ago), and am not aware of any increase of rent during the preceding 12 years. There has been no increase since.
Thomas Harman Brenchley, Glaneirw, Cardigan.	Farms in the parish of Dogmaels.	From July 1886 to Jan. 1888 I gave 7½ per cent.; in 1889, 5 per cent.; Jan. 1893, 5 per cent.	In 1880 I reduced rent of principal farm 30*l.* per annum from 270*l.* to 240*l.*	——
Mrs. Brigstocke, Blaenpant, Boncath.	Blaenpant. (In Pembrokeshire and Cardiganshire, 4,900 acres.)	In 1879, 10 per cent. from the Michaelmas rents; in 1881, 10 per cent. from the Michaelmas rents; and from 1885 to the present time, 10 per cent. from every half year's rent.	I have permanently reduced the rents of three farms, one to the extent of 50*l.* a year; another 15*l.*, and another 5*l.*	The estate has never been re-valued as a whole. There have been some increases of rent on change of tenancy.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Mrs. Brook, The Croft, Tenby.	Ivy Tower, (Between 900 and 1,000 acres,)	In 1886, 1887, and 1888, 10 per cent.; 1889, 5 per cent.; 1892, 10 per cent. —in a few cases, 5 per cent.	I have not permanently reduced any rents since 1877.	Part of the estate has been valued within the last 50 years, and is now let on that valuation.
Earl of Cawdor, Stackpole Court, Pembroke.	Stackpole, Wiston, Walton and Burton. (In Pembroke, Carmarthen, and Cardigan, 70,000 acres.)	For three years from Lady Day, 1885, to Lady Day, 1886, allowances of 15 per cent. were made to the farm tenants. For one year, from Lady Day, 1891, the tithes have been allowed being about 7½ per cent. For the present year, from Lady Day, 1892, the tithes are again allowed and an additional 10 per cent. out of the rents.	No permanent reduction of rents of any consequence up to the present time. Now a few trifling reductions are proposed.	All the estates were valued about 30 years back; and the rents were increased by re-lettings, about 5,000 a year.
Major J. V. Colby, Rhosygilwen, Boncath.	Ffynone. (In Pembroke and Carmarthen, about 10,000 acres.)	In 1886, 10 per cent. was allowed; in 1887, 10 per cent.; first half year of 1888, 10 per cent., second half year of 1888, 5 per cent.; last half year of 1891, 10 per cent.; last half year of 1892, 10 per cent.	Reductions have been made in a few cases where farms were purchased with high rentals. The rental of the original estate has not been altered for several generations.	In the last 50 years there has been no re-valuation; nor have rents been raised.
Baron de Rutzen, Slebech Park, Haverfordwest.	Slebech. (5,000 acres.)	I have returned 10 per cent. for the last two half years.	I only succeeded to the estate about three years ago, and have only permanently reduced the rent of one farm since.	The estate has not been re-valued during the last 50 years, nor have rents been raised in the period.
Erasmus Gower, Castle Malgwyn, Boncath.	Clynderwen, Glandovan, Castle Malgwyn. (In Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire, 2,360 acres.)	1890, Lady Day, 5 per cent.; 1891, Lady Day, 5 per cent., Michaelmas, 5 per cent.; 1892, Lady Day, 10 per cent., Michaelmas, 5 per cent.	I succeeded in 1884, and have made reductions of 6 per cent. on two farms.	Rents have not been raised to my knowledge during the last 25 years, except on one farm held on a 21 years' lease expired in 1885. In this case the tenant sublet about half the farm for 1*l.* less than the total rent Most of the sub-tenants have continued on their holdings, and the remainder of the land is let as a separate farm.
Major Parry Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, Allt-Lwyd, Aberystwith.	Allt-Lwyd and Mabws. (In Cardiganshire and Pembrokeshire, 3,500 acres.)	In some cases 5 per cent.	All rents have been permanently reduced. Some instances: — Farm, 140*l.* per annum for 50 years, reduced to 90*l.* present rent; farm, 180*l.* per annum for 50 years, reduced to 130*l.* present rent.; farm, 290*l.* per annum for 40 years, reduced to 230*l.* present rent; and other farms have been reduced 10*l.* and 5*l.* per annum. These farms are upon the Allt-Lwyd estate corn land and were let by my father about 45 years since. No rents have been raised by me.	The Allt-Lwyd estate was re-valued five years since, the old rents were reduced 15 per cent.
Edward Laws, Tenby.	(800 acres) - -	I have granted abatements of 10 per cent in 1891, and 15 per cent. in 1892.	—	—
Henry Leach, Corston, Near Pembroke.	Corston. (1,800 acres.)	Abatements have been made in a few cases only.	Since 1877 rents have been reduced, though only in a few cases, about 10 per cent.	The rents, except in a very few cases of new lettings have not been altered for 50 years, possibly much longer. The estate has never to my knowledge been re-valued for rental, as a whole, within the last 50 years. I have, at different times, had valuations made for my own information, but not with a view of altering rents. The valuations in all cases exceed the rentals, some as much as 20 per cent.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Mrs. Lewis, Clynfiew, Boncath.	Clynfiew. (In Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen, 4,870 acres.)	Abatements have twice been granted. 10 per cent. was given on the rents payable Michaelmas, 1885, and Michaelmas, 1892. Reductions have frequently been made at other times during this interval in individual cases.	A slight reduction has been made in the case of two farms, 5*l.* a year each.	The estate has not been revalued for purposes of rental, but in 1888 a competent local valuer went over the whole property for the purpose of inspecting the state of repair and cultivation; of rearranging boundaries, and re-adjusting values where necessary. The estate was at that time very unequally let, and the valuer advised a reduction in some cases and an increase in others. His recommendations were followed, but the rents were not raised to the figures mentioned by him in any one case, and in many cases no change was made at all. The nett result of the valuation was a slight increase of the estate rental.
Bishop of Llandaff	Henllan Grove. (In Pembroke and Carmarthen, 3,500 acres.)	In 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1893, I returned 10 per cent. I succeeded to the properties in the year 1886.	Since 1886 I have made reductions in eight instances on the Henllan estate, amounting to the annual sum of 115*l.* On the Grove estate reductions have been made in six instances amounting to the annual sum of 120*l.*	The estate has not been revalued for the last 50 years as far as I am aware. I have not raised the rent in any single instance since I became possessed of the estates.
Thos. Edward Lloyd, Coedmore, near Cardigan.	Coedmore and Trewern. (In Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Pembroke, 4,500 acres.)	For the Coedmore estate 5 per cent, was allowed at Lady Day, 1886, Michaelmas, 1886; Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1887; Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1888, and Lady Day, 1889; and for Michaelmas, 1892, 10 per cent. (except where there were leases). For the Trewern estate, 10 per cent. allowed at Michaelmas, 1865, and Lady Day, 1886; the same at Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1887; the same at Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1888; 5 per cent. was allowed at Lady Day, 1889, and 10 per cent. at Michaelmas, 1892.	Since 1887 rents have not been reduced very materially.	The Trewern estate was revalued in the year 1864, for the purpose of a partition between my late mother and Mr. Longcroft of Llanina, Cardiganshire, and such valuation has not been materially altered since that period, except in cases where old leases have fallen in.
Frederick Lewis Lloyd Phillips, Pent y Park, Haverfordwest.	Pent y Park. (2,235 acres.)	Abatements were made in 1887 and 1888 of 5 per cent., and in 1892 of 10 per cent.	No reductions have been made.	The estate has not been re-valued, nor have rents been raised during the last 50 years.
Henry Mathias, 13, Hill Street, Haverfordwest.	Cornel Bach, Middle Hook, Pontsharn meadow, &c., Scarrow Scant. (145 acres.)	I have made no abatement; nothing has been asked except 10 tons of lime, which I gave the tenant of a farm three or four years after I purchased it.	When I purchased the Scarrow Scant fields, they were (together with the cottage thereon) let at 36*l.* a year, and I continued to receive that rent down to Michaelmas, 1890, when the tenant gave up the fields, having taken a larger extent of land in the county of Pembroke. From Michaelmas, 1890, the rent has been reduced to 29*l.*, the actual reduction being 7*l.* The tithe rent-charge, about 2*l.*, is paid by myself.	The estate has not to my knowledge been revalued.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
R. W. B. Mirehouse, Angle, Pembroke.	Angle. (3,000 acres)	In 1886, 1887, and 1888, I allowed 15 per cent. abatement; in 1889, 10 per cent. abatement; in 1890, 5 per cent. abatement; in 1892, 10 per cent. abatement; in 1893, 15 per cent. abatement.	——	The estate was re-valued about 1879. There has been a moderate increase of rent in a few cases.
Rev. Thos. Gwynne Mortimer, The Court, Llanllawer, Fishguard.	The Court, Llanllawer. (800 acres.)	No abatements in money, but I have made many improvements such as buildings, &c., and have given manure in some cases. This year I give manure (amounting to about 8*l.* per cent.) to all. My rents are unusually low.	I have not permanently reduced any of my rents. I have intimated that if any of the occupiers would like a fresh valuation I should be willing.	The estate has not been re-valued.
G. L. Owen and Mrs. Owen, Withybush. Haverfordwest.	Kingston, Parish of St. Michael. (1,900 acres.)	I have granted abatements of 10 per cent in 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1892.	I have not reduced any rents.	The rents were arranged on the purchase of the estate in 1857 by the father of the present owners. They have not been altered since.
Judge Owen, Ty Gwyn, Abergavenny.	Withybush, Poyston, Honeybrook Farm. (1,541 acres.)	Abatements have been given in the years 1886, 1887, and 1888, of 10 per cent.; in 1890, Lady Day rents, 10 per cent.; Michaelmas rents, 15 per cent.	I have reduced some rents. The deductions amount to about 133*l.* a year.	This property has been in the possession of my family for more than 50 years. During that time the rents have not been raised, and in some cases are 20 per cent. lower at present than they have been, although large sums of money have been spent on new buildings and repairs.
Edward Perkins, Penisgwarne, Fishguard.	In Pembrokeshire. (800 acres.)	Gave an abatement of 10 per cent. all round last half year's audit.	Have reduced some of the highest rented land by 10 per cent.	Rents have certainly been raised during the last 50 years; in some cases doubled, and even then the tenants have saved enough to buy their farms.
Edward Picton Phillips, Haverfordwest.	Kilbarth and Southlays. (432 acres.)	I have never been asked to grant abatements.	I have not permanently reduced my rents.	About 10 years ago the estate was re-valued. In the opinion of the valuer I should have been justified in raising the value per acre 15*s.*, instead of the present value, 10*s.* 6*d.* I declined to do so; the rents therefore remain the same as during the last 50 years.
Mrs. Lort Phillips and John Fredk. Lort Phillips, Lawrenny Park, Pembroke.	Lawrenny, Nash and Llanstadwell (6,500 acres).	In 1885 the rents were reduced to what they were prior to 1854, date of the Russian War, considered to be the worst period in agriculture.	In some few cases since 1887 rents have been permanently reduced.	The estate was re-valued in 1876, resulting in an increase of about 600*l.* per annum.
Miss Protheroe, Norton, Tenby.	Loveston. (455 acres.)	I granted abatements in 1885, 1886, and 1887, and again in 1891, 1892, and 1893, having returned a percentage of 15 per cent.	Previous to 1888 I reduced the rents of two of my tenants—one from 191*l.* to 175*l.*, and another from 85*l.* to 65*l.*	My property in 1838, let for 354*l.* per annum; in 1892 it was let for 310*l.* per annum, from which it will be seen that my rents are less now than they were in 1838, and in addition to this I have made considerable allowances, and laid out large sums in repairs.
Wm. H. Richards, Croft House, Tenby.	Croft House. (650 acres.)	During the depressed years I have allowed certain of of my tenants on an average 10 per cent.	I have not since 1887 made any permanent reductions, the greater portion having been held on lease.	——

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
John Reynolds, Triglemais, Croescoch, Letterston.	Treglemais. (350 acres.)	—	I have reduced rent from 60*l.* to 50*l.*	—
Edward Schaw-Protheroe. Dol-Wilym.	Dol-Wilym and Kilhernin. (In Carmarthenshire and Pembroke, 1,600 acres.)	Abatements have been made in bad years, 1882, 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888, to about 5 or 6 per cent. In 1892 the tithe-rent charge was remitted on a part of the estate for the year, and on the remainder for the half year.	In 1882 I reduced the rent of the largest farm 10 per cent., having granted a lease of 21 years not long before.	The history of this small property is shortly this:—In my grandfather's time farms were held on leases of three lives, and these fell in in my mother's time, who succeeded in 1841, and the farms wore then re-valued. I succeeded in 1872. The only lease of lives fell in soon after, and that farm was then re-valued. I have since reduced it by 10 per cent.
A. P. Saunders-Davies, Pentre, Boncath.	Pentre. (In Pembroke, Cardigan and Carmarthen, 6,700 acres.)	No abatements.	In one case the rent of a farm was reduced from 90*l.* to 80*l.*	The Pentre Old estate was re-valued about 30 years ago. Some of the farms were increased in rental and some reduced. The Pentre Cilwindeg estate was bought in 1884, and the rents have remained the same with the addition of the tithe.
Colonel Saurin, Orielton, Pembroke.	Orielton (3,582 acres)	1887, 10 per cent. to yearly tenants; 5 per cent. to leaseholders. 1888, 7½ per cent. to yearly tenants; 5 per cent. to leaseholders. 1892 (on half year's rent due Michaelmas), 15 per cent. to yearly tenants and leaseholders.	The permanent reduction since 1887 on certain farms to about 165*l.*	The estate has not been re-valued, neither have rents been raised within the last 36 years, when it came into possession of my family.
Wm. Stancomb, Blount's Court, Potterne, Devizes.	1,500 acres	I have often granted abatements on occasion of bad seasons and other circstances previous to 1886 (from that time a permanent reduction) and intend granting a further abatement owing to the increased depression. On my Southwood property I made an abatement from 1885 to 1892 of 708*l.* 15*s.*; from 1887 to 1892 of 389*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* On my Folkestone and other property I made an abatement from 1869 to 1892 of 353*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*; from 1877 to 1892 of 282*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*	I permanently reduced my rents 20 per cent. from 1886.	No rents have been raised since I have had possession from 1854.
Hon. R. C. and Hon. Mrs. Trollope, Crowcombe Court, Taunton.	Carew	I have granted abatements of 10 per cent. from 1884 to 1889, and again 10 per cent. from 1892.	—	No rents have been raised that I know of, except in the cases of leases on lives falling in, where, instead of paying a fine, the land has been let at a fair rent, on a yearly tenancy.

Reverend J. W. MAURICE called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Sec 32,822. 32,789. I have a statement of yours here. Would you mind reading it to the Commission?—"I am a Baptist Minister and I live at Dinas "Cross, Pembroke. A gentleman named Mr. "James Howells, who was, until September

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

"last, a farmer, living at a place called Tre-"wrach, in the parish of Fishguard, but who "has been compelled to give up farming, and "is now a miller, and myself, as a minister of "the Gospel, appear before your Commission

" to give evidence to the following effect: Mr. " Howells will say that his family lived at the " above place for 130 years."

32,790. Is Mr. Howells here?—Yes.

32,791. Is he to be a witness?—I sent his name as a witness, but I do not find that his name is on the list.

32,792. You sent his name in as a witness?—I sent it for him.

32,793. Did he send it himself?—Yes, at least, he authorised me to send it in for him.

32,794. Will you go on with your reading?—Mr. Howells is here if you wish to call him. " Twenty five years ago his father died leaving " the farm to his mother and himself, the rent " being 108*l.* In addition to what they could " make out of the place, they had to spend " the sum of 22*l.* per annum, as rent received " from a little property of their own, to " help to pay the rent from Trewrach." So in the 25 years that would amount to 550*l.* from outside to pay the rent of his farm. " Also Mr. Howells did not receive any wages " though he worked all the time as a servant. " In the summer of 1892 the mother died, and " Mr. Howells informed his landlord of the " event. On the morning of the funeral, he " received a letter sympathising with him very " much, and giving him a hint that as his " mother was dead, probably, he would not like " to live in the place in the future." The letter is here. I will put it in, if you desire it. " In a few days Mr. Howells saw him and tried " to rent the place from him, when he found the " rent was to be 120*l.* per annum. After some " correspondence and many interviews he was " offered the place for 120*l.* One of the reasons " for increasing the rent being that as the aged " mother was dead, the tenant could pay him " as landlord the amount it cost to maintain her " in addition." The cost of the mother's maintenance, according to the landlord, was to be added to the rent. " In September 1892 Mr. " Howells received from his landlord a notice " to quit, and to quit he had, without receiving " a penny of compensation for improvements, " fixtures, or anything else. Mr. Howells can " prove the above and produce letters from his " landlord to corroborate his words. I can " corroborate Mr. Howells in the statements " concerning paying his own money to help the " farm for I went through the accounts with " him. I can also throw some light on sacrifices " borne by people for the sake of their religion " and politics." I can prove that people are turned away from their farms—this is a case in point—solely because of their political bias.

32,795. You have not yet stated that?—It is a thing that Mr. Howells and myself can prove without going further back than this case:—" Also of how poor farmers have to avail themselves of the service of their children without " paying them anything at all before they can " pay their rent, and give a general account of " the relation of landlords and tenants generally " for the last 30 years, and believe I can add an interesting chapter to an already very interesting " inquiry."

32,796. Is Mr. Howells here?—Yes.

32,797. You speak of this as hearsay, at second-hand. He could speak of it at first hand?—Well, we are neighbours; and I have gone carefully through the case with him from beginning to end.

32,798. When was this?—The notice was given in September 1892; and Mr. Howells left the farm in September 1893.

32,799. Who is the landlord?—The Reverend D. Parry Davis; he lives in Fishguard, and is rector of the parish of Llanychaer, and another parish.

32,800. Is it private property or glebe?—Private property; I could give you, gentlemen, a very interesting account of the state of farmers and farming, if you will kindly listen.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,801. There is a question I should like to ask you. How recently did the cases to which you refer where religion and politics were mixed up occur?—Within the last two years.

32,802. Upon what ground do you give the evidence—your own personal knowledge?—No; of course upon Mr. Howells and a great many other neighbours' testimony.

32,803. But, of course, you must be aware that it is a very difficult thing to describe the motive of a landlord, and it requires very clear evidence?—But Mr. Howells is here, gentlemen, to say what passed between him and his landlord; and within the last fortnight there is another gentleman here who carried a message from the landlord to Mr. Howells, who was his tenant, to the effect that if he appeared before the Commission and gave evidence unless he said what would be palatable to the landlord he would appeal to Lord Carrington for power to prosecute—a case of downright intimidation; and it has had a very bad effect upon farmers; it has kept many away. The gentleman who carried the message from the landlord to the tenant is present in court. See 32,840.

Mr. Grove.

32,804. Generally speaking, do you consider that witnesses have been reluctant to come forward before this Commission?—Yes.

32,805. Upon what ground do you think they are reluctant?—First of all they are afraid of their landlord; secondly, they have not much faith, I am sorry to say, in the Commission.

32,806. We will not discuss the Commission; we will leave that to work out in the future; but you think that there is a fear of offending their landlords by coming to give evidence?—Yes.

32,807. You state that of your own knowledge; do you?—Yes; I have spoken to hundreds of them during the last three months.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,808. There are several questions handed in by Mr. Stephen: "For how long had Howells held his farm at 108*l.*?" I think upon that you said it was his mother who held it?—The mother held it from 1866.

32,809. At the same rent?—From 1866 to 1892 at 108*l.*

32,810. "What improvements had been done on Howells' farm?"—By the landlord or by the tenant, do you mean?

32,811. The next question is, "By whom were they done?" So I suppose he means both?—The building was done by the landlord, but all other improvements by the tenant from the year 1764 to the year 1892.

32,812. "Would you name any tenants who have been evicted for their politics or religion?" —The first was the Rev. Mr. George, an eminent Baptist minister in this county.

32,813. How long ago was that?—I believe it was after the contest of 1860. Mr. Llewellyn, of Tredefaid, another farmer in another part of the county here, was evicted in 1872 in consequence of a part he took in a contest at Cardigan. Although it was not exactly a political contest, these town council contests and nearly all contests are carried on on political lines.

32,814. Is the Ballot Act a protection now against such political evictions?—Yes, I believe it is, but then it was not.

32,815. It was not in existence in those days?—Quite so.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,816. Are there any cases since the Ballot Act?—There is Mr. Howells' case. Mr. Howells is here to corroborate me. His landlord and another gentleman, who was a brother-in-law of the landlord, visited Mr. Howells on the 9th July 1886, and asked him to keep away from Fishguard on the polling day, which was the 12th, though Mr. Howells never had a vote at Trewrach on the holding; he had his vote on his own private property, on his own real property, where he lives now. He refused to do so, and he was told by the two that if he would go to Fishguard he would suffer for it. In the contest of 1892 his landlord went to him and told him that he would have to suffer for his folly in singing and carrying people down to the poll in Fishguard. That was in August, and in September the notice was served.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,817. There is another question by Mr. Stephen, "Have you given the Rev. Mr. Davis "notice that you were coming here?"—Yes, I have.

Mr. Grove.

32,818. Is he here to-day?—I have not seen him.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,819. "With regard to the rent that you "have spoken of, was the payment of the tithe "included in the new rent"?—I believe it was; yes, it is distinctly said in one of the letters. "The future rent of Trewrach is to be 120*l.* per "annum, the landlord to pay tithes. You were "expected to call last Thursday, but you failed "to do so, and now nothing will make me "change my mind."

Mr. Grove.

32,820. Do you know what the tithe amounted to on that farm?—Of late years I believe it amounted to, say, 6*l.*, or something about 6*l.*

32,821. Then that is an advance of 6*l.* in the rent?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES HOWELLS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,822. You heard the evidence given by Mr. Maurice?—I would rather speak Welsh.

[The evidence of the witness was interpreted by Mr. Richard Jones.]

32,823. Have you heard Mr. Maurice's evidence given?—Yes.

32,824. Did you understand it?—Yes.

32,825. Do you agree to it as true?—Yes.

32,826 Do you wish to add to it?—No.

32,827. Mr. Maurice said that it might be amplified by you?—He has said all, and I cannot add anything to it.

Mr. Grove.

32,828–9. Did you get a message through someone, some individual, from your landlord?—Yes, I received a message. See 32

32,830. What was that message?—That if I appeared before the Commissioners to give evidence he would write to Lord Carrington to ask him to punish me for telling untruths.

32,831. How could he say that before he knew what you were going to say to the Commission?—I had said before the Farmers' Club that I was going to give evidence.

32,832. Then you regard that as a threat on the part of your landlord to deter you from giving evidence?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

32,833. What was the name of the party who carried that message?—George Davies.

32,834. Is George Davies here?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,835. In 1892 were you told by your landlord that if you took part in a meeting at Fishguard you would be turned out of your farm?—On the day of the election that I would have to suffer for it.

32,836. But what did you do on the day of the election?—Carry people in a trap down, and I sang in the square along with some other of the boys.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

32,837. Did you suffer from doing that?—I had notice to quit.

32,838. Have you left your farm?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,839. A question is handed in by Mr. Stephen. "Did you not retake your farm again after quitting it"?—I tried, but I did not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. George Davies called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,840. Would you tell us what you know about the circumstances of the case. Were you the bearer of a message?—Yes, the Rev. Parry Davis met me on Fishguard Square last Thursday three weeks and asked me would I tender a message to Mr. Howells, and that was, in case he should give false evidence here to-day, that he would write to Lord Carrington for permission to prosecute him.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

32,841. "If he gave false evidence" were the words?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,842. Do you think that he intended by that message to intimidate Mr. Howells from giving evidence?—That I cannot say. That is my opinion.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Bevan Bowen called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,843. You are Mr. James Bevan Bowen, owner of Llwyngwair estate, in the county of Pembroke, an estate consisting of a little over 3,000 acres?—Yes, 3,003 acres.

32,844. You are a resident landowner managing your own estate?—Yes.

32,845. With occasional help from a tenant farmer on two adjacent estates?—Yes.

32,846. Do you consider creed, politics and religion make any difference?—None, whatever, that I know of.

32,847. The tenancies are yearly tenancies?—Nearly all of them in fact. I think all of them at present are yearly tenancies.

32,848. Is there any demand for leases?—None.

32,849. Are there any changes of tenancy on the estate?—Not fresh tenant—not fresh blood, as you may say; it generally changes; they move on; some of the smaller tenants frequently move on to larger farms.

32,850. Is a tenant usually succeeded by one of his own family?—If available, always.

32,851. Are there any changes of tenancy. I have it here that they have not grown more frequent, is that the case?—I do not think they have.

32,852. What are they usually due to. You have here that they are usually due to a desire to go on to a larger farm?—Yes, they generally remain with me until they can better themselves and then they move on. I have had cases recently. A tenant of mine, a very old tenant I have had for 30 years, took a large farm the other day, and of course I was very glad to see him do it. It was a much more valuable farm than the one he had from me.

32,853. Have you anything to say about compensation?—I have answered the question in this way, that compensation is always given on resuming a plot of land or for damage done in timber cutting; most certainly always, but with the exception of timber cutting I never take the land from them so that I am not aware of it.

32,854. What are the conditions of tenancy?—Extra rent for old meadow land ploughed up and leaving manure. Those are the general things. The particular one that is insisted on is as to leaving the manure for the incoming tenant and leaving very often such things as milk pans or things that perhaps the outgoing tenant has provided; it is generally arranged that the incoming tenant should take them. We use stone milk pans in this country which are fixed, and they are very awkward things to move.

32,855. Have you any copy of your agreement?—I have. As a rule my farms are let on yearly letting, but I have brought four specimens here of agreements on small holdings.

32,856. I suppose there is an agreement, is there not, between landlord and tenant for a yearly tenancy?—No, it is generally strictly verbal. All my large farms are let verbally; these are small holdings; two of them are grass holdings close to Newport town, and these are two small farms. All my large farms are let without any agreement at all.

32,857. Are there any complaints made of the terms?—None whatever. I never heard any complaint. I generally find that they are contracted out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, but that is with the full consent and knowledge of the tenant. In fact I have never had an agreement with the tenant where he has not previously perused it and taken it with him till the next morning. They are always I found willing to go outside the Agricultural Holdings Act. They do not want to go to law. They are perfectly content; whereas as a matter of fact the punitive clauses, as you may call them, of this agreement have never been exercised by me. The only pressure I have ever had to bring to bear at all is when I have found a little unreasonableness with regard to manure. Then I have pointed out to them the unreasonableness of their opposition, and I have never had any difficulty at all.

32,858. How is the rent fixed?—They are generally old rents. I do not know how they were fixed.

32,859. Not much change?—Hardly any; there have been a few.

32,860. Have you made any reductions or abatements?—Oh, yes, I have made reductions. I have a list of them here. I commenced in 1885 at 10 per cent.; 1886, 10 per cent.; 1887, 10 per cent.; 1888, 10 per cent.; 1889, 5 per cent.; 1890 and 1891, 5 per cent.; 1892, 10 per cent.; 1893, 15 per cent.

32,861. What is your opinion about the preferential claim for rent?—My experience is a very happy one, because I have never had to do with necessitous tenants. I find them meet all their engagements perfectly well, they are perfectly solvent. I do not know how the preferential claim works I am sure. I have never had to exercise it for 30 years. I once had to exercise it; I once had to put in a distress unfortunately; that was with a man I found on the estate who had no knowledge of farming whatever. He turned out a very worthless character. I was obliged then to do something, because he was ruining the whole place, with that exception, whenever I have got what I call a farmer, I have never the smallest difficulty in the world, but sometimes men take farms who are not farmers.

32,862. Are there any consolidations on your property?—No. I have tenants holding more than one farm; they hold them quite separately, perfectly distinctly. They generally use one for one or other of their children living there or else some reliable dairy woman. I have not many cases of it. I have one case here in Newport where the man was related to the tenant.

32,863. Are the buildings entirely made by the landlord?—Entirely.

32,864. Is there any permanent pasturing. I suppose with you, it is as we usually find, that the manures and the seeds are provided by the tenant?—Yes.

32,865. Sometimes we find seeds provided by the landlord, but not always?—Of course, if there is a change, the new man would pay for them if they are fresh seeds because, of course, he would have the seed hay.

32,866. Is the game a grievance?—I have hardly any game. The game is reserved nominally, but I do not preserve at all. I farm largely myself, and what game I have is on my own occupation. I have no game on the tenant's occupation except that there may be a covey of partridges or something of that sort. There is no fur.

32,867. Do the occupiers avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—I believe they do, but as a rule they did so really before, because I gave them leave to kill the rabbits. I have never allowed rabbits as far as I could possibly stop them.

32,868. You state here, that the inherited freeholds are numerous?—I think so, in my neighbourhood.

32,869. You think that they keep up their numbers?—I think so, and the copyholders too.

32,870. As to the tenant farmers and their wives and families, I believe your evidence is the same as we have had elsewhere, and there is no need to call attention to that. What is your opinion about the agricultural depression. When did it begin?—I suppose about 1885, 1885 and 1886; corn went out very fast then. 1887 was a very hot year.

32,871. What was the cause of the depression?—Well, foreign competition, I suppose. I am not aware of any other reason, I cannot imagine any other reason. The prices range very low indeed to farmers.

32,872. Can you suggest any remedy?—Well, the only remedy as far as land is concerned generally is, I should think, that we might not be charged quite so much rates; that we are very heavily rated. I pay rates to a large extent, and for the last five years in the parish of Newport and Nevern, I have paid 1*s.* 4*d.* in the pound regularly every half-year. It comes to a little over 13 per cent. in the year. We think they are rather heavy. I do not complain of the poor rate, but of the road rate and perhaps the education rate. I know we have had a great deal of relief already; I am perfectly aware of that, but still that has been about the average. I pay my rates myself, so, of course, I know. I farm 540 acres, so I have practical knowledge of these matters, and that is exactly what they get at Newport and Nevern.

32,873. You consider that to be an undue share of the public burdens?—Well, it appears to me to be rather heavy.

32,874. What is the relationship between landlord and tenant?—Most friendly, so far as I know.

32,875. Do you charge any interest for repairs that are made?—No, I have never charged interest for anything at all except in one instance I charged for a waterwheel; the man was very lowly rented and I gave him a water-wheel and I charged him something for a few years, and then I let him off.

32,876. Does the succession of farms usually go on in the same family?—Whenever it is possible they do. My farms do not run large. They are not large farms, therefore the temptation is to get something better; therefore they go away; that is the general way I lose my tenants; they get something better.

32,877. The last item upon the précis is this, that you would hand in an extract from the account book showing the prices obtained for various produce from 1850 to 1853. That is a very short time?—This was discovered at a time when my late father was rather unwell. He had a very faithful bailiff who lived with me for a long time afterwards. This extract shows that prices were very low at that time.

He was a thoroughly faithful man. There is not the smallest suspicion that these returns are not perfectly bonâ fide and straight forward. My father was unwell at the time himself and he died shortly afterwards. That is an account discovered not very long ago in passing some accounts we had to do with. The book was discovered and we thought we might just as well take out the figures just to show what the prices were at that time. They are quite beyond suspicion of roguery of any sort. They are really bonâ fide prices which were obtained at the time. It is just to show that prices were very low 40 years ago.

The following statement was handed in:—

32,878. Have you sold any property?—I sold property in 1892.

32,879. Where was that, — Whitland?—Between Whitland and Laugharne.

32,880. To whom was that property sold?—Nearly all to tenants.

32,881. Did they have a right of pre-emption?—No, I did not give them a right of pre-emption. They had the goodwill of the country and what favour I could show them, but they seemed to have no difficulty in getting them. People did not go against them.

32,882. How many years purchase did you get, if that is a fair question?—Well, it is a peculiar case in one way. The number of years purchase was 31, but the price per acre for 1,473 acres was about 11*l.* 10*s.* an acre. The tenants were old established tenants and I was very glad to see that they were hardly opposed at all. In fact they gave very fair prices. That is what they averaged, 31 years purchase. There were nine lots and they bought seven, I think.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,883. What suggestion have you to offer for relieving the land of the charges?—Do you mean with regard to the charge made by landlords on tenants?

32,884. Well, the rates or relieving the land from rates?—You mean the charges which would fall on anybody, whether owners or not?

32,886. Do you think making local rates a Government charge would tend to economy in administration?—I should always advise that we should have an interest in keeping down the rates. I think that certainly, and I think it is just as well that the occupiers should have that interest to a certain extent, or else I do not see how the battle of rating would be fought at all, it would be allowed to drift. I think it would be a pity to allow that to drift, because undoubtedly it requires looking carefully after.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,887. You stated I think that you thought creed, politics and religion in general make no difference as regards landlords and tenants?—I have never discovered it; I have no knowledge of it at all.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

32,888. If an isolated case arose in your district of a landlord turning out a tenant directly or indirectly for his religious opinions, or for any political action of his, would it excite public opinion among the landowners against it—would it be resented by the rest of the landowners in the neighbourhood?—I do not quite follow you.

32,889. I will repeat it. In case an exceptional case arose where a landlord in your district did make creed or politics a matter of difference?—I see what you mean.

32,890. Would the public opinion of landlords generally be against it?—Well, I can hardly answer that; I have never never known an instance of what you might call a scandal—anything which would provoke a scandal of any sort or kind. I have never known that, and therefore, it would be entirely guess work for me to say what might happen. I have never known anything to happen. In the part of the world where I live things proceed with perfect smoothness, and I have never heard of any complaint at all with regard to it, In the case of the large farms the principal difficulty is to get a man with capital enough to work them. With regard to small farms there is no trouble at all; you generally get good tenants enough to take them. Sometimes with a largish farm of 300 acres, or something like that the landlord must protect himself by seeing that the tenant has something, or someone at his back. I believe it is strictly money. I do not think politics or religion is taken into account.

32,891. We have heard evidence from some witnesses that on some estates, politics and religion do make a difference. You think that is a mistake?—I think it would he considered a great mistake; I should think so as far as I know, but I can merely answer that I do not know of any case of its happening. I should think that people would carefully abstain from showing a great preference for anybody. I have never known a case. I should think it quite possible, and most probable ceteris paribus that the man would take the man that belonged to his own side. Probably in regard to religion I should think it would be exceedingly likely, particularly I should think with Nonconformists, on account of the support to their places of worship. With regard to Churchmen I am not aware of it, but I do not see anything very unreasonable if it were to happen. I have never known it to happen. I have never known it to happen in any way that could produce remark. I have known it happen of course that a Churchman has been taken as a tenant; but I have never known it happen to the injury of anybody.

Mr. Grove.

32,892. When you make an abatement what notice do you give?—I am sorry to say when I first began I gave no notice; it was one of my tenants who drew my attention to the fact. For the last couple of years I usually send round a little note stating the exact sum, showing a statement of income-tax and allowances, and so on, so that they know exactly what they have got to pay me.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Griffiths called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,893. You are a tenant farmer of Trewern, Nevern, Velindre, Pembrokeshire?—Yes.

32,894. What is your opinion about language, creed, or politics, does it make any difference as between landlord and tenant?—I do not think it does. I am a Welshman, and my landlord is an Englishman. I am a baptist, and my landlord is a rector in Bridgewater. I think there were never any better friends than we are.

32,895. Have you a lease?—No, not a lease.

32,896. Then you are a year to year tenant?—Yes.

32,897. Which of the two systems do you think the best, the lease system or the year to year system?—Well, I should not care about a lease myself. I have full confidence in my landlord, that I shall never be removed from there, nor have my rent raised. If I should feel that the rent was too high I should give it up, and release myself.

32,898. Have you anything to say about security? Have you security on your farm?—No, I have no security. I never asked for any security.

32,899. Do you consider that the tenants are reasonably secured in your district?—I believe they are.

32,900. Do you know of any exceptions?—Well, I dare say there are a few exceptions.

32,901. What would the exceptions be, can you say what the nature of those exceptions would be?—The small holdings are the worst, I believe. The large estates are pretty right.

32,902. Have you got a copy of your agreement with you?—Not here to-day.

32,903. You have an agreement?—Yes.

32,904. And you have a copy?—Yes. I have two farms, in one I have; I have no agreement at all in the other.

32,905. Do you know the terms of your agreement?—Yes.

32,906. Do you consider them reasonable or not?—Quite reasonable.

32,907. What have you got to say about a Land Court?—Well, I do not understand much about it; but I would rather do with my landlord than have any hand between us.

32,908. You think you can settle all matters direct between you and your own landlord?—Yes, none of my landlords have ever refused anything I asked them.

32,909. Have your farm buildings been repaired?—I entered one of my farms five years ago; there was nothing told when I took the place about building at all. I did not think it was in such poor repair either. When I entered the farm I saw I could not go on in that way. I wrote a statement to my landlord showing the position of the farm. He wrote by return of post that he would send his agent to see, and so he did, and I had over 400*l.* of repairs made without any former agreement to do.

32,910. Who paid for the repairs?—It was he paid every penny.

32,911. Did you do the haulage, or did he?—I did the haulage.

32,912. Is that the custom of the neighbourhood?—It is.

32,913. Has any draining been done on your farm?—There has draining been done in one, Yseuborwen, and he made a little in the other last year.

32,914. How have the expenses been met?—It was understood between the landlord of the first farm that I had that one should open, and the other should close them—the landlord should open them, and the tenant close them; but I had a little farm adjoining to that one about 26 years ago, there was 5*l.* in addition to the rent there used to be. Before I paid any rent the old gentleman died, and I told the next gentleman how it was that I was to pay 5*l.* more, and him to help me drain this field; that was the agreement between us, although there was nothing on paper. The gentleman told me, "You go on as you like; you pay me the old rent," and so I had it at the old rent, and I made the drainage myself.

32,915. How long ago was that?—That was about 26 years ago.

32,916. Has the rent remained the same ever since?—The same.

32,917. How are the vacancies in farms when they occur filled up?—Most of them are filled up with relations that are left.

32,918. Do the landlords generally charge any per-centage on the money spent on new buildings?—I have been told that some of them do; I cannot say it for a fact.

32,919. Can you say whether it is common or not to do so?—I do not think it is common.

32,920. You do not think it is usual?—No.

32,921. What is the system of farming? I see you state that you would describe the system, and the state of cultivation?—We carry on the farm just under the three years' system.

32,922. Is the state of cultivation good?—Not so good as it ought be. Labouring is neglected the last five or six years.

32,923. Are the relations between the landlord and tenant good or not?—I believe very good in our district.

32,924. Supposing that a tenant finds his rent too high, what is the usual custom; what do you think he should do, should he apply for a revaluation, or what?—I think that would be very fair, rather than going to a court about it.

32,925. Do you suggest that more than one valuer should be engaged?—I think it would be very fair to have one on both sides.

32,926. And is that ever done?—Well, I do not know quite.

32,927. What you have done is to arrange with your own landlords?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

32,928. You say that your landlord lives away; that he is Rector of Bridgewater?—Yes.

32,929. Suppose he was rector of the parish you live in, do you think you would get on as friendly as you do now?—I think I would.

32,930. Now as to security of tenure. Is not security of tenure desirable?—I do not know; will you kindly repeat that?

32,931. Security of tenure; that is so that you may continue to have your holding for a specified time?—I do not know any tenants who have been put away from their farms if they could pay for them in my remembrance.

32,932. Of course with a good landlord, one who is kind and sympathetic, there is not so much need for it?—Our landlords are all good in our district.

32,933. That is all right; but if a landlord dies, there may be then a change of ownership?—Yes.

32,934. Would not a tenant like to be secure of his farm if there is a change of ownership?—Well, I dare say he would.

32,935. What is your acreage?—316.

32,936. What is your rent?—My rent, both together, is 260*l.* about—110*l.* and 160*l.*

32,937. That is, 270*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,938. Have you had any abatements?—No, no abatements. We have had a per-centage.

32,939. That is what I mean?—Three years out of five since I have taken this farm.

32,940. How much have they been?—Two shillings in the pound.

32,941. Is it your opinion that the farmers generally feel that difference in politics and religion is not allowed to interfere?—No, I do not think it would in our district whatever.

32,942. Since the Ballot Act that idea has very much gone away, has it?—I think it has.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,943. Who is your landlord of your other farm?—Mr. Lloyd, Coed Mawr.

32,944. When you say that the landlord opens the drains, and the tenant closes them, what about the pipes, does the landlord supply the pipes?—We do not use pipes—stones; there is a quarry in the field just where we are.

32,945. Is it stone draining that you do chiefly?—Yes, stone draining.

32,946. Have any of the tenants bought their holdings in your neighbourhood?—Yes, there are a few.

32,947. What prompted them to buy them?—Well, some of the estates have been sold, and then they wished to buy their own home.

32,948. Were they afraid that if anybody else bought them they would either turn them out or advance the rent?—Well, a home is so near to a man that he wishes to get hold of it.

32,949. Suppose it was sold to somebody else, they would not feel secure either against an advance in rent or perhaps notice to quit?—I do not know what their feelings were.

32,950. But does not that strike you as a most probable thing?—Oh, very likely.

32,951. Then you do not think in that case that security of tenure would be a very good thing—that is, against circumstamstances of that sort?—Very few of those have arisen in our district, and I do not know much about the feeling.

32,952. But it may occur in other districts; what do you say under those circumstances; do you not consider it advisable that a tenant should be protected from advancements in rent or from being driven out of his home?—Oh, there is no doubt it would be good.

32,953. Do you know of any landlords who have not made any abatements?—I cannot remember just now.

32,954. Of all the landlords in your neighbourhood?—There is one landlord, but I believe his estate is highly mortgaged, and the landlord cannot do it, I suppose.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN C. PHILIPPS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,955. Are you Mr. Evan C. Philipps, of Treriffith, Moylgrove?—Yes.

32,956. What is your opinion about difference of language. Does that make any difference to the relations between landlord and tenant?—No.

32,957. Or creed?—I never found it so.

32,958. Or politics?—No, I never found it.

32,959. Which do you think is best, a lease, or a year to year tenancy?—I prefer tenancy from year to year.

32,960. Why?—Because if the times were to get bad, I should give notice to my landlord, and make fresh arrangements with him.

32,961. Judging by your experience, do you think tenancy is reasonably secure in Wales?—Yes, I have found it so.

32,962. If the farm is properly carried on?—If the farm is carried on in a husbandly way and the rent is paid.

32,963. Are you familiar with the terms on which you occupy your holding?—Yes.

32,964. Have you got any agreement?—No agreement.

32,965. Have your ancestors occupied the same farm?—Yes, for the last 13 centuries—I mean since the 13th century.

32,966. Have you ever seen any penalising clauses in any of the agreements?—I have never seen any of the penalising clauses that are usually inserted in agreements enforced.

32,967. You have not seen them enforced?—I have not seen them enforced; they do put them down hard and fast sometimes, but they are never carried out.

32,968. The object being to secure the landlord against a bad tenant; is that it?—Yes, against a bad tenant.

32,969. What do you think about a Land Court. Do you think one would be a good thing or not?—I would not like to see any interference between landlord and tenant. If there were such a court, I do not think the landlords would then be inclined to spend their money on their estates. My landlord would not spend a threepenny bit.

32,970. What is the sort of work that is done in the way of building by landowners. They generally put out houses and yards up in your district; do they generally expect any interest on the capital they lay out?—Yes, they generally expect 5 per cent. interest on the capital they pay out.

32,971. What is the custom of the country in your part?—Do you mean with regard to when the tenant leaves the farm?

32,972. Yes?—At the time that the tenant eaves the place, the tenant has a right to sell all the manure.

32,973. Is there any ground for saying, as has been said by some witnesses, that the farmers are afraid to come forward?—No, I do not think they are deterred from any fear of the landlords as long as they have got a good account at the bank.

32,974. Have you anything else to say—about railway charges, for example or anything of that kind?—Yes, I consider the railway charges are very exorbitant. I understand that cattle can be brought to Smithfield Market from America quite as cheap as they can be taken from Wales. I have also had corn and potatoes brought down to me from Scotland, and I have found that the carriage was nearly as much as the produce cost.

32,975. What do you think about protection?—I firmly believe that all foreign farm produce or stock ought to be protected.

32,976. And do you think that owing to the great depression of agriculture the farmer now gets nothing whatever for himself, is that so?—Yes, quite true; he gets nothing in the world, and the burdens are too high upon the land. The roads and education rates ought to be paid out of the revenue.

32,977. It is very interesting when you tell us that your ancestors have lived upon your tenancy since the thirteenth century. Have you any documents to prove that? What is your opinion on that subject?—I have got old documents there.

32,978. Were the landowners the same too?—I do not know; I believe so. He showed me some very old documents.

32,979. May I ask who your landlord is?—Mr. Pelham Thursby Pelham, of Abermarlais.

32,980. What acreage do you farm?—330 acres.

32,981. What rent do you pay?—190*l.*

32,982. Is there much rough land amongst it?—Yes, two thirds of it is rough land.

Mr. Seebohm.

32,983. May I ask what kind of documents you have with reference to this occupation from the thirteenth century?—Well, old parchment.

32,984. Little tiny things about that size?—Yes, and a large medal hanging to them.

32,985. Do you think your ancestors have been year to year tenants all that time?—Oh, yes, they have been of course from father to son.

32,986. But were these leases for three lives?—Oh, no. They had leases. My father had a lease, and my grandfather had a lease.

32,987. Were they leases for lives or for long period?—For lives. My grandfather's lease was 25*l.* a year, and the first lease was about 10*l.*

32,988. Was it copyhold or freehold tenure, do you know?—Oh, it is freehold.

32,989. Did they pay fines and heriots, and that kind of thing?—No, I have to pay the tithes; the tenant has to pay the tithes.

32,990. But I meant in the old times as shown by those old documents that you mention?—I was not there then.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,991. You say that 5 per cent. is paid as interest on the capital expended by landlords?—Yes.

32,992. For what period does that exist?—Well it depends, from 20 to 30 years; 20 generally.

32,993. Then it is reduced?—Yes. It depends upon the purchaser. Suppose he laid out 100*l.* it would be out in 10 years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

32,994. Until it is exhausted; is that it?—Until it is exhausted.

32,995. I think that is what you mean?—Yes, that is what I mean.

32,996. It would not be a perpetual charge of 5 per cent., but it would be 5 per cent. until the capital sum is exhausted?—Yes, that is right.

Mr. Richard Jones.

32,997. Do you know whether the rents have been advanced during the last 20 years in your neighbourhood?—Yes, on some estates.

32,998. Since the year 1876?—Well, about that period, from 1874 to 1878, or say from 1872 up to 1876 or 1877.

32,999. Do you know of any permanent reductions made by the landlords?—Yes, most landlords have given reductions.

33,000. But permanent reductions?—Oh, no, I do not know of permanent reductions.

33,001. Do you think the tenants are perfectly satisfied with the abatements which are made to them?—Yes, they seem to be content.

33,002. They would like a bit more, I suppose?—Of course there ought to be a permanent reduction now.

33,003. You think the time has arrived when there ought to be a permanent reduction?—Oh, I do not see any hope of the times getting much better.

33,004. You think the depression is permanent?—Yes, that is my opinion, except we get some sort of protection upon foreign things.

33,005. Do you think you or your landlord would benefit by protection?—Well, I believe I would benefit as much as some.

33,006. Do you not think, supposing you got more for your produce and more for your stock, that your landlord would raise the rent accordingly?—No, I do not think he would, as bad as he is.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

33,007. But there is a possibility of such a thing occurring?—Well, no, I do not think so. Of course, there is no hope of the stock and produce going up to that pitch; of course if they went very high, no doubt he would try to do something.

33,008. There is a probability, is there not, that if a protective duty were put on, they would?—Oh, no, I do not think so; a protective duty would not lead to that, and it would take down our rates and taxes.

33,009. Unless you got advances you would not benefit by protection?—Yes, benefit a little. Of course if I owed you 5*l.* and I had only got 19*s.* 6*d.* I daresay you would not look very comfortable.

33,010. Do you think that many tenants have money in the bank?—No; that is a great drawback. They take farms without capital.

33,011. What is the cause now that they take farms in that way without capital; is it a keen desire for land?—Well, for one thing, they have been brought up on the land, and they cannot turn their hand to anything else.

33,012. And I suppose the competition is very keen?—Well, it has been for small farmers. With farmers up to 100 acres the competition is very keen, but large farms are getting a drug.

33,013. You would not like to interfere with that competition in any way by legislation?—No, I would not. If a man cannot conduct his own business, he is not fit to be in any business at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Griffiths called and examined.

Mr. Grove.

33,014. You are Mr. John Griffiths, of Hafod Grove?—Yes.

33,015. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes. I am not a very good speaker in English.

33,016. I think probably you will do as well as we want; we will speak slowly for you. What is your acreage?—276 acres.

33,017. What rent do you pay?—220*l.*

33,018. Are you a yearly tenant?—A yearly tenant.

33,019. You have no agreement or lease?—Yes. I have a yearly agreement, but I told the agent I did not like it very much, and he told me not to ever look at it again. It is only just word of mouth now.

33,020. As to the mode of cultivation, do you cultivate according to the custom of the country?—Yes, and the best that I can for the sake of my landlord and myself.

33,021. What is the general condition of the farming population about you; do you think there is sufficient labour on the land?—No. Labour is very scarce indeed.

33,022. Are there sufficient cottages, do you think, for the men to live in?—Well, I have on my farm three very good, nice cottages.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,023. Then what are the general relations between the landlord and the tenant?—Oh, quite friendly.

33,024. They are comfortable, are they?—Yes, and they would carry my landlord from one part of the Kingdom to the other part. We would do our best for one another.

33,025. Have you been on your farm long?—Yes, I and my son now since 21 years ago. My son was there at first. I left my farm where I was when he went out. He is a clergyman. I have only one farm, but rent about 70 acres besides. Before then I had four farms.

33,026. Do the farmers remain on the same farm for a great many years about the district, as far as you know?—Yes. I am getting on now, and I know that my relations have been on a farm, not so long as Mr. Evan C. Phillips' had, since the 13th century, but for more than four centuries, and never had notice.

Mr. Seebohm.

33,027. Do you think that the general impression amongst farmers in your district is that they are fairly secure in their holdings?—I cannot say exactly that I understand you.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

33,028. Do you think that the feeling of farmers in your district is that they will stay on in their holdings as long as they pay their rent?—Oh, of course it is. I do not remember any instance where the landlords have driven any man from his place if he would farm his farm right, and pay the rates and taxes, tithe, and rent. I never remember any landlord cause any man to leave his farm, but there are some exceptions to that. We have tenants of bad conduct as well as bad landlords, and then they must defend themselves.

33,029. In cases where there has been a farm given up from any circumstance, do you know of cases of injustice, for instance in having to leave their improvements behind them unpaid for?—No, I do not think so. I do not think there has ever been any great loss by that. If they have been good farmers the landlord always feels very kindly towards them when they leave.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,030. What is the name of your landlord?—J. Vaughan Colby, Esq. I have got a very nice landlord.

33,031. I think Mr. Thomas said that he makes an abatement, is that so?—Yes, and he makes an abatement without any tenant ever applying for an abatement at all—from his own will. It is not often you can meet with a gentleman like that.

33,032. Would you like to have more abatement?—If I wanted it, I should tell my landlord and I am sure that he would grant it.

33,033. Do you think that tenants feel secure in their holdings against advances of rent?—Well, I do not know that. Do you mean if they do not come up to the rent that the landlords wish to get?

33,034. No. Do they feel pretty secure in their holdings that their rent will not be advanced?—I do, whatever. I know that my landlord wishes me to gain every year. I know that that is his feeling, and his agents' as well as far as that goes.

33,035. As far as you are personally concerned you are perfectly secure?—Oh, yes, perfectly.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,036. You speak for yourself. You do not speak for anybody else?—To be sure.

33,037. I did not quite understand you just now. Did you say there is not enough work for the labourers on the farm now?—No, too much work, and not enough labourers.

33,038. Is there not something scarcer than work?—Well, I do not feel it. I can pay every man according to my promise as far as now, thank God.

33,039. That is your own case?—Yes, but I could not get plenty of labourers always when I wished to have them, but I am better than many.

33,040. Then these bad times do not affect you in the least?—Yes, very much indeed.

33,041. I thought you said you had plenty of money to pay them all?—Well, I have had so far till now. I do not know how long.

33,042. Most of the evidence we have had is to the effect that the farmers could not pay in the present day?—Well, I have had a little store in time past, and they have not finished all yet.

33,043. Have you any complaints to make then?—No.

33,044. No complaints?—Not as regards anything between me and my landlord, not the least, but I have complaints if it would be better to tell them.

Mr. Grove.

33,045. A question is handed up by Mr. Vincent. "Am I right in believing that on "your farm you have brought up several sons "who have gone to Oxford University"?—Only one, but I have brought up three through another college.

33,046. One went to Oxford?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,047. Are they clergymen?—Yes, I have got four clergymen.

Mr. Grove.

33,048. Four sons, clergymen?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. BEN DAVIES called and examined.

Mr. Grove.

33,049. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

33,050. What is the name of your farm?—Llyn, Llangolman, Clynderwen.

33,051. What is the acreage?—67 acres.

33,052. What is the rent?—30*l.*, 32*l.* including the tithe.

33,053. Who pays the tithe?—I pay it now since these last two or three years.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,054. Was a meeting held last night at Maenclochog?—Last week.

33,055. You were asked to appear and give evidence on behalf of the tenant farmers, were you?—Yes.

33,056. Were there many tenant farmers present at that meeting?—I should say about 20.

33,057. Will you state what you want to say as briefly as you can?—The excessive rents; that was the thing that they wanted me to speak upon; the rents are too high.

33,058. Would you give us instances?—Yes, the rents are too high, nearly in every case round that district. As to very few down below there at Mote, none of them appeared at the meeting; the tenants of Sir Owen Scourfield, Bart., but the tenants around Maenclochog believe that the rents are too high by a deal, nearly all. Some of them have risen the last 20 years too.

33,059. Who is the landlord?—Sir Charles Philipps is the landlord at Maenclochog, but there are a great many different landlords around the country there.

33,060. You say the rents are too high and have been raised the last 20 years. Can you give us one or two cases?—I can give you one case. There was a farm there that was rented altogether for 110*l.* a year. It was bought by another gentleman, and now it is let out to different holdings, and is now over 200*l.* a year. One of the tenants was there at the meeting. He pays 60*l.* a year for his holding. He said publicly at the meeting that he would never pay the rent. He said that with his cart and horses this year he did a little bit of carting to the vicarage—he made a sum of 30*l.*—and he had to pay every penny to his landlord, or else he could not get the rent. He said to his landlord that he was bound to give it up, or else he could not pay the rent. The landlord told him, "Give it up, I shall have somebody else to take "it at once."

33,061. You say the rent was 60*l.*?—Yes.

33,062. What was the acreage?—It was somewhere about 60 acres and half of that could not be cultivated.

33,063. Half of it is poor land?—Yes, quite half of it is.

33,064. Who was the landlord in that case?—John Muscott of Clynderwen.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,065. Is he a farmer?—He is a gentleman farmer. He farms a little of it himself.

Mr. Grove.

33,066. Have you any further instance to give?—I have got one instance close to the mountain. 25 years ago the farm was let for 8*l.* a year. It went for sale, and it was sold for 400*l.* The above tenant had to take it for 17*l.* a year. He made some improvements on the land. His landlord asked him to advance his rent by 2*l.* a year. He said no, he could not do it; the buildings were out of repair there, and instead of going to build himself, to make some buildings on his land, he preferred to get an advance to the extent of 2*l.* a year, and the landlord to make the repairs. For 10 years he had had no repairs at all. He made some repairs in the house, but not in the out-houses, and soon after he made the repairs he advanced the rent to 21*l.* That is another man who came specially to me, and stated the thing before me, and asked me to mention it here to-day That is two.

33,067. You think there are others, though we have not time now to go into them?—Yes, there are a great many.

33,068. Generally speaking, you think they are much the same?—Yes. One thing I want to speak about is as to the small cottages—the small allotments. Many of the men have been speaking to me about them—small allotments, say about four or five or six acres of land; they are let out by the farmers themselves.

33,069. Sub-let by the farmers?—Yes, and then they have to pay about three times more for the little holdings than the farmers themselves pay for the land. They have got, I believe, a great deal of grievance about that.

33,070. That is, the farmer gets a profit on his sub-letting?—Yes, that is so, and that is the reason, I think, that labour has gone away from the district.

33,071. You think it drives labour away from the district by having to pay too much cottage rent?—Yes.

33,072. What labour would that be? Would it be farm labour?—They would be doing labour with the farmer himself.

33,073. As to insecurity of tenure, have you anything to say on that point?—Yes, I think that is very insecure with many. With good landlords it is all very well, but I think that is the feeling all round the neighbourhood—insecurity of tenure.

33,074. How would you propose to obtain security of tenure, by a Land Court, or some means of that kind?—Well, I prefer a Land Court. It will not injure the good landlord, and I think that it will make it good for the tenants against bad landlords.

33,075. But if there was a Land Court you would like the landlord and the tenant always to do their best to put things right before going to the Land Court, would you not?—Of course.

33,076. So that the good landlords could come to terms?—Yes, I do not think it would harm the good landlords.

33,077. What is the state of the houses generally—the farm houses in which the small tenant farmers live?—Well, they are not in very good repair. They are in very bad condition some of them.

33,078. Does that apply generally to more than one landlord, or more particularly to one or two landlords?—To many landlords, not particularly to any landlord.

33,079. And the farmers still reside in these houses?—Yes, they do.

33,080. Are the houses complained of by the sanitary inspectors, or anything of that kind?—Well, so far as our sanitary inspector is concerned, I do not think we have seen him in the country these many years.

33,081. I suppose he takes care to get his salary every year, does he?—Yes, he does, but he does nothing for it. I think Mr. Griffiths can say some more about him.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,082. Are you quite sure you have got one?—Yes, we have to pay for him; I think if he could get a good glass of brandy that would be the best thing he could do.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,083. You speak of a farm rented at 80*l.* a year. Did the tenant improve that farm very much?—Yes; it has improved very much indeed.

33,084. Which way?—By liming and working every day; the man there before him did little or nothing on the farm.

33,085. The hedges had gone down, I suppose?—Yes.

33,086. And the rent you think was advanced upon his own improvements then?—Well, I believe it was to a great extent. I think that the farm was worth more than 8*l.* a year when he went there—when it was bought off, not before this tenant went there. I think that 16*l.* or 17*l.* was more than worth the farm; but now it is 21*l.*, and that is entirely on his own improvements.

33,087. Who keeps these little holdings in repair—the cottages that you speak of?—Well, the tenants; a great many of them.

33,088. The tenants themselves?—Yes; many of them.

33,089. They have a little land attached as well?—Yes.

33,090. Who pays the rates and taxes and tithe upon the land?—The farmer or the landlord, and the small tenants most of them pay the rates and taxes; but they secure plenty of rent instead of that.

33,091. To meet it?—Yes.

33,092. What remedies would you suggest. Have you anything besides a Land Court to settle these questions?—That is my chief remedy; and that is the remedy I believe in. I believe that railway rates are a great deal too high. That ought to be done away with in some way or other.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,093. What is the character of the land on this farm. I mean the part of the farm which was 100*l.* a year, and was made up into several parts; you say part of it was let at 60*l.*; about 60 acres of it?—Yes.

33,094. What is the character of that land?—That is poor land.

33,095. And yet let for 1*l.* an acre?—Yes; it is.

33,096. Is it suitable for growing wheat?—No; it is not.

33,097. Nor for fattening animals?—No; I do not think we ever have a fat animal on it at all.

33,098. Is it well drained?—Well, part of it is well drained; part of it is very dry.

33,099. Too dry, perhaps?—Well, yes, it is; part of it is on the blue rock.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

33,100. That farm would fare badly of course this last summer?—Yes, very bad; it is all burnt.

33,101. What is the character of the land generally about your neighbourhood?—Well, it is poor land most of it; we are close to the mountain; we have got some good land close to it, but this land is poor.

33,102. Do you suffer much from the want of water?—No, we do not ourselves. I do not myself.

33,103. Any of the farmers around?—Yes, some of them; last year they had a great distance to carry the water.

33,104. You think that is not taken into consideration when the rent is assessed?—No, I do not think so.

33,105. Not sufficiently?—No, not sufficiently.

33,106. How far are you from the nearest market town?—About nine miles.

33,107. What means have you of conveying your produce to the market town; have you a train?—No, a cart.

33,108. What is your nearest market town, Cardigan?—Narberth.

33,109. What prompts these farmers to let out small allotments to the labourers; is it because they are needy and have not sufficient capital?—Some of them in that way, but many of them want to get a small tenant to help them in the harvest time, and if the tenant is not at home the wife or children will be helping them in the hay making and the harvest making.

33,110. Then you think there is a want of allotments?—I think so.

33,111. And that there is a scarcity of labour in consequence?—Yes, there is another thing. I do not believe that there is any money for the farmers to pay them the last few years either; the rents are too high, they cannot afford it.

33,112. You think the farmers could employ more labour if they had sufficient money to pay?—I think so, and the land has gone out of cultivation because of that too, 33,113. What is the state of the ditches and watercourses, closed up?—Well, a great many of them, yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,114. Your farm is near the mountain?—Yes, not very far.

33,115. Have you a part of the mountain for the sheep?—No, I have not.

33,116. Who holds the land on the mountain itself; is that divided between the farms?—No, they pay for it. They have different tenants.

33,117. Are they the farmers who hold land at the foot of the mountain?—Yes.

33,118. Who is charged for that; do you know how much an acre?—I cannot say about the mountain because they take it as one lump. There is a great acreage there; I cannot say how much it is per acre.

33,119. Have you many bad cottages in your neighbourhood now?—Well, we have got some very bad.

33,120. What sort of cottages?—I know of two cottages especially close to Maenclochog. In one they keep three or four cows, and the other is a little farm.

33,121. Is the cottage itself bad?—Yes, and one of them has not got any outhouses at all.

33,122. What acreage of land would the man who has no accommodation at all but the cottage have?—Well, it might be something between 25 and 30 acres, something near 20 or 25 perhaps. There have been houses on it, but they have all gone down.

33,123. What rent does he pay?—I think about 12*l.*; it has been more. This is how I came to know about it. I was there last autumn killing a cow for this man and there was no place to put it for feeding; there was no place to kill it I went for another neighbour to kill it, and we had to carry it to the house to put it up; there was no room to put it down anywhere, only we had to put some clean clothes on the bed and have it after cutting lying down there till it was gone to the village to try to sell it.

33,124. That is a curious case?—Yes.

33,125. Who is the landlord there?—Sir Charles.

33,126. Do you know whether Sir Charles knows of this?—I do not think Sir Charles knows it himself, or else he would be sure to repair it.

33,127. Would there be many things for the inspector of nuisances to find fault with supposing he came your way sometimes?— Well, if he would be there looking at this place I am sure he would find plenty of room to complain of whatever.

33,128. Do you know whether he writes any reports on the cottages and the state of things about?—No. I do not think that he has done it.

33,129. Would he be listened to if he did?—Perhaps he might if he would make some report.

33,130. Have you heavy rates in your district?—Yes, rates are very heavy.

33,131. Have they risen in late years?—Yes, they have.

33,132. Why have they risen?—The cost of the roads. They are in better repair no doubt, but there is more cost to them, and schools again.

33,133. School rates?—Yes, and the poor rate.

33,134. Is the school rate very heavy with you?—We as a parish are not so heavy as it is in some parishes there. It is heavier in the parish close by.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,135. Have you a school board?—Yes, a school board.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,136. I was going to ask if you think there is too much spent on the schools in your part?—No, I do not think so; we have good schools there now, but the first time I remember when I was at school schools were not worth going to. We have got very good schools now.

33,137. Do your boys have too much education?—No, I do not believe in too much education. I believe the more education there is the better.

33,138. If it is of the right kind?—Yes.

33,139. And do you think it is?—Yes, I think so.

33,140. Do the boys know any arithmetic when they leave the schools—enough to do their business?—Oh, yes, they do.

33,141. We have heard it said in the English part that the children get too highly educated now to do any work. You do not find that in your part?—No, I do not; I do not believe that education does any harm to them.

33,142. Not the education that you have in your neighbourhood?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,143. At this meeting of farmers that you had in Maenclochog were they chiefly tenants or small farmers; were any of Sir Charles' tenants there?—Yes, there were five or six of them.

33,144. But the rest were chiefly tenants of small landlords?—Yes, chiefly.

33,145. Do you find that the tenants on the small estates are, as a rule, worse off?—Oh, yes, they are.

33,146. And yet you cannot suggest anything else to protect the small tenants except a Land Court?—No, I do not see any way else, because we know the rush for land is so great.

Mr. Grove.

33,147. Several questions are handed up by Mr. Vincent. The first is, "Do you say that the "rents of Sir Charles Phillips at Maenclochog "are too dear?"—I do not say that Sir Charles' rents are so high as many other landlords close by. I do not think so.

33,148. The second question is, "When you "say rents are too high, do you mean for "present prices or in relation to an average of "prices?"—At the present day I think the rents are rather too high in many cases when the time was good.

33,149. Thirdly, "Is not John Muscott a "tenant farmer as well as, on your account, a "bad landlord?"—Well, no, he is not a tenant farmer. I do not blame John Muscott for anything; I blame the tenant as well for giving so high a price for the land, because there is no doubt that John Muscott would have it.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,150. But why do tenants give such high prices, such high rents?—Because of scarcity of land. This tenant I refer to, if he had got six or seven children, the same as I have got, would never pay it for half a year.

Mr. Grove.

33,151. There are some further questions of Mr. Vincent—"The evidence so far is that the "cottage accommodation on Sir Charles' estate "is gradually improving; do you agree?"—Well, it is in some cases; he has built some cottages there; renewed them these last years.

33,152. "Can you suggest any way in which the erection of buildings on the 12*l.* a year farm you name could pay the landlord?—Well, I believe if they intend for a man to live on the farm and pay the rent for it, no doubt they must get some little housing for themselves and their cattle, or else they cannot keep their cattle, and they cannot breed cattle without getting something to cover them.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,153. Then do you not think that the tenant would pay interest on money if it was so expended?—Well, I cannot say whether he would pay it or not, but I think if a man is going to pay rent he ought to get a house and some sheds or some houses for the cattle, to get profit out of them, or else they could not pay any rent.

33,154. Because they are necessary you mean for the holding?—Of course.

33,155. "Would you not consider 12*l.* rent for 20 to 25 acres and a house rather cheap?"—No, it is close by the mountain. It is running up to the mountain.

33,156. What mountain is that?—Precelley.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Mr. Grove.

33,157. You wish to give your evidence in Welsh?—Yes.

33,158. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

33,159. How many acres?—250 acres.

33,160. What rent?—140*l.*

33,161. Is there much rough land amongst your taking?—Yes, a great deal.

33,162. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Davis, of Castle Green.

33,163. Do you find that difference of language or of politics has any effect on the relations between landlord and tenant?—No, not at all; I came to this place last Michaelmas, but I was for 40 years under Mr. Bowen, of Llwyngwair.

33,164. Do you prefer yearly taking or a lease?—That depends on the condition of the farm. If the farm is low the lease is convenient, because if the landlord died then I go on.

33,165. Have you any experience of the landlords in this district?—So far as I know I understand in my own district that the landlords deal very fairly towards their tenants?

Professor Rhŷs.

33,166. Where was your farm that you held 40 years?—Eisteddfa Fawr, not far from where I am now.

33,167. What parish?—Nevern parish.

33,168. Do the landlords give reasonable repairs?—From what I have seen and from what I understand.

33,169. Without charging the tenant in respect of money expended?—Oh, yes; everything that I asked from my previous landlord I got without his charging anything, or raising the rent in any way.

33,170. Does that landlord possess a large property—a good many farms besides the one you had?—Do you refer to the old farms—the previous farmers.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,171. Yes?—Yes, several, and I can plainly see that every tenant is treated as I am.

33,172. Have you a copy of an agreement?—I have no copy of the agreement under Mr. Bowen.

33,173. Have you one with your present tenancy?—It is not in my own hand, but the solicitor has it.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,174. What solicitor?—Mr. Morgan Richardson; he drew up the deeds.

Mr. Grove.

33,175. Are you satisfied with the terms of it?—Yes.

33,176. What is your opinion as to a Land Court?—I am not in favour of a Land Court. I would prefer my own landlord to any. I prefer that the matter be left between myself and my landlord than that anybody should intervene.

33,177. As to your mode of farming, does your landlord interfere with that at all?—He has not said anything to me about this.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,178. Do you farm your farm as you like?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Grove.

33,179. Do you consider that there is any ground for the tenants saying they are afraid to give evidence before the Commission?—I do not know.

33,180. Then you prefer the old mode of letting and you would not like to have a Land Court?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,181. How did you leave your first farm where you had such a splendid landlord?—The farm was a small one, and I had children who had grown up after farming and that is why I left.

33,182. Do you know any of your neighbours around you who have suffered from insecurity of tenure?—No, I do not know of anyone.

33,183. Do you not know of any of them that have had their farm sold?—Yes, I do. I know of farms that have been sold.

33,184. And on the farmers' improvements too?—Yes, there is no doubt. The estates were sold and the tenants had worked well on them.

33,185. Were those tenants paid for the improvements they had made before the farms were sold?—I cannot answer that.

33,186. You have not heard that?—I have not heard that.

33,187. I see you do not want a Land Court between you and your landlord. I do not think it would ever be wanted or required, but with regard to those that have their rents advanced. All landlords are not like the landlord you have been under?—I hope that the landlord will have mercy upon us.

33,188. We believe your landlord will, both landlords you have had, but there are others that we have found in the other court who say that their landlords were not merciful?—I am not in favour of those at all; I do not speak for those at all.

33,189. I do not want you to speak for them, but do you not think it would be right for them to have some place to appeal to?—I have not seen any bad landlords, but if there are bad landlords, I do not know of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,189*a*. That is not the whole of the sentence; he says he cannot speak for those?—I only speak of the landlords around me.

33,190. You made another answer just now. You were asked just now if there were bad landlords, what would their tenants do?—If there are bad landlords, I do not know of them, but if there are bad landlords, of course there ought to be some place for the tenants to go to.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

He said that some time ago, but he withdrew it afterwards.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,191. Have you an agent?—Yes.

33,192. Does he understand Welsh?—The agent is Mr. Richardson, the lawyer.

33,193. Does he speak Welsh?—Yes.

33,194. Did he explain to you what was in the agreement before you signed it?—Yes.

33,195. Do you remember what was in the agreement?—Yes, I do.

33,196. What was in it?—I was to get the place for 21 years; it is a lease.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I understood it was an agreement.

Mr. Seebohm

33,197. An agreement for lease?—I cannot tell the difference between an agreement and a lease.

33,198. Do you remember what was in the agreement?—I took the place and I had it for 21 years, and if I choose I can give it up in seven years, and another time for 14 and 21 years. It is very fair.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,199. Are you permitted to farm as you like upon your farm?—Yes, as I like.

33,200. Are you allowed to sell straw off the place?—I have not heard anything about it. I have not heard to the contrary.

33,201. If you happened to sell straw, would you be breaking one of the clauses in the lease?—I was not told about that. I had no information upon that point.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Grove.

Gentlemen, that appears to be all the evidence. The Commissioners are much obliged to you for the interesting and valuable evidence which has been given.

Mr. Grove.

The Commission is now adjourned to Abergavenny, in Monmouthshire, on Tuesday next at 11.30.

[Adjourned to Abergavenny.]

FORTIETH DAY.

Second Court.

The School Room, Eglwyswrw, Pembrokeshire, Saturday, March 10th, 1894.

PRESENT:

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P. (IN THE CHAIR).

Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D. | Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.

Mr. DANIEL JOHN called and examined.

[The evidence was interpreted by Professor Rhŷs.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,201*a*. Do you live at Llangolman Farm, Glynderwen?—Yes.

33,202. You represent, in what you are going to say, yourself, Mr. R. Gibby, and Mr. H. John?—Yes.

33,203. There is a letter from Mr. H. John to that effect. Have you sent any notes of your evidence to us?—No.

33,204. What do you wish to state as to the grievances of tenant farmers?—I wish to give you a little of my history very briefly. Thirty years ago I took a farm in which I now live. The rent was then 135*l*. for 116 acres. The farm was very much out of order when I took it. The farmer who preceded me had been there 21 years on lease. He had grown corn in two fields, 16 crops in 21 years, and the ground got very poor. Then I was obliged to take to it, and to have manure, muck, and lime carted to the land, which cost me a great deal of money the first years. I then paid the rent in that way as long as Dr. Phillips, of Newcastle Emlyn, lived. I had six children. I paid afterwards for about six years to Mr. Colby, of Pantyderin. The parties agreed afterwards to sell the farm, and an auction was held on it at Glynderwen Station. I had many children at home then—twelve, and I had laid out my money to try and improve the farm. I had nowhere to go when my place was sold. My neighbours persuaded me to offer for it, and that I did. Mrs. Colby, one of the parties, told me that she would put a mortgage on at 3*l*. 15*s*. per cent. Two-thirds mortgage she offered me, 2,600*l*. at 3*l*. 15*s*. per cent. It was a considerably better time then than now.

33,205. For how much was the whole sold?—4,000*l*.

33,206. Have you farmed it since?—Yes.

33,207. With what success?—There is no success these years. I am now working at a loss.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,208. What remedy do you as a freehold proprietor suggest?—This is what I thought. The Government has plenty of money. If we could have money from the Government to pay the mortgage at 2½ instead of 3*l*. 15*s*., that is my remedy.

33,209. What have you to say, Mr. John, about Mr. R. Gibby's case?—They have the same case as myself. The whole parish are obliged to buy the lands, but the landlords were the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

33,210. Mr. Gibby and Mr. John have mortgaged their properties, I suppose you mean?—Yes. Mr. Gibby to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

33,211. What interest do they charge?—They charge so that the whole money may be paid back in 30 years.

33,212. Do you approve of that system of the gradual paying off the purchase money or the mortgage money?—It is a case of failing to do so with them.

33,213. Do you think that Mr. Gibby would not be able to continue his payments?—He complained to me.

33,214. Do you feel able to go on paying the interest?—No.

33,215. Do you find yourself on the whole as well off now as you did when you were a tenant farmer?—No, not near so well now as when I was a tenant farmer. I was having 10 per cent. back with Mr. Colby every time I paid my rent to him.

33,216. And the mortgagee will not abate?—No.

33,217. Is there anything else you would like to tell us?—No, that is all I want. If we could have the money for that it would be all right.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,218. You said that this man had taken 16 crops out of his farm. Was it 16 crops of corn, or were there any turnips?—Corn and seed hay.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

33,219. It was never turnipped nor fallowed ?—No.

33,220. Then it must have been in a very bad state ?—Yes, a very bad state. I was forced to give two crops before I turned it out.

33,221. When did Dr. Phillips die ?—I believe it was in February 1887.

33,222. How many years have you been owner of your farm ?—Six years.

33,223. Do you not think that if the Government were to lend you that money, there would be many more wanting the same thing ?—Yes, hundreds.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

33,224. Do you not think if there was a farm sold, then they would calculate the interest at 3 per cent., and the farmers would be just in the same state as they are now. Do you not think that would be the case ?—Yes.

33,225. Then what remedy do you suggest to that. Think ?—That is with regard to buying and selling.

33,226. Mr. D. John says you cannot very well go on paying this interest at present prices? —No, I cannot now after my loss last year. I was 50*l.* out of pocket last year.

33,227. You cannot possibly pay up this interest ?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MORRIS NICHOLAS called and examined.

[The evidence of this witness being given in Welsh was interpreted by Professor Rhŷs.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,228. You live on a small farm in the parish of Nevern in the county of Pembroke ?—Yes.

33,229. What is the size of your holding ?—About six acres.

33,230. Was it originally part of a farm called Henllys ?—Yes.

32,231. On the estate of Mr. Lloyd, of Bronwydd ?—Yes.

33,232. This was situate about two miles from Henllys itself, was it not ?—Yes.

39,233. And was so inconvenient for cultivation that it had grown waste ?—Yes, that is how it was.

33,234. Covered with furze ?—Yes, furze.

33,235. And was one of the most barren bits of land in the neighbourhood ?—That is how they used to talk of it.

33,236. In what year was it that any member of your family, so far as you know, took it from the tenant of Henllys ?—About the year 1813.

33,237. Who was it that took it ?—Thomas Lloyd.

33,238 Was he your wife's grandfather ?—Yes.

33,239. Did Thomas Lloyd get a lease of it ?—Yes.

33,240. How long was the lease for ?—As long as the lease of Henllys continued.

33,241. Then Thomas Lloyd took the lease from the tenant of Henllys ?—It was from the tenant of Henllys that he took the lease.

33,242. What rent was paid for it ?—Three guineas.

33,243. When did you first know of this small holding ?—I have known it since 1866.

33,244. In what condition was it then ?—It had got into a pretty bad condition from that time since William Lloyd had held the small place on, after his father, in order to keep a home for his mother and sister. It was far for him to cultivate this piece, and it is land which ought be to worked constantly and daily.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,245. But in 1866, when you say you first remember it, was it divided into fields by hedges? —They spent the winter repairing them.

33,246. Was it divided into four small fields when you first knew it ?—Yes.

33,247. Was there a dwelling-house, a barn, and a cowhouse upon it ?—Yes, but they did not quite come down when I took it.

33,248. No, but there were these buildings upon it when you took it ?—Yes.

33,249. Who had built those buildings ?—Thomas Lloyd.

33,250. Then you told us that after Thomas Lloyd's death the holding was kept on by William Lloyd. Were the buildings nearly in ruins by the time that you first became acquainted with the place ?—Yes, very nearly coming down.

33,251. It was in 1886 that you married William Lloyd's daughter, was it not ?—Yes.

33,252. Did you go and live there then, upon your marriage ?—It was not long before I went there, but I remained with my father in-law whilst the repairing was going on.

33,253. Your father-in-law, as we have heard, was William Lloyd ?—Yes.

33,254. Did William Lloyd repair it ?—He was a mason, and then Tom Davies, the agent, had promised that if he repaired the little place he would be repaid for his work.

33,255. Did you help to do the work ?—Since I was in need of a place I took the responsibility on myself.

33,256. To whom was William Lloyd paying rent at that time ?—To the Bronwydd estate.

33,257. What amount of rent was being paid then ?—6*l.*

33,258. Then the lease must have expired at that time ?—The lease had gone out years before that.

33,259. Did you get any money from Mr. Davies or did William Lloyd get any money from Mr. Davies ?—No, none.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,260. What happened then, after two or three years?—I had a notice then. I made a slight error in this matter in my statement. It is likely to have been five or six years.

33,261. That is five or six years then. Did you get a notice from Mr. Davies saying that you must pay a higher rent?—He was not the agent then.

33,262. Who was the agent then?—Mr. John Daniel Jones.

33,263. Did he raise the rent?—Yes, the whole estate was valued.

33,264. Did you then make any statement to the then agent as to the money you had spent or become surety for?—Yes, I reminded them of the money every time I paid the rent before the raising of the rent.

33,265. What did the agent tell you?—That is what he told me at last—that the landlord did not allow it me.

33,266. And you never had a penny for the repairs effected?—Not at that time.

33,267. In the year 1876 you saw in a newspaper a notice that Penlan was to be sold by public sale, did you not?—Yes.

33,268. Did you then go to the sale?—Yes.

33,269. And did you remind the agent, Mr. Jones, that you had not yet received the money spent in repairing the buildings?—Yes.

33,270. What did the agent promise at last?—This is what he promised at last: "If this "place reaches 300*l.* to-day, that I should have "the money back in full."

33,271. Did you, in fact, buy the place yourself?—Yes.

33,272. For 345*l.*?—Yes.

33,273. What allowance was made to you in respect of the promise made by the agent?—One half the amount of the bill.

33,274. That was 7*l.*, about?—About 7*l.*, but I made a slight error in this also. I believe I have a half-penny over the half—one halfpenny over the moiety.

33,275. Did you have to mortgage the property?—Yes.

33,276. What interest have you had to pay?—4 per cent.

33,277. How has the matter turned out for you; is it a good bargain that you have made or not?—A very hard bargain indeed.

33,278. That is the point that you wish to make about it—you mean the bad circumstances of small freeholders at the present time?—One is so attached to one's home, and he is obliged to give more than what he intends for it. I should like to add one thing here; I had thought of sending the price up to 300*l.* that I might have the money back, but it was in spite of me it reached the price it did because my wife was bidding for it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,279. As I understand, Mr. Nicholas, the point that you make is this, that the owner of land is enabled to get a profit out of the attachment that people have to the holdings on which they have been brought up?—Yes.

33,280. And, secondly, as I gather from the notes handed in, you complain that the landowner should be able to get a higher price from the tenant, even after the tenant has spent a good deal of money on improving the property?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,281. Whose place was it to repair the buildings?—The landlords.

33,282. Did you have to promise in writing to have it repaired?—No.

33,283. What was the date of the year that the lease went out?—1847.

33,284 On what ground did he tell you that you must pay a higher rent. Did he lay much out in repairs?—The landlord—not a penny never.

33,285. What reason did he give you why he should raise the rent?—I had no reason whatever. I had notice just like the rest of the estate—it was a valuation.

33,286. He wanted to raise the rent so that it might sell better; was that it?—To put money into the landlord's pocket, of course.

33,287. How much was it sold for?—345*l.*

33,288. By whom was the estate valued?—Mr. John Morgan Davis, Frood Vale.

33,289. How much did you expect out of the 300*l.* If it went for 300*l.* you expected to have a sum back; how much did you expect?—There was a promise to build.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,290. I have the exact figure here; it was 14*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, but I did not put it to the witness because it is quite immaterial.

The following questions are asked by Mr. Vincent: "Are you quite sure that Thomas "Lloyd, all this time ago, did these buildings "entirely without help from the landlord?"—I am thus certain, that namely his son, William Lloyd, told me that many times.

33,291. "When the sale took place did you "expect to be paid all you had expended, or to "be paid the value, as it was then, of the repair "and so forth?"—Nothing but the bill.

33,292. "Why do you say it was the land-"lord's place to repair—because he ought to do "everything for everybody or because he "promised to do it?"—That is so. He was in the habit of repairing on the estates, and secondly he had firmly promised to do, or else I should not have done it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Stephen Picton called and examined.

[Part of the evidence of this witness being given in Welsh, was interpreted by Professor Rhys.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,293. You are a farmer of Coed Cefnlas Ucha', in the parish of Whitchurch, Pembrokeshire?—Yes.

33,294. When did you agree to take the farm?—1871.

33,295. From whom?—Mr. Saurin, of Orielton.

33,296. At what rent?—100*l.*

33,297. What was its acreage?—About 109 acres.

33,298. In what condition did you find the fences when you entered?—It was in a very bad condition. There had been no farmer there for about 40 years. The hedges had all gone down.

33,299. And was about one fifth of the whole of the land of the farm covered with furze, brambles, and heath?—Yes.

33,300. Was about one-half of the farm, the part nearest the mountain, composed more of stones than of soil?—Yes, and furze and everything.

33,301. Did you commence to repair the hedges and to dig ditches and to clear the land with mattocks and other implements?—Yes.

33,302. Did you find that the soil was so foul that a team of powerful horses with two men could not plough more than one-eighth of an acre per day?—Yes.

33,303. Did this operation of clearing that you went in for take several years to complete?—Yes.

33,304. What amount of money do you think it cost you?—It cost me about 5*l.* an acre.

33,305. Then in fact you carried on the farm at a loss until about the year 1876?—Yes.

33,306. Besides these things that you had done did you divert water from some of the fields to make a pond and erect a water-wheel for the purpose of driving the machinery?—Yes.

33,307. Did you also erect a pig-stye?—Yes.

33,308. Were all these things done entirely at your expense?—Yes.

33,309. Without any money at all from your landlord?—I had nothing.

33,310. Did you afterwards build a calf house that cost 10*l.*?—Yes, that was just when it was sold.

33,311. That cost 10*l.* besides the hauling?—Yes.

33,312. And I think that the landlord allowed you 5*l.* in respect of that house?—Yes.

33,313. Did you find that the land after the improvements you had made paid fairly well til 1886?—Yes.

33,314. But still you went on during the 10 years from 1876 to 1886 in clearing, did you not—spending a portion of the profits in that way?—Yes.

33,315. And also in liming and manuring?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,316. In 1884 or 1885 the farm was I believe sold to Mr. Davies, of Pentre, was it not?—Yes.

33,317. And it was than that your troubles commenced. In 1885 were you called upon by the clerk of the Pentre estate and requested to sign an agreement?—Yes.

33,318. Did you decline to do that?—Yes.

33,319. Why?—Because I saw it would be too severe.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,320. Have you got the agreement?—Yes, I have.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,321. You put in this draft agreement?—Yes.

33,322. What particular provisions of that agreement did you object to—what parts of the agreement, especially?—One thing was liming.

33,323. Anything else?—And the other thing was keeping everything in repair—the hedges and the houses. If a house was to be blown off or fall down, I had to repair it at my own cost.

33,324. You mean if it was blown down—if the damage occurred by the act of God—you would have to put the place into repair?—Yes.

33,325. Anything else?—And I could not have anything by the two Acts that have been made—I had notice to sign that I was not under the Acts.

33,326. Yes, that is so. The clause in the agreement is "and it is also further agreed that "this contract of tenancy shall not be affected "by nor be subject to the provisions of the "Agricultural Holdings (England) Acts 1875 "and 1883"?—Yes.

33,327. Did you not know that an agreement attempting to contract out of the Act of 1883 is null and void to all intents and purposes, save as to the length of notice?—No, I did not know it.

33,328. At any rate whether you know it or not, you objected to that clause being in?—Yes.

33,329. Shortly afterwards were you served with a notice to quit?—Yes.

33,330. Upon getting the notice to quit, did you sign the agreement?—No, not for a little.

33,331. You did sign the agreement ultimately?—I did.

33,332. Was any abatement or any compensation given you for anything you had done up to the time?—Nothing.

33,333. In 1889 did you receive a notice to quit?—Yes.

33,334. What reason did the landlord give for that?—I had no reason, but I knew that it was to be sold.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,335. In the month of August 1889 I think the farm was sold ?—Yes.

33,336. And then you bought it ?—Yes.

33,337. What did you pay for it ?—3,000*l.*

33,338. Then you mortgaged it, I suppose ?—Yes.

33,339. To what extent did you mortgage it at the beginning ?—2,200*l.*

33,340. What did the law costs for the conveyance come to ?—Something about 40*l.*

33,341. What interest have you to pay upon the mortgage ?—Four per cent. per annum.

33,342. Then you find, I suppose, that this has been a very bad bargain for you, owing to the fall in prices, and so forth ?—It is.

33,343. Would you like to make any suggestions for the remedying of this state of things ?—Yes. What I want is to have a fair rent, and each farmer to be paid for his improvements, and to have time. The best thing for us would be to have money at 3 per cent. interest.

33,344. What I understand, then, to be in your mind is this, that if the rent of the farm had been fair and you had had security of tenure, and could feel that you had a right to compensation for improvements that you had made, you never would have bought the farm for 3,000*l.* ?—No 33,345. Your point is that you were by the state of the law and the state of the relations between landlord and tenant, forced into either leaving your farm or buying it; is that the point you wish to make ?—Yes, and not only myself, but there are several in the parish the same.

33,346. There are many others in the same position ?—Yes.

33,347. But, notwithstanding that, do you think that you behaved prudently in buying at 3,000*l.* ? What was the rent you were paying actually ?—100*l.*

33,348. And you gave 30 years purchase for it ?—Yes.

33,349. Do you think that was a fair price to give, having regard to the price of stock and produce at the time, and so forth ?—Yes, at that time.

33,350. Then you would have been going on very well now notwithstanding the mortgage, if prices had kept up, and if the time of depression had not come ?—Yes.

33,351. Then it is not so much that you are complaining that you paid a very great deal for this. Your real complaint is the fall in the price of things—the bad times that have come upon us ?—Yes, and paying for my own improvements.

33,352. You say, of course, that in the purchase-money, owing to the position in which you had got yourself, you were really paying for a good deal of what you had done ?—Yes; if my place was worth 100*l.* at that time, it was worth 120*l.* when I bought it.

33,353. What do you think the property was worth when you first took the farm ?—About 2,000*l.* It was not worth more than that when I went to it first.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,354. Are there many in the same position as yourself in your neighbourhood ?—Yes many.

33,355. Do they find a difficulty in paying the mortgagees ?—Yes.

33,356. Have you had any difficulties about tithes in your neighbourhood ?—Yes, during these last years.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,357. You said you did not know with regard to the clause in the lease with reference to the Agricultural Holdings Act that the landlord could not compel you. Are there many tenants around you in the same way do not know these things ?—This is how it is, about two thirds of the land in our parish has been bought in that way.

33,358. Do they know that the landlord cannot contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act ?—They have come to know now that they cannot contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

33,359. To their sorrow. It is rather strange that a landlord should put a clause in the lease when he knows it is of no value, is it not ?—Yes.

33,360. But it might have been done some time before the Act was changed and not crossed out. What sum of money do you consider it would cost you to clean up this land. One-fifth, I think you said you had cleaned ?—Yes.

33,361. That would be something over 20 acres, would it not ?—Yes.

33,362. And you cleaned that at the cost of about 5*l.* an acre ?—That is certainly so, though I have not kept an account.

34,363. What did it cost you to do up the hedges ?—It cost me a great deal, but I cannot say how much.

33,364. You say then that it would, if it were sold when you first had it, only reach 2,000*l.* you think ?—Yes.

33,365. Why are tenants inclined to buy land at this price ?—Because they have nowhere to go to; another thing is, I have been brought up in the neighbourhood and did not like to leave.

33,366. You are not the only one; they are all alike ?—All alike.

33,367. They cling to theold home, I suppose? —Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,368. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent:—"Would you not have been satisfied with full compensation for your improvements ?"—Yes.

33,368*a*. Do you mean that you would like to have gone away from the farm, I thought that you told me you rather wanted to stay on ?

Mr. Griffiths.

33,369. I do not think that is what he means?—What I want to say is that every farmer ought to be compensated for his improvements when his farm is being sold or when he is obliged to leave—forced to leave.

33,370. Would you like to have some outside party to settle the question between you and the landlord in that way?—Yes, I should like that; that is how it ought to be.

33,371. Someone under Government, or a Court or anything of that sort, that you could appeal to?—Yes.

33,372. That is you opinion?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,373. Do you mind telling the Court whether the 800*l.* difference between the purchase money and the mortgage money was saved by you upon the farm?—No.

33,374. But you had to pay 800*l.* cash.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,374*a*. Were you worth more money after you had cleaned that land off than you were before?—No, I was not worth more. I say that 500*l.* went out of my pockets in the expense of cleaning the farm, and that I was afterwards obliged to pay that amount in the buying.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,375. Question by Mr. Vincent, "Where did the 800*l.* come from in order to make the matter clear?"—Borrowed some part of it. I have perhaps a few hundreds myself. I should like to have money borrowed from the Government on loan at 3 per cent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Griffiths called and examined.

[The evidence of this witness being given in Welsh, was interpreted by Professor Rhŷs.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,376. On what points would you like to speak?—On the question of sale of farms.

33,377. Have you heard the evidence given by the gentlemen, Mr Picton, Mr. Nicholas, and Mr. John?—Yes.

33,378. Do you agree with what they have said?—Yes.

33,379. What special point do you wish to suggest in addition to their evidence?—My farm is now on sale. These farms have been sold since I was a child.

33,380. To the tenants?—No, not to the tenants—to Mr. Griffiths, malster, of Ysceuborwen, the first was sold, and Mr. Rees, of Treelyn, was sold, and Tregwilimucha is on sale now—to be sold.

33,381. Are you the tenant of Tregwilimucha?—Yes.

33,382. How does the sale by the landlord of his interest in the farm affect you?—I had taken Tregwilimucha on lease 10 years ago. The lease came to an end in 1893, and the place went under sale last summer or came to be in the market last summer.

33,383. You are afraid that you may have your rent raised or that you may never get compensation for anything you have done upon the farm if the farm is sold. Is that the point you wish to make?—I am afraid that I should be obliged to go from there.

33,384. I do not know why you should fear that unless the rent is very low or there are some special circumstances of that kind. Why do you think the purchaser will turn you out?—The rent is very high. We have greatly improved the place since we have had it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,385. Then it comes to what I say?—And we should like to remain there, and if we could get Government to pay for it at low interest, that is what we should like to do.

33,386. What you would like to do would be to buy this farm?—Yes.

33,387. And you would like the Government to do in Wales what it has done to some extent in Ireland, namely, advance money for the purchases of holdings?—Yes.

33,388-9. Do you think that the example of Mr. John and of the other gentlemen, Mr. Nicholas and Mr. Picton, is very encouraging?—

Professor Rhŷs.

I do not think he understands the question.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,390. We have had no fewer than four witnesses, and one witness spoke for another gentlemen, that makes five altogether, who have now purchased their farms all recently, and who now all regret that they ever did so?—That is because the interest on the money is too high.

33,391. What do you thing the interest is as a rule?—From 3*l.* 15*s.* to 4*l.* per cent.

33,392. Would you expect the Government to advance money at a less rate of interest than that?—Yes, we should.

33,393. Why should the Government, that represents all the country, advance at a lower rate of interest, and at a loss, therefore, more than a private person?—The Government lends money to Ireland at a reasonable rate, and why should we not have the same fairplay, 3*l.* or 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. They have a fair valuation on their farm—what its produce is worth yearly.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,394. Do you think the rents in Ireland are as high as they are here?—No, the rents are higher here.

33,395. How do you find that out?—Because they have been lowered in Ireland for years.

33,396. Would you like to have a Court the same as they have in Ireland, to settle the rents?—Yes, I should like a Parish Council or a County Council, or somebody who understands the value of the land to value it in the neighbourhood—someone in the neighbourhood.

33,397. Do you think you would ever be able to pay the money back if you had that at a low interest?—There would be a chance then.

33,398. Do you think the people—as a rule, they are pretty honest people—try to pay back the whole of the money?—Oh, yes, certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,399. Mr. Vincent asks you: "You say "interest is from 4 to five per cent; do you think "the average landlord gets anything like this "return in the rent upon the price of the land "that he has bought?"—Yes; it is very likely, according to the rent that there is on now.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,400. You pay more to the mortgagees than to the landlords, I think?—We have to pay more when the farms are sold, because they have been improved.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,401. Are the rents generally raised before the farms are sold?—I cannot say that that is done always, but there have been some exceptions which have been treated in that way. The estate of Cwmgloyne was generally raised in that way before it was sold.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,402. "Would it surprise you to hear that "2½ per cent. is rather above the average return "to the landlord?"—I cannot say, but we pay a big rent.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,403. Do you have any profit from your farm now?—No, we suffer loss.

33,404. Would you like your landlord to share in that loss?—That would be fair.

Adjourned.

FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Corn Exchange, Town Hall, Abergavenny, Monmouthshire, Tuesday, 13th March 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR).

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

On the occasion of the first meeting of the Royal Commission to inquire into the tenure of land in Wales, when sitting in Glamorganshire about a year ago, the Chairman, Lord Carrington, who unfortunately is unable to be present here to-day, made this statement: "Experience has "shown that, unless witnesses speak out boldly "and without fear, inquiries like the one we "are engaged in are futile. We have no reason "to believe that undue pressure will be brought "upon any class of witnesses or any individual "witness; nor have we reason to think that "the giving of evidence by any person in this "county will lead to his being in any way "injured. But it is of course possible—we "cannot shut our eyes to what has before now "taken place in regard to affairs of this kind— "that some men are less scrupulous than others, "and that it is possible that witnesses who "speak here what is in their minds may be "subjected to loss and annoyance. We desire, "therefore (and it is our duty to do so), to point "out that the recent Act, the Witnesses' Protec- "tion Act, 1892, affords a remedy adequate to "meet any ordinary case." There was another paragraph also read, which was part of a letter from Mr. Vincent, on behalf of the Landowners' Association, and he said that, "First, the "association, albeit young in point of time, "represents a large number of landowners "possessed of great and small estates, and I am "expressly instructed to say that it is the desire "of this executive committee to afford all "possible assistance to the Commission towards "the common object of discovering the truth. "Secondly, an idea appears to prevail in some "quarters that the Commission exists for the "purpose of bringing contentious issues either "between political parties or between landlords "and tenants as opposed to one another. The "corollary to this wrong idea is the suggestion "that, in some form or another, tenants who "offer evidence may suffer resentment from "their landlords. On the part of my associa- "tion, I am instructed to repudiate this idea "absolutely, and to say that, apart from the "fact that witnesses before Royal Com- "missions have abundant protection, it is the "desire of the owners composing this associa- "tion, that every witness should give evidence "with a feeling of absolute security that he will "not suffer in any way."

Mr. JOHN JEFFREYS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,405. Are you Mr. John Jeffreys, of Brook Farm, Raglan?—Yes.

33,406. Do you mind telling the Commission how much land you farm?—I farm 246 acres together with my brother, who is with me, and also 38 acres of my own.

33,407. Do you desire to give any evidence in respect to the relations between landlord and tenant?—Yes.

33,408. What do you consider those relations to be?—My experience is that we are on the best of terms, and in sympathy with each other as far as I know. I have always had good landlords. I have had three.

33,409. Do you consider that those relations are affected in any way by difference of language?—No, I think not.

33,410. I suppose there are no Welsh people?—Oh, there are some Welsh people who have come into our part, into the English part of Monmouthshire, but they speak English.

33,411. Raglan is, generally speaking, an English part of the county?—Yes. I do not mean Raglan, I mean the circle surrounding that part.

33,412. Then the difference in language would have no effect upon the relations between landlord and tenant?—Certainly not. I think not.

33,413. Have creed or politics any effect upon the relations between landlord and tenant?—No, not that I am aware of. I have never seen a case.

33,414. Are you aware whether any farms in your district, in the English part of Monmouthshire, are held by Welshmen?—Yes.

33,415. That is practically what you said just now?—Yes.

33,416. Are those Welshmen some of them Nonconformists?—Yes.

33,417. Are some of them Liberals in politics?—Yes.

33,418. Does that make any difference in the treatment?—Certainly not. I have never seen any difference whatever.

33,419. I am quoting from the syllabus of your evidence; I take it from that that the landlords generally are churchmen and Conservatives; is that so?—Yes, generally.

33,420. That would be a corollary of what you have given me here?—Yes.

33,421. Are there any leases in your district?—I do not think there are many—very few.

33,422. Which system do you prefer, that of a yearly tenancy or of a lease?—Yearly tenancy. I think leases encourage tenants to run out the land at the latter end of the lease, not doing themselves any good or their landlords. Once I was very glad to get out of a lease; my landlord very kindly released me from the lease, and I had a chance to do better, as I thought.

33,423. To do better by changing your farm for another, do you mean?—Yes, it was a more convenient place.

33,424. How long was that lease?—14 years.

33,425. What is the period of notice that is customary round about you?—Generally speaking they sign a paper doing away with the Agricultural Holdings Act—the 12 months' notice—at least, I have done so many years ago; I signed out of it.

33,426. Then can you give it up on six months' notice?—Yes.

33,427. Is tenancy reasonably secure in your district?—Yes, certainly.

33,428. Under all proprietors, or under some?—Not all that I know; under all the old landlords certainly, unless a tenant farms very badly, or something of that sort.

33,429. Have you any agreement?—I have not signed the agreement; the thing has been neglected, or else it should have been signed. I went twice, and it was not ready.

33,430. I have it here that the terms are six months' notice and usual agreements?—Yes.

33,431. When you speak of usual agreements, are they upon a custom of the country or county?—No, I do not think so. We have to keep drains and keep the farms in proper order. I do not think there is much more than that.

33,432. Are you a tenant on a large estate, one of many?—Yes. I am under his Grace the Duke of Beaufort.

33,433. Are his agreements the usual ones?—Yes.

33,434. That is what you probably meant by the "usual agreement"?—Yes, that is what I did mean.

33,435. Are there any penalising clauses in the agreements?—No, not that I saw.

33,436. What is your opinion about Land Courts?—I think that we could do very much better without them. I think it would do away with the good feeling we have between landlords and tenants to a great extent, and I do not think it would be any good.

33,437. Would it have any effect upon the outlay that a landlord would make upon his land?—I believe so, because if a landlord got so that he did not care about his tenants, he would not do so much for them, I am afraid.

33,438. On the Duke of Beaufort's estate who does the substantial buildings, I mean the dwelling-houses, the cow-houses, and the outhouses,—the stables?—The duke does it all—the landlord does it all.

33,439. Who does the haulage?—The tenants do the hauling.

33,440. Does he do anything else towards the material improvements?—I had some land drained, and I hauled half the pipes.

33,441. That is as to drainage?—Yes.

33,442. I am now speaking of the buildings?—No, I think generally speaking the tenants do all the hauling.

33,443. Do they do anything else towards it?—No, I think not; not that I am aware of.

33,444. I suppose then the landlord finds the stones, the slates, the timber, and the mortar?—Yes.

33,445. The wages of the masons and carpenters?—Yes.

33,446. That is not a universal custon all over Wales. We did not find it was general except in Anglesey?—No, it is not the universal custom.

33,447. Then the landlords' improvements, so far as the houses are concerned, would be everything with the exception of the haulage?—Yes.

33,448. In respect of drainage what is the custom?—For the tenants to haul the pipes.

33,449. Who pays for the pipes themselves?—The landlord.

33,450. What is the time of year customary for giving up the farms?—Either Christmas or Candlemas. There are a few takings at Michaelmas, but not under large landowners.

33,451. Is that subject to any continuing use of the buildings?—Yes, the buildings till May, and the granaries, or at least half the granaries generally speaking, and half the barns generally speaking, till the May afterwards, for the going-off crop.

33,452. How much arable land is there?—One-third.

33,453. By whom is the clover seed paid for?—By the tenant coming in, although put in in the spring of the year before. It is put in in the spring of the year before with the corn—with the barley generally speaking.

33,454. Who pays for it, the incoming tenant?—The incoming tenant pays, and he pays for the harrowing and the sowing.

33,455. Has there been any allegation made that farmers are afraid to give evidence?—I have not heard anything in our neighbourhood. I do not think they need be if they would speak the truth.

33,456. You think that if witnesses would speak the truth they would not have much to fear?—No, I think not.

33,457. Would you give us your opinion as to the causes of the agricultural depression?—I think one great cause is the foreign competition, and the railway companies. We are handicapped by the railway companies. They charge us nearly as much again in some cases as they do the foreigner for transit.

33,458. Have you anything to say about foreign meat?—Yes, I think that should be all marked up as foreign, and not sold as English. I think that would make a very great difference.

33,459. Are you aware, of your own knowledge, that foreign meat is sold as English?—Well, only from the papers where I see cases. I know it through the newspapers.

33,460. Have you received abatements in rent?—Yes, I had an abatement myself.

33,461. Have you had any reduction?—I have had no abatement, but they are having it in some parts of the neighbourhood. I have had no abatement, but my farm has been reduced. I have not asked for an abatement, but some of the tenants round there are having abatements.

33,462. You have had a reduction in your rent?—Yes.

33,463. Have the abatements been continued from year to year?—Yes, they have been continued a good while some of them—more or less.

33,464. Which of the two systems do you think the best?—I think that the rents ought to come down on account of the depression, and they could be raised afterwards when things got better.

33,465. What is the practical difference between the two systems?—It makes a difference in this way, that the assessment is based upon the rent, and of course the rates have got to be paid upon the whole.

33,466. Quite so?—Then I think if there was an abatement they could go before the Assessment Committee and show that the rents were lowered.

33,467. If they had an abatement, do you say?—If it was reduced.

33,468. But there is a difference between the reduction and the abatement; the reduction is a permanent reduction, and the abatement, it may be, is for consecutive years, one after the other, but it is only a temporary reduction?—I made a mistake in the word I used.

33,469. That is the difference between the reduction and the abatement, and if you have a reduction you go to the Assessment Committee, and the assessment of your farm is reduced?—Yes, reduced to that amount.

33,470. In case of a temporary abatement, is there any chance of getting the Assessment Committee to reduce the rate?—No, not unless it is done on the year before. If it is done on the year before, and the tenant takes a note to show that the landlord had lowered the rent for that year—I think for two years I have seen it done—when a tenant has been lowered for two years to start with, I have seen it done by the Assessment Committee.

33,471. That is just the point I wanted to get at; if a tenant therefore can show to the Assessment Committee that the abatement is continued over a series of years, the Assessment Committee is open to meet him?—Yes.

33,472. We found a great difference in practice in different parts of Wales upon that point, I think?—I daresay there is.

33,473. Generally speaking, I think we usually find that the Assessment Committee will not reduce the rates upon a mere abatement, but they require a reduction of the rent?—I am on the Assessment Committee of Monmouth, and if the tenants can show that it has been lowered for two years we take it down.

33,474. How much reduction did you have?—I took the farm at 365*l.*, and I had the 65*l.* taken off.

33,475. You consider that it is better that the landlord should reduce rents rather than give abatements?—Yes, I do.

33,476. Then when trade improves you would consider that the rents should be raised in proportion to the improvement in the trade?—Yes, it would be only fair and right, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,477. Have you been connected with this county a long time, Mr. Jeffreys?—Yes, I was born in the parish of Raglan, and I have never been away.

33,478. How long have you been on your present farm?—11 years.

33,479. Has the rent been raised at all during that time?—No.

33,480. The acreage is 246, I think you said?—Yes.

33,481. And the rent 365*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

Less 65*l.* permanent reduction.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,482. On what estate is that?—His Grace the Duke of Beaufort's.

33,483. You are pretty well acquainted, I suppose, with the farms throughout the whole of the county, are you not, and the methods of farming adopted throughout the country?—Yes, more or less.

33,484. Mr. R. F. Boyle made a report upon Monmouthshire some thirty years ago, and I see that he contrasts what he calls English and Welsh farms in this way: he says "In both these "counties" (he is referring to Monmouthshire and Radnorshire) "there are two different kinds "of farming prevailing respectively on the "eastern and western sides, which we may "distinguish as the Welsh and English, the "principal characteristics of the former being, "so far as concerns our purpose, that the "labourers live in the farmers' houses, of the "latter, that they live in the cottages on the "farm"?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,485. Does your experience bear out that statement?—In some parts the labourers live in cottages. In some of the farms there are no cottages. I have had one cottage now for two or three years that I have had given to me by the duke's agent.

33,486. You rent the cottage from the duke as part of your holding?—Yes.

33,487. Then you let one of your labourers live in that cottage?—Yes.

33,488. Have you any labourers living in your house?—Yes, I have one in the house now. In summer I have three or four,

33,489. Could you help us in drawing a line on a map distinguishing between what may be called the more Welsh and the more English parts of Monmouthshire?—No, I could not.

33,490. You are at Raglan, as I understand it?—Yes.

33,491. Do any of the inhabitants of your neighbourhood, the neighbourhood of Raglan, habitually speak Welsh?—No, not habitually. I do not think there is anybody that speaks Welsh in Raglan parish.

33,492. But, speaking broadly, I suppose that the Welsh part is to the west of Raglan, is it not?—There are Welsh people on both sides of me, some at Llangoven; there are two farms joining at Llangoven.

33,493. Then those farmers are Welsh, are they?—Yes.

33,494. It is no good asking you in detail if you cannot tell us where you think the line ought to be drawn?—No, I do not know where it should be.

33,495. Is what Mr. Boyle points out the characteristic of difference between the western farms and the eastern farms?—Yes, so far as I know it is; I should think it is very likely to be right.

33,496. I suppose that the proportion of arable land to pasture is a very important element, is it not, in determining a farmer whether he will have his labourers in the house or out of the house, is it not?—Yes, certainly, because if it is pasture, he does not want so many labourers; if it is arable land, he wants more labourers.

33,497. And he wants, of course, in the case of pasture farms, the men to be always about, and easily accessible for him?—Yes; in both cases we want the men near.

33,498. Do you think that is the main reason for the distinction that Mr. Boyle has pointed out, and which appears still to exist in the difference between the methods of farming?—There may be a difference. In some things, the river Usk makes a difference, but I do not know whether it does in that.

33,499. Is there not still a want of cottage accommodation in this county?—Yes, there is in some farms I am sure. There are a great many farms that have got plenty of cottages, and there are a few that have not got them.

33,500. Have many of the cottages been allowed to go into ruins?—Yes, there is a great number. There are cottages independent of the farms altogether—a good many—but the cottages on the farms, generally speaking, are used in almost every case.

33,501. Mr. Boyle says that one peculiarity which he notices, is the number of small cottages held direct from the landowner at a very low rent, commonly called a cot rent?—Yes.

33,502. Do many of those very small cottage holdings still exist?—Yes, there are a good many in our parish.

33,503. A good many at Raglan, are there?—Yes, of that sort of cottages.

33,504. He gives an instance from Raglan: "Some individual would put up a little cottage "here, generally a mere hovel at first, but in "course of time, as he became more sure of not "being disturbed in his possession, would im- "prove the house, and take in more and more "garden land along the roadside, until there "has grown up in some parishes—Raglan for "instance—a sort of long narrow field cutting "off the farm from the roadside, and cut up "into small holdings, each with a garden, some- "times with an orchard attached, and sometimes "even, if the holding be larger, a bit of corn or "roots. Some of these are freehold, but the "greater part pay some small rent to an adjoin- "ing proprietor"?—That is quite true.

33,505. That is quite true still?—Yes.

33,506. What is the general condition of those cottages?—They are rather small generally speaking; some of them are very good.

33,507. Are the cotters who live in those cottages better off than the farm labourers proper—In some cases they are, because they are independent. They are working on the line of railway, some of them, and of course they get more wages than we can afford to give them.

33,508. Have the landowners in Monmouthshire been building cottages much?—No.

33,509. Mr. Boyle says, "In this county it "has been for a long time not the habit fo "landed proprietors to build cottages, and con- "sequently in such towns as Usk and Caerleon "there is a large agricultural population going "out in many instances long distances to work." During the years that have elapsed since this report, which was made in the year 1862, have the landowners been building many cottages on their estates, to any extent?—No, not many; not to any extent.

33,510. Is there a scarcity of labour on the farms in Monmouthshire?—There is a scarcity of good men, what I should call men that we can trust.

33,511. I ought to put my question in a different way: do you find it more difficult to get good agricultural labourers now than formerly?—Yes, very much more difficult.

33,512. And of course the good men want higher wages than they were in the habit of getting formerly?—Yes, we are giving them higher wages.

33,513. What wages do you generally give?—I give to my waggoner 14*s.* a week, and I have another man to whom I pay 15*s.* The waggoner cannot do anything except look after the horses, but the other man, the one I give 15*s.* to, can do anything. They have their food through the two harvests, and in the beginning of the harvests, from the commencement of the hay harvest, they have their food with me till the end of the corn harvest, that is to say, they do not come sometimes to breakfast, but they always have their food if they like. They work overtime, and I give them their food on account of overtime.

33,514. They have to provide their own cottages on those terms, I suppose?—Yes.

33,515. What wages does the man who has a cottage given to him on the farm get?—Well, one of these men that I have got has a cottage on another farm of the Duke's. Another party lent that man to me; he is not my man, although he has been with me 12 months; there having been a dry summer and this farmer having got young men, he did not want him, and he is staying with me till next May. He has got a cottage on another farm that I have not got, in fact I have not got a cottage for him, he is only lent to me.

33,516. From your knowledge of the country, would you say that the movement as to which we have had evidence in other counties exists here, namely, a general movement from the country towards the towns?—Yes, they move somewhat; they go to the hills from us. I have had to put my hand to paper for several young men; when they get useful they want to go away—the best young fellows—because we do not give them enough wages I think; they want more wages than we can afford to give, and they get away, and of course they have a good character, and I am always pleased to put my hand to paper for them.

33,517. Coming to another point upon which you touched, namely the question of improvements, you said that here, as in other places, the tenant has been in the habit of providing haulage, and the landlord provides the material for the work in the way of permanent improvements, buildings, and so forth?—Yes.

33,518. Do you find that the tenant farmers in this county are sufficiently alive to the need for such improvements; do they try to get their landlords to help them to improve the farm buildings and so forth?—Yes, I think so.

33,519. What is the condition of the farm buildings generally; are they adequate, for instance, the cow-houses and so forth?—Perhaps you mean, built in the modern style.

33,520. Yes, built in a modern and satisfactory style?—Yes, the new buildings are, but the old buildings are not very convenient.

33,521. Do you think that the expense of the haulage has a tendency to discourage the tenant farmer from urging the landlord or the agent to go in for improved buildings?—No, I do not think so. I do not quite understand your question.

33,522. Do you think that the expense and bother of hauling discourages the tenant farmer from pressing upon the agent or the landlord the necessity for improved modern buildings?—I do not know; I do not think so. We generally do it at a time when we are not so busy, at least I have many years ago, and my father before me. We feel quite safe with these old landlords; we are never disturbed. My father rented under Colonel Tynte, and I after him for some years, and my father always used to say it was as good as a freehold, and we were quite as safe as if it was our own as long as we did our duty and farmed properly.

33,523. Can you tell me what average proportion, in a county like this, the expenses of the haulage bear to the expenses of the materials in the way of improvements and buildings?—No, I cannot.

33,524. It depends very much on the distance, and so on?—Of course it does.

33,525. It is rather difficult to ascertain?—Yes.

33,526. My reason for asking is that in the very competent letters which I have called attention to before, which have appeared in the "Western Mail," there is an account of an interview in which an apparently skilled person informed the correspondent of the paper that in some places the proportion of the expense of the haulage amounts to 40 per cent. of the cost of the buildings, and that it always comes to 20 or 25 per cent. Would you agree to that?—It certainly would not amount to 40 per cent. It could not be possible, I should think, to make it up to 40 per cent.

33,527. Not even where the farm is situated in some inaccessible place?—No, I should think not. We have railways now in all parts.

33,528. You think the railways have made a great deal of difference?—Yes, the railways have. They have brought material much closer.

33,529. When these improvements are made is it customary for the landlord to add something to the rent by way of interest on the expenditure?—I have known of a case. I have known several cases otherwise, where there was nothing added.

33,530. I do not think you referred at all to the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883. Do you, from your knowledge of the Act, and from what you have seen, consider the Act is a satisfactory one?—I do not think it is very easily worked. The legal part of it is very costly, I think.

33,531. Most of the witnesses have told us that. Is it often resorted to, in fact, in this neighbourhood?—No, I do not think it is. I should not want to make use of it under the landlords I have got, because they allow me to sell the hay if I want to and what I like, as long as I farm to their satisfaction.

33,532. What is in fact done when a tenant leaves a farm here, supposing he is leaving quite amicably, what is done as to compensating him for unexhausted improvements?—I do not know of a case just in our neighbourhood where they have asked for anything. They went out They are allowed to sell hay, and his Grace the Duke of Beaufort does not interfere, and as they are allowed to sell hay, they think on account of selling the hay that they are not entitled to much. They farm as they like, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,533. Then I gather from your evidence that there has not been of recent years much change among tenant farmers?—No, I do not think there has. We have had a few deaths not far from us.

33,534. What happens on the Duke of Beaufort's estate when a tenant dies; who gets the farm generally?—The eldest son generally.

33,535. So that the farms have been kept in many instances for a good long time in the same family?—Oh, yes.

33,536. Was that the case with your own family; have your family been farmers about Raglan for some time?—Yes, my father was brought up on one of the Duke of Beaufort's farms, but his brother had the farm after, and then he gave it up, and they wanted my father to go back there, but he took another farm. Then he had a farm under Colonel Tynte.

33,537. In one of the letters I was referring to, reverting to the improvements for a moment, I forgot to ask you this. Do you know Mr. Verrinder?—Yes. He is dead.

33,538. It was said by Mr. Verrinder that the farmers of the county do very little in the way of improving their holdings?—They do not farm as well as they used to.

33,539. Has there been any general change in your time in the method of farming about Raglan?—No.

33,540. I will tell you what I mean: is there as much arable land now as there was?—Yes, there is. There is a good deal put down in several parts. I have put down a good deal myself to grass.

33,541. We have had evidence of that before. You think that the change has been going on here also?—Yes, I think that change has been going on all the time.

33,542. Have the farmers in your district felt the depression of late years very greatly?—Yes, they have.

33,543. Of course, do not answer the question unless you like, but do you find it difficult to pay your rent, and make both ends meet?—No. I have got a little means of my own, and I have no difficulty.

33,544. But if you had not got means of your own, you would have been hard pressed during the last few years?—Yes, I should certainly have lost the interest on my capital. I should have had no interest on my capital, certainly.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,545. You mentioned in your evidence that tenants are reasonably secure under old landed proprietors?—Yes.

33,546. Do you believe that is so with respect to any proprietors besides old landed proprietors in this district?—There are some people that do not own more than a farm or two, and that sort of thing.

33,547. You consider they are not quite as secure under those as under the old estates?—No, certainly not. In some cases they would be secure, but not in all—it would not be so general.

33,548. Are there many farms sold in this neighbourhood generally?—No; we have not had many sold at Raglan; we have had a few.

33,549. Do they change hands more frequently than the old estates—do they change their tenants?—Yes, I think so.

33,550. Have those tenants had an abatement or a reduction of rent in these depressed times, do you know?—Some of them have, and some of them have not.

33,551. You spoke of the tenants doing all the hauling on the estates; have you any express time for the period of exhaustion for doing that hauling; if a man does much hauling in building, and he finds that the farm is too dear, and he is obliged to leave, is he paid for it all when he leaves?—Not that I am aware of.

33,552. You have not known any instances where a tenant has been paid when he leaves?—No.

33,553. The changes are not very frequent, I suppose, are they?—No, they are not. They generally do a lot of hauling where they feel themselves secure.

33,554. Are abatements of rent generally made in this district?—Well, yes. In the Duke of Beaufort's case they make abatements; I do not know whether they do to all or not, but they do give back a certain amount, and on some of the farms regularly, or nearly regularly—almost every year.

33,555. Is the rent near about the same as it used to be in the sixties and seventies—I mean when corn was selling well, 6*s.* or 7*s.* a bushel?—In some cases the rents are the same.

33,556. In some cases much the same?—Yes.

33,557. Do you think a farmer can make so much out of his farm now as he could in those days?—Certainly not.

33,558. Do you think that the abatements that are made are sufficient to meet the present depression?—I do not know. I do not think they are—not to meet it all round, but I look at it in this light, that the landlords and the tenants should both suffer, I think, in bad times; I think we all ought to suffer alike.

33,559. A tenant can surely make no money in these times, can he?—No.

33,560. You think the landlord should meet him?—Yes, he should meet him and assist him, certainly. It is his interest to do so if he has good tenants.

33,561. If this present depression continues, do you think that farmers, as a rule, will be able to hold on at the present rents?—No, unless they get helped from the landlords, or some other aid.

33,562. Have you any instances of cottagers keeping cows on their holdings?—No.

33,563. None?—No, I cannot remember one

33,564. Do you not think that would tend to keep the labourers on the farms, and to prevent their running into the towns and populous districts?—Indeed, I do not know.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

33,565. We have found it in other places?—They go away when they are young men, before they get married. It is when they are young men that they go away.

33,566. You say that labourers are not quite so competent as they were years ago?—No, certainly not.

33,567. Do they not take the pride they used to in learning to thatch?—No, there are very few labourers who know how to thatch, or to hedge, or anything of that sort—to make ricks and so on—very few.

33,568. You generally, I suppose, have the aged men on the farms and the young men, the most able-bodied men, go elsewhere, do they not?—Yes, just as they come about 18 and 20 they go away.

33,569. They go away where they can earn some wages?—Yes.

33,570. But do you not still think it would be to the advantage of the farmer to keep those most able-bodied men on the farms?—Certainly.

33,571. What is to become of the aged men if you do it, I cannot tell, but it is just the same case in my neighbourhood. Do the labourers' wives go out upon the farms here at all?—No, they do not do that.

33,572. Not at all?—They used to do so.

33,573. I see by Mr. Boyle's report a great many used to?—Yes; they do not now.

33,574. Do farmers generally find that a loss to them or a benefit?—Well, it is a loss, because if the women can go out and help in the hayfield when the weather is bad it is often a great help to us.

33,575. And they used to hoe turnips, I suppose?—They have not hoed turnips in my neighhourhood.

33,576. I suppose the women do not do any milking?—No.

33,577. The men do all the milking?—Yes, generally speaking.

33,578. You have some Welshmen come into the neighbourhood; do they not bring some Welsh girls with them to do the milking?—I think the Welsh girls do milk.

33,579. Still I find according to this report that they soon pick up the habit that is common to the neighbourhood; they dislike milking, and will not milk after a few years?—Oh, yes, milking is hard work if it is done properly.

33,580. I quite agree. Is this a dairy district; is there much dairying done in this neighbourhood?—No, not done in my neighbourhood.

33,581. Have you had any dairy schools here—any teachers?—Yes, I could not get the young people to come to them; I tried what I could.

33,582. You did try?—I was in communication with the Technical Instruction Committee, and I did all I could.

33,583. And you could not succeed in getting them together?—I could not succeed in getting anybody to come, not more than two or three.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

33,584. The butter making is not very satisfactory in this neighbourhood I should think?—There is a lot of bad butter made in our neighbourhood; I see a lot of bad butter in the shops.

33,585. Have landlords in the neighbourhood done anything to improve the dairies, to make them suitable for present dairy appliances?—Well, I do not think there has been anything done yet. Some dairies are very good and some very poor.

33,586. What do you consider the value of the food and drink you give your labourers from the beginning of haymaking to the end of harvest?—I have never thought about it.

33,587. You have not considered it?—No, but it must be worth something.

33,588. Suppose the labourer had his wages in money altogether, how much do you think it would amount to?—They seem to rather prefer the food and drink. They have as much drink as they like. They have what drink they like. They have their bottles filled, and when they are out they have them filled again.

33,589. What do you generally give them to drink?—Cider.

33,590. You say you have a good deal of arable land laid down to pasture?—Yes.

33,591. How does the land take to grass, does it soon recover itself?—Yes, generally speaking, when it is put down properly.

33,592. It is rather an expensive process?—Yes, very.

33,593. It requires some top dressing afterwards, does it not?—Yes, I paid 30*s.* an acre for my seeds, and they have done very well.

33,594. You do not know any instances where landlords have paid for seeds for permanent pastures?—Yes, my landlord has.

33,595. Quite so; I think they should do their part in that way?—Yes, he has done the most of it. I put down 40 acres and I put down 8 out of the 40 myself; the rest was done by the landlord.

33,596. How do you find that land afterwards; do you think it pays you as well as when you used to grow wheat and barley years ago?—Yes, because wheat is not worth scarcely anything now.

33,597. Not now, but at the time when wheat was selling at 6*s.* or 7*s.* a bushel?—Oh, yes, in that case it paid very well.

33,598. Are the applications for farms very numerous in this neighbourhood when they are to let?—Yes, if it is a desirable farm, if it is a good one.

33,599. But in general I mean?—If it is a good farm there are plenty of applications. If it is in a good position, near a railway or a village, and there is a good road to it and it is good land and that sort of thing there are more applications.

33,600. You said just now that farmers do not farm quite so well now as they formerly did?—No

33,601. What is the reason do you think?—I do not think it pays. One reason is we have not got so good a class of labour and the other is that it does not pay, there is not that encouragement.

33,602. But still if there is no labour employed it is more unlikely to pay, is it not?—Yes, certainly.

33,603. It is not because the farmer has not the same capital that he formerly had to lay out?—That would surely have something to do with it, a great deal to do with it.

33,604. You think there is plenty of labour and plenty of work to be done on the farm?—Yes.

33,605. There is no scarcity of labour?—No, the work is there to be done, and if it is not done of course it soon tells.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,606. You told Mr. Brynmor Jones that you did not get any interest on the capital invested in your own farm. I shall not press for an answer to this question, but you can answer it if you like; are you rewarded for the labour expended on your farm—for your labour?—I lose what I think is about the interest on my capital. That is what I think.

33,607. Have you any children?—No, I have never married.

33,608. You say in your précis that there should be more uniformity between the rent and the value of the holding; that is, that rents should be assessed in accordance with the price of produce and stock. Would you go so far as to recommend that this should be carried out by law?—No, I would not. I like freedom myself. If we have got good landlords, I have no doubt that that could be managed without a law interfering in any way.

33,609. How would it be with bad landlords?—Well, of course there would be a difficulty in that matter.

33,610. I suppose the tenants of the bad ones would go to the wall?—They must suffer, of course.

33,611. And you think it is better that some bad ones should go to the wall than that there should be any interference in the relations between landlord and tenant?—Well, as far as I am concerned I do not want any interference, and I believe there are a great many others that do not, when we have good landlords.

33,612. You are not prepared to speak as to the tenants of the bad landlords?—No, I know nothing about bad landlords. I never had one.

33,613. Are there any in Monmouthshire?—I do not know. The larger ones would not be, I think. That is as a rule.

33,614. Do you find any of the clauses in your agreement harsh or in any way a grievance?—No. The Duke of Beaufort never interferes with his tenants and never turns tenants out, I think, unless they farm very bad. I do not know a case even where he has turned one out, although there are some farmers who farm bad—very bad indeed.

33,615. You do not find this clause a grievance, "The tenant shall annually find a 'walk' and

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

"other requisite attention for the rearing of a "foxhound puppy for the landlord"?—Well, I have done that.

33,616. They do it cheerfully?—Yes. I have never grumbled at it.

33,617. Is a clause like this bound to be carried out in its integrity—that the tenant shall not do any haulage except what he does in respect of his farm?—Not hauling timber or anything?

33,618. Anything?—Well, there is a man that hauls a lot of timber under the duke in our parish. That is all I know. In fact he is always at it nearly. He is one of the tenants of the duke, and a large farmer too, and I know he is not interfered with.

33,619. Is the Ground Game Act operative on the duke's estate?—Yes, for ground game.

33,620. You avail yourselves of the Ground Game Act generally?—Oh, yes, the tenants try to have—at least a few of them try to have—a few rabbits and that sort of thing, and they kill the rabbits themselves. The winged game the duke gives to Lord Raglan. I shoot, but his lordship always asks me to shoot along when they come up, and they give me some game.

33,621. You do not find that game prevails to such an extent as to damage the crops?—Oh no, not with us certainly.

33,622. Nor anyone on the estate?—No, not on his grace's estate; there has not been a case that I know of unless the tenant keeps too many rabbits for himself.

33,623. You do not find that there is any fear amongst the tenants to make use of the Ground Game Act?—Oh, no, they are shooting the rabbits and preserving rabbits for their own use under the duke.

Mr. Seebohm.

33,624. Your farm is 246 acres and your rent seems to be from 24*s.* to 25*s.* per acre I think?—Yes, about 25*s.* or a little over.

33,625. Since the reduction?—Yes.

33,626. Would you explain whether that is an ordinary rent, or is your farm a better farm than others?—Oh, it is a little better than some of the farms. I have got a good deal of bottom land—meadows—a little better than some of the rest of the farms.

33,627. That is the most valuable kind of land?—Yes.

33,628. For fattening stock?—Yes and for bringing up stock—rearing stock—rearing stock more than fattening.

33,629. What would be the usual rent of an ordinary farm in your district?—I should think 1*l.* or under.

33,630. I suppose your district is not a mountainous district?—No.

33,631. Then the little pasture farms are generally mountain farms, are they?—Yes, there is no mountain near Raglan.

33,632. But when you get among the more mountainous districts the farms are smaller probably, are they?—Yes, I think so.

33,633. And more pasture farms?—Yes.

33,634. Are there any of them really dairy farms?—I do not know; you see I live a long way from these places. I know but very little about that; they have a lot of sheep generally speaking running on the hills.

33,635. The farms about which you know most are those which, like your own, are chiefly arable?—No, mine is not chiefly arable. I get more pasture than arable.

33,636. Meadow and pasture?—Yes, meadow and pasture.

33,637. Then may I ask this question. In these bad times, supposing that a farmer has lost a portion of his capital, do you think it is an advantage to him to keep the farm the same size or to put his smaller capital on a smaller quantity of land?—Of course, if he has not got enough money he cannot go on very well, and perhaps it would be better for him to have a smaller farm.

33,638. That is to say, if a man has 1,000*l.* to put on to a farm, he would get more money out of a small farm than out of a large farm?—But generally speaking they are dearer. There are more applicants for a small farm than for a large one.

33,639. Would the rents be higher?—The rents would be higher, I think.

33,640. Higher in proportion?—Yes.

33,641. Do you think there is more to be made out of the land if that style of farm was more general, instead of people extending their capital over a large area than over a small area?—I do not know.

33,642. You do not feel quite able to answer that question?—No, I do not know about that.

33,643. Yours would be rather a larger farm than the average, I suppose?—Yes.

33,644. What would be the average size of the farms—what would they run?—About 100 acres or 150; 150 I should think would be about it. There are one or two larger farms in Raglan than mine.

33,645. But about 100 acres would probably be the average?—150 acres, I should think, would be the average between.

Mr. Grove.

33,646. I think we gather from you that your general opinion is that difference in religion and politics makes no unpleasantness between landlord and tenant?—I never knew a case in our neighbourhood.

33,647. You have not heard of such things in other districts near you?—No, I have not.

33,648. You spoke also of having a farm on a lease. I think your words were that you were glad to get out of the lease?—Yes.

33,649. Can you tell us the reason why, and how many years were unexpired when you gave it up?—I think about four or five years, and the reason was I took another farm. I did not want it; it was some distance away from my other farm.

33,650. Not because the lease you had taken was at a high rent?—No, oh no.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,651. Have there been many changes in tenancy in your district?—Yes, there have been a few changes, but not many.

33,652. Is there any special reason why those changes took place?—Death in some cases. Mr. Lloyd, of Cefngoch, died, and so did Mr. Morgan, of the Lodge, in the same year, two of the largest farmers.

33,653. Have any of the large landowners been selling in your district lately, within the last two or three years?—Selling the tenants' property?

33,654. Yes, selling their properties?—No, I think not.

33,655. Then as to agreements. Do we gather that you have an agreement now for your present holding?—No, I have not got an agreement, but it is very likely that Mr. Verrinder forgot all about it; that is the reason, no doubt.

33,656. But it is usual for each tenant, I suppose, to have an agreement—a regular printed form?—Yes.

33,657. And each owner has his own particular form of agreement?—Yes.

33,658. Do you know when the farmer takes the farm, is a copy of that agreement given to him in all cases?—I do not know that. I had no agreement whatever with one of my landlords before; there was an old agreement of my father's, I think, about 50 years ago, but the one landlord that I had, I never had any agreement with him whatever.

Mr. Seebohm.

33,659. May I ask whether the custom of Glamorganshire is very different from the custom in Monmouthshire, the next county?—Oh, yes, we have not any custom with us much besides the custom as to what is to be left at May. We leave the house at May, but we give up the land, except the boozy pastures as we call them, at Christmas or Candlemas. Then we have one-third of the arable land for growing an off-crop of wheat; then, if there are two granaries, we have one till the next May afterwards, to store the grain; again, if there are two barns, we get one. The clover, again, is paid for. There is not much custom with us more than that.

Mr. Grove.

33,660. I suppose you would consider it desirable for each tenant, when he takes a farm, to have a copy of the agreement given to him by the agent, so that he may take it home and understand exactly the conditions on which he has taken his farm?—It certainly is more like business.

33,661. Have you known of any rents being advanced the last few years?—No.

33,662. When abatements are made is notice of the abatement given a month or two beforehand to the tenants?—I think not.

33,663. Would it not be desirable; for instance would not a tenant farmer sometimes sell stock perhaps at a disadvantage, in order to get the money ready for his rent, and then when he came to pay his rent, find that he had got an abatement, say, of 20 per cent.?—I think it would be a very good thing for him to know; it would help him.

33,664. We have found that as much as two or three months' notice, and sometimes even six months' notice, is given to the tenant farmer: "Now you will get an abatement next half-year "of say 10, 20, or 15 per cent." Then he knows exactly what to do?—Certainly.

33,665. In some cases we have been told that a farmer has sold his stock at a great disadvantage, and then has come home with part of the money in his pocket from the rent audit?—Certainly it would be better for him to know.

33,666. Do we gather from you that there is not quite as much labour on the land as you would like to see. Do the fences and ditches suffer much now?—They have been suffering, but the last two years I have been able to get men to hedge and that sort of thing better than I did before.

33,667. So that you think things are improving?—Yes, as regards labour it is improving a little.

33,668. Then you also said that you had made some personal effort to get students to the butter school?—Yes.

33,669. And that in some cases you had failed?—Yes.

33,670. Now why was that, because it is a very important thing. The county council is spending a lot of money over this agricultural teaching, and we are particularly anxious, if there is any prejudice, to try to remove it. First of all, do you consider that a butter school is an advantage?—I believe the butter school is, but some of the other things I do not think. The chemistry I do not think is much good unless it is begun sooner, unless boys are taught in school, I mean. We cannot get grown-up men to go to it. I tried; I did my best for that.

33,671. I suppose your land is fairly good?—Yes.

33,672. And at Raglan and about that part at any rate your tenants are quite as intelligent, possibly more, than in some other parts of the county, and it may be that the quality of your butter is very decent there, is it not?—There is some very good butter, but there is some very bad butter. I have got to go to a shop and be very careful when I have any butter, or else I may get very bad butter.

33,673. If that quality that is now bad could be improved, would not that butter be worth 2*d.* or 3*d.* a pound more?—I believe the dairy school would do good if the people would take to it, but they will not take to it.

33,674. It is most unfortunate, and I trust it will have the sympathy of intelligent farmers in all parts of the county as far as possible. Now is there any game preserving in your part?—No.

33,675. Are there any unpleasant relations caused between landlords and tenants through the game matter?—No.

33,676. Not at all?—Not at all in my experience.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,677. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers for purchasing feed stuffs or manures?—No. As to manures, we have co-operated before now. We have joined together and had a large quantity, 20 tons I remember one year, and then I have had it at the same rate afterwards from the same party.

33,678. Is there any sub-letting by the tenant farmers, sub-letting of small pieces here and there of accommodation land at a higher rent than the farmer pays for it?—No, I do not think so. There is very little sub-letting in our neighbourhood.

33,679. Do you think the landlords of the district would be averse to it, or would they give consent to it?—I do not think they would like it. I do not think they like the tenant to under-let, sub-let, or that sort of thing.

33,680. You spoke of the railway rates. You spoke of the competition of foreign produce in this country; but what about the local railway rates, the railway rates for transferring your produce (if you do so) from such a place as Raglan to Pontypool market, or to Abergavenny, or otherwise; do you consider those railway rates are reasonable, or are they excessive?—Well, unless we can make 4 ton lots they come very heavy.

33,681. Do you make use of the railway in sending butter for any distance; for instance, a hundredweight?—I breed Herefords; I do not make butter; I have got no dairy, or very little; we make a few cheeses for our own use, that is all.

33,682. Would it be an advantage if there was a centre for butter making like they have in Wiltshire and other places, where the farmers send in their milk and make the butter, wait a few minutes and then take back the butter-milk, so as to get uniformity of quality?—Do they get the butter-milk to go back with?

33,683. Oh, yes, they wait about 20 minutes for it; they do not perhaps get the actual stuff milked, but they get the same quality. You do not perhaps know much about that?—No; but I think in our neighbourhood there is very little dairy work; they breed more; there is very little dairy work done, and that is the reason why these schools do not take so well.

33,684. In speaking of fixing a judicial rent you say you would not like to have any interference between the landlord and the tenant?—No, I think not.

33,685. But would not the objection be partly removed if it was always understood that the landlord and the tenant first of all met and discussed the matter and tried to put their heads together and agree upon a certain line. If there were a clause of that kind put in, we will say, to a Land Bill, would not the objection be a little removed, because you would only go to the court if the landlord and the tenant could not agree between themselves?—Well, of course, but I have never had any difficulty and have never found any difficulty.

33,686. Have you never heard of difficulties?—No.

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,687. In other districts, I mean, difficulties between landlords and tenants as to rents or as to improvements that have been made on the land ?—I only know what I see from time to time in the newspapers in Wales ; that is all I know.

33,688. Have you any open spaces at Llandenny or Raglan ; are there any open spaces—commons ?—There is at Llandenny ; there is one open space there called Trewirgen Common.

33,689. Whom does it belong to ?—Well, the gypsies a great deal ; they are for ever there.

33,690. I believe they utilize it to a considerable extent ?—Yes.

33,691. But is it belonging to the duke or is it charity land, do you know ?—I should think it is the duke's. It is not charity land, I think. The people round there, the neighbours, have a right to turn on it ; but it is just one or two people that have time to look after the thing that get it. The poor man with two or three cows or sheep looks after it mostly.

33,692. What is the acreage of it ; do you know the size of it ?—I should think it is about 3 acres.

33,693. Is it vested in trustees ?—No.

33,694. Nothing of that sort ?—No.

33,695. You would hardly know the conditions on which it is held ?—No.

33,696. Is there any open space near to Raglan ?—No, we have no open space.

33,697. Is there any other open space near your district that you know anything of ?—There is a small place on the Walks in Llandenny, about an acre, I think, called the Walks.

33,698. To whom does that belong ?—Well, there is a road going round it ; I should think it belongs to the county council as much as anybody ; the roads go right round it.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,699. You are acquainted more or less with the Glamorganshire custom that was mentioned just now ?—No, I am not, only what I see now and then in the newspapers, I am not acquainted with it.

33,700. Then it is no use my asking you about it ; you do not suppose that the Glamorganshire custom extends to any part of Monmouthshire, do you ?—No, I think not. I am not aware of it.

33,701. What is the average size of farms in your district ?—About 150 acres, I should think, would be the average.

33,702. Then yours is considerably above the average in size ?—Yes.

33,703. I think you said you keep Herefordshire cattle ?—Yes.

33,704. Then you do not find the question of breed one of any importance in your district ?—No.

33,705. Do you breed horses at all, or do your neighbours ?—Yes, we breed horses, but not to any extent—not further than two colts a year ; sometimes one, sometimes two.

33,706. Then sheep. Do you breed sheep ?—Yes.

33,707. What breed are they ?—Well, I have got Cotswold sheep.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,708. What breed of horses have you ?—Well, big, heavy carthorses.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,709. Shire ?—Shire, yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

33,710. Do you consider them a good breed ? My colleague is very severe on some of the horses in this part of the world, I know. Do you consider your breed a useful and good sort of breed ?—Yes, I think so ; there might be a little improvement, perhaps.

33,711. I think you suggested—at least I understood you to say, with regard to the young men who go away to the hills and so on, that wages was only one thing that induced them to go, because the farmers themselves pay an advanced rate of wages now ?—Yes, but that is not enough for these people now ; they get so much more ; as colliers they get more than they can get here—at least they have been getting. I do not know what they do now.

33,712. I understood you to say that wages was only one consideration that made them go. Were you referring to anything else ?—Some of them go to the town ; young men, of course, want a change very often, even if it is for the worse, sometimes.

33,713. They prefer to go to the towns ?—They go to the towns, and go to the railway companies and to the police force, and all that sort of thing.

33,714. Do you think that the cottage accommodation has anything to do with that ?—No, I do not think so, because we have got cottages idle in different parts of the parish generally—always cottages idle.

33,715. You talked of a certain kind of cottages in answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones' questions just now. I do not think you said what the rent was of those. The term cot-rent was used ?—Yes, sometimes 1*s.* and sometimes 2*s.* 6*d.*, just as the case may be 33,716. For what time ?—For a year.

33,717. But what is the rent of the other cottages in your district, about ?—Oh, 3*l.* and 4*l.* By the village it would be a little more, and in the village.

33,718. You could do with more cottage accommodation on your farm ?—Yes, I could do with another cottage. I have got one.

33,719. How many labourers, how many servants, do you keep yourself ?—Do you mean workmen and all ?

33,720. How many day labourers ?—I have got two men working out, and I have got one in the house. I ought to have two, but the other has gone. I ought to have four in the winter.

33,721. You ought to have four in the house?—No, I have got two out of the horse.

33,722. You have one servant living in the house?—Yes, one; but I ought to have two.

33,723. Where would you house those two if you had them; would they sleep in the house?—In the house, yes.

33,724. Or in an outhouse?—Oh, no, in the house.

33,725. Is that the usual practice?—Yes, I have never known of men sleeping in outhouses. I do not know of a case.

33,726. You have never heard of a case of a bedroom being over a loft or over one of the outhouses?—No.

33,727. That is not usual in your district?—No.

33,728. I have been asking this question in most districts, and I like to compare the results. What is the food of your men, the food in the house generally; for instance, what would you give them for breakfast?—I will tell you what I give them. I do not know what other people give them. I give them some fried bacon in the morning, and tea, for breakfast.

33,729. That is rather better than we have heard sometimes?—That is what they have had always with me. Nothing worse than that.

33,730. Then in the middle of the day?—In the middle of the day up to the middle of the week we have got fresh meat, beef or mutton. That always lasts till the middle of the week. Then, sometimes, we have some boiled bacon the latter part of the week.

33,731. What else, potatoes?—Potatoes and vegetables—always two vegetables for them.

33,732. And plenty of bread and cheese?—Oh, yes.

33,733. Any meal in the afternoon?—Yes, always a lunch in the afternoon, and in the morning, during summer time.

33,734. In the middle of the morning?—In the middle of the morning, before dinner. With me they always have lunch in the morning, and after dinner, in the summer.

33,735. Then supper?—Yes, they have supper.

33,736. What do they have?—Oh, they generally have bread and cheese for supper.

33,737. What do they drink, generally, cider?—Yes, cider.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,738. Mr. Richard Jones asked you about the hound puppies?—Yes.

33,739. It is a very old custom I suppose?—Yes, very old.

33,740. Have you ever heard of its being objected to?—No.

33,741. Do you think that it tends to improve the good relations between landlord and tenant or the reverse?—Well, a good many of the tenants are very particular about the hound, and very careful of the hound always.

33,742. Do they get a puppy show?—No, they do not have a puppy show.

33,743. I daresay some of the tenants take part occasionally in the hunting. Are there many hounds about you?—There are not many. Of course there are the Monmouthshire hounds.

33,744. The puppies to be walked I suppose are the Duke of Beaufort's puppies, to go back to Gloucestershire?—Yes.

33,745. Have they not got a puppy show?—He used to have a show and give a prize for the best—I think a silver teapot or something like that he used to give.

33,746. There have been vacant farms in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

33,747. I think you gave us two instances?—Yes.

33,748. Have there been many applicants when there is a vacancy. We have heard a good deal in other parts of Wales about what is called land hunger; that is, a great many applicants applying for one vacancy?—There were a few; I will not say many; there were a number of applications for the farms.

33,749. What sort of number; do you mean three or four?—Yes, three or four, but I do not think there were many for that farm.

33,750. Do you think there would be a larger competition for large farms or for small farms?—Oh, small farms would have the largest competition. That is an arable farm that I was speaking of, and I think that was a good deal of the reason why there were not so many applying for it.

33,751. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act well?—No, I do not.

33,752. Do you think that it is much thought of in the neighbourhood?—No, I do not think so. It is never made use of, I think, much.

33,753. One of the questions that has generally been asked, and no doubt has passed under your eye, is this: do farmers often apply for the landlord's written consent for specific improvements?—No, I think not.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,754. Is there very marked difference in the mode of farming and the way of living of the English and the Welsh farmer in your districts?—Generally speaking I think the Welsh people live harder and work harder than the English people—generally speaking—but not always.

33,755. Do their wives take a part in the work?—Yes, and the daughters too, more than English people.

33,756. They work on the farm?—Yes.

33,757. And do the children generally work harder than the English farmer's children?—I think they do.

33,758. They take more part in the work of the farm?—Yes, I think they do.

33,759. Do many of the farmers keep accounts in this neighbourhood?—No, very few.

33,760. Do landlords generally do much in the way of introducing good sires for horses, cattle, and sheep, and pigs in the neighbourhood?—Some landlords do. Lord Llangattock has generally got a good sire horse.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

33,761. Does he generally charge for the use of the sires?—I am not sure, but I do not think he charges the tenants anything; I know he does not for his bull.

33,762. It is a very good way of improving the stock in the district, is it not?—Yes, a very good way.

33,763. Do any of the gentlemen keep bulls or cows in the same way?—Lord Llangattock does. One of his tenants was telling me the other day that he only had to pay the man something for looking after the bull; he gave him 1*s.* generally for each cow.

33,764. Do the tenants usually take advantage of that sort of thing?—Yes.

33,765. They do?—Yes.

33,766. Do you consider that the stock is a great deal improved?—Yes, there are some very good things round our part.

33,767. If the stock is bred from inferior sires it is not of much account, is it, as a rule?—That is so.

33,768. That is not the case in your neighbourhood?—It is not so round Llangattock. We have sire horses at Usk and one at Monmouth, and there is one at Chepstow, I think.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,769. Do many of the tenant farmers you are acquainted with ride to hounds?—There are not many in Raglan, but there are one here and there do.

33,770. Is it because they like it?—I do not know, I cannot tell what they go for.

33,771. Is it because it is an opportunity for teaching their horses to jump, and that they find that it brings grist to the mill?—Well, if a man has a young horse it is a very nice way of showing him to take him to hounds occasionally, certainly, I have no doubt there are some cases of that sort.

33,772. Are any of the Welsh farmers good riders?—I do not think the Welsh farmers go so much to hounds.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,773. Two questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent, "What sort of farmers are the Welsh-"men who have come into these parts; do they "come, so to speak, as permanencies"?—Yes, there are some of them that farm bad, but I cannot say that of all of them. Some of the Welsh farmers farm very bad. I have known a case or two where they farmed very bad and I know some Welsh farmers farm well.

33,774. "Do you doubt for a moment that "Major Lister, the duke's agent, would give "you a copy of your agreement if you wanted "it?"—He would certainly give it me, I am sure he would.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Major E. LISTER called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,775. You are now agent to the Duke of Beaufort?—Yes.

33,776. You have been recently appointed, I think?—Yes, last autumn.

33,777. What has been your experience as agent?—I am a landowner myself.

33,778. You have been a landowner yourself?—Yes, and am now.

33,779. Have you farmed considerably?—Yes. I have been farming for the best part of 20 years.

33,780. What is the acreage of the property that you represent in this country?—About 17,000 acres of cultivated land, and about 10,000 acres of wood; it is about 27,000 acres in all.

33,781. Does his grace reside in the county at all?—He keeps rooms at his seat in Monmouthshire at Troy, and he is there frequently, and in the county at various meetings and so on.

33,782. He is lord lieutentant of the county?—Yes.

33,783. What have you to say about the changes of tenancy on the estate?—The changes of tenancy on the whole have been more frequent of late years. They generally go on from father to son as a rule on the duke's property.

33,784. Are the tenants principally Englishmen or Welshmen?—Principally Monmouthshire men. There are a few Welsh tenants.

33,785. English speaking?—Yes, all English speaking. Some of them may possibly speak Welsh as well.

33,786. A question was asked just now about the division; could you describe what line of demarcation there is between the English speaking and the Welsh speaking parts of Monmouthshire?—I should say roughly if you drew a line from Abergavenny down to Newport, and took the western side, that would coincide with the Welsh part somewhere about.

33,787. Would you agree with the last witness who said it was somewhere about the river Usk?—It would go with the Usk a certain way, but not all the way. The railway would be nearer the mark, I think.

33,788. May I take it that what has principally kept up the Welsh language has been the colliery districts?—Yes, I should think probably it is.

33,789. Then there are some Welsh speaking farmers who have come down into the county that you represent?—There are very few of our tenants who are real Welshmen. There are a few.

33,790. Very few?—Yes.

33,791. Amongst them have the changes been the most frequent?—Well, some of them, not what I call very good farmers. On the other hand, some of the Welsh farmers in this county are very good.

33,792. So that you would not like to suggest any rule or principle on the subject?—No, I do not think I should. As a rule we do not have to go out of the county at all for tenants.

33,793. How are the rents fixed?—There is no actual rule on the subject.

33,794. Are they fixed at a gross sum. Do you take the acreage into consideration?—More or less, but you may say a gross sum practically. Some of the tenants, although they have it on their agreements, I find do not now, without referring to me, know exactly even the acreage of the farms they hold.

33,795. Do you take the question of the tenant's capital into consideration?—Certainly I do, so far as I can.

33,796. In fixing the rent?—No, not in fixing the rent. I thought you meant in accepting the tenant.

33,797. The words I have in the summary of your evidence are these: "the rent is fixed at a gross sum, regard being had to the question of whether a tenant's capital is adequate"?—Certainly, I should not like to let a farm to a tenant that I thought had not capital to farm it.

33,798. Have you ever let any land by tender?—No, never. I do not think it has ever been done on the property.

33,799. Has there been much variation in the Duke of Beaufort's rental?—Yes, there has been considerable variation in the last years, if you take a period of years.

33,800. What fixed direction has that variation taken?—In going down, certainly.

33,801. A reduction of rent?—Yes.

33,802. May I ask whether that has been a permanent reduction or a temporary abatement?—They are principally temporary abatements.

33,803. But some are permanent reductions?—Some are permanent reductions, certainly. I can give you a list of some of the large farms, half a dozen of them, the figures that they used to stand at, and that they stand at now.

33,804. Would you give those figures?—Do you wish to have the names of the farms?

33,805. Yes?—The Rhaddyr Farm stood at 600*l.*, and now the rent, including tithe—with the tithe added on—is 425*l.*

33,806. In that instance, where you speak of the tithe, you mean that the tithe is now paid by the landlord, but not added to the rent; is that it, or is it added to the rent?—It is added to the rent.

Mr. Grove.

33,807. What is the amount of the tithe out of the 425*l.*?—I could not tell you from what I have here

Mr. Grove—continued.

33,808. Can you give us the acreage, Major Lister?—Well, I can only give it to you from memory; I believe it is about 360. Then the Hill Farm was 300*l.*, and is now 175*l.*, including tithe.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,809. It is reduced from 300*l.* to 175*l.*?—Yes. I may say that the farm had something like 8,000*l.* spent on it in the last few years, or rather not in the last few years, but from 1847 to 1852 it had over 8,000*l.* spent on it, that in buildings principally. It is a model farm Then the Raglan Castle Farm was reduced from 530*l.* to 370*l.* including tithe. The Brook Farm, Raglan, that the last witness occupied, was reduced from 365*l.* to 325*l.*, including tithe.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,810. Do you refer now to the farm of the last witness?—Yes.

33,811. It was reduced to 300*l.*?—These are the figures I took. Probably the other 25*l.* is tithe.

Mr. Seebohm.

33,812. Does the 365*l.* include the tithe also?—No; that was paid by the tenant on his own account.

33,813. Then we are not making a fair comparison, are we?—The original rent represents rent and the tithe extra.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,814. Was that 365*l.*?—Yes, 365*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

33,815. That is 325*l.* now?—Yes. Then the Bailey Pit, Monmouth, was reduced from 250*l.* to 165*l.*

33,816. About when were the reductions made?—I can hardly give you the date. They were made in different times.

33,817. Within the last 10 years or so?—Yes, perhaps in some cases a longer period of years than that. The Royal Oak and Land Farm was reduced from 75*l.* to 50*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,818. Are those instances of permanent reductions?—Yes.

33,819. What has been the custom in regard to abatement of rent, that is, not permanent but temporary?—It is not customary to give abatements in the form of a regular per-centage over the whole estate. Individual cases are considered whenever it is necessary, and allowances are made, but there is a preference for making this allowance in a form which will benefit the holding, namely for giving a man a certain amount of money's worth of manure.

33,820. With regard to those permanent reductions that you quoted just now, did the first column of figures that you named include the tithe?—It was original rent and tithe extra.

33,821. The original rent and the tithe was extra?—Yes.

33,822. Then they did not include the tithe?—No.

33,823. It was the net rent. The second rent included what?—The second rent included the tithe.

33,824. What are the dates of payment of rent?—They are due on the 2nd of February and the 2nd of August, and we take the February's rent in June, and the August's rent in November.

33,825. I left out one question that I ought to have put to you with regard to services; are there any services rendered for the farm in addition to the rent?—Nothing but hauling materials and walking a puppy, but that is only in a very few cases.

33,826. Have you ever heard that spoken of as a grievance?—Never, in fact they generally like to have them. We do not send them except where they like to have them.

33,827. What number of puppies, may I ask, do you send into Monmouthshire?—It varies so very much 33,828. Ten couples?—I do not suppose there are ten couples here now. Sometimes there are more, sometimes less.

33,829. Can you give the average size of the holdings?—I should put it at about 150, from 100 to 200 anyhow.

33,830. Have there been any instances of consolidation of farms?—No, I do not think that you would call them consolidations. Sometimes the tenants take a by-take with their farm.

33,831. Two farms?—Yes, or say not two farms, but they will take odd land that they can get near.

33,832. If they take two farms, would the buildings be kept up so that they might be separated again?—Yes, certainly they would; but as a rule we do not encourage them to take two farms; I mean, it is one of the rules of the estate to have the tenant as much as possible residing on his holding.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,833. What becomes of the house of the by-take?—It does not follow that there need be a house on it. Sometimes if there is a house it is probably used for the labourers, or something of that kind.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,834. I think the reason of Mr. Richard Jones' question was that the consolidation was in consequence of a disinclination to do repairs?—I can give you some items of repairs. I have got the average for the last 10 years.

33,835. May I put it in that way. I think you have already given me one answer, which was that in case of consolidation of two holdings the buildings upon the second holding would be kept up?—Yes.

33,836. Then it would not be with the object of saving expense in the buildings?—No, certainly not. Would you allow me to give an average of what has been spent in repairs for the last 10 years.

33,837. Mr. Grove suggests that that would come in better at the end of your evidence?—If you please.

33,838. I will go on with the questions upon the syllabus; is there any sub-letting?—There is a great deal I fancy, but we do not encourage it in any way, and it is a difficult thing to find out, but I know of instances where it does take place.

33,839. May I go farther; you do not encourage it; do you discourage it?—Yes, certainly, when it can be found out.

33,840. Do you consider that the smaller or the larger farmers stand out better against the depressed times?—I think the smaller farmers are affected less by the bad times. They do work outside their holdings for hire.

33,841. They are able to earn money outside their holdings?—Yes.

33,842. Can you give instances of that. In what kind of way do you mean?—Well, there are very small farmers, possibly, that keep two or three cows, and that kind of thing. They probably go out as roadmen, or to assist as odd men on the neighbouring farms, and their wives look after their cows, and so on.

33,843. Are their children sometimes set up in business?—The children of the farmers, do you mean?

33,844. Yes?—Certainly: I know of many instances.

33,845. As farmers?—Yes, as farmers.

33,846. Then do the parents stock the farms for them?—I think that is usually the custom. They give them a certain amount of stock to start them.

33,847. Is labour satisfactory. Is there sufficient labour, or insufficient?—I should say it is difficult to get skilled labour. You can get labour of a sort, but that is rather scarce the last few years.

33,848. If the labour is scarce, has it any ill effect?—It has the effect of raising the price of men.

33,849. As to the fences and the ditches, are they neglected in consequence?—I think they are to a more or less extent.

33,850. What is the reason of the scarcity of labour?—I imagine it being so near the mining districts.

33,851. The younger men go off to the works?—Yes.

33,852. We have been also told in other parts of Wales that there is a great tendency to go into the towns, where there is greater society and more advantages in the way of evening recreation?—I should not think that in this district. Newport, probably, may attract a good many men; there are the docks, and various other means of employment there.

33,853. That would be the higher wages then?—Yes.

33,854. The higher wages, then, in your opinion, are the principal cause of the depopulation?—Yes.

33,855. There is a depopulation in the country districts, the more strictly agricultural districts?—I should hardly think so.

33,856. Do you think that any labourers' cottages are falling into disrepair?—No, not as a rule. You do see them now and then, but we endeavour to keep them all repaired as much as possible.

33,857. When you say the labour is scarce, do you think it is more scarce than it used to be?—I should think it is harder to get a skilled workman, a man that can make a good hedge or thatch; or even a good ploughman is hard to get now.

33,858. Is the cultivation as good as you wish it to be?—I think there is room for improvements on some of the farms. Some of the farms are very well farmed, and as to others I cannot say they are.

33,859. You have already told us that of the 27,000 acres, 17,000 are agricultural and 10,000 woodland?—Yes.

33,860. Do you consider the woodland to be remunerative?—Not very, I think.

33,861. Do you think that much of that land which is now agricultural land might be more profitably employed for growing timber?—I think in some few instances it might, that is, very low-let land.

33,862. Now I go to the very important question of improvements upon farms and repairs?—Take it from the year 1884. Altogether the gross expenditure of repairs for the 10 years has been 37,647*l.* 16*s.* 8¼*d.*

33,863. Between how many years is that?—Ten years.

33,864. Who pays for them?—The landlord.

33,865. Entirely?—Entirely, all except the hauling. The average for those years would be 3,764*l.* a year.

33,866. Are you prepared to say what the rental is?—I am not prepared on my own account. If the duke will authorise me to do so I shall be perfectly willing, but I do not feel justified in giving it to you at the moment.

33,867. Some of the Commissioners think it is not of much value having the amount paid for improvements unless we know what relation that bears to the income?—I might point out that if you take off the 10,000 acres of wood it leaves this amount practically being spent upon 17,000 acres.

33,868. But that does not tell us what the rental is?—Oh, no.

33,869. Of course, I do not press you for an answer to the question.

Mr. Grove.

33,870. May we put it in this way: If the duke has no objection, could you send us a memorandum to the Secretary in London, so that we might refer and compare notes?—Certainly, if the duke has no objection.

Sir John Llewelyn.

33,871. Then, the landlord doing all the material repairs with the exception of the hauling, would you tell us what, in your opinion, is the per-centage of that hauling upon the total expenditure on repairs?—I do not see how you can possibly say, because circumstances are so different. One man might have fetched things some miles further than another.

33,872. The same thing applies to rent and everything else?—Yes.

33,873. You do not feel prepared to give any average?—No, I do not think I could do that. We never bother to do it at any particular time, and they have their horses there whether they are working upon that particular haulage or not.

33,874. Is it a consequence of that that no applications are made for any consent under the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883?—Possibly, but it does not affect us much. I have never heard of any cases much in this neighbourhood. Of course, there are a few cases.

33,875. What is your opinion of the Act?—I think it rather involved.

33,876. Is it any use here in Monmouthshire? I do not think it is taken advantage of much.

33,877. What is the custom of the country?—There are various customs in the different districts. I believe the old custom was, on a clover lay, the incoming tenant took a third and the outgoing tenant took two-thirds; and on a fallow, one-fifth and four-fifths respectively. That was the old custom.

33,878. Clover seed?—Clover seed is paid for.

33,879. By the incoming tenant?—Yes, I think the custom that obtains as much as any lately is for the incoming tenant simply to pay for seeds and labour and take it as it is on the spot; at least, that is done as often in my part where I live in that district as the other way.

33,880. But there have not been many changes of tenancy?—No, not many.

33,881. Is there any tenant-right, any right to dispose of the tenant's interest?—No

33,882. Is it occasionally attempted?—I have had one case only recently under my knowledge of that sort.

33,883. Have you discouraged that?—Yes, certainly.

33,884. Is there any ground game grievance?—No, I do not think so.

33,885. Is the Ground Game Act in operation?—Yes.

33,886. Have you anything to say about shooting tenants?—There are very few of them. There are not more than two or three that I know of.

33,887. Do you consider that they are not popular?—I do not think that the farmers like it very much.

33,888. Is the law of trespass adequate?—No. I do not think it is.

33,889. In what respect?—Well, in the mushroom time it is a great nuisance to farmers; they cannot keep people off their land.

33,890. What is the county council doing about agricultural education?—It has been holding schools in the different districts—butter schools and so on.

33,891. Are they appreciated?—In some districts they are, and in others I believe there is the difficulty, as Mr. Jeffreys said, of getting people to attend, but in other districts, I believe, they have been popular and done a great deal of good.

33,892. Are there any small freeholds in this district?—Yes, there are a few.

33,893. In the neighbourhood of the property you represent?—Yes, I think so.

33,894. Are they increasing or decreasing?—I could not say whether they are increasing or decreasing really; there are many about the place, but I should say they are rather decreasing of the two.

33,895. When they are sold and no longer freeholds what is the reason of that?—Well, very often I have found, at least I have known one or two instances, where a small farmer has bought a little freehold (that is years ago) and has probably raised money to buy it to a half or two-thirds, and by the time he has been there 10 or 12 years he is paying more in interest than he would have been paying if he had rented the farm, considerably more. I have known of that to my own knowledge.

33,896. Where money has been borrowed can you give us any idea as to the per-centage that is usually paid for it?—No, I cannot.

33,897. It varies in different places, of course?—Yes, I could not give you any figure.

33,898. Can you give an instance, without mentioning names of mortgages causing the land to be actually dearer?—Yes; that instance I mentioned just now in the parish of Llanbaddoc. The man is dead now, but years before he died he was paying a good deal more than he would have done if the place had not been his own property.

33,899. What was the size of his holding?—It was a small holding, about 25 acres, or something of that sort.

33,900. He was a small freeholder and he bought his land with borrowed money?—Practically; about two-thirds of it was borrowed money.

33,901. Eventually he found he was paying more under that system than he would have done as a tenant farmer?—Yes, and had to do his own repairs.

33,902. Do you know in that specific instance how much he was paying, what rate of interest he was paying?—I believe he told me, but I could not tax my memory with it quite.

33,903. It could not be much under 4 per cent.?—I should not think it was anything under 4 per cent. I think probably more.

Mr. Grove.

33,904. I take it from your average of acreage of farms that you would have something like 150 farms in all, something of that sort, I suppose?—Oh, there are more farms than that a good deal.

33,905. You have given us a table showing reductions in rent in certain parts. Are there any cases of advances in rent during the last 10 years?—I should say not, but I cannot answer that of my own knowledge. I should think it is highly improbable.

33,906. Those reductions you have given us are fairly typical, I suppose, of the general average of the rents?—Yes; there are about half a dozen or eight farms which I took as being some of the big ones; it has been nearly always on the big farms that the reductions have been.

33,907. You stated, I think, that parents were able to set up their sons in other farms?—Yes, very often they do.

33,908. That is years ago when things were fairly prosperous; I suppose it is not so much done in the present day?—Even now it is done. There is a man applying to me for a farm now to put two of his sons in.

33,909. Then when you make the abatement in rents do you give any previous notice to the tenant farmers?—No, as a rule if he has had an abatement one year, unless there is some very good reason to the contrary, he has it the next year.

33,910. Do you give copies of the agreements to each tenant farmer?—Yes, they have copies, or the generality of them have. They can all have a copy if they want it. We keep two.

33,911. And without any cost, I suppose, to them—free of cost?—Oh, yes.

33,912. In some cases they have parchments given to them, which would be very costly. This is the regular printed form, I suppose?—Yes, the printed form.

33,913. Do you put in one of the forms for us to see?—Yes, there are two kinds; we have one for large farms and the other for small holdings and houses.

33,914. Are these the agreements in use at the present time?—Yes.

33,915. Would you kindly explain the difference between the two. Is one for a short and the other for a longer term?—No, they are the same, I think, practically.

33,916. The one has more clauses than the other?—The one is simpler than the other, but I may say as to all those clauses in the form of agreements, they are simply protective; they are never enforced by any chance so long as the tenant goes on farming well—goes on properly.

33,917. You do not know how long ago it is since this agreement was drafted and put into use?—No, I cannot tell you.

33,918. Was it before the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Oh, yes, before that.

33,919. And before the Ground Game Act?—I should say it was much longer ago than that, but I do not know the date.

33,920. You were kind enough to say that you would give us some details of the expenditure. Could you give us that now?—That is what I gave you. The total expenditure in the last 10 years has been considerably over 37,000*l.* The average yearly expenditure has been 3,764*l.*

33,921. I suppose you confirm what Mr. Jeffreys said, that the question of game causes no unpleasantness between landlord and tenant?—Not the slightest.

33,922. Do you ever get requests for compensation for damage by game?—It has never come under my experience, but there is so very little game in the county.

33,923. Then as to labour, do you think there is sufficient labour on the land?—I think the tendency is to employ as little as they possibly can.

33,924. Would it arise in any degree from the want of cottage accommodation, do you think?—I do not think so. I think there seems generally to be sufficient cottages. In some instances it might be advantageous to have another one or so on a farm.

33,925. Have you many cases where the families have lived for almost generations in the same farm?—Oh, yes, a number of them.

33,926. Without being disturbed at all?—Yes.

33,927. And have you any management of commons belonging to the duke?—There are some commons where the duke is Lord of the Manor.

33,928. For instance, Trellech Common?—There has been a sale of part of the land about Trellech, I am not clear at the present moment whether that part went with what was sold or not.

35,515. 33,929. Could some evidence of that sort be brought before the Commission at Monmouth—would that be convenient?—Certainly, any information I can give you.

33,930. Then as to the cottars' rights; do you know anything about those—as to the terms upon which the cottars hold those small takings?—They are practically what Mr. Jeffreys told you. There are many of them—a great number of them—and they pay 1*s.* or 5*s.* a year as the case may be.

33,931. In the event of the death of the holder what is your usual custom?—The son or one of the family goes on in the same sort of way.

33,932. Is there any fine inflicted at that time?—No, not that I am aware of.

33,933. It is carried on in the same terms, then?—Yes.

33,934. Do you grant leases or is it yearly takings in most cases?—The farm takings are all yearly takings. We sometimes in small instances grant leases for lives, but those are principally small houses and places like that.

Mr. Seebohm.

33,935. Is the largest proportion of the land in this neighbourhood included in the large estates?—Well, the Duke of Beaufort is much the largest I should imagine. There are a great many small estates as well. I mean estates of 200 or 300 or 500 or 600 acres and up to 2,000 or 3,000.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

33,936. When a sale takes place it is generally, I suppose, on the small estates?—Yes.

33,937. And those are the cases in which the hardship arises, probably, if there are any changes of tenancy?—Well, it would be, I should think, more likely in a very small estate, possibly where the new purchaser might want to take the land into his own possession, and in circumstances like that.

33,938. With the competition for land so great, is the tendency upon the large estates to increase if purchases are going on. As a rule, when there is a sale, do the large estates buy it, or is the land sold separately?—I should say it is more likely to be sold to an independent man—somebody who is not already an owner of an estate.

33,939. Do the prices for land go very high?—Really that is a difficult question to answer; of course in some particular instances where it is situated in a valuable place for residential properties and that kind of thing, it would be higher than an ordinary farm.

33,940. Then the competition would rather be by persons wanting land for residential purposes than by the tenants themselves buying?—I should say so; yes.

33,941. Are there many cases of tenants themselves buying?—Very few, I should think; but there is great competition for farms.

33,942. In the mountainous districts more than in the arable districts?—Personally I have nothing to do with the mountainous districts.

33,943. But is there great competition in the arable districts?—Oh, yes, in the grazing districts. In fact I could let any farm I have to let half a dozen times over easily.

33,944. And probably at a higher rent than you get?—Well, I do not know about a higher rent. They are generally willing to pay the original rent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

33,945. Do you make any change in the rent of the farms on the duke's estate when there is change in the tenancy?—It depends. We never alter the rent to an old tenant; if he had been renting under the duke for a long time at a very low rent, at what we consider too low a rent, he would continue so; but if he died or gave up the farm, it is possible that we might put up the land to what we consider its value to a new tenant.

33,946. Even if it is the son of the old tenant?—No; I think probably not if he is the son of the old tenant, but I cannot answer you that with certainty from my own knowledge.

33,947. You have not been there long enough?—I have not been long enough on the estate.

33,948. Do you know whether any distraints have taken place on the duke's estate?—Very rarely, I may say. It is quite an exception.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

33,949. Has such a thing occurred within your knowledge?—Not within my personal knowledge.

33,950. Are there any farms vacant?—No, not one.

33,951. Do you ever find it necessary to advertise a farm in the newspapers?—No.

33,952. You say you do not make a general abatement, but only in individual cases. Do you get a good many applications for abatements?—Not a great many.

33,953. You obtain applications chiefly from the largest tenants?—Perhaps so; from the larger tenants I should say probably.

33,954. I gather from what you say about making permanent reductions on the larger farms that you get more applications for them?—Yes; we find the larger farms harder to let than the smaller farms.

33,955. I suppose because of the want of capital?—Yes, the want of capital.

33,956. Do you find the farmers on the duke's estate farm in such a manner as to make the best of their farms?—Well, it is such a large area; there are some excellent farmers on the estate, and there are some equally bad.

33,957. Would you regard the small farmers as the best farmers, or the large tenants?—I think I can only give the same answer; they vary; I do not think you can go further than that; there are some very good big ones, and very bad ones, and the same with the smaller ones.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,958. I think you said just now that the small farmers stand out best against the depression?—Yes, I think they do.

33,959. For the reason that they earn money elsewhere?—Yes.

33,960. Is that the only reason, do you think?—Well, for one reason, they are most independent of outgoings; they can do more of the work themselves.

33,961. That is the very thing I wanted to get at. They do not pay any money out in wages?—No.

33,962. They do all themselves?—Yes.

33,963. How do you explain that some of the land would be more profitably employed for growing timber. I did not quite understand the way you put that just now?—I meant that there are a few places that are very lowly rented, and that, practically, would pay better to plant in lots.

33,964. Is it hilly ground?—Hilly ground.

33,965. Would not the rates be lower. We have heard of some farmers that wanted to have their land all rated at the same rate. The rates would suffer if you did that, would they not?—I was not proposing that they should retain this land that I am speaking of, but that we should take it off them.

33,966. Take it off them to plant?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

33,967. But still it would be a loss to the parish; the rates on that little land would not amount to what they did formerly?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

33,968. With regard to this planting, may I ask whether, if you planted land, you would expect to get a fair rate of interest, not only for the expense of planting, but also for the rent of the land?—I believe the woods pay very little indeed, but they come in (for instance, in that case of larch and so on) for estate purposes, and save buying. There is very little profit arising out of the timber that is sold.

33,969. Will you expect to get something like a good per-centage on the value of the land as rent?—That is a question I really could not give you an answer to.

Mr. Griffiths.

33,970. Is there any damage done by timber cutting and carting over the farms?—It is generally compensated for whenever there is any real damage.

33,971. Is it compensated for by the landlord or by the person who buys the timber?—As a rule, the landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

That is by far the best way.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

33,972. Is the Duke of Beaufort's Monmouthshire estate a compact estate, or is it scattered about?—It runs over a large area. There is a little land round here; it runs from there all round Raglan and Monmouth, and then down to Chepstow, and then down below Newport, between Newport and Chepstow; in fact, it is all round the county.

33,973. But there is some in this parish, you say, or in the neighbourhood of Abergavenny?—I believe there is some little in the neighbourhood of Abergavenny, but very little.

33,974. Have you been agent long?—Since last autumn.

33,975. Have there been any changes of tenancy or evictions or voluntary retirements on the part of the tenants, since you became agent?—I have let about four or five farms since I have been agent; they were principally either farms in hand, or vacant by death, or causes of that kind.

33,976. Have you let the farms at an increased or a decreased rent?—None of them at an increase; some of them I have let at a decreased rent, and some at the same rent.

33,977. Then your knowledge hardly extends to any of the estate transactions beyond last year, I suppose?—You mean on this particular estate?

33,978. Yes, this particular estate?—Only from what I know of my general knowledge from living on it all my life, more or less.

33,979. You have been acquainted with this part of the country before?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

33,980. Do you know of a case—I will put it as a case that happens to come under my notice—which occurred not very long ago: "Some years ago where a tenant held "some 60 acres, half of which was brake "land, at a rent of 34*l.*, the tenant cleared and "drained the land himself, afterwards he applied "for a reduction of rent, which was refused." The tenant then appears to have gone. "The "next tenant had the land for 24*l.*" (that is 10*l.* less) "and at that price he did so poorly with it "that he told me he wished he had never seen "it"?—I do not know of that particular case existing.

33,981. I find that on the authority of one of the persons with whom the correspondent of the "Western Mail" has communicated. You do not remember any case?—I do not remember any case of that kind.

33,982. You see the point. This man appears to have improved; he asks for a reduction; that is refused, and it is given to the next tenant. Has any such case come under your notice on the estate?—No, certainly it has not.

33,983. Do you think that the present rents are fair rents?—Yes, I think they are.

33,984. Do you think that farmers can farm at a profit at the present rents?—I think they make a living out of it. They can make a living out of it.

33,985. That is not an answer to the question which I was putting. Do you think farmers can farm at a profit?—Well, if they did not farm at a profit they would not live, would they?

33,986. That, again, is not an answer to the question?—I do not understand.

33,987. It is perfectly simple. You say the rents are perfectly fair. Then I ask you a question, on the basis of Mr. Jeffrey's evidence if you like; Mr. Jeffreys told us that at the present time he is sacrificing all interest on capital, and that if he had not private means he would have to give up his farm. Now, I put it to you, do you think at the present time that the tenant farmers on this estate can farm so as to secure, first of all, a fair profit upon such capital as they put into it, and fair wages or return for their superintendence?—I think you can hardly take a single year like this, you ought to take an average of years.

33,988. Very well, we will deal with this last year first?—This year, I fancy, has been about the worst time that farmers have known for some time.

33,989. With regard to the last year, do you hink that tenant farmers have been able to arm at a profit?—Possibly not this one year—hey may not have made a profit beyond being able to pay their rents and get a living out of the land.

33,990. Then, seeing, therefore, that tenants cannot farm for profit, how do you justify the statement that the rent is fair?—Because on an average of years I think they can.

33,991. Quite so. When did the bad times begin; at what point would you put the extreme fall in prices which has produced the present state of things?—From when, do you mean?

33,992. Yes?—Well, I suppose the wheat has probably been gradually going down for the last 10 or 15 years.

33,993. When was the fall in the price of stock?—Stock has been worse this year or the last two years than it has been before, so far as my knowledge goes. In the country this year hay has been making a very good price.

33,994. Are you prepared to say from your knowledge of the locality that rents have been abated temporarily or reduced permanently in anything like the proportion of the fall in the price of wheat and of stock?—Yes, I think they have been.

33,995. What has been the per-centage of abatement on the Duke of Beaufort's estate?—I cannot give you the per-centage because it varies in different instances.

33,996. Then the whole matter is arbitrary in this sense, that each farm is treated separately?—Yes.

33,997. Do you not think it would be very much better that, both in regard to abatements and reductions, the matter should be treated as one of general policy, that is to say, as one having regard to fall in price of stock and farm produce?—I do not think so.

33,998. Does it not strike you that you bring an element of, I will not say favouritism, but an element of caprice into the matter when you only make abatements in reference to each particular farm?—Well, naturally you would be more inclined to help a man that you saw was doing his best, and working hard, than you would be to help a tenant that you saw was not doing much; it is in that way.

33,999. That is an element in the fairness of rent is it?—That is my opinion.

34,000. As I understand it, you think that rents ought to be fair as between landlord and tenant?—Yes.

34,001. What do you mean by that?—I think that tenants with ordinary industry ought to have their farms at a rent that they can pay for them and live.

34,002. Who is the best judge of whether that condition is attained in regard to rent, the landlord, who is personally interested, or some third party who is not pecuniarily interested?—I should say the fact of so many applications being made for every farm that is to let proves it.

34,003. But then in talking of a fair rent you have given up the competition rent?—I am not talking of competition. We do not attempt to let farms by tender, or anything of that kind; but I am saying for every farm there is to let, you have from half a dozen to 20 applicants for it.

34,004. Quite so, but then on the definition of a fair rent as given by you the question of the number of applicants has nothing to do with the matter?—It shows they consider it is a fair rent, or else they would not apply for the farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,005. It is not a question what they consider, but of what you consider. You have given your definition; I do not know whether your definition is a sound one or not; I do not pretend to offer any judgment upon it, but what you said in substance was that a fair rent as between landlord and tenant is a rent fixed at such an amount as would enable the landlord to live reasonably upon the farm, and carry on his business?—I did not say any such thing. I did not allude to the landlord. I said the tenant.

34,006. I beg you pardon, the tenant. Then my question to you was this: if that is a fair rent how is it to be ascertained, and I put it to you, do you not think it would be better ascertained by some third party who was not pecuniarily interested than by a landlord who was pecuniarily interested?—I have always found by experience that a landlord and tenant can settle their arrangements together much better than by having in a third party.

34,007. What experience have you had from which you have found it better not to have a third party to settle fair rents?—I have never found it necessary to have a third party to settle the rent.

34,008. Quite so; then you have not had any experience of the two systems?—I have found this system could not work better than it has done.

34,009. I do not know; Mr. Jeffreys is one of your tenants, and he said if he had not private means he would give up the farm. Is that working well?—I think he alluded to this particular year; I do not think he alluded to an average of years.

34,010. He had been there 11 years. Tell me this, do you think, then, that things are going to improve?—In farming?

34,011. Because Mr. Jeffreys told us that he thought there were certain remedies necessary before things could improve. Do you think, things remaining as they are, that there is going to be a rise in prices?—Really that is a question I do not think you can possibly ask me to answer.

34,012. What are the causes of depression?—Foreign competition, a great deal.

34,013. Is foreign competition going to increase or decrease, do you think? Please, Major Lister, do not think I am putting these questions with any other object than to elicit from you your true views?—I cannot see what my opinion on the subject has to do with it. It is only an opinion. I can give you the facts which come within my knowledge.

34,014. I should have thought the agent of the Duke of Beaufort was as good a man to give an opinion upon it as a tenant farmer, for the matter of that. I do not know who else to ask?—You ask me, do I think so and so. It is only a matter of supposition.

34,015. I do not know that. It is a judgment upon the facts before you; I do not think it is a matter of supposition. It is a supposition in the sense that you cannot speak with the same absolute certainty that you can apply to a mathematical proposition; that I agree. Do you know Mr. Parry—you see that this matter I am touching upon is by no means new—do you know Mr. Parry of the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture?—Mr. Thomas Parry?

34,016. Yes?—Yes.

34,017. Do you know that he has contended before now that the Chamber of Agriculture should act as a Board of Arbitration in all disputes between landlords and tenants?—I did not know that he had proposed that, or that that proposition was made.

34,018. What can you advance against it? Why should there not be a Board of Arbitration?—Because I think that both from the tenants' side and the landlords' they can settle and agree about things without bringing in a board.

34,019. You can agree. But the landlord's position is more favourable than the tenant farmer's, is it not, because he can send the tenant farmer away. and the tenant farmer cannot send his landlord away?—I cannot help that.

34,020. No, but you have said the rent ought to be fair. If you had said this, a landlord is entitled to get what rent he can as long as the people apply for the farm, he need not do anything at all in regard to the tenants, and he might send them away as he liked, I could understand your position, but once you say a rent ought to be fair as between landlord and tenant?—I think it ought. It is no good to the landlord to charge a higher rent than a man can pay, nor is it any good to the tenant to have to pay.

34,021. Very well. We do not seem to get any more forward in that line of suggestion Would you like to add anything, Major Lister, on the line I have been suggesting, instead of answering my questions. If my questions to you suggest anything to you in your experience we should be very glad to hear you. We have had all sorts of views put before us on both sides?—I do not think I can suggest anything, except what I have tried to say to you just now.

34,022. Take the suggestion of a Land Court for instance. Mr. Parry suggests the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture. We have had suggestions that a Land Court, or if not a a Land Court with a full legal apparatus, at any rate that Government arbitrators should be available to settle disputes between landlords and tenants; what do you say about that?—My opinion is that a Land Court would be absolutely the worst thing that could happen to the tenants.

34,023. How could it make the position of the tenants worse?—Because I think it would make the landlords treat the matter in a different way. They would refer everything to the Land Court, and they would say "There you have "your hard and fast rule; act by it." Now the tenants and the landlords work on different lines altogether.

34,024. You mean that the tenants and landowners are partners now virtually, or in substance?—Yes, virtually.

34,025. Do you find the tenants speak quite freely to you about their grievances?—I have always found so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,026. Now take the question of improvements. We have it that on this estate the improvements are done of course by the landlord as far as the materials and the actual work are concerned (I am now talking of the building improvements), and the tenant does the haulage?—Yes.

34,027. Can you tell me what Mr. Jeffreys very candidly said he could not, viz., what proportion the expense of haulage bears to the total expense of improvements of that kind?—I do not think I could possibly. It would be a very difficult matter to say, because some of the hauling would be much harder than others, longer distances than others; but, as I said just now, we never press the tenants in any way to haul at a certain time of the year. It is only, very likely, when their horses are doing nothing, so that it does not practically amount to much, if anything, out of their pockets beyond wear and tear.

34,028. But they pay railway fare, do they not, on the timber for instance; the railway rate on the timber is paid by them?—Oh, no, certainly not.

34,029. That would not be the case?—No.

34,030. Then do you mean to say that you would allow that in the accounts against yourself?—We supply it from our own yards, or buy it, and they fetch it from the railway station.

34,031. They only fetch it from the railway station?—Yes.

34,032. I suggested to Mr. Jeffreys, taking it from one of these articles to which I have referred, that in some cases the haulage has come to 40 per cent.?—I should think it is very improbable that it could possibly come to as much.

34,033. Do you think it would come to as much as 20 per cent.?—I should doubt it very much.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,034. Of course it varies enormously, according to the distance of the place from which you are hauling the materials?—Yes. We have something like three or four timber yards in different parts of the county, and we get the tenant to fetch it from the nearest yard.

34,035. I ventured to suggest to the other Commissioners that between 10 and 15 per cent. would be about the figure which would meet it; it varies?—Yes; I should think it would be nearer 10 than 15.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,036. With regard to draining, do you think that drainage operations on a considerable scale would tend to improve matters in this county, on the duke's estate, for instance?—In some instances it might; in others I do not think it would be worth doing hardly.

34,037. Not worth doing?—No.

34,038. Do you notice whether there are more Welsh farmers lately in the part of the county east of the Usk?—There is not a great extra number particularly on the duke's estate, but I think more have come in on other estates rather in the last few years.

34,039. We have found in the western counties that there are some farmers who seem to be willing to come into other counties and move away from their homes, and reference has been made to that having been done. But generally we find a very great disinclination on the part of the Welsh farmers to move away from their own district?—Yes.

34,040. As I understand, you do find that some Welsh farmers have come into your district?—Yes.

34,041. Are there any commons, in the strict sense of the term, on this estate?—There are some commons, I believe, that the duke is lord of the manor of.

34,042. In which parishes are those?—The Chairman asked me a question about that just now, and I said I would furnish the information next time. I cannot give it to you from any details I have with me.

34,043. Have you noticed whether there are any Inclosure Acts, any Acts inclosing common land within the area of this estate?—I have not noticed it.

34,044. Would you kindly look up that information?—Yes.

34,045. I am personally very anxious to get a skilled opinion in regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act. Are you in a position to give us any suggestions for its amendment?—No, I have not gone into the Act sufficiently to be able to know that.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,046. What abatements do you consider for the present year would be sufficient for a tenant to have in order to get a living, and to have the same interest as the landlord for his capital?—I think you cannot put a general rule, because there is every description of farms on this estate, and every description of land almost.

34,047. But I mean the average of the whole estate?—I do not think I can go into that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,048. The following are Mr. Vincent's questions, "If the name of the tenant whose "case was referred to in the 'Western Mail' "were given to you could you look up the "matter in the books?"—Yes, certainly.

34,049. "Since the depression began, have "there not been fluctuations in the price of "stock?"—When do you mean by the depression, how many years back?

34,050. These are not my questions, and I cannot say; it is "since the depression began?"—Cattle have been down certainly, but I should think they very likely would be up again this spring. They are sure to be.

34,051. "Have there been fluctuations?"—Yes.

34,052. "With regard to what Mr. Brynmor "Jones said about abatements, is it not the fact

" that, since the circumstances of each case vary, " a general per-centage of abatement may be an " error?"—I think so, yes.

34,053. " Will you hand to the Commissioners " the tables showing the permanent reduc- " tions?"—Yes.

34,054. " The expenditure on improvements?" —There is the expenditure on improvements and repairs, the annual per-centages of abatements, and the rents received.

34,055. You will hand that to the Commissioners?—Yes.

[The witness handed in the documents.]

34,056. " Following that up, would you advise " expenditure on this scale if any scheme for " the compulsory fixing the rents were estab- " lished"?—No.

Mr. Grove.

34,057. But suppose that the landlord and tenant had the opportunity of conferring together, and agreeing before they went to a court to fix a judicial rent, would not that remove your objection?—I think we do very well as we are.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,058. May I ask who the "we" is?—I allude to the landlords and tenants.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,059. Has the Duke of Beaufort a model farm?—He has a farm that is called a model farm. There are model farm buildings built on it at a considerable expense.

34,060. Is the expense included in the general expenses that you have supplied?—No, what was laid out on this particular model farm—there has been nothing done on it since 1852, I mean with regard to the heavy expenses—the 8,000*l.* odd I alluded to, is not included in that average of expense in any way. That is only for the last 10 years.

34,061. Are any of the expenses of the farm included in the 37,000*l.* that you give in your statement as the expenditure for the last 10 years?—Nothing, unless there may have been put on a few tiles, or something like that, as they have been blown off, no structural alterations.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,062. May I ask one question further; in answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones you stated, I think, that you thought the number of applications you had for farms showed that on the average they were not paying a higher rent than allowed a fair profit?—I think it shows that.

34,063. Is there not a little ambiguity in the use of the word "profit." If you had two men, one of whom lived very economically, and another whose standard of living was greater, the first might have made what would nominally be called a profit on his farm, and the other not?—Yes, quite so.

34,064. So that when you speak of the profit made on a farm you are not speaking of exactly the same thing as profit made in business. If a man made 500*l.* a year by his business, and he spent 600*l.* a year, you would not say he had made no profit by his business?—That is not the fault of the farm if a man spends more, is it?

34,065. No, I am trying to come to this. I thought we did not understand exactly what you meant by making a profit on the farm. If a man makes a living on his farm and interest on his capital, and yet adds nothing to his capital, still he may be making a profit?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

Because it may be his standard of living is too high, which prevents his putting by money.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

But is that so? Supposing a man is devoting his whole labour to a farm for a whole year, and supposing that the fair price in the market for his holding would be 150*l.* a year, if he lives at 150*l.*, and he is able to do that, there is no margin for the capital. I divide it as a business into two parts, interest on capital which he puts in, and the wages which he gets for his superintending or his actual work.

Mr. Seebohm.

Quite so. But then I understood the answer to be that the number of applications for a farm was a rough and ready way of showing by the law of supply and demand that the common estimate is that a man can get interest upon his capital, and a fair amount to live upon besides. Is not that the fair way of putting it?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,066. I do not know. I do not think we should pursue the argument, as we only want to get the information from Major Lister. I should like to know what his view is. What is your view on what Mr. Seebohm puts to you?—I think he would take an ordinary living that satisfies a man, and if he can do that, and pay his rent, and not decrease his capital, that is as much as he can expect.

34,067. Yes, but then let me put to you, if you say "not decrease his capital," a man sinks his capital in the farm, and the only part of his capital that he gets back is just what the existing stock he has got sells for, and the existing farm utensils, and so forth; and the remainder of his capital has been sunk, and he can only trust to what compensation he can get for the unexhausted improvements. There is a certain waste of capital going on from year to year in the farm which is not accounted for?—By the Agricultural Holdings Act he can always get back his proportion of unexhausted improvements.

34,068. Quite so. We were not on what he could get, but we were trying to analyse what you meant by the use of the term "making a fair "living and making a fair profit"?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,069. You base all you have said upon your opinion which you have mentioned just now that the rent was based on the average of years, not on one very bad year that we have gone through, but on the average of years?—Yes, I think farming is a business in which you must take an average of years to be able to say whether a man is making it pay or not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,070. Is it strong evidence or decisive evidence that there is a margin for profit on a farm if you find that competition is keen for it?—If a lot of people want it, it rather looks as if it were thought it was worth having.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

34,071. But may not this view be taken of it, that many farmers, finding they do not do well in farms at present say to themselves: "Well, I "am not doing well on this farm, I may as well "try another, I cannot be worse off;" may not that occur?—I could not give you the reason exactly in the individual case why they come and apply for land.

34,072. Of course such a thing could occur?—It might occur, certainly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,073. There was one point that rather incidentally dropped from you just now. Did the tenants on the Duke of Beaufort's estate generally get a good hay crop?—No, a very short hay crop, but a very good price.

34,074. Short in quantity, but a good price for it?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 35,451.

Mr. John Watkins called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,075. You are Mr. John Watkins, of Great House Farm, Llandilo Pertholey, near Abergavenny; is that so?—Yes.

34,076. You wish to give evidence as to the glutting of the English market with foreign produce, is that it?—Yes, that is the reason, and the prime reason, and no doubt the cause of the depression; that is the great amount of foreign produce that is sold in our markets, bringing down the price of our English produce to a point below what allows us to make any profit out of it.

34,077. Are you able to give us any information as to what that foreign produce is?—The wheat, of course, in the first place. Almost the bulk of the wheat that is used now in this neighbourhood is foreign wheat; it is found to produce stronger flour, I suppose, and it has caused the demand for English wheat to be very slack, and brought it to a very low price. I believe the average is not very much over 25*s.* per quarter now. Then the meat, again, is sold at such a low price here that it brings our own produce down below 6*d.* per lb., the primest.

34,078. Are you speaking of mutton or beef?—The beef especially.

34,079. Is any foreign produce sold as if it was English?—I cannot say exactly in this neighbourhood. I know of a case, but it is not in this neighbourhood, where it was sold as English produce; I have hardly a doubt, but what it is so.

34,080. Can you speak at all as to the quantity of foreign beef that is sold in this country?—No, I have had the figures given, but I have forgotten them.

34,081. The agricultural returns show that?—Yes. Mr. Duckham, the late M.P. for Hereford, recently gave the quantities in the "Hereford Times," but I have forgotten the figures.

34,082. Very well, you do not know of your own knowledge?—No.

34,083. Other people will give us that, indeed we have had some evidence of that before us elsewhere. Have you anything to say to us with reference to the transference of the malt tax?—It has most unexpectedly added this difficulty, that other products are used in the brewing of beer, and of course lessened the demand for barley.

34,084. You consider that the transference of the malt tax has had an injurious effect?—Yes, I think so.

34,085. How?—By using maize, for instance, and sugar instead of malt made from English barley. Recently, only in the last few weeks, I had a report read to me that foreign barley is coming now into competition with us. Up till recently we have held the field with the English barley, as far as barley was used, but now the foreign barley is becoming an important item.

34,086. What effect has that got upon the demand for British barley?—Oh, it will lessen the demand and bring down the price.

34,087. Can you say how much?—The top price I have known barley to be is 50*s.* a quarter, and now it is about 27*s.* to 30*s.*; 27*s.* is about the average, I think.

34,088. That is not far off one-half?—Not far off one-half.

34,089. Has there been any fall in the price of wool?—Yes, from 2*s.* in the pound. Wool sold at 1*s.* 11*d.* in 1871 and I sold under 9*d.* this year.

34,090. You consider that that has been disastrous for mountain sheep farmers especially?—Yes, I think it is fearful.

34,091. Can you suggest any remedy?—No, I cannot suggest remedies as far as the wool is concerned, nor as to corn either. The name of protection is such a scare that it would be almost impracticable, I suppose, to put a duty upon it, or else that would seem the simplest and easiest way.

34,092. Can you suggest any remedy with regard to foreign meat?—I think it all should be marked, if there is a possibility of doing it, so that people should know what they are buying.

34,093. Can you give any suggestion in respect to barley, or the beer that is brewed for barley?—I think it would be well that a guarantee should be given that the beer sold was brewed from malt and hops.

34,094. And not from maize?—Instead of from maize and sugar, give a good article a fair chance.

34,095. Have you any recommendation to make as to rent of land?—I am not very sanguine as to Land Courts. If there was a possibility it would be well, perhaps, for tenant and landlord to arrange between themselves, but there are some cases where the landlord is rather hard, I suppose, and perhaps it would be good in some cases that there should be a third party to come in between them.

34,096. Are there many leases in this neighbourhood?—Not very many, mostly yearly holdings.

34,097. Not many leases?—Not many leases, one here and there, but not very many.

34,098. Do you consider that it is desirable that there should be greater security of tenure of land than there now is?—I think it would give farmers more confidence to lay out capital if they were possessed of it, and they would feel more secure.

34,099. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes. I have a slight acquaintance with it. I have had some small transactions with it. I held a tract of land that adjoins my home for many years; I and my father before me had held it about 58 years. It was originally a very rough lot of brake and wood, and peat, and we cleared it and improved it very much. It happened that the owner bought an adjoining estate, so I had to give it up for it to be put to another farm. I had sowed 2 tons of bone manure not more than six weeks before I had to give it up. I was very fairly compensated for the manure with the tenant, and for the cake I had consumed on the ground, but the permanent improvements I had done had been done in a period over which the Agricultural Holdings Act could not protect me. It would only go back 10 or 15 years, and I had done the work on it for about 30 or 35 years. I think that if a tenant makes a permanent improvement by which the estate reaps a permanent benefit the tenant should get a fair share of it without respect to the time at which it has been done 34,100. Then you consider that the Agricultural Holdings Act requires amending?—I think so.

34,101. To give the tenant compensation for permanent improvements?—Yes.

34,102. And not to cut him off, as it now does, if the improvements are done over a limited number of years?—Yes.

34,103. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.

34,104. Have you anything to suggest in respect of the rates?—Well, I have made a suggestion in the paper that you have. I think what you might call the administrative portion of the poor rates should be paid out of Imperial rates, and only the net indoor and outdoor relief should be borne by the local rates.

34,105. You state here, "I would suggest that "all official charges, salaries, and expenses of "administering the Poor Law should be paid out "of Imperial sources, only the net indoor and "outdoor relief to be borne by the local rates." Is that so?—Yes, I think so. It would tend to reduce rates, and that would be a help to us, because it is a struggle now to go on.

34,106. Have you anything to say about small holdings?—There is a narrow belt of land in the parish in which I reside abutting on the common. I have no doubt originally there were labourers who had squatted down there, or something like that. There were about 20 cottages, I think. The cottages are, perhaps, about 16 now, some few having gone down. Down to about the year 1852 the Lord of the Manor used to give life leases. There are some of them not yet fallen in, but since 1852 there has not been one granted. I have been speaking to many of the tenants of those little holdings. They vary from one to eight acres, and I think there is one of over eight acres; they are generally from two to four acres, and I know many of them would like to buy the freehold if they had the power. I think it would tend to be a tie—to be a bit of inducement to the labourers perhaps to stay on the land.

34,107. What would be an inducement for them to stay on the land?—I mean if they should become the owners.

34,108. Do you think there is any disinclination on the part of the tenant farmers of this neighbourhood to come and give evidence before the Commission?—I have not heard of it.

34,109. You do not think it exists?—No, I do not think so; I have not heard a single case.

34,110. You speak of the low prices which you get for stock now. Does the butcher get more than he ought to out of this?—Well, to-day I was barely offered 6*d.* a pound for first class three years old beef, and we think that a very poor price after being fattened and stall fed.

34,111. Is there the same amount of depression with the butchers that there is with the farming interest just now?—No, I think not. I do not think there should be.

34,112. Do you find some of them retiring pretty early in life?—I know some of them have done very well, better than the farmers, I fear, very much.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,113. Does your experience extend to the mountain districts of this county?—Yes, I nearly join the mountain. There are not many hundred yards between me and the common land.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

34,114. Is yours chiefly dairy farming or sheep farming?—I am mixed; my farm is mixed. About a third of it is arable, and that is nearly about the average, but there is more grass than there was. There are considerable quantities put down on most farms. On one farm near me, out of 200 acres they have laid down to permanent pasture 60 acres.

34,115. Then have these little mountain farmers sheep as well—mountain runs?—We have a right in the parish to a mountain run, but only those that are close adjoining avail themselves of it.

34,116. Is it without stint?—I beg your pardon?

34,117. May you put as many sheep as you like upon the run, or is there a rule about it?—There is no restriction that I know of. My father used to keep a flock on the hill.

34,118. Do you know how many sheep there are on the hill?—No, I do not know. As far as our parish is concerned, perhaps 600 to 800, I should think.

34,119. And they would belong to how many people?—About four or five people.

34,120. And yet everybody in the parish has the right to put sheep on it?—Yes.

34,121. Are there more sheep on it than it can bear properly?—No, I think not. There has been a considerable loss out of it, some years back now. There has been an enclosure made just over the brow—over the top of the hill. It was some old right as belonging to the Lord of the Manor. That is rented now. It has reduced the number of sheep very considerably that could be kept there through that being enclosed.

34,122. Will you explain how it is that only four farmers use it when the others have a right to use it?—I cannot; but since wool has gone down in price, even the mountain farmers find but very little profit in it. They were keeping the sheep almost in great measure on account of the wool, because they were thinking it a good profit when they got 8*s.* or 10*s.* worth of wool off a sheep every year.

34,123. You think that the three or four or five farmers who have these 800 sheep on the mountain are not keeping the sheep of other people off, because they are the nearest and make the most use of it?—No, I do not think so.

34,124. Is it under no regulation at all?—I never heard of any.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

34,126. Do they keep cattle instead?—Oh, yes, they have increased that and keep more lowland sheep—the black face—the Shropshire Downs chiefly.

34,127. Are they chiefly dairy farmers or breeding farmers?—There is not much dairying done. There is a little dairying done, but not much.

34,128. Do you speak Welsh?—Well, I can understand Welsh a good bit, but I cannot quite master it, although I ought to. My father and mother used to talk Welsh.

34,129. Do you know what they call a dairy up in the mountains?—No, I have forgotten now. I know what they call a cow very well, but I do not know what they call a dairy. I know what cheese and butter would mean.

34,130. Within your recollection in the old times, did they make cheese of the milk of sheep at all?—Oh, yes.

34,131. Is that so now?—There are a few cases now. I know my next neighbour does.

34,132. But is it profitable. If so, why is it given up?—Well, that is a question I could scarcely answer. In many cases it is given up, perhaps, because we do not keep a servant at home now. My daughters do all the work, and I suppose they would hardly undertake to do that.

34,133. I suppose it is a very good kind of cheese?—Oh, first-class cheese.

34,134. Is not it rather a pity that that industry is lost in these bad times?—Well, there is a drawback with that. It injures the ewes, unless you keep them very well for the following season. If you want to fatten the ewes off in the autumn, you have a difficulty to milk and do that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,135. You complain of the effect of removing the duty on malt, and say that it has been the means of adulterating beer. You would not go so far as to advocate the re-imposition of the malt tax, would you?—No, I do not; only that a guarantee should be given what the beer is brewed from. That is my idea.

34,136. An extension of the Feeding Stuffs and Fertilisers Act, I suppose, would meet the necessities of the case?—Yes, I think that that will want extending, because there is a tendency now to evade the Feeding Stuffs Act.

34,137. Protection from adulteration?—Protection from adulteration. You can hardly get the merchant now to give a guarantee for the American linseed cake, for instance; they will guarantee the English linseed cake, but so far I have been unable to get any guarantee with the American linseed cake.

34,138. You suggest also that the official charges in connexion with the administration of the Poor Law, should be paid out of Imperial sources?—Yes.

34,139. I suppose you are acquainted with the objections which may be urged against that?—

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

I have never heard very much objection against the official charges, but of course there is great objection against the outdoor and indoor relief, because I think that that could not be managed only by those who contribute. I have had some good many years' experience on the board of guardians, and I have always seen the necessity for watching carefully over the relief lists.

34,140. The same objection may be urged against the official charges, that where you get a Government charge you of necessity get Government control, so that really if these things became Government charges we should weaken the principle of local self-government, but perhaps the ratepayers are willing to part with a share of their local self-government, if the Government will relieve them of their rates. Is that so?—Just so.

34,141. You say with respect to small holdings that many of these small tenants would like to purchase their holdings?—Yes.

34,142. Do you think that if they had these holdings at a fair rent, and also that they felt secure in their holdings, there would be a demand for purchase?—Yes, I do. There was a great disappointment in the neighbourhood 30 years ago, when the power to lease was lost. If a working man before that time could get together about 40*l.* he was enabled to lease for three lives his little place, with perhaps two acres of land. I have known 80*l.* paid for eight acres of land, with only 1*l.* a year to pay for ground rent or acknowledgment. It was 80*l.* that the old man paid to lease 8 acres of land.

34,143. That applies to leaseholders?—They very much prefer becoming freeholders if it is possible for them to do so.

34,144. Do you know if any applications have been made to the county council under the Small Holdings Act?—No, I believe not.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,145. Will you kindly tell us what is the acreage of your farm?—I have taken a second farm. When I had to give up this tract of land of 33 acres, I took an adjoining farm which was in the market. My own farm is only 100 acres, and I have a little tract of land belonging to the Great Western Railway of 18 acres more, which adjoins my garden, so I have about 118 acres. There is another farm where two of my sons are, which is all one thing like. That is nominally nearly 200 acres, but there is a lot of mountain woodland you may call it almost; it runs almost to the very top of the Skyrrid.

34,146. You have given us a scale of prices in 1886 and at present. It has come down nearly to a half what it was in those days?—Yes.

34,147. Your rent has not varied in the same way, has it?—Well, I have had a reduction and abatement. First of all I had an abatement, when those bad wet seasons came on. In 1877, 1878, and 1879, there was a fearfully wet, bad season that we had, and I had an abatement of 10 per cent. Then things improved a little, and we went back to the old rent for a short time, and then the stock came down, and I had an abatement again of 10 per cent., and things not improving, I had a reduction of 10. This year I have been given an abatement of 5 in addition. That is as regards the one farm. The other I had only taken four years, and I have had an abatement of 15 per cent. on that.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

34,148. Yet you do not consider at the present time that that is sufficient to meet the depression, do you?—It is not equal to what we are losing in the prices, I consider.

34,149. You have not given us any statement with regard to the cost of labour in these times. Is the labour now more than it used to be in those days?—Oh, very much more.

34,150. Is it so good quite as it used to be?—Well, hardly, not as a rule, but I have four grown up sons, two on each farm, and we have some advantage in that way.

34,151. Do you think you would be able to pay as well if you had not your sons on the farm?—No, I do not know how we should get along, because they do not get much besides their board and lodging.

34,152. You do not give them any wages, of course?—No, I do not give them any wages.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,153. Do you save sufficient money to put them up on farms?—At present I consider I am sinking all my own private means.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,154. Then there is no hope for them if this depression lasts?—No. If I had not had something from some other sources, it would have been a very poor hope.

34,155. In your statement you said, and I was very pleased to hear you say so, that landlords and tenants can agree, but still there are some cases where there is no likelihood of their doing so, are there not?—Yes, I know some few cases.

34,156. And there you say they should have power to appeal to some other source to settle questions between them?—Yes.

34,157. What do you think is the reason that people do not apply for leases the same as they used to?—They never have in our neighbourhood, not very much.

34,158. They never have?—Not very much.

34,159. Do you think that the farmers at the present day would like to take leases at present rents?—Well, it is such a down grade continually that people would be afraid almost now, I think, to take a lease. It seems nothing but down hill all the way from 1876 almost. We had stock selling pretty well here some five or six years ago for a short time, but they have gone to a ruinous point now.

34,160. You spoke of cottages that had a little land attached to them. How do the labourers that live in those cottages do. Do they keep cows?—No. Some three or four of them have a cow, but this is a tolerably good market, or has been a very good market, for the sale of vegetables and fruit; I know one case where a man was fortunate enough to marry a thrifty wife, and she was able to keep the family all through and save his wages.

34,161. But we could not all do that, I suppose?—No; that is not a regular thing, that is only a single instance.

34,162. How is that land let. Is it let at a high rent?—No, it is let at a low rent, but it is very hilly; something like two acres and the cottages are not more than about 5*l.* a year.

34,163. Do you not think there would have been a better state of things if farmers were paid for all their improvements?—Well, I consider I lost a good bit through leaving this tract of land, but I could not claim it, because it was over time, and I thought it a little hard.

34,164. It is rather hard that a man should leave his improvements to another without being paid, is it not?—It was such extraordinarily rough land. I was a young man then, and laboured hard at it for years.

34,165. Do you think our Government are stricter in looking after home produce than they are in looking after the foreign produce that comes in. I mean in this sense. We very often hear of men being prosecuted for bringing bad milk into market, but we seldom hear of prosecutions for adulterating flour coming from abroad, though it may contain chalk and many other ingredients?—No, I never heard of it. There are frequently prosecutions for adulterating milk.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,166. How far is your farm from Abergavenny?—Two miles exactly.

34,167. Are there many Welsh farmers in your neighbourhood?—There is only one, and he is some four miles beyond me.

34,168. Do the labourers in your part speak the Welsh language?—No. It is about five miles to six miles where the Welsh commences.

34,169. From you?—From me. On the eastern side of Breconshire, just on the borders of Monmouthshire, is where the Welsh commences.

34,170. Do I understand you to say that there is a very general desire for greater security of tenure on the part of those who occupy land in this county?—I have very many times heard it expressed in talking over certain improvements that if a man was in his own place he would do the improvements, but he was afraid almost to do them now. I have heard that.

34,171. Have you seen the provisions of some of the Bills that have been brought in lately. There is a Bill brought in by Mr. Thomas Ellis and Mr. Bryn Roberts, for instance. Have you seen that Bill at all?—No, I have not. I have heard of it, but I have not seen it. Unfortunately for me, I have lost the power of reading, from partial loss of sight, or else it is very probable I should have read it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,172. The scheme of that Bill for security of tenure is that the landlord is not to have power to give notice to quit to any sitting tenant, except for a breach of certain statutory conditions. Do you follow my words?—Yes.

34,173. If that Bill became law, by section 3 the landlord would not be able to give notice to quit or to remove the tenant, unless the tenant committed a breach of one of the conditions of the tenancy named by law. You see what I mean?—Yes.

34,174. Of course it might be a very nice question to consider, if a tenant did go of his own wish, how far he could be entitled to any compensation for any improvements he had made, because it might be said it would hardly be fair for him to ask for any compensation if he had liberty to stay on the land as long as he liked, and as long as he paid a fair rent as determined by the Land Court. Do you follow my point?—Yes, I do.

34,175. Which do you think that the tenant farmers in your neighbourhood, or which do you yourself think you would prefer. Would you prefer security of tenure on that basis without a right of compensation for unexhausted improvements, or would you prefer the present tenure coupled with adequate provisions for unexhausted improvements?—Well, I should almost think that I should prefer compensation for unexhausted improvements.

34,176. You think you would rather be a tenant from year to year, subject to notice to quit without any reason at all—one year's notice to quit—receiving, however, full compensation for unexhausted improvements, to being a judicial tenant on the terms of this Bill?—Well, I would hardly like to decide, on the spur of the moment, that question.

34,177. It is rather a difficult point, but it is important that we should ascertain the wishes of each class in regard to these matters. Let me put the point again. Under the provisions of this Bill a tenant from year to year would become a tenant on statutory conditions. The first statutory condition is that he shall pay his rent; the rent is to be fixed by a Land Court at a fair sum; it is fixed, I think, under this Bill for seven years. During those seven years the tenant cannot go and ask the court to diminish the rent, nor can the landlord ask the court to raise the rent. Then the tenant is also bound to perform certain other conditions. As long as he pays the rent named by the court, and performs those conditions, he cannot be sent away by the landlord. That is the position under this Bill. Now the position from another point of view might be put in this way, that a tenant need not have such security of tenure if he has got an absolutely full claim for compensation in case he is sent away by the landlord. Which of those two positions do you think the average tenant farmer would prefer?—Well, I do not think I am competent to give an opinion upon that point, but at present the Agricultural Holdings Act is so involved that I had it from an eminent lawyer that it was more profitable very often for the lawyers than it is for the tenants to apply for compensation at present, as it stands now. An eminent lawyer in an adjoining county told a friend of mine that the Agricultural Holdings Act was very much more profitable to the lawyers than to the tenants applying for compensation.

34,178. I have got absolute proof of that, because when I was a Judge in Gloucestershire, I had one or two cases, and I am afraid in one case at any rate the costs came to several hundred pounds, and the costs on both sides exceeded both the claim and the counter-claim?—What I have told you came from one of the most eminent judges in the county.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I may say in the case I refer to, my costs as arbitrator were nothing at all; there were no fees at all to speak of.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,179. Your point is that people should settle their differences without the intervention of lawyers?—I am inclined to think so.

34,180. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Did not the holders of the "life leases you referred to allow the houses to "get into bad repair, and had not the landlord to "lay out large sums in repair before he could "get rent after the leases expired?"—They never were but very poor houses. I should think they must have been built mostly by labourers, and were covered with slabs of stone generally—never slated. I know a number of them; I know some two or three put up by the tenants were built and slated, but only two or three 34,181. "Had not the landlord to lay out "large sums in repairs before he could get rent "after the leases expired?"—It has never been done yet.

34,182. It has not been done?—No, it has not been done yet.

34,183. "Is it not the fact that the second "farm was offered to you by your old landlord, "because he found it necessary to resume possession of the other land, and this second farm "contained nearly 200 acres, as against 33 acres "so taken away"?—Yes, 200 acres it seemed, but half of it was hardly of any value, or of very much value; it was simply mountain land. rough wild land. I should have liked to have said a word or two, perhaps, about the railway charges. We find those a great barrier to us.

34,184. Have they been raised?—Some of the charges seem very absurd, for instance, yesterday, through a mistake in an order, I had to have a ton of manure from Newport, or 21 cwt. They charged 9*s.* for bringing one ton, and if I had had two, it would have been 8*s.* I think that is a very absurd thing.

34,185. What sort of manure was it?—Bone manure. We are taking to dress our grass lands with bone manure.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. Mary Mees called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,186. You live near the Roman Catholic Chapel, Brynmawr, Breconshire?—Yes.

34,187. What is it you wish to say?—My father had leave of Mr. Crawshay Bailey to fence in a field. When he died he left it for me. I had it for a few years at the same rent as my father paid, and then the Nantyglo Company rose it from half a guinea to 2*l.* 15*s.* I put it in my husband's name then when they rose it. Now my husband is dead two years ago, and I had it put in my own name again, and they then sent me another notice. My father rented it to Mr. Jonah Wicks, a butcher, of Brynmawr, at 6*l.* a year.

34,188. What did you pay for it first?—Half a guinea my father paid.

34,189. You sub-let it at 6*l.*?—My father had sub-let it before he died. Then after my father died, he left it for me.

34,190. Were there any papers concerning it?—I have some papers.

34,191. Have you the paper by which it was left to you?—I have not the paper by which it was left to me, but I have the papers to show that I paid.

34,192. Was 10*s.* 6*d.* the amount of the first rent paid?—Yes.

34,193. Then did you sub-let it for 6*l.*?—Yes, and when my father died he left it for me, and I had my husband's name put on the paper to pay it.

34,194. Then they rose the rent?—They rose the rent from half a guinea to 2*l.* 15*s.* My husband is dead about two years last January. Last year I had it put on my name to pay, and they sent a notice 12 months last February that I was to pay the same rent that I received of Mr. Wicks, the butcher.

34,195. How much was that?—The 6*l.* a year.

34,196. It remained the same?—Yes, I never rose it, and I had the rates to pay out of that. When the time of the notice was within a fortnight up there was a messenger sent to me to ask me what was I going to do, that Mr. Vachell was at the Nantyglo office, and they wanted to know what I was going to do. I said I did not know exactly what to do with it then. I asked him when I could see Mr. Vachell. He said, "Oh, he will not be up perhaps for months "again, but you can see him down at Newport." Well, I am not able much to go about. I said, "Well, Mr. Graham is in the office nearly every day." He said "Yes." I said, "Tell Mr.

"Graham I will come down and see him." Within a few days I went down. I told Mr. Graham I had come to see about the field. He said, "Well, whoever do have it must pay the "same rent as you receive, that is, 6*l.*" I said, "It was too bad that the field should go on in "this kind of way after my father fenced it off "a common, and if everyone will act like you "I shall be thrown on the parish." He said, "I hope not, but it is likely enough that Mr. "Wicks will take it if you will not." That is the butcher that had the field before my father died.

34,197. When your father had the land from Mr. Crawshay Bailey did you get the lease upon it?—No, not a lease for the land, but I got a lease for a couple of houses there.

34,198. How long is that lease for?—As long as the Nantyglo Company last.

34,199. That lease is still in existence?—Yes.

34,200. And is still operating, no doubt?—Yes.

34,201. Was the land upon the same lease or not?—No, the land is not mentioned on the same lease.

34,202. Have you got the lease there?—No, I have not got the lease.

34,203. Was the land secured to you for the same period of time as the house?—Well, my father made a will, and it was mentioned on the paper about the land attached.

34,204. I suppose your father gave you whatever he had to give?—Yes.

34,205. Had he any power over this land more than a yearly tenant?—Well, he was paying on the same paper as the house's lease was. There was no lease on the land.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,206. What rent did he pay for the house?—Two guineas besides this.

34,207. That was a building lease?—Yes.

34,208. He built the house or got the house built?—Yes.

34,209. After that he got a bit of land added on and fenced it in?—Yes.

34,210. How much rent did he pay to the landlord?—Half a guinea.

34,211. As a matter of fact, your lease does not extend to this bit of land?—No, the land is not on the lease, only it is mentioned. It is not drawn on the lease.

34,212. According to your showing, your father became tenant from year to year of this extra bit, although he was the building tenant on the land on which the cottages stood. Now, the Nantyglo Company seem to have the right, do they not, to terminate that agreement, and you complain of its hardship?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,213. As a matter of fact, they gave you notice to go last autumn?—Twelve months last February.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

34,214. Has the notice expired?—Yes.

34,215. Who has the land now?—Well, I kept it on at 6*l.* a year. I took it on myself.

34,216. Are you now paying 6*l.* a year for it?—Yes.

34,217. You cannot sub-let it at a higher figure?—He told me I was not to sub-let it at all. I was to keep it for my own use. Mr. Graham said that.

34,218. Is Mr. Wicks one of the tenants of the cottages?—No, he is up in the town butchering.

34,219. The raising of the rent or the taking of the bit of land would not interfere with your letting the cottages?—No.

34,220. What kind of fencing is it?—There are two side stone walls to it, and it is by a railway station.

34,221. Did Mr. Crawshay Bailey sell all his interest to the Nantyglo Company?—I expect he did.

34,222. You do not think Mr. Crawshay Bailey has anything to do with it now?—No, I do not believe so, he is dead; it was old Mr. Crawshay Bailey—the old man.

34,223. Have you anything else to say to the Commissioners?—Only that I am a widow. I told Mr. Graham could not he put it on the lower scale for me, and he said, "No."

34,224. Of course we hear what you have to say, but we have no power to interfere in such matters?—I am a widow.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,225. Your complaint is that your father expended a good deal of money on this land?—He laboured hard.

34,226. And built walls round it, and you complain that you cannot continue as tenant at the same rent as your father did?—Yes, that is the complaint, or a little advance.

Mr. Brymnor Jones.

34,227. A small advance?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,228. You would be willing to have a small advance, but to raise it from 10*s.* 6*d.* to 6*l.* is very hard after the amount expended by your father?—Yes, I have the measure of the field if you would like it.

34,229. Do you know what the acreage is?—Here it is on the paper (73 yards × 101 yards)

Mr. Grove.

34,230. How many years ago is it since your father fenced it in?—I should think abouut 40 or something of that sort. I am not exactly sure about it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN DAVID called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,231. Do you live at Llansantfraed, Abergavenny?—Yes.

34,232. What is it you wish to give evidence about?—I handed up a paper.

34,233. There are three things mentioned on the paper, "first, security for improvements; "second, protection for sitting tenant; third, "cottage accommodation"?—Quite so.

34,234 Take first the security for improvements. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, I read it sometime ago, and studied a bit of it, but I thought it hardly worth while to keep on with it, so I put it on one side.

34,235. You do not think it acts?—No.

34,236. Do you live in that part of the country where they speak Welsh?—Yes, I am a Welshman. I am one of those you have been talking so much about.

34,237. We do not generally hear that the Agricultural Holdings Act is much known in Wales. Do you think it would be better known if it was published in the Welsh language?—I do not know, indeed.

34,238. You do not think much of it?—No, nothing at all.

34,239. Do you consider that it gives any security for improvements?—You must have the consent of the landlord.

34,240. Do you not think that is right?—Well, in some cases it would be right.

34,241. There are some cases under the Act. There is one case in which it is not necessary to get the consent of the landlord. You think that the Act ought to be amended in the direction of extending those things in which the consent of the landlord is not required. Do you think so?—Yes.

34,242. Many people think that the Agricultural Holdings Act is capable of improvements. I gather that is your opinion?—Yes.

34,243. Would you tell the Commissioners what your opinion is, and the points upon which you think it might be amended?—I cannot go into the Agricultural Holdings Act. I do not hardly remember anything about it. Of course, what I meant by improvement is, I believe a farmer at the present time who does his farm well, is situated in a worse position than a man who does his farm bad.

34,244. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

34,245. What sized holding have you?—Something over 300 acres.

34,246. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Herbert, Llanarth.

34,247. Tell us what greater security you think ought to be given for improvements?—I believe the tenant farmer when he improves his land should, in case anything happens to prevent his going on, be paid for what he has done on the place. He should have encouragement to go on, but at the present time, in this county in particular (it is different to what it is in Glamorganshire), there is no encouragement at all for a farmer to improve his land.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,248. Would you be satisfied with the Glamorganshire custom if it extended here?—Yes, but there is some deficiency there. I like that better than this. If a farmer improves his land in this part of the country, and does it well, he will stand a very great chance of a rise in the rent, or at least he will not get much reduction, and then there are plenty of what you call land grabbers who come and offer more rent for it if he does his improvements well.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,249. What have you to say about the point "protection for sitting tenants"?—I maintain this, that the land would be worth nearly as much again if there was security for tenure and improvements.

34,250. You think security of tenure would encourage a tenant to farm well?—Yes.

34,251. To throw more capital and more labour into the farm?—Yes.

34,252. Have you anything to say to us about cottage accommodation?—Yes, we are very badly off for cottage accommodation in this part of the country, very, very bad. I think it is one of the greatest drawbacks that farmers have in the neighbourhood. It is impossible, in my opinion, for a farmer to farm as he ought to on a large farm without having some cottages, and good tidy cottages, so that they command good respectable tidy men.

Mr. Grove.

34,253. You think if there were more cottages it would encourage more labour on the land, and the land would get the benefit of it?—It would, and we should have a better class of working men. According to the cottages we have at present, we cannot expect tidy working men to live in them.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,254. Did you ever farm in Wales, Mr. David?—Yes.

34,255. In Glamorganshire?—Yes.

34,256. Do you find much difference in the farming in this neighbourhood to what you were used to in that part of the country?—Not a great lot.

34,257. Much about the same?—Yes, just about the same. I do not believe they farm quite as well here as they did down there, that is the only difference.

34,258. Do you know of any rents which have been advanced of late years?—No.

34,259. Times are too bad at present?—They do not talk about rises now.

34,260. Are there any abatements?—We had a little bit at the last half year's rent.

34,261. Did you have 20 per cent.?—No; well, 5 per cent.

34,262. Do you think land could be made to produce much more if you had security that you would be paid for your improvements and the money laid out upon it?—Yes, I am certain of it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

34,263. Do you think you would get a better class of labourers to live along with you on the farms if you had better cottages for them?—Yes, we should.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,264. Do you find that there has been a good deal of change in the character of the farming since you were in the neighbourhood?—Yes, a good lot of land has been laid down to grass.

34,265. You are aware, I suppose, that under the Glamorganshire custom a claim cannot be made for land that has been laid down to grass?—Yes.

34,266. And that under the Agricultural Holdings Act it is necessary to obtain the consent of the landlord before you can do so?—Yes.

34,267. You think that the laying down of land to grass should be in the third schedule and not in the first?—Yes.

34,268. That it should not be necessary to obtain the consent of the landlord?—That is my opinion.

34,269. That is one of the improvements which you suggest in the amendment of the Act?—Yes.

34,270. Do you find that the Welsh farmers are better farmers than the English farmers?—I should not like to say they are better, but they are quite as good, I think.

34,271. Do you think they are more industrious?—Well, they are not quite so extravagant. They do not use so many bottles of whisky, I believe.

34,272. In their style of living?—Yes, they do not keep so many parties, night parties.

34,273. Do you think the standard of comfort amongst Welsh farmers is lower than it is amongst English farmers?—No, I believe in comfort the other way altogether; I believe it is more a comfort to be in the house with your wife and children, and sober, than to be in the house of a night with a lot of bottles of whisky, and half tight.

34,274. I believe you have been a pretty successful farmer at the shows?—Yes.

34,275. Can you tell us a bit of your history?—It is hardly worth while.

34,276. We should like to hear it, because your evidence would be very valuable?—I can only say this, I believe I have taken as many prizes in this county the last 18 years as anyone else. I do not think anyone has taken more.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

34,277. How many have you taken?—Indeed, I cannot say.

34,278. Have they been taken at county shows?—I have taken more in roots and farming at the agricultural shows; I only just manage to scrap up a bit of a prize now and again otherwise.

34,279. Did you say you had an abatement?—No, it was hardly an abatement, we had a few pounds back, that is all.

34,280. Do you think that according to the present prices farmers really are not doing well?—I do not believe any farmer that farms 300 acres within 20 miles of Abergavenny has not lost 100*l.* last year.

34,281. So that either they have gone into their capital or they are using money which they have saved in good times?—Yes, it is a fact, they cannot help it.

34,282. How long is this sort of thing to continue?—I hope it will not continue any longer.

Mr. Grove.

34,283. You know what our county council butter making is?—Yes.

34,284. Do you think that would be beneficial?—It has done a lot of good in the neighbourhood.

34,285. Do you think there is a disinclination amongst farmers' daughters and so on to go to those classes?—I do not find it so.

34,286. In your district it was successful?—Yes; I had a niece from my house as one of the pupils.

34,287. You took personally a great interest in the matter?—Yes.

34,288. You think, however, if general interest was taken in it it would be a great benefit?—Yes, I am certain of it. It has improved the butter all through our neighbourhood to a great extent.

34,289. Might we say that butter is worth 1*d.* or 2*d.* more in the market because it has been improved in quality?—Yes, I believe so, at least I should rather give that much for it now than in the old way of doing.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Newport.

FORTY-SECOND DAY.

The Town Hall, Newport, Monmouthshire, Wednesday, 14th March 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

SIR JOHN TALBOT LLEWELYN, Bart.	MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.	MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFTHS.	MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM GRAHAM called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,289*a*. Are you a land agent, surveyor, valuer, and auctioneer?—I am.

34,290. And a member of the firm of Williams, Graham, Hitchcox, and Co., of Bank Chambers, Newport?—Yes.

34,291. Have you been in practice some time in Newport?—45 years.

34,292. You have prepared a statement, I believe, for the Commission?—Yes, I have.

34,293. Will you kindly let us hear that statement?—I have been in practice in Newport 45 years; have filled the office of mayor of the borough, and am a magistrate for the county borough. I am a fellow of the Surveyors' Institution; have for 22 years received appointments from the Board of Trade in relation to land required by railway companies; and have had large experience in purchasing, selling, letting, and valuing land in the counties of Monmouth and Glamorgan, and to some extent in the counties of Carmarthen, Brecon, Hereford, and Gloucester. My firm are the agents for four large estates, namely, the Clytha estate, 2,700 acres——

34,294. Whose property is that?—The property of Mr. Reginald Herbert. Also the estate of Mr. T. P. Price, Member of Parliament for the northern division of this county, 2,000 acres; the Llantilio estate, the property of Sir Henry Mather Jackson, Baronet, 2,700 acres; and the Aberpergwm estate, the property of Mr. Morgan Stuart Williams, 5,800 acres; and several small properties embracing altogether an area of 15,000 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,295. The Aberpergwm estate is in Glamorganshire?—It is, Sir John.

34,296. In the Vale of Neath?—It is.

34,297. It is not Mr. Morgan Stuart Williams' property in this county; but Aberpergwm is in Glamorganshire?—Yes; you will remember I spoke of being an agent in Glamorganshire, and that is in Glamorganshire.

Lord Kenyon.

34,298. Is the 15,000 acres the total of the whole?—Yes, an area of 15,000 acres. With unimportant exceptions, all these estates and properties are of freehold tenure; but the large estates are in the main settled either by deed or will, and the present owners are life tenants. Where the income (after payment of interest on charges and mortgages, and the cost of management and repairs) is small, improvements whereby the land could be made more productive cannot be made for want of means. In these circumstances I recommend sales to pay off charges. This course has been followed, to the advantage of the life tenant, and also of the tenants who have thus changed their landlord. The farms are let on annual tenancies, with entry in Monmouthshire at Christmas or Candlemas; in Glamorganshire, Carmarthenshire, and Breconshire, at Lady Day or Michaelmas. I should have said, in answer to Sir John Llewelyn that part of the Aberpergwm estate is in Breconshire, in Ystradgynlais parish.

34,299. Is any part of Mr. Morgan Stuart Williams' property in Monmouthshire?—None. The tenants make no request for leases. Changes of tenancy are very few. Agreements provide for cultivation, according to the most approved methods of the district. There is no obstacle to a tenant cultivating what is most marketable in his locality, provided he keeps the land clean and in good heart; but he is restricted from breaking up meadow and pasture land without consent. Rents vary very much. Are fixed with reference to situation, quality of the land, and the sufficiency and convenience of the homestead. Where rights of pasture upon unenclosed land attach to a farm, the annual value is increased in proportion to the extent of the right; the quality of the pasture—dry or wet—the water supply, and the means of shelter in rough weather. No services are required from tenants beyond the haulage of materials for repairs of the holding, and for improvements mutually agreed upon. In May 1880, abatements amounting to 20 per cent. were made on the half-year's rents then paid to lessees and annual tenants alike, upon the Llantilio estate, followed by permanent reductions averaging 33 per cent.

34,300. Where is the Llantilio estate?—In Monmouthshire. It lies about half-way between Abergavenny and Monmouth. Abatements and reductions have been made on the Clytha and Aberpergwm estates in the last two years in special cases. Rents are very well paid. The Monmouthshire rents are collected about the 1st of May and 1st of November. The Glamorganshire in June and July and in December and February. Arrears amount to less than seven per cent. on one estate, where the gross rental of agricultural holdings is 2,700*l.* and the average rent 22*s.* per acre, and less than four per cent. on another estate, where the gross agricultural rents are 800*l.*, and the average rent 16*s.* per acre. And upon hill farms, where the gross rents are 260*l.*, and the average rent 9*s.*, there are no arrears. The provisions of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, are rarely used. On change of tenancy the rule is that an incoming tenant is ready, and the sum payable to the outgoing tenant is arranged between themselves or by valuers they appoint. On the passing of the Act the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture printed and circulated a plain statement without the legal phraseology of what the Act provided, and appointed a special committee to frame a scale of compensation for unexhausted improvements by the tenant. A scale was approved by the Chamber in 1884, was printed, and circulated, and is acted upon.

Lord Kenyon.

34,301. Have you a copy of that scale?—I have [producing same]. I think section 3 of the Act, in my judgment, would be improved by an amendment giving the tenant a right of appeal where the landlord refused consent to an improvement he desired to make. This appeal might be to the county court judge of the district, who should have power to fix the sum to be expended, certify a charge in favour of the tenant upon the holding for the sum when actually expended, and state the yearly rate by which such charge shall be diminished and ultimately extinguished.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,302. That is the clause which provides for compensation for certain improvements mentioned in the first part of the schedule if the landlord consents; that is the clause you are thinking of?—Yes, clause 3.

Lord Kenyon.

34,303. If the landlord refuses?—Yes, if the landlord refuses—if he does not consent. A considerable area of poor arable land has been laid down to pasture during the last 20 years. When I have approved of this being done, I have provided the seed on the tenant agreeing henceforward to treat it as pasture, and not break it up again without consent. Improvements are made by a mutual agreement, and, as a rule, by the landlord, the tenant contributing the necessary haulage. There are instances of the tenant providing the capital upon an agreement for repayment by half-yearly instalments with interest. Cultivation is not now affected by game preserving. Tenants are pleased to see their landlord and his friends come to shoot, and would be disappointed if they did not have sport. The County Council have commenced giving valuable instruction in dairy work; and the improvement in the quality, with increase of quantity, will make manifest to the tenant farmers one direction in which they can increase the returns from their business. There is no co-operation that I know of for production or for the selling of produce. Down to the year 1875 there was a frequent diminution of owners of the soil and an increase in the area of some large estates. Previous to that period a plan for consolidation of small holdings into large farms was in operation on some estates, and many yeoman proprietors disappeared, but during the last 20 years, and especially during the last 10 years (since the passing of Lord Cairns' Settled Land Act), large estates have been distributed by sale, and land proprietors are more numerous now than at any previous period. A few tenant farmers have purchased their holdings at the market price of the day which has not been below 25 years' purchase upon a fair rent, but more frequently a larger number of years' purchase. The tenant farmer, his wife, and children are all employed in the business of the farm. They work hard, and in some instances the sons are one after another placed in a farm to begin on their own account. Additional and improved cottage accommodation is needed in some parts of the country. In some instances cottages are included in the letting of large farms; but, as a rule, they are let by the owner to the occupier. There has not been migration of farmers, but labourers, and especially the young men, have been attracted to the mining districts because of the good wages obtainable. Where landlords are resident, and the exceptions are few, the relations between them and their tenants are most friendly. I am of opinion that former prosperity will not be obtained by waiting for legislative enactments, but there is much to be done by forbearance, patience, and perseverance; the landowner accepting a fair rent and making reasonable provision in buildings and conveniences to enable the tenant to carry on the business of the farm with economy, and giving him help in exceptionally bad seasons; the tenant on his part exercising care and forethought in his cultivation, and in the breeding and rearing of stock, taking especial note of the seasons, so as to produce that which is most suitable to the soil and situation, and what will command a ready sale in the market; and also availing himself of opportunities to acquire increased knowledge of his business, and then applying it. I see no necessity for what is termed a "Land

Court" in the district which my business covers; and I am led to fear that those who ask for such a court do not fully realise what it involves to a tenant who would seek its aid. The breaking off of friendly relations, the fierce antagonism which would follow, and the costs attendant upon such litigation would destroy any prospect of reconciliation, and in the end the tenant will find himself the sufferer from his own act.

34,304. Can you produce to us some more copies of that little resumé of the Act which you sent up?—The Secretary of the Chamber is in the room; if he has any copy, no doubt he will be ready to put them in the hands of the Commissioners. The Secretary tells me they can be supplied.

34,305. You say many large farms are consolidated, and many yeoman proprietors have disappeared?—That is during the early years of this century, and down to 1875.

34,306. Do you mean that they sold their holdings?—Yes, they sold their holdings.

34,307. Now they are re-appearing?—They are not re-appearing, but others are; the land is distributed more than it was.

34,308. Have tenants bought their holdings at all in this district?—Yes, I have said so, in some instances.

34,309.—Do you think that those tenants who have bought their freeholds are better off?—I think they are, because they have put by money to buy with.

34,310. They have not bought recklessly?—They have not bought recklessly.

34,311. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act much used then in this neighbourhood?—No.

34,312. But that schedule is made use of?—It is.

34,313. And it is thought fair by both parties?—Yes, I have not heard of any complaint of it. I use it on all occasions where I have necessity for it.

34,314. You have experience in Gloucestershire as well as in Wales and Monmouthshire. Do you see any differences in the circumstances of the towns?—Not between Monmouthshire and Gloucestershire.

34,315. Do you see any difference between Wales and Monmouthshire?—Not so far as my experience goes. I have not been low down in Wales. I have only one small estate in Carmarthenshire in my charge.

34,316. You cannot speak much as to that?—No.

34,317. Then you say no services are required from tenants beyond the haulage of material for improvements mutually agreed upon. Would that be under the Act?—Not always under the Act.

34,318. Do you think that the landlords readily agree to what they consider improvements?—Those that are able to do so.

34,319. Those that are in a position to do so?—Those that are in a position to do so, but when they have not been in a position to do it, I have on two occasions arranged with the tenants to find the capital.

34,320. Would those be cases of tenants on yearly agreements?—Yes, on yearly agreements. In one case the tenant found the capital to build a new farm-house.

34,321. He must have felt himself very secure then?—Yes, he found 700*l.* to build a new farm-house.

34,322. Did he have any further security given him, any lease?—None whatever, except an agreement signed by me on behalf of the landlord that he was to receive 50*l.* each half year on payment of his rent in reduction of the principal advanced, nothing more.

34,323. How was that secured to him?—Only by an agreement, nothing more.

34,324. A written agreement?—Yes, a written agreement.

34,325. I suppose if he left, the principal was to be paid up?—Yes, the balance of the principal.

34,326. Did the landlord pay any interest besides?—Yes, 5 per cent. That is in operation now.

34,327. You state that on the Llantilio estate reductions to the amount of 33 per cent. were made in 1880. Can you tell me what the average rental of that estate is?—That estate was an estate which was sold by auction in 1873 after the preceding owner had raised the rents higher than ever they were before. It may be in your remembrance that from 1872 to 1875 were the years in which land sold higher than ever known in England. The Llantilio estate was sold by auction in London and it realised 165,000*l.* with the timber to be valued, which was afterwards valued at 20,000*l.*, making the cost of the whole 3,000 acres 185,000*l.* The rents were roughly something over 4,000*l.* a year. When the year 1879 came, that disastrous year, the most disastrous year in my memory or in any one's memory I suppose, they were unable to gather in the harvest because of the constant rains, and the sheep died in the early spring, and it was then that 20 per cent. was allowed the tenants on that half year, and a reduction on leases and annual tenancies alike of 33 per cent. on that estate.

34,328. They bought at something like 40 years' purchase?—There was the mansion house, coppice woods, and land in hand.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,329. Who was the unfortunate purchaser?—Sir Henry Jackson's grandfather.

Lord Kenyon.

34,330. And who was the fortunate seller?—Colonel Clifford.

34,331. It is rather an exceptional case in the way of reduction and you have given a reason for it?—Yes, it is an exceptional case in the raising of rents in this county, very exceptional. The tenants would have been ruined if the late Sir Henry Jackson, the present Baronet's father, had not made those reductions.

34,332. You say the County Council have started instructions in dairy work?—Yes.

34,333. I observe there is a shop for the sale of Danish butter in the town of Newport?—There is.

34,334. Do you think that is doing a good trade?—Yes, I think it is doing a good trade, otherwise they could not be in the front shop. The rents are high.

34,335. I saw two, so perhaps they have changed?—The rents are very high in that street.

34,336. Do you not think that the Monmouthshire farmers ought to drive the Danish butter out of the country?—I do, and I hope that is coming.

34,337. What class of farming is pursued in this neighbourhood?—In this immediate neighbourhood along that tract of level land between here and the Severn there is alluvial soil, and that is dairy farming and feeding land, otherwise it is agricultural—mixed—now more dairy than arable, but formerly it was more arable than grass.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,338. Do the tenants of the estates of which you speak, speak Welsh at all?—Some few.

34,339. And some of the labourers also, I suppose?—Yes; some few.

34,340. You were good enough to refer to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. What is your opinion about the procedure required under that Act. Does that require amendment?—Well, I cannot say that I have given much consideration to the mode of procedure beyond this, that it seems to be a little cumbrous. Possibly in the way of making it more simple, it would be well to amend it.

34,341. The procedure actually involves the intervention of the county court, but at a somewhat late stage, and after considerable expense has been incurred?—Yes; that is so.

34,342. Do you think it is a just and fair condition of the tenant's claim, and of the landlord's counter-claim that notice should have to be given?—I think some notice should have to be given.

34,343. Of course when a man makes a claim upon another before the matter comes to a decision, notice ought to be given. What I mean is this: that if two months at least before the termination of the tenancy the tenant does not give notice, he loses all right to compensation?—Yes.

34,344. Do you think that ought to be adhered to?—I think there should be a notice. My practice is, in the few cases of change of tenancy I have had, whenever a notice to quit is given by the tenant, I take the earliest opportunity of going into the question with him as to what his claim would be on quitting, and arrange it as speedily as possible.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,345. Let me put the point again. I am not in the least seeking to press you into an opinion in the direction I am suggesting; but I think one case came under my attention in which the tenant had given a notice, and the landlord forgot to give the 14 days' notice of counter claim. The consequence was that the landlord could not claim anything by way of counter-claim; he had lost his chance. Do you think that is fair in adjusting the accounts between the parties, that for a mere technicality like that the landlord's counter-claim should be shut out?—I think the landlord should give some notice of his counter-claim. I think both parties should come together in some way with claim and counter-claim before the end of the tenancy.

34,346. I confess I do not quite see the justice of that. It seems to me an unnecessary technicality on both sides?—I do not think so. I think the claims are such that they cannot be properly examined unless it is done before the tenancy terminates.

34,347. Why should it not be assumed as a matter of course that when a tenancy terminates there will have to be an adjustment of accounts?—In my judgment there should be a period within which notice of the claims on either side should be given.

34,348. We are agreed about this, that before the tenant goes before any arbitrator he ought to give particulars of his claim. That I entirely agree to, but I am calling attention to the extreme technicality of this 7th section. The tendency of legislation has been not only in regard to matters of this kind, but in regard to other matters at any rate, to get rid of these formal notices as conditions precedent to the claim or counter-claim. But you think there is value in it, as I understand?—Yes, I think there is value in it on both sides, and I think it would lead to what I have already said is my practice of going at once to the tenant and going into it and preventing it getting into litigation. I am singularly fortunate perhaps, but I have never had litigation with a tenant in my 45 years.

34,349. Would this kind of procedure strike you as satisfactory where the parties are at arm's length Of course if the two parties are in substantial agreement and are reasonable men there is no need to resort to a court at all. Legislation has to be made to fit what is called the hard and unreasonable cases as well?—Yes.

34,350. The sort of procedure which has occurred to me as being more satisfactory than this cumbrous procedure would be something of this kind, that either party might apply to the judge of the county court to name a land valuer?—Before any claim made?

34,351. No; I am assuming the point of the claim. I am supposing claims have been given by both sides and instead of this particular procedure, which I know from my experience as a county cout judge is most cumbrous and unsatisfactory, do you think this would be satisfactory, that either party might apply, if they could not agree upon a land valuer, to the county court judge and say, "Will you kindly, sir, name a "land surveyor for us"?—Is there not that power now in the Act?

34,352. No, it is after the referees are appointed and after they have appointed an umpire?—It is the appointment of an umpire.

34,353. And the jurisdiction of the county court is left somewhat vague, and there is an appeal from the county court to the high court, if the judge states a case, and so on?—Yes.

34,354. I know all this leads to great expense?—It does.

34,355. What occurs to my mind is that if the two gentlemen who are quarrelling or have a dispute cannot agree upon an umpire themselves the best thing would be to say "Go to "the county court and ask the county court "judge to name an umpire for you and the "umpire's award is to be absolutely final and is "to be entered up as a judgment of the county "court"?—I should agree to that.

34,356. I have thought the matter out and I cannot think of a cheaper method than that?—I should agree to that.

34,357. I am told by the learned county court judge here that while he has no difficulty in his cases in Glamorganshire in regard to a dispute between landlord and tenant in finding out what the custom of Glamorganshire is, he has had considerable difficulty in getting a correct definition of the custom of the county of Monmouth. Could you give for the benefit of all of us a statement of what the custom is? Put aside the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 for the moment?—It varies in this county.

34,358. There are Candlemas takings, are there not?—Partly Candlemas and partly Christmas.

34,359. In the case of the Candlemas tenancy there could not very well arise any question as to growing crops at the determination of the tenancy?—Yes, there is the growing wheat, there is the autumn wheat planted, what is called the off-going crop of wheat. The turnips would not all be eaten off.

34,360. I was going to suggest there may be a question about roots, but I do not see how there could be with regard to wheat and barley as a general rule?—There is no question about barley, it is the off-going wheat crop.

34,361. I cannot state the custom fully, but is it fairly accurate to put it in this way, that the custom with regard to a Candlemas tenancy is that the outgoing tenant has a right to remain in the farm buildings until May 1st?—Yes.

34,362. And he retains the occupation of the boozy pasture?—Yes.

34,363. What else is there?—In many instances he is obliged to give accommodation to his successor for horses, and sometimes part of the house, so that he may come in at the 2nd of February, and begin to cultivate the land, and go on with the operations of the farm. I have a provision in the agreement which I use that the outgoing tenant shall give up all the arable land except what is under wheat on the 15th of October, so that the incoming tenant may go in and begin to plough, and get ready for the spring cropping.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,364. That is your special agreement?—That is my special agreement, not the custom.

34,365. It is not a term of the custom?—It is not.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,366. That is following the Glamorganshire custom?—Oh, it is, is it?

34,367. Well, is it not?—

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,368. In Glamorganshire they are the Michaelmas takings?—Yes, Michaelmas takings.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,369. I am now dealing with the Candlemas takings?—Yes.

34,370. You do not think that is a term of the custom?—No, it is not a custom.

34,371. Is there any other term of the custom beyond those which we have touched upon now?—There were some, but I think they are practically got rid of now. There was a custom whereby the incoming tenant had a land share, that is a share of the wheat crop; then he had to take the tithe rentcharge in kind in the same way; but I think those are got rid of by agreement in later years. I have got rid of them in later years now, and I have not met with them recently. Beyond those, I do not think there is anything else on the Candlemas taking.

34,372. What is the custom in regard to the Michaelmas taking?—I do not know of any Michaelmas taking in Monmouthshire.

34,373. Do you think Candlemas takings are as convenient as Michaelmas takings?—I think they are; the people are accustomed to them.

34,374. But putting aside the fact that people are accustomed to them, do you think that the Michaelmas taking is more convenient?—Well, at the Michaelmas taking all the crops would be on the farm, and they would have to be purchased by an incoming tenant which would require considerable capital coming in in that way.

34,375. I do not know about all the crops?—Yes, all the product of the past year; hay and corn would be intact.

34,376. Harvested by that time?—Harvested, but not broken into; there would be a considerable difficulty in altering a Monmouthshire custom.

34,377. Mr. Richard Jones was quite right; we have evidence of a Michaelmas taking in the centre and east of Glamorganshire. Perhaps you can mention any differences, but this is how Mr. Daniel Owen describes it, "The yearly "tenancy begins and ends on the 2nd February, "and is subject to six months' notice on either "side to be given on the 2nd August. The "outgoing tenant has the privilege of retaining "the farm-house and a pasture field the nearest

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

" to the house free of charge from the termina" tion of his tenancy to the 1st May succeeding.
" Before the expiration of the tenancy of the " outgoing tenant a valuation of the unexhausted
" improvements takes place." Did that take " place under the custom of Monmouthshire ?—
Not as a matter of custom.

34,378. Then there follows certain regulations which appear to have been substantially agreed upon between the valuers as to the amount in regard to the different kinds of crops. But to come to another subject, have you upon the estates with which you are connected many cotters—many men who pay a small sum for a cottage and a garden, direct to the landowner ?—Yes, as a rule the cottages are let direct from the landowner to the occupier. There are some instances in which cottages are included in the taking of the farm.

34,379. Mr. Jeffreys, who was a witness we had before us yesterday, agreed with what I read from a report made in 1867, which called attention to the very large number of cotters in some parts of Monmouthshire ?—You are speaking now of small quit-rents or cot-rents. I think they only exist upon the Duke of Beaufort's estate.

34,380. What do you mean, Mr. Graham, when you use the term " fair rent " ? You used the term " fair rent " ?—Yes.

34,381. What do you mean by a fair rent—do you mean a competition rent ?—I do not mean a competition rent. I mean a rent settled by arrangement between the tenant and the landlord.

34,382. By what method would you arrive at what is the fair rent as between a landlord and tenant ?—I should arrive at it by my own experience.

34,383. How would you, as a valuer, meet this case : I have been tenant of a farm, we will say, for 20 years, and have been paying 100*l.* a year for it ; the landlord says, " I think the rent " ought to be 110*l.*," and I say, " I think it " ought to be 95*l.*," how would you propose to adjust that difference—on what principle ?—Are you supposing that I am the agent or that I am called in to adjust it.

34,384. We will suppose you are called in to adjust it ?—The principle I should adopt then would be to go and view the land, and place my own opinion upon its value to rent.

34,385. That is to say, you would consider whether a prudent farmer, investing his capital and ready to give his work and superintendence, would think it an economical thing to give such and such a sum for it ?—Certainly.

34,386. Then the test of what is a fair rent is whether the farmer can make a fair profit out of the business ?—Certainly.

34,387. Supposing a landlord and tenant cannot agree, do you see any objection to some fair third party coming in to settle it for them ?—It would be a very rare case, I think, for a tenant and landlord not to agree I do not think it would be quite right to bring in an outside person to settle their differences, because although the tenant may not be willing to give the rent which the landlord is asking ——

34,388. Quite so, but you have said that the landlord is not to get the highest rent he possibly can for it ; for the sake of argument, that is conceded ; what has to be paid by the tenant to the landlord is to be a fair rent ?—Yes.

34,389. Of course I understand the logical position of the landlord if he says, " I shall get " the highest rent I possibly can ; I shall put " up this farm for tender." I understand his position then ; but supposing a landlord says, " I do not desire from my tenant anything more " than a fair rent—a rent which will give to the " tenant farmer a fair return on his capital and " a fair return for his superintendence and " work ? "—Then the landlord says, " My fair " rent is so much ; " the tenant says, " I cannot give it."

34,390. And the tenant says, " No, the fair " rent is so much less ? "—Yes, so much less.

34,391. Both being then fair men, what is the objection to calling another fair man in to settle the difference ?—If they agree to it, I should say so, but not by compulsion.

34,392. Then while you admit the principle of fair rent, you also refuse the only means by which the fair rent can be ascertained, because the landlord has a position of advantage ; he can always give notice to quit and get rid of the tenant farmer, but the tenant farmer cannot get rid of his landlord ?—The tenant farmer can give notice to quit, too ; he can change—they can both change. I should not like to introduce the principle of compelling a landlord or a tenant.

34,393. But why not ? In regard to a case of a landlord refusing his consent to improvements, you are willing for a third party to come in ; that was one of the recommendations you made ?—Yes, I did say so.

34,394. Why do you call in a third party in one dispute and not in another ?—I think there is a difference. In the one case where I recommend that there should be power to appeal to the Judge or to the Court of the district, the man is there, and is engaged in his business, and sees a way whereby he can increase his business by employment of some capital which he has to spare. I think it would be just that he should have the opportunity of doing it.

34,395. But in the case I am putting to you of the sitting tenant who wants a reduction of his rent, the man is there, to use your own words ?—Yes, he is there.

34,396. That hardly makes a distinction between the two cases then. The distinction that you seek to draw I could follow if applied to the case of a vacant farm, but supposing a man has been 20 years on the farm and his father 40 years before him. He is there in that case as well as in the other case ?—Yes, but I understand your question means this, that a landlord cannot get rid of his tenant, and that he has to be there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,397. No, the landlord can of course, but we are on the question of fairness; the landlord is not taking the highest possible logical and legal ground in the case supposed; he is only anxious to get a fair rent?—Well, if the landlord is only anxious for a fair rent, and the tenant is willing to give a fair rent, and they cannot agree as to what that fair rent is, I do not see that there would be any objection to the judge of the county court appointing a valuer to say what the fair rent should be.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,398. You say, Mr. Graham, that there are no applications at present for leases?—None.

34,399. Can you give us the reason why?—I can only give you the reason that I assume the tenants are satisfied to be yearly tenants. I know of no other reason.

34,400. Do you think the tenants have not suffered as much from the depression in this present year as they did in the year 1879, which was a very bad year?—In 1879 it was not depression; it was bad season.

34,401. Well, we have had a bad season last year, too?—Yes, but not so bad. I know of nothing equal to 1879.

34,402. Are not the present prices of stock lower than they were in those days. Do you think stock sells so well now as they did in 1879?—No, they do not.

34,403. Can you tell us the reason that you have no arrears of rent on the hill farms when you have arrears on the lowlands?—There are none on the uplands, and they are small on the lowlands.

34,404. How do you account for that difference?—Well, it is so very small, you see. There always will be on large estates something.

34,405. You consider they do not pay so much for labour?—On the uplands they do not pay so much for labour. It is all pasture.

34,406. Labour is very much higher, is it not, at present than it was?—Labour is always high when you are near to a mining or manufacturing district.

34,407. I was very pleased to hear you say (and I think this is the first instance on a large scale that we have found) that the landlord pays for seeds when a farm is laid down to grass?—Yes.

34,408. Do you know of any other estates that follow that custom?—I cannot say that I do.

34,409. I think it is but fair for tenants?—I have always thought it reasonable to do it.

34,410. Then in the instance of a farmer doing all the hauling, have you any period of exhaustion for that hauling?—None.

34,411. Have you any instances of farmers leaving when the rent is too high, because they are not able to pay their way?—Yes, there are instances where they say that they cannot pay their way certainly.

34,412. How have they suffered as to the haulage, if they have done any?—There has been no claim in respect of the haulage, because if the haulage is only for repairs it is so very small for repairs, but if in the case of building a new house, which I referred to just now, there would be a great deal of haulage.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

34,413. And they are generally paid for the haulage when they leave?—Yes.

34,414. Do you employ any game keepers on these estates?—None.

34,415. Do you find the farmers generally very good keepers, do they like to preserve the game for the landlords?—I think the farmers are the best keepers.

34,416. I am pleased to hear you say so. How are the dairies generally in these farms; are they generally built in a suitable place and with accommodation for improved implements?—Yes. I am always an advocate for giving every facility and convenience to a tenant to make the most of his farm.

34,417. Do landlords on these estates do anything in the way of improving the stock by introducing some good sires in horses, cattle, and sheep and so on?—Yes, they have done so, in horses particularly.

34,418. Do you mean cart horses?—Both cart and nag horses.

34,419. Do the tenants generally take advantage of it?—They do.

34,420. I suppose they are charged a very nominal sum for the use of it by the landlords?—They do it for the advantage of their tenants.

34,421. Then with regard to poultry houses, do you generally say that they have got good accommodation for poultry. Farmers as a rule are neglectful rather about their poultry?—Yes, I am rather anxious that they should have good places for their poultry, particularly that they should be kept from the fox.

34,422. Have you any cottages on your estates where the labourers keep cows?—Not where the labourers keep cows.

34,423. None?—None.

34,424. Do you not think it would be a good thing for a labourer to have a cow to bring up his children on his small holding?—I think that if we distributed a little land amongst the labourers it would be a very good thing.

34,425. Do you not think it would be the means of keeping them more in the country, instead of their running to the towns?—Yes, I think so.

34,426. When a farm is vacant, have you many applications generally?—Generally several applications waiting.

34,427. What would you consider many applications?—Three or four.

34,428. Is it not a fact that when farms are likely to be sold, the rent is generally advanced to the very highest pitch?—I think the owner endeavours to do that.

34,429. And the tenant as a rule suffers by it, does he not?—Yes. I should say also that in the sales of part of these settled estates to which I have referred, for the purpose of clearing incumbrances, and benefiting both the life tenant and the occupying tenant, I have never raised one; they have been sold as they were.

34,430. Do you not think a Michaelmas taking would be a far simpler way than the one customary in this neighbourhood?—I do not think you could change a custom from Candlemas to Michaelmas in a county like this very easily. I thought it would be easy, and tried to do it years ago, but I failed.

34,431. At the Michaelmas taking in our part of the country the incoming tenant only takes to the straw; the corn is threshed, and he takes to the hay, the straw, the manure, and the turnips?—Yes. That would be very simple, and I should like it, but I have failed to get it done.

34,432. Do you not think that would tend to give the landlord better security, too—the tenant coming in must show that he has some capital before he takes to it?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,433. I will just follow up that question which Mr. Griffiths asked you about the different dates of the termination of the tenancies on the estates with which you are connected, Mr. Graham. Which do you think, in the interests of agriculture generally, is the best time to have a tenancy determined?—I should prefer Michaelmas, as it is in Glamorganshire. At the farms which I have acted upon in Glamorganshire it is Michaelmas.

34,434. Is that the western part of Glamorganshire; in East Glamorgan they terminate at Candlemas?—In West Glamorgan, I suppose you would call it—the parish of Llantrissant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,435. In the north-west part of the county; I do not think the custom of the county of Glamorgan extends into the Vale of Neath?—No, it does not, Sir John.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,436. You say it is about West Glamorgan? Yes.

34,437. What is the custom there between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant with respect to crops?—In West Glamorgan you have all pasture land—whole farms chiefly—and some grazing land in the valleys. There is no custom there beyond that the incoming tenant pays for any manure which the outgoing tenant is leaving; nothing more.

34,438. What is the custom with respect to the straw—the corn?—There is no corn. It is all grass—pasture.

34,439. How does the outgoing tenant dispose of the crops?—That is hay you refer to?

34,440. Yes?—He stays in the building till the 1st of May; he only gives up the land at Michaelmas.

34,441. I do not know whether a tenant is at liberty to sell the straw and the hay at the Michaelmas termination of the tenancy; we found that in Pembrokeshire they did so?—If it should happen that the tenant wants to go away altogether, and the incoming tenant is willing to buy his hay, then it is done.

34,442. At a valuation?—At a valuation.

34,443. He is obliged to submit to a valuation?—Yes.

34,444. That is better, I think, than the Pembrokeshire way. There they are allowed to sell by public auction the hay and the crops just harvested?—Yes. He is not allowed, so far as I know, to sell by public auction his hay.

34,445. You say the changes of tenancy are very few on the different estates that you are connected with. When do you find that the tenancies change oftenest; is it on bad times or on good times?—Well, it would be on bad times, I should think, but they are so few that I could not discriminate between good and bad times. It would be likely to be upon bad times that they would want to change, but the changes are so very few.

34,446. I daresay it may occur to you in this way, that many tenants hold on because stock is so low and they are reluctant to make auctions, whereas it would be quite different in good times; they would be prepared to make an auction knowing they would not suffer any loss by the sale of their stock. Is not that a reason for clinging to their holdings?—Yes, it would be a reason—that they would not like to leave when they would sell their stock at low prices; they would rather leave when markets were good and prices good.

34,447. Yes, so that really the fact that tenants do not change on bad times is not evidence that they are doing well?—Not conclusive evidence.

34,448. You say in your statement that no services are required from tenants beyond the haulage of materials for repairs of the holding and for improvements mutually agreed upon. What does the "improvements mutually agreed "upon" refer to?—That if there is a new building to be erected, or if there is some drainage to be done, then materials have to be hauled in the case of the building, and the pipes in the case of the draining.

34,449. Do you find that the scale of compensation that has been prepared by the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture works satisfactorily between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—So far as I have had experience of it, it has worked satisfactorily.

34,450. And you would recommend it for general adoption?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,451. You have stated, I think, that you have under your management several estates which, joined together, make up a total of about 15,000 acres?—Yes.

34,452. Would you tell us how many tenants there are on those estates—the total number of tenants?—On the Clytha estate there are 21 farms, 12 small holdings——

34,453. I do not mean individually, but the total roughly?—You simply want the total upon the whole?

34,454. Yes?—95 farms, 36 small holdings, 159 cottages, but with reference to the cottages I must state that on one estate there are 89 cottages, and they are not for the purposes of the agricultural holdings so much as for mining population.

34,455. Then yours would be a good example of one single agent managing several small estates. Would you consider that by that means, by these small estates being placed under the management of a single man, the advantages which we are told exist on a large estate are pretty much secured. We have had it stated often that there are fewer grievances on the large estates than on the small ones, probably from the fact that the larger estates are well managed as a whole. My question is whether by placing several small estates under the management of a single agent, pretty much the same advantage may be gained as if they all belonged to one owner?—I should think so; to have one controlling mind over them all.

34,456. We have generally found, I think, that the grievances have arisen upon small estates which have recently been purchased. Would you in your experience go so far as that?—Well, that depends upon the management.

34,457. But the effect of a sale seems often to be to give rise to grievances particularly owing to defects probably in the compensation for improvements. If a sale is made upon estates where there are tenants who have made improvements, they do not always get what they think to be the proper compensation, and then the incoming purchaser practically buys those improvements, and the tendency is, I suppose, to raise rents, so that he may get interest for his money?—Yes, that has been so.

34,458. Do you say that that is a prolific source of such grievances as there are?—Not prolific in this district.

34,459. I gather from your evidence, that on well-managed estates you think that the least interference that there can be from outside is the best?—Yes.

34,460. That it is better to leave landlords and tenants to make their own bargains, and carry out their own arrangements?—Yes.

34,461. How would you deal with those cases of grievances which arise out of the sales in the manner we have just been speaking of. Have you any suggestion to make as to how that could be remedied?—I should not like to give an answer off-hand to that question. It requires some consideration in order to suggest anything.

34,462. Do you think it would be possible to deal with cases of that kind without interfering with the freedom of contract on the well-managed estates?—Yes, I think it might be possible.

34,463. I will put it in this way: do you think that where there are a number of landlords in the country who are managing their estates well, and upon whose estates there is very little injustice, and very little hardship—do you think that the public opinion of those landowners would have a very deterrent effect upon any single landowner who, for instance, would let his farm by tender?—I do not think it would have much effect upon small landowners. I mean upon the class I consider to be in your mind by the question. I do not think the public opinion of the larger landowners dealing justly and fairly would have much effect upon them.

34,464. You have not perhaps considered the question from that point of view; whether it would be possible to deal with that class of cases without interfering with the freedom of contract on the whole?—I have not considered that point.

34,465. It would be very valuable, I think, if the members of the Society of Surveyors would turn their minds in that direction?—Yes, I think so.

34,466. And give us some evidence upon it when we come to take their evidence in London?—Yes.

34,467. You follow the point?—Yes, I follow it quite.

34,468. There is a common phrase, that exceptions make bad laws, and if anyone holds the view that it is best not to interfere with the freedom of contract, it is certainly a very important point that the question should be considered whether the exceptions can be dealt with justly, without altering the law to the whole?—Yes, I quite see your point, and it is one which should be considered, and which you should have some evidence upon.

34,469. There is just one other question I want to ask you: have you had much experience in mountain farms?—Somewhat, not a very large experience; I have only had some experience of mountain farms.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,470. Is not the Aberpergwm estate principally mountain farms?—Principally hill farms.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,471. Has such a question as this ever come before your notice, that where there are mountain runs for sheep, three or four large farms on the mountain practically get hold of the whole right of pasture, and the little people outside are gradually withdrawn from their rights of pasture?—Yes; that is to say that men with large farms, and with capital, monopolise, to a large extent, these privileges of common of pasture upon unenclosed land.

34,472. Have you had your notice drawn to a little Act that was passed very recently, since the Crofter's Act, dealing with the question in Scotland, and giving power for stinting the commons, and placing them under local legislation, so as to protect the interests of the smaller people?—I have not seen that Act, but from your question, I should think it would be a very valuable one for these mountain farms.

34,473. I have only one question about that to ask you, and that is, do you know of any instances where the smaller holders put their sheep together into one flock under one shepherd?—No, I do not.

34,474. I suppose the difficulty would be in the case of a small holder, if he had a small number of sheep, that he would not know how to manage them on the mountains?—Yes.

34,475. But if they combined, it might be possible in some way to protect their sheep from the usurpation by the greater holders?—Yes, it might be.

34,476. Do you know whether traditionally in those mountain districts, that was the original way in which sheep were managed?—No, I do not know.

Mr. Grove.

34,477. Mr. Graham, I think you said in your evidence in chief that rents vary very much?—Yes.

34,478. Is there much variation of rent where the quality of the land is about the same?—Situation and convenience of buildings would be considered in the question of fixing rent.

34,479. Yes, but suppose that the quality of the land is about the same, that the situation is much about the same in point of convenience, and that the buildings are about the same also; do you know of much variation then?—No, I do not.

34,480. Because in some cases we have had evidence of cases where there has been evidence of considerable variation in rent, even on two sides of the same road, or something of that sort.

34,481. You speak of abatements being made in some cases. Are those general with the estates which you manage?—The last two years' abatements and reductions have been made in special cases, not uniform—not general because they have been settled as being fair before.

34,482. It has been done just to meet special circumstances?—Yes.

34,483. When abatements are made, do you give notice to the tenant farmer that an abatement is to be made to him?—Yes.

34,484. What length of notice do you give?—I send circulars announcing the rent audit a month before, and with the circular goes a statement of the rent to be paid.

34,485. So that your tenants cannot say, as they have said in some cases, that they have been obliged to sell their stock at a disadvantage on purpose to get their rent paid, and then when they have gone to the rent audit they have not wanted all the money that they have provided?—No; they cannot say that.

34,486. You speak of permanent reductions. Are those permanent reductions still in existence to-day?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

34,487. They are permanent in that sense. Then being permanent reductions, they would allow the farmer to get a reduction on the assessment of his farm, would they not?—Yes, they always do; whenever any reduction is made by me the tenant gets a certificate, which he takes to the surveyor of taxes, or assistant-surveyor, and he gets his rates lowered—always.

34,488. How many years do you have to make an abatement to enable them to get that reduction?—They get it at once on the first year.

Lord Kenyon.

34,489. On one year's abatement do you mean?—Yes; on one year's abatement.

Mr. Grove.

34,490. Is that pretty general in this county?—In this county it is; the surveyors of taxes make the allowance.

34,491. You speak about a Land Court; you say it would break up the friendly relations?—Yes.

34,493. But if there would be the most perfect freedom between the landlord and the tenant at the initiation of an agreement, to confer together, and to come to a mutual agreement without coming to any court, or going to any one outside themselves, would not that do away to some extent, with the objections which you would have?—If it was to be a friendly appeal that would be so; we sometimes hear of a friendly suit between parties; if it is to be a friendly suit it may be so.

34,494. Free of costs on both sides, I suppose?—Yes.

34,495. But whatever machinery is brought to bear, whether it is an appeal to the county court judge, to a Land Court, to referees, or whatever we may call it, I suppose you would still wish, in the first place, perfect freedom between the landlord and tenant to try and agree to matters?—Freedom of contract first.

34,496. On each of your estates have you a printed form of agreement?—Yes.

34,497. Do you put those in for us?—I have one here. [The witness handed in a printed agreement.]

34,498. This is applicable to one estate?—I use those for each estate.

34,499. Do you give a copy of that to each tenant?—Always.

34,500. Free of cost?—Yes.

34,501. Because we find in many cases that they say a tenant can have it if he asks for it. You give it, I suppose, without being asked for it?—Without being asked for it.

34,502. As a matter of course. When arable land is laid down to pasture you say the landlord finds the seeds?—Yes.

34,503. Does he do anything more than that?—Nothing more than provide the seeds.

34,504. Do you think that is a fair division of the matter; should he not do something towards giving a return for the labour expended?—Well, the labour is upon the crop of corn with which the seed is sown. It is not special labour for the seed. There is a crop of corn planted, and the permanent seeds are planted with that corn.

34,505. So that you think the landlord's fair share of that would be the cost of the seeds?—The cost of the seeds.

34,506. As to cottages, do you consider that the estates you manage are fairly well off for cottage accommodation?—They are fairly. In some instances there are some better cottages needed.

34,507. Do you think that the land is suffering from want of more labour upon it?—No, I do not think so in our district.

34,508. Are the hedges and the ditches fairly well attended to?—Yes, I think so.

34,509. I think you say that you do not consider the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 successful?—No, it is inoperative practically.

34,510. Have you had many claims from tenants when leaving under that Act?—Very few.

See 35,055, 36,158.

34,511. The Commissioners have had their attention called to a certain statement that appeared in the paper some long time ago, in which a tenant (I think I am right as to name) called Morgan, of Cefn Llech, in the parish of Llangibby?—Yes, Cefn Llech, in Llangibby parish. I know the farm.

34,512. Is that one you manage?—No.

34,513. You spoke of a scale that had been prepared by the Chamber of Agriculture of Monmouthshire?—Yes.

34,514. How far does that scale operate?—I have handed it in. It is for unexhausted improvements by a tenant leaving.

34,515. And over what area is that operative?—For the county.

34,516. Is it widely acted upon?—I can only speak of it as being acted upon by me when I have had occasion to use it. I have on some occasions been called in on estates which I do not manage, and I always use that.

34,517. Is it generally acceptable?—Yes, I think so. I have not heard any thing to the contrary. I had a hand in framing it. I was one of the committee who framed it.

34,518. Speaking of the appeal which you suggest might be made to the county court judge of the district, you suggest he should have power to fix the sum to be expended for improvements, and to state the yearly rate by which such charge shall be diminished and ultimately extinguished?—Yes.

34,519. That was the opinion of the Chamber of Agriculture?—No, that is my own opinion.

34,520. Do you consider, with all due respect to the county court judges, that they have sufficient knowledge of land questions in general to make them acceptable to landlords or to tenants?—I think that they would act upon evidence brought before them. They would give due weight to the evidence which came before them. I think they are the tribunal which is most at hand to settle such a thing—ready at hand.

34,521. Then do I understand that your opinion is that the county court judge himself should be the arbiter, or that he should name an agricultural expert who should be the final tribunal?—He should have power to name an agricultural expert if he desired it.

34,522. How do you suggest that such an expert should be paid?—In the discretion of the judge.

34,523. By whom?—In the discretion of the judge, he should say who should pay him, that is to say if the tenant went into the county court to have his appeal heard upon a question which he raised, that he would have to take evidence in support of it, and that the landlord would be heard in opposition to it if he desired, and then the judge should decide who should bear the costs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,524. What I rather suggest would be that some reasonable fee should be charged by the county court judge, and then the land valuer, whom the county court judge would probably name, would get a good many cases, and would be able to make that fee very reasonable. That was in my mind?—That some fee should be fixed—a scale.

34,525. Yes. The court itself should fix the fee, so that everybody might know it would be a certain amount?—Yes. When the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1875 passed, the judge of the county court in this district was Mr. John Maurice Herbert, and he came to me and asked me, if I would undertake to assist him in any cases which came before him.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,526. Is not the expense one of the principal causes for making the Agricultural Holdings Act inoperative?—I think it is deterrent, and also the cumbrousness of it, if I may use that term; it is cumbrous; it is not simple and direct.

34,527. Have you ever been called in as an arbiter in the case of differences of opinion between the small landowners and their tenants?—I have.

34,528. With regard to the larger tenants, I think you told us you have had no litigation in 40 years' experience?—Not on the estates which I have managed.

34,529. Have you known any litigation to take place between landlords and tenants?—Yes, I have.

34,530. Has that been upon the larger estates or upon the smaller estates?—Upon the smaller estates.

34,531. You say that you have been called in to arbitrate?—I have been called in on questions between them—outgoing and incoming.

34,532. Have you been successful in smoothing down the difficulties?—Well, I did what I could. I will not say whether I was successful or not, Sir John. I did what I could.

34,533. May I ask you whether your arbitration was accepted?—Yes, it was.

34,534. And on your own estate you have never failed to come to an amicable arrangement with the tenants?—I have always done so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,535. Which of these landlords supplied the entire horse for the use of his tenants, Mr. Graham?—Mr. Herbert, of Clytha, had horses.

34,536. On what terms?—Really I could not tell you.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,537. Do you know of any instances where an outgoing tenant has been paid for allowing seed to be sown in his corn crop. It is customary in this part of the country. In some places they are paid so much an acre for allowing the seed to be sown with the corn?—I do not know.

34,538. Have you any experience of that yourself?—That is to say, allowing an incoming tenant to sow the seed in the outgoing tenant's corn—that is what you refer to?

34,539. Yes?—Oh, yes, I have had some instances, but very very rare.

34,540. In our country they are paid?—They are not paid for it, but allowed to do it.

34,541. But they are paid so much per acre for allowing it?—No.

34,542. Are you a practical farmer yourself?—I have farmed a great deal. I am not farming now.

34,543. But you have farmed?—Yes, I have farmed.

34,544. You know very well that a man cannot grow as good a crop of corn where there is clover seed sown in the corn as he can otherwise?—Yes, I know that.

34,545. Do you not think it would be fair for him to be allowed so much per acre for allowing it to be done?—If his successor wanted to be allowed to plant seeds in his corn, he should pay him so much for it, certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,546. I see that in the agreement which you have put in, the proviso for re-entry upon bankruptcy or insolvency appears to be omitted. It is a very usual clause, and in another agreement which I have before me the words are these, that "If the tenant shall commit any act "of bankruptcy, or shall become insolvent, or "compromise with his creditors, then and from "thenceforth in either of the said cases the "tenancy shall be at an end." That is a very common clause. We have had contradictory evidence as to the effect of that. What do you think about the clause; do you think it is a fair and right one, having regard to the interests of all concerned in agriculture?—I do not think it is worth much in yearly tenancies.

34,547. It has been pressed upon us that it is highly advantageous to the tenant?—I do not think so.

34,548. On the other hand the Inspector General in Bankruptcy objects to it as being unfair to a large number of persons who are connected with agriculture, implement makers, and others who give credit to farmers?—Yes. You see on a yearly tenancy if a tenant should become bankrupt the trustee of his estate must elect to either give up the farm or go on with it. I do not think there is anything in it.

Lord Kenyon.

34,549. What is your opinion of the preferential claim of the landlord?—Preferential claim for rent?

34,550. Yes?—If the landlord had not a preferential claim for rent he would require security.

34,551. Do you think it is to the disadvantage of the tenant that he should have the preferential claim?—No, I do not think it is a disadvantage to the tenant.

34,552. Perhaps it is to the disadvantage of the tradesmen?—Yes, perhaps it may be in some instances.

34,553. Does it prevent the trader from giving sufficient credit, do you think?—I do not think so.

34,554. I have some questions to ask you which are handed up by Mr. Vincent. "With "reference to the appeal to the county court "judge, if your suggestions were adopted in "block, do you not think hardship might be "inflicted on a poor landowner?"—I do not think so.

34,555. That is with regard to the improvements, I take it?—Yes. I do not think there would be any hardship upon him.

34,556. "In such a case might not the land-"owner be entitled to borrow the necessary "money for compensation from the State?"—I see no objection to his having power to borrow the money, if he has security to give for it, certainly. The difficulty is security for the money.

34,557. Mr. Vincent asks: "You have valued "in many counties; is there any difference in "the 'conditions upon which land is held, "'occupied, and cultivated'; firstly, between "Monmouthshire and the rest of England"?—

I could not answer that as to the rest of England. I have very little knowledge of England, except some little of Lincolnshire.

34,558. What does your experience tell you with regard to Lincolnshire?—Well, in Lincolnshire it is a Michaelmas entry.

34,559. Is there any other difference?—I do not think there is any other difference that I remember.

34,560. Mr. Vincent asks, "Secondly, between "Wales and England"?—I could not speak of Wales, because Wales embraces North and South, and I know nothing of Wales beyond Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, and a part of Breconshire.

34,561. In those counties that you do know of, do you point to any difference?—In those cases that I do know of, I see no difference between them and England.

34,562. "Thirdly, between Wales and Monmouthshire"?—There is no difference between Wales and Monmouthshire, so far as I know Wales.

34,563. "Is there not, to your mind, a "difference in principle between the settle- "ment by a third party compulsorily of rent, "which is the price of occupation, and the "settlement by a third party of the mere ques- "tion whether a given improvement will be "beneficial?"—I do not see any difference in the principle.

34,564. "What do you think is the origin of "the custom as to date of entry. Do not you "think it is most likely to be found in the "mutual convenience of the parties to the con- "tract?"—No doubt the origin of the custom was the convenience of the parties.

34,565. "Did you not speak on changes of "tenancy simply because the syllabus of the "Commission asks whether such changes have "become more or less frequent?"—I spoke of the changes of tenancy being few because I thought it would show that the relations between the landlord and the tenant, so far as my experience went, were friendly and good.

34,566. "Referring to the first question—if "the court gave right judgment as to the sug- "gested improvement, ought not the improve- "ment itself to afford sufficient security for the "advance from the State?"—That is a question for the person who lends the money.

34,567. For the State. The following question is by Mr. H. Morgan. "Is it not a fact "that the higher rate of wages which is caused "by the propinquity of mining districts is met "by the additional demand for smaller products "of farming, milk, butter, &c., in those dis- "tricts?"—I do not know. Not to that extent, I think. The sale of produce would be greatly benefited, and is benefited by the proximity of large mining populations, but I do not think it is sufficient to meet the cost of the extra labour.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN PRITCHARD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,568. You are Mr. John Pritchard, of Courtybella Farm?—Yes; but that is only where I live, as a workman. I am working in Newport.

See 35,451 –506, 36,534.

34,569. I beg pardon, you are not a farmer yourself?—No, I hold a small holding under the Duke of Beaufort, where my mother lives. I have made several applications to the Duke's agent to repair the house, and I cannot get anything at all done to it.

34,570. You are employed upon the railway, are you?—Yes.

34,571. Tell us about this small place. It is a place about 5 acres is it?—Yes.

34,572. And in a very bad state of repair?—Yes, it is in a very bad state of repair, in fact, it never was only one room down and one up, and it is nearly tumbling down.

34,573. What does the Duke say; why will he not repair it?—Well, it is only the agents, I have applied to 34,574. What do they say?—They say they cannot do it on the small rent.

34,575. What do you pay for it?—I paid 7*l.* previous to the tithe rent, but now they have added 1*l.* to cover the tithe. Originally we only paid 10*s.* to the parson, but now we pay 1*l.* to cover it all to the agent.

34,576. You pay 1*l.* now, and you only paid 10*s.* before?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,577. You only paid 2*s.* 6*d.* formerly. There are receipts here, among the papers you have handed in, for over 100 years.

Lord Kenyon.

34,578. Has this place been in your family's holding ever since then?—Yes. That is the oldest receipt I have.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,579. Now, it is 8*l.*, is it?—Yes. The 1*l.* was added 12 months ago to cover the tithe.

Lord Kenyon.

34,580. Does this receipt that I have here, of 1774, apply exactly to the same holding?—Yes.

34,581. And the same amount of land?—Yes. It may be a little more land now, as we have hedged in a little more, added a little off waste land, and broken old land up.

34,582. Was this on the common before?—Indeed I could not tell you.

34,583. You do not know?—No. There are a lot of these little places around there, but nearly the whole of the houses have crumbled down and they have been added to other places, other farms.

34,584. I see here, there is nothing between 1770 and 1838. In 1838, the half year's rent was 3*l.* 10*s.* Was that the first year the rent was 7*l.*—That is the first receipt I can find. I could not say what it was before.

34,585. You do not think it was a piece of the waste that had been taken in?—Oh, decidedly, it was the waste.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,586. Who built the house, according to the family tradition?—They built it themselves, or what they call a house, but it is only one room down, and one room up; in fact, the whole of them all round that quarter is the same.

Lord Kenyon.

34,587. You say they refused you a lease. You have applied for a lease, have you?—Yes, you have Major Lister's letter there.

34,588. This is dated 18th February 1894. "Dear Sir, you are quite secure in your tenancy without a lease, and you ought to do the repairs yourself."

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,589. Is it a thatched cottage?—Yes.

34,590. And is it the custom of the estate that the thatch is on the tenant?—Oh, yes, we have never had anything done only what we have done ourselves.

Lord Kenyon.

34,591. You wish to say also a word about the damages the foxes cause to the poultry?—Yes, we have a very good market adjoining our place for poultry, but we cannot go in for poultry farming because of the ravages of the foxes.

34,592. Have you any places to put the poultry in?—We have. We have got small places, but they have been known to take a lot of the poultry after we have let them out, especially if we let them out very early in the morning.

34,593. Is there any Poultry Fund in the country?—I have made an application to the Master of the Foxhounds, but he has never replied to my application.

34,594. They generally pay out of the Poultry Fund sometime in the spring, do they not?—Well, I have never heard talk of anyone ever receiving anything.

34,595. Perhaps there is not one. Then you say something about want of allotments on the lower side of Newport?—Yes. There is one thing I wish to say. There is such an enormous lot of men riding up here; they do damages to all the hedges, and the gates are all flung open, and they cause an enormous lot of damage. Every man seems to have a right to ride over the ground.

34,596. Of course there are two sides to that question. There is some advantage to be got out of the people who come and eat the hay and the corn in the country, although there is no doubt a lot of damage done.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,597. But is there no compensation paid for any damage done?—I have never heard of any.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I think the witness is wrong about that.

Lord Kenyon.

34,598. I think you should apply?—I think people are rather afraid in that part of the country to apply for anything.

34,599. Of course I know nothing about this part of the world, but I do not think they are usually afraid to apply—in my part of the world—for compensation?—I know a man who had a small field of clover totally ruined 12 months ago; 61 horsemen drove right down the field. It being a dry summer last year, it never recovered, and it was 5*l.* or 6*l.* out of the poor man's pocket.

34,600. Did he ask for any compensation?—No, he did not ask for any compensation.

34,601. What a pity he did not, because he was not likely to get it if he did not ask for it. My experience with regard to that sort of thing is that if a man asks for compensation, generally speaking if it is a clover crop or corn, the answer he gets is, "I will "come and see it in the time of harvest, and see "what the damage is, and pay you accordingly?"—I never heard of anything.

34,602. I should only recommend you to apply. I do not see how you can possibly expect to get compensation if you do not apply for it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,603. I have the impression that there is a fund?—We have never heard of one.

Lord Kenyon.

You cannot hear of it if you do not apply for it. I think nowadays there is hardly a hunt in the country that has not got some sort of Poultry Fund. I cannot conceive how they could be carried on unless there is one.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,604. Who is the master of the foxhounds?—Mr. Robertson Williams, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,605. He is the master, is he?—I believe so.

34,606. You do not seem very sure of it?—No, I am not very sure of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,607. What is the date of the rise in the rent from 7*l.* to 8*l.*?—Well, the first receipt I can find there is in 1838. You have the receipt there.

34,608. As long back as 1838? I have a receipt here in 1838 at 3*l.* 10*s.* for the half year. That is 7*l.* a year?—The rise from 7*l.* to 8*l.* was a twelvemonth last November. That was to cover the tithe; you have the receipt there.

34,609. Have you anything to show that that was with the object of covering the tithe?—Yes, the agent told me.

34,610. But did you say to him that the tithe had been—how much do you say?—About 10*s.* up to this.

34,611. Did you say that?—Yes, I asked him if he could not make it 10*s.*; he said no; he would have to make it a sovereign to cover the lot, as it was originally 16*s.* 4*d.*, and he had no reason to believe why it should not go back to 16*s.* 4*d* again.

34,612. What inquiries have you made as to the existence of a poultry fund?—None whatever. I have not made any inquiries; only I saw it once in the "Western Mail" that there was one, and I made an application, but I never heard anything more of it; in fact they laugh at the idea of your being compensated about my home; there never was such a thing heard of.

Lord Kenyon.

34,613. Who does the laughing?—They laugh at anyone talking about it.

34,614. Who is "they"; who are the laughers?—Well, my neighbours round about.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,615. Are there a great many foxes there?—Yes; there are lots of foxes. It is a very woody country all round that part.

34,616. Who put up the protection against the foxes? Did you put it up yourself?—We lock them up in the stable or the barn or any other place we have. We used to let them out in the trees, till recently the foxes have made such raids we cannot let them out.

Sir John Llewelyn.

It is a grievance that is usually provided against, as far as my experience goes.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,617. Would you kindly tell me how many acres is your holding?—I never had it measured that I know of. It is about five acres; but it is generally covered with trees that we have planted on it ourselves.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

34,618. You say the cottages around you have only two rooms—cottages such as yours?—Yes, that is the general run of them. There are only two rooms. They are houses that have been rudely put up some hundred years ago, and they are in the same condition now that they were then, those that have not fallen down.

34,619. Have you a family?—I have a family I may say in Newport, but it is my mother that lives at this place, and I look after her, and maintain her.

34,620. Do you know of any large families in these cottages with only two bedrooms?—Yes, there have been very large families.

34,621. How large do you know of?—The next neighbour to me had seven sons, but they have been all grown up and distributed about. One of the sons is married, and lives there still.

34,622. And only one room or two to sleep in?—Only one room; it is open like a barn from one end to the other.

34,623. And they all sleep in the same room?—They all sleep in the same room, without they divide it with a bit of canvas, or sacks, or anything of that description. The next neighbour to me has had five grown-up daughters, all living in the same place, in the same room. They have nearly grown up, and married away from there now.

34,624. Do you know of sons and daughters grown up altogether, and obliged to sleep in the same room?—Yes, that would be so; they would have no other place.

34,625. Has it ever been pointed out to the sanitary inspector? Have you such a man in your neighbourhood?—Yes, there is one, but I do not know that it has ever been pointed out. People do not wish to be disturbed.

34,626. You have had no cases of trapping or poisoning foxes in your country?—No, they would be afraid to do that.

34,627. Do you know of any other neighbours that have suffered as you have by the foxes?—Yes; they are all generally around there suffering the same.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,628. This seems to be one of the cases to which Mr. Graham referred, of the payment of a cot rent for a small holding?—Yes, it is the payment of a cot rent.

34,629. You say, so far as you know, the rent was raised to 7*l.* as far back as 1838?—According to that notice; that is all I have to go by.

34,630. Did your father live on this place before you?—Yes; my grandfather handed it over to me.

34,631. Your grandfather?—Yes, to look after my mother; it was my mother's farm.

34,632. Have you asked for a lease?—Yes, I have made application for a lease.

34,633. But the answer you got was what Major Lister has written here, that you are quite secure in your tenancy?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,634. Have you ever heard of any one of these cottars being turned out from his holding?—No; they are never disturbed that I know of.

34,635. Did you say anything about allotments?—Yes. We are very bad off in the bottom end of Newport for allotments; we cannot possibly get allotments.

34,636. I want to finish with this little bit of property. How far from Newport is this small holding of yours?—This small holding is about nine miles.

34,637. In what parish?—In the top end of Llanbaddoc parish—right the top end.

34,638. Who has been in the habit of making the repairs on these small holdings?—The tenants themselves make repairs.

34,639. You have never heard of the Duke's agent setting about it?—Yes, they have helped one or two tenants, so far as helping them goes. One man had his place burned down, and I think they assisted him. In fact, Mr. Verrinder, the late agent, before he died, offered to assist me to do them, but I did not wish to take it on unless I got a lease.

34,641. So that if you make repairs what you are afraid of is that you might get a notice to quit?—Yes; Mr. Verrinder, the late agent, told me some two years ago that it was impossible for him to repair and rebuild the house as it was in such a state, and he could not lay out a lot of money. He sent a man there to look at it, and he said it was impossible for him to do it at such a low rent.

34,642. I should advise you to look at the Small Holdings Act?—I have gone through it; there seems to be nothing there to affect me whatever. It is all at the option of his Grace—whether his Grace would sell the place out—and if he will not lease it, certainly he will not sell it.

34,643. I do not know that. However, I think we see your point now; and you think there are a great many of the tenants in much the same condition?—Yes.

34,644. You were going to say something about allotments near Newport?—Yes, down the lower end of the town; there is not I suppose about half enough allotments there. In fact, they are transferring them to one another now, at from 1*l.* to 3*l.* for 13 or 14 years' purchase; that is, the goodwill of their ground.

34,645. Of course now you will soon be able to take advantage of the Local Government Act, 1893-94?—We cannot do anything with that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Oh; yes. If there is a general desire as you express it, the parish council will be able to take the matter in hand now. They may even hire land for allotments.

Lord Kenyon.

34,646. Two questions are handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Would you be willing to pay more rent if the Duke kept your cottage in repair?"—Yes; we would be willing to pay about 3 or 3½ per cent. on the outlay. That is for myself. I am not expressing the views of my neighbours at all.

34,647. Did you tell the agent so?—No; I did not tell the agent.

34,648. You simply asked him?—I simply asked him; and he did not give me an offer of that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I do not know whether you will come under the Act, but there is an Act of Parliament, the Housing of the Poor Act, which contains a clause which is a distinct innovation, and which is very little known; that in the case of property coming within the Act, the landlord cannot recover if the premises are unfit for human habitation, or very much out of repair; but I doubt very much whether it would apply to an agricultural holding of this kind, these 5 acres of yours. It seems to me to come under a different head altogether. This is an agricultural holding.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,649. May I ask one question upon this matter. Do you look upon this letter as quite sufficient to give you compensation for any improvements that you might make upon the place in case of disturbance?—Yes; I thought of acting on it, and taking it as my security.

34,650. Do you think it is also sufficient to give you security of tenure?—Well, no; it is hardly sufficient.

34,651. I suppose that would be rather a legal question; but I wanted to know what your opinion is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is a nominal security. You would hardly think that the agent would turn round after writing a letter of this kind if this gentleman did the repairs. Indeed, the equitable point would arise, that the landlord having stood by and allowed a letter of that kind to be written, he is stopped from objecting.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,652. I should like to know, Mr. Pritchard, what your opinion upon that matter is?—I thought about acting on it, and repairing the house myself, so as to enable my wife to come there and look after my mother; she is very very old.

Lord Kenyon.

34,653. I should think you are quite secure under that letter, under the Duke of Beaufort?—Thank you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

You had better write to Major Lister and tell him that you are going to do so, acting on his letter.

Lord Kenyon.

34,654. Mr. Vincent's second question is: "Was it any connexion of yours who claimed "for a brood of turkeys, because, if foxes had "not been preserved, she might have liked to "breed them?"—Indeed, I do not understand the question at all.

34,655. At any rate you did not claim for anything; you have not claimed at all, you tell me?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN LAWRENCE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See above and 33,534.

34,656. You are the master of hounds?—The Llangibby hounds.

34,657. You have a poultry fund?—Yes.

34,658. Would you mind telling us what that fund amounts to—what you pay in claims?—I really cannot tell you the aggregate, but I can tell you this, that, as a rule, we never refuse an application.

34,659. If you think there is a fair claim you always give compensation?—Always—invariably.

34,660. Do you have claims made on you for damage done to crops?—No, certainly not. We have no game in the district.

34,661. I mean damage to crops by riding over them?—For foxing?

34,662. No; damaging crops by people riding over them—clover, wheat, or any damage of that sort?—Well, we have occasional complaints, but they are very rare indeed. Our hunt is principally upon sufferance. We ride over the whole country, and I can say myself—I have been the master of hounds now for more than 50 years—I have never had one single solitary objection to our hunting in my life.

34,663. Do many farmers hunt with you?—Yes, very many indeed; there are no people that I am so fond of seeing as farmers with the hunt.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,664. Have you no one who takes care to see that the hunters do not ride over the clovers?—I have known horses ridden over clover, and it has been a subject of great annoyance—it invariably is, I believe, to the master of hounds—and, as a rule, masters invariably complain to the field if they do ride over clovers. I think there is nothing that is more objectionable myself than to ride over clover if it is possible to avoid it.

34,665. Quite so; but what I ask you is, have you no one appointed to look after that?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

34,666. You, as master, do that yourself?—Certainly, always; and several of the field—some of our most constant attendants—invariably warn the field from riding over clover.

34,667. You do not hunt your own hounds, do you?—No.

34,668. Then you have more opportunity of looking after the field?—Certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. CHARLES JAMES PARKES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 5914-6041, 34,708, 35,306.

34,669. You are steward of the manor of Wentsland and Bryngwyn?—Yes—Wentsland and Bryngwyn; it is one manor.

34,670. And you have acted as deputy steward and steward for the last 50 years?—Yes.

34,671. You have seen the evidence of Mr. Hughes?—I have.

34,672. Do you agree with that evidence?—No, I think he is mistaken in some points. I have endeavoured to point that out in the statement I have sent to the Commission.

34,673. Will you proceed with what you have to say?—I have here a copy of the statement which I sent for the information of the Commission. Shall I read it to you?

34,674. If you please?—"I have read the "evidence of Mr. John Hughes given before "the Commission. By the custom of this "manor the fines are arbitrary and are assessed "at two years' improved annual value, which "is the proper limit for an arbitrary fine as "laid down in the case of Morgan v. Scuda-"more. The fines are payable both on descent "and on alienation. The custom of the manor "as to fines was found by a decree of the Court "of Chancery in the reign of James I., made in "a suit wherein certain copyholders of the "manor on behalf of themselves and of all the "customary tenants of the manor were plain-"tiffs and the then Lord Edward Morgan was "defendant, one of the questions raised in the "suit by the copyholders being whether the "lord could take arbitrary fines on descent or "on surrender. The defendant, the lord of the "manor, was ordered to bring the Court Rolls

" into Court for examination by one of the " masters, who reported that the fines upon " admittance either upon descent or surrender " were arbitrable, and it was accordingly decreed " that according to the custom the lord is " entitled upon every admittance either upon " descent or surrender to a fine of two and a " half years' full value of the copyhold which " in accordance with the ruling in Morgan v. " Scudamore is now assessed at two years' full " value. Mr. Hughes asserted in his evidence " that this decree did not apply to admittances " on descent. I have already explained to him " both by letter and in conversation that the " decree applied to admittances on descent as " well as on surrender, and it is open to him to " satisfy himself on this point by reference to " the decree in the Record Office. Mr. Hughes " further stated that his mother Mrs. Ann " Hughes (before her marriage Ann Williams, " spinster) according to the official copy paid " no fine on her admission in 1839 as devisee of " her father, Daniel Williams, of Penlasgarn, " gentleman, deceased, but in making this state- " ment Mr. Hughes was evidently not aware " that as regards descent the custom of this " manor assimilates to gavelkind, and that on the " decease of a copyholder intestate his copyholds " descend to all the sons equally, and in default " of sons to the daughters in like manner. The " late Daniel Williams left a son and several " daughters him surviving, and by his will " devised his copyhold known as Pistill Gwyn " to his daughter Ann who therefore took as " devisee and not as customary heir, and had " her father died intestate all his copyholds in " this manor would have devolved upon his " said only son as customary heir to the exclu- " sion of the daughters, and though it is the " fact that no mention appears on the Court " Rolls or on the official copy of the payment " of any fine by Mrs. Hughes on her admission, " yet I have particulars in my possession which " show that the then deputy steward did charge " a fine of 20*l.* on the admission, but that he " omitted to enter it on the Court Rolls or to " account for it to the lords."

34,675. Have you got the proof of that with you?—The proof I have is a copy of the bill furnished by the then deputy steward to the then Miss Williams.

34,676. Have you got that with you?—I have it here: " The fine of 20*l.* may have repre- " sented the then two years' value of the " property inasmuch as the surface apart from " its value for tipping purposes is of small " account, but the property has recently become " valuable for tipping as well as for wayleave " and waterleave purposes, and it is now let by " Mr. Hughes to the Ebbw Vale Company at a " minimum rent of 250*l.* a year. I informed " Mr. Hughes when he applied to me to be " admitted that the fine according to the custom " would be assessed at two years' improved " annual value, viz., 500*l.*, but for the reasons " stated in his evidence he objected to pay this " fine and questioned the lord's right to demand

" it. I informed him that I was willing to " leave the amount of the fine open and to " admit him on his agreeing to pay such sum " as should finally be found to be due, but he " still refuses to come in and be admitted. The " question as to the amount of the fine the lord " can claim, and whether it is reasonable or " unreasonable is a question of law and depends " upon custom, and is not one which can be " determined by this Commission."

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,677. Is this called the manor of Wentsland?—Wentsland and Bryngwyn; it is one manor.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,678. Is it the manor that was mentioned by Mr. Hughes as being held by a large number of people; he said that the lordship of the manor had got divided into a great number?—Yes, it has. It became divided under will. The last owner of a moiety, Frances Fettiplace, devised one-half of that moiety to six people, viz., one-half to one, and one-fifth each to five others, and by a subsequent private act of partition between them and the owners of the other moiety, the entirety is now held in the same proportions, viz., one-half to one and one-tenth each to five others.

Lord Kenyon.

34,679. Mr. Hughes refuses to go to law with you?—I will not say he refuses. I quite understand that he has no wish whatever to be antagonistic, he simply protests against what he thinks is wrong on the part of the lords of the manor. I quite admit this, that if he understood our claim is what we say it is, and what we are prepared we hope to prove, he would submit to it, I am quite sure. This is a copy made by myself, although it is a very long time ago. That was the then deputy steward's account to Miss Ann Williams.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,680. 500*l.* is what Mr. Hughes says you claim?—That is so at present. I am only handing in a copy of the account which I have already referred to in my answer. The then deputy steward did claim a fine from Miss Williams, who was devisee.

34,681. But let us get at the facts first. Do you admit that you have demanded a fine of 500*l.*?—Oh, yes.

34,682. Two years' full value?—Yes, we have ascertained that value from Mr. Hughes himself. It is fixed by a lease at a minimum rent of 250*l.*, and I was instructed upon that by our professional advisers to claim 500*l.*, that is two years' value.

34,683. You contest the point then that he made, that it was not usual to charge any fine at all for the ordinary admittance on descent?—We object to it entirely, and we are fortified with a decree to which I have referred in my answer.

34,684. Is that the decree of the time of James I.; is that the one you are thinking of?—Yes.

34,685. The decree of Lord Chancellor Bacon in the time of James I.?—It was made by him. He was Lord Chancellor.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,686. You drew this up yourself in 1839?—I simply copied it. I obtained the original because we had a very serious question with the then deputy steward, and amongst many others I obtained a copy of this account.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,687. Is that decision of Lord Chancellor Bacon of 1619 reported in any of the ordinary authorised reports?—Well, I really cannot tell you that. I have not ascertained it; I should assume it would be.

34,688. Have you got the record of the proceedings in your office?—I have a copy of the decree present with me.

34,689. I do not think we ought to ask you for any of your documents inasmuch as the point between you is a purely legal question as far as I can understand it now in the light of your evidence?—I thank you very much, because that is precisely what the professional advisers instructed me would be the proper course.

34,690. I do not think it would be fair to call upon you to show any document when litigation may arise, and the plaintiff might get discovery only upon conditions, and so forth. I am sure from what we saw of Mr. Hughes that he would not wish to urge us to do anything of the sort?—I do not think Mr. Hughes would ask anything that he felt was unfair or unjust.

34,691. It seems a pity now that this matter has been threshed out before us that you cannot decide the matter. It seems to be a difficult point of law in regard to copyholds, that is what it is?—I do not know whether you have happened to notice that I have offered to admit Mr. Hughes, leaving the question of the fine blank, and leaving it for us to establish to what fine we are entitled.

34,692. I will tell you what strikes me—you must take me not as giving a legal opinion at all, but simply a primâ facie impression that I have formed quâ Commissioner?—Thank you very much, it is very good of you to go that far.

34,693. Are you quite certain that there is not a distinction between admission on descent and admission on alienation, and that the decision of Lord Chancellor Bacon carries more than the admission on alienation; by sale I mean?—We are satisfied for this reason, that we have the rolls prior to the decree and subsequently.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34,694. This seemed to be a customary freehold too, did it not?—A customary freehold.

34,695. You do not think there is any distinction between that and the strict copyhold of the manor?—These are only copyhold of inheritance; I do not know whether it would be right to use the term "customary freehold." You will put me right there; but copyhold of inheritance descending from father to son.

34,696. We used the term because we found the tenant had been working the minerals?—Yes, undoubtedly.

34,697. That looked like it, did it not?—I will tell you what we contend there. We meet that in this way. Unfortunately this decree was lost sight of, the stewards were frequently changed years ago. At the time we are speaking of, and when that seems to have been overlooked, they were non-resident in the manor, and there was no one present to take any active part in it.

34,698. Then your 500*l.* is made up by taking into account the mineral value of the property?—Yes, we say that the income is derived from the copyhold, whether it be from minerals, whether it be from wayleave or from waterleave. We know from Mr. Hughes himself that an income of 250*l.* is produced from that property.

34,699. Is this the very inheritance in question—is this the very parcel of the manor in question, this document of 1839?—That is a copyhold in this manor.

34,700. But does it apply to this parcel of the manor?—Yes, to Wentsland.

34,701. But does it apply to Mr. Hughes' property?—That does, yes. That is the bill to Mr. Hughes's mother or the lady who subsequently became his mother; she was unmarried at that time.

34,702. "Instructions for your admission as "devisee of your late father's will to copyhold "premises in"—somewhere?—I think it is Cwmnantddu.

34,703. Then, "Fees of surrender to uses of "your father's will payable to the steward "stipulated by Act of Parliament, 53rd George "III. cap. 192, sec. 2, on admission of a devisee "in cases when no surrender had been made to "uses of a will by a testator in his lifetime, "four guineas." Then, "Fines payable on that "surrender . . . . by the custom, two "years' improved value, 20*l.*" Then the heriot, and then the chief rent. Has Mr. Hughes seen this?—(Mr. John Hughes.) No.

Lord Kenyon.

34,704. I fancy the point between you and Mr. Hughes was this, was it not? Mr. Hughes' contention was that it was not usual to charge a fine on the customary freehold, and your contention is that it was?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Then the question of amount is also in dispute. Mr. Hughes contends that the two years' improved value must relate to the superficial or pastoral or agricultural value, whereas the steward says, on the true construction of the decree, it must be two years' full value of the property for whatever it is used.

Lord Kenyon.

Yes. Mr. Hughes contends that it is merely a temporary high value. It appears to be rather a legal matter. I do not know whether we need go further into it now. I do not know whether Mr. Hughes wishes to carry it any further.

Mr. John Hughes.

I should like to make one statement.

Lord Kenyon.

Very well, we will finish first with Mr. Parkes.

Mr. Seebohm.

34,705. I should like to ask a question before this case leaves us. It seems to me that in these cases of very increased value accruing owing to minerals, the copyhold system is a very unhappy one. I should like to ask whether you consider it would be a wise thing to have compulsory enfranchisement to get rid of all these difficulties which arise under copyhold tenure?—We have directed our attention to it so far as thought goes, and I have consulted our professional advisers, but we know that if we were to require compulsory enfranchisement, it would be looked upon with very great distaste, and would put very many to very serious inconvenience. We should have no objection—I believe it to be to the interest of the lords and ladies of this manor to require enfranchisement, but they hesitate to do so, because they would not occasion inconvenience or annoyance to others. Can I help the Commission any further?

Lord Kenyon.

34,706. If you wish to say any more after Mr. Hughes has given evidence we should be glad to hear you?—No, I do not desire to add to what I have already placed in your possession. I am quite ready to answer any questions you desire to put to me.

34,707. We are very much obliged to you and to Mr. Hughes for coming, and we can form our own opinion of the value of copyhold property at the present day. I do not see that we can go any further into the matter?—I may say, perhaps, this—I do not know whether it is relevant to this incident: Not long since, precisely under similar circumstances, on the admission of a devisee, I required and received nearly 4,000*l.*—on the admission of a solitary devisee. That copyholder was a very important copyholder, a man of large means, and he had his own legal advisers. A question was submitted to those advisers, and by them to counsel, the result being that they accepted our claim and paid it. It has nothing to do with this, but I think it is due perhaps to my clients that I should tell you that. That is no solitary instance.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Hughes re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,708. You have heard Mr. Parkes's evidence. Do you wish to add anything to what you said to us in London?—Yes. We have just heard from Mr. Parkes that according to his account my mother paid 20*l.* for admission. We have no information whatever that that payment was in the form of a fine, or was a payment to the steward for performing the duties of admission, but assuming it is a fine for the sake of argument——

34,709. If you will allow me I will read this, if Mr. Parkes has no objection?

Mr. Parkes.

Not the slightest.

Lord Kenyon.

This is the lower half of this bill: "Dues to "the lords and ladies; fine"—then in brackets —"payable on surrender to uses of will pro- "vided for by the said Act of Parliament on "admission of devisee"—that is the end of the brackets—"by the custom two years' improved "value, 20*l.*" The heading is: "Dues to the "lords and ladies"; then it proceeds, "Fine by "the custom two years' improved value?"—No, I take it that that is only the agricultural value.

34,710. I cannot form any opinion of that from this document?—Because here is my mother's pass-book at the time showing that large sums of money were being paid by mineral companies at that particular period. Therefore, it must refer only to the surface value, and this is very important because it does not take into consideration the right of the lords of the manor to the minerals.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,711. Your point is the minerals were being worked in 1839 at the time?—That time, yes.

34,712. And that even then the improved value if it is to include the mineral value at all must have been more than 10*l.* a year?—Much more than that. I have entries in the pass-book which will show that.

Lord Kenyon.

(To Mr. Parkes.) Are these pencil notes copied from the same document? There are two or three little pencil notes here?

Mr. Parkes.

I really cannot tell you at this moment. Perhaps you will allow me just to see them. [The document was handed to Mr. Parkes.] There is a note in pencil, I cannot say by whom, which says, "2 years' rent of surface." Of course this was before I acted.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

What Lord Kenyon has pointed out is very important: "2 years' rent of surface" is put in the margin.

Mr. Parkes.

Yes, my interpretation of that is this, that there was no mineral right; if there was it did not come to our knowledge, but that account is made out by the late Charles Herbert Croft, who was deputy steward under my late father at that time. I am in no way responsible for that, nor can I explain it. He had to act as deputy steward on the information that came before him.

[The document was handed to Mr. Hughes.]

Witness.

Of course this is a statement put in by Mr. Parkes. I should not like to recognise this as establishing the custom in any way, because in the decree which I have here—I have a copy of the decree of Lord Bacon with me now which was obtained from the Court in London; it distinctly says that in order to establish the custom, the rolls of the Court have to be produced, and the fines have to be shown, so that although this is put in, I do not take this as evidence that that is the custom. But as I say, even if it is, it only shows that the surface was taken into consideration, not the minerals. Therefore to ask for 500*l.* now is not what can be borne out by the customs.

Witness—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

Thank you. I think you will see that we cannot go any further into the matter.

Mr. Parkes.

My Lord, I should not wish to be misunderstood. I do not put this in as showing the custom. My only motive is to show that, although Mr. Hughes states his mother paid no fine, it is a fact that the fine was required. I need not tell you that she took as a devisee, which is a very different thing to a customary heir, and as there was no previous surrender by Daniel Williams to the uses of his will, she could only come in as devisee, and a devisee in law is, I believe, a purchaser.

Witness.

Then I take it that if I am the customary heir, and my contention is right that no fine is payable on admission, I may come in without payment of any fine at all, although my mother did.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. HARRY SAMUEL WILLIAMS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,713. Where do you live?—6, Heathfield, Swansea.

34,714. I believe in 1877 you retired from practice as a solicitor in London?—Yes.

34,715. And since then you have lived on your own private means?—Yes.

34,716. Will you kindly give us your statement?—As trustee of the will of my grandfather, James Jenkins, I have had to look after property whereof part is in Monmouthshire, which part is let to tenants and now consists of the Upper Argoed Farm (Shire Newton) containing 122a. 3r. 39p. (I may as well mention that while I was in practice as a solicitor, I happened to be concerned for one of the shares of the manor that Mr. Parkes has been speaking about; it was a tenth share.) The Monmouthshire property now consists of the Upper Argoed Farm (Shire Newton) containing 122a. 3r. 39p., and secondly an allotment on Rogiet Moor formerly made in respect of the said farm 7a. 2r. 23p., and three fields in the neighbourhood of Chepstow containing together about somehow or other got the water that we used to have, and if they could make it easier for us to take a supply from them, it would be better for the district. As I understand, the tenant informs us we could only have it on setting up a meter, and laying down pipes to join their pipes, all at our own expense, and then buying water by the quantity. That would be a good deal of expense for a small piece of land. If they could manage to let us have it at so much an acre a year, or something like that, it would be better. The tenant offered us a higher rent if we could get water, but we did not see our way to do what was required according to the Great Western Railway Company's plan. I was told that Lord Tredegar has done it, but then he has a large piece of land. But most of this moor here (it is flat land) is cut up into small pieces of land because it was given as allotments for land near. That is what I wanted to mention about that allotment. It is reduced in rent. It used to be more than 2*l.* an acre, now it is about 1*l.* an acre.

13 acres. The Rogiet allotment has been prejudicially affected by the drainage for the Severn Tunnel, which has deprived it of water, rendering fencing and other work necessary. There is a good deal of that land; you see it as you go by rail, which, as it used to be, was divided off from other lands by ditches called "reens" which are full of water, that is they were full of water, but in the case of our land—ours is situated in Rogiet parish, about a mile from the Severn Tunnel Junction—the ditches do not hold water at all well; they only hold water in wet weather so that we have had to fence. The consequence of the drainage for the Severn Tunnel was that the reens, that is the ditches, which used to contain water, are now usually dry, and also the land got very much cracked. There used at one time to be cracks about a foot wide and about as deep as 10 feet, which we have had filled up, otherwise it would be dangerous for cattle. The only point I want to mention about that is this, that the Great Western Railway Company have

The next thing I wanted to mention was about the tithe. The tithe on the Upper Argoed Farm is greatly in excess of one-tenth the annual value of land, being in fact nearly one-fifth thereof. I read a report of the Tithe Commissioners a long time ago, although I cannot remember it, but my impression is that they recommended as terms for tithe redemption a certain number of years' purchase on the tithe as it was. I should venture to suggest that in the case of these lands where it is substantially more than one-tenth there might be easier terms than those. For instance, I should suggest for one thing that land might be given instead of the tithe. It is desirable to get rid of this tithe rentcharge where it is as much as that. It is like an incumbrance on the property, and I should suggest that if one-tenth of the value were paid, it ought to be enough as regards the surplus beyond the one-tenth to buy out, as it were, the interest of the existing incumbent.

34,717. Do I understand you to say that the tithe is now upon the present rental one-fifth?—Yes.

34,718. In fact your rent there has depreciated 50 per cent., or was it one-fifth of what it was before?—I should say it has depreciated, but that goes back to longer memory than I can carry it. That is before I know what the rent was. In 1879 it was 135*l.*; that was including the farm-house. The whole farm was 135*l.*, and it was reduced between then and 1886, when we had the management, down to 115*l.* When we took the management we reduced it to 103*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, that is one-tenth off, but as a matter of fact we have not had that paid. For instance, last year we allowed the tenant (that is, as to the rent up to August) 10*l.* off that, so that we only got 93*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* I should say out of that you ought to deduct the value of the farm-house and the farm building, because the tithes are not paid on that to any amount, but on the land. If you deduct that (30*l.*) you then bring it down to 63*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, and our tithe which was paid for that year, which was 12*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*, is about one-fifth.

34,719. Do you consider the annual value of the house as much as 30*l.*?—There are considerable outbuildings—with the outbuildings I think so.

I venture to suggest that the County Court Act should be amended as regards very small towns, such as Chepstow, where there is only one firm of solicitors that can practice in such Court, the other firm containing officers of the Court, and therefore not allowed to practice there. In such case the plaintiff (if wealthy) usually retains this one practising firm, leaving the defendant to defend in person or at considerable expense and inconvenience to bring a solicitor there. It is submitted that in such cases the defendant should have power by giving notice to have the case heard at Newport (12 miles from Shire Newton, which is in the district of the Chepstow County Court) or other large town where both parties may have solicitors. What I should submit is that it is not quite fair for a plaintiff to sue in a town where the County Court is, and to employ the only solicitor there; that when both parties mean to appear in person then a small town like Chepstow would do very well, but when anyone employs a solicitor he increases the expense much more than would be the amount of the travelling expenses to the nearest large town such as this—that therefore in that case it would be fairer that the defendant should have the power by giving notice to have the case heard at the nearest large town where there is a choice of solicitors.

Care should also be taken of the points of view attractive to tourists, that is in order to bring money into the country. I consider South Wales is not well enough known as a tourist country; for example, I think there ought to be a prevention of such a drawback as the barbed wire fence lately placed on the Allt overlooking Llangorse Lake, Breconshire; it is a hill between Llangorse Lake and the Usk Valley, and it gives a very pretty view. It is known as such. But within a few years I was told it was done by a gentleman, Mr. Crawshay Bailey, who took the shooting; there has been a barbed wire fence put round the top.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,721. Not Mr. Crawshay Bailey, I think Mr. Crawshay?—Most likely Sir John knows. I can only say what I was told as to who did it. I know the fence is there, but as to who put it I do not know.

34,722. I do not think it was Mr. Crawshay Bailey?—I cannot answer for that, that is second hand, but I know I found the fence there, and it makes it more difficult to get to the top. There is a fence, and also a wall which you have to climb over before you get to the top. I do not know whether it would be approved, but there is a mention of it in the Guide to Brecon.

34,723. I do not want to interrupt you at all, but I do not suppose you say of your own knowledge that it was Mr. Crawshay Bailey?—No, I do not say that, I thought I said I was told so.

34,724. I do not think it is Mr. Crawshay Bailey?—I do not know of my own knowledge. There is a mention of it in the guide; if more information is wanted I can leave you the guide book.

Lord Kenyon.

34,725. That is all your statement?—Yes.

34,726. Have you made any complaint to the Great Western Railway Company?—Only the tenant did that—that is we have not done it direct yet.

34,727. It seems to me that your complaint lies against them for damage they have done you for taking away the water on the farm?—I have been informed that other people have tried that on, and they were told it was no use; they were told they allowed the Act to be got for the Severn Tunnel, and the company had power to drain the land in the neighbourhood, to prevent the water getting into the works. I was told that the people interested ought to have watched that Act, and got their interests protected.

34,728. Beforehand?—Yes.

34,729. Of course you are much more likely to know than I am, but at the same time you have had to reduce your rent in consequence of the lack of water?—Well, it is partly in consequence of the lack of water, and partly in consequence of the land getting so much cracked.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,730. I do not suppose the Great Western Railway Company wishes to take away your water, but that it wishes to dry its own tunnel?—Yes, that is so no doubt.

34,731. Are you aware what quantity of water they have to contend with?—I know it is a serious matter. I am quite aware the Severn Tunnel is a very serious matter in the matter of cost, but I only wanted to have said something about their facilitating our getting water now.

34,732. Are you surprised to hear they pump out about 17 million gallons a day?—No, I am not surprised to hear that.

34,733. Or that it costs them 10,000*l.* a year to do it?—I am not surprised.

34,734. Have you approached them?—No, we have been told that others have done it, but we have not done it ourselves.

34,735. You have not approached them, because you speak of it in this way, that it would be better for the holdings if the Great Western Railway Company, who have the water, would supply it for cattle on reasonable terms?—Well, without requiring the expense of a meter, that is what I mean.

34,736. On reasonable terms?—Yes.

34,737. Have you approached them with regard to what you call reasonable terms?—We have only done it through the tenant. We have not done it ourselves.

34,738. Have you had any answer; are you able to supply us with any information about it?—What I have put is what he told us, that what they did was to require each owner not only to lay on the pipes, but also to have his own meter by which they could measure the quantity of water, and I was told also that they did not give a pledge as to the length of time the arrangement would last.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,739. Do you complain of the existing law in regard to the rights to water—of the general law with regard to the subtraction of water—by doing something on one's own land?—Was the question, do I complain of it?

34,740. Yes?—No, I am not aware that I do.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,741. With regard to the tithe, which you speak of as being so excessive, coming to about one-fifth instead of one-tenth of the annual value, can you give any reason for that?—Well, no doubt to some extent it is, that the value of the property has decreased, and it is very likely to decrease further.

34,742. At the time of the tithe commutation was it corn-growing land?—Some of it is that. I have a list. In fact the greater part is arable, but it is high up. It is like the hill farms which have not kept up their values as well as the farms on the lower land. (The list was handed in.)

34,743 Can you tell us about the year 1836, which was the time of the tithe commutation, I think, what was the rent of the land?—No, I cannot say.

34,744. Was it approximately double what it is now?—That is before I knew it. That is before it belonged to my grandfather, who bought it in 1844. In 1847, which was the time of his death, the rent was about 130*l.*

34,745. And now?—As I say, 103*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* is the stated rent, but we have made allowances off that.

34,746. You cannot go back to the value of the land at the time of the tithe commutation?—No, I cannot.

Mr. Brynmor Jones

34,747. Do you know there is a long series of cases in the books about the subtraction of water. My question was directed to those cases. The point of distinction in the cases seems to turn upon the question whether the act complained of has subtracted water that has run in a defined channel either on the surface of the land or underneath the surface of the land. Do you say the action of the Great Western Railway has directly interfered with subterranean channels of water?—I am afraid that is rather a difficult question. Where it has hurt us most is by causing the land to crack so much that it no longer holds the water it used to hold; it has made the soil much more permeable to water. Now in the winter the ditches still have a great deal of water in them, but they do not hold it for any length of time.

Lord Kenyon.

34,748. Mr. Vincent asks you this question: "Have you not heard frequent complaints of "inequality of assessment of the tithe rent-"charge, particularly where land at the time "of commutation was in the hands of careless "trustees?"—I cannot say that I have heard that; I think it is very likely they are to be heard of, but I cannot say that I have heard them. I know that there is a great deal of difference.

34,749. You know that a great deal of difference exists?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Charles Rowlands called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,750. Where do you live?—At Began Mill Farm, St. Mellons.

34,751. Are you a tenant on the Cefn Mably estate?—Yes.

34,752. You farm 92 acres?—Yes.

34,753. You are satisfied with the agent on the estate, Mr. Rooney?—Yes.

34,754. Has he been there long?—A number of years now.

34,755. What is the date of entry on that estate?—February 2nd.

34,756. Are they mostly yearly tenancies?—Yes.

34,757. Are there any leases applied for?—No.

34,758. The farms descend from father to son?—Yes.

34,759. Do you know of any case of disturbance?—No, not at all.

34,760. Do you know of any complaints amongst the tenants?—Not at all.

34,761. You say tenants give up land without notice. Is that for planting?—Yes.

34,762. Have you heard of compensation for timber cutting, or anything of that sort?—Yes.

34,763. It is always given?—Always.

34,764. And satisfactory compensation?—Yes.

34,765. What is your rent?—101*l.* a year.

34,766. Are you satisfied with that?—Yes.

34,767. Have you had any abatements?—Yes.

34,768. This year?—Yes.

34,769. How much?—10 per cent.

34,770. Has it been going on for any length of time?—Yes, a number of years now.

34,771. Is your rent much the same as that of your neighbour?—Yes.

34,772. From 1*l.* an acre upwards?—From 1*l.* to 28*s.*

34,773. Are you required to do anything in the way of service? Are any services required of the tenants?—On the buildings?

34,774. In haulage or anything of that sort?—No

34,775. Have you a copy of your agreement?—No.

34,776. Have you signed an agreement?—No.

34,777. I mean to say an agreement as to the erms of your tenancy?—Well, I have had the farm now this many years; I had it left me after my mother and father.

34,778. You have no agreement in fact?—No, not any.

34,779. Have the farms on this estate been re-valued at all?—No, not lately, not to my knowledge.

34,780. When are the rents paid?—August and January.

34,781. There is about five or six months' credit?—Six months.

34,782. What charges are there? Do you pay the rates?—The farmers.

34,783. And the land tax?—Yes.

34,784. And I suppose the landlord pays the income tax?—Yes.

34,785. Have the rates altered much? Have they risen?—No, about the same.

34,786. And the average size of farms?—From 50 acres to 150.

34,787. They vary considerably?—Yes.

34,788. Do you know of many farms being consolidated into one?—Not any to my knowledge.

34,789. Do you know any case of sub-letting?—No.

34,790. What is the class of farming about here?—Half arable and half pasture.

34,791. Mixed farming?—Yes.

34,792. Is there any dairy farming?—No, half and half like.

34,793. They make a little butter?—Yes.

34,794. Do you think the cultivation satisfactory?—Yes.

34,795. Do they pay any attention to new methods, do you think?—No, not to my knowledge.

34,796. They go on in the same way as they have always done?—Yes.

34,797. What about labour, is that scarce?—No, it is easy enough to get men.

34,798. Do you have to pay higher wages than you used to?—No, about the same.

34,799. What do you generally pay?—From 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* a day.

34,800. On the man's own finding?—That is according to what sort of a man he is.

34,801. Are the fences and so on well looked after, do you think?—Yes.

34,802. About the improvements, who does any improvements?—The landlord.

34,803. In the way of buildings?—Yes.

34,804. And do the tenants do the haulage?—Yes.

34,805. Do they complain of that at all?—No, not at all.

34,806. They are willing to do the haulage if they get the buildings, is that it?—Yes.

34,807. Have they compensation if they leave?—Oh, yes, they are allowed anything that is fair.

34,808. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act at all?—No, I cannot say that I do.

34,809. Now about game, is there any difficulty about that?—No.

34,810. Have you much game on your farm?—We have a few, but we are allowed to shoot the hares and rabbits.

34,811. According to the Act?—Yes.

34,812. Do the game do any damage do you think?—No, very little.

34,813. There is no excess of game preserving about you perhaps?—There is some in the covers around.

34,814. Do they preserve many pheasants there?—A few.

34,815. They do not turn out many?—No, not many.

34,816. Has there been any instruction in butter-making, or anything of that sort?—Yes, a little in St. Mellons.

34,817. What has been the attendance at those lectures? Has it been satisfactory?—Yes.

34,818. Do you think they have done any good?—I suppose they have.

34,819. Does the butter sell for anything more than it did?—I cannot say.

34,820. Do the farmers insure their crops?—Yes.

34,821. And they work very hard, I suppose?—Yes.

34,822. Have you any children working with you?—Two daughters.

34,823. I suppose you do not pay them any wages?—No.

34,824. You are very glad of their help though, I dare say?—Yes.

34,825. What about the cottage accommodation?—That is fairly good.

34,826. You think in this county that landlords and tenants are pretty friendly?—Yes, I consider that if all the landlords were like Mr. Kemys Tynte and Lord Tredegar we should not require this Land Commission at all.

34,827. Perhaps you do not think it is required at all as it is?—I cannot say.

34,828. We have heard a great deal of a Land Court. Do you think that would do any good or harm?—I cannot answer for that, because I am in a very quiet neighbourhood.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,829. Have you had any difficulty in settling any questions between yourself and your landlord?—No, never.

34,830. Mr. Rooney, I suppose, comes round and sees your farm?—Yes.

34,831. There is no difficulty in settling any questions with him?—No, none.

34,832. Have you done any improvements upon your farm in buildings?—No, not lately, only repairs; of course we get repairs.

34,833. Who does the repairs?—The landlord. We get it whenever we ask for it.

Mr. Grove.

34,834. I think we gather from you that there is not much damage by game in your part?—No, not the least.

34,835. Does that apply to all the tenants on the estate?—Yes.

34,836. Is there much more damage on other people's farms than on yours?—No, I do not believe there is.

34,837. Do you know whether any tenants have claimed any compensation for damage done by game?—I cannot say.

34,838. Not that you have heard?—Not to my knowledge.

34,839. The abatement is made to you every six months, is it, in the rent?—Yes.

34,840. Is any notice given of the abatement beforehand?—Sometimes.

34,841. Not always?—Not always.

34,842. When the notice is given, what length of notice is given to you—about a month, or two months?—About a month I fancy.

34,843. Have you had the assessment of the poor rate reduced because of those abatements, so that the rates are a little bit less than they were?—Well, I cannot say. I did not take particular notice of that.

34,844. Are the farm buildings kept up in good condition?—Yes, very good.

34,845. Has there been a butter school near to you?—Yes.

34,846. What was the nearest point the County Council went to?—About 1¼ miles from our place.

34,847. Did you go to the operations there?—No; I have not been there myself.

34,848. Did you hear they were fairly satisfactory?—Yes.

34,849. Do you think they would be good things if people would attend?—Well, I do not know. I should think so.

34,850. Is there any farmer you know of at all in your part who uses a separator?—No, I think not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,851. Do you keep farm accounts?—No.

34,852. Do you find that the cost of production is greater now than it was some years ago?—No, I find it is about the same.

34,853. The labour bill you do not find much difference in?—No. I have been all my lifetime under Mr. Kemys Tynte there, and I do not find much difference.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

34,854. I suppose you find that stock and produce are a great deal lower than they have been?—Well, stock is lower.

34,855. How much should you say?—I cannot say.

34,856. How much per cent.?—I cannot say how much.

34,857. You are not prepared to answer?—No.

34,858. Do you think it is 20 per cent.?—Well, I should think it is about nearly half.

34,859. Nearly half what?—About half the price that they used to be.

34,860. That is 50 per cent. Do you think that stock and produce have gone down 50 per cent.?—Well, they have been very cheap this last year.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

34,861. Very well, we will say 50 per cent. Your landlord makes you an abatement of 10 per cent. Do you consider that adequate?—Yes.

34,862. You are satisfied with that?—Yes, I am satisfied with that.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,863. What kind of cottages have you on the farm? How many rooms are there in the cottages?—Do you mean the cottages outside on the farm?

34,864. Cottages for labourers on the farm?—We have a cottage on my farm that has two rooms up, and three down. That is a good large cottage.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS COLBORNE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,865. Are you Mr. Thomas Colborne, of Victoria Chambers, Newport?—That is my official address, I am residing in Wiltshire.

34,866. Are you a solicitor?—I was for a good many years.

34,867. You have represented the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture on the Council of the Associated Chambers of Agriculture?—Yes, from 1881 to 1891. I was put on more for the purpose of representing the legal questions affecting agriculture.

34,868. Will you continue with your statement?—Then I took an active part at the request of the Chamber in the consideration of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883; elaborate notes were prepared, and I think an epitome of the Act was afterwards prepared and circulated with the annual report of the Chamber, so that the whole of the members of the Chamber should become thoroughly acquainted with the provisions of the Act.

34,869. Does this little pamphlet embody what you consider may be amendments to the Act?—Those were considered before the Act was passed, when it was in the shape of a Bill. It was considered by the Chamber, and certain resolutions were passed which you will find at the end, and Mr. Henry Williams, who was the co-delegate with me, attended the meeting of the Council of the Associated Chamber in London, and I think there were two days' discussion. I may say this, I had nothing to do with the preparation of that schedule which Mr. Graham spoke to, because it was a technical question, and that was more within the province of the gentlemen who were well up in the agricultural questions.

34,870 Would you proceed with your statement?—Yes. Then I may say this, that I am an owner of about 200 acres of land within a few miles of Newport in Monmouthshire, and of a similar quantity in Sussex. My view was, (with all deference) with regard to the arrangements between the landlord and tenant, that they are about on the same par in Monmouthshire as in the other parts of England.

34,871. You did not observe much difference?—No, except this, that unfortunately the land in Sussex is in the stiff weald, and the land in Monmouthshire is pasture land. Also the land in Sussex bears a very extraordinary proportion of tithe rentcharge in proportion to the actual present value as compared with the pasture lands. I should say that the tithe rentcharge in Sussex was certainly 25 per cent., if not 30 per cent., of the actual present letting value; that is in the Weald of Sussex.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,872. Do you give any reason for that?—Simply this, that, I suppose, when the tithe rent apportionment was passed, it was good corn-growing land, and unfortunately, as you know, corn growing is not at a profit. But I do not complain of that. That is to say, it is a burthen which unfortunately I have taken with the land, and I have to accept it as if there had been any other rentcharge on it.

34,873. It was subject to that rentcharge that you bought the land?—When I had unfortunately to take over the land; it was not exactly a voluntary purchase.

Then there is a point that I especially wish to call the attention of the Commission to, and that is this, that in some of the small holdings the proportion of cost or value of the buildings is very heavy as compared with the actual return from the farm and the land. I went into it, and I found, both in Sussex and in Monmouthshire, that when you set aside a fair rent or interest on the cost of the farmhouse and buildings you have practically nothing, or very little left for the land, and it struck me that that was a very important question when you speak of cutting up the land into small holdings. I have just spent on a holding,—the rent of which is, I think, about 30*l.* a year,—in doing up the farmhouse something like two years' rent. Economically I might have been better off if I had thrown the land into the adjoining farm.

I should say that in both cases the tenant has the exclusive right of shooting; but there is no question of game grievance. I do not think there is much game on my land in Monmouthshire. It is too near the works.

Then there were two questions which I wished to refer to. I took an active part, as representing the Chamber, on the question of the railway rates, and I daresay your Lordship remembers the clause that was introduced by Lord Jersey, I think, in the passage of the Act of 1888, by which there should be no preference given to imported produce as against home produce. It is the second subdivision of section 27 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, and is as follows: "Provided that no rail-" way company shall make, nor shall the Court, or " the Commissioners, sanction any difference in " the tolls, rates, or charges made for, or any diffe-" rence in the treatment of, home and foreign " merchandise, in respect of the same or similar " services." I took a very active part in the Council of the Associated Chambers of Agriculture, and with regard to that I think the Blue Book came out showing that the rate, say, on imported produce, going from Bristol to London would be nearly double the rate of the home produce. Also, subject to correction, I think there is a provision that the charge for the intermediate distance should not be more, that is to say, if you have produce going from Bath to London that you should not charge more for it than if it is going from Bristol to London. I am not sure that those provisions are sufficiently protective; in fact at one of the meetings of the Council I moved a resolution that the Board of Agriculture should really watch (although it looked like watching another Minister) this question on behalf of the agricultural interest. Therefore I do think that more attention should be given to that question—that it is not protection, but merely placing home produce on a fair basis of equal treatment.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,874. Do you think that any of the maximum charges for farm produce on our railways can be described as unreasonable? The controversy is now rather on the question of whether a maximum charge can be unreasonable. It used to be always assumed that so long as a railway company did not charge more than the maximum rate or toll and only charged a fair allowance for the terminals that it could not be unreasonable?—I have an idea that in some of the Acts which were mentioned the railway companies may charge reasonable rates not exceeding such and such a scale.

34,875. It is a matter of controversy at the present time?—Yes. I may say that I took an active part for the Monmouthshire freighters. I was before Lord Balfour of Burleigh and Sir Courtenay Boyle's Committee, and also before the Duke of Richmond's Committee, and I felt that there was so much uncertainty under this new scale of rates that I considered the great thing simply with three or four lines was to take the Monmouthshire freighters out of the new scale altogether and leave them to the evils which they knew of instead of meeting evils as to which we were quite uncertain what the result would be.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,876. Have you heard any complaints from traders where the maximum has been reduced?—No, I have not.

34,877. Only where it has been raised, I suppose?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,878. Do you have classifications in Monmouthshire?—No new classification. So far as the freighters on the old Monmouthshire Railway and Canal Company are concerned they were simply taken out of the new Act and left exactly as they were. They had fought their old position in 1848 before Sir Robert Peel, and with all their grievances they preferred that to going into the unknown. But I know this, that when the question arose before Lord Balfour of Burleigh and Sir Courtenay Boyle, Sir Courtenay Boyle impressed it upon me to tell the freighters that these are maximum rates, but it does not at all follow that those are the actual rates. That I think was the impression; but still there is power to charge them provided they are reasonable.

34,879. There is a recent report of a Select Committee on the question?—Yes, but we shall have to see what that results in. There was only one other point, my Lord, that occurred to me and that was this—whether greater facilities might not be given to the agricultural interest and especially for the country produce in communicating with the producer. I was struck in Germany the other day in seeing in one of their daily papers, which had a circulation of about 12,500 at Wiesbaden, that they advertised from somebody in Hungary that you had only to fill in a little post card with the price of what you wanted, be it a turkey, or so many fowls, or so many ducks, and it was sent to you carriage paid, delivered by the post, and you had to pay the post. Now any facility like that which brought the small producers of poultry, vegetables and fruit into more direct communication with the large consumers in the town would be very beneficial. It would require trouble and it may involve probable sacrifice of rates on the part of the railway company or the post office; but that is what is being done at the present moment in Germany.

Lord Kenyon.

34,880. I know of a case of a friend of mine in the Midlands who has got the local papers to advertise the names of any farmers who have hay or straw or oats or anything of that sort to sell, thereby bringing them into communication with those who wish to buy?—But you see in Germany you can pay through the post. It is delivered to you and the postman takes the payment for it; there is no question of bad debt or selling on credit.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,881. So it could be done here if the parcel comes within the existing regulations. How do you suggest the advertisements could be given?—It is not so much with regard to the advertisements (I leave that to the parties themselves), as with regard to facilities for sending them at a cheaper rate, either through the railway or by the post—the extension of parcel delivery at a cheap rate.

34,882. I live in London and no doubt it would be very convenient in my establishment if we could send a post card to a farmer and he would send us up a couple of fowls by parcels post. As a matter of fact I did know formerly, but I do not know at the present time, a single person to whom I could send in South Wales with any hope of getting back the fowls with any certainty; I do know a farmer in Gloucestershire. But what suggestion do you make upon that? The Post Office regulations seem satisfactory here now. If we only knew the farmer who would do it, or the small holder who would do it, one might possibly give him an occasional order?—Then upon the question with regard to the proportion of the rent which the cost of the building represents, it struck me that that should be calculated upon a more complete scale, either that we should have a return made showing the valuation—I was going to say universal—of the farm buildings, so that you saw not merely in an isolated case, but generally what the proportion of the rent was which was borne by the land, and what proportion by the buildings.

34,883. Before we go to that might I pursue your instance about the parcels post in Germany. If I follow your instance properly it was this, that the Government were willing to accept payment by the consignee?—Yes, they do through the post.

34,884. Whereas here the sender has, when he sends his parcel, to pay for the stamp?—Yes. But in Germany that is not confined to agricultural produce; if you send for anything they send it by the post.

Lord Kenyon.

33,885. And the consignee undertakes to pay it?—Yes. I was going on to the question of what proportion of the rent represents the buildings and what proportion the land, because that would show, probably, what a high proportion of tithe, or land tax, or other charge, the land itself bore, as apart from the buildings and the farm-house and the cottage.

34,886. What would be the object of that return. With what object would you have that return made?—It would at once show what charge was upon the land per se, as apart from houses, and houses are houses, whether they are in the country or in the towns; because I do not think it is realised in some cases what an enormous proportion of cost there is upon the land per se apart from the buildings.

34,887. I fully agree with you. How would you arrive at the cost of the buildings?—In my case I take the insurance, and I find that, taking the proportion in the case of Sussex, the proportion of land tax and tithe rentcharge was outrageous upon the rent of the land itself; in fact, that the rent of the land vanished with an abatement of 10 per cent., so that there was nothing left in respect of the rent upon the land.

34,888. We had a witness just now who said that he considered the rent of his farm buildings was equivalent to about 30*l.* a year, or 20 per cent. upon the whole rental?—In the case I referred to it was more like 60 per cent. upon the buildings at the least.

34,889. Is there anything more in your statement that you wish to refer to?—I think not.

34,890. You desire to draw our attention to a resolution of the County Council of Monmouthshire?—That is simply because it was passed, and you were sitting in Monmouthshire, and I thought it was only courteous to draw your attention to it.

34,891. It is a resolution of the Monmouthshire County Council, of the 15th March 1893, and is as follows:—"That in the opinion of this "council the present condition of agriculture in "Wales and Monmouthshire calls for a Land "Bill which will include fixity of tenure, fair "rents, destruction of game, compensation for "improvements, and a Land Court"?—I thought it was fair to call that to your attention so that you would then have the opportunity of the advocates for that resolution showing you how that would improve either the state of agriculture or the relation of landlord and tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

Has that been passed or is it in actual progress?

Mr. Grove.

I suppose it has been passed; it is dated March 1893, is it not?

Lord Kenyon.

Yes. I thought I saw it on your agenda paper for to-day.

Mr. Griffiths.

I think they are going to repeat it.

The Witness.

I have not quoted that as concurring.

Lord Kenyon.

34,892. What is your opinion as to that—perhaps you would rather not say?—I think you should let the landlords and the tenants alone to weather the storm in the best way they can.

34,893. Mr. Brynmor Jones conceives that you put it in with approbation?—No, I think not.

34,894. I think we should have an expression of opinion from you?—My opinion is this, that you should follow exactly the line of my friend, Mr. Graham, namely, that the less you disturb the friendly relationship between landlord and tenant and leave them to settle their arrangements in the best way they can, the better you will promote the interests of agriculture.

34,895. Do you conceive that such a thing as a Land Court would disturb the relations?—I should think it was a sword hung over one, and I might say this, that probably I might get better terms from the Land Court, being rather a weak man myself, than the tenant would; probably I should get better treatment if I said, "No, let the Land Court decide." I do not think I should get any worse terms than those I should be inclined to give, because I go to very considerable expense. So far as any repairs are concerned they all come upon me. So far as any laying down of land—which we do not do here but in Sussex—is concerned, I provide the seeds and also the manure afterwards.

34,896. Do you think it would curtail the landlord's expenditure upon his estate?—I do. I do not think there would be the same description of a voluntary concession, which I prefer to a compulsory concession.

34,897. We have been told that a Land Court would only affect a bad landlord. You think it would disturb the relations of all landlords with their tenants?—I do think so. I think it would be a sword hanging over them, and one does not like that.

34,898. You think it would have a disquieting influence?—Yes.

34,899. Do you think in your experience that the landowners in Monmouthshire have tried to meet their tenants in bad times?—We consider that in the case of some of our landlords, notably Lord Tredegar, we have some of the finest specimens of landlords in the kingdom.

34,900. How does it happen that the Monmouthshire County Council passed this sort of resolution then?—Perhaps some gentleman who favoured that resolution will explain that to you, probably at Blackwood.

34,901. But that is the expression of the County Council, is it not, as a body?—Certainly. Probably it was on a division; I daresay it was on a division.

Mr. Grove.

34,902. You have put it in, therefore you should explain it?—I may say this, and I think the Chairman of the County Council will correct me if I am wrong, that it brought forward from the tenants of Lord Tredegar in the Blackwood district a strong remonstrance addressed to the County Council to the effect that the tenants of Lord Tredegar by no means concurred in the passing of this resolution.

Lord Kenyon.

34,903. Although they sent their representative to attend the meeting they did not support his action in that respect?—He may not have been their representative.

Lord Kenyon.

But at any rate their representative may have voted for it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,904. It does not appear that the County Council are afraid, because they are repeating their action as I understand it. It is put down on the agenda paper again, is it not?—That I do not know. I am not on the County Council, but I put it in this way, that upon calling your attention to that resolution you might have the opportunity of ascertaining on what grounds any suggestion was made, especially in the county of Monmouthshire.

34,905. I want to ask you one or two questions on the Agricultural Holdings Act. Have you any professional experience under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—No, I have not.

34,906. What is your opinion with regard to the requirement of notice of the claim by the tenant and notice of counterclaim by the landlord as conditions precedent to the right to any compensation on either side whatsoever?—I concur in what Mr. Graham said that those notices, whatever reasonable period you prescribe, should be given before the expiration of the tenancy, so that there should be an opportunity of investigating it.

34,907. It is part perhaps of the present re-action against technicalities of all kinds, but it seems to me rather hard on either the landlord or tenant that they should be deprived of a right simply because they omit on a given day to give notice?—I take the equitable side; I certainly should advocate any fair arrangement by which that lapse on proper terms should be put right.

34,908. But you see the point I am making?—I do.

34,909. I have known in fact one or two cases, one case being where the landlord lost all claim simply because he had not given his notice in time?—I am always in favour of the arbitrator having the power on proper terms to put that right, and that should be subject to such regulations and conditions as the arbitrator in the particular case chooses to put.

34,910. Then as I understand your proposition it is this, without giving up the necessity for requirement of such notice you would give the arbitrator or give the County Court the power of relieving against the failure to give such notice upon fair terms?—Certainly. On that Agricultural Holdings Act I think there was one question raised, that is the important question, namely, that it did not provide, if I remember right, for compensation for the manure value of home-grown produce, that is to say, if the farmer instead of selling his corn used it upon the farm, it did not entitle him to compensation—it was not purchased.

34,911. Clause 22 in Part 3 of the First Schedule is: "Application to land of purchased artificial " or other purchased manure." You would like to strike out the word "purchased" in the second part?—I am only telling you that that was the point that was discussed, and the only point that I ever heard raised under the Act in our Chamber. I think it is worthy of consideration. I am not sufficiently versed in the technicalities to tell you whether it was right or wrong.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,912. Do you think that there are any farmers who need some sort of protection against bad landlords?—Yes; I suppose there are landlords and landlords, and tenants and tenants.

34,913. Then you think that it is better that those tenants should suffer than that there should be any interference generally between landlord and tenant?—No; what I think is what Mr. Seebohm referred to; I look upon the force of opinion—the conduct of the large landlords, like Lord Tredegar, as having an influence, and I think that if it became known that a landlord was dealing hardly with his tenant, that should have a higher force than any legislature—the force of public opinion.

34,914. You think it best to rely then upon the moral opinion of the country generally?—Rather than have a general Act for one exceptional case.

Mr. Grove.

34,915. You say, Mr. Colborne, that you have about 200 acres in Monmouthshire. Could you tell us what rent you get for that?—It is divided into different holdings.

34,916. What would be the average per acre about?—If you take out the buildings the average is very little.

34,917. We want to deal with that as farming land if you could separate it?—Yes, I think I have it here. One farm is 112 acres, and the rent, exclusive of the tithe (which I have added on, 75 per cent.), is 85*l.* It was reduced just at the time I purchased it from 100*l.* to 85*l.*, and the previous tenant paid 125*l.*, so that between 1879–80 and the present time it has been reduced from 125*l.* to 85*l.* Then I have allowed for the last year and a half an abatement of 10 per cent. There are two or three other small tenancies grouped together of about 56 acres. They are let sub-divided; one is let at 38*l.*, the other at 30*l.*; and then a cottage at 5*l.* 4*s.* Then taking the value of the buildings on those, as insured, at 700*l.*, the 56 acres produce a net rent of 18*l.*, or about 1½ per cent. upon the value of the land as apart from the buildings.

34,918. That is what you spoke of before?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

34,919. You said that where you took a fair charge for the cost of buildings, very little was left?—Very little indeed was left.

34,920. What rate of interest could you take for a calculation of that sort?—For the houses and buildings, taking them on the amounts they are insured for, I should put 5 per cent. subject to insurance.

34,921. I think you spoke of your land in Sussex where the tithe is very high?—Yes.

34,922. Did you say it was about 7 per cent. letting value; is that what we understand?—I think it is.

34,923. It is a matter of a little interest for us to get that?—I will tell you in one moment. I think it is more than that; I think that on the last half-year's rent of 200 acres the rent was 63*l.*, and I accepted 50*l.*, and 20*l.* of that 50*l.* represented land tax and tithe rentcharge, leaving nothing whatever for the land apart from the buildings.

34,924. You have given us a very interesting statement as to the distribution of small farm produce, poultry, butter, eggs, and so on, through the medium of the Post Office in Germany?—Yes.

34,925. Do we understand that in Germany the Post Office authorities collect the amount for the produce as well as for the carriage?—Yes. That is not confined to agr cultural produce; if you order materials for a dress, or anything of that sort, it is sent through the post and the postman does not deliver the parcel without having the money.

34,926. Do you know if there is any return showing whether that leads to any large amount of bad debts. Suppose the goods are refused, who takes them; are they returned to the sender, or how are they dealt with. You do not know, perhaps?—No, I do not know that.

34,927. That is one point which it would be very interesting to know?—No doubt you could obtain that information through the Foreign Office.

34,928. Yes. Last week in Pembrokeshire we had evidence from one farmer that he was sending butter in pound packages to Bristol by rail, and he found that it paid him very well, and I may say that there is one of our Commissioners who has pound boxes made up in very thick paper, and he constantly sends those pounds of butter, and has a regular system of sending them through the post, to various parts of England, and it seems to pay very well. There is no doubt that any information we can get as to the distribution through the Post Office of small articles of farm produce would be very valuable?—Then I should venture to suggest, if the Commission were to apply to the Foreign Office, they would get that information through one of the consuls, say the consul at Frankfort on the Maine. I think there is a consul there, a Mr. Oppenheim.

34,929. Then you do not seem to be inclined to look with a friendly eye at anything like a Land Court. You think that the relations between the landlord and tenant might become strained if there was a Land Court. But suppose (as we put the question to Mr. Graham) that the landlord and the tenant first come together and try to agree and do agree, and that there is no need to go to any court at all, would not that do away with a great deal of the objection that is in your mind against the Land Court?—But supposing they do not agree?

34,931. Touching upon railway rates for a moment you read a few words out of section 27 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act?—Yes. It was introduced by Lord Jersey on behalf of the agriculturists, I remember.

34,932. In that section the words occur—"The same or similar services." Is not the point this: there are two matters in connexion with the railway rates. The first would be foreign produce which comes into competition with our own productions. The second would be our own local railway rates from district to district. Suppose now that a full train-load of meat is landed, say, at Liverpool, and taken up in a full train-load; the railway company charge a very low rate for it. Then suppose that the farmers of a district were to tender a train-load of meat, if they were to have co-operation; in your opinion, as a solicitor, would not the railway company be bound to carry the train-load of meat for our farmers at the same rate as they would the train-load of meat that comes from foreign parts?—Yes, but if I remember rightly before Lord Balfour of Burleigh and Sir Courtenay Boyle, I think their view was rather against giving the great concession—the extra concession—for these large train-loads to the detriment of the small trader. I may be wrong, but I really gathered that they were averse to sacrificing the small trader for the benefit of the largest.

Mr. Grove—continued.

34,933. But as a matter of fact foreign produce is carried about this country at a much cheaper rate than home produce?—Yes.

34,934. That we must admit, I think. You quite agree with that, do you not?—I have seen the Blue Book which had the return.

34,935. A great deal of evidence has necessarily been given to the Committee on that matter. But would you consider that if goods were tendered in the same bulk and under the same conditions for home-grown produce as for foreign produce, that the railway companies would have to carry them on the same terms?—Certainly.

34,936. And that would be the meaning of that section 27—"the same or similar services"?—Yes.

34,937. Now, touching upon railway rates for small matters about our own local district. You have explained to us the matter with regard to Monmouthshire; we know that in Monmouthshire the rates are the same, but have you any experience at all of the rates during the last couple of years?—No. I went out of the profession, and I was thankful not to be mixed up with that question.

34,938. I think that you deserve a very good rest after the hard work that you did for the county of Monmouth on the railway rates question?—Thank you for your kind expression.

Lord Kenyon.

34,939. I have some questions to ask you which are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Perhaps "politics have something to do with the selection "of the members of the Monmouthshire County "Council. Is that so?"—I am afraid it has very much.

34,940. He also asks: "Are not some of the "members of the council disconnected with "agriculture?"—I fancy that some of those that voted for that resolution were very much disconnected with agriculture.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,941. With regard to that, are we not all interested in agriculture?—I consider those who are more interested in agriculture are those who have their money in it and at stake.

34,942. Who are they?—The landlords and the tenants.

34,943. But their interests are divergent, are they not?—Of course. The landlord is interested —I will not say in getting the highest rent. The landlord is a rent-receiver and the tenant is a rent-payer; but I do consider that their interests, especially in Monmouthshire, on such estates as Lord Tredegar's, are very identical.

Lord Kenyon.

34,944. Mr. Vincent says: "Am I right in "saying that the Solicitors' Remuneration Act

" limited the charges of solicitors ?"—I am under that impression, my Lord. I know, at any rate, that the solicitor's costs are liable to this Court of Arbitration, and that if the solicitor and the client do not agree there is an arbitrator in the shape of a taxing master.

34,945. " Am I also right in saying that since " that Act passed, bills of costs have been larger " than ever ?"—That is not within my experience. I hope it is not a reflection that I am liable to.

34,946. I am sure not. " Is not the right " inference that any attempt to limit the charges " to be made by a class of men induces them to " exact the utmost of their due ?"—I will not speak so badly of human nature, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MORGAN WILLIAMS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

34,947. You are Mr. Morgan Williams of the Home Farm, Michaelston-y-vedw ?—Yes.

34,948. Are you a tenant of Mr. Halswell Tynte's ?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

34,949. Is he a relation of Mr. Kemys Tynte ?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

34,950. Have you any statement written out ?—No, none at all.

34,951. What is the size of your farm?—110 acres.

34,952. And the rent ?—160*l.* a year.

34,953. Does that include the tithe ?—Yes—tithe and all in it.

34,954. The date of entry is February 2nd, is it ?—Yes.

34,955. Do you think that is a satisfactory date of entry—Candlemas ?—Yes.

34,956. You prefer it to Michaelmas ?—Yes.

34,957. It is a yearly tenancy ?—Yes.

34,958. Have you got an agreement ?—No.

34,959. You never signed one ?—Not at all.

34,960. Do you feel equally happy without it ?—Yes, perfectly. I have a good landlord and cannot grumble.

34,961. Are you satisfied with your rent ?—Yes.

34,962. Have you had any abatements ?—Yes.

34,963. How much ?—10 per cent.

34,964. For how long ?—Two years.

34,965. Is your rent the same or have you had it reduced ?—It is the same only he gives an abatement back.

34,966. Only an abatement—it has not been reduced ?—No.

34,967. You have always had compensation for any damage done, have you ?—Yes.

34,968. Who does repairs ?—Mr. Tynte ; we do the haulage.

34,969. Do you think that is fair ?—Oh, yes, quite.

34,970. You can always get what you want done ?—Yes, anything.

34,971. How about the game ?—Oh, they do a little damage, but he allows it back.

34,972. Would you rather have the game than not ?—A little damage is done, but he gives a little abatement back for it.

34,973. It brings your landlord on your farm occasionally, I suppose ?—Yes.

34,974. And you are glad to see him ?—Yes.

34,975. Relations could not be more friendly than they are ?—Oh, capital.

34,976. Have you thought of any remedy for the state of agriculture ? Perhaps you do not think it requires any remedy ?—No, I do not think it requires any.

34,977. You think things are better left as they are ?—Yes.

34,978. What class of farm is yours ?—All pasture.

34,979. What do you do—sell milk ?—Yes, and make cheese and fat cattle.

34,980. Cheese has kept up pretty well, I think ?—Yes.

34,981. Do you raise any stock at all ?—Yes, young cattle.

34,982. They have done badly this year, I suppose ?—Yes, not very good. I lost a few by so much acorns, but Mr. Tynte allowed me for them.

34,983. Did you ask him ?—No, he sent a cheque. I lost five three-year olds—five out of 15.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

34,984. Do you find that there is no complaint at all among tenants at the present time ?—No, not around Michaelston.

34,985. Nor among landlords ?—No, I cannot hear of any.

34,986. How far is your farm from Newport ?—It is about 7 miles, and about 17 from from Cardiff.

34,987. Do you send milk into Newport and Cardiff ?—No, to Mr. Tynte.

34,988. You farm the house farm ?—Yes, it is near the house, and I supply the milk there.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,989. May I ask you what price you have for your milk ?—Well, I cannot say indeed. He gives 1*s.* a gallon for it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

34,990. Do you find that enough to make cheese and butter too?—Yes; we make cheese, but of course he cannot take it all for the one house.

Lord Kenyon.

34,991. How many cows do you keep?—Fifteen now.

Mr. Griffiths.

34,992. Do you find any difficulty in getting servants to milk?—No, there are plenty to be had.

34,993. Do men milk, or women?—Women and men. The boy and girl milk; I milk myself sometimes too.

34,994. Do you pay them higher wages than they used to have years ago?—No, the same.

34,995. Always the same?—Yes, as they are good, and as they are bad; we might have a bad one or we might have a good one. We should give more then.

Mr. Richard Jones.

34,996. Do you know of any landlords who do not make any abatements?—No.

34,997. If the price of stock and produce continues like it is, do you think it is the duty of the landlord to make a permanent reduction?—I do not know indeed. The stock are very low.

34,998. What is your opinion. Do you think the depression is temporary or is it permanent?—Oh, I think it is very fair if everyone will stick.

34,999. What is very fair?

Lord Kenyon.

35,000. I do not think he understood your question.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,001. I asked you whether you thought the depression temporary or permanent. Do you think we shall get an improvement in the times?—I cannot say, indeed. I hope there will be an improvement.

Lord Kenyon.

35,002. As far as I can make out, you are satisfied with the price of cheese and milk, and not with the price of stock, is that so?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,003. Do you think the breeders of stock in your parts are as well off as the milkmen?—Well, I cannot say indeed that.

35,004. I should think that you are able to judge. How long have you been farming?—About three years now for my own self, and I farmed with my father many years.

Lord Kenyon.

35,005. You farmed with your father before?—Yes, with my father, and now I have got a farm of my own.

35,006. Was that on the same holding?—The same landlord.

Mr. Grove.

35,007. You say you lost five of your cattle with the acorns?—Yes.

35,008. Do you know that there is an agricultural department, and that they are supposed to be continually issuing notices to the farmers of the country. It happens that they did issue a small leaflet calling attention to the danger of these acorns, seeing that there was such a large quantity of them. Did you ever see one of those?—No.

35,008*a*. They were sent to us, the County Council, and I wanted to know the best way of getting them round the county, so that every farmer should be warned at the earliest moment possible, and I consulted the members of the Council about it, but they said they thought that the farmers were quite aware of it. Now, in future if we get anything of this sort, would it be an advisable thing to have 1,000 or 2,000 printed of these leaflets and send them round the county, do you think?—I cannot say, indeed.

35,009. Well, supposing that you had seen a pamphlet from the Agricultural Department calling attention to the danger of allowing the cattle to go into the fields where there were lots of acorns and all the rest of it, would not you have taken precautions and tried to save your cattle?—Yes, certainly, but it was such a dry season. There was such a crop of them about last year.

35,010. Now after the dry weather the Agricultural Department also send round another small pamphlet showing various ways in which crops could be grown very hastily—catch crops as they were called—so as to help the farmers who were short of hay and straw and fodder and short of grass?—Yes.

35,011. Did you see anything of that?—No, I did not.

35,012. Does your landlord come over your farm occasionally?—Yes, my farm is all around the house, and he comes very often for a walk round the fields.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,013. You are a Welshman I take it, are you not?—Yes. I cannot speak Welsh much, but I can understand it.

35,014. Do I understand you are a tenant farmer, or do you farm for Mr. Tynte?—A tenant farmer.

35,015. You call it the Home Farm?—Yes, it used to be.

35,016. Although he does not manage it with his own hands?—It used to be so when his father was alive.

35,017. You say repairs and buildings are done by the landlord. Has he done any for you?—Yes.

35,018. He has done some for you?—Yes. He repairs all the buildings for us. He does all the buildings that we want.

35,019. He does all the buildings?—Yes, when we want them.

35,020. The haulage goes on the tenant?—Yes, we haul for him.

35,021. Can you tell me from your experience what proportion of the expenditure that would be. Would it be 10 per cent. or not?—I cannot say that exactly.

35,022. But approximately could you tell me?—No.

35,023. Did you keep any accounts to show?—No. We did not keep an accounts at all.

35,024. Would those be repairs or new buildings?—Well, repairs to buildings. They are all in good repair too—plenty of water too.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at Blackwood.

FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Temperance Hall, Blackwood, Monmouthshire, 15th March 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. MORRIS, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Mr. THOMAS EBORALL COOKE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

35,025. You are Mr. Thomas Eborall Cooke, land agent, of Newport?—I am; I have been, rather. I am now out of business.

35,026. What is the name of Messrs. Nicholls' estate for which you are agent?—The Monmouthshire estate, in the parishes of Llandegveth Llanddewi Fach, Llangibby, and Tredunnoc.

35,027. It extends to what?—About 2,000 acres.

35,028. Between Usk and Caerleon?—Yes; I have a statement. Perhaps it might be convenient to read that.

35,029. Yes, will you proceed with your statement?—I am a small landowner myself, and have acted up to the year 1891 as agent for other estates. I have had under my charge estates to the extent of about 5,000 to 6,000 acres. The commons that I know are the common of Coedypaen in the parish of Llangibby, the common of Green Moor on the level, and the common of Cefn Llwyn, all of which have been enclosed. I know the manors of Magna Porta, of Gold Cliff, of Edlogan and Tregrug, Libenath, Usk, Red Castle, and Abergavenny. Mr. Nicholl had had a small copyhold in the manor of Gold Cliff; I forget now exactly what the fees were. I think they were under 2*l.*, but the costs of the transfer were upwards of 15*l.*, which I think is very high. I have a small copyhold in Magna Porta in the parish of Llantarnam, the fees of which are 1*s.* 6*d.* I happened to buy the property, where there were some children that were minors. Each time they come of age I have to pay a charge of 6 guineas, which I think is high. The sheep-runs that I know are partly on my own property near Pontypool, on the Lascan Mountain.

35,030. Would you give us the name of that copyhold property?—Do you mean the one I am interested in?

35,031. I mean the one where you have to pay a fine of 6 guineas on each minor coming of age?—It is the manor of Magna Porta, in the parish of Llantarnam. One of the sheep-runs is on my own property near Pontypool, on the Lascan Mountain, and is without stint. Those who are able to keep the largest number of sheep and to really look after the sheep have the greater benefit from the sheep-run. The same applies to a mountain in Glamorganshire, in the parish of Gelligaer—the Gelligaer Mountain. There the man who looks after his sheep the best keeps the largest number of stock. The tenancy in Monmouthshire is from the 2nd February. I wish to state here that I think that a Michaelmas taking is the better. In a Michaelmas taking all the crops are gathered off the land; the new tenant goes into the house and the buildings at once, and there is no overlapping as in the case of a 2nd of February or Candlemas taking, where the outgoing tenant has the use of house and buildings up to the 1st of May, and there is also all the off-going crop of wheat that is planted in the fall.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Lord Kenyon.

35,033. Have you a copy of the agreement?—I have (producing same). That is a copy of my agreement, and I can produce to you two agreements that were signed only in February last on two farms that became vacant on account of the death of the tenants, and they are in accordance with that agreement.

35,034. Identical with this?—Identical with that. These are the two agreements (producing same). The rents vary from 10*s.* up to 40*s.* or 42*s.* The 10*s.* rents are for rather poor farms in the back country, a long way from town, and perhaps with bad roads. Then we have them at 15*s.* and 18*s.* up to 1*l.* If a farm is near a town on a good road we can get 30*s.* an acre for it. If accommodation land, what we call on the level, on the alluvial land, which is very rich pasture land, and used as accommodation land, perhaps a field or two is held with the hill farms, and we get from 2*l.* to 2 guineas per acre for it. The services from the tenants are merely hauling for repairs or improvements. The basis of rent is by private treaty and not by tender. We do not accept the highest bid. We would rather have a really good farmer at market value. The reductions that we have made have been from 30 per cent. down to 5, from 5 per cent. up, and they are made permanently, and for this reason, that if the rent is a permanent reduction the tenant is able to have his rates and his taxes reduced. These reductions are not made indiscriminately; that is to say, a certain per-centage upon every holding under the estate, but each case is taken on its own merits. I think that the preferential claim of the landlord is beneficial to the tenant, inasmuch as the landlord does not force him to pay up or to sell his cattle at a reduced value; his stock, perhaps, I might, too, have said. Here I wish to make this remark with regard to rents, that the rent of a farm in Monmouthshire is very little beyond a building per-centage on the house and the buildings. On my own estate, which is about 551 acres, the rent is 479*l.* a year, and the insurance is upon 7,850*l.*, which at 5 per cent. will come to 392*l.* Take 392*l.* out of the rental of 479*l.* and it leaves 87*l.* per annum for 551 acres. I brought the copy of the insurance policy to show you that it is not an insurance recently made, but I think you will find it was made in 1882, and that insurance is kept up.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,035. Would you kindly say how many farms?—Five farms. I ought to state that nearly the whole of the houses on those farms were houses that were occupied years ago, perhaps 150 years ago, by the owners, by the yeomen, and there is no doubt that the houses are better than would be required for the ordinary farmer occupying that land; but still those are the actual figures, and I think that they will be a guide to show you that the building interest on farmhouses and buildings is very large, so that if a tenant were to get his land free, before he could live on the farm or house his stock he would have to procure money at not less, I think, as a building interest, than 5 per cent., and would have to make that outlay before he could occupy the farm.

Lord Kenyon.

35,036. May I take it, then, that you agree with what Mr. Colborne said yesterday, He suggested that some such return as this would be of use?—I agree entirely with Mr. Colborne.

35,037. He wished for a return of the value of farmsteads and buildings?—Yes; that is the only one, because the other estates are not all insured. I pay the policy of the insurance myself. I brought this up for the information of the Commissioners as a fact.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,038. Would you suppose that that is a fair specimen, apart from what you have said that the houses are larger than usual for the buildings?—I do not say that it is always the case, but there are a large number of houses in the county that were used as family residences in olden times, but are now in the hands of farmers, and larger and better houses have been built for the owners of the estates. That is very much the case.

Lord Kenyon.

35,039. In your experience you could say probably what the cost of a farmhouse is to build?—I should say that an ordinary farmhouse, for a man and his wife and children, supposing that no labourers are housed in the house, with a dairy and a cellar for cider, could not be built much under 700*l.* or 800*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

35,040. Would that be right for about a 100 acre farm?—A 100 acre farm?

35,041. I see this is just about 100 acres?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

works, or the town—he can haul far more manure than he could make of the hay or straw if it were consumed. Here I wish to say that I look upon the laying down of pastures as an act of husbandry or cultivation within the mind of the tenant for his own convenience. When he goes out, I think that he should offer these pastures so laid down to the incoming tenant, or the landlord, to be paid for if it is wished that they should be laid down, or he can put the plough into them and get his arable crop. I also wish to say, as to a large quantity of arable land, that if laid down to pasture it is a good thing that it should be ploughed up, say every eight or 10 years, and it would yield a better crop of grass.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,043. You mean rather on the Scotch system. You would plough it up, and have two or three courses of grain?—Of grain or roots, and then lay it down again. We have pastures, especially on the hill land here, that if they are laid down beyond eight or 10 years, go to gorse or fern, or something of that sort, and they have to be ploughed up. I do not say that we have gorse or fern on the low lands, but still there are arable fields where it is of advantage to plough up the land every eight or 10 years.

Lord Kenyon.

35,044. I suppose in such a case you do not enforce clause 4 of your agreement?—What is clause 4?

35,045. The tenant not to break up or convert into tillage any meadow or pasture land, and so on?—Yes, that refers to old pastures.

35,046. "Laid down for six years or upwards?"—Well, he is not to break them up without the consent of the landlord; but that is only without the consent of the landlord; but if a reasonable case is put before the landlord, it would be considered favourably. The improvements, so far as I know, are all done here by the landlord—building and draining—the tenant doing the hauling, because I do not know of any case where we have drained or improved the buildings and have charged any increase of interest on the outlay. As to the customs, I wish to state distinctly that I know of no custom, that is to say, a custom from years immemorial, in the county of Monmouth, with the exception of the land share on the off-growing wheat, one-fourth off a lay and one-fifth off a fallow, and the holding of the house, buildings, and the boozy pasture for the consumption of the off-going crop, until the 1st May. When I was very young, I made very particular inquiries, and that was the only custom that I could hear of as a custom from time immemorial. I also had the advantage of the acquaintance of a large landowner in this county. He managed his own estate, and was very intimate with it; he was at one time a member for this county; he knew of no custom in the county of Monmouth, except what I have told you. The customs that are known as customs now, and the difficulty of ascertaining what the custom of the county is, have grown from time to time. I may mention a statement made by the late Judge Herbert, of the county court, who understood land very well, when cases came before him, he remarked that customs seemed to grow in Monmouthshire. Of course, that is so, because in olden time we did not know anything about artificial manure or feeding stuffs. The schedule that was drawn up most carefully for the chamber of agriculture, chiefly by Mr. Stratton, who is one of our most able farmers in the county, was agreed to by landowners, land agents, and farmers. It was placed before them at a meeting, and it was agreed to, but it was not confirmed until a later meeting, so that it was well considered by land owner, agent, and farmer. That has resulted in the schedule put forward by the chamber of agriculture, which has been most useful, and I know it has stood in cases of arbitration.

35,047. When was this formulated; was it soon after the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—After the passing of the Act of 1883, it was thought that a great deal of friction might be occasioned, because there was really no recognised custom as it had grown; so that schedule was formulated as a means of doing away with friction between the landlord and the tenant, and it has worked remarkably well. I have used it in a great many instances, and I think it has been of advantage.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,048. Do you insert any mention of it in the agreements; I mean, if a man takes a farm under one of your agreements, has he to abide by this newly arranged custom?—No, we do not put that in our agreement. We consider that we are bound by the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, and this agreement is a working out of that Act. The Act of 1883 has rather introduced a custom which, by the schedule agreed upon by the Chamber of Agriculture, is one that was thought fair and agreed upon by the substantial landowners, land agents, and tenant farmers.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,049. What we are to understand is this, that supposing a tenant puts in a claim for compensation that scheme forms the basis of arbitration?—Exactly, that is so.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,050. But the Agricultural Holdings Act would form the basis if it went to law?—It would give the tenant the power of his claim, which must be recognised.

Mr. Grove.

35,051. And I take it that this formulated agreement is based upon the clauses in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Exactly, that is so.

35,052. That is, that there is nothing contradictory in the agreement to the law in the

Agricultural Holdings Act?—We could not do it if we wished it.

Lord Kenyon.

35,054. What do you think about the two months' notice that the tenant has to give?—I think that that is only fair, because I do not think it at all fair that a tenant should spring a claim just at the last moment; and I also say on the part of the landlord, I do not think that the landlord ought to spring a counterclaim on a tenant without giving a proper notice. I think that the notice is most essential, because if a claim is made in the two months before the end of the tenancy the landlord then has time to look about him, and see whether these claims are reasonable or not. I had a farm under my charge, it did not belong to me; it belonged to one of the Messrs. Nicholl. There I believed that there would be an amicable arrangement between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant. Just at the last moment, just before the 30th November, a claim was sprung on us, made out by these professional valuers, that we had to deal with. We did deal with it; we recognised all the claims that were right and proper, and we put in our counterclaim for produce that we knew had been sold off. I think that the claim was rather under the counterclaim. We should have settled most amicably if it had not been for the interference of these professional valuers.

Mr. Grove.

35,055. What was the name of that farm?—The name of that farm is Cefn Llech.

35,056. Is the name of the tenant Morgan?—Yes, David Morgan.

35,057. That is the case, no doubt, that is alluded to in the interview with Mr. Thomas Parry a couple of years ago by the Commissioner for the Western Mail?—No doubt of it, because I state that Mr. Thomas Parry was the man who induced the farmer to put in this claim, which was a most inflated claim.

Lord Kenyon.

35,058. What was the result?—The result of it was, when the tenant found that the landlord could put in a counterclaim he took up his papers and went off.

Mr. Grove.

35,059. His claim against you was 252*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*?—His first claim was 336*l.* I can give you the claim if you like.

35,060. Never mind that?—It was 336*l.* Then it was reduced to 254*l.*, and I think our counterclaim came to 275*l.*

35,061. And the man went away without getting a single penny?—He would not be led into further expense by his lawyer or his adviser.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,062. Do you know what the expense already incurred was?—I think our bill was somewhere about 25*l.* or 30*l.*, and I daresay that he had to pay about the same, in fact it is more? the lawyer's bill was 25*l.*, and I forget what the valuers' bills were. I think Mr. Graham, who is a most able valuer, assisted me in ascertaining the value.

Mr. Grove.

35,063. It was considered that he was a pretty fair farmer in that district?—Yes, very fair. I do not say a very good man, but unfortunately he had lost the assistance of his sons. He had had a bad accident by falling from a rick, and he really had had a lease of the farm, and at the request of Morgan, the landlord agreed to take a surrender of the lease. There was no notice.

35,064. Was it not considered very hard treatment of that man in the district generally?—I do not know. The incoming tenant and he would have agreed; I thought that they had agreed, but at the last moment he was advised that he could have this very large inflated claim. I state that the first claim was for 336*l.* When the details were sent in they could not make more than 254*l.* of it, and when we reviewed our counterclaim our counterclaim overrode what we considered was his real value.

Lord Kenyon.

35,065. Have you got the claim with you?—I have. Here are the claim and the counterclaim (producing same).

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,066. Are they copies of the claim and the counterclaim?—I did not bring the originals. I thought copies might do. This (producing another document) is the claim and the counterclaim balanced with the approval of Mr. Graham, who is a very experienced man. You will observe that the fields that were claimed for as being laid down to permanent pasture were merely allowed to remain unsown. No seed was sown on the arable land, and they were not put down as permanent pastures.

Lord Kenyon.

35,067. They were not really permanent pastures at all, you mean?—No. They were merely allowed to remain in grass from not being ploughed up.

35,068. They had been laid down with some sort of seed?—I do not think there was any seed put in at all.

Mr. Grove.

35,069. Had he given any notice at all to the landlord under the Agricultural Holdings Act of any improvements?—No; this is a copy of the lease (producing same), and you will see that there is a surrender of that lease before the expiration of the tenancy. I may state that the relations between the landlord and the tenant were excellent until the professional valuer stepped in, with the result before you.

Lord Kenyon.

35,070. Did the tenant ask the professional valuer to come in?—I believe he did at the last moment, or anyhow he had a conference, and he was advised.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,071. Do you think the Act of 1883 was retrospective as regards existing leases?—I think that the Act of 1883 was retrospective as far as regards the Act in 1875; which was the first Agricultural Holdings Act.

Lord Kenyon.

35,072. I see one or two of these claims are disallowed because no consent was obtained from or notice given to the landlord?—Yes. I think that the date of the surrender was about 1884. That was just after the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 had been passed, and tenants had an idea that they were going to get almost anything they liked to ask for. I think that was the reason.

35,073. Was the farm in a very bad state of fencing?—Some of the fences were bad. There was some very good land on the moors that was very wet, the ditches and the rushes were not cast, and neglected entirely.

35,074. Is there anything further you want to say upon the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Nothing that I know of. I next go to the game. The game is preserved, but the tenants are protected in the letting agreement that they are not to do any damage, so that there is to be no complaint from the occupiers of the land, as, of course, the letting of the farm is the chief object.

35,075. The game is let then?—Yes, the game is let. I next come to education. In all the farms that I have had anything to do with the tenants were disinclined to attend the lectures on dairying. I could not induce them to go, and out of all the farms that I have anything to do with, I only know of three farmers' wives or daughters that went to the dairy school. Of course, I wish to state that I am very much in favour of the school, and I think it was very bad policy upon their part, but I merely state the fact.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

35,076. You consider the teaching would be most advantageous?—I think so. What I told them was "go and see whether you cannot improve in some respects."

35,077. And were the schools within an easy distance of them?—Quite close, within a field of the farm in one instance, but they were very good butter makers, and what they told me was, "We can sell our butter, but those who attend the dairy school cannot."

Lord Kenyon.

35,078. They like their butter with a taste in it?—There are wrinkles as to the temperature, brine and one or two other things that would have been a very good thing for them to have known, but they would not go. I merely state the disinclination of them to go.

35,079. Now with regard to small proprietors?—There are very few. As the name of Mr. Parry has cropped up, I wish to state that his family came into a landed property some years ago. They sold that landed property for a very large price and took three farms, the father and two sons took three farms under a large landowner. With regard to the children's work they are not paid wages but they are started in life, and I think that that is a very great advantage to the farmer, because if he paid weekly wages he would have to sell produce or stock sometimes at a disadvantage, so that being able to make the most of his stock at all times he is able to give his children a better start in life when they go out, both boys and girls. The labourers' wages are about 18*s.* a week. I consider that they are the best off of any on the farm. The landowner hardly gets 2½ per cent. The tenant farmers are, a great many of them, struggling, but the labourer has his very good wages with cheap food and cheap clothing. With regard to cottages there is no doubt that they are insufficient on some farms, but on the farms that I have had any dealings with, and on my own, there are plenty of cottages. These cottages are in some instances rather isolated, that is to say, they are in far off portions of the farm where the labourer is really required to tend and to feed the stock, and to take care of the stock in these outlying places, but the labourer of the present day does not like to live so far off society and the schools, and I do know instances where there are excellent cottages with very good gardens that are unoccupied for that reason; whereas, if there were any cottages in the villages or near the school they would be occupied, and are really wanted. The difficulty is, is a landlord getting such low rents to build new cottages in the neighbourhood where the labourers would be more inclined to take them.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I just state that as a fact, because upon my own estate and those that I act for, there are cottages, at the same time I do know estates that are in want of them. With regard to immigration, the labourers go to the towns, the coal works and the iron works, and to the railways, because I consider that the education of a farm labourer is a most excellent one. A farm labourer, if he goes to the towns, or the railways, or the coal works, is always of use, and always commands large wages on account of his agricultural instruction. If he cannot even find a place in the country he can go abroad, and is much more useful than a landowner if he goes abroad. The children of the farmers also go very largely into towns, sometimes as clerks or as shop assistants, sometimes as school teachers; they go to the board schools, and if they are sharp and clever they are retained there as pupil teachers, and as masters and assistants afterwards. The next point which I wish to state is this, having watched the action of the Commission almost all through, I have never seen any reference to accounts. I have never heard of any accounts being produced by the farmers. We have heard of heavy rents and all that sort of thing, but I have never heard that there has been any evidence (you might have had it, but I have not seen it) of accounts being produced before you to show what the income is, and what the expenditure is.

Mr. Grove.

We have had some accounts put in, but we may say that accounts are not at all regularly kept by the farmers.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Gibbs, at Pembroke, had got elaborate accounts, but he could not lay them before us because he said it was so very difficult to separate certain items from others.

Mr. Seebohm.

He was a dealer as well as a farmer.

The Witness.

May I refer the Commission to the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society. I have moved my residence, and I have not been able to put my hand on the particular journal, but some years ago the Royal Agricultural Society, when they gave prizes for farms, gave the income and the expenditure. I think, if you will refer to those accounts, you will be very much struck by the small item for rent compared to the other expenses on the farm. When you take the labour, manures, feeding stuffs, and other charges that were expended on the farm, I think you will find that rent forms but a very small proportion.

Mr. Grove.

35,080. What do you mean by "a very small proportion"?—A very small proportion of the outlay.

Mr. Grove—continued.

35,081. I know, but what proportion?—I cannot tell you. I have failed to find the accounts, but I have no doubt you will be able to refer to them.

Lord Kenyon.

35,082. Do you agree with the rough statement that a man has got to make three rents?—I do, but not equal rents.

35,083. What I mean is he has got to make what is equal to three times the rent?—Exactly, but I think it will be well if the Commission will refer to the accounts of a farm which are given where prizes were given in several instances, and with several qualities of farms. I forget the years in which those accounts are given, but I have no doubt you will be able to get them from the proper quarter.

35,084. It is no doubt a fact that farming accounts are very indifferently kept, if at all?—No doubt, so we have to put up with statements which we cannot verify.

Mr. Grove.

35,085. Has there ever been any form of account that you know of published by such a society as the Royal Agricultural Society as a sort of model of accounts that would be useful to farmers?—Not that I know of. They were merely the facts as to the farms that were visited and offered for prizes by the Agricultural Society.

Lord Kenyon.

35,086. These were held up as model farms?—Of course.

35,087. And the way they were managed may be taken as a model for others?—I should say so, anyhow in some slight proportion. Carrying out that theory I am of opinion that any reduction of rent, such as say 5 per cent., 10 per cent., or 20 per cent., is not a crucial point as to whether a farmer sinks or swims. Of course it is an advantage. We have reduced rents considerably. We have tried to help our farmers, but I am of opinion that that reduction of rent is not a crucial point as to whether a farmer sinks or swims. If he cannot pay his rent a reduction of 5, 10, or 15 per cent. would not enable him to keep on.

Mr. Grove.

35,088. That depends upon the narrowness of the margin, does it not?—Well, my opinion is that the rent is so small—it is such a small reduction in regard to outlay of capital, labour, manuring, and feeding stuffs, that 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. reduction of rent would not enable a man to keep on his farm if he could not keep it without.

35,089. Just so, but if a man had 200*l.* a year 15 per cent. on that would be 30*l.* That would be a considerable item to a man who was struggling, would it not?—Well, it would be so, but still for 200*l.* a year the farm would be a very large farm. Then, as to the cause of depression there is no doubt foreign importation, free of all charges, is the main cause. The rates are payable by the farmer. I know of a case, and I will mention the parish which Mr. Grove will recognise, the parish of Malpas. The parish of Malpas has to contribute to and to keep up roads that are very largely used for the conveyance of produce from the town of Newport to Cwmbrân. Nothing is left in the parish of Malpas, but the whole of the trade is either at Newport or Cwmbrân. In the parish of Malpas you may see streams of carts going to and fro, grocers' carts, beer, and all that sort of thing, all day and nearly all night. The parish of Malpas has to pay those rates. What I contend is, that it is unfair that the farmers should have to pay all these rates for the distribution of foreign produce. The police rate has to be paid by the farmer to protect the goods, and the sanitary and other rates, that all contribute towards the advantages of the foreign produce. I do suggest that without putting a protective duty on foreign produce, foreign food should contribute towards the common charges that the farmer has to pay. I may say that food, of course, when it comes into a port pays towards the dock dues, the lighting, the sanitary, and other things belonging to the port, but it is only the port and not as to any place inland. Of course, the farmer has to contribute to the general poor, but the foreign food does not contribute to it, nor to the Navy to guard the bringing in of this foreign food. There is another thing: in olden days the farmer used to send his produce to market with a cart horse; now, almost every small farmer, even a farmer of 70 acres, keeps a horse and trap, which is costly. I may say that the relations between the landlord and the tenant are excellent and friendly in all cases. The repairs have been very costly from the years 1875 to 1883. From my experience, I find that the old stone tile about those years got bad, and had to be renewed with slate. In my own case, when any repairs of that sort have been going on, I have taken advantage of the opportunity to improve the house and the buildings where they could be improved, without charging the tenant any interest. I have also, as corn is so often harvested on the field, turned the bays of barns into cattle places, so as to have more convenience for shedding; that has not been charged to the tenant. As to the draining, we did a good deal between 1861 and 1883, but since 1883 you very seldom see any draining, and the late dry seasons have made it almost come to a standstill. I may say that the repairs on one place from 1857 to 1879 cost 228*l.*, or on the 22 years 10 yer cent. Another farm was drained in 1861 at a cost of 50*l.*, and the repairs for about 20 years, between 1861 and 1879, were 20 per cent. Then the house was very much improved, and new roofs put to the house and a great many of the buildings. I think that is all I have to mention.

Lord Kenyon.

35,090. You said in one part of your evidence that the cottages were not so satisfactory as they might be, and that they were insufficient for the requirements on some farms. Do you think that cottages could be built in this neighbourhood at a profit?—No, I do not. Generally, we let a cottage with a very good garden for about 5*l.* a year. That cottage would cost at least 150*l.*

35,091. We have had some statements that a cottage might be built for 40*l.*?—I should not like to live in that. Still, I daresay I could show you some old cottages that 40*l.* would be a very good outlay for, and people live in them. But I wish also to state that those cottages are held under the lord of the manor on a very small rental, and people will live in those cottages, which are such that people would not live in them upon our farms; they will not live there unless they have good ones.

35,092. They have been built on the waste of the manor?—Yes, on the waste of the manor.

35,093. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, and this notice of claim, which I see some people think is a hardship, do you think some sort of clause could be added that, in the case of a tenant leaving, the landlord should be compelled to draw the outgoing tenant's attention to this clause in case he wished to claim under the Act, so that for no technical reason he should lose his power to claim?—I think that the onus of that is certainly on the tenant. They all know about it.

35,094. But in some cases they do not know about it. We have heard many cases of tenants that hardly heard of the Agricultural Holdings Act; they certainly have never seen it. In Welsh Wales they certainly said they could not read it?—I will take the case of the Cefn Llech. I believe the incoming tenant was a highly respectable man, and I wish to state most distinctly that the outgoing tenant, Mr. David Morgan, was a most respectable man, and I think that he was chiefly influenced by his supposing that he could make a very large claim. Then you will see how this claim was made. The first claim was made for 336*l.*, merely upon guess work almost, which they could not substantiate. The landlord is bound to have some time. It took me through the whole of December and January to test all this. I have not got my papers with me, but we had a great deal of trouble and expense to take over people to see whether their claim was right or not.

35,095. But my point is this, not that the notice should be abolished. I think it is only fair that notice should be given?—Exactly.

35,096. But in order that technicality should not cause the tenant to lose his claim, would it be possible for the landlord to be obliged to draw the tenant's attention to it?—I think that it is for the advantage of the tenant, and there is a case that I know of where the tenant (and this is what we know) prepares to leave; then it becomes a question with him "shall I claim or shall I not claim."

35,097. Exactly?—He thinks "I have sold all "my hay and straw, a very large quantity, pre- "paring to leave. I have put everything in

" hay and straw, and if the counterclaim for " the hay and straw sold off the farm is put in it " will override any claim I have got." So that it is entirely a matter of business between the landlord and the tenant and I certainly say that the onus should be on the tenant.

35,098. I do not think you see my point. What I mean is, that for the sake of this two months' notice, in order that the tenant shall not lose his chance, the landlord or the agent should write and say, "You are about to leave your " farm; if you wish to claim you must give two " months' notice," and draw his attention to that fact?—Yes, I understand you. I certainly say that from experience I think the onus should be on the tenant.

35,099. Of course the onus would be on the tenant?—Yes.

35,100. Only in the case of an ignorant man who might not observe that, and let the two months slip, and there might be a case of hardship, would it avoid that case of hardship if the landlord were obliged to draw the tenant's attention to it?—My own experience is, we have no difficulty with respectable farmers. If a farmer wishes to make an inflated claim he would say, "I have forgotten the notice; I throw in this claim"; and there would be hardly time to test it. I am very strong on that point.

35,101. I do not wish to waive the notice?—No; but I am afraid that, if that were done, advantage would be taken of it to the detriment of the landowner.

35,102. I do not quite see how. Then with regard to copyhold tenure; you do not seem to be in favour of that much?—I think it is very expensive, but I may say that several of the lords of the manor are offering their tenants to purchase at 20 years' purchase. I have redeemed in the lordship of Abergavenny, and I know that in the case of Magna Porta the lord of the manor there told me that he should offer to sell at 20 years' purchase.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,103. Do you think it would be advantageous if the same system were adopted in all counties alike. You mentioned some cases from Glamorganshire, where the custom was a Michaelmas taking?—In Glamorganshire a great many of the holdings are Michaelmas holdings. They have to turn out of the house, and their stock has to turn out. If they had to take a farm where they could only get in on the 2nd February or the 1st May, they would be almost on the road between those times. Vice versâ, a man going from Monmouthshire into Glamorganshire would be out on the road between the 2nd February and Michaelmas.

35,104. If it was a general custom it would be a good thing?—Yes, it is inconvenient unless it were adopted throughout the county. Personally, I am in favour of the Michaelmas, because all crops are harvested, and the man goes out of the house, and everything is ended on the 29th September, and the new tenant comes in, and does all the ploughing.

35,105. Then, with regard to the question of copyholds that you were speaking of; the fines were very heavy?—No, the fines are not heavy, but the charges are heavy in proportion to the fines.

35,106. Supposing a farmer dies, and his son comes into the property after him, he has to pay as much as two years' rent sometimes before he is admitted, has he not?—If the holding is large it would not be so much as that, but in my case in Magna Porta the chief rent is 1*s.* 6*d.*, and the charges 6*l.* 6*s.* Unfortunately, I have had to pay that several times over, because I bought a property on which there were two or three minors, and they could not be admitted until they came of age, so that after I bought the property I had all these expenses coming on each time that the child came of age.

35,107. Or even in case of death, I suppose?—No, in case of death he would fall out; he would not be admitted.

35,108. But in the case of, say, another son coming into the property, he may die the first year?—No, it is not that. I purchased the property of some people; some of the children are of age; others are minors. The minors' share is put on a deposit, but each time that they come of age, to my surprise, after having bought the property, I have to be admitted.

35,109. Do you not think it would be a very good thing if all that copyhold property was enfranchised?—I do.

35,110. Done away with altogether?—I must do justice to the lords of the manor, and say that I believe they are rather encouraging that. I do not think that the 20 years' purchase is at all out of the way. I may mention that in the case of Abergavenny I purchased the property, and the steward of the manor made a very moderate charge for the transfer.

35,111. We found some very heavy charges in some parts of the country, some of them amounting to three years' rent?—Yes.

35,112. Do you know of any instances where the penalising clauses have been enforced?—I do not know, except for the hay and straw, because that is really a great depreciation of the land.

35,113. Quite so, but still farmers in the present day buy a good deal of bone manure?—I know of a case—that case which I spoke of where the farmer came out of Glamorganshire because he wanted to go into the farm on the 29th September, the outgoing tenant claimed the whole, and would not allow the counterclaim of a large quantity of hay and straw because the man wanted to come into the farm.

35,114. It is difficult to make a counterclaim unless a farm has been valued previously?—It is very difficult to make a counterclaim for depreciation of farms, but, generally speaking in my experience the whole of the counterclaim has been from a neglect of hedges, a neglect of casting reens or a selling off of produce.

35,115. On the change of tenancies do you generally have the farm put in thorough repair before the other tenant goes in?—We generally do what he asks us. Having done so many repairs so as to have our houses and outbuildings in the best order, there is not a great deal to be done when a new tenant comes in.

35,116. You mentioned something just now as to which I did not quite understand you, namely, with regard to voting for the guardians, the overseers, and the members of the school board?—Yes.

35,117. Would you kindly repeat that?—Yes, I will try and explain it to you. The tenant farmer who pays the poor rate, the school board rate, the police rate, and the sanitary rate, has the charge of that expenditure, because it is he who votes for the guardian, the member of the school board, and other representatives.

35,118. Quite so. You mentioned, with regard to pasture, that it should be ploughed up. Does the plough often improve the land?—Yes, most decidedly. Where arable land has a tendency to go to gorse or to fern, or where it deteriorates, it is of advantage to plough up a pasture, and to relay it again.

35,119. I agree with you with regard to damp soil, which we might say, so to speak, "goes to sleep." As to sound, good land, I do not think you can often improve it in that way?—There is a good deal of arable land, of course, that will stand; I do not mean to say that it will not; but still it does not stand as a hard and fast rule.

35,120. Is not gorse used in this part of the country as food for cattle and horses?—Not that I am aware of.

35,121. In some of the country that we have been through that is so?—The gorse generally, so far as my experience goes, has been a source of injury to the farmer. I think I may say that I do not know that the use of gorse is thoroughly understood; perhaps, if it were more understood, it would be more used, but I do not know of gorse being used from my own knowledge.

35,122. You said something with regard to a farmer who had sold his farm and placed himself and his two sons in farms on a large estate?—Yes.

35,123. Did they do well?—Yes, they are very prosperous farmers.

35,124. Did he take them all to one farm or to different farms?—No, the father went to one large farm, one son went to another large farm, and the second son went to a farm of about 120 acres, perhaps.

35,125. We have had instances where a second son did not apply for farms?—They were all good farmers; but it is a fact that they would rather rent under a landlord than take 2½ per cent. interest, and also take the 5 per cent. interest that they got for their own farms, which were sold at a very high price. I merely mention that to show that in Monmouthshire farmers would rather rent under a large proprietor than farm their own estates.

35,126. Do you know of any instances where labourers keep cows on farms?—I do not.

35,127. Not any in the neighbourhood?—No, I do not. But I think I may state that if a labourer wished and had the time, which he might have, if he had a wife and family, to keep a cow, I think that the landowners would give him every advantage; and for this reason, that I think that a labourer who wishes to keep a cow may in the future become a farmer himself.

35,128. Quite so. The children, we find, are generally growing up to be more useful?—No doubt. I am quite in favour of labourers keeping cows if it could be done.

35,129. In Scotland, I think, it is the case that labourers have cows?—I do not know of any instance in Monmouthshire.

35,130. Then as to sheep runs without stint, do you not think that is injurious, as a rule, and that they keep too many sheep upon the ground?—I do not know.

35,131. It tends towards disease, and so on?—I cannot say. In the case of one farm that I have, my principal farm, an old tenant that did very well used to keep a very large number of sheep. The present man does not keep any sheep at all, simply and solely because he is thrust out of it, if I may so call it.

35,132. Do you know of any instances where farmers had some compensation for general improvements of the farm?—No, I do not. I do not know of any farm that I could think of where there has been a general improvement.

35,133. Are there any gamekeepers kept on this estate?—Not under the landowners, not by the landowners; but gamekeepers are kept by the owners of the shooting, and in a certain district it has been a very great godsend to them, because where the land is near ironworks and coalworks people come over the land after the game, and they take apples, fowls, eggs, and those sort of things, so that they really hail the presence of the gamekeeper with a great deal of satisfaction.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,134. I will just ask you one question with respect to sheep runs; do you think that sheep runs without stint are prejudicial to sheep farming generally?—I do not think so, because I can tell you that, as a matter of fact, what is called Welsh mutton (and it is the Welsh sheep that do the best on these high sheep runs) commands really the highest price in the market.

35,135. Yes; but is there not a tendency on the part of the strong man to overrun his neighbour?—No doubt as in this case: my tenant in the year 1840 used to keep a very large number of sheep on the mountains; my farm had a field adjoining the mountain where the tenant had the convenience of bringing them in to shear and that sort of thing, and he kept a very large number of sheep on the mountain. It was then his interest to look after them, and I know he had a very large number of sheep on the mountain. Now my present tenant I do not think has one, because, as he says, the cost of looking after the number of sheep that he would put on the mountain would be too great, and he would be elbowed out.

35,136. So that if the number of sheep were limited, the place would pay him better?—Oh, no doubt. The run on the mountain would be a very great advantage to him then.

35,137. Would you go so far as this, to suggest that an equitable arrangement should be arrived at between the different owners for a limited number of sheep to be grazed on the mountains, with compulsory powers to enforce that arrangement?—I think that would be a very good thing. I think it would be very fair.

35,138. In the interests of agriculture generally?—Yes, I think so.

35,139. Do I understand you to say that there are changes in the tenancy owing to depreciation of wheat. Will you kindly look at your syllabus with regard to that?—I may say that the syllabus was not entirely made out by me. That point was not made by me. I should state that this was made out by Mr. Nicholl, one of my clients, and he asked me to give evidence, or else I had not intended giving any evidence, and I am rather unprepared for it. I say that the changes of tenancies are caused in the bad times when perhaps a farmer was not able to get on and he occupied the farm for perhaps a year or two and was obliged to leave.

35,140. I see there is a statement also to this effect: depreciation of wheat with no equal reduction in tithe standard, can you explain that further?—That was not an answer given in by me, and therefore I cannot explain that very well. I am only partially responsible for these replies.

35,141. Have you any instances where compensation has been given for timber cutting?—Yes.

35,142. What have you paid for timber cutting?—Indeed I forget now, but we generally assessed it as at the rent of so many acres of land for a year, or something of that sort.

35,143. And the tenant was satisfied?—Yes. It was on an agreement with the tenant. He asked for compensation, and we considered it was fair and we allowed it to him.

35,144. You say in the summary that there is no general form of agreement? each letting special?—That was not my answer.

35,145. No, I should think not?—You have my agreement before you.

35,146. You say that there is uniformity in the adjustment of rents. Is that right?—No, I think I stated that we took every case specially, and in some instances, instead of giving a remission we have done certain acts for the tenant; we have either drained or done some hedging. I have a case in point now, where I am doing some hedging for a tenant. He is a very bad hedger, and the hedges on his land are very bad, and I said I would do some hedging for him in a really good and substantial way, and would pay him for it rather than give him a rebate, because his rent is low.

35,147. I am afraid this summary is of no use?—As I stated before, this was made out by the landowner; I answered certain questions, but I did not know that I should give evidence here.

35,148. You say that you take every case on its merits when you are making a permanent reduction?—Exactly.

35,149. Have you any principle or any basis to go by?—Yes.

35,150. What is that?—If a tenant is very lowly rented, on account of having been in a farm for a very long time—the rent is very low—we do not consider that there is any necessity for a reduction of that rent, and it has not been asked for; but where a farm has been put up, it is different. I wish to state that about the year 1874 was the highest state of prosperity for a farmer; after that year times began to get bad; those farms that were taken about the year 1874 were, perhaps, let at a very high rent; then those farms, when times got bad, were reduced, and reduced immediately, up to the present time. But there are instances of farms that have been held by the same family that we have not altered the rent of.

35,151. So that, according to your reply, now there is no uniformity of rents on your estate?—No, not by any special standard.

35,152. Do you not think it would be equitable to the tenants in general if you varied the rents more in accordance with the prices, instead of letting a low rent remain for a number of years?—Where a tenant has been there for 20 or 30 or 40 years, as has been the case upon some of these estates, it was thought a hardship to increase the rent, and it has not been increased.

35,153. Say that his rent was fixed in 1866, after he came to the prosperous times of 1872 to 1876, he would have a very big margin of profit?—No doubt.

35,154. You would not consider it a hard case now if the rent was raised?—No, it would not be hard. But upon the old estates—I think you will find it upon Lord Tredegar's estate, the Hanbury estate, and a great many old estates—where a family has been in a farm for a great many years, the rent has not been raised, although it would be quite fair to do so. Then, I think it would be equally unfair to reduce this very low rent by a uniform reduction, whereas the higher rented man has a large claim for it.

35,155. I allow that is quite true, inasmuch as there is not uniformity of rent; but what I contend is this, that it would be fairer and more equitable, I think, if there was uniformity of rents, and if the rents varied more in accordance with the price of stock and cost of production?—I think you will find that the old tenants whose rents have not been raised feel very grateful to their landlords for not altering them, and I rather encourage that feeling.

35,156. What about those whose rents have been fixed lately. How do those feel?—Those are men who have come in in the good times, and have paid what I call a market value for their farms at that time. Times have got worse, and we have made reductions from time to time. I could give you, I think, a farm that I know, as an instance.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,157. May I refer back for one moment to the Morgan case. I am anxious to get an explanation from you with regard to it. Do we understand that you think it is a case which shows it is best to leave landlord and tenant to settle their own affairs without outside interference?—I do, very much.

35,158. Supposing there had been a Land Court, the Land Court would have been bound to have taken the law as laid down by statute as regards these things, and do you think that the net result would have been any different from what it has been?—No, I do not. It would be settled after a very heavy expenditure had been incurred, because if you go to a Land Court you must bring proofs, and in order to bring up witnesses and have a valuation so made a very large expenditure would have to be incurred; whereas a respectable outgoing tenant and a respectable incoming tenant, as was the case in this individual case, could settle it between them, and in that case it was very nearly settled.

35,159. Then on the one hand the tenant, you think, would not have been able to substantiate any larger claim than the reduced amount mentioned by you?—I feel sure of it, for this reason, that his first claim (he was owing a large amount of rent) was a reason for his not paying the rent. I knew it was an inflated claim, and I insisted upon the rent being paid until the rights were substantiated.

35,160. Then if the tenant would not have been able to substantiate any larger claim, do you consider that the landlord's counterclaim would have been at all reduced by the judge of a Land Court?—It might have been, but we were as careful as possible by the employment of the best advice that we could get. I think upon one of the papers you will see what our valuer put down, and he is a man of very large experience.

35,161. Quite so. I do not want to go into detail, but what I wanted to go into was this, that supposing there was a Land Court, do you consider the number of cases of hardship would be lessened or increased by these disputes being, as a general thing, referred to the decision of a Land Court?—I think it would have the effect of not going to the Land Court at all, because I think that the expenses on both sides would be so very heavy that they would rather come to an agreement.

35,162. In such a case as this I understand you think that the Land Court, after all the litigation, would have given exactly the same decision practically as was arrived at?—Very much so, because I think you will see that the counterclaim overlaps the claim as far as we can make it out, and it would be said "Well, "knock off that difference and say that we are "quits." I do not think that would be a case for going to the expense and friction of a Land Court.

With reference to the question which Mr. Richard Jones asked me about a reduction on a farm, I have found the paper now, the reduction of the farm that I referred to as an instance was a farm that was farmed by one of our best farmers, and in February 1880 the rent was 200*l.*; it was reduced in 1883 to 180*l.*; it was reduced in 1886 to 163*l.* 10*s.*; and reduced in 1888 to 150*l.* So that that makes a reduction of 50*l.* in 200*l.* from 1880 to 1888—in eight years. I may state that beyond that several fields have been drained without any extra charge, for the benefit of the tenant.

Mr. Grove.

35,163. Do you know of your own knowledge of any land that has been enclosed within the last few years?—The last enclosure was the enclosure of Green Moor on the moor near Magor. I think that must have been somewhere between 1860 and 1870. Other commons were enclosed before I can recollect.

35,164. Then who enclosed that Green Moor; was it done by Act of Parliament, or by what process; do you know?—I cannot tell, because I have not any connexion with it. I merely know it as a fact.

35,165. You know nothing, I suppose, of Coed y paen?—I do know about that case. Mr. Nicholl is a large owner on that.

35,166. When was that enclosed?—That was enclosed, I think, in the year 1830 or about that date.

35,167. So far back as that?—Yes, and also the common Cefn Llwyn. Those are two places that I have known from childhood, and they were enclosed. So far as Coed y paen is concerned, some of the best land in the parish is in that enclosure.

35,168. So I see. You do not know how it was divided when it was enclosed. Was it divided amongst the landowners?—It was divided amongst the landowners.

35,169. And I presume under Act of Parliament?—I think it was under Act of Parliament. In those days they had not the conveniences of orders of court and other things that we have now.

35,170. Was there any reserved for recreation ground?—I think not. I do not think in those days recreation was thought of as much as it is now.

35,171. You always give a copy of your agreement to each tenant, I think you said?—Always.

35,172. When pasture is laid down does the landlord find the seeds?—I have never done so, because I have my own views with regard to that. I look upon the laying down to pasture as a course of husbandry suggested by the tenant, and for the tenant's own benefit. The landlord does not get any advantage by it.

35,173. Then you consider it is fair that the tenant should bear all the cost and expense of it?—I do, but as in the case of Cefn Llech there are several fields there that were stated to be laid down as permanent pasture, and the grass was only allowed to grow, and no permanent seeds were sown. We ascertained that to meet the claim.

35,174. As to fruit culture, do you think that fruit culture might be attended to more in the county?—I do, very much indeed.

35,175. Do you ever get any applications for orcharding from any of the tenant farmers?—No, but I have myself given trees, and they have unfortunately not been cared for, and it is money wasted.

35,176. Do you mean not properly protected?—Not properly protected. Further than that I may, from my experience in Monmouthshire, say that the picking of the fruit and the care of the fruit is not generally attended to. The fruit is shaken down instead of being hand picked, and is more or less bruised and injured before it gets to market.

35,177. You spoke of the family where two or three sons went into farms. Did those sons make the farms pay?—I think so. I think you know the individuals, Mr. Grove.

35,178. I happen to know, as a matter of fact, that one lost a good deal of money there. That is the reason I asked you the question?—Well, that I cannot tell. One is a surveyor of highways in the Caerleon district, and no doubt will come before you. He was one.

35,179. You do not suppose that could be done now in the present depressed state of agriculture?—What, that money could be made?

35,180. Yes, that money could be made?—I do. I know one or two farmers that are doing well.

35,181. Even as things are now?—Yes, even as things are now. But then I wish to state that they have been obliged to adopt a different course of procedure. Of course they have their farms, but they have certain ways of their stock being reared and distributed.

35,182. Does that form of procedure involve more capital than the ordinary farmer would have at his command?—I am hardly prepared to state that. I know that they buy in and sell out a great deal faster than the old farmer did. The old farmer bred and sold.

35,183. You would consider, I suppose, the fact of making a farm pay now is exceptional rather than the rule?—I say that the farmer, to make his farm pay, must alter his general commercial procedure

35,184. Let me pursue this with one further question: you think, then, if those alterations were made and proper intelligence brought to bear upon the farms, that even with the present depressed state there would be a decent return to the tenant farmer?—I should hardly state what the profits are, but I do not think there would be that very great loss that farmers who persist in the old style of procedure no doubt feel.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,185. You say that whereas the farmers used to take their produce to market on horseback they now have a horse and cart to take it?—No, a horse and what is called a trap. I wish to state that it is a trap, because you cannot haul any produce in a trap.

35,186. You mean a dog cart?—Yes, a dog cart.

35,187. Do you find fault with the farmer for that?—I do not at all, if he can make it pay, but I find fault with him if he has a horse and trap and drives into market every Saturday and does not pay his rent.

35,188. With what object did you make the statement?—That the living of the farmer now-a-days is much more expensive than it used to be. A large farm of 200 or 300 acres may be able to support a horse and trap, because in a large farm the trap-horse might be made useful to sow seed or to do many things, but on a small farm of say 70 to 100 acres my own idea is that a trap and trap-horse is a very expensive thing to keep.

35,189. You mean a bit of a luxury?—Exactly.

35,190. You do not think the farmers should have any luxury?—I would have a farmer live as well as he could, but still I think with a farm of from 70 to 100 acres that a trap and a trap-horse, we may call it a carriage, is rather a luxury.

35,191. You say that it is a hardship on the landlord that he cannot make a claim only as a set-off against a tenant's claim?—I think so.

35,192. But he has his remedy; if a farm is worked out he can turn his tenant off?—No; I mean where the tenant is leaving. Where the tenant is leaving, it is a well-known expression in these parts that he prepares to leave. I dare-say you can understand what that means.

35,193. Well, you see it takes two or three years to prepare?—He can do very well in one year.

35,194. You say that a Michaelmas taking is the best time of the year, Mr. Cooke?—I do think so myself.

35,195. Of course you have had a good deal of experience, and I should think that your opinion would be of value on a point of this kind. Would you go so far as to suggest that the tenancy should, by law, terminate at Michaelmas?—I can only answer that by a very general remark, and that is that the less we have of legislation the better. We eat, we drink, and we breathe with legislation; the only thing that we have not got is to sleep with legislation.

Mr. Richard Jones.

We have that in certain cases, too.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,196. Do farmers change their tenancies frequently?—Not except they are either too weak or they turn out bad farmers. I think I read out that we have farmers on our estate for 40, 30, 20, 10, and 8 years.

35,197. Do you not consider the present time a time of great depression for farmers?—No doubt it is, but I must tell you that with regard to the farm that I let only in February I had several applications for it. I might really have increased the rent, but I did not do so because I had a good man.

35,198. Applications are plentiful generally in Wales wherever we have been?—Is not that a sign that people are anxious to go on farming?

35,199. Well, we have not found it so as a rule. We have found that the Welsh people are determined to cling to their holdings?—I have several Welshmen renting under me. On my own estate I have three Welshmen, and another Welshman is in a farm that was let only two years ago, and highly respectable people they are.

35,200. You have just mentioned that you have some experience of the farmers in England, too?—No; I do not know England.

35,201. You do not know whether they are in the habit of riding with their carriage and pair into town or into market?—No, indeed I do not.

35,202. You have heard of it, I suppose?—I know that there are large farms in England of 1,000 to 2,000 acres, where, of course, a large capital is at stake, and where they can afford to have proper agents to look after the farms when they are taking their pleasure—hunting or otherwise.

35,203. May I ask you, have you ever farmed yourself?—I have not.

Lord Kenyon.

35,204. I have some questions to put to you by Mr. Vincent: "Is not your position in re- "lation to the Cefn Llech case simply that the "outgoing tenant took bad advice, and suffered "accordingly?"—It is so, distinctly.

35,205. "Secondly. In your experience as a "lawyer, when bad advice was given by other "lawyers (I do not suggest you ever gave bad "advice), is not that the invariable rule of life, "viz., that those who have taken bad advice "must suffer?"—I must answer you first of all that I was going to say I am sorry to say that I have often been taken for a lawyer, but I am not a lawyer. There is no doubt that those who do take bad advice do suffer, and no one was more sorry that David Morgan was the sufferer than Mr. Nicholl, and the relations between them were such that after it was all over, and

David Morgan had lost all he had, I believe, he wrote to Mr. Nicholl for a subscription. I have that letter. I do not know that I have it with me now.

35,206. It is not necessary to produce it. "Thirdly. Can you give us a rough estimate of "the amount the tenant lost by following Mr. "Parry's advice?"—No, I cannot.

35,207. You say he lost all he had?—That was for other things, I believe.

Mr. Grove.

35,208. Was it Mr. Parry's advice?—It was so, but I do not mean to say that he lost all he had. We believed that from other circumstances (I do not know what it was) his money went, and after he threw up the action he left the neighbourhood, and did not leave any address. We did not know what the cause of it was. He did write to Mr. Nicholl asking him to send him a sum of money, but Mr. Nicholl was so annoyed at his being put to so much expense that I do not think he sent him anything.

35,209. "Fourth. Is it not the case frequently "that under similar conditions one farmer will "thrive where another is ruined?"—I think so.

35,210. Mr. Vincent also asks you, "Will you "state your objections to a Land Court." I think you have done that already?—Yes.

35,211. Then he asks: "Would you spend "money on improvements if any scheme of "compulsory settlement of rent were estab- "lished?"—No, certainly not, and more than that, if there was a Land Court, of course the tenant would get all he could out of the landlord, and the landlord would have his rent paid on the day of the rent audit, whereas my experience is that if a man comes to the rent audit with 10*l.* or 20*l.* and says, "I have been unable to sell my "stock, there is a fair in a fortnight or three "weeks," we have always given him time.

35,212. Mr. Vincent says: "If the chairman's "suggestion, namely, that the landlord should "be compelled to draw the attention of the "tenant to the necessity of giving notice were "adopted, do you not think that it would be "felt to be a difficulty in the case of small "estates. On large estates of course it would "be quite simple?"—Yes, I think so, because small estates are sometimes managed by the owners, and they might forget it. In the case of large estates, of course they have a staff that would follow it out.

35,213. My suggestion, of course, was very crude (I had not thought it out much), that I would put it in the agreements?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 36,198.

Mr. R. Stratton called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

35,214. You reside at Dyffryn Farm, near Newport?—Yes, my Lord.

35,215. Are you prepared with any statement?—I have no written statement, but I can make a general statement if you wish.

35,216. Yes, if you will, kindly give us your opinion upon things in general?—I come here, my Lord, as a representative of the tenant farmer class of Monmouthshire, of whom, I think, you have had only a very few before you at your recent sittings.

35,217. Quite true?—I do not know what conclusion you would draw from that, but I think, speaking for the tenant farmers, that I may say that it simply means that they have no grievances to complain of against their landlords, and they have no suggestions to make with regard to the general improvement of their condition; certainly not any suggestions which are calculated to do any injury towards their landlords, with whom the feeling is of an extremely cordial character. A resolution was passed, I believe, at the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture sometime ago to offer the Commission any assistance they could with regard to the Commissioners' Inquiry, and at the same time a resolution was passed to the effect that anything in the nature of a Land Court was, in the opinion of the Chamber, not desirable. I have not the words of the resolution here, but my recollection leads me to think that that was almost exactly what occurred. Now, with regard to that particular point of a Land Court, which seems to be somewhat dwelt upon, I notice, in questions emanating from the Commission, I think I may venture to say that in Monmouthshire 99 out of every 100 tenant farmers would set their faces dead against anything of the kind. I think the objections to a Land Court are numerous and very serious. In the first place, I take it that a Land Court means a court for the arrangement of rents, to which any tenant could appeal, and therefore it means that a tenant has an absolute and indefeasible right to perpetuity of his tenure. That I understand to be the meaning of the Land Court as put forward by certain of the Welsh advocates of that scheme. I think, although I am a tenant farmer, that such a contention is utterly baseless. I do not think that the tenant farmers have any right whatever to make such a claim as that. In the second place, I think that the effect of it would be that the landlord would be a mere rent-charger; he would cease to take much interest in his tenants or his property, and the effect would be that landlords would not live as much upon their land as they do now, and I think anything that would tend to absenteeism would be a very great misfortune for the country. Then I cannot see any kind of necessity for such a court, because I think there ought to be no difficulty in arriving at a rent on the ordinary commercial principle of buying and selling, of supply and demand, which I contend as a rule must rule the scale of rents. Then again with regard to the settlement of disputes, it seems to me quite as feasible for two gentlemen arbitrators to come together and agree and fix upon a third arbitrator as it would be for a court to settle such a claim. Again, it appears to me that the constitution of this court would in all probability be considerably tainted with politics. That I think would be a most objectionable state of affairs. Then, how can a court of this kind be thoroughly conversant with the value of land? You may have two pieces of land one on each side of a road; one in good condition, being land which has been farmed possibly highly for many years, and the other in bad condition, which has been badly farmed for a number of years; they both come into the market at the same time; they are geologically and to the eye of a Land Court probably exactly the same in quality; yet it would pay a farmer better to pay 30*s.* an acre rent for one, for some years at all events, than it would to have the other at half or a quarter that rent. It seems to me, that the landlord and the farmer who is about to take the land are far more likely to arrive at the value of that land than any Land Court could possibly be, and I see no necessity whatever for any institution of that kind, and I think such an institution would be full of objections and fraught with the greatest possible disaster to the present condition of life in rural districts. Of course, what we farmers want to know at the present time from the Commission is, how we are to come out of these depressed times in a better condition than we are at present. I am afraid very little light has been thrown upon that subject so far by the witnesses; neither have the Commission indicated very much to us how it is to be brought about.

35,218. I think, if I may say so, the Commission get that information from the witnesses, not the witnesses from the Commission?—Still a Commission does indicate occasionally.

35,219. That must come in their report?—Exactly. We are looking very anxiously for that report.

35,220. I do not wish to interrupt you. Please proceed?—I am bound to say that I do not see how a general improvement can take place, unless there is a general improvement in prices. Of course, reductions of rent there must be, but when you come to talk about reductions in rent, and you hear of per-centages of 25 and 30, and this, that, and the other being given, of course it depends upon the basis upon which you start. Do you start from the rents of 1875, or do you start from the rents of 1860, or what not? One landlord is extolled as having given a return of something like perhaps 50 per cent., and another is thought niggardly if he only gives 15 per cent.; but possibly, if the case were gone into, it would be found that the one had raised his rents some 50 per cent. in the year 1875, and the other had not touched his since the year 1860. With regard to my landlords (and I rent under Lord Tredegar, the Duke of Beaufort, and Mr. Charles Lewis, of St. Pierre) they always, I must say, have endeavoured to meet the needs of the times as well as they could, and they have given reductions in rent. The last valuation, I think on Lord Tredegar's estate, was somewhere about the year 1860, and since then there have been reductions of 15 per cent., and last year 20 per cent; 15 per cent. we looked upon as permanent and now I must say I look upon the 20 per cent. as permanent until things take a turn, of which there appears to be no sign whatever at present. As to fixing rents upon the price of stocks, or the price of corn, as the case may be, I think it would be a most complicated and impracticable mode of doing it. One farm has a certain per-centage of arable land; another has a much larger per-centage of grass land. One farm is suitable, probably, for growing market produce, garden produce, potatoes, and that kind of thing, and another is suitable only for growing corn and so on. I do not see that you can possibly, by any scheme whatever, arrange any general scale based upon the price of stock or the price of corn; but undoubtedly the price of those commodities must affect the rents of the land, and I have no doubt that if these prices continue, rents must still yet fall. There is a general feeling among farmers, that land is too heaviiy taxed; it was all very well for land to bear the heavy taxation which was put upon it at a time when it had a monopoly of supplying the food of the people of the country, but since it no longer has that monopoly, we think that taxation should be fair all round. For instance, with regard to the maintenance of the poor in the time of Elizabeth, when the first poor law, I believe, was passed, it was considered the duty of everybody to give according to their ability. We think it a great hardship that the maintenance of the poor should now be levied upon real property only. I for my part think the basis of the income tax would be a very much fairer basis on which to levy such a rate as that. There may be other inequalities with regard to the taxation of land, but I need not go into details about that. However, we do think that the whole question of the taxation of land ought to be thoroughly revised. Dairying, I have no doubt, ought to be more largely prosecuted than it is in this country. Agricultural depression, I think you will find, has been less acute in the dairy districts than perhaps in any part of the country.

35,221. That is so?—And we are paying an enormous amount of money for dairy produce to foreign countries, which might very well be produced at home, and especially well, I think, in Monmouthshire and Wales. With regard to the small holdings which some people look upon as the panacea for agricultural depression, I cannot for the life of me see how small holdings are going to bring about large returns in proportion to the capital invested. It seems to me that a small holding is necessarily more extravagantly managed than a large one, and on the same principle that large businesses are always more economically managed than small ones, so I think the tendency must be rather for larger holdings than small ones. As to ownership of land, which we are told now is to be the great thing, and if people only had land of their own they would farm very much better and a much larger return would be got out of the land for the benefit of the owner and occupier, I cannot agree with that. It seems to me that the ownership of land is about the worst investment possible; 2½ per cent. has to satisfy the landowner at the present time, and bad as farming is, I think we might look to something a little better than 2½ per cent. in the future. I do not know that I have any general suggestions to make that would be of much value to anyone with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act. I should say there seems to be a general feeling that that Act might be somewhat amended, and that the term for giving notice should not be fixed at so hard and fast a line as that indicated in the Act. There appears to be a general feeling (and I fully agree with it) that tenants should be fully compensated for all their unexhausted improvements; that there should be a system of compensation which could be thoroughly relied upon, so that a tenant should not be mulct of anything that he has invested in his holding, through any technical fault of his own, or through any Act. It appears to me that a high scale of compensation for tenants' improvements would be a desirable standard; so that if a tenant chose, he could leave his holding at short notice without being a loser. I think it is a most undesirable thing that a tenant should be a loser, or that he should feel he is a loser by change of tenancy. With regard to the feeling which I believe exists in some of the Welsh districts, that the tenants have an absolute right to maintain and to continue their holdings, again I say, I cannot see that right unless they have, as the Irish have done, reclaimed their land, built their houses, erected the buildings at their own expense, and so on. As to the statement that land is scarce, and that the tenants are numerous, that may be so just in their immediate neighbourhood; but how such a plea as that can be set up in these days of railways, when there are tens of thousands of acres absolutely running waste over in England, just over the way, seems to me to be ridiculous. There are thousands and thousands of acres now on landlords' hands in England, only awaiting tenants, and if those Welsh tenants, who I have no doubt are good industrious fellows, would only introduce themselves to some of the landlords in England, I am sure they would be welcomed there, and possibly with their industry and energy they would do very well. Certain I am, that these very small Welsh farmers work very much harder than the agricultural labourer, and they are in no sense as well off as the agricultural labourer on a well managed farm. I shall be happy to answer any questions, my Lord. I do not know that there is anything more I have to state.

35,222. With regard to the notice under the Act, in what way would you amend that. I suppose you would consider that some notice should be given to the landlord, in order that he might prepare a counterclaim, if necessary?—I was talking to a legal friend of mine yesterday about this matter, and he said that he thought that the notice should be permissible till a month after the termination of the tenancy. I really do not know exactly what the law is as it stands now.

35,223. The law is this, that a tenant farmer claiming compensation under this Act shall, two months at the least before the termination of the tenancy, give notice in writing to the landlord of his intention to make such claim?—Yes.

35,224. "Where a tenant gives such notice, the landlord may, before the determination of the tenancy, or within 14 days thereafter, give a counter-notice in writing to the tenant of his intention to make a claim in respect of any waste, or any breach of any covenant or other agreement. Every such notice or counter-notice shall state, so far as reasonably may be, the particulars and amount of the intended claim?"—I think that might be somewhat extended, certainly, my Lord.

35,225. It struck me that there should be some notice, and that if the tenant's attention were drawn to that fact that he must give notice, that would be sufficient?—Yes; but, of course, a tenant ought to give notice under the Agricultural Holdings Act, and he ought to have sense enough to know that certain rules have to be adhered to. But I think, perhaps, if you gave him a little more time and a little more margin, that would be sufficient. You must remember that, in changing tenancy, the outgoing tenant almost invariably goes to a valuer, and it is the valuer's duty to advise him, and he does advise him on all those points.

35,226. Yes. Of course one is very sorry that by any technicality a man should lose what he is fairly entitled to?—Yes. Again, I may say that, with regard to notice of improvement under the Agricultural Holdings Act, I think that if the tenant gave notice to his landlord that he proposed to carry out certain improvements, and if the landlord, within a certain specified time, raised no objection to that proposition, that it should hold good that notice had been given, and that the tenant should be able to claim.

35,227. That would constitute consent?—Yes.

35,228. Do you think there is anything under the Act for which a tenant might receive compensation which is not included. I know in some parts of Glamorganshire they wished us to add certain things?—Well, there is one point, namely, that there is no compensation, I think, for corn grown upon the farm. The objection to that was that it was open to fraud, and that unless vouchers could be shown for everything that had been bought and consumed upon the place, the farmer would be tempted to commit frauds to a very large extent which could not be detected. No doubt there is something in that; but, at the same time, I think it is a very great hardship that a farmer should not be compensated for the produce on his own farm which is consumed on the holding. I think he ought to be compensated for it.

35,229. Then with regard to that schedule issued by the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture that is widely used, I take it?—I think so, my Lord. I understand the principle of that scale is very largely adopted.

35,230. Were you instrumental in drawing that up, to a certain extent?—Yes; in fact, I did draw it up. But it was submitted to tenants, landowners, and land agents, and thoroughly discussed, and it has been accepted as a fair basis of settlement, I think.

35,231. I daresay, by having such a good scale, the Agricultural Holdings Act has not been often used?—Exactly. I think the Agricultural Holdings Act has not been, perhaps, very largely adopted in its entirety; but in principle a good many of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act have been adopted.

35,232. Then I notice (it was brought to our notice yesterday) the Monmouthshire County Council passed a resolution desiring a Land Bill containing a Land Court, and various other things. You think that is not the wish of the farmers?—No, I am certain it is not.

35,233. Because you say that the Chamber of Agriculture passed a resolution totally different?—Yes, that is my recollection.

Mr. Grove.

35,234. As to the question of a Land Court, to go back for a moment. If the landlord and tenant first tried to agree, and did agree, and arrive at a certain rent, then they need not go to a Land Court. If there was a difference between the two, and they were both wishful to arrive at a fair rent, and an equitable rent as between the two, would not that take away some of the objections to a Land Court?—But what would be the use of a Land Court if they did agree. If the agreement were already completed, where would be the advantage of a Land Court?

35,235. In this way, that there are different sorts of landlords. In Anglesea, a gentleman there, a very intelligent gentleman too, came before us, and he divided them into two classes. He said there were landlords A and landlords B; and he gave such a flourishing account of the landlords A that the Commissioners were unanimous in saying that those landlords were A 1. We put an extra figure to it. Still, he did divide the landlords into two classes, and I think it must be present to your mind that there are different classes of landlords, even in Monmouthshire?—Quite so.

35,236. Would you not let the good landlord and the tenant agree, and not go to the Land Court, and have the Land Court so that the tenant who is forced to go to it might go to it as a court of appeal?—My point is that if the landlord and the tenant cannot agree, they had very much better part; and that if their agreement is to be settled by an outside body altogether, in which neither has, so to speak, any interest, the consequence will probably be strained associations all the time that this tenant is in the farm, and it would be very much better that they should part.

35,237. Of course, one can see that position exactly. You think that it may do more harm than good putting them before the court?—I do.

35,238. I suppose you agree with a good deal of the evidence that we have had as to the extreme lowness of stock and of farm produce at the present time?—It is lamentable.

35,239. You have spoken as to abatements and reductions in rent. As to butter making, do you think the county council—by the way, you are on the technical instruction committee yourself, I think?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

35,240. Do you think the county council's attempts have been fully and properly appreciated in the county?—I do not think they are as fully appreciated perhaps as they might have been, but I have not the slightest doubt that it is gaining in popularity and is doing good. I think the investment is a good one.

35,241. Do you that more fruit could be grown profitably in the county?—I should say so.

35,242. Do you think as a rule, the landlords would be prepared to do a fair proportion towards that?—I have no doubt.

35,243. For instance, would they find the trees, do you think?—I should think so.

35,244. Do you think they would also protect them for many years?—They might, but I think a tenant would hardly call upon the landlord to do that. I think if the landlord gives the trees he would expect the tenant to protect them.

35,245. And to find all the labour?—Yes, that is not much.

35,246. You think that would be a fair division?—Yes, I do.

35,247. What is your view about butter factories so as to get more uniformity. For instance, I think we pay something like five millions a year to Denmark for butters into this country alone, and that in Denmark they have a thousand butter factories for a population of two millions, or two or three millions at any rate. Do you think something in that direction would be valuable for this county?—Not for this county, because this is a thickly populated county, and it would be more economical, I think, for the farmers to make their butter and take it directly to the consumer, either in the towns or in these colliery districts where there is always a good demand for that kind of thing; but further away, for instance, down in Pembrokeshire and the big agricultural districts, I think it is quite likely that that kind of thing would be a success.

35,248. So that you would divide the rural and urban districts into two parts for considerations of that sort?—Yes.

35,249. You speak of the vacant farms where farmers might go from this part and take farms at very low rents in other parts of England?—Yes.

35,250. Would those farms be suitable in the present depressed state of agriculture. I mean they are generally heavy land and corn farms?—Well, they would have to be laid down probably to grass, but I do not think there is difficulty in getting the land to take fairly well to grass, provided the grass is treated properly after it is laid down. That is a question of farming, which is rather a big one to discuss. Of course, there are some lands that take grass very much better than others, but if land is pretty well done after the grass has been planted I do not know the land that will not take the grass.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,251. I understood you to say that your opinion was very strongly that rent must ultimately be regulated by supply and demand, like other prices?—Yes.

35,252. At the same time, I suppose we must all admit that the rent of well-managed estates is below the competition rent?—Below competition?

35,253. Yes; that is to say, that there is such a competition for farms that they are not let to the highest bidder?—Practically no. It is not a rack rent. The landlord does not take the highest possible rent that he can get, certainly not.

35,254. Then that difference is a sort of gauge of the extent of what we call the land hunger?—Yes.

35,255. You will admit that there was such a thing as land hunger?—Yes, there was such a thing undoubtedly, but not now.

35,256. What I wanted to get at is what this land hunger really is. Is it that people are so ignorant that they compete for farms, and would be willing to give more than, if they were intelligent, the law of supply and demand would fix the rent at?—I think there is something in that suggestion; at the same time, there is the love of home, and the reluctance to go away from the neighbourhood in which they have been reared, and so on. It seems a very absurd idea in these days of railways, and so on, but I have no doubt that it does exist to a very considerable extent now. I was surprised to hear a farmer tell me this the other day. I saw him going from Newport on towards Chepstow, and I said: "I presume you are going up to Cirencester fair." He did not seem to know where Cirencester was. He said: "I have "never been on this line beyond Newport "before," and he lived within 12 miles of Newport. The same thing occurs, I have no doubt, to a very considerable extent. I have been astonished to find how little farmers go afield, and there are very many farmers in Monmouthshire who have never gone half a dozen times 15 miles from their own homes.

35,257. So you think if there was more intelligence there would be less land hunger?—Certainly, I think so.

35,258. So that the landlord really has to protect himself from this land hunger. He has to look at the fact of what the man can reasonably be supposed to give as a good tenant; and the lowness of the rent below the competition rent or the rack rent really is the measure of what he considers the difference between the rent the farm would pay at and the extravagant rent which land hunger would demand?—Yes, that would be so. At the same time, a landlord, of course, considers what kind of a tenant he has got, whether he has got a man who is going to do his land thoroughly well, or whether he has got a tenant who is going to beggar the land, and not keep the land up to the mark. That, of course, is a very important point of consideration.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

35,259. So that even going by the laws of supply and demand, the landlord himself is induced not to make the rent too high?—Certainly.

35,260. Then you spoke also upon the question of peasant proprietorship?—Yes.

35,261. If we were to go back 20 or 30 years, and if by land legislation we had turned our tenant farmers into peasant proprietors, would not the depression in agriculture that we have passed through since have been much more severely felt by them as peasant proprietors than it has been now, when the loss has been shared by landlord and tenant?—I have no doubt about it.

35,262. Are you aware at all of the condition of peasant proprietors in France?—I have read something about it, and I think I may say that I know a little about it.

35,263. Have you ever come across this statement—a statement which was made by Lord Salisbury, who has lived a good deal in France himself,—that under the influence of this depression in agriculture, the little peasant proprietors are actually in some cases putting their holdings together, and letting them to a large tenant?—In France?

35,264. In France?—Yes, I have seen that.

35,265. Is not that an indication that large farming with capital in these times of depression, as a mere matter of commercial speculation, pays better than small holdings?—Certainly.

35,266. Even with the advantages of ownership?—Certainly, and I would point out that the conditions of small ownership in France are totally different to those in England. In France you have a very different climate; they grow and flourish principally upon the fruit of the vine, and not only so, but they have a very strong protective tariff, I think now something like 8*s.* or 10*s.* a quarter, which puts them in a very different position to that of the peasant proprietors in this country.

35,267. As a rule they are still holding under the old open field system of farming?—In France?

35,268. In France, in the corn districts?—I believe so, yes.

35,269. Do you think that, looking at it as a practical matter in mountain farming, small proprietors by some sort of co-operative system, for instance, in sheep farming, might throw their sheep together into one fold, and having one common shepherd might still be able to counteract the difficulties under which they now labour in the larger farmers getting all the sheep runs for their sheep?—You are now speaking of mountain runs?

35,270. Yes?—Well, I can hardly answer that question, but it seems to me that the arrangement by which a number of proprietors or farmers around a hill have each the right to run a certain number of sheep on the hill, or, as we said just now, where the larger farmer practically swamps the small one, is a very objectionable system indeed, and requires to be altered. I should say the small man has a very poor chance indeed, and where one hill is occupied by a dozen flocks there can be no success in farming on that hill. They are dogged and disturbed perpetually, which, of course, means destruction to the sheep.

35,271. Suppose we had in England the same thing that we have in the little Act which was passed for Scotland. I will state what it is. It gives power to, say, a village, to make arrangements which, if they are reasonable, have the authority of law for stinting the common?—I do not quite understand what you mean by stinting the common.

35,272. That is to say, a common that is unstinted, as I take it, is a common on which there is no limit to the amount of sheep that any person may put upon it. If by agreement amongst the householders in a village you stinted the common, and decided what proportion of sheep each person might put on, there still would remain the physical difficulty, would there not, that the small farmer, say he had the right of putting a dozen sheep upon it, would be under the disadvantage of not being a large enough farmer to have his own shepherd?—Yes, there would.

35,273. Then there comes the question, is not the only way of doing it to put all the sheep together under one herdsman, and have a common herdsman?—Well, that would be a matter of agreement, I think.

35,274. Do you think that that would be a possible thing?—I do not think you could have a law to that effect. If they could not do it by mutual agreement I do not think that any law would make the thing work properly.

35,275. I am not suggesting a law. I was merely suggesting this. It seems to me that the difficulty is in fact a physical one, and what I wanted to ascertain was, whether in your opinion the physical difficulty could be overcome by agreement between the parties in making one common flock?—I should think so.

35,276. That is the universal plan, I take it, in village communities in France, that they have their common shepherd?—I do not see any objection to it if the farmers could agree.

35,277. But do you see any possibility of doing it in any other way?—No, I do not; unless the common were divided and fenced, unless the hills were fenced, which I think would be very much better—apportioned out.

35,278. With regard to the question of three acres and a cow in pastoral districts, would it not be very much better, as has been done in some cases, that a largish field should be set aside in which several people should have the right of putting in their cows, than that an attempt should be made that each person should have his own little fenced off portion?—No.

35,279. You think not?—No. I think the small field would be very much preferred by the tenant. There is a disturbance of all the cows when you come to milking. One neighbour would curse the other for disturbing his cows, and all that kind of thing, and there would be a perpetual feud. If you had your three little paddocks I think it would be very nice and very desirable that the labourers should have them if possible. The more people you can get on the land in that way the better.

Mr. Seebohm.

Thank you. Your opinion is very valuable, and I am obliged to you.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,280. I suppose you admit that prices have something to do with the value of a holding, do you not?—I have stated so distinctly, I think. They have almost everything to do with it.

35,281. Your answer would almost imply the contrary. You said it would be very difficult to make price a basis for the adjustment of rents?—I do say that. It regulates, it must regulate the price of rent; but I say you cannot concoct a scale from the prices.

35,282. I do not suggest a scale?—I alluded to a scale.

35,283. Of course I do not suggest a scale. I merely say that some regard should be had to the price of stock and produce in the adjustment of rents?—It must be so.

35,284. That is what I have been contending for when questioning Mr. Cooke?—In the general way, of course, that must be so. At the same time there are some farms which produce chiefly vegetables or potatoes, or that kind of thing, which would not be affected, of course, by the price of stock and cereals.

35,285. You have stated that you did not agree with the proposal of security of tenure for the tenant?—Perpetuity of tenure.

35,286. Yes, perpetuity of tenure. You will admit this, that on large and well-managed estates, as a rule, the son takes the place of the father, does he not?—Yes.

35,287. There is a continuity of tenure in the family?—Yes.

32,288. Practically it would be no innovation if there was legal force put to the custom?—I differ from you there entirely. I think that is a totally different thing.

35,289. Practically, of course, I mean?—I think the cases are entirely different. If you come to make it absolutely a legal right on the part of the tenant, because a landlord has seen fit to continue the family in occupation of the farm from generation to generation, if that is any reason for making it legal that the tenant should have an absolute right generally and universally to such a privilege, I differ from you entirely.

35,290. You will admit, then, that insecurity of tenure is a block to good husbandry?—That depends upon the scale of compensation. If you have an ample scale of compensation for unexhausted improvements it is no bar to good husbandry whatever.

35,291. Of course there is a good deal of force in that, I allow. Now with respect to income tax as a basis; for local rates would you exempt people who do not pay income tax from paying anything towards the maintenance of the poor?—I would make the poor rate on the basis of the income tax. For instance, we will take the case of a doctor who lives in a house, we will say, of 60*l.* a year, and whose income is, perhaps, 1,000*l.* a a year. He pays to the poor rate on 60*l.* a year. I, we will say, for the sake of argument, on one farm pay—well, it would take a great many acres now to make 1,000*l.* a year from it, but whether I make anything, or whether I do not, assuming that I am farming 1,000 acres, I am assessed at 1,000*l.*; that would be somewhere about the case—in my own case it is a question of nearly 2,000*l.* a year that I am paying on in this county—what do I pay in poor rate as compared with the doctor whose income is larger than mine? I am paying 3*s.* in the £ on an assessment of 2,000*l.* a year, that is 300*l.* a year poor rate, and the doctor is paying 3*s.* in the £9 on 60*l.* a year and yet his income is bigger than mine, and he is as capable of paying to the poor as I am.

35,292. How would your proposal work in relation to the labourer?—The labourer pays no poor rate now. What class of labourer do you mean?

35,293. We will say a man receiving 15*s.* or 20*s.* a week?—Well, that is a matter of detail. I am speaking now, of course, generally. I say that the assessment for poor rate ought not to be levied entirely upon real property—houses and land. When I say the income tax generally as a basis, I am not sure one should not go somewhat beyond that.

35,294. Of course you will admit this, that there is a difficulty in localising the income tax. Supposing that a man has his income from Consols, or shares in coal mines, for instance. We will say that he lives here, and that he has shares in Glamorganshire. Where is his income to pay towards the maintenance of the poor. Is it to be here or in Glamorganshire?—Probably there would be difficulties, but I contend that those difficulties would easily be got over, and if the principle is right the difficulties would vanish. The difficulties of expending the money I think really would be greater than that of collecting—getting it done economically, I mean.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,295. How would you suggest where a tenant has farmed well upon his farm, and laid out a lot of money upon it, and with the depressed times he finds that, after all, he cannot make it do, and he goes to his landlord, and applies for a reduction of rent, and cannot get it, what do you suggest for that man to do?—Well, I should recommend him to try and get some cheaper land somewhere else.

35,296. And leave all his improvements and his good farming?—No, I do not think it would be necessary to leave all his improvements behind. I think there ought to be a liberal scale of compensation for his unexhausted improvements.

35,297. But at present we have not got that, have we?—That depends upon the agreement, the terms under which he is renting.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

35,298. I am sorry to say we find a great many agreements where a tenant cannot get anything whatever for his improvements. He has nothing to do but to turn out, and leave everything behind him?—Well, in that case I should take a little time, and mow once or twice, I think, before going out.

35,299. You consider that there have been less of fluctuations in dairy farming than in any other ways of farming of late years?—Yes.

35,300. You recommend that wherever it is possible, and I should think that in this district it would be very much so, they should adopt dairying as their chief mode of farming?—I think so.

35,301. Do you consider in these depressed times that farmers in Wales have had their 2½ per cent. for the capital they have on their farms?—The tenants?

35,302. Yes?—Well, of course in a season like the last it is more than 2½ per cent. the other way a great deal, but if you take the last 10 years they have done fairly well, they have made a living. There is one point, if I might be allowed to mention now, that I forgot. Mr. Cooke hinted rather strongly, I thought, that the expenditure of farmers was very much larger personally than it was formerly. That may be, but I will undertake to say that farmers spend less on their persons, and what we may call personal and household expenditure, than any other class of tradespeople who are employing the same amount of capital that they do.

35,303. I am very pleased to hear you say so. Do you consider that the present depression is as great as in 1879?—Last year I think was the worst year I have ever had as a farmer. It is true there is this difference, in 1879 we rotted all our sheep, or nearly all of them, and this last year we have not done that, but the sheep were of very little value at the end of the season, though they were not rotted.

35,304. And the depression generally has been much greater now barring the loss of stock?—You mean in Wales?

35,305. Yes?—I think so, probably.

35,306. One of the Commissioners mentioned just now the subject of keeping cows. In Scotland I find that the labourers' cows are all kept together. The farmer keeps all the cows and finds them all food, turns them altogether into the same shed to milk, do you not think something similar to that would be better in this country?—Of course that could be done.

35,307. How do you find the labourers as a rule, do you find them as competent as when you commenced farming?—I am rather in a fortunate position. More so, I think, than the majority of farmers. I have a very good supply of cottages, and I have a very excellent lot of labourers. I may say that in my opinion labourers are as well off as any labouring men of the community. I find now that if I want a labouring man and a skilled labouring man—a milker—if I put an advertisement in the "Western Mail," and I get a large number of applicants, principally from these hill districts, showing clearly that when all things are considered they are better off on my farm at my wages than they are up here. I have two cases this year. One very good man went away from a neighbour of mine down to the town of Cardiff, where he was going to get 22*s.* or 23*s.* a week, and thought he was going to become a very rich man. I warned him at the time: "You will not be so well off as you "are now, having 15*s.* a week with a cottage "and a good garden." In less than a twelvemonth I had a letter from him asking me if I could take him on. I did, and he is with me now.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

35,308. What wages did you say?—For milkers, 15*s.* a week and a house and garden free. He works seven days a week; he has to milk on Sundays.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,309. Anything more in harvest time?—Yes, in harvest time I give 1*l.* over for the hay harvest, and 1*l.* over for the corn harvest, that is instead of beer.

35,310. Do you not think farmers make a mistake in allowing good labourers to go into the works, and employing some older and inferior men very often?—Yes, no doubt that is so, but farmers are driven to such straits now that they take what they think is cheapest in the market, but it is not necessarily cheaper. I think it is a very serious thing for the country that there is such a falling off in the number of agricultural labourers, and I cannot help thinking that we are very nearly face to face with a serious national question, in the excess of surplus labour in the towns and manufacturing districts. What the consequence would be if we had a general depression in trade I tremble to think, for many hundreds of thousands in case of war or anything of that sort would be thrown out of employment, and there is no occupation on the land for them to go back to. It is a most serious national misfortune that these millions of acres of land are going out of cultivation. Here are at least three million acres of land that have been laid down to miserable poor grass during the last few years. Those three millions of acres ought to have expended on them at least 30*s.* an acre, that amounts to 4½ millions sterling, divide 4½ millions by some 35*l.* a year, and that will give you the number of agricultural labourers that would be required if this land were brought into profitable cultivation. From a national point of view it seems to me to be the maddest possible condition of things that we should be sending all our money abroad for things which we could produce at home, when our own people are really wanting employment upon the land, and one of these fine days we shall be suddenly wanting this food, and not able to produce it or procure it in the required time.

Mr. Griffiths.

I am very sorry we have not more time to deal with your very interesting evidence.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,311. What is the character of your farming?—In Monmouthshire, do you mean?

35,312. Yes, your farming in particular?—I occupy nearly 800 acres at home, about three-fourths of that is grass. I have laid down about 300 acres of it myself. Some 250 acres are somewhat elevated ground, high and dry, and good for sheep, poorish land, but still kindly enough for sheep. Nearly all of that I have laid down, and I keep sheep principally upon it. I have some alluvial land, loam on a gravel, near to my house, of which I plough about 150 to 200 acres. The rest is grass, all that is good grass land, a good alluvial soil on a gravel. Then again, I have about 150 acres of what we call moor land, which means on the level; it is an alluvial deposit, and good land, but rather inclined to be wet. The same remarks apply to another farm of 700 acres near Chepstow, much about the same class of land as mine at home. Then I have a third farm at Usk, which I rent under the Duke of Beaufort, which is rather an interesting case, by the way. It is called a model farm. I think you heard something about it the other day. 11,000*l.*, I was told, was spent upon this farm by the landlord some 40 years ago in permanent improvements, drainage, and so on. It is 416 acres. I pay 150*l.* a year for it, and it is the worst and dearest farm I have got.

Lord Kenyon.

35,313. Is it very unkind?—Very miserable; cold, wet, wretched stuff.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,314. There is one point on which, I think, we have perhaps misunderstood you with reference to the incidence of the poor rate. You did not mean to imply that it would be right to put the same amount of taxation, whether for the poor rate or any other rate, upon the income of the doctor, who might die to-morrow, and the income of land, which goes on for ever, did you. It is merely to prevent misrepresentation that I ask you the question?—I understand your question to be: Would you free the land entirely of the poor rate?

35,315. No. You made a comparison between income from land and income from the professions. I think we should all of us agree that it would be unfair as a general principle of taxation, to tax the income which was entirely dependent upon a man's health to the same extent as you would tax the income from real property?—But in many cases there is no income whatever from land now. I do not mean to say that that is a general case; but the land has depreciated so very, very seriously, that I think it is only fair that there should be a general readjustment of taxation.

35,316. That I quite admit?—Because the conditions are entirely altered. When land had the monopoly of supplying the food of the country, it could well afford to bear extra taxation. It was only right and fair that it should bear extra taxation. I cannot help thinking that it would be very much wiser now to give it something like that same monopoly, and even increase its taxation if it would bear it.

Lord Kenyon.

We are much obliged to you, Mr. Stratton, for your extremely interesting evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Moses Walters called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

35,317. Are you a tenant farmer yourself?—No, I am not. I come here to represent the tenant farmers of the district.

35,318. At their request?—At their request.

35,319. You are a county councillor?—Yes, I am a county councillor; and these tenant farmers mostly reside within the district that I represent.

35,320. Which district is that?—The Pontllanfraith district, taking in the western portion of Mynyddyslwyn and portions of the parishes of Bedwas and Bedwellty. I wish to state that the nature of the land in this particular district, as we see, is hilly, and not only that, but there are minerals underneath it, and coal is worked near the surface. The land consequently suffers thereby, and not only that. By the work of nature, in scouring there is very little thickness of soil. Besides, as in all mineral districts, the rocks come near the surface, so that really we have comparatively poor soil. It is found that it does not pay to raise corn, and the land is mostly laid down as grass; that the land is really deteriorating very much in this hilly district, because of not being able to do otherwise with it. My Lord and Commissioners, when land is laid out in grass, it has been mentioned here that it takes seven years, but the experience of the farmers in this district is that it does not take more than three years for that grass land to deteriorate very, very much. There is a kind of greyish moss that grows at the root of the grass that hinders it, besides other things that grow with it, and makes the land become in a very short time in rather a desolate and deteriorating condition. Then as to rents, the farmers of the district consider that their rents are from 30 per cent. to 50 per cent. too high to meet the depressing times. There are some lands connected with the Llanarth estate (Mr. Herbert's), not far away; and I must mention here, my Lord, that I am in a peculiar strait. Although I am representing these farmers before you this morning, I am not permitted to give specific statements on their behalf, although they are in my possession, because they have told me distinctly—a number of them—that I must not use their names, and consequently, in being forbidden to use their names, I am unable to particularise facts that are before me. I can tell you that they suffer in these parts very much. With respect to some, I am very glad to say that I am enabled to put these particulars before the Commissioners.

35,321. Give us those which you can?—One farm down below here is let at 10*s.* an acre, while the adjoining farmhouse—one that I am permitted to mention called Old Gelli—is paying 1*l.* an acre—60 acres paying 60*l.* rental.

35,322. On whose property is that?—That is on the Llanarth estate, Mr. Herbert's.

35,323. Whose is the property paying 10*s.*?—The same landlord, the same estate, and that is what I wish to draw attention to.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,324. Have they both farmhouses upon them?—Both farmhouses, adjoining land, and the same nature of soil pertaining to both.

Mr. Grove.

35,325. And you think the quality of the land is about the same?—About the same they tell me, only there is some rough land attached to the 10*s.* land, which there is not to the other. I ought to mention that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

How much rough land should you say out of the total acreage?

Lord Kenyon.

35,326. Have you the details of the acreage of those places?—Yes, the farm contains 60 acres of rough land. Now the adjoining farms are paying 1*l.* an acre—three farms really. But I am drawing attention to Old Gelli in particular, which I am permitted to do, and the tenant of that farm is now present in this room. It is Old Gelli that has 60 acres of land, and they pay 60*l.* rental.

Mr. Grove.

35,327. And all pretty good land in that case, I suppose?—Well, very poor land.

35,328. But no rough land?—No, no rough land. As I understand it now there are six tenants which have been in this particular farm in the course of the last 18 years. The present tenant has asked for a reduction.

Lord Kenyon.

35,329. How long has the present tenant been there?—Seven years, I think—Yes, he tells me so. He has asked for a reduction of rent, but it has been told him that if he did not like it he had better leave it, so as to give someone else a chance. I might mention in passing that there is considerable land-hunger in this district, and I have not a shadow of doubt but that if he left to-morrow, other tenants would pay the same rents, and be glad to have it, whether it paid them or not in the end. That is the state of things in this particular district. Now this tenant has private property which brings him an income of 4*l.* a month. This is all swept up by the rental. Besides that, he is by occupation a blacksmith, and he tells me that that also goes to pay the rent, and to have a living. He has two sons working on the farm. He is unable to pay them any wages, and they are simply living with him for their food and clothing. I think that will give a birdseye view of what really the farmers in this district do. I may mention, too, that on account of farms not being able to pay, they are compelled to do other things, and more than half of these farmers have to neglect the work of the farms so as to bring in any money that they can, by working in various occupations.

35,330. What size farms are they?—Small farms—they run 96, 58, 56, 55, 70, 60, 68—I should think an average of 60 acres, or 60 to 70 acres. With regard to this particular district, I am asked to mention that all the farmers of the district on this estate (I am speaking of Llanarth) combined with a petition to ask for a reduction in their rents about eight years ago, and having sent their request to Colonel Lyne, the agent, they not even received a reply in any shape or form. I ought to mention, before leaving this Llanarth estate, that they received 10 per cent. reduction, and they received it last year for the first time—that is, 10 per cent. reduction allowed for one year.

35,331. Abatement?—Yes, abatement. There is a little farm called Pencoedcae over by Pentwynmawr, about a mile and a half distant, that has 12 acres, and the late tenant paid 24*l.* for it.

35,332. How many acres?—12 acres, paying 24*l.* There were no reductions, and it is very poor land. There was a case also about two years ago of this landlord collecting the tithe. The late Dr. Lawrence, of Pontypool, was the landlord, and it appears that the tenant sent him a cheque for the tithe, and that cheque happened to be 11*d.* deficient; the cheque was sent back until the 11*d.* was completed, so as to get every farthing of the tithe and of the rent—the 24*l.* for 12 acres of land, and that of an inferior nature.

35,333. On whose property was that?—Dr. Lawrence's, of Pontypool; it belongs to his family.

35,334. Is he a large landowner?—He is dead now.

35,335. Is that a large property?—No, it is only just by itself, I think, in that district, a little property of 12 acres, called Pencoedcae. There is another farm also. I am most anxious that what shall be said will not possibly do an injury, and they are most anxious to simply speak the truth, and let the truth speak for itself, and that they shall not have to suffer hereafter. The landlord is here, and I appeal to him through you, my Lord, in what I shall say in regard to this farm this day, that no consequence shall follow.

35,336. I have already said at several places, and Lord Carrington has also said, that there is an Act by which any witness who is intimidated can bring an action against the intimidator?—That is so, my Lord, and it is understood in that way, but the farmers tell me distinctly that there are other ways of doing an injury to the tenants, notwithstanding the law that is in existence. That is their fear in the matter; they have grave fears in that respect, and that has hindered me from giving their names here to-day.

35,337. I am quite sure those fears must be groundless. We have had many landlords come forward who have said they are only too anxious that their tenants should give their evidence, and whenever it has been mentioned they have stated that, and the Landlords' Property Defence Association of South Wales also wrote a letter to Lord Carrington, in which they said they wished to give the Commission every possible means of ascertaining the truth?—Well, I can only hope that that may be carried out, my Lord.

See 35,433. It is the case of Argoed Fawr, near Argoed, and the landlord is Captain E. D. Williams. I understand the land cost 15*s.* an acre, but the grave complaint here is of the wretched state of the house; it is really dangerous to live in. There is no house in all this district, and there are very poor farm buildings on the Llanarth estate, and those tenants wish me to draw attention to that fact; but there is no comparison in any way with the state this particular farmhouse is in. I ought to state that the landlord and the tenant have been speaking upon the subject of having a new house. He has built an outhouse, and the tenant felt that his poverty was so great that his income was more than swallowed up in paying the present rent, that he could not possibly haul the materials for a new house.

35,338. What is the size of this farm?—84 acres, paying a rental of 65*l.*, and 20 acres of this is rough land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,339. When you say "rough land" what do you mean?—Land that would not be worth 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre, coarse woody land, brushwood.

Lord Kenyon.

35,340. You say that the landlord and tenant have had some conversation about rebuilding the house?—About rebuilding the house.

35,341. What was that conversation?—That I think the landlord was willing to build a new house on the condition that he would haul the material free of charge. The tenant feels that he cannot possibly do so, because of the pressure of the times and the loss that he now sustains in working the farm. He, like others I have mentioned, is compelled to go out and do certain cartage or any work that he can get in the district, to meet the rent. I think he is a little behind at this present time; with his utmost endeavour he is at his wits' ends, like many more in this district, to get the rent paid.

What is felt is that he and the family are suffering grievously with all the wet that we have lately been having; in fact, his wife is suffering very much, and is at this moment suffering great pain from rheumatics, all on account of the state of this particular house. I should like to appeal to you, if one or two of you could go up as far as this house and see it for yourselves. I think it would be a sight worth seeing.

35,342. How far is it?—It is only about a mile and a half up. I should rejoice, and they themselves would be, I am sure, pleased to see you. If you could possibly make a point of going, I shall be very glad. It is indescribable. I have a little power over the English language, but it is really to me beyond description. Then with regard to land taken for building purposes on this particular farm that I am drawing your attention to, there are two acres taken for colliery tips, a quarry, and a new road and over 18 houses that have been built upon it, without any compensation. I did not quite gather what it was for, but there has been 5*l.* allowed in the course of the last 18 years; compensation for something, I know not what, but some allowance. That is the money received, and the only money received. The same might be said of Penllwyn Farm. There is an acre taken for building from that farm without any compensation whatever. I am trustee connected with 12 houses building there at the present time. We have compensated the farmer 5*l.*, but he has not received any compensation from his landlord.

(Adjourned for a short time.)

35,343. Will you continue your statement?—I believe I was on the point that there was no compensation allowed for lands taken for building and other purposes.

35,344. You were saying that two acres had been taken for building without compensation?—Yes, Argoed Fawr Farm, where this strange house exists.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,345. What compensation was given in 18 years?—5*l.* allowed in 18 years. I afterwards thought to ask what it was for, but I forgot it then. I do not know how I overlooked it, but this 5*l.* was allowed for something. That is the only allowance, with the exception of a few truck loads of lime. There are two acres taken from this particular farm, now used as colliery tips and a quarry, and 18 houses that have been built upon it. The same thing is in existence down at Penllwyn Farm, near Tredegar Junction Station; an acre of land has been taken there for building without any compensation by the landlord. As trustee connected with the 12 houses that are built at present on this farm, we have allowed the tenant 5*l.*, but there is nothing, as I understand, come from the landlord.

35,346. What is the rent?—The rent of this farm is 125*l.* for 250 acres, 60 acres of it being rough land.

Mr. Grove.

35,347. That you have given us before?—Yes. Just here I think perhaps I might mention that my late father held Penmaen Farm, across the river, for 25 years, and spent upon it in improvements hundreds and hundreds of pounds, and when he left the farm he did not receive 10 per cent. of the money.

35,348. When did he leave?—He left the farm about three years ago.

35,349. What is the name?—Henry Walters, Penmaen Farm. It is well known to all those in this district that there was no man that put so much out upon a farm, unless one at Gellidywyll, as my father. For years and years he was at it constantly, but he did not receive 10 per cent of the outlay.

35,350. Did he hold it under a lease or as a yearly tenant?—As yearly tenant, and I may say they are all yearly tenants in this district except one; there is a lease of 99 years on that, and the leaseholder has told me that he should be very glad indeed to be out of it.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,351. How many years had he been expending this money?—During the 25 years he has spent, from first to last, 800*l.* to 900*l.*

Mr. Grove.

35,352. And when he left he only got about 10 per cent.?—Less than 10 per cent.

35,353. What amount was it he did have?—Altogether I think it came to about 30*l.*

35,354. This 800*l.* or 900*l.* spent is without adding interest?—Yes.

35,355. In what way was it spent, in permanent improvements, buildings, drainage, or what?—A little draining, but most of it in lime and manure, brought from various places, and soil, even soil, carried by the hundred tons.

35,356. To enrich the land?—To enrich the land, and that soil was mixed with lime, and it went on from year to year. He has been renowned for that in this district.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,357. May I ask whether the rent was raised when he left?—No, not to my knowledge. The fact is that the land has been divided up into three parts, and one of the part owners is in possession of the best of it, so that really one of the landlords is reaping the benefit of the outlay on that farm.

Mr. Grove.

35,358. Will you kindly continue your statement?—I am asked to say that the Llanarth tenants feel the difficulty that they are in, because of the young and inexperienced agents placed over them, the sons of Colonel Lyne. I think you have had the bad state of the farmhouses on the Llanarth estate?

35,359. Yes, you have given us that?—Now, as to the proposed remedies. I have taken considerable pains about the matter, Mr. Chairman, because of a certain little motion that is becoming annual at the Monmouthshire County Council. I am anxious to be unbiassed, therefore I have taken great pains to get from the farmers of the district their ideas, and I find they feel that something is absolutely wanted to change the present state of affairs, and they do not know anything better than to have a Land Court. They feel that in the present monopoly of the land, and because of the hunger for land, it is impossible to go and reason with their landlords, and to get the reductions that they feel they ought to have according to the price of produce and the times. So that their feeling is that we are really wanting a revolution in the land laws, and that this Land Court should come as experienced men between the landlord and the tenant to give them something that they can live upon different to what it is. They are looking forward to having some such court, not to be expensive, as one witness has put it, but they think it is quite possible to have an inexpensive court, that they can take before the court their case and have it this way fairly dealt with. They want also security of tenure. Having fair rents, they want to be in a position to improve the land, and having put their money into it that they or their children, as they follow, shall reap the benefit of their labour and not strangers. As it is now, there is nothing to induce them to put out their money. Unfortunately they have not much left, but when they had it there was nothing to induce them to put it into the land as long as they were yearly tenants, always open to no end of emergencies that could happen. Then, as to compensation for improvements, as in the case of my late father, neither the custom of the parish nor the Agricultural Holdings Act meets the case. What a man labours for he himself ought to reap as near as possible. If a man spends his money upon the land, then surely he should have the fruits of his industry and his capital. They do not see any chance to overcome that difficulty unless there is some radical change for real compensation for improvements, altogether different to that which exists at present. I think that will cover all my points. As to the Ground Game Act, I am happy to say that we are not overburdened with ground game just round about here.

35,360. Your three points are a Land Court, security of tenure, and compensation for improvements?—Yes, and fair rents.

35,361. Then, Mr. Walters, did we gather from you that you think there is a general disinclination of witnesses to come before the Commission?—That is so.

35,362. That, I suppose, you know, as a matter of fact?—I know it from personal contact and conversation with the parties that I represent.

35,363. As to the compensation of 5*l.*, that was given over a term of years for Argoed Fawr. You say there was some lime given also?—There were a few truck-loads of lime.

35,364. What would the value of a truck-load of lime be?—I could not say.

Mr. Grove—continued.

35,365. It would be about 5 tons, I think—at what per ton?—I have no idea of the value of it; but I hear someone say 3*l.* per truck load.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,366. While you are on this lime question, let me ask how often did the landlord allow some trucks of lime?—He did not mention that to me. He simply said he had allowed him several trucks of lime.

35,367. You do not know whether it was done annually or otherwise?—No, I do not.

35,368. You said that the tenants combined on one estate to ask for a reduction of rent?—Yes.

35,369. Did they go to the landlord, or did they send him an appeal?—They had a form of petition.

35,370. Have you that form by you?—No, I have not. I believe there is no copy of it in existence.

35,371. What was the result?—They sent to Colonel Lyne, Newport, and they never heard from him a word in regard to it from that day to this.

35,372. When they went to pay their rent, did not they mention it?—I do not know that. I have already stated that they have given 10 per cent. for one year, and one year only.

35,373. You spoke of Henry Walters' farm, your father's. What was the reason of his leaving there?—He retired—old age.

35,374. Did the landlord give him compensation as regards improvements?—There was a certain amount of standing improvements, a few fields there, and for manure.

35,375. Any crops?—All the crops and all the manure is in the 30*l.*

Mr. Grove.

35,376. And all the compensation?—And all the compensation.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,377. Then he gave nothing, practically?—No.

35,378. You complain, again, that the agents are inexperienced, and very young. What age are they?—Well, the age has not been given to me.

35,379. Have they had no experience in farming in any kind of way?—I do not think they have.

35,380. Have they ever been to an agricultural college for training, do you know?—Well, I do not know that. I might say the late estate agent is not long since deceased, and now there is a brother of his appointed, and, as I understand, without any experience whatever of land.

35,381. Then in the case where a tenant cannot have the necessary reduction of rent, so that he may get a living on the farm, you want some other place to appeal to besides the landlord?—Yes, quite so; a Land Court.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,382. You heard Mr. Stratton's evidence?—Yes.

35,384. I did not catch very well your reply. How do you express it?—Well, according to the Agricultural Holdings Act it is three years of exhaustion, is it not. Then for certain years it is graduated down to nothing.

35,385. Do you know anything about the scale adopted by the Monmouthshire Chamber of Commerce?—No, I do not. All I know is that there was a resolution passed at their last meeting that they should be affiliated to Lord Winchelsea's Association, which seeks protective tariffs, but that association, as I understand it, is a mixture of landlords and tenants; and I claim, Mr. Chairman—and this is the feeling of the farmers—that they are not in a free and independent position to face the landlords; and it is a proof of it in their not even being willing to venture with their evidence and names to come before this Commission, out of fear they dare not. I hold that the farmers are not in a free position to give utterance to the thoughts and feelings within them.

35,386. We, as a Commission, have nothing to do with Lord Winchelsea's Association. What you contend is this, that no liberal scale of compensation is sufficient to meet the necessities of the case at present?—That is my contention.

35,387. I will ask you this question. Do you swear by a Land Court—a Land Court the same as the Land Court in Ireland, for instance—or do you merely declare in favour of the principle of judicial rents—a rent fixed by a disinterested person?—That is it.

35,388. You have no particular scheme?—Nothing whatever.

35,389. That is the principle?—That is the principle, to put the tenant on equal terms with the landlord, and let them decide between the two, it being a fact, according to the land system of the present time, that it does not enable the tenant to be on equal terms to make a bargain. There is no free contract about it.

35,390. Owing to the competition?—Owing to the competition; the land-hunger, and the monopoly that exists in the land owned by only a few landlords comparatively.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,391. Mr. Walters, you say it is caused by a monopoly in land. Do you think it would be one whit better if there had been 10 times as many landlords?—No, if we had landlords such as Lord Tredegar, I do not think these grievances that I have placed before you here to-day would exist, and if he was the landlord for this entire district, I believe it would be a great blessing in that respect.

35,392. So that the monopoly, instead of being a curse, in that respect would be of great benefit to you. What you really fear, is the monopoly being destroyed, and there being a great number of little landowners who cannot deal so properly and so easily with their tenants as Lord Tredegar would do?—I have personal opinions, but I wish to place the representative side of it before you. I have personal opinions with respect to which I should like to answer you, but that would not be in the region of being the representative of these farmers, because we have not gone into that ground; it is only the rough outline. If you asked my personal opinion, I should be pleased to give it, so far as I could.

35,393. Still, you are a witness, and we ask your opinion as to whether if the monopoly was destroyed by free trade, if I may use that expression, you would expect that the tenant farmer would be in a better or in a worse position?—My own opinion is——

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,394. Before Mr. Walters answers that question, if I understood you aright, Mr. Seebohm, it was not a monopoly of landowners but a monopoly of land. You see it makes all the difference?—My own personal opinion is that I should like to see the land nationalised, the land going back to the nation, where it once was, and not belonging to any landlord whatsoever, great or small.

Mr. Grove.

35,395. Do not enlarge on the point, because nationalisation of land expresses fully what you mean?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,396. Would you expect that with nationalisation of land, the tenant would be better off?—I believe he would. I do not think our government would oppress the people as they are evidently oppressed now in this country, if it was so.

35,397. But if there was a great competition for land, and a great number of persons wanted to have a particular farm, how could you avoid in the long run the competition raising the price of the farm?—On the same ground as we think with regard to the Land Court, by statutory power—that they being impartial—national representatives—our parents so to speak—would act justly and honourably to all, not according to the demand, but according to the value of the land that is wanted.

35,398. I should have thought that in that case, with regard to the nation on the one side, and the tenant on the other, what is done must be fair for both, and that it would be very unfair to give a farm to one person at a less price if there were 100 persons willing to give more for it, would it not?—That is a question that arises because of the monopoly of the land. Here is the land; there is so much land, and it cannot go beyond that; we cannot manufacture that. We can manufacture most things, but not land.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

35,399. But the nation would be just as much a monopolist. The land would be in no greater quantity, because it was divided, than before. But we will not pursue that question. The only question I wished to ask you was with regard to these two cases which you mentioned, one on each side of the road, in which you said that one farm was let at about 10*s.* an acre, and the other was let at about 1*l.* an acre, and you thought it was unfair. All I want to do is to ask you whether you do not think that evidence of that kind is of very little value unless you go into particulars and really understand what is the reason of the difference. Now, taking the case of the 60 acres at 60*l.*, I think you stated that the tenant was a man who was a blacksmith?—Yes.

35,400. That is to say he had another trade besides his farming?—Yes.

35,401. He was in possession of a certain amount of property, because he had an income of 48*l.* a year. Now such a man, if he wanted to live simply and in an ordinary house, without anything else but the house, would have to pay something like 20*l.* or 30*l.* a year rent, would he not?—I do not think so in this district.

35,402. Would you say that 20*l.* a year rent was a high rent for him to pay?—With the state of that house at the present moment, I should consider it too much to pay. The house being in a bad state.

35,403. But without our having further information it does not seem to me at all a dear holding for a man who is in another trade, he thus being able to have a house to live in and 60 acres of land for 60*l.* a year?—I beg your pardon. I was speaking of the house alone, and putting the value on the house alone, without the land.

35,404. But it has 60 acres of land in addition to the house?—Yes.

35,405. Perhaps you can give us further information about it which would make it seem to be dear. It does not seem to be dear; here is a man who is a blacksmith, and who has property of his own of 48*l.* a year, and he wants a house to live in; he does not simply take a house without the land, but he says he is willing to take the house and the land for 60*l.* a year. There is no hardship on the face of that, I think?—The hardship comes in here, that with the depression of times that now exists, it is an utter impossibility for that farmer to pay his rent by the working of it. Then the sequence must arise that the means whereof must come from somewhere, and the somewhere is out of his private estate which brings in this 4*l.* every month, besides his daily toil, to meet this rent, and to meet the deficiencies that now exist.

35,406. I cannot see it in that light. It seems to me that if a blacksmith wants a place to live in he does not expect to get his living out of the house that he hires as a residence?—If he as a blacksmith lived, he could live in a comfortable house in this district for 15*s.* a month; he could have a comfortable house at that amount.

35,407. Yes, but then he thinks that he is better off if he takes a house with 60 acres of land and pays 60*l.* a year for it?—True.

35,408. It is not necessary for him to take it unless he likes. He has another trade, and he might live in a 10*l.* house if he liked?—Yes, but having this farm, and like my father in trying to improve it, there is something at stake, and he does not want to lose more than he possibly can help, or else, doubtless, the man would leave.

35,409. All I can say is, I think that unless you know the circumstances of the case a great deal more clearly than you have put them before us, it does not seem to be a very extraordinary case. I take it that in this part of the country, where there are a number of cottages, as one can see, that there are a great many other trades; it is a populous district, and there is competition for places to live in in a comfortable way, and a man who is in trade and who wants to have not only a house, but 60 acres of land around him, would expect to pay a higher rent than the mere farmer under such circumstances, would he not?—My point, or the intention of my point, was this, if you would allow me to explain. I contrast the difference on the same estate, between the same quality of land, with only the road dividing them, and with the difference of double the rent. Then in the face of that, the man that pays 10*s.* per acre rent claims that that is even too dear, and if that is too dear what of the other.

35,410. But in the other case that you stated it is not fair to say that is 10*s.* an acre rent, because by your own showing 60 acres of that was rough, and if you reduce the 250 acres to 190, it is 190 acres at 125*l.* a year. That is a different thing?—Admitted that that is rough land and is not worth more than about 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre.

35,411. So that I do not think it is fair to say that there are two farms, one on each side of the road, one of which is 1*l.* an acre and the other is 10*s.* an acre; it does not convey much to our minds?—Perhaps this will: here is adjoining and surrounding this Argoed Fawr Farm, land that is given at 8*s.* an acre—the same nature of land, the same quality of land, only under a different landlord, and if it is a fair price to give 8*s.*, why give 15*s.* The surrounding land down below, under Lord Tredegar, is 7*s.* 6*d.* and 8*s.* per acre, with 20 per cent. deduction on that. But here is land at this figure that I have mentioned to you, with 10 per cent. deduction for the last year only, and with no deductions at all up at the Argoed Fawr.

35,412. I do not dispute the fact in the least. All I say is, that there may be certain circumstances connected with this little farm of 60 acres which makes the 1*l.* an acre not a dear rent, and that therefore the evidence that you wish to give is hardly fair unless you can show that the two things are on all fours. I will not pursue it any further. All I desire is simply that the Commission should understand the circumstances of the case?—I do not want to be unfair.

35,413. Not at all, but all I want to understand is whether this little farm of 60 acres is a purely agricultural holding?—It is a purely agricultural holding, but as I have said at the commencement of my statement, the land in this district is poor land—very poor land in comparison with the strong lands of the other, the eastern districts and the southern portion of our county. That is all—that the price in regard to the quality of the land is such that it will not bear to give them a living, and to meet the rent.

35,414. I do not like to leave it so, because what we really mean is that it is not expected that out of this building the living of the person who is living on it should be got. He is a blacksmith; he is a man in trade, and he occupies this farm as a residence?—Not necessarily so, because here——

35,415. It may be so, I mean?—It may be so, because here are the two sons working the farm, and working it without any wages, simply for their food and clothing. He is an outsider, and although he is responsible for the rent, yet there are two others who are doing the work, as I have stated.

Mr. Grove.

35,416. There are a few questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. One of the questions will touch this point. "What is the rent of Gelli Farm? 60*l.*, is it not?"—Yes, 60*l.*

35,417. "How does that carry off 4*l.* a month, "and the profits of a blacksmith's shop?"—I can only give you the statement of the tenant himself. He is here to speak for himself, if necessary. He told me that it is swept up by the rent, that is all I know.

35,418. Has the man got a very large family?—I do not know the number of the family.

35,419. An expensive family?—No, not expensive.

35,420. Then, "Can a man farm such a farm well and carry on a blacksmith's shop?"—As I have stated, he has two sons that do the farming work, and the man himself does not do anything on the farm.

35,421. "Was there a house and buildings on this 24*l.* a year farm that you mentioned?"—Yes.

35,422. That is Pencoedcae, is it not?—There is a small house and a small outbuilding which will give shelter to three cows, I think.

35,423. "Colonel Lyne's sons, of whom you "complain, are working under their father, are "they not?"—I believe they are.

35,424. "Can you say that Colonel Lyne is without experience?"—Certainly not. There would be no dissatisfaction whatever if he himself took the matter in hand, and did not transfer it to his sons.

35,425. "You complain of absence of uni-" formity of rents apart from the question " whether they are high or low. Why do you " complain of this? On what principle? What " does it matter to A. what B. pays?"—It does not matter to A. what B. pays, but, at the same time, if the land proved by its working that it does not pay more than a certain given rent, then that rent should be brought down, so that it can be made possible for a man to get his living from it.

35,426. "Have you not forgotten part of the " name of one of the farms of which you speak? " Is not Argoed Ucha the name?"—Possibly it may be. It is locally known as Argoed Fawr. I do not know what the landlord himself may call it.

35,427. "As a matter of fact, were not expen-" sive alterations half completed when the tenant " refused to go on with the haulage?"—As I understand it, there was an outhouse building.

35,428. That you stated, I think?—There is no other building. There is a dry wall; the foundations of it are put there, for some other buildings, but that was not gone on with, because the tenant felt that it was not what was wanted.

35,429. The main point that Mr. Vincent wants to know is this: Did the tenant refuse to go on with the haulage?—As I understood him, he said that it was impossible for him in these depressing times—he was unable to pay the rent out of the farm—to go and do the haulage without any payment to make a new house under the circumstances.

35,430. Then Mr. Vincent asks, "What are you, tenant farmer or what?"—A quarryman.

35,431. A quarry owner, I suppose?—A quarry owner, stone merchant.

35,432. Then, "Is all you have told us about " the quality of land mere hearsay, or of your " own practical knowledge?"—It is partially of both.

The witness withdrew.

Captain Edmund Williams called and examined.

Mr. Grove.

35,433. Captain Williams, do you wish to make a short statement with reference to the condition of the house that has been alluded to?—I should like to do so.

35,434. You are Captain Williams, of Maesyruddud?—Yes.

35,435. And the owner of the property that Mr. Walters has alluded to?—Argoed Ucha.

35,436. Will you kindly make your statement. Mr. Walters, as you know, touches upon two or three points; he says that the condition of the dwelling-house is unsuitable, and also that it is dangerous?—With regard to its being dangerous, I do not believe we can find it to be dangerous. At the same time, I would much rather myself that it were repaired and put into good condition.

35,437. May we ask you why? Have you ever tried to arrange with the tenant mutually that it should be put into such order, and if so, why is it not done?—I may tell the Commissioners that I think about eight years ago or so, there was a complaint there as to some of the outbuildings. I went over to see them myself; it is not very far from my place, and I went over to see them, and I engaged some men to draw down an old building which was a kind of slope, and I went to the expense of doing that. Not only did I do that, but I also built up a new building for him, where he could tie I really forget how many cattle, and I also built a bit of small stable for him, which would make two stables for his farm. In addition to that, I improved a granary. I stripped the whole of that, and a good part of the barn. In fact, I went to a great expense altogether in getting this all done. There was another place underneath this barn which was quite wet. I went over there myself, and saw that the water was running in there, and could not run out of that place at all, and he merely used it then for the purpose of keeping a few geese now and again. I asked him why he could not get that done, and would it not be better for him to get the water from there. He said no, he did not think it was worth while. However, I got this done. I said, "This must be done." I got this place cleared, and had it pitched, and I made a very nice comfortable little place of it for him to keep any cattle in or anything else. Then beyond that there was a division inside; that division was put up and put in order, so that he had two very nice little places there underneath the chaffing room. I went to the expense of raising this chaffing room for him. It was very low. I drew off and unstripped the whole of the roof, and put it on fresh, and not only that, but raised the walls four or five feet, so as to give him a nice comfortable place for doing his work in. There was one other matter before going to the house. At the time I built those new buildings that I am speaking to you of, I wanted to get a wall built for him. There was a nice little courtyard there, but it was not fenced off. There was a broken wall there, and there was a kind of old stile leading from that place into a field. So that I suggested to this man, the tenant Morgan, that I would build a wall for him, so that he might be able to enclose his cattle nicely, and be able to milk his cows there. He is in the habit of keeping 10 or 12 cows to milk. I thought that would be very useful to him, and I suggested it to him; in fact, I got the masons to commence to work. There were a few spare stones there which belonged to this old wall; I got those utilised so far as they would go, and then I said to Morgan, "Now we "are getting short of stone." I said, "We can- "not finish this wall unless you bring some "stone." Then, indeed, he did not seem to care about taking the stone there; he preferred leaving it as it was to doing that. I think we did hear Mr. Walters speak of some old wall, the ruins of an old wall there. The ruins of that wall—the foundations of it—are there still, and have never been touched. I am speaking perhaps a little out of book, but I am quite sure that would be a matter of seven or eight years ago. At that time I suggested to him—I knew the house was in a bad state of repair—I suggested to him many and many a time, and more than once indeed, that this house should be taken down. There was plenty of material in it, I told him, and there would be no stones required to be carried for that, because it was an old house that had been a kind of mansion at one time occupied by a very respectable old family who lived there in the neighbourhood. I suggested that, and he said, "No, I will not do "it at all; I would rather leave it as it is," and that is the way in which it has been going on.

35,438. So that we understand from you that you made an offer to the tenant about seven or eight years ago that the thing should be improved, and that he expressed to you the fact that he preferred that matters should remain as they were?—Exactly.

35,439. Have you done any repairs to the house since that time, or has it been allowed to go on in much the same condition?—No, it has not been allowed to go on. I can safely say this, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it cost me very much more money to keep this house in repair according to the wish of this man than it would have cost to have built this house. I know that it would have been better for him if this place had all been done up anew, for every year or two I have to engage a tiler, and sometimes a carpenter, to go and keep this place somewhat straight, and to keep it dry for him. That was exactly the position he was in last time.

35,440. Then we will go now to another point. As to taking land without allowing compensation to the tenant. Has any land been so taken for quarrying or for building purposes?—There has been some land. Our friend Mr. Walters here put it down at two acres, I believe.

35,441. Yes, one acre for the house and one acre for building?—I should be very glad if the Commissioners would be kind enough to go up and view it themselves; then I firmly believe—they need not listen to me or to Mr. Walters—but they would be convinced in their own minds that there is nothing like two acres there. I do not believe there is an acre of land, and that is very poor land. It is on the brink. There is a quarry there, and they start working the coal from a certain point where the rock commences; underneath that rock the coal has been worked, and this place here is perfectly dry; underneath the buildings have been put in a position where they would not fall into the old workings; nothing would interfere with them there, and the gardens again run up a short distance into this bank.

35,442. But supposing that the quarries and the buildings only took one acre, do you consider that you ought to have made any compensation for it, or have you considered that the rent was so low that that fairly covered the question of compensation?—Quite so.

35,443. That is your view of it, is it?—It is partly so—partly so in this way. I consider for one thing this Argoed place is now becoming rather a populous place. Of course we always find that where new houses or cottages are built on any place, there is a greater demand for any agricultural produce in the immediate district. What I say is that those cottages that have been built there, would more than reimburse him by the sales he can effect there in selling milk to these people close at home. That is one of my points.

35,444. I suppose he is a yearly tenant with you, is he?—A yearly tenant, quite so.

35,445. So that he could have left you at any time during the past years if he had wished to do so?—Quite so. I do not like to expose my tenant, but if you gentlemen only knew how this tenant and myself stand, I know you would fancy I was a very lenient landlord, I am quite sure of that. I do not like to say anything further.

35,446. Will you tell us just roughly how much has been spent on this place in those earlier years you spoke of, in buildings and improvements?—Well, I could not really say exactly, but from recollection it must have cost me between 200*l.* and 300*l.* I am quite sure it must have cost me that at the very least.

35,447. Have you anything further to add?—I can say one thing, and that is this, that this very farm that has been spoken of now as being so very highly rented, and all that kind of thing, was before I had it—before it came into my hands—rented at 80*l.* a year for a great number of years, and now I am getting 65*l.* for it. For many years before I took it—in fact, when I did take it—that is a matter of, I daresay, 25 or 30 years ago, it was let at 80*l.* a year, and the rent I have been getting is 65*l.* There has been no change in the rent of this farm since I had it. I did not advance him during those fine rich times that we had for the farmers. There was no advance made, in fact I am not in the habit of doing that. I prefer to leave the tenants alone if they can do any good by it. That is my policy in letting my farms on my little estate.

35,448. The Commissioners think that it is hardly worth while to pay a visit to this place. The question of the area of half an acre or so, more or less, does not affect the question, and you practically admit that the house is not in such a condition as you would like?—Quite so. I have considered that it is so for years, and I have impressed upon them the necessity of getting it done, but they would rather leave it as it is. "Do repair a little for us, and we "would much prefer it; if you would kindly

" repair we would much prefer it." That is what they say, and this is the grand complaint that we heard before this Commission.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,449. Do you charge any interest upon the outlay you are put to?—Not a halfpenny. I have never charged a halfpenny. I never have in all the buildings I have erected on my estate, and I have never advanced the rent a halfpenny —I have charged no per-centage whatever.

35,450. Have they made application to you within these last eight years to have this house? —Not at all, not the slightest in fact I have offered it to them over and over again, but they will not have it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Vincent wishes me to state that he will endeavour to obtain a return from his clients in South Wales and Monmouthshire as to the value of farmhouses and buildings in their relation to the land. We shall be very glad to receive it.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at Monmouth.

FORTY-FOURTH DAY.

The Shire Hall, Monmouth, Monmouthshire, Friday, 16th March 1894.

Present:

Lord CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (Chairman).

Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederic Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. Morris, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Major Edward Longworth Lister recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 34,568 –655.

35,451. Have you any further evidence you wish to lay before the Commission?—No, nothing beyond my evidence the other day; but I have some rebutting evidence to give.

35,452. What do you wish to rebut?—Mr. John Pritchard, at Newport, on Wednesday, made several statements which were not at all accurate.

35,453. Will you take them seriatim?—I have a copy of the shorthand notes here. The question put to him in relation to Courtybella Farm was this, "Is it in a very bad state of "repair?—Yes, it is in a very bad state of "repair. In fact it never was only one room "down and one up, and it is nearly tumbling "down. What does the Duke say—why will "he not repair it?—Well, it is only the agents "I have applied to. What do they say?—They "say they cannot do it on the small rent." I beg to say I never said anything of the sort. He came to me and asked me to repair it, and I referred to the books and found he was on a repairing lease, so that I wrote him a letter, which he quotes at the end of his evidence, to say that he must do the repairs himself. I will put in the agreement presently.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,454. Is that lease now in existence?—It is an agreement. He asked for a lease, and in my letter I told him that as the Duke's tenant he was quite as safe with an agreement as on a lease.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,455. The agreement is for a lease of how long?—A yearly tenancy. I have only just got it out to look at this morning.

Chairman.

35,456. Do you give him a yearly tenancy and expect him to keep the place in repair?—I will put in the agreement (handed).

35,458. "Hedges, ditches, gates, and stiles in "a good state of repair?"—You see, my Lord, we scratched out the clause against sub-letting, because he rented two cottages with that piece, and it was scratched out in order to give him the chance of sub-letting to make some money. I have some notes which perhaps will throw a little light on that.

35,459. Do you know whether any repairs have been done on this property since the occupation by the Duke?—The lease expired before that, and then that agreement was granted on the lease expiring. In 1837 David Pritchard succeeded Mary Jones in two expired leaseholds, namely, the late James James, 2 acres 3 roods and 31 perches, and the late Martha Ellis 1 acre 3 roods and 34 perches; altogether 4 acres 3 roods 25 perches, and entered into an agreement to pay 7*l.* per annum for two cottages, barns, and other buildings, containing the above and keeping the same in repair.

35,460. Does he live in one of the cottages?—No, he works on the railway. His mother lives in one of them and the other one, I am told, has tumbled down altogether.

35,461. One of the cottages has tumbled down altogether?—Yes.

35,462. And the other one is occupied by his mother?—Yes, the other one is occupied by his mother; the one in respect of which he came to speak to me about repairs.

Chairman—continued.

35,463. He pays 7*l.* a year?—He pays 7*l.* a year.

35,464. Can you tell me whether you have any note of any repairs having been made to those cottages at all, and if so by whom, in the last 20 years?—I have no knowledge of any repairs being made, and I should imagine not, because he took them on a repairing lease.

35,465. You do not think the Duke has repaired them himself?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,466. Was there any penalty attached to the conditions?—Will you kindly look at the agreement?

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,467. What security had Mr. Pritchard against disturbance?—He had no absolute security. He was only a yearly tenant.

35,468. Is it customary on the Duke of Beaufort's estate that there should be repairing leases given upon yearly tenancies?—Some of those small holdings are like that.

35,469. Has it been the custom for a very long time back?—Well, I cannot go very far back.

35,470. You go back here to 1837. Do you know whether it was customary prior to that year?—I cannot say that.

35,471. I do not ask you of your own knowledge?—I cannot say. I have my head clerk here, if you would like to ask him. He has been 14 years in the office.

35,472. Are there many other tenants who hold under the same agreement?—I do not know how many, but there are some, I know, in that neighbourhood.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,473. Is it not a fact that he pays at present 8*l.* a year?—That is including tithe, I believe. That is since the tithe has been put on.

35,474. That is rather a strong advance for the tithe, is it not? How much would be the tithe upon that little plot?—He says in his evidence that 1*l.* was added 12 months ago to cover the tithe.

35,475. That seems rather a large sum to be added on account of the tithe. The tithe on that ground would scarcely amount to half that?—I see he says, "It may be a little more "land now as we have hedged in a little more. "We have added a little off waste land and "broken old land up.

35,476. That would account for it?—Yes. I see he says, "There are a lot of these little "pieces around there, but nearly the whole of "the houses have crumbled down and they "have been added to other farms;" and he alludes further on to the very bad state of the buildings in many of these houses near there. All I can say is it has never been brought to my notice in any way. No one has asked me to do any repairs there, and those, he alludes to must be either cottars or persons in the same way that he is.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

35,477. Have you ever visited them yourself?—I know the country very well from being close to there, but I have never visited them since I have been in office.

35,478. You have only been in office about six months?—Yes, about that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,479. Do you know when the cottage was allowed to fall?—I do not know. He sub-let it for a long time before he let it tumble down altogether.

35,480. No action was taken by the Duke in consequence of the cottage tumbling down?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,481. He put in before us a letter from yourself, which appeared to be equivalent to a security of tenure, telling him that he would not be disturbed?—The letter I wrote to him was this, "Dear Sir, You are quite secure in "your tenancy without a lease, and you ought "to do the repairs yourself." The impression I meant to convey, and what all the Duke's tenants understand, is that so long as they are there and pay their rent and go on fairly satisfactorily they are never disturbed and never turned out.

35,482. That would be with regard to the past?—Yes.

35,483. But with regard to the future; supposing there was a desire to disturb him, I suppose that letter would be strong enough in any court of equity to give him security of tenure. It is impossible for one to say what the force of that letter would be in a court of law?—It would hardly override that agreement, would it. I mean what I have put in that letter.

Chairman.

35,484. Then it was not worth much, practically?—I only meant to tell him that for a small thing like that it was unnecessary for him to apply.

35,485. You did not mean it to be in any way binding; it was only your opinion?—Yes, he asked for a lease.

35,486. For whatever your opinion was worth it was that and nothing more?—Yes, and I thought it was no use going into a legal business on the lease; that he was practically safe there in my opinion.

35,487. Is that his opinion?—He led me to believe so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,488. He said so in answer to me—that he thought it was sufficient security for him, and acting upon that he proposed to do some buildings?—He did not propose to me to do any building. He asked me to do that, and I referred him to the agreement and said he undertook to do it, and therefore he must do it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

35,489. Would it be a question of terms of the value of the annual payment for the land. If the Duke were to do the building you would require a larger rent?—Yes.

35,490. He does the buildings, and then you are satisfied with the existing rent?—Yes, we never attempted to suggest raising his rent. Of course if I had laid out a lot of money in repairs when he was bound to do it, I should have expected an equivalent.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,491. Do you know of any other old-fashioned cottages allowed to tumble down on any part of the estate. We have found that in many parts we have visited?—I know of several, but not inhabited ones.

35,492. I mean some of the old-fashioned cottages have been allowed to tumble down?—Yes, they are mostly cots—they pay cot rents.

Mr. Grove.

35,493. Have you any record as to who built these buildings originally?—It is impossible to tell you from memory. I do not know whether I can find it in the books.

35,494. As a rule do you keep a record of who built. I mean the probability is that this man's family, or someone who held this plot of land previously, put a building there?—I think probably it was a cot originally.

35,495. And then in the course of years you gave him an agreement as to terms and conditions upon which he should hold?—Yes, probably that is the case, but I could not tell you without referring.

35,496. You speak of cotters, and then you speak of agreements. Do we understand there are two classes?—This man is not a cotter now; he holds at a rack rent.

35,497. What do you mean by a "cotter"?—A cotter is a man who has originally squatted, so to speak, and built his own house, and gradually taken in a little land all round it, and he pays just a rent—not a rent but an acknowledgment.

35,498. Is there any uniformity in those acknowledgments—is it so much per acre or so much per plot?—No, it is generally a nominal sum, 5*s.* or so per annum.

35,499. When does the cotter in the ordinary way come under an agreement with you?—In the ordinary way he does not. Sometimes he will come and ask to take a lease for lives.

35,500. Probably because he may want to expend more money in improving the buildings, or something of that sort?—Yes, or possibly because he wants the landlord to do something.

35,501. Have you many cotters?—Yes.

35,502. Some 400 or 500?—Well, hundreds of them.

35,503. And a good many also under agreements?—When he comes under an agreement, I take it he ceases to be a cotter.

35,504. Are you going to speak as to any open spaces?—I cannot tell you much about them.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,505. Are there many in the same position as this man with repairing agreements?—I believe there are a certain number, but I could not give any idea as to the number.

35,506. As I understand, the grievance he complains of is that you did not make the necessary repairs, and your answer is that he was under agreement to repair?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,507. Do you think it possible that this cottage and land at one time might have been a cotter's cottage. Is it adjoining a common or anything of that sort?—It is in a district where there are a good many cotters about. I was asked at Abergavenny the other day about the commons, but I cannot tell you much about them. I can only tell you what commons there are more or less of the Duke's, and I can only say we have received no profit from them whatever in any shape or form. The only time the Duke exercises his right is when there happens to be railways or anything of that kind coming through them, and then he takes his share. There are about seven or eight commons altogether.

35,508. Will you give us the names and the acreage?—I can only give you the approximate acreage. The Glascoed Common, from my knowledge of it, I should think is from 6 to 10 acres or something of that kind, the Bicca Common, near Wentwood, is much about the same size possibly; bigger rather. There is some common in Llanvaches and Mynyddu-allt-tyr Fach, near Wentwood, about 40 acres or rather more; then part of Grey Hill—I cannot give you the acreage of that, and Treworgan, near Llandenny—that is not a big one—I could not tell you the acreage, anything under ten acres I should think, but it is practically waste land, and we have never since they were commons ever had any profit from them.

36,509. Do the bordering farmers turn on to the common?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,510. Have they village greens?—Hardly what you would call village greens; rough land.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,511. The Duke is lord of the manor?—Yes, the Duke is lord of the manor.

35,512. Do you hold any courts?—No, we do not hold any courts at all.

Mr. Grove.

35,513. Are there any regulations as to the quantity of cattle or sheep?—I believe none.

35,514. Then it is without stint?—Yes.

35,515. You did not mention Trelleck Common?—Trelleck Common I omitted.

35,516. What size is that?—I cannot tell you.

35,517. It is a large one?—I do not know.

Mr. Grove—continued.

35,518. Would it not be 200 acres, or something more than that?—Well, of my own knowledge, I do not know, and I do not know that I have ever been over it.

35,519. Ask your clerk whether he can tell you approximately?—No, he cannot say.

35,520. Then what are the conditions of the Trelleck Common?—I believe they are the same as the others.

35,521. Then Devauden Green; has the Duke any property there?—Yes, there is a little green at Devauden, but it is a very small thing; it is more in the shape of a village green that Mr. Seebohm mentioned, more than anything else.

35,522. Then Common Coed-y-paen?—There is no common there.

35,523. That was enclosed a great many years ago?—Yes, I should think so There has never been, to my recollection, any common there.

35,524. Do you know of any recent enclosures of your own knowledge?—No, I do not.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,525. Is the right to turn cattle on the common considered in letting of the farms?—No. Any of the parishioners are entitled to turn on.

35,526. They are all the Duke's property?—Yes.

Chairman.

35,527. There is a question put by Mr. Vincent, "As a matter of fact, has not this "tenant or have not his family been in occupa- "tion since 1837 under this yearly agreement"?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. C. A. Williams (of Monmouth) called and examined.

Chairman.

35,528. You are a solicitor and land agent, and the county treasurer, and you own about 300 acres in Monmouthshire, in the district of East Monmouthshire?—Yes.

35,529. As a land agent, how many acres do you represent?—About 10,000 in Monmouthshire.

35,530. Are they in several manors?—They are in several manors.

35,531. Will you tell us anything as regards ownership that strikes you?—In what respect?

35,532. Anything that strikes you. We have had a great deal of evidence, we do not want to go through the whole of it again, everybody agreeing, and the whole thing being recapitulated?—With regard to the relationship between landlord and tenant, I take it you mean.

35,533. Yes, that sort of thing?—It is very friendly in this district.

35,534. As regards encumbrances, are there any landlords with very heavily encumbered estates that you know of in the neighbourhood?—No, I think not, not very heavily encumbered.

35,535. They all pay their way more or less?—Yes, I think so.

35,536. Do you know anything about glebe land; how it acts upon cultivation or otherwise?—I think glebe land is not likely to be so well cultivated as other land, on account of the uncertainty with regard to occupation, and so on, and also clergymen being, generally speaking, unable to afford to let their land on, perhaps, quite as reasonable terms as more wealthy landlords.

35,537. We may take it that you think that a clergyman is not a very desirable landlord, and that there are other landlords that a tenant would sooner be under?—I should think so.

Chairman—continued.

35,538. As to common land, are there any recent enclosures?—None. Nearly all the commons of this district were enclosed some 70 years ago

35,539. Are there many absentee landlords in the neighbourhood?—Not many.

35,540. What sort of landlords do the tenants prefer to get a farm under?—I think a large landlord rather than a small one.

35,541. Is there any difficulty about language?—None. There are a few Welshmen who have come up into the county within the last few years, but they very soon pick up the language. They all speak English now.

35,542. What is generally the date of entry?—The 2nd of February usually, some takings are at Christmas.

35,543. No leases?—They are very unusual. There are very few leases.

35,544. Do the tenants stay long on the land, or do they change?—Some of them stay a long time. I do not think they stay as long as they used to. There is more frequent change of late years, within the last 15 or 20 years, than there was formerly.

35,545. Can you give us any copy of agreements?—I have a form here that I use (producing same).

35,546. This is your ordinary form?—Yes, that is frequently altered, various clauses are altered.

35,547. Are there any oppressive clauses with regard for instance, to refusal to allow people to sell hay and straw?—Yes, there is a clause against selling hay and straw.

35,548. Do they object to it?—Sometimes. Sometimes no objection whatever is raised to the agreement.

Chairman—continued.

35,549. Do you enforce that?—Not strictly. Generally speaking, if a tenant is farming his land well, and he wishes to sell off some hay and straw, there is no objection raised.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,550. Does he always ask for consent?—No, he does not. The tenants very often do not ask, they sell without consent.

Chairman.

35,551. Have you given the tenants always a copy of the agreement?—If they want it.

35,552. But you do not do it as a matter of course?—Not as a matter of course, only if they ask for it, they can always see it, and they can always get it if they want to refer to it.

35,553. Do you charge them anything for a copy of the agreement?—Nothing at all.

35,554. What is the sort of rent in the district?—It varies very much, because the quality of the land varies very much; some land, a small proportion of it, being very good, and a good deal of it very inferior. It would, I should think, average from 13*s.* to 16*s.* an acre, if you take an average.

35,555. What is the lowest?—Oh, it is as low as 8*s.*

35,556. And as high as what?—Some very good land may be as high as 3*l.*, but there is a very small quantity of that.

35,557. Do you charge the smaller tenants more rent or less?—I do not know that we look at it exactly in that way. I think on the whole, perhaps some small farms are rented a little higher than large ones.

35,558. Do you make the tenants haul for repairs?—As a rule they haul for repairs.

35,559. Do they complain of that?—Never, unless it is a very large job. If there were a quantity of new buildings being put up, or anything of that kind, it would be a different matter; then there would be an arrangement, there would probably be an allowance, but I am speaking of ordinary repairs; there is no objection to that, it is a very slight matter as a rule.

35,560. Were rents raised at any time when farming was prosperous, did you put the rents up?—No doubt rents were raised between 1855 and 1875.

35,561. What did you put them up?—It varied very much, it is very difficult to give an average, they were certainly raised generally during that period.

35,562. Have you given any reductions or abatements in the bad times?—Yes, they have nearly all been reduced now, nearly all the farms, I should think. On the average in this district, they are reduced from 25 to 30 per cent., I should say.

35,563. Permanent reduction?—Yes.

35,564. Do you give them any time to pay?—Oh, yes, they never pay under three months, generally about four months' credit, and it is often longer, that is the rule, about four months.

Chairman—continued.

35,565. Who pays the tithes, land tax, chief rent, and income tax?—The landlord pays the tithes now, since the change in the law, and also the land tax generally. Some landlords do not pay it, but generally speaking, the land tax is paid by the landlord as far as I am concerned, and as far as I know.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,566. And he recovers the tithe from the tenant afterwards?—Yes. Of course, with regard to lettings made before the passing of the Tithe Act, they were let subject to the tenant paying the tithe, and where there has been no fresh letting, the tenant recoups the landlord the amount of the tithe, but all fresh lettings are tithe free.

35,567. If the landlord pays the tithe in the old lettings does he take it from the tenant afterwards?—Yes.

35,568. He does?—Yes.

35,569. So that they are in exactly the same position as they were before?—Yes, as to old takings.

Chairman.

35,570. What is the ordinary size of the farms in your neighbourhood?—They vary a good deal, I should think 120 acres would be someting like the average.

35,571. And there are some very big ones?—They run to 400 acres.

35,572. Nothing like 2,000 acres?—Oh, dear no, nothing of the kind, 400 acres is a large farm in Monmouthshire.

35,573. Do you get on all right with labour?—I do not think there is any scarcity of labour.

35,574. And I suppose you have got a lot of land gone down to pasture?—A great deal of it, two-thirds at least of what used to be ploughed, I should say, over this part of Monmouthshire.

35,575. Two-thirds?—I should think so.

35,576. Who does the improvements?—The landlord.

35,577. What do the tenants do. Do they do anything?—They do the hauling, very little else.

35,578. Everything else is done by the landlord?—Everything else is done by the landlord, except so far as cultivation goes. Of course the tenants may improve the cultivation of the farm.

35,579. Who finds the gates?—The landlord finds the gates.

35,580. Would you give any compensation for general improvements when a tenant leaves his farm. Is there any custom of the country?—There is no custom.

35,581. You do not recognise tenant's right in any shape or form?—Only so far as he is entitled under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

35,582. There is not much game, I believe in the country, is there?—Only in some places.

35,583. On the Duke of Beaufort's estate there is none?—Very little.

35,584. Are you troubled with trespass?—There is some complaint about it occasionally.

35,585. But nothing very serious?—Nothing very serious.

Chairman—continued.

35,586. I suppose you complain of the railway rates, of course?—Well, they are high, no doubt. The Great Western have the monopoly of the district.

35,587. As to proprietor farmers, are there any farmers who own their own land in the district?—A few, very few.

35,588. Are they anxious to buy their own holdings, do you find?—I never heard any particular wish expressed.

35,589. I suppose the wives and children work on the farms?—On the smaller farms, and the bigger children—the big boys—on the large farms.

35,590. Are wages high or low?—They are higher than they used to be.

35,591. What would you say they would get?—The present rate of wages, I should say, is about 11*s.* to 16*s.* according to the man.

35,592. Then he is fed as well as that?—No.

35,593. That is everything he gets?—Sometimes they get a cottage.

35,594. But are the wages as low as 11*s.*?—It depends on the man; one man may be better worth 16*s.* than another is worth 11*s.*

35,595. But wages do run as low as 11*s.* a week?—Yes.

35,596. As to cottage accommodation what do you think?—There are plenty of cottages.

35,597. Are they in decent order?—They vary very much. I think on the whole they are better than they used to be.

35,598. Some are very bad, I suppose?—Some are very inferior, no doubt.

35,599. The labourers, I suppose, leave the country; some of them go into the mines, and so on?—Yes. There are not so many men required on the land now. There is so little cultivation compared to what there used to be.

35,600. When do you think the depression began in this neighbourhood?—Following on from about the year 1879, that was the commencement, and they never recovered it since.

35,601. Foreign produce, I suppose, is what you think has brought prices down?—Quite so, there can be no question about that.

35,602. Are you a protectionist?—I do not say that I am; but that accounts for the low prices, undoubtedly.

35,603. But do you advocate the reimposition of duties?—I do not advocate it, because I do not think it possible.

35,604. The general relations between landlord and tenant are very friendly?—Very friendly.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,605. I did not quite understand why glebe land does not let so well as other land?—Well, I think it is not likely to command as good tenants as other landlords for the reasons I give.

35,606. The tenancies are smaller, you mean?—No. A clergyman may leave his living tomorrow, and there is an uncertainty about it, a greater uncertainty than there is with other holdings.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

35,607. And the land is let a bit higher, too?—Very likely, I think.

35,608. Then with regard to buildings. Have you any period of exhaustion; suppose a farmer does all the hauling towards a new building, and finds in a few years that he cannot pay for it?—If there is a new building there is generally an allowance made for hauling.

35,609. An allowance is generally made to the tenant?—Yes, if it is anything considerable.

35,610. I do not think you said on what ground you consider that the rent is higher on smaller holdings than on the larger ones?—I think it is because there is rather more competition for smaller holdings than larger ones. There are more men who can take small farms than those who can take larger ones, besides which the man who takes a small farm does the greater part of the work himself.

35,611. He has no labour to pay?—He has no labour to pay.

35,612. It would cost the landlord a little more, I should think, too?—It costs the landlord a little more in buildings, no doubt; and then there is no rent paid for the buildings; the rent is only paid for the land.

35,613. Do you ever employ a land surveyor to value farms?—Never; hardly ever. I may perhaps once in my lifetime have done such a thing, once or twice, perhaps.

35,614. Is not the land tax a landlord's tax?—Yes, I say we always allow it now. I believe there are cases in which it is not allowed, but as a rule it is allowed. I know there are tenancies in which it is part of the agreement that the tenant shall pay the land tax.

35,615. But still it is really a landlord's tax?—Undoubtedly.

35,616. Then you consider that the fences and ditches are not attended to as well as they used to be?—Certainly not.

35,617. How do you account for that?—Well, because the farmer is poorer than he used to be, I suppose, and he does not employ so much labour.

35,618. In these depressed times, I suppose the farmers cannot afford to pay for it?—They do not keep labour on the farms now to any extent, they do with as little as possible, and, therefore, the fences suffer.

35,619. And the land must suffer too, in consequence?—Well, you see the land is not cultivated. The land that used to be cultivated is gone down to pasture, therefore, the labour is not required on the land.

35,620. How has land been laid down to pasture? Did the landlords generally pay for the seeds when it was laid down to pasture?—A great deal of it is not properly laid down to permanent pasture. It has been allowed to go down out of the clover sward, or out of the stubble, and the natural grasses have come in course of time.

35,621. Still it is not a very paying crop?—Certainly not, but it is better to do that than to plough it, with wheat at 3*s.* a bushel.

35,622. I suppose it is in this neighbourhood the same as we have heard elsewhere, that the most able men go to the works where they can get higher wages?—A good many of them do now, some go to the works, some go to the railways, and so on.

35,623. The elderly men stay on the farm, and the young lads, I suppose?—Yes, most of them, it is the abler bodied men who go off generally.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,624. Your answer about glebe land implies that security of tenure is a good thing in the interests of agriculture generally, does it not? You say glebe land must act prejudicially on good cultivation. You say it acts prejudicially on account of the insecurity of tenure?—Partly so. I gave two reasons. Partly on account of uncertainty of tenure, and partly on account of the clergymen as a rule being obliged to have as high a rent as they can get for their lands.

35,625. Would you have any objection to giving legal force to security of tenure?—I really do not see the necessity for it. The farmers do not ask for it. They do not ask for a lease. Numbers of them would not accept leases if they were offered to them.

35,626. I ask the question because perhaps in some cases there are oppressive landlords who are indifferent to the interests of the tenants, and might disturb them in their holdings. Do you think it is too revolutionary a proposal?—No, I do not say that. You mean to make a lease compulsory? If I understand your question, you asked me whether I think there ought to be power to compel the landlord to grant a lease.

35,627. No, not to grant a lease of necessity, but that a tenant should be secure in his holding, that is, provided certain conditions were fulfilled?—Well, I certainly should object to it. I do not think it ought to be so.

35,628. Practically the thing exists now on large and well-managed estates. You find that the son of the tenant generally succeeds in the tenancy?—Quite so, and they do here frequently, but that is a very different thing to their having an absolute right to succeed.

35,629. But it seems to me it would meet particular cases where there are oppressive landlords?—Well, I do not see why a landlord should be tied up in that way—why he should be compelled to accept a tenant or to continue a tenant.

35,630. But practically it would not affect the good landlords, because it already exists with them?—It would affect every one if that law was enforced, good and bad.

35,631. You think it is rather too revolutionary?—I think it is unfair to the landlord. I do not see why a landlord of land should have his hands tied any more than the landlord of a house or the landlord of a shop. The same principle applies.

35,632. There is this difference, that the tenant of a farm has a greater stake in the farm, and if he is disturbed he has to leave something behind him. That does not apply equally to the tenant of a house or shop?—My experience is that the tenant is quite able to take care of himself as a rule, and does take care of himself when he enters into his agreement.

35,633. In your answer under the heading agreements and leases you say that the agreement is qualified to meet particular cases?—Yes.

35,634. What do you mean by that, you mean modified?—Yes. There are one or two clauses which I could mention that are sometimes altered a little. The notice to quit is sometimes six months or 12 months. I put it whichever the tenant wishes. If he wishes it to be six months, I put it six months. If he wishes it to be 12 months, I put it at 12 months. There are two or three clauses that were modified to meet particular circumstances or the wishes of particular tenants. With regard to the selling off of hay, one sometimes makes an arrangement that the tenant shall have permission to sell off hay on condition that he brings a certain quantity of manure back in proportion to the hay and straw so sold off.

35,635. Are the reductions general?—Yes, as far as my experience goes with the properties I have to do with, and I believe general in the neighbourhood.

35,636. Is each individual case treated separately, or is it general in each?—The agent would consider what the fair rent ought to be of a particular farm. There has not been any regular rate of reduction all round. Some farms bear a greater reduction than others; others are entitled to a smaller reduction.

35,637. Is the land chiefly arable or pastoral?—Now it is chiefly pastoral, there has been a great change.

35,638. And is it suitable land for pasture?—A good deal of Monmouthshire goes down pretty well to grass. It is clay land, and it goes down quicker than lighter land.

35,639. You say rabbits are more numerous now than before the Ground Game Act?—Yes.

35,640. Is that because the tenant preserves them?—In some cases certainly. I know several tenants who have turned down rabbits on their farms since the Ground Game Act, where there were none before.

35,641. I suppose it is not from any fear on the part of the farmers to avail themselves of the Ground Game Act, that rabbits have become more numerous?—No, I think not. Farmers do avail themselves of the Ground Game Act to a very great extent. They kill a great many rabbits. They kill what they please, as a rule.

35,642. You say "the small farmers and their "wives do most of the work, assisted, of course, "by their children if they have any able to "work." Then you say, "Still, the children's "labour may probably cost nearly as much as "labourers." Do the tenants pay their children wages?—I cannot tell you exactly what they do. They must pay them something, I suppose, or they have to provide for them at any rate.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

35,643. They give them food and clothing?—Yes.

35,644. And a good lot of pocket money?—Well, I do not expect they get much pocket money.

35,645. And always start them in life, I suppose; place them on other farms?—If they can, of course.

35,646. Are they able to?—Some do it, some are not able to.

Mr. Grove.

35,647. You say that the usual Court Baron is held on the different manors; are those courts fixed on a given day in each year?—No, they are only held occasionally just for the transfer of the few copyholds that there are.

35,648. What constitutes a court, I mean legally. Who is supposed to be there?—The steward holds the court.

35,649. Does he preside?—Yes. Now he is the only person that need be present, because it is not necessary that any tenants should attend.

35,650. But is not some legal notice of the court necessary?—No, they can hold a Court Baron when they like. Of course you may give notice of a general Court Baron, but special Courts Baron are held without notice. For a general Court Baron they would give notice.

35,651. For a general Court Baron what would be the notice necessary to constitute the court legally?—A notice put on the church doors a month beforehand.

35,652. A month beforehand, is it?—We usually put it about a month beforehand. I am not sure that it is legally necessary to give a month's notice, but that would be about the period, I think.

35,653. Mr. Seebohm suggests that there is an Act allowing special transfers to be made at the office of the steward?—Yes, and they are generally so carried out.

35,654. Did you say that there is less labour on the land than there ought to be on it at the present time?—I think there is, on the whole.

35,655. And do you think that is because of the agricultural depression that the tenant farmer cannot afford to put labour on?—Oh, yes, certainly.

35,656. Not because of the want of cottages?—Oh, dear no, there are many cottages here tumbling down for want of occupants.

36,657. You do not grant many leases?—No.

35,658. But if they were asked for in former times, were they readily granted?—I never recollect their being asked for. It is quite an exception for a man to ask for a lease.

35,659. You intimate that it acts prejudicially on good cultivation to have glebe lands?—To a certain extent.

35,660. That is because of insecurity of tenure?—Partly.

35,661. What would be your view as to what we know and commonly speak of as security of tenure to the ordinary tenant farmer. I mean some increased security of tenure to the ordinary tenant farmer?—I do not think he wants any security except what he gets under his agreement or lease, and he is quite capable of making his own contract. They are fully alive to every point when they come to go through the agreement.

35,662. But if you admit, which you do, of course, and which we all feel, that the glebe land is not properly cultivated—— ?—I have not expressed any strong opinion at all about that, the only thing I say is this. My opinion is asked whether it is likely to be prejudicial or not, and I think to a slight extent it is so, but only to a slight extent.

35,663. But still the object of the Commission is to try and find out any of the evils that now exist as to land, and to see whether it is possible to suggest remedies of all sorts. Then coming back to the point, if glebe lands are not cultivated as well as they might be, and made as productive as they might be because of insecurity of tenure, does not the same, to some extent, apply to the ordinary farms?—I do not think it does nearly so much. Directly a clergyman dies or resigns, the incoming incumbent is in no way bound by anything his predecessor has done, and he may resume possession at once. The agreement made with the former clergyman has no further effect. That does not arise in the ordinary case of a letting between landlord and tenant.

35,664. Then you think that that rule is not on all fours in the two cases?—No, I do not think it is.

35,665. I do not know whether any of the Commissioners put to you any questions about a Land Court, whether you think anything of that sort would be desirable?—I think it would be most undesirable in the interest of landlord and tenant.

35,666. Do you consider that a tenant farmer ought to have any compensation for the improvements he puts on the land?—I think he ought to have fair compensation, certainly.

35,667. And if there were a ready means of giving him full and fair compensation, you think the necessity for a Land Court or anything in that direction would be happily done away with?—I do not think there would be any necessity for a Land Court at all. There is no difficulty about giving a man proper compensation. I think some slight amendment of the Agricultural Holdings Act would meet the case.

35,668. Would you be prepared to suggest any improvement in the Agricultural Holdings Act, do you think?—I have not thought over or gone into that matter exactly. I have not found, myself, in my own experience, any difficulty arising from these unexhausted improvements. We have always settled everything comfortably. Whenever there has been a question of the kind there has been really no difficulty, we have not even had to go to arbitration under the Act. If there has been a claim it has been fairly met and dealt with, and there has been no trouble.

35,669. Of course we have heard in other parts of the county that there have been differences: one can understand that there may be no differences in one part of the county, and that there would be perhaps in the other?—Quite so.

35,670. Does the question of game cause any unpleasantness between landlord and tenant?—Very little, I think. There may be a case here and there, of course.

35,671. Are there many claims for compensation sent in by the tenants?—No.

35,672. If there were, would they be fairly dealt with, do you think?—I think so. I have had very little experience in that way, but I have known a few claims, I think, sent in, and they have been fairly dealt with, and the tenant has been satisfied where that has arisen.

35,673. Do you think the Agricultural Holddings Act is fairly successful or not?—I think it is fairly so, on the whole.

35,674. But still you think it could be amended?—There may be one or two points in which some amendment might be required. I have seen some suggestions that have been made to the Commissioners on one or two points.

35,675. Do you think that, as a rule, it is properly understood by the tenant farmers, do they take any interest in it?—Not very much, I think. The fact is, the tenant does not generally leave his farm in a very high state of cultivation. Generally speaking, if a man is going to leave, he drops the cultivation of his farm down a little, and does not do it as well the last year or two as he did before, and he recoups himself before the determination of his tenancy. That is very often the case, generally the case, I may say.

35,676. You spoke about railway rates, I think. Do you mean local railway rates, or do you mean the question of competition with foreign produce, by foreign foods being carried so cheaply on English railways?—I mean, generally speaking, that the rates here are high.

35,677. I suppose you do not know whether the railway companies are exceeding their maximum powers?—I do not know at all.

35,678. Do you think that, as a rule, it acts in this way, that the farmer would keep an extra horse, say to take his produce from point to point, and to fetch it in, and in that way avoid employing the railway at all?—I do not think so.

35,679. We have been told so in many cases?—I am not aware of it, at any rate.

35,680. You are not aware of its being carried to any such extent as that?—No.

35,681. Is there any co-operation among farmers for the purchase of feeding stuffs or manures?—Scarcely any I should think, very little indeed.

35,682. When you let a taking, or you want a new tenant, what principle do you go upon; do you let it to the highest bidder?—Oh, dear no. We do not invite biddings for a farm. We look out for a good tenant, and if we find a good man, we agree with him for a fair rent.

35,683. Do you think that land bears too many burdens in the way of rates and taxes?—

Mr. Grove—continued.

I think it is very heavily charged—out of proportion.

35,684. Does this agreement of yours fully take into account the Agricultural Holdings Act and the Ground Game Act?—It does not exclude the Agricultural Holdings Act at all. It leaves the Agricultural Holdings Act in full force.

35,685. I presume this is an old form that has been in use for a good many years?—It was revised some few years ago.

35,686. It says here in one place "tenant not "to sport or shoot, or allow any person to sport "or shoot." Of course under the Ground Game Act they have legal power to use firearms?—Oh, yes.

35,687. That seems to be rather contrary, does it not, to the spirit of the Act. I mean do you put your pen through those words "or shoot"?—If anything was said about it I should do so, I suppose, but in fact I know they do all shoot and nothing is said about it. They shoot rabbits and that sort of thing.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,688. The agreement could not override the Act?—Oh, no, of course not.

Mr. Grove.

35,689. I suppose you are aware that under section 3 anything contrary to the Act is void?—Yes. That agreement was framed before the Ground Game Act.

35,690. The Ground Game Act was in 1880?—Yes, the agreement was framed long before 1880, but it has been modified since.

35,691. In many cases we have had very old agreements that have been framed and printed before those two Acts were passed?—This is based upon an old agreement.

35,692. Are there any penalising clauses in that agreement?—Yes, there are two or three. One is about breaking up meadow or pasture land.

35,693. Are they enforced?—I never knew anybody act in defiance of that clause as to breaking meadow and pasture land. There is another penalty for selling off hay. I have never known the penalty paid. They are used more as preventatives.

35,694. As precautionary clauses?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,695. Have you ever had any experience of evictions?—To a very small extent. Of course, there is occasionally a notice to quit.

35,696. But evictions?—No, never.

35,697. Have you ever heard of any such cases in this part of the county?—No.

35,698. And with regard to the change of tenure, when farms have changed, has it ever taken place in your experience on account of a quarrel in respect to the amount of rent?—Oh, yes. I have known cases in which farmers have given up on account of their considering the rent rather too high.

35,699. And you have told us that you have had no difficulty in coming to an arrangement?—We have generally come to an arrangement.

35,700. Without the necessity of calling in any arbitrator?—Oh, yes. I have never called one in.

35,701. Have you ever known such a case with regard to any of your neighbours—have you ever been called in as an arbitrator?—To value land?

35,702. To value the land?—No, not as between landlord and tenant.

35,703. Then, as to the question of haulage for repairs, you told us just now that it was customarily on the tenant—that the haulage for repairs was usually done by the tenant?—Yes.

35,704. That was in case of repairs?—Yes, repairs.

35,705. Now, in the case of new buildings, I think you modified that opinion?—Yes. If the new buildings were considerable, and there was a heavy expenditure in the hauling, it would be taken into consideration, and there would be an allowance, undoubtedly. Sometimes a new building is put up at the tenant's request, and then he says, "If you will put me up this, I shall "be very happy to do the hauling," and, of course, then he does it.

35,706. I suppose that is a very ordinary custom?—Oh, yes.

35,707. I think it is almost, if not quite, universal. Could you give us any opinion—very approximately, very roughly—what per-centage to the whole the haulage would be?—What per-centage of the cost of repairs?

35,708. What per-centage of the cost—the outlay—I mean within limits?—I have not gone into it. I cannot say exactly, but I should think it would be a very small proportion.

35,709. We have had some cases in which it was estimated as 40 per cent.?—Of the actual cost of the repairs?

35,710. Yes?—I should not put it at that. I should say 20 per cent. would be the outside. I should be rather inclined to put it at less.

35,711. You think 40 per cent. quite an excessive estimate?—Oh, very excessive, I think. I think the tenant generally does it, as far as he can, at the time when his horses would not be doing anything else.

35,712. It would depend very largely on the distance from which the haulage had to be done?—No doubt.

35,713. But you think it would never exceed 20 per cent.?—I should think not.

35,714. Where the haulage for repairs has been done by the tenant, I think you have already told us that it is not considered irksome?—Oh, certainly not. There is no difficulty about it.

35,715. If he has his team and his carts on the spot?—We generally try to make it as convenient as possible to the tenant. He does it at the time which is most convenient to himself, as a rule.

35,716. Then with regard to reductions of rent. You have already told us that since 1881, there have been permanent reductions to the extent of about 25 per cent.?—Yes, quite that, and in many cases more.

35,717. From 25 to 30 per cent. you put it here?—Yes.

35,718. And abatements in addition?—Abatements in addition in some cases—many cases in fact.

35,719. Where an abatement has been made as distinguished from a reduction, is the tenant able to go to the assessment committee and to get his assessment reduced?—No, I think not, when it is simply an abatement. I think the assessment committee will only reduce where there is a permanent reduction.

35,720. In some cases we have been told that the Assessment Committee has done so?—I do not think it has been so here.

35,721. That is not the custom in this neighbourhood?—No, because the tenant always likes to turn it into a permanent reduction in order that he may go to the assessment committee and get his assessment reduced.

35,722. But we have been told in some cases of abatement as distinguished from reduction, that the assessment committee have reduced the assessment?—It may be so in some unions, but it is not so here.

35,723. It has not been the case here?—No.

35,724. Then later on you speak of cultivation. You say cultivation will not pay. Is that the question of cereals and roots as distinguished from grass?—Quite so—that is what I mean—the cultivation of land as arable: poor land will not pay to grow corn in these days.

35,725. The land pays better for dairy produce?—It pays better to let it go down to grass for dairy purposes, or rearing young stock and so on.

Mr. Grove.

35,726. With regard to this per-centage of haulage, it is a point that some of the Commissioners take rather a great interest in. You think 20 per cent. would be the figure. What is the principal material used in so putting up a new building, would it not be stone?—Yes, stone and lime, and timber of course.

35,727. Take stone, for instance. What would be the average mileage away from a quarry—what would be the average on your estate?—We often get stones very near. I have had it actually in the yard adjoining the house.

35,728. But still there would have to be a cart and horse, or a couple of horses?—Yes.

35,729. And would the farmer find the men?—That would be rather in the case of new buildings. There would not be much stone wanted generally for repairs. It is generally more tiles and timber for the roof and so on: there would not be much stone to haul merely for repairs.

35,730. But in the case you say of new buildings, it seems to me that the haulage must come to more than 20 per cent.?—Well, I do not know that it would. I should think 20 per cent. would be a very fair sum to put down for it.

35,731. What would be the value, say of stone. It would be, I suppose, 2*s.* a ton at the quarry after it is quarried and put ready?—Quite so, but you must take the whole thing altogether, not only the stone.

35,732. But just for a minute take the stone first. We may say that is 2*s.* a ton, and then the farmer has to send his cart and a horse or two horses for it, and I suppose he would send a man to help to load it?—Yes.

35,733. Then there would be two horses. Would the same man who loaded the stone drive the horse or horses, I suppose he would?—Yes, I should think so.

35,734. That would be one man. Well, the value of two horses for that time, and one man, if you come to put that on to the tonnage of the stone, it appears to me that however near the quarry, the mere handling of the stone and hauling even a short distance must come to something like 40 per cent.?—Of the actual cost of the stone, but then there is all the labour on the stone afterwards; there is the labour in erecting the building. I put it that on the total expense the hauling would not exceed 20 per cent. It may be 40 or 50 per cent. on the cost of the stone alone, the stone alone being one of the smallest items, probably.

35,735. I admit that we want calculation to bring it out?—Stone costs very little.

35,736. But it does appear to one or two of us at any rate that 20 per cent. would be rather under the mark than over it?—I think 20 per cent. is the very outside.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,737. You may put it in this way. Suppose a new house is built, to cost 200*l.*, what would the haulage be liable to amount to?—It would depend on the distance you have to haul it entirely. It depends so much on circumstances—what kind of a road and everything else. It is utterly impossible to say, unless you say you are going to put up a building in such and such a spot.

35,738. You say 20 per cent. would be a fair average?—I should think it is a full average.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,739. And in the case of permanent repairs, as in the case of new buildings, you think in some instances at all events the landlord has borne a share of that expense?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Grove.

35,740. A share of the haulage?—The whole of it in some cases.

35,741. Is it usual, or is that in special cases?—There has not been a great deal of new building in late years. There has been very little of new building done in the last 15 years.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,742. You say much of the land has been laid down to pasture?—Yes.

35,743. Is there much dairying done in this part of the country?—A good deal.

35,744. Dairy farming?—Yes.

35,745. Do the landlords generally build suitable dairies. Have they improved the dairies in any way lately?—Oh, yes, they have been improved in many cases.

35,746. Are there any dairy lectures in the neighbourhood?—There have been some, yes—butter making competitions and so on.

35,747. Do you think they are a success. Are they attended pretty well?—I do not think that they have been attended quite so well as we might have expected.

35,748. Farmers' wives are slow to adopt new methods, I suppose?—Yes, I think they have an idea that they know how to make butter as well as the county council lecturer can teach them.

35,749. Then you say there are several Welsh farmers who have come into the neighbourhood?—Yes.

35,750. Do you find any marked difference in the mode of farming and in the manner of living?—Yes, there is a difference.

35,751. What difference may that be?—In one respect the Welsh farmers do not farm their arable land as well as the English tenants. They do more with their dairies, I think.

35,752. Which is the more beneficial now to the farmer—the dairying or the arable farming?—Well, I cannot say, because the two things work together. On some farms of course—good land—the arable is the most important part of the farm, perhaps. With poor land no doubt the grass is the most important.

35,753. But do you not consider that there are less fluctuations in price of dairy produce than there is in the price of stock and arable produce?—Certainly, I quite agree that it is desirable to encourage dairying.

35,754. And you think they work just as hard as the English farmers do?—Oh, yes.

35,755. Or harder, may be?—Oh, yes.

35,756. The children work more on the farms?—The children work more on the farms, I think.

35,757. They do not live on quite so high a scale?—No. They certainly live more economically.

Chairman.

35,758. Mr. Vincent hands up this question: "Have you formed any estimate of the pro-"portion between rent and money spent by the "landlord in improvements and repairs?"—Well, I put the annual cost of repairs roundly at quite 15 per cent. of the rental.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,759. Do the landlords of this district do anything in the way of improving the stock.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Are there sires of horses, cattle, and sheep introduced by them?—Yes, there is a stud company here, in which the landlords are large shareholders.

35,760. Here in this town?—In this town, in this district.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

35,761. Do the farmers generally avail themselves of the chance of using these sires?—Yes, I think they are doing so.

35,762. Is the price nominal?—The price is reasonable.

The witness withdrew.

(Adjourned for short time.)

Mr. Clememt Lipscomb called and examined.

Chairman.

35,763. You are agent to Lord Llangattock?—Yes.

35,764. What size is his lordship's property?—It is about 6,300 acres.

35,765. What experience have you as a land agent?—I have been connected with large estates in Yorkshire and also in Devonshire, as well as in Monmouthshire.

35,766. What is the date of entry on the estate of Lord Llangattock. When do the tenants come into the holdings?—Some at Christmas, some at Candlemas, and one Lady-day tenant.

35,767. I suppose they are yearly tenancies?—Yes.

35,768. Have you knowledge of any hardships?—No.

35,769. Will you produce a copy of your agreement?—Would you like to see a copy of the actual agreement that has been signed?

35,770. A copy of the agreement of the Llangattock estate?—Yes. (The witness handed in an agreement.)

35,771. Does every tenant have a copy of this?—Yes.

35,772. And a plan?—And a plan.

35,773. What is the average rent on the estate. Can you give us that at all?—My Lord, it varies per acre from about 10*s.* There is some land at 25*s.*

35,774. Nothing higher than 25*s.*?—Yes, there is some at 30*s.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,775. Would that be accommodation land?—It is small holding.

35,776. Near town?—Near town. The average is about from 10*s.* to 15*s.* an acre.

Chairman.

35,777. Do you require the tenants to do the haulage?—They do the haulage in the case of repairs.

35,778. Have the rents been raised?—No, in no instance.

35,779. Are there any permanent reductions?—Yes. If you would like it, my Lord, I would show you instances of some of the tenancies.

35,780. You might hand that in, please?—Yes. (The witness handed in a list of reductions.)

Chairman—continued.

35,781. These are permanent reductions on the estate?—Yes, some of them; they are not the whole.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,782. Do we understand there are some abatements?—Yes, but all have been reduced; the list only gives instances which I have taken from the rental.

Mr. Grove.

35,783. Typical instances of the general run of them?—Yes, not selected.

Chairman.

35,784. The wet seasons of 1879 and 1880, I suppose, did a great deal of damage to the tenants?—Yes.

35,785. What is the general size of the farms?—About 120 acres.

35,786. Have you any opinion with regard to large or small holdings in this neighbourhood?—From my experience I have not had any alteration in the holdings.

35,787. Which would you think most satisfactory, a small holding or a large holding?—I would prefer, I think, a small holding, my Lord.

35,788. Are you pretty well off for labourers in the district?—Not so well as might be.

35,789. Are you satisfied with the cultivation generally? Are you satisfied with the state of cultivation of the land, or do you think it might be better?—I think it might be better.

35,790. Who does the laying down of permanent pasture?—On Lord Llangattock's property the cost is usually borne by the landlord.

35,791. Do you ever charge any interest on outlay?—No, in no instance.

35,792. Tenant's right, I suppose, is not recognised?—No.

35,793. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act understood in the neighbourhood?—I should say not.

35,794. Does Lord Llangattock preserve over his estate; does he keep the shooting in his own hands?—No, the Ground Game Act is availed of.

35,795. But does he keep the pheasants and the partridges?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

35,796. But the tenants shoot all the rabbits?—Yes.

35,797. There is not much damage on the estate?—No, not much damage.

35,798. What are the mutual relations; are they friendly?—Very friendly.

35,799. Is there any attention paid to agricultural education?—There has been a little done by the county council.

35,800. Has any instruction been given by classes?—In dairy work there has been.

35,801. Have you ever known any cases of profit-sharing between the farmers and their servants?—No, not in my experience, except by the labourers rearing poultry.

35,802. There are not many proprietary farmers in the neighbourhood, are there?—Not many.

35,803. Are the tenant farmers as a rule a hardworking lot of people who work on their farms?—Yes.

35,804. And the children work, I suppose, just the same as we have heard in all parts of the country?—Yes.

35,805. Can you give us a table of wages in the neighbourhood?—Yes, I can give you a table of wages which I gave to the Labour Commission.

35,806. Could you hand it in to us?—Yes.*

35,807. As regards cottages; are you pretty well off for cottages?—Yes, there are sufficient.

35,808. Are they generally held from the owner, or from the tenant farmer?—About half, I think, by each.

35,809. What is the condition of the labourer; is it satisfactory, or ought it to be improved?—I think there might be a little improvement in cottage accommodation in some districts.

35,810. When, in your opinion, did the trade depression begin?—In 1879 and 1880.

35,811. And it was the low price of produce, I suppose, that caused it?—Yes, and the wet season.

35,812. Have you any remedy that you could bring before the Commission of any sort. Is there anything you would like to state that would improve the outlook?—I think that if more capital is employed in the working, there would probably be a greater improvement in the condition.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,813. May I ask what you mean by saying that the tenant's right is not recognised. May I assume that it means a right of sale of the goodwill in change of tenancy?—Yes, that is what I understand.

35,814. Perhaps you would not admit that the tenant has any right?—Well, I would not go perhaps so far as that.

35,815. I want to know what the rights are that you deny?—The right to sell his goodwill; that is not recognised.

35,816. I suppose if it was once recognised, and a man was made to pay anything for the ingoing, he would have a right to sell that goodwill when he goes out too; therefore, you do not permit the commencement of such a system?—No.

35,817. How about unexhausted improvements; are they admitted in case of change of tenancy?—Yes.

35,818. By whom would such be paid; by the landlord or by the incoming tenant?—By the incoming tenant, as a rule.

35,819. They are, I suppose, freely admitted; it is admitted that there are such rights for unexhausted improvements?—Yes, there is a scale.

35,820. So that what you mean by saying that the tenant's right is not recognised, is with regard to the sale of goodwill?—Yes, only.

35,821. Have you had any attempt at the sale of goodwill?—No.

35,822. You have not had any?—No, I have not. There is a scale of allowances recognised on Lord Llangattock's property, which was drawn up by the Chamber of Agriculture.

35,823. So that that would be in the nature of a custom of the country, would it?—Yes.

35,824. Was that drawn up by the Chamber of Agriculture of the County of Monmouth?—Yes.

35,825. We heard something about it at Newport?—Yes; I have a copy of that if you wish to have it.

35,826. Has Lord Llangattock made much outlay upon the buildings upon his farms?—Yes, chiefly in erecting dairies.

35,827. And upon the cottages?—Yes, he is building new cottages now.

35,828. Do you think that, if any form of Land Court was created to fix the rents, or to interfere between landlord and tenant with regard to fixing values, Lord Llangattock would continue to have the same interest upon the outlay upon his buildings as he now has?—No, I think he would not. I think a Land Court would place the tenants at arm's length, as it were, and, I think, in their interest it would be an unfortunate thing for them.

Mr. Grove.

35,829. Would not that depend partly upon the conditions upon which the court was founded; for instance, suppose that the landlord and tenant were to always approach each other and try and mutually agree upon the rent, and the conditions of the letting, there would be no need for them to go to a court?—Exactly.

35,830. The court might be used for cases where there was a strong difference of opinion and where it would be necessary to have some party to interfere; but with a good landlord, a kind and sympathetic landlord, would not he be able to agree with all his tenants without going to the court, even if a court was founded?—No doubt it would make no difference to good landlords.

35,831. Then does not that remove part of your objection to a Land Court, assuming that there is easy machinery for each one to agree and not to go to court unless obliged to by

* See Mr. Roger C. Richards's Report for the Royal Labour Commission on the Agricultural Labourer, being Vol. I., England, Part IV., pp. (C.-6894.-IV.)—Secretary.

oppression?—I think the tenants are quite capable, in my experience, of looking after their own interests when they apply for a farm, and it is a very rare thing that the question of rent would arise.

35,832. But you will admit, of course, that there are two kinds of landlords. In Anglesey a witness divided them into class A and class B, and said that class A were very excellent and in full sympathy with the depressed times and with the tenant farmers; class B had bought their freeholds perhaps on high terms, and tried to exact the very utmost in rent. For class A you think no Land Court or anything of the sort is necessary; but for class B do you think a Land Court would be desirable for the tenant farmer?—I think it possible that if there was any disagreement a third party would be desirable; but I think that takes place now, in my experience.

35,833. Do you mean by mutual reference?—Mutual reference to some umpire.

35,834. Did we gather from you that you consider that they are rather short of labour on the land, generally speaking?—Yes.

35,835. Is that because, not of want of cottages, because I think you say there are plenty, but is it caused, do you think, by the present depressed times in agriculture?—No doubt it is caused by the farmers not being able to give a higher rate of wages.

35,836. I notice that in the answers that have been tabulated, you speak of liberal compensation being given for improvements. Have there been any disputes between the landlord and the tenants on your estate as regards the amount of compensation?—No.

35,837. As a member of the Technical Instruction Committee, which you are, I am glad to say, do you think that the present county council teaching of butter making is useful?—Decidedly.

35,838. And fairly well availed of in this part of the country?—Yes.

35,839. Have you any field experiments going on in any part?—Not immediately here, but it is contemplated.

35,840. Do you attach much value to that; do you think it is good?—Yes, I think that is an excellent thing.

35,841. In cases where land is laid down to pasture, does the landlord find the seeds?—Always, on Lord Llangattock's property.

35,842. Does he do anything more than that; does he make any allowance towards the extra labour or any allowance of that kind?—The usual practice is to allow the cost of the seeds, and to allow a half year's rent on the field which is laid down.

35,843. That is a very nice feature, that allowance of rent, because a thing cannot be of so much service, it serving him for a short time only. As to fruit culture, do you find any requests from your tenants for orcharding?—None.

Mr. Grove—continued.

35,844. If they did make such requests would Lord Llangattock find them fruit trees, do you think?—I have no doubt he would.

35,845. Do you suppose he would go so far as protecting those trees for four or five years?—Yes.

35,846. Do you think the climate in this part of the county would be suitable for growing fruit?—Yes, I do, for hardy fruit.

35,847. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers as to purchases or sale of produce?—I think not.

35,848. Is there any recreation provided for the farm labourers in the villages on your estate?—Well, there are no villages in this part of the county, but we have provided recreation ground. Lord Llangattock has provided recreation ground.

35,849. Are there any cottages set apart for them to be used as reading-rooms, or is there anything done in that direction?—It has been tried, but the population is so scattered that we found it did not answer, so very few attended them.

35,850. You speak of the large amount of improvements that have been effected. Have you worked it out as a per-centage upon the rent roll, showing something like how much per cent. it would amount to upon a term of years?—For the time I have been connected with Lord Llangattock it has averaged from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. That does not include new buildings; that is repairs.

35,851. Just ordinary repairs?—Yes.

35,852. In the agreement you have put in is there anything contrary to the Ground Game Act. For instance, have you got those words in that the tenants are not allowed to shoot?—There is a clause in the agreement which I found in existence when I came, but that is covered by the Ground Game Act, that is overridden by the Ground Game Act, which is mentioned in the agreement.

35,853. But you put in an agreement which was signed recently, I think you said?—Yes, there is one in.

35,854. Does that contain that clause that the tenant is not allowed to shoot?—Subject to the provisions of the Ground Game Act.

35,855. Does it say that in the agreement?—It says that in the agreement.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,856. Your view is that the question of rent is best left to be settled between the landlord and tenant, I suppose, from what you said just now?—Yes.

35,857. And that it must ultimately be settled by the law of supply and demand?—No doubt.

35,858. Is there in this neighbourhood much of what you would call land-hunger?—No, I should say not.

35,859. When a farm is let are there many applicants for it?—There are sufficient.

35,860. Several?—I have always found in my experience that there are quite sufficient to enable me to choose a good tenant.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

35,861. How many would you say, five or six?—Oh, three or four.

35,862. And then, I suppose, if you were to let a farm that was vacant to the highest bidder——?—Certainly not.

35,863. You would get a higher rent than the usual rents that are now charged by the landlord?—Yes.

35,864. Why would you not accept the highest bidder?—It is a very difficult question to answer, I think. I think one has to ascertain the character of the man and his general adaptability for a farm. Some men are more capable of managing a grass farm of course, and some more capable of managing an arable farm; but I think one uses one's judgment in selecting a man.

35,865. And you use your judgment as to what is best for the landlord?—No. As a rule I am governed more by a tenant who I think will be successful and permanent.

35,866. Who will make a good tenant?—Yes.

35,867. If you got a bad tenant on the farm he might let the farm run down?—Yes.

35,868. And he would in other ways, perhaps, damage the property?—Yes.

35,869. So that there are sufficient reasons, looking at it simply upon the principle of supply and demand, why a good landlord should not accept a high-bidding tenant in all cases?—Yes.

35,870. So that, in fact, looking at it from the point of view of a good landlord, it would not pay to let his land by tender or to charge a rack rent?—No, certainly not.

35,871. Do you think that on the whole that is a sufficient safeguard against the competition for farms and anything like land-hunger raising the rent in the long run higher than it ought to be?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,872. In your summary, Mr. Lipscomb, you say that changes in tenancy are less frequent than formerly. Have you noticed whether there is any difference on good and bad times in the number of changes of tenancy?—I think where you have a great number of changes there is decidedly a letting down of the farms. I think where changes are frequent that farms are sure to decrease in value.

35,873. That is, on bad times there are a larger number of changes?—Yes.

35,874. Then your answer implies that farmers are in a more thriving condition than they have been, because you say that the changes are less frequent?—Yes, I think that when the bad times came in 1879 and 1880, the losses were so very heavy that a great number of farmers were utterly stranded and unsettled; they lost so much capital at once. I think now that farmers form a more accurate opinion of the true position of things, the landlords they live under are generous, and there is probably, I should say, less uncertainty with regard to seasons; seasons are better now than they were in the course of 1879 and 1880.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

35,875. But last season was a most disastrous one, was it not?—It was with respect to hay crop on the high lands.

35,876. It did not affect Monmouthshire, I suppose?—Not so severely, I think, certainly, as some parts I know.

35,877. Then may we take it as your reply that farmers are really better off now than they were about the year 1880?—I think they are better able now, in the sense of being more wideawake, to meet the difficulties which arise. I think they have learnt a lesson which has been very severe.

35,878. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act operative on Lord Llangattock's estate?—I have not had any outgoing tenants in my experience except in two instances I think, and they were allowed to make use of the Agricultural Holdings Act or to go out under the agreement; it is perfectly optional.

35,879. Did they claim under the agreement or under the Act?—Under the agreement, under the scale of allowances.

35,880. There is a scale of allowances?—Yes.

35,881. How was the claim settled under the agreement?—By mutual arrangement.

35,882. What is the course adopted; does each appoint a referee?—Yes.

35,883. And it is settled without any difficulty?—Yes, settled without any difficulty.

35,884. Without occasion to appoint an umpire?—Yes.

35,885. Do you say that you have had two cases only?—Yes.

35,886. Was there any claim put in?—No.

35,887. It seems to me that your reply as to tenants being better off does not harmonise with your answer respecting the remedy. You say that there should be more capital employed on the land?—Yes. I think tenants are living much harder than they did. I think they are living on less than they did in those days.

35,888. Why do they live on less—because they have less, I suppose?—Yes, I suppose so.

35,889. What is your explanation as to this. In one place you say that they are better off than they were about the year 1879 or 1880, and yet you say that more capital should be employed on the land?—I think they have had a bitter experience, and that is my meaning in saying that they are better off, in the sense that we are supposed to profit by experience in everything in this life. I think the times in 1879 and 1880 came upon them very suddenly, and I do not think any tenant was able, as it were, to grapple with it, there was such a heavy loss.

35,890. Do you find any desire among tenant farmers to take farms larger than they are able to stock?—Yes, I do find that there is such a desire.

35,891. What is the reason?—I think it is want of judgment, I should say, is the reason—I do not know the reason.

35,892. You think that farmers are not alive to their own interests?—I think it is a mistake to take too big a farm, and to take a farm which is not commensurate with your capital.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

35,893. Or is it because they find that, as a rule, the large farms are cheaper than the small farms. Is that so?—No, I do not think so. I think rents are very proportionate.

35,894. You think there is not much difference between large farms and small farms?—No, not per acre, except they are under exceptional circumstances, such as being near a town—a small holding.

35,895. Which do you find the most skilful farmer—the large farmer or the small farmer?—I should say the small farmer.

35,896. It has been repeatedly told us that it is the large farmer, and for this reason, that, as a rule, he employs more machinery?—In that sense I think the large farmer would be, but when I say the small farmer I think that, as a rule, the small farmers pay more attention to the profits which are to be made out of smaller things on a farm, such as poultry, dairy work, and so on.

35,897. They take a greater personal share in the details of the work?—Yes.

35,898. Which do you think thrives best—the small farmer or the big farmer?—I think the small farmer.

35,899. Then, are we to take it as your opinion that small farms generally pay best?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,900. What is your custom with regard to the purchasing of manure? You state in your summary, "Allowances for purchased manures." What is your custom?—By that I mean that in any cases where pastures have been laid down at the cost of the landlord, there have been allowances made in subsequent years.

35,901. You not only find them seed, but you assist them as well in getting manure?—Yes, in many cases; not always, but in a great many cases.

35,902. Then, you consider the agricultural labourer is pretty well off on your estate?—Certainly.

35,903. I see in the report which you made to the Labour Commission, that you say you "never know whether you are meeting the "squire's daughters or the cottagers' daughters, "the latter are dressed so well." They must be dressed very well, I should think?—Yes, very well. The words quoted are not mine; they were said to me, and I quoted them to the Labour Commissioner.

35,904. The scale of wages is higher than it is elsewhere, and I am pleased to find also that you employ the labourers' children on the farm?—Yes.

35,905. You give them piece-work?—Yes.

35,906. And you find they do very well?—Yes, very well.

35,907. Have you any model cottages on the estate?—I have not a plan here, but the cottages we are building now have three rooms downstairs and three bedrooms.

35,908. What might be the probable expense of erecting these cottages. At what cost is it done?—If they are single cottages they cost us 300*l.* to 350*l.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

35,909. And when they are attached to another they are done a little cheaper, I suppose?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

35,910. Are those double cottages or single cottages?—Single cottages.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,911. Do they pay a rent for those cottages, or is it an ordinary housing?—They pay no rent.

35,912. Then, are those cottages convenient for the men to go to work—close on the farm?—Yes.

35,913. We find in most places that the cottagers mostly run to the villages, and have a long way to walk from and to their work?—Yes, that is very inconvenient. I think they ought to be as near their work as you can get them.

35,914. I think we have found that everywhere—that they want more cottages for the agricultural labourer right on the spot. How about gardens. Have you any allotments?—No, it is a very difficult thing; I do not think it would be possible to work allotments.

35,915. Not in this district?—No. Nearly all the cottages have a sufficient garden attached to them. Very often they have a bit of orchard ground attached to them as well.

35,916. Sufficient to raise potatoes for the use of the family?—Yes. I think it is a mistake to give a labourer more than he can conveniently work in the evening.

35,917. I do not think he would require more, as a rule?—No, I think they are quite sufficient.

35,918. They do not apply for more; they only want just what they require for their own use; they have no time to attend to any more?—No.

35,919. Then, what kind of labour is generally employed in this neighbourhood; do they generally on the farms keep the best men or do the best men go elsewhere?—I think the best men go away.

35,920. Do you not think it would be to the farmer's advantage, and that it would keep the best men on the farm, if he paid a little more wages?—No doubt it would be more satisfactory.

35,921. It would be best in the end, would it not?—Yes, no doubt.

35,922. But, as a rule, the aged men stay on the farms?—Yes, as a rule.

35,923. Do you find them as competent as years ago?—No, certainly not.

35,924. Do they take the pride they did formerly in looking after their horses and so on?—No, I am afraid not; I should say not.

35,925. Do you think that if the labourers had these cottages that you have—these model cottages—that it would be the means of keeping them from running into the towns and villages?—I think we are passing, and we have been for some years passing, I hope, through a transition state with regard to labourers. I think, if their cottages were better and the wages were on a scale such as you would like to find them at, it is probable then that the men would be induced to stay in the country.

35,926. Yes, it is generally a healthier pursuit than that of mining. Is there much attention paid to poultry on the farms that you are connected with?—More than formerly.

35,927. More than used to be?—Yes.

35,928. And more still could be done, I suppose?—Yes.

35,929. Do you provide them with better accommodation for their poultry in poultry houses?—Yes.

Chairman.

35,930. There is one question I should like to clear up about the haulage. In the statement which you have handed in you state hauling was done away with, but that hauling you referred to was not the hauling of the materials for building?—No, it is a clause in the old agreement.

35,931. That is the old form of agreement as to hauling the coal up to the manor house, the castle, or whatever it is?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. S. C. BOSANQUET called and examined.

Chairman.

35,932. You are Mr. S. C. Bosanquet, of Dingestow Court, Monmouth?—Yes.

35,933. You are the chairman of quarter sessions, I believe?—Yes, I am.

35,934. You own about 3,000 acres in Monmouthsire?—Yes, something under that, about 2,600 let to tenants.

35,935. What is the management of the estate, do you manage it yourself?—I manage it myself.

35,936. You have no agent?—I have no agent.

35,937. What is the date of entry on your farms?—February 2nd is the usual date for most of them.

35,938. Are they generally leases or yearly tenancies?—Yearly tenancies.

35,939. Do you happen to have one of your agreements with you?—Yes, I have brought a form of agreement with me (producing same), but they are mostly verbal agreements. It is the only form I have.

35,940. Do you generally give this agreement to all your tenants or not?—They are most of them verbal agreements. Something less than half of them, I should think, have had those written agreements.

35,941. Then you have had no demand for leases?—None whatever.

35,942. How do you fix your rents?—By agreement with the incoming tenant. The rent is very seldom changed when a new tenant comes. We almost always ask and receive the same as before.

35,943. Have rents been raised on this estate?—No, they have not been raised. The rents are smaller than they used to be. There was a time when rents were raised, but that was before they came into my hands. They are all now lower than before that.

35,944. Can you tell us at all what reductions have been made?—The principal reductions were made before I came into the property. I came into the property 11 years ago, and the largest reductions were made from 1879 to 1881. There were reductions of about 20 per cent. for the most part about 1881, and there were some few before, and some have been made since—some by myself. The reductions now amount to very nearly 30 per cent. on an average.

Chairman—continued.

35,945. Those are the permanent reductions?—The permanent reductions. I said 20 per cent., but that was all at one time. The average reductions I find, on looking over my accounts, come to nearly 30 per cent.

35,946. Are the rents paid up on the nail, or do you give them any time of grace?—They are paid generally four months, or rather under four months, after the time. The February rents are paid about the end of May or the beginning of June.

35,947. Of course the tithes are paid by the tenants?—The tithes in all the old tenancies continue as they were.

35,948. Then land tax?—The land tax is mostly paid by the tenants.

35,949. And chief rent?—The chief rent, what there is, is paid by myself. That is a small matter.

35,950. Are rates paid by the tenant?—The rates are paid by the tenants except in Dingestow, where there is a school board. I have always been accustomed to pay part of the school rate for them.

35,951. As regards labourers. Are you well off for labourers?—Labourers are scarce in harvest time, but in other times there is no difficulty.

35,952. I suppose a lot of land has gone down to grass in your neighbourhood?—Yes, it has gradually been laid down more than it used to be.

35,953. Have you any trouble with the game. Do you keep the game yourself?—I keep the game myself. I do not preserve to any great extent.

35,954. And there is not much trouble with that?—No; very little trouble.

35,955. Do many labourers belong to benefit societies. Do you know anything about that?—I should say that the larger body do not belong to benefit societies. Some do, but I should think on the whole the majority do not, as far as I know.

Chairman—continued.

35,956. In your opinion the tenant farmers are a hardworking industrious class?—The tenant farmers in my opinion work, if anything, harder than the labourers, certainly as hard.

35,957. Do the children work?—The children as they grow up work on the farms.

35,958. Then they are set up in farms, I suppose?—Some of them get set up in farms.

35,959. Is the servants' accommodation pretty decent and good?—It is only moderate. They live in attics in the farmhouses. It is fair accommodation, not always arranged as one could wish. The farmhouse is not always built conveniently.

35,960. As regards cottages, can you tell the Commissioners anything about them?—As far as numbers go, they have rather gone out of use than otherwise. It is more difficult to let cottages now. Cottages are more apt to stand empty than they used to be, there are fewer labourers about the neighbourhood.

35,961. As regards gardens, have they got gardens attached to them?—Almost invariably. I do not think I know of any case in which there is not a garden attached to the cottage.

35,962. Have you got any small holdings at all in the neighbourhood?—No, there are no small holdings in our parish, and very few that I know of in the neighbourhood.

35,963. No place where a man can keep a cow, or anything of that sort?—No.

35,964. No common where he can turn out a cow?—No, there is no common.

35,965. I suppose the young men go to the mines?—A good many go to the mines.

35,966. And I suppose you have felt the foreign competition very much as regards price?—Yes, the prices have gone down, and of course that has been very hard upon the farmers.

35,967. The relations between yourself and your tenants are very friendly?—Oh, yes, there has been no trouble in that way whatever. I have always been friendly with all of them.

Mr. Griffiths.

35,968. Have you had many changes on your estate?—No, not very many.

35,969. When you have changes, do you have many applications for farms?—Yes, generally a good many.

35,970. Why should the tenant pay the land tax. It is a landlord's tax?—I took the rents pretty much as they were when I came into the estate. Of course it is a mere matter of arrangement whether the rent is raised, or the land tax is paid, but I have never altered it. In one or more cases I have taken the land tax upon me, but mostly I have left it as it was.

35,971. Then you pay a portion of the school board rate as well, do you not?—Yes, I always pay in fact part of the school board rate for those tenants who have a board rate, which is only in the parish of Dingestow.

35,972. You state here that you had a claim for general improvement?—Yes; one tenant that was going out said that he had improved the farm, and he said that anyone coming in would give him something for it. I preferred doing it myself, and I got a valuer to look it over and take his statement, and to say what he thought the improvements were worth, and I paid it.

35,973. You came to terms?—I paid him what the valuer said on his statement was fair. I did not interfere myself really, except to ask the valuer to act.

35,974. Was that as much as his claim, may I ask?—Very nearly, not quite.

35,975. Then you assist in letting down the land to pasture as well?—Yes, I have allowed the seeds for it.

35,976. You generally pay for the seeds?—When I have been asked to do so I have done so. I think, in some cases, when land has been laid down, it has simply been letting it go.

35,977. Can you tell us whether farmers have any trouble in getting their servants to come in at nights. We have found in some place there has been some difficulty?—That I could not tell you, I do not know that they have.

35,978. Unfortunately we have not many tenant farmers come before us here to-day?—I am sorry. I was in hopes that some of the tenant farmers were coming. Mr. Nicholas, I understood, was coming here, and he would be able to tell you better than I, no doubt. That is a point on which I have not heard any complaints.

Mr. Richard Jones.

35,979. Have you effected any repairs on your property since you came into possession?—Yes, every year there have been repairs.

35,980. Have you charged any interest?—No.

35,981. I suppose the neighbourhood where you live is quite an English neighbourhood?—Yes, quite, it is only five miles from here.

35,982. It seems to me that you have treated your tenants very liberally, that is my opinion?—Well, I think about here the landlords generally do the improvements, and I do not think, as a rule, as far as I know, they do charge interest in these parts.

Mr. Seebohm.

35,983. You mentioned, I think, as a previous witness did also, that when a farm was to let there was a considerable number of applicants generally?—Yes, I have always had several applications for any farm that has been to let.

35,984. Do you think the competition rent, or the rent that the highest bidder would give would be a much higher rent than the ordinary rents that are given now?—I should say not very much. I have no doubt I could get more if I tried for it, but I do not suppose that it would be advisable to charge very much more. I have no doubt that if it was put up to competition the rents would be higher than they are when fixed by agreement, as they are now.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

35,985. But for reasons of your own, you, as a landlord, would not take the highest bidder?—No, I should not take the highest bidder.

35,986. Would you kindly say why?—Well, I like to choose my tenant. I like to have a man whose character I know. It never would have occurred to me to put a farm to auction, as it were. What I inquire about is the character of the man, and whether he is likely to do the farm well.

35,987. So that as between a good landlord and his incoming tenants the law of supply and demand really settles the question pretty rightfully, and does not make a competition rent the rent which is actually charged?—No, I do not think it is a competition rent, certainly.

35,988. Now in the case of a landlord who had recently purchased his estate and given a large price for it, and wanted to make the most of it, would you think it an unjust thing on his part to let the farm by tender?—No, I do not know that I should say that it was unjust.

35,989. Would you say that it was inexpedient—that for his own sake he ought not to do it?—Yes, for his own sake I should not recommend it.

35,990. Do you think that the punishment which would come to him, in the natural order of things, for taking such a course, would in the long run be sufficiently deterrent to prevent its becoming a common thing that landlords should let their farms by tender?—Well, it is not a matter that I have considered, I confess. I have never had occasion to consider it.

35,991. I asked the question, of course, because we have on the one side the evidence that there is no difficulty, and that in fact with the good landlords, the rents are very fair rents, but the difficulty seems to be how to deal with exceptional cases. Would you have a strong opinion as to whether it is ever necessary by law to give the power to have a judicial rent, or a rent fixed by a third party?—I do not think so. I do not think the rents would be ever exceptionally or unreasonably high, as far as I can judge by what I have seen around me.

35,992. You think the effect of the law of supply and demand is sufficient?—Yes.

35,993. It does not strike you that to meet the exceptional cases anything further is really required?—I do not think the competition for farms is so keen that people would give an unreasonable rent. I do not think there is that sort of land-hunger here that would cause them to do that.

35,994. But in a case where there was land-hunger, say up among the mountains, where there are smaller farms, would that alter your opinion. Would you be quite satisfied with things being left to the law of supply and demand?—I really cannot express an opinion. I cannot say that there might not be a difficulty, that farms might not be put up too high in that way, but as I say, it is a matter I have not paid any attention to. I have not considered the matter.

35,995. Do you think that the competition for farms and the tendency to give too high a rent is mostly the result of want of knowledge or ignorance on part of the farmers, or that they are too sanguine in their temperament, and that that would be removed by further education?—I do not think that the people about here, the farmers that I know, would be induced to give a rent very much higher than the land is worth. I think they would refuse a farm rather than give a rent that would not answer. I think most of them would know sufficiently about the land to do that, and I think they would act upon it.

35,996. And looking to the future, would you think that they would become more and more able to make their own bargains rather than less and less able. Would not you, from the spread of intelligence and the lessons of experience in these bad times, think that that will be so?—Yes, I think they would be more careful as to making too high a bid. I think some time ago, when times were looking better, there was more likelihood of their taking farms with a sort of speculative price. I do not think in these times they would do it.

35,997. I think you stated that there is no demand for leases, but in any case where they were asked for in past years you readily granted them?—No, I cannot say I did grant them, I say I should grant them if they were asked for. I have no objection to leases, but none of the tenants wished for them.

35,998. Do not wish for them now?—I have never been asked for a lease, and the only ones I have spoken to on the subject say that they prefer going on as they are. I should have no objection, personally, to a lease.

35,999. You let a great deal verbally, I think you said?—Yes.

36,000. No written agreement is then given to them in any shape, I suppose?—In that case there is no written memorandum.

36,001. I think you have built what we might term model cottages on your estate?—I have built some cottages. I should hardly call them model cottages. They are fair cottages, they are sufficient.

36,002. Is the superior kind of cottage appreciated by the labourer as compared with the old kind of cottages. In some cases we know that they much prefer to live in the old-fashioned place, with its inconveniences, rather than in the better kind of cottages which have been built at an increased expense for them?—The cottages I have built have been for my own people, not for those who are working under the tenants. I think that they do appreciate better cottages, but they would rather go on in an old cottage that they have lived in all their life than have it pulled about, very often. That is a matter of sentiment.

36,003. Or rather than pay, I suppose, any increased rent?—I do not think they would be inclined to pay increased rent, even for a better cottage as a rule.

36,004. As to fruit culture, do you advocate and try to increase as far as you can amongst your tenants the growth of fruit?—There is no fruit except apples that they go in for at all. I have tried, so far as I have any influence, to get them to grow better kinds of apples, and I think they are inclined to do it themselves now. There used to be nothing but cider fruit as they call it. Now they look more to fruit for selling for market produce, and I encourage that.

36,005. Do you know whether any of the tenants have asked Mr. Grant, the Technical Instructor in Agriculture for the County Council, to come and give them any advice in any way as to what particular kinds of trees would be suitable for certain positions?—I do not know that they have any of them asked him. I have consulted him myself on one occasion when the tenant wanted some trees, but I do not know that any of them have asked him themselves.

36,006. I would like to mention that Mr. Grant is quite ready at any time to give his advice as far as he can, and would go to any part of the county on being requested to do so?—I think that is a very good thing.

36,007. Now as to the butter school, do you think that the teaching by the county council has been beneficial?—We have not had it very close to us. It is very difficult to get a class together.

36,008. Is that simply because of the geographical position of the teaching, or is it simply because of disinclination on the part of the farmers or servants to go to it?—Both reasons, I think. The distances make a difficulty, but I do not think a great many of them see the advantage of it. I hope they will.

36,009. What is your own personal view of the matter, do you think that it is advantageous?—I think it would be a very good thing if they could learn more.

36,010. For instance, to ask a practical question, do any of your tenants that you know use the separator, is it used at all?—No, I think not.

36,011. What would be your idea as to what is termed security of tenure? Do you think that something in that direction might be done?—You mean selling the interest, that idea; you mean that the incoming tenant would pay something as compensation to the outgoing tenant?

36,012. Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

No, that is free sale.

Witness.

I want to know what the question means.

Mr. Grove.

36,013. What I want to see is this. The general idea is that insecurity of tenure prevents the tenant farmer from developing the land and making it as productive as it might be?—I think the tenants feel sufficiently secure with their yearly tenancies, or else they would ask for leases, I presume. I think they feel they have all reasonable security for going on.

36,014. And you think that under the Agricultural Holdings Act, and the general custom of the country, they get pretty well compensated for the improvements they make when they leave a tenancy?—I do not know whether it is quite sufficient in itself. I have had no claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act in this part at all. The only claim that I really had was the one I mentioned, in which a general claim for compensation for general improvements was made, and in point of fact very little, I think, would have been got, if anything, under the Agricultural Holdings Act in that case.

36,015. Are the conditions of the Agricultural Holdings Act pretty well known amongst the tenants, do you suppose?—I cannot say.

36,016. I am afraid not. From replies one gets in various places they do not seem to know very much about it. Then I think you allude to foreign competition as being one of the causes at any rate of the agricultural depression?—Yes, I think it is undoubtedly.

36,017. Do you think the marking of foreign meat, for instance, would be of any benefit?—I think it would probably be of some slight benefit.

36,018. Could you suggest any other remedy at all as far as regards the present outlook of agriculture in any way?—No, I do not know that I can.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,019. Will you tell us what the verbal agreement is that you make with your tenants?—There are no terms as a rule.

36,020. You simply mention the amount of rent?—There is nothing mentioned as a rule except the amount of rent. There are certain understandings between us, but they are not put into words.

36,021. Does the custom of the county as settled by the Chamber of Agriculture of Monmouthshire apply?—For the most part, I think. There are certain outgoing rights, of course.

36,022. And those rights will be settled in accordance with that custom on your own estate?—Yes. It is a matter I have never been able quite to satisfy myself about, but in some cases on certain farms there seem to be some differences of custom.

36,023. In respect to the improvements compensated for by yourself, were they based upon the custom recommended by the agricultural custom of the county?—No, I do not think they were. I left it entirely in the valuer's hands.

36,024. May I ask what those particular improvements were. Were they in the nature of drainage, or were they in the nature of structural improvements upon the farm?—Neither one nor the other.

36,025. Good husbandry?—There was some improvement in the husbandry. The farm had rather been let down before the tenant came in, and he had brought his hedges into better order It was general cultivation. The drainage I always do myself.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,026. Do you do all the drainage?—I do everything except the hauling. The tenants generally haul the pipes.

36,027. And you do not charge any interest?—No, I do not charge any interest.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,028. Is it not the fact that owing to the races to-day a great many of the farmers have gone there and are not likely to attend here?—It is very possible, I think.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Chepstow.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY.

Bank Buildings, Chepstow, Monmouthshire, Saturday, 17th March 1894.

Present:

Lord CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (Chairman).

Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn, Bart.
Mr. John Morgan Griffiths.
Mr. Edwin Grove.
Mr. Richard Jones.
Mr. Frederic Seebohm, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. T. E. Morris, Acting as Assistant Secretary.

Mr. R. T. Bassett called and examined.

Chairman.

36,029. You are the Master of the Glamorganshire Foxhounds?—I am.

36,030. Do you wish to make any statement to the Commission?—I do. I wish to make a statement with regard to the evidence given by Mr. B. Maddy, a rabbit-catcher, given to you at Cardiff.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,031. What is the number of the question and answer to which you refer?—His evidence begins at No. 26,181; and also with regard to my own tenant, Mr. Jenkin Thomas, jun.

Chairman.

36,032. What number is that?—26,522.

36,033. Will you take the first?—Maddy gave evidence rebutting mine, at Cowbridge, with regard to the quantity of game and rabbits in that district. I only wish to say this, that on one of the farms where he is supposed to have caught a large number of rabbits——

36,034. What number is that?—He caught 800 rabbits.

36,035. But what is the number of the question?—No. 26,197.

36,036. "I caught about 800 rabbits on from 30 to 40 acres of land."?—Yes. I applied on behalf of a tenant farmer for a farm adjoining that, close by it, next to it, and I wrote to Mr. Knox, the agent for Miss Talbot, for him. Mr. Knox wrote back to me, and said he was sorry I had not applied before, and that there were already 23 applications for the farm.

36,037. What does that rebut? Do you deny that 800 rabbits were caught on 30 to 40 acres of land?—No; but it shows that nobody was afraid to take the land on account of the rabbits. There were 23 applications for it.

36,038. Does he say that no one was willing to take the farm?—Yes.

36,039. Where does he say that?—He does not say that, but that was what was given to me at the time in the district.

36,040. But do you rebut that?—Yes.

36,041. Do you, of your own personal knowledge, say that this man did not catch 800 rabbits on 30 to 40 acres of land?—No, I cannot say quite as much as that.

Chairman—continued.

36,042. All you can say is that there were 20 applications for the farm next door?—Yes; and I wish to say that a tenant was not afraid to take the farm on account of the number of rabbits there.

36,043. Your inference from that is that a tenant was not afraid to take the next farm?—Exactly.

36,044. But you do not contradict the statement that 800 rabbits were caught there?—Oh, I could not do that, of course.

36,045. Then I come to Question 26,226, "Do you find that rabbits are thicker on the "Margam estate than on any other estate?—"(A.) They have been thicker than any other "part that I have been to this summer." Do you contradict that?—He says, "At Penlline, in "the summer of last year, I killed over 5,000 "rabbits in one parish and sold them."

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,045*a*. Is that Maddy's evidence?—Yes. If he killed 5,000 rabbits in the parish of Penlline, which is a very small parish—there are only about four farmers in it—what became of the money that those rabbits were sold for? There is not the slightest difficulty in getting 1*s*., and in some cases 1*s*. 6*d*. and 2*s*. for live rabbits in the Rhondda Valley for coursing, and, taking his own figures, 5,000 rabbits at 1*s*. each, I would point out that there was a very large surplus left over for compensation.

Chairman.

36,046. Then do you contradict that? Do you say that 5,000 rabbits were not killed?—I say that it is very unlikely.

36,047. That is all you can say?—I do not think the 5,000 rabbits were there myself.

Mr. Grove.

36,048. Maddy stated that the tenant farmers paid him 4*s*. a dozen for catching the rabbits?—Very well, then there is the balance for compensation.

Chairman.

36,049. I do not think we need go into the matter of who bought the rabbits, or whether they were sold or not. All we want to know is, do you contradict the statement that 5,000

rabbits were killed in this one parish?—I say it is very unlikly.

36,050. Your opinion is that it is very unlikely, but you do not go further?—I think it is very improbable that 5,000 were killed in that parish. Of course, I should not like to say that they were not, but I do not think it is likely. I am very intimately acquainted with the parish. I know it very well.

36,051. Your opinion is that 5,000 rabbits were not killed?—No.

See 26,522–631.

36,052. But you are not able to prove that they were not?—No, I am certainly not.

36,053. Is there anything else?—With regard to the evidence of my tenant, Jenkin Thomas, junior.

36,054. What number is this?—At Question 26,538 he complains of being given notice to quit his farm.

36,055. That is Mr. Jenkin Thomas, junior's, evidence?—Yes.

36,056. "I told him we had had a difficulty to "pay for the rent owing to this, that the back "land was so poor that we could not compete with "other farmers in the state of the market and "of prices. I told him that there was no form "of bone, flesh, or muscle in the land. He "wrote back to me, and I do not know whether "it was a mishap of his or not, in an unstamped "envelope, and said he was sorry he had rented "the farm." What does he mean by that—let the farm to another man——

36,057. "He did not give an explanation "why he sent father away from the farm. He "did not give us any decided explanation why "he sent father away, and he said it was, of "course, too late then—that he had rented the "farm"?—Yes.

36,058. Is there anything on that you wish to say?—To go back a little further, to the previous question; I came into this estate a few years ago. Jenkin Thomas's father was then under notice to quit, to leave the farm.

36,059. Then I think we had better read that, if you want to refer to the question before this?—I wish not to waste your time.

36,060. But we must go into this. He says: "The landlord himself telling us that he would "not allow any more rabbiting." Is that correct?—Certainly not.

36,061. "We had notice when the late Mr. "Bassett died of the change of landlord, and "when we went before the present landlord he "spoke very grossly to us." Is that the fact?—Certainly not.

36,062. "I do not know why—and he gave "us an allowance to continue in the farm for a "certain time." Is that right?—He was under notice to quit when I came into the property, and I withdrew that notice. I did not like to turn him out the first year I came into it. It was to give him another chance.

36,063. "We were renting afterwards under "Mrs. Bassett, the widow of the late Mr. "Richard Bassett, and from Mr. Thurston "Bassett, Crossways. The lower part of the "farm belonged to Mrs. Bassett, and this other "part of the farm and buildings belonged to "Mr. Thurston Bassett." Is that so?—That is quite right. The farm was divided into two.

36,064. "We had notice to quit the last "February." Is that right?—Yes.

36,065. "And we thought that Mr. Bassett "was going to buy the whole of the farm, and "we lingered until we thought he would be "sole landlord." That, of course, you cannot give an opinion upon. "The day we were going "to pay the rent my sister was taken very "poorly, and we were not able to leave her "bedside for a month. In consequence we had "to stay at home, and father had to stay at "home as well. A man came during this time "to walk the farm." That is, to go over the farm?—To look over the farm.

36,066. "I suppose he saw Mr. Bassett." Is that right?—I sent him.

36,067. "And rented the farm without giving "a chance to father, who had been in the farm "12 years, and he did not owe the landlord a "penny of rent." Is that correct?—He had been there 12 years, and he did not owe any rent; but as regards not giving him a chance, will you allow me to say this, that the notice was given to him on the 2nd of February, and the first intimation I ever heard that they wished to stay was given to me on the 24th July following. I had never seen or heard until then, and I thought it was time that I looked out for a new tenant.

36,068. "Without giving a chance to father "he rented the farm to this tenant, who is "coming in now. I wrote to Mr. Bassett, and I "asked him this. I said he was sorry he was "turning my father out." Did he write that?—He wrote me the letter I have here.

36,069. "He," that is, his father, "was a man "78 years of age—nearly 79." Then comes question 26,538 that I have read before, about the farm being so poor, and there being no form of bone, flesh, or muscle in the land, and so on, and that you wrote back on an unstamped envelope.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,069*a*. What is the point in the letter you have there?—It has nothing at all about it: I will hand in the letter (producing same).

Chairman.

36,070. This is the letter: "Lilliput Farm, "Bonvilstone, Cardiff, July 24th, 1893. R. T. "Bassett. Sir, I am very sorry father has "failed to meet you at Cowbridge lately. He "intended coming the day the rent was to be "paid, but my sister was taken suddenly ill, "and he had to leave for the doctor at once, so "he was prevented. There has been a great "fault on his side for not coming to you sooner. "He heard from Mr. Thomas, the agent, that you "were about buying the whole of the farm, "and left it thinking that it would be wiser to "do so until you had purchased the whole." By "left it," I suppose he means left the matter to stand over?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

36,071. "I must express, sir, a deep regret at " the intention of turning him out of the farm " this year, owing to the state of trade and " price of stock. If the time was equal to years " past he could sell enough off the farm to keep " him comfortable during his life. Last spring " he was a little long in paying some arrears of " rent due to you, but I can assure you it was " altogether due to the state of trade, stock and " corn being so low in price. Perhaps you are " not satisfied with the state of the farm, as you " expressed when we were with you, sir, yet " there is no other answer to give but that the " time being so bad we were not able to expend " money on labour; the great difficulty was to " meet the demands of payments. I have no " more to ask you, only will you please re- " consider the case? If you will let him stay " another year; he is getting on in years being " now 78 years of age, and it is a pity for him " to have to sell off the farm less than will keep " him the remainder of his days comfortable. " The reason I mention another year is because " there is all possibility of things selling at a " better price. Will you please let him know " when he can see you, sir. I am yours faithfully, " Jenkin Thomas, junior." You say that that does not agree with the statement that he made in evidence?—Certainly not. They never asked me to stay in the farm. That is the first intimation I ever had that they wished to stay in the farm; that was on the 24th July. I had never seen the men between February and July —never been near them.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,072. What was your reason for giving a notice to Mr. Thomas?—To quit the farm?

36,073. Yes?—Directly after your meeting in Cardiff, when I saw the evidence that he gave against me, I sent a valuer to the farm there to make a report on the farm, and I would wish to hand in the report to show the reason why I gave him notice to quit (handing in report).

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,074. You have told us, I think, that there was a notice to quit when you succeeded to the farm?—Yes, I withdrew that. I gave him a chance for another year.

Mr. Grove.

36,075. Why was the original notice to quit given to him?—Because the farm was in such a terrible bad state.

Chairman.

The report says: "The farm is not by any " means in a proper state of cultivation, and will " require a great outlay to bring it to a proper " state of cultivation. It would be unreasonable " to expect an incoming tenant to bear all the " expense. I have no hesitation in saying, " however competent a man may be as a farmer " and whatever his capital, that if he had the " farm rent free for the first year, he must be

Chairman—continued.

" at a loss. It is quite evident that Mr. Thomas, " the present tenant, has not enough of capital " to manage the farm. John Lewis, Brigam " Farm, licensed valuer, Nov. 10th, 1893."

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,076. Is it true that you complained to Jenkin Thomas, junior, because he went about on Sundays addressing congregations?—When he saw me in Cowbridge, that is on the occasion when he says I spoke grossly to him, I told him I thought it would be much better for him to attend to his own business, and not go so much about the country. That is all I told him.

36,077. It was his father that was the tenant of the estate?—Yes, he was not my tenant at all; he only came there interfering. A great deal has been said as to the next point, that I turned this man out because I disagreed with him on political grounds.

Chairman.

36,078. Which question is that?—The next one, 26,539.

36,079. "I cannot say that this is a correct " statement, but Mr. Bassett referred to me when " we were before him, and he said that I must " stay more at home with father." That is practically the same?—The same, yes.

36,080. "I occasionally speak on Sunday in " the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel. I spend " not an hour of father's time to prepare in any " way for this work. I have been on the farm " now working for him, and I have not received " one fraction for my work during these five " years. I have paid money to help father very " often out of my own pocket, to help him to " bring two ends to meet. We have not had a " single fraction back from our landlord as " compensation, and not as a per-centage, in " these bad times." Is that true?—Certainly, they never had compensation back from me. They were under notice to quit, and I did not think I was justified in giving them any compensation back then.

36,081. "He told me that I had no right to " go about, and he said that if I was a farmer " I could not do the both things." Is that what you said?—Yes, perfectly.

36,082. "I told him I was not his tenant." That is the fact, is it not?—No, he did not say that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,083. But it was the fact nevertheless?—Yes, he was not my tenant.

Chairman.

36,084. "I told him I was not his tenant, and " I said I simply stayed with father because he " was getting on in years. I simply told " him the fact that I could do better without " the farm, but in consideration for helping " father I stayed at home." Did he say that?

Chairman—continued.

—I really could not say whether he did. I would not like to say.

36,085. "I do not know whether it is because "I stand up and defend my own principles, and "the principles that I cannot help defending; "if this is the reason, I am ashamed to think "that we are made slaves of. I am ashamed to "think that father is turned out of his farm "because of myself, and I am very sorry, really, "that I have been a stumbling-block in the "way. As to the position of farmers and land-"lords, I think that we can gather this, if the "present state of trade is going to continue, the "farming class will be the poorest class possible. "I do not know whether I ought to say any "more, but I think it is my place now to leave "the evidence, and answer any questions you "may put." Is that what you complain of?—I complain of this. In answer to questions later on, he says his father was turned out of the farm.

36,086. What questions do you refer to?—It is about the political question.

36,087. That is 26,607: "Have you yourself "been taking any part in elections, political or "otherwise?—(A.) Oh, yes. (Q.) You have not "at all offended your landlord in so doing, have "you?—(A.) I do not know; that is a hard "matter to answer"?—Yes, that is the reason why he thought he was turned out of the farm, because he took part in these political elections. I beg to say that I did not even know what his politics were, and if he had taken any part in an election, political or not, I do not think it would have had any influence with me. I did not know the man at all.

36,088. So you wish to contradict that?—I wish to contradict that entirely. He also goes on to say that I told him he was not to have the rabbits on the farm, that he was not to do any rabbiting.

36,089. That was the beginning of it?—That was the beginning of it. His first statement, I think, was that he was not to touch the rabbits in any way. I deny that entirely.

36,090. That is 26,535: "Last year we had "a field of barley, and it was estimated by "neighbours close by that they ate 50 bushels "of this barley for us. This year we had clover, "and they ate an acre of this clover this year." Do you wish to deny that?—I think it is very unlikely, with the crop of clover and barley that there was.

36,091. You think it is unlikely, but you are not able to go further than that?—No, I do not think so.

36,092. "Well, we went before the present "landlord, and he told us that he would not "allow any more rabbiting"?—That is quite untrue.

36,093. "Father said: 'Well, if you are going "'to stop us to catch the rabbits, I will not "'keep the farm for half the price.' 'Well,' "he said"—that is, the landlord said—"'You "'know the law, and you can use the law, but "'I am having continual complaints of catching "'the rabbits from Mr. Crawshay'"?—What I said to him was, he knew the law, and could use the law as he liked it, but it was a pity that he was always being at loggerheads with Mr. Crawshay with regard to the rabbits.

36,094. Mr. Crawshay being whom?—The tenant of my house, who had the shooting there.

36,095. The tenant who had the shooting over the farm?—Yes.

36,096. Mr. Crawshay and your tenant were at loggerheads over the rabbits, but you agree with what this man states about your telling him he might use the law if he liked?—Yes.

36,097. "You know the law, and you can "use the law, but I am having continual com-"plaints of catching the rabbits from Mr. "Crawshay"?—Yes. I said that he was perfectly free to catch the rabbits in any way allowed by the law.

36,098. Of course the law, as everybody knows, gives the tenant a right to kill the rabbits?—Yes.

36,099. And he was perfectly within his right in killing them, whether Mr. Crawshay wished it or whether he did not?—Perfectly.

36,099*a*. Then he says, "We did not know "what to do, whether to catch the rabbits, or "whether to let the rabbits alone." You told him that you were having continual complaints of catching the rabbits from Mr. Crawshay?—No I did not. I said it was a pity that he and Mr. Crawshay did not agree about the rabbits a little better. It was no business of mine.

36,100. Exactly. Mr. Crawshay had nothing to do with the rabbits at all. The tenants had the right to kill the rabbits, and Mr. Crawshay was entirely wrong in speaking to the tenants about the rabbits. He had no more to do with the rabbits than I have. The rabbits are the property of the tenant, and Mr. Crawshay had no right at all to interfere with the tenant?—Mr. Crawshay had the house before the Ground Game Act was passed.

36,101. That I quite understand, but when the Act became the law of the land, Mr. Crawshay had no more right to the rabbits than I had. Is that all you wish to say?—Then he goes on in answer to a question by Sir John Llewelyn, No. 26,564. "Was the game reserved to the landlord?—(A.) No." I produce his agreement (handing same).

36,102. Had he a copy of this agreement?—He had.

36,103. "The landlord reserves to himself all "game, fish, and wild fowl, with liberty to "himself and servants to take and pursue the "same." Then his answer at Question 26,504 is wrong. The game was reserved?—It was reserved. He is wrong.

Mr. Grove.

36,104. Do we understand from you that you withdrew the first notice?—I did.

36,105. And then you gave him a second notice?—I did.

36,106. You gave him a second notice because the farm you considered was not in a proper condition?—I gave the notice for this reason. Half the farm belonged to me, and half belonged to my step mother. They were not satisfied with the way their half was farmed, and I persuaded them when I came into the property to withdraw the first notice, if you understand me. They had the good land, and I had the bad land, and their good land was very badly farmed, as that report proves.

36,107. On what date was the second notice given?—It came into force last 2nd of February. That would be the 2nd of February this year.

36,108. You seem to say now, that after the visit of the Commission, and when you had read the evidence he had given, you sent a valuer over the land?—I did.

36,109. I suppose the notice had been given before that time?—Oh, yes. I should like to mention that the valuer I sent over there was a very strong Liberal, and a very strong Nonconformist, and he was also the man that

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Jenkin Thomas, the tenant, appointed to arbitrate between him and the incoming tenant.

36,110. As to catching rabbits, do you mean to say that this man was in any way prevented from shooting rabbits?—Not in the least.

36,111. Then why did you introduce Mr. Crawshay's name to him in conversation?—Well, I was trying to smooth matters over between him and Mr. Crawshay to try and get them better friends; they were always at loggerheads with one another.

36,112. But Mr. Crawshay could not object to his shooting the rabbits on his own land, could he?—No, I do not suppose he could.

36,113. I am drawing a distinction between shooting rabbits and catching them?—No, of course he might shoot where he liked, but still they were always bad friends, and I was trying to smooth things over.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thos. Lewis Pugh called and examined.

Chairman.

36,114. You speak English?—Yes.

Mr. Francis: Tell them you can't speak Welsh.

Chairman.

Then the Secretary will read your statement.

The following statement of the Witness was read by the Secretary:—

"To the Welsh Land Commission.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,—

"Noticing in the 'Western Mail' that the small tenant farmers and labourers failed to appear before the Commission at its Monmouthshire sittings to state facts from their point of view, I found there were two reasons for this, one being that out of about 20 farmers I saw yesterday there was not one who knew the Commission was in our county, and some of them did not even know there was a Commission. The other reason was that they are afraid to appear, and are in despair of anything being done to improve their position.

"As one who was brought up on a little farm, and afterwards farmed it, and lived nearly all my life in this district, and having daily intercourse with small farmers and labourers, I felt it my duty to attend and state the following facts, which I put together this morning.

"Had I intended to appear, I should have given notice, and am sorry to state the subject in such an unprepared manner. I will first mention the grossly excessive railway rates, which are a great loss to the farmer. For instance, the American and other foreign producers can put produce in the British market at as low and in some cases lower rates of carriage than the British farmer. I find the rates of transit from New York to Bristol Channel ports for general mixed cargoes are as follows:—

Maize	18*s.* 3*d.*	per ton.
Hay	45*s.* 0*d.*	„
Flour	12*s.* 0*d.*	„
Butter	30*s.* 0*d.*	„
Cheese	30*s.* 0*d.*	„
Lard	25*s.* 0*d.*	„
Bacon	25*s.* 0*d.*	„

"This is for comparative small quantities, and would be very much lower for large quantities. The cost of freight is, of course, very much lower from the Continent, eggs from France only costing, viâ St. Malo, 28*s.* 4*d.* per ton, or 1*s.* 5*d.* cwt. to Bristol; whereas to send eggs from Tintern to Swansea would cost from 25*s.* 3*d.* per ton to 7*s.* per cwt. Then butter comes over here from Denmark at 17*s.* per ton, or 10¼*d.* per cwt. to Bristol; and if our local farmers want to send butter to Swansea, they have to pay from 25*s.* 3d. per ton to 7*s.* per cwt.

"The rates from Tintern to Swansea are:—

Potatoes, 2-ton lots	11*s.* 10*d.*	per ton.
Butter, in large quantities	25*s.* 3*d.*	„
Eggs „ boxes	25*s.* 3*d.*	„

Butter and eggs, per passenger train, ¾*d.* per lb., or 7*s.* per cwt.

A neighbour of mine told me yesterday that he lately sent nine tons of hay from Tintern to Tidenham, a distance of four miles by rail. He was charged 4*s.* 6*d.* per ton, or 1*s.* 1½*d.* a mile. He would have hauled it, but the distance was double by road. He also said he had sent 30 cwt. of hay to Crumlin. This was loaded by sender and unloaded by receiver. The distance, I believe, is about 33 miles. For this he had to pay 11*s.*, or 12*s.* a ton. It would seem that the railway company which serves Monmouthshire use their mighty power to crush and bleed the poor unfortunate agriculturists. I presume we are charged excessive rates to enable these companies to carry goods at a loss, like, I understand, they do sometimes from one seaport to another. This brings to my mind something I heard of a firm of millers at Abergavenny doing. If they had corn from Liverpool by rail they consigned it to Newport, then reconsigned to Abergavenny, the grain being first carried through Abergavenny, and on to Newport and back again, at much less cost than if consigned to its original destination first. Surely some power can control these soulless, honourless monopolisers, who are one of the chief causes of agricultural ruin.

"Another cause of the poor tenant farmer, who lives hard, works hard, and sleeps little, not being able to pay his way, is that rents are too high. For instance, rents around our village are 30*s.* to 35*s.* when tenants pay tithe and taxes, and up as high as 3*l.* and over when landlords pay tithe and taxes. In fact, there is such land hunger that people will promise almost any price, although the land is poor.

"No one has more respect and would honour a landlord like Lord Tredegar more than I would; but one swallow does not make a summer, and although there are landlords who are an honour to their class and to our country, I regret to say that there are others who are oppressive and tyrannical, who would screw the last farthing out of their unfortunate tenants, and who must have their tenants to obey them in all things, in addition to paying their rent.

"Then some agents, I am sorry to say, are very harsh towards small tenants under them. For instance, as late as last summer I was made aware of the threatening power of a land agent who had the management of a great number of little places in our parish. It was on the occasion of a School Board election; and this gentleman (who, I much regret to say, has passed away) spent a great part of the day driving round with his woodward telling the cot renters to vote for the candidates he favoured, and some of the poor women were quite upset, and a feeling of fear came over these people, as some of them said the agent told them they would have to give up their places if they did not vote for his candidates. Then, speaking generally, the tenant is frightened into voting the same way as his landlord, or he has to tell an untruth. I have known several tenants give up their farms on this account. A farmer told me yesterday that he could not stand it any longer, and would be having a sale in a few weeks. He appeared, although only a middle-aged man, to be in a state of despair, and thought there would have to be a Revolution to improve things. I tried to assure him that we would move on better lines than that.

"Then there are a great number of cot rent places in our district. These places were taken in generations back off the common, and the lord of the manor claimed an acknowledgment, which seems to have been generally one shilling a year; but as time went on the poor people and their children and descendants, or whoever got the places, were made to pay more, until in some cases the full value was reached——"

36,115. Have you any objection to state who the lord of the manor was?—His Grace the Duke of Beaufort.

[Statement continued.]

"or the owners driven from their homes, the houses being in some cases pulled down and the land let with another farm, or planted with larch. Here are two cases of cot rent being risen:—

"Ann Jones, a widow, 75 years of age, who lives in the parish of Trelleck, and whose father paid 1*s.* a year, now has to pay 2*l.* 5*s.*"

36,116. Is that on the Beaufort estate?—Yes.

"Mrs. Williams, Pennath Mill, also a widow, who has to have relief, and whose ancestors paid 1*s.* a year, is now charged 2*l.*

"Then the present land laws drive the most enterprising people to the large towns or to America, because the landlords will not sell land for schools and other purposes which would tend to improve the moral and general welfare of the country. I beg to put in copy of the following minutes in proof of this:—

"June 3, 1875.

"Meeting of the Trelleck School Board.

"Resolved that the chairman (the Vicar of Trelleck) write to his Grace the Duke of Beaufort for half an acre of land at Catbrook for a school site."

"Sept. 15, 1875.

"Meeting of Trelleck School Board."

"The chairman produced a letter from Mr. Baker, the Duke's solicitor, refusing to give or sell land for a school."

"Tintern School Board Meeting,

"Sept. 16, 1893.

"Resolved that Mr. Francis be written to, asking him to give or sell a site for a school."

"Tintern School Board Meeting,

"Oct. 14, 1893.

"The clerk produced a letter from Mr. Francis as follows:—

"Chepstow, Oct. 3rd, 1893.

"From Messrs. Morgan, Francis, & Stanton, Solicitors, and at Newport.

"DEAR SIR,—

"WE have seen Mr. and Mrs. Browning on the subject of your letter as to the school site, and have their instructions to inform you that they are unwilling to sell any portion of their farm to your Board, and have decided to erect a house on the site you propose, and Mr. Evill has had instructions some time past to prepare plans.

"Yours faithfully,

"Morgan & Co.

"Mr. E. J. Brown,

"Clerk of the Tintern School Board."

Witness.

I may say that that estate is 85 acres. There is no talk of a house being put there—at least, I live in the parish, and I have not heard any talk of any house since.

Mr. Francis. You mean on that particular site.

Chairman.

Order, order.

Witness.

I should say that when you asked me if I could speak English Mr. Francis interrupted then and said I was to say that I could not speak Welsh or something.

Chairman.

36,117. I only asked whether you could speak English?—Yes, but Mr. Francis ordered me to tell you I could not speak Welsh.

Chairman.

No witness is, under any circumstances, to be spoken to, and if any witness is interfered with or spoken to while he is at the table very strong measures will be taken by the Commissioners.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,118. Do you know whether notices have been placed on the walls in this neighbourhood announcing that the Commission was going to visit Monmouthshire?—They were placed when the Commissioners were going to meet first; I think it was last spring, but I am sorry to say that the farmers do not get information about this thing, as people in the towns would.

36,119. Do you not think that the farmers would be acquainted with the movements of the Commission by taking the South Wales newspapers?—Well, I was very much surprised myself to find yesterday that they were not.

36,120. Do you think that if they knew they would be prepared to come forward and give evidence?—Well, those that would like to would be afraid.

36,121. Afraid of their landlords?—Yes, and the agents and the general surroundings. They would be boycotted in every way. I have experienced it myself. I was threatened as to a little farm I had, and that led to my giving it up.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

36,122. You were threatened by the agent?—Well, by some of the people who were about the agent. If you wish me, I will make a statement about it.

36,123. Yes, certainly; please make your statement?—I was brought up with a grandmother on a little 14 acre farm belonging to his Grace the Duke of Beaufort, and worked on it all my life. When we took it we paid 15*l.* a year for it, tithes and taxes. It was in a poor state; in fact, it would scarcely grow anything but bents. We had other land, and kept about twice the stock that the ground would carry, and manured it well, and cleared a good deal of it, and I can truthfully say made the land worth double as much. We did not improve the house. So I kept the grandparents and paid the rent, and they wished me to have the place, but in 1885 I took some little interest, as I felt justified to do, in trying to get Sir Henry Jackson returned as member for this constituency. When the step-grandfather went to pay the rent to Troy House afterwards, one of the officials there said that they had marked me, and would punish me for my conduct at the election. See evidence of Major Lister and Mr. Henry Williams on 59th Day.

36,124. What was the name of the official?—He was the head woodward, Lewis Williams—I beg your pardon, Henry Williams. He used to be about with Mr. Verrinder, the then agent, and he used to have a considerable influence over Mr. Verrinder; in fact, Mr. Verrinder seemed to do everything pretty much as Mr. Williams suggested.

36,125. Was Mr. Verrinder the agent?—Yes, and this was his principal man.

36,126. Will you go on with your statement?—I knew how other men had suffered on account of doing as they felt they would like to.

36,127. On the Duke of Beaufort's estate?—Well, they had been made to suffer. We had one road surveyor ruined because he was a Liberal in Trelleck district. His position was made too hot for him, he was driven out of his appointment because a great number of the members of the Highway Board, or a good number of them, would be the Duke of Beaufort's tenants, and then the ex officios on the Highway Board and all the people in power were Conservatives. Then, knowing this, I thought when my grandparents died, that it would be the wisest thing, considering that it was surrounded by the Duke's woods and I should have my things pounded and be harassed in every way, I thought that the best thing would be to get out of the place the first opportunity. I wanted to have manured it and improved it, but I thought it was useless because I should get six months' notice to turn out, because His Grace made his tenants contract themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

36,128. So you cleared out?—Yes.

36,129. Having regard to the action that was taken in respect to the road surveyor and also with regard to other things, do you think that it has great influence upon the other tenants, and that they are afraid to come forward?—Yes, and I know how pressure had been brought. When I was nine years of age I happened to go to the 1868 election with this step parent at Trelleck, and I was quite wild as a Tory politician, a little fellow as I was, but there were three poor old men that I remember at a neighbouring village of Llandogo. I suppose they felt inclined to vote for Colonel Clifford, who was the Liberal candidate, but they were afraid, so they tried to stay away altogether. They were sent down for several times, and at last they were threatened that if they did not come to Trelleck and vote they would have the road shut up by which they got to their cottages. Of course, it would have been impossible to shut it up, but the poor people thought they would be made to suffer just as the Duke directed, so that rather than suffer the road to be closed to get to their cottages they came up to vote. I may say that things of that sort, harsh measures, led me not to have as good an opinion of Conservatism as I should have had. When I came to think about it, I thought an election was a farce if men had to be forced to vote in that way. As to this School Board election that has been mentioned, even the clergyman of the parish represented to the people that they would know how they voted, and you could find quite half of the electors in this district that would not believe that the ballot was secret. I have been made in various ways—it is very difficult to explain reasons—to suffer acutely for my political convictions.

36,130. I believe you are a grocer?—Yes.

See 36,616.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,132. Do you think that the Ballot Act has had a beneficial effect in preventing that kind of feeling?—Well, it has to some extent, yet there are a great many people in the country, even farmers who will not believe that it is secret.

36,133. Can you suggest anything which would do away with that sort of moral influence?—I do not think landowners or employers should be allowed to ask their employés or tenants to vote, because a man has to tell an untruth or vote as he is directed.

Mr. Grove.

36,134. You have given us some interesting evidence about railway rates, and you have given us the rates from one point to another. Do you happen to known anything about the circumstances under which that hay was sent of which you gave an instance?—No, it was simply loaded by the farmer and brought four miles along the line from Tintern to Tidenham. Squire Morgan was the buyer, and he took to it.

Mr. Grove—continued.

36,135. Then the railway company had nothing to do with the loading?—Nor the unloading.

36,136. What weight was it, do you happen to know?—Nine tons. I think it is on the paper.

36,137. Do you know that there is a small book published at the cost of 1*s.* which gives you the charges that all the railway companies in England can make?—No, I do not.

36,138. Here it is, published by the Board of Trade?—Unfortunately we suffer so much from the want of knowledge in the country.

36,139. This tells you everything about it. Now do you know whether the railway company have charged more than they could legally demand; you do not know that, of course?—No. I know they charged most excessive rates the beginning of last year, and they professed to refund the excess.

36,140. I must hurry on, because the time is very short. With regard to hay, they can charge you 1*s.* 6*d.* as station terminal at each end, so that they can charge at once 3*s.* for station terminals. Do you see that?—Yes.

36,141. I only want to explain to you that probably if you analyse that cost, you will find that they charged exactly what they were entitled to by Act of Parliament, and possibly that may be so in other cases. In the case of potatoes, were they sent in bulk or in small quantities?—In bulk—2-ton lots.

36,142. Five or six tons, or something of that sort?—No, that was 2-ton lots.

Mr. Grove.

However, here is this book, which can be got for 1*s.* from the Queen's Printers. It would be most useful for the farmers in the district to have copies of it, and see where they are.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,143. Have you made any application to the Board of Trade about the railway rates?—No. I did not think anything about it until I saw that only one side of the case was being stated in this county.

Chairman.

36,144. Mr. Vincent sends up this question: "Please tell us as nearly as possible the words "which you say were used by the woodward, "Mr. Williams?" Tell us as near as you can remember what the exact words were?—Well, you will understand, my Lord, it was not to me; it was to this step-grandparent that I was brought up with.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,145. It was not used to you?—No.

Chairman.

36,146. The step-grandparent told you?—Yes. He felt rather grieved, of course, when he came back to have heard it, because he hoped that as we had improved the little place so, I might have been allowed to keep it on.

36,147. The words were not used to you, but to your step-grandparent?—That is it, whom I was brought up with.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,148. I suppose you have had dealings with the farmers in the neighbourhood?—Yes, daily.

36,149. And you are prepared to say of your own knowledge that they are really in bad circumstances?—Yes, very bad.

36,150. Worse than you have known them?—Yes, worse than I have known in my time. I had just a note or two I made this morning about a farm near us. About four years ago, Mr. Walters took a farm at Tintern, called 85 acres, rent 130*l.* I may say I am glad to make this statement, because Mr. Francis was the landowner, and he can deny it if it is not correct. Tithe about 17*l.* in addition to taxes. About half of this land is not worth more than about 7*s.* 6*d.* an acre to 10*s.* The tenant is now leaving, and he has suffered great loss there.

Chairman.

36,151. You are a grocer?—Yes.

36,152. Where do you live?—Tintern.

Mr. Grove.

36,153. Are you postmaster too?—Yes.

36,154. Have you had officially through the Post Office one of those papers relative to the Inquiry to be put up in the post office?—I beg pardon.

36,155. Did you get one of the papers from the General Post Office, or through the police, giving notice that the Commission would come here?—Not recently—only last spring.

36,156. But you did expose that in the post office then for view?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 36,667.

Mr. Thomas Parry called and examined.

Chairman.

36,157. You are an auctioneer, and you live at Newport?—I do, my Lord.

36,158. What do you wish to state to the Commission?—I wish first of all to state to the Commissioners, in consequence of my own personal knowledge, that I consider the Agricultural Holdings Act entirely useless to the farmers. I simply come before you giving my own experience for the last 20 years as an auctioneer, and my experience of my connexion with claims of farmers is that the general routine of the Act is so cumbersome and expensive that farmers would almost rather leave their holdings without going into the question of valuation than go under the Act. In fact, I will give your Lordship one or two instances of my own knowledge. I will take briefly Cefn Llech Farm, in the parish of Llangibby.

Mr. Grove.

36,159. Is that the one that Mr. Cooke spoke about at Blackwood?—I do not know whether it is. I do not know what he said at Blackwood.

,054-73, ,204, ,221.

36,160. Morgan was the tenant?—Morgan was the tenant. It was a farm of—I do not know the exact acreage, but I think the rent was between 400*l.* and 500*l.* a year. The tenant had a lease of this farm, that is what I wish to impress upon the Commissioners. He had only been there four years; he was a most industrious man, and in the summer, while haymaking, the horses ran away and the waggon ran over him, and broke either one or two of his legs. He went to his landlord, the late Mr. G. W. Nicholl, and said that in consequence of the accident he would like to be relieved of the farm. As I say, only four years had expired, and he had farmed this farm exceedingly well. Naturally a man commencing his lease would do so. We had a sale there on the 9th of December, which sale realised something like near 2,000*l.*

Sir John Llewellyn.

36,161. The 9th of December, of what year?—I think it was in 1885. The counter claim, I see, is dated February 1885. Before the sale was allowed to proceed I received a notice, or Mr. Morgan did, that before the sale should take place the landlord would require the rent paid in cash, and, in fact, I paid the rent the day before the sale. The sale was very largely attended by the farmers of the district out of respect to this man, and the circumstances of his leaving, which drew forth a great amount of sympathy. I did not hesitate to denounce the conduct of the agent to the assembled bidders, because of the great hardship that was inflicted. Afterwards I acted for the tenant, and sent in my claim to Mr. Cooke as agent. Fortunately, I have brought a copy of that claim, because you have the honour of a practical farmer being present, and you will see from my claim that it is a very fair and reasonable one. In fact, several when they heard of this dispute of the claim came to ask me if I would allow them to see it, and in no instance did they consider that any figure which I had placed there was other than fair and just between man and man.

Mr. Seebohm.

31,162. That was 220*l.* odd, was it not?—250*l.* odd. That, had to be given according to the Act two months before. Then although negotiations were proceeding and a valuation going on, at 12 o'clock on the 2nd of February, this poor man had a distress levied for the rent that had accrued up to that time, although the claims were then under abitration. Of course the tenant came, and had to pay out that rent, together with the expenses of the levy and other charges to which the auctioneer was entitled. On the 11th February 1885, the tenant received counter-claims amounting to 270*l.* odd, and with this intimation, that whatever the arbitrator or umpire did, the landlord was prepared to fight it to the bitter end.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Chairman.

36,163. Was that in writing?—It was a communication conveyed to Messrs. Davies and Lloyd, solicitors, of Newport, to whom I took Mr. Morgan. The tenant did not feel disposed to enter into an action at law with his landlord, because he had money. We went and had an interview with Mr. W. J. Lloyd, and Mr. Lloyd said, "Well we have only two courses open. "We must either proceed with the arbitration "before the umpire, or else you will have to "waive your claim." I may say that a great deal of that claim which you have before you there was admitted by Mr. William Graham as fair and reasonable, and he acted for Mr. Nicholl. I will hand in the counter-claim.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,164. Did he make objection to any item in the claim?—I will just refer. He acknowledged the ploughings on the first item. He objected to the rent tithe and taxes, 14*l.* 10*s.* It was a fallow. Of course, naturally, to make a fallow, that field has to lie idle for 12 months, so that we always claim from the ingoing tenant the rent, tithe, and taxes of that fallow in addition to the work that had been put upon the land.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

"will be landed in a very heavy amount of "money." He said, "If you take my advice, "do not do it. It is a very hard case, but do "not land yourself into that position." The consequences were, my Lord and gentlemen, that this poor tenant left that farm, and he never received one penny piece for the whole of his claim. That is one of the reasons why I consider the Agricultural Holdings Act entirely useless, so far as farmers are concerned. Then again the Act is very arbitrary in consequence of several of the landlords taking advantage of section 3 contracting out of giving 12 months' notice. A farmer who did his farming exceedingly well—one of the best farmers in the county—Mr. J. H. Hillier, was farming a large farm known as Llandowlais in the same parish. He was farming, as I say, well, and on the 2nd August, the agent came there, and much, may I say it, to the credit of the agent, he was no party to this, and I know it gave him a very large amount of pain and distress to have to serve Mr. Hillier with a notice on the 2nd August to quit on the 2nd February. Then Mr. Hillier went with his brother to the landlady (who happened to be the sister of Mr. Cooke) to Clifton, to ask for an interview, and to ask "Why am I so treated? I have a large "family of children depending on me: if I "have to leave in February, it will be a very "serious loss to me." The landlady absolutely refused to see them. He had to leave the farm. I sold there for him, and he could not possibly get anything like what he was fairly entitled to, because of the short notice he was put to. Fortunately, there was a great feeling in the county over it. There was a post vacant at that time, and the good Samaritan, Lord Tredegar, gave Mr. Hillier a very comfortable post, and I think, therefore, that although it was a bad job for him at the time, yet Mr. Hillier has now every reason to be thankful for the position he has. Still, I wish to point out this case to show you how unfair the position of things is.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,166. Did you tell us why Mr. Hillier received notice?—Thank you for reminding me of that, Sir John. The only reason he has ever been able to ascertain is this: he never had complaints, because he is one of the best farmers in the county, and the only reason that can be assigned for this arbitrary treatment is in consequence, he believes, of having given permission to a committee of gentlemen who got up the Usk races to go over some three or four fields on Llandowlais Farm for the course. That is the only reason that Mr. Hillier can imagine that caused this notice to be served.

36,167. Was the landowner an absentee landowner?—At that time she lived in Clifton.

Chairman.

36,168. Did you say it was Mrs. Cooke?—Mrs. Williams, a sister to Mr. Tom Eborall

Chairman—continued.

Cooke, and they think that there was someone behind her. Then again, there was the instance of the Trestevan Farm, in the same parish, owned by the same person as the last, and whose farm was occupied for 50 years by a most respectable family named Phillips. Their rents were raised several times, which they had to submit to. In 1880, there being bad seasons, they applied to the owner for a reduction.

36,169. That is, Mr. Phillips did ?—Mr. Phillips. The then squire absolutely refused.

36,170. Who was the landlord ?—The husband, who is since dead, of Mrs. Williams, the owner of Llandowlais. They refused to give any reduction. The Phillipses had a private income, which they were losing, and they felt that they did not care to go on losing all the time. They had to leave. Although that was in 1880, there have been numerous changes of tenancy on the same farm since.

36,171. He got notice to quit in 1880 ?—No. They gave notice to quit in 1880, because of their not being able to obtain a reduction. Since then they have had three changes of tenants, and the farm has been very much reduced. That was a very great hardship upon people who had lived for 50 years in the parish, and who were naturally attached to the place, that they should not have the farm reduced to a fair and just rent, and that the newcomers were allowed the reduction, and more than the reduction, that the Philipses would have been satisfied with and would have maintained the tenancy upon. Then again, Pentwyn. I had a sale there on November 13th, 1883. That was owned by Mr. Thomas Eborall Cooke.

36,172. The same estate ?—No, this is the private property of Mr. T. Eborall Cooke. A day or two before the sale the old tenant had a letter from Mr. Cooke, although there was some considerable quantity of produce on the farm, which the incoming tenant had to take to——

36,173. What was the name of the tenant, can you remember ?—Mr. Edmund Jones, on Mr. Cooke's estate, near Caerleon. His wife died, and therefore he wished to give up the farm. A few days before the sale there again this poor man had notice that before the sale took place Mr. Cooke would require his rent in full, namely, 90*l*. The poor man came to me the night before in great trouble, and in that case I may say I asked him, "Have you an agreement ?" "No," he said, "I have not got an agreement." "Well," I said, "do you know what you have signed ?" "I think I can remember, but," he said, "I do not know what to do." I said, "I will come with you to Mr. Cooke; I think you want protection." I went with him to Mr. Cooke, and this poor old man was a marksman; he had not signed, but simply made his mark on the agreement, and that agreement was read over by Mr. Cooke, this poor old Jones strongly affirming that several of the restrictive covenants which had been inserted were not to his knowledge when he took the farm. But of course there was his mark, and he was bound by it. I said to the old man, "Never mind, they have threatened to "distrain to-morrow, and I will bring the money "with me." The next day at luncheon an auctioneer came who was friendly, and he said, "I have a very unpleasant duty to do." "Oh," I said, "I know all about it." He said, "I have got to distrain for 90*l*." "Well," I said, "have "you asked Jones whether he is in a position "to pay, because before you can distrain you "have to ask the tenant whether he can pay— "to make the demand." He said, "It is no use." I said, "You had better try him." He went to Mr. Jones, and said, "Have you the 90*l*. ?" I was able to pay him fortunately, and then he said, "I want the costs." "No," I said, "you had the money on your demand, and you "are not entitled to any costs," so that I saved the money there simply by the fact of being able to pay up when it was demanded. It only shows that, as I have argued before the Chamber of Agriculture, I think the Chamber of Agriculture should be a medium, or that there should be some medium, at all events, to meet with these arbitrary cases of treatment. I contended there that the criminal laws were not enacted for the law-abiding people, but for the few who had not conducted themselves properly. Therefore I feel strongly, from my experience, that there ought to be someone whom the tenants under those conditions could approach, and have such matters settled. I know in Monmouthshire particularly, from the consideration of Lord Tredegar and other very excellent landlords, that there are very few complaints, but there are tenants of other landowners who do feel the oppression very terribly, and I suggest that some system should be adopted whereby these matters can be referred to some one for settlement. There is a great want of cottage accommodation on our farms. Farms are so badly off for cottages that they suffer very considerably in that respect. Then as to the dairies that we have in the county, the Council of Monmouthshire and the Technical Instruction Committee, of which I have the honour to be chairman, are trying to improve our dairy work in the county, but really I know of no farm that has got a proper dairy. The dairies, as a rule, are opening out upon or overlooking the yards, and there is the effluvia from the manure naturally coming in. I know where my own father lived for years the dairy was in that position. How can we, therefore, improve our butter unless the farmers have proper dairies and proper accommodation for so doing ? There is a great demand in the county for land. Take Newport, say, which is a town of increasing importance; they desire to get out into the suburbs. Now there is land at Caerleon which has been advertised to be let for building for 20 odd years. One weather board has entirely rotted away. No one has yet built there. Ten years ago myself and two or three others offered Mr. Nicholl 10*l*. an acre for this land to take it on a 99 years' lease. It is only rented at present at about 25*s*. We were met with a refusal, and they wanted 25*l*. Of course in that case the owner, I suppose, would make the roads. But we offered 10*l.* an acre, and to do everything. But what I do feel is that where land is to be let, and where land is required for the development of a town, there ought to be some party referred to to settle what is a fair and just rent between the would-be lessee and the lessor. There is land which would be built over immediately if it could be obtained on fair and reasonable terms. There are at the present moment large boards there, "To let for 99 years," but still no houses, although people are longing to get out there; the rents for the land are prohibitive.

See 36,266.

36,174. May I ask one question on this. The landlords are willing to let on a 99 years' lease, but they will not sell the freehold. Is that so?—They want to let at a rent that people will not come out upon.

36,175. Is there any chance of buying the land outright in the neighbourhood?—No, there is not.

36,176. There is no chance of getting a bit of freehold land?—There is not.

36,177. It is all 99 years?—Yes. There is a great demand for land for that purpose. Then what we want also, which I hope may come through your inquiries, is a cheaper transfer of land. The expense now if a man buys a little estate, is enormous. What we think is that there should be something suggested by your Commission so that a cheaper system of transfer may be introduced. Then again I am a great advocate for smaller holdings. I should like the Government to advance to tenants who desire to purchase their holdings, money at a low rate of interest, to permit their doing so. I think there is only one other point, and that is the game question. There is no doubt the game as a rule is not bearing unfairly in the county, but on many estates where they let the game, there the oppression comes in. I am speaking as a farmer's son, and I know that the farmers are only too delighted to keep and preserve game for their landlords, but what they do object to is to land being let to outsiders who have no sympathy with the farmers, and who raise a covey of partridges and follow them into a field of corn, and kill them one at a time as they rise. No landlord would do that, but it is the people to whom the land is let.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,178. A shooting tenant, do you mean?—No, the people who rent the shooting rights.

See 36,281.

36,179. They are called shooting tenants?—Yes. That I feel very strongly should be abolished and done away with. I am a governor of an estate at Caerleon—Caerleon Charity—and I thought it would be interesting to your Lordship and the Commissioners to hear that from that Charity, of which I have been a governor since 1879, when it was altered, we have received as gross rentals from the general estate 11,389*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.* We have spent in improvements and repairs 3,923*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* We have only farm houses. The taxes and expenses of management, &c., come to 1,762*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*, leaving a net for 15 years of 5,704*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.* I have a copy of those figures here, which I thought perhaps you would like to have. (The witness handed in table of figures.) That gives the estate a net annual income of only 380*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.* I have been advocating for a great number of years to my colleagues the advisability of selling this estate. If this estate were only sold it would bring our income available for educational purposes to at least 200*l.* to 300*l.* a year above what we are now getting.

Mr. Grove.

36,180. What do you base that upon?—My own experience.

36,181. I mean investment in what?—In Consols at 2¾ per cent. I have advocated that for a great number of years. At last we have got a few practical business men on the Board, and we are now moving in the matter, and I hope that we shall be able to obtain the permission of the Charity Commissioners to sell this estate, which will then be a very great boon to the Charity, and to the town of Caerleon. Orcharding, my Lord, is another question I should like to mention. The farmers in the county feel that they would like to be encouraged in that respect. Of course, it is very hard for landlords to find good fruit trees and all that unless the tenants are prepared to do their part in protecting the trees from young stock. I think myself that the county of Monmouth is a county especially suited for orcharding, and I hope that we shall be able to induce landlord and tenant to increase the amount of orcharding in the county. I do not know that I have anything to add.

36,182. I have one or two questions to ask you. I suppose the tenant of Cefn Llech, Mr. Morgan, was considered a good farmer?—An excellent farmer.

36,183. In your opinion, was the claim you sent in in every way a fair and proper claim?—I do not care into whose hands it is put, I am positive it is fair.

36,184. Now as to Trestevan, the first new tenant worked everything he could out of the land?—Of course.

36,185. Did not the buildings all go into a bad state?—Well, they were certainly not taken that interest in or the farming, either, that the Phillipses took.

36,186. Not only did they get less rent, therefore, but they have got a farm which is worth less considerably than when it was in the hands of the Phillipses?—Certainly.

36,187. Do you think there is any general desire on the part of the tenant farmers in the county to come before the Commission and give evidence, and that they rather feel a disinclination to come, we will not say from what cause?—I know that there is a very great desire. I have been pressed on all sides to give evidence, and I preferred coming here to give my own experience, because the farmers in every instance said they would prefer not going before the Commission.

Mr. Grove—continued.

36,188. When you speak about the small holdings and the advances by Government, you are fully acquainted with the Small Holdings Act, I suppose?—Well, really I have not read it.

Mr. Grove.

That is what I wondered, because that is really an Act which probably, to some extent, might meet that case.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,189. I have only one question to ask, and that is this: You stated that you thought the claim on the tenant's side, in this case that you have mentioned, the Morgan case, could be thoroughly substantiated. Do you consider that the counter claim was fair?—No, far from that.

36,190. Very greatly unfair?—Almost entirely, because of the claim for bad farming, while the neighbours were all in a position to affirm that the farm was exceedingly well farmed.

36,191. Could you give us at all the total cost of the valuer's expenses on both sides in that case; how much was lost to the tenant by the controversy?—He left everything; he left his growing wheat, his clover, his manure, and everything.

36,192. But I mean the professional charges?—Well, I did not charge him anything, but he had to pay the solicitor a small charge, and the solicitor only made a very small charge, because of the great hardship he felt poor Morgan was put to in consequence of the harsh treatment.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,193. You declare in favour of small holdings, that is, that the Government should advance money to people in order to purchase their holdings. Do you think there would be a desire for that if tenants felt secure in their holdings, and also felt sure that they would get adequate compensation for any improvements?—No, I do not. I give my experience. I have recently sold during the last two or three years a very large amount of freehold property in the county, between 100,000*l.* and 200,000*l.* on one estate particularly, which has been very low rented for years, the Llanaravon estate. There the tenants could not purchase for want of money. The purchasers purchased upon the then rentals, and in two instances to my own knowledge, the tenants have had an increase in rent, practically upon the work that they had done upon those farms. In another case the tenant had to go, and the farm was let at a very considerable increase to another. So that I think if there was security to the tenant that would meet the demand certainly.

36,194. Which would you consider the most preferable?—I would rather have a strict security for a tenant.

36,195. You think that 12 months notice should be given on either side as notice?—Certainly. I think on the estates throughout the county it is only fair to say that twelve months' notice is the general rule.

Mr. Grove.

36,196. I have one more question. You have been yourself a tenant farmer?—I have.

36,197. Did you make money by it or lose?—I lost 1,200*l.* in three years. That is my experience.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 36,287.

Mr. Thomas Eborall Cooke recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 35,213 and above, also 36,287.

36,198. Where do you live?—I live now in Clifton, but I used to live in Newport.

36,199. You have heard the evidence of the last witness, Mr. Parry. Have you any rebutting evidence that you wish to give upon that?—I have, my Lord. With regard to demanding the rent before a sale was held, some years before the same auctioneer sold on a farm of mine, and after the sale was over I could not get the money for my rent, and I had to issue a writ, or to threaten to do so, against Mr. Parry before I could get that rent.

36,200. Could you give us the date and the name of that farm?—I have forgotten the date and cannot give them. I am rather taken by surprise. Yes, I think I can.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 36,173.

36,201. It was not the case of Edmund Jones, was it?—No; the case of Edmund Jones followed on the previous case. It was on the Tyisha farm. On the death of Edward Williams, which, I believe, occurred in the year 1866, Mr. Parry, as an auctioneer, sold the produce on that farm, and I could not get my rent, and I was obliged to issue a writ, or to threaten to do so, I forget when, but being pressed by the Chairman, it might have been some time in February. I think that the sale took place in the month of November.

Chairman.

36,202. He sold the produce in November 1866?—In November 1866, I think.

Mr. Grove.

36,203. That is 30 years ago?—Exactly.

36,204. Mr. Parry was not auctioneer then.

Mr. Parry, I was in school.

Chairman.

Mr. Parry, you can come forward afterwards and rebut this.

36,205. What you state is, that on the death of E. Williams, in 1866, Mr. Parry sold the produce on the farm in November, and in the following year——?—I would rather amend that, my Lord, if you will allow me, by saying that it was on the Tyisha farm, what year I cannot say. It was after one of the tenants had died.

36,206. But within what time; how many years ago?—I forget. If Mr. Parry could give me the name of the tenant, I could say, perhaps.

Chairman—continued.

I really forget what the name of the tenant was.

36,207. How many years ago was it: 50 years ago, or 10 years ago, or three years ago, or how many?—I forget the name of the tenant.

36,208. You forget the name of the tenant, and you forget the year?—Yes, I do.

36,209. Do you forget the name of the farm?—No, I do not.

36,210. What farm was it?—On the Tyisha farm.

36,211. Mr. Parry sold the produce of a tenant?—Mr. Parry sold the produce of the tenant of the Tyisha farm. I could not get my rent. I had to threaten to issue a writ, or I did issue it, I forget which now. I am taken rather by surprise; but I either threatened, or did issue it.

36,212. Did you, or did you not issue?—I cannot say whether I did or did not issue it; but I had to threaten it before I could get my rent.

36,213. You could not get your rent, but you had to threaten before you did get it. Is that it?—That is so.

36,214. Whom did you threaten?—Mr. Thomas Parry, with a writ, unless the rent was paid. After that, wherever Mr. Thomas Parry was auctioneer, I insisted on having the rent paid before the stock was sold off the farm.

36,215. Have you any idea when the rent was paid after this sale?—I believe it was either in February or March. I believe so.

36,216. Do you still say that the sale was in November, or not?—I really forget when the rent was paid. I am almost sure it was in November—November or December.

36,217. You did not get your rent for six months?—No; for four months, I think.

36,218. Then it was four months before the rent was paid after the sale?—It was. I think, now, from what I remember, it was in the year 1878. I think it was after Longston, the next tenant.

36,219. 1878?—I think so. I have the list of the tenants before me; and not knowing the nature of this evidence, I had forgotten which it was. Edward Williams died and John Longston died on the same farm, and I had forgotten which.

Sir John Llewelyn.

36,220. It was 12 years afterwards?—Yes. That being so, wherever Mr. Parry was the auctioneer to sell before the end of the tenancy, I always required the rent to be paid before he distributed the stock. His then partner upon one occasion, Mr. Bear, was rather surprised that I should have insisted on the payment beforehand; but I explained to him the reason.

Chairman.

See 35,055, 36,158.

36,221. Is that all you wish to say?—Oh no. I think Mr. Parry has made reference to a farm at Cefn Llech.

36,222. Which tenant was that?—That was Morgan, of Cefn Llech, who had a lease. He was incapacitated on account of his accident, and also on account of his two boys having left the farm. He asked Mr. Nicholl for a surrender of the lease, which Mr. Nicholl agreed to. To show you the friendly relations between the tenant and landlord, I would ask you to read a letter from the tenant, asking to sell the hay. (The witness handed in the letter.)

Chairman.

36,223. The letter is as follows:—

"Cefn Llech,

"Llangibby, Mon.,

"Dear Sir, November 19, 1884.

"I am taking the liberty of writing to you, hoping that Mrs. Nicholl is much better. We were all very sorry to hear that she is ill from home. I am very thankful to you for giving your consent to take the farms up to your hands, and I hope they will soon be let for a higher price than I am giving. I intend to make a sale in about three weeks, as I have not heard of any spot to suit me, as now I am afraid all my strength is exhausted in farming by this very severe accident I have met with. I need not tell you that I have had five years very unfruitful, and consequently, I candidly tell you that I have lost a lot of money here. Perhaps, if I had good seasons I might have done better. Will you kindly let me do the best of my crops? I shall have a little more than I require. Will you please allow me to dispose of that, and to sell the ruffage up to the 2nd of February next. I shall also have a few mangolds to sell. I shall not have one bushel of wheat to sell this year, because it did not fill well. The sample is very poor and very unfruitful. Will you please to give me free of the 40*l.* arrears of my last rent, and allow me to remind you that you did not give me 10 per cent. back since I am here as you did to the other tenants on your estates. I fear I shall not have a very good sale, the times being still very bad, and I am very sorry to part with my waggons, as they did cost me 36*l.* when I bought them while I lived down there, and all my implements are nearly new, but they always go very cheap at sales. However it will come, I fully intend to pay you all I owe you. Trusting I am not offending you by asking so many kindnesses from your hand,

"I am,

"Your obedient servant,

"David Morgan."

That is to the owner?—That is to the owner, Mr. Nicholl.

36,224. And was the 40*l.* arrears of his last rent given him?—It was not. I will hand in this letter. (The witness handed in another letter.) I know it would have been done were it not for the very excessive claim that was sprung upon us. If you cannot read the letter, my Lord, I will read it.

36,225. It is copied on the other side of another letter; I suppose that does not matter for the moment?—That is so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,226. I suppose you did not give any abatement back because he was a leaseholder. Is that so?—No. On the 30th November, at the time when the claim had to be made the old claim was sprung upon us—what we thought a very large claim—and that other note from Mr. Nicholl says that he withdraws all the concessions that he had been trying to make.

Chairman.

36,227. This is a letter from Mr. Nicholl?—From Mr. Nicholl to me.

36,228. Did you buy the farm?—It was sent with a copy of a letter that he sent to Mr. David Morgan. I do not know which your Lordship is looking at now.

36,229. I have a letter before me from Mr. Nicholl to Mr. David Morgan?—Exactly; that is the copy of it.

36,230. "Cowbridge, 19th December 1884. "Dear Sir,—When I was at Cefn Llech last "week, I at your request gave you leave to sell "the clover hay off your farm. You also asked "me to let you sell meadow hay, and I "replied that your farms were let, and that I "could not do so without the consent of the "incoming tenant. Nothing was said about "your selling straw and roots off the farms. I "gave no consent to your selling them. I "now hereby withdraw my consent to your "selling clover hay. And I give you notice not "to remove, without the written consent of Mr. "Cooke, any of the produce of the farm which "you hold of me.

"Yours truly,

"Mr. David Morgan. G. W. Nicholl"?—The incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant would have agreed amicably had he not been advised to make this large inflated claim. I may mention that the original claim was for 336*l.* Upon details being handed in, that was reduced to 252*l.*, and our valuation was considerably less still.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,231. We have had that in evidence already, I think, from you?—You have.

Mr. Grove.

36,232. You gave us those figures?—Yes. The reduced claim was 252*l.* Had it not been that the tenant was advised, in my opinion unwisely, to fight this claim, the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant would have agreed amicably about unexhausted improvements. A very large quantity of hay had been sold off, and the counter-claim on the hay sold off alone came to 136*l.*

Chairman.

36,233. But the practical result, I suppose, was that Mr. Morgan left the farm without getting a shilling; that was the ultimate result?—That was the ultimate result.

36,234. And he did not get the 40*l.* that he asked for returned to him; he was not allowed anything back of his rent. He was not getting 10 per cent. like the other tenants, and he left the farm without getting a shilling for anything of any sort or kind?—He did so on account of his having placed Mr. Nicholl to very great legal and other expenses, as well as the annoyance and the bother of the fight.

36,235. Then Mr. Nicholl on account of the bother and on account of annoyance——?—And expense.

36,236. Refused to give him the 40*l.* that he asked to have back?—He did.

36,237. He refused to give him 10 per cent. reduction, and let him go out of his farm without getting a shilling of compensation of any sort or kind?—There is a letter I would like to put in. (The witness handed in a letter.)

36,238. And that was the reason, because he had given him trouble, annoyance, and——?—And expense.

36,239. That was the reason he had treated him in this way, and it was the reason which was given by Mr. Nicholl for it?—And having no claim but what the counter claim would override.

36,240. He got nothing, you are agreed as to that? The man went out of his farm without a shilling compensation of any sort or kind?—He did so, and he sold the produce off for two years.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,241. Then he did get the price of the produce?—Oh, dear, yes.

36,242. Which he was not entitled to?—He was entitled to sell the produce, but under the scale of the Monmouthshire Chamber of Agriculture so much was sold off that the manuring value of the hay only that was sold off came to 136*l.* as a counterclaim. Mr. Nicholl had given him leave to sell the produce off, but that was the manuring value in the counterclaim to recoup the farm for the produce being sold off. As I stated to you at Blackwood, I have not any objection to the hay being sold off the farm, if the farms are properly recouped with manure.

Chairman.

36,243. Is this letter to be read, beginning "My Dear Cooke"?—I think as you like, my Lord. It shows that Mr. Nicholl refused to give the 40*l.*

36,244. It only shows that he refused to give the 40*l.*?—Yes, that is all.

36,245. That is what you have told us?—In consequence of the expense he had been put to.

36,246. Is there anything else you wish to mention?—Yes, with regard to Llandowlais farm, that I happen to know about, which belongs to my sister. See 36,165–8, 36,293.

36,247. That was Mr. Hillier?—Mr. Hillier, I have to state that that farm was let to Mr. Hillier, but I forget the year in which it was so let, because I did not act for that farm, and I only know of it as a matter of fact. Mr. Hillier was forming out a permanent racecourse. Races had been held on the farm before, but a permanent racecourse was being formed on the farm, to which my sister objected. I believe it is competent for a landowner to object to a farm being altered in character from a farm to a racecourse. Her agent was written to, and he distinctly wrote back to say that he knew nothing of this racecourse being formed. That letter is in existence now.

36,248. I think we can hardly take that till we get the letter in?—I did not know that it would be necessary to have it here.

36,249. I think we might leave that and have your rebutting evidence, as what you know about that is only hearsay?—It is not hearsay, I have seen the letter. The letter is in existence now. The notice was given merely to bring things to a head. No doubt Mr. Hillier, accompanied by a friend, went to see my sister, who was ill in bed, without any notice or any appointment being made, which, I think, is not altogether the right thing towards a man, very much less towards a woman. She was ill in bed at the time, and could not see them. They never made any other appointment when she would have been glad to have seen them. The consequence was that Hillier got another farm and the matter dropped. With regard to Trestevan, I do not know anything more than that I believe the man Phillips neglected the farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,250. Before you leave Mr. Hillier's case, you do not deny that Hillier was served with a notice to quit?—I do not, but I do know that if he had had a fair explanation to give it would have been considered.

36,251. Was his attention called to the racecourse?—My sister, I believe, was in communication with her agent, and her agent wrote distinctly to say that he knew nothing about it. I have seen the letter. What was she to do but to instruct him?

36,252. So that practically she gave notice to Hillier upon hearsay evidence entirely?—Not hearsay evidence, on written evidence from her agent. The letter was sent to me.

36,253. In order that we may clearly understand this case, Mr. Cooke, was the agent personally acquainted with the fact that Mr. Hillier—that is, if it was a fact—was turning his farm into a racecourse?—It was so.

36,254. Was he personally acquainted with it?—It was written to him, and his reply was that he knew nothing about it.

36,255. So that he did not take the trouble to ascertain whether such was the case or not?—That I cannot tell you, but he wrote, and on the written explanation my sister acted. Whether he knew about it or not I cannot say, but his written explanation to the landlord was that he did not know that Hillier was making a permanent racecourse. If Mr. Hillier had taken the trouble to see my sister it would have been explained; but he did not do so.

36,256. But do you not think it was the duty of the agent, in the first instance to get to know for certain whether such was the case?—I do, most certainly.

36,257. Because it seems an arbitrary thing to do?—I do not think so. My own impression is that it was the fault of the agent, but it is only an impression.

Mr. Grove.

36,258. What do you mean by a "permanent racecourse"?—By a permanent racecourse I mean that the ditches are covered in, and the fences are arranged for horse racing.

36,259. Are there races there now?—No, it was stopped from that moment. I wish to say that my sister has a great objection to races. Every landlord, perhaps, may not have that objection, but she happened to see in the local paper that a permanent racecourse was being made at Llangibby, and she wrote to her agent accordingly. With regard to the small holdings mentioned by Mr. Parry, I would ask Mr. Parry whether his family did not come into some landed property some years ago; that property was sold at a very high price, and the family rented under larger landowners, which, no doubt, is a much more profitable thing. I think it was a very excellent thing of Mr. Parry's family to do, but I wish to say that, to show that where landowners have the opportunity of holding their own land they do not do so; they sell it for a high price, and they rent under the larger landowners, which land they get for a small sum.

Chairman.

36,260. I beg your pardon, but what Mr. Parry spoke of was the great importance of small holdings, and he said that there is no land in the neighbourhood to be sold, and only 99 years' leases are to be obtained, and they are on practically prohibitory terms?—I deny that.

36,261. That is the point we are on?—Mr. Parry has taken out certain spots, but Mr. Parry himself distributed a very large estate, as he mentioned to you by auction, at very high prices last year—the Llanaravon.

36,262. As agent?—As auctioneer.

36,263. I am afraid I do not quite follow the argument?—Mr. Parry was in favour of small holdings.

36,264. Yes?—His family had a small estate that came into their possession on the death of the predecessor. See 36,2 36,265. Yes?—Instead of dividing that among the family into small holdings, they sold that estate for a very large sum, and took farms under a large landowner where the rents were small and the terms easy.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,266. You are simply traversing the opinion of Mr. Parry. You are not rebutting any statement now, Mr. Cooke?—I may be wrong. I was only meeting that statement. I may state that the Caerleon land is building land—the finest site (for building) in the county.

Chairman.

36,267. Is that your property?—No, it is not, it belongs to Mr. Nicholl. That land is to be let for building land, and it is the finest site in the neighbourhood of Newport, which is a very large and growing town. It is close by the railway station, and is, I think, exceptionally valuable. That land is to be let on fair terms. The terms are not what I have placed on it, or rather are not what I did when I acted for Messrs. Nicholl, but it was valued by very competent valuers. The roads and the drainage have not yet been carried out, and the owner did not feel inclined to let it to Mr. Parry as a speculative investment.

36,268. Is the land going off at all?—On the contrary, it is improving in value very much indeed.

36,269. But I mean are any of the plots what they call in England going off; have they been taken up?—I believe not, because the drainage and the road making has not been completed.

36,270. The property is not moving at all, is it?—No, it is not. The roads have not been made, and the drainage has not been made yet, but negotiations are in progress, and I believe that the specification is ready, and the land has been laid out.

Mr. Grove.

36,271. You act as agent for Mr. Nicholl, the landowner, do you not?—I did up to 1891.

36,272. Until recently?—Yes.

36,273. For how many years has that notice board been put up to show that that land is for sale?—It is not for sale. It is to be let on lease for 99 years. I cannot tell you how long the board has been up.

36,274. For 20 years, do you suppose?—I think Mr. George Nicholl put it up before I acted for him.

36,275. How long ago would that be?—I think that must have been about 15 years ago.

Chairman.

36,276. Without any practical result?—Exactly. I should say the land did not happen to be ripe. Building sites go according to the inclination of the population on this side and on that side.

36,277. Is there anything else you wish to state?—I should say that in all the shooting rents under me and my clients we have a shooting agreement that protects the tenants entirely. We consider that the farms are let as farms, and that farmers if they have any complaint should be protected.

Chairman—continued.

36,278. Have you a copy of the agreement?—I have not, but if the Commissioners would like to have a copy I can send one.

36,279. Yes, we should like to have one of those?—It shall be sent. Mr. Parry has referred to an estate of the governors of the schools at Caerleon, and I should like to mention that the acreage is about 890 acres, and the rental is 873*l.* See 36,281.

36,280. This year?—In 1892.

36,281. I must call your attention to this, that we have had all the different rentals of it?—Yes, but there is one point that I wish to call your Lordship's attention to. The insurance on the buildings comes to 11*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.* a year, that is on a value of 12,000*l.* nearly. The rent, therefore, at a building interest of 5 per cent., would produce an income of 600*l.* If you take 600*l.* from 873*l.* it will leave just 273*l.*, the rent for 890 acres of land. That is about 6*s.* per acre. Mr. Parry has also informed you that a very large outlay has been made on the buildings, and for draining on this estate. I am speaking now as between the landlord and the tenant, to show that before a tenant can farm his farm he must make an outlay—if he had the land for nothing he would be compelled to make an outlay for a house to live in, and for his stock to be housed, which at 5 per cent. would leave a very low rent for the land. I call the attention of the Commissioners to that fact.

36,282. That is only to show us what an expense it is to the landlord to keep an estate in order?—Yes, it does show that.

36,283. I am afraid we are very well aware of that; every landlord knows that by heart?—I do not know whether I might be allowed to state here my opinion about a Land Court?

36,284. Yes?—Supposing that a landlord had a sitting tenant and there was any difference between them, then a court, whether it is a Land Court or a County Court, may come in; but in a negotiation between a landlord and a tenant, where they wish to come together, I think it would be most injurious to have any interference by a third party.

36,285. Though you have no objection to some court of arbitration in the case of a difference between landlord and sitting tenant?—Where the tenant is a sitting tenant, where he is in a farm, I say it might be desirable.

36,286. You go as far as that?—I go as far as that, but no farther.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Parry recalled.

Chairman.

See above.

36,287. What is it you wish to state, Mr. Parry?—I should like to have your permission, my Lord, to rebut one or two very serious allegations. I will be as brief as possible.

Chairman—continued.

The first very serious allegation is that the arbitrary treatment of tenants has been inflicted in consequence of myself, that in 1866 I conducted a sale, and that before Mr. Cooke could obtain the money for rent he had to issue a writ. In 1866 I was in the Devon County School.

36,288. That statement, I think, has been qualified?—But I wish to go farther, and to say that as far as any question of paying Mr. Cooke rent, or any threatening of a writ is concerned, it is a deliberate untruth. I never in my life had any such thing occur.

36,289. You go so far as to say it never happened at all?—Never. I will defy him to put in any letter.

36,290. Mr. Cooke said that it was with regard to Mr. E. Williams in 1866, which he afterwards qualified, and said he could not remember, but he thought perhaps it might be 1878, that he could not get his rent. That was in November that he could not get the rent?—Yes.

36,291. And then he stated that he had to threaten Mr. Thomas Parry, which, I take it, is yourself?—Yes, my Lord.

36,292. He had to threaten Mr. Thomas Parry before he did get it, and the rent was paid four months afterwards?—Never; that is totally untrue, and it is strange that no other landlord in the county has ever requested me to give any undertaking other than my own word, and I have never had the slightest difficulty. I have always paid any demand of a landlord where the tenant has been at all in doubt, without the slightest hesitation. I never sold for Mr. E. Williams, of Tyisha, in my life. I never sold for such a person. As to Mr. Cooke having any difficulty to obtain rent from me, it is a deliberate untruth, and I wish to emphasise the fact, because it is a most serious allegation. I do pride myself upon this, that I have never had a threatening letter to pay up any proceeds of sale in my life, and it has been always my motto, and my success has been attended thereby, to settle most punctually and promptly all my sale transactions. Therefore it is a very serious allegation to meet here. Then again, with reference to the statement that poor Morgan was dealt with so harshly, because I had made a most extravagant claim. Under the Act you have to give notice two months before the termination of the tenancy of your claim. At that time it is true that I put in a gross total without any figures (because I had not minutely made my valuation) of 336*l.* 10*s.*, I think. I had before the 2nd of January to give a full detailed list, and on January 27th I wrote to Mr. Cooke the following letter, which it is very fortunate I have brought with me. In answer to his inquiry for the full details I say, "I am duly in receipt " of yours of yesterday's date, and in reply can " only repeat that arrangements have been " made with Mr. Stratton" (that was the gentleman to whom we proposed referring the difference and the dispute) "to hand him particulars of " claim on or about the 2nd proximo. I may " say that in accordance with permission given " to Mr. Morgan on the 9th of December last by " Mr. Nicholl, the clover hay has been sold, and " the claim will thereby be very materially " lessened." So that instead of my claim being 336*l.*, in consequence of, after my notice having been served, permission having been given to sell the hay and clover, I reduced my claim from 336*l.* to 252*l.*, making the ordinary allowance of 1*l.* per ton from my first claim sent in. So that that explains that matter so far as it is concerned. The next point was with reference to Llandowlais.

36,293. Whose farm was that?—Mr. Hillier was the tenant. Mr. Cooke appears to know a great deal about this. I wish to say there, with regard to the agent, that a more honourable man could not be, and if all the agents were like him everything would be very nice. But he knew nothing whatever about poor Hillier having to leave this farm until he received notice from the landlady to go down to Llandowlais to serve this notice upon Mr. Hillier on the 2nd of August. Immediately that came as a thunderbolt upon poor Hillier (whose brother happens to be here), they at once wrote a letter to Mrs. Williams, begging for an interview, pointing out the serious consequences of the notice to leave upon Mr. Hillier, who had a large family, and not having a reply—they would not reply to his letter—the brother then, who is present, said, "We will go over, Jim, and we will see her." After being kept in the house some time, the reply came back, "Mrs. Williams is ill, and " cannot see you," but it took some time before that information came. As to a permanent race-course being erected, very fortunately one or two of the gentlemen who were getting up this race meeting happen to be in the room. There was nothing permanent whatever erected. It was simply a little one-day race.

Mr. Grove.

36,294. Was not the hedges and the ditches altered according to Mr. Cooke's statement?—But that is only a matter of a very short time; just where the fences and the hedges came the stakes would naturally be put out of the way, so that it would not be injurious, but nothing of a permanent character.

Chairman.

36,295. Nothing like Kempton Park or Sandown?—No, my Lord, no stand or anything of that kind. But the hardship was that the tenant had no notification to let him know that his landlady objected; if he had known he certainly would have stopped the races. The first intimation he had was a notice, and then there was a refusal to see him at all.

36,296. Was it a hunt meeting?—No; it was got up in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,297. We heard, I think, that she did write a letter to him?—No; Mr. Cooke states that his sister did write to the agent, but we know nothing about that. The poor tenant never heard anything, and he left that farm, of about 300 acres, with a paltry paying out of about

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

200*l.* Then again, Mr. Cooke made reference to my family having sold an estate. My mother certainly was interested, partly with an uncle, in an estate. When my uncle died, that portion was willed to my brothers, sisters, and myself. We were launching out in life, and it was very necessary that we should have capital. There was a mortgage upon it, and it was necessary that the mortgage should be paid off and the money should be distributed between us. I may say my father farmed for 60 years; he was a most industrious and abstemious man, yet he left off, after 60 years, with less money than he commenced with, and his whole life was devoted to the farm.

Chairman.

36,298. Whom did he farm under?—He had a very good landlord, Mr. Hanbury, of Pontypool, whose agent is a very fair, reasonable man. But that only shows the state of agriculture, that at 82 years of age I got him to give up, and he left off in a worse position. There was no setting up his sons; we had no money from him at all. So that there is a clear case of farming. As to the land at Caerleon, Mr. Cooke says it is only 15 years, but that land has been advertised with large boards for over 20 years, since the line has been opened, and not yet has anyone built upon it, although we have a splendid train service of 20 trains a day. If that land was let at a reasonable figure the whole of it would be covered by houses by people from Newport. I should like to put in an agreement of Mr. Nicholl's estate for you to see. There was one very hard case under that, where the widow died after 40 years. As soon as the widow died, the son, who had been with her, had notice to turn out unless he paid an increase of 20*l.* He had to go.

Mr. Grove.

36,299. What increase was that on?—The rent was 104*l.*, and in the bad times it was reduced to the mother to 80*l.* The old lady had been there 40 odd years. The old lady died, and that notice was served upon the son, and the son could not retain the farm unless he paid the old rent; he had notice to pay that rent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Gwilym Cristor James called and examined.

Chairman.

36,300. You are a solicitor?—I am a solicitor at Merthyr Tydvil. I am interested in property in the county of Monmouth, and I know the county of Monmouth as well as I do the county of Glamorgan. The first matter I wish to put before the Commission is with regard to distraint of animals' damage feasant. The present remedy of impounding, which necessitates replevin, is to my mind a very barbarous one in these days. For instance, the poor tenant who has had his cattle distrained for damage feasant, if he wishes to redeem, must pay, first of all, a guinea to the bailiff of the county court, and there are other charges and expenses which run up to about 2*l.* in all. What I wish to point out is, that that should be remedied by applying to the United Kingdom generally, an Act of Parliament which now only applies to the metropolis. It is 2 & 3 Victoria, chapter 71, which gives a summary remedy in the metropolitan area for unlawful, or illegal, or excessive distress up to a sum of 15*l.* per annum, and in cases where the tenements are let by the week or by the month. If that were made a general Act of Parliament and were made to include damage feasant as well as rent, it would be a very beneficial Act, I am sure, to the country at large. That is the first point I wish to touch upon.

The next point that I wish to call your Lordship's and the Commissioners' attention to is, that under settlements and by conveyance we very frequently find, as lawyers, that estates are settled or conveyed to persons for life without impeachment of waste. The result of that is that very often very estimable gentlemen, who have no interest whatever in the remainder-man, naturally seek to get all they can get during their lives out of the property which is either conveyed to them or settled upon them for life, and the poor tenant cannot get any repairs done. He waits, if those gentlemen are of an advanced age, hoping, I suppose, that in a short time the remainder-man will come in, and he will get the estate properly repaired. That has occurred in my experience several times. It was only, I think, a month ago that I visited a farm on the confines of this county, in the parish of Gelligaer, in Glamorganshire. It is a farm of about 60 acres, at a rent of about 60*l.* per annum. For the last ten years the farmer told me that only 13*l.* had been spent in repairs, and when I went up to the living room I found it was in such a condition that I quite believed the statement that the rain water did actually come on the bed when it rained. The remedy that I would recommend there would be that such things should not be possible; that there should be a law that every person who held land for his life should be liable to the remainder-man for the proper maintenance of the property. Some people might go so far as to say for the proper cultivation of the land too, but that is putting it perhaps a little higher than I should be justified in putting it.

36,301. It is without impeachment of waste, I take it. Supposing a man cut timber on any estate, he would be liable?—He would be liable.

36,302. Suppose he cut 50,000*l.* worth of timber on a large estate, he would be liable if he only spent 50*l.* on it?—Yes; I would not go so far as that, certainly not. I am thinking more especially of the hardship which I frequently find does exist with regard to the buildings.

36,303. You would not go so far as timbers?—Oh no. Then I am interested as a copyholder, or the holder of a customary freehold, in the manor of Wentsland and Bryngwyn in this county. In this case I do not wish to occupy the time of the Commissioners in dealing with any controversial matters, but I would like to point out that it is alleged by the ladies and lords of the manor that the copyholders have no right to lease for more than 21 years. This manor is chiefly composed of mineral property, and it is also alleged by the ladies and lords of the manor that an alienation fee of two years' improved value is payable when the property passes from one tenant to another. Now, the effect upon leases for 21 years of the two years' alienation fee amounts to this, that copyholders are really debarred from letting their land for building purposes. Collieries are springing up in the vicinity. If the copyholder who has land which is suitabe for building, and to whom application is made, wishes to let, he could not ask for more in certain localities, than 1*d.* a square yard; the ground rent might possibly come to, say 15*s.* with some garden ground added for a cottage. If a house was built upon that piece of building ground, and he did lease it for 21 years with a covenant to renew for successive periods, say for 60 or 90 years, then if that house is built and it is worth 12*l.* a year, that is 24*l.* for the two years. Now when that copyholder comes to sell his little copyhold, although he is only getting 15*s.* a year ground rent, the purchaser from him would be asked to pay two years' improved value, which would be 24*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

36,304. Including the house, of course?—No, not including the house, the ground rent that the copyholder gets is only 15*s.* a year. The lessee gets the 12*l.* a year, but the ladies and lords say: "We have nothing to do with "your arrangements: the improved value is "12*l.* a year; we want 24*l.* from you, the "copyholder."

36,305. May I ask upon that point whether alienation includes also the taking it by purchase under a will?—No, I do not think it does.

36,306. Not descent, but by alienation?—By devise. I do not know whether it would not meet devise; it certainly does not meet the question of descent, not in this manor. Of course there is always a difficulty also as to whether the devisee is not a purchaser in law. That is a point there, I quite agree. So that the effect of that is, that although collieries are springing up in different parts of this manor of Wentsland and Bryngwyn, when one is approached and is wishful to see buildings put upon one's property, one is debarred really from entertaining applications, and the men have to walk for many miles in consequence to their work.

See 5914, 34,669, 34,708.

Chairman.

36,307. If you lease land for 21 years, with a covenant for renewal, is that good in law? Is that binding?—That is binding, yes.

36,308. Then that really gets over the difficulty of the short 21 years' lease except in the case of the fine, of course?—Well, it is not so advantageous, naturally. We have to accept it.

36,309. And it would be binding in law?—I believe it would. Some doubt has even been cast upon that by Watkins in his book on copyholds, and by Scriven too.

36,310. But that is the only way in which you can give a 99 years' lease — for 21 years with a covenant for renewal for 21 years, and and for renewal again for 21 years, which is supposed to be binding on your successor?—That is so.

36,311. Which may or may not be binding?—Yes. I think it is Watkins who says it is a case of forfeiture too. That is all I have to put before the Commission.

Mr. Grove.

36,312. Then you consider that the heavy costs and fines and heriots and so on that are payable, prevent building, and keep back the neighbourhood?—Under the circumstances which I have detailed to you, yes.

36,313. And, as a rule, do the lords and ladies sometimes give three renewals of 21 years?—It is the copyholder who grants the lease for 21 years, and then covenants that he will, at the expiration of 21 years, renew for another 21 years, and at the expiration of that period will renew for another, and so on, if he likes. It is a matter of bargain.

36,314. As a matter of fact, they never promise or covenant for more than three renewals of 21 years, I think, do they?—In my experience there have been no applications to me for more than the three successive renewals; but if there were, I see no reason why they should not grant four, in fact.

36,315. Do you happen to know the land that belongs to Mr. Hughes?—I know the locality very well.

36,316. Up the Cwmffardor Valley?—Yes.

36,317. And you know there is an accommodation railway along there?—Up to the Cwmnantddu Colliery, you mean.

36,318. Yes. The rent payable to Mr. Hughes is 250*l.* a year, I think?—That would include more than the surface, I think.

36,319. Then you consider that their demand of 500*l.* for the transfer of that property would be monstrously excessive, I suppose I do not know how to express it otherwise?—That is not the assessment of the surface: it is the assessment of the surface, plus something else which the lords are not entitled to, as we say. I am in the same position myself. I have had notice to pay two years' improved value, and I have to attend on the 21st of this month; but I did not intend to go into details of that sort before the Commission, especially after what I see took place at Newport.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,320. We had mentioned to-day cheapness of transfer of land as being very desirable in small holdings. Do you think much more could be done in the way of cheapening transfer of land? You have very small conveyances now, have you not?—Oh, the conveyance itself is very small; I mean it is very short now; but unfortunately titles are very frequently complicated. I should myself very much like to see the transfer of land cheapened.

36,321. Is there not a certain amount of hypocrisy in the cry for the transfer of land, as a political cry, when we put 10*s.* per cent. on the transfer?—Well, speaking personally, I must say that I have not had any complaint in my own practice.

36,322. It is very much less than it used to be?—Very much less than it used to be, I think, taking it on the whole.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,323. Would it not be a good thing to see all this copyhold land enfranchised?—But you must remember there is a question between the lords and the tenants here with regard to the ownership of the mines, and there are other questions which operate, at present at anyrate, as a bar against attempting to enfranchise. I have enfranchised in other manors.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

36,324. But I mean a general enfranchisement throughout the whole country?—Oh, yes, it should be compulsory. I quite agree with you.

Mr. Grove.

36,325. With regard to the manorial rights over the minerals, has there not been a test case in our county?—That was in the manor of Abercarn, where it was alleged the customs were not similar; in fact, there were no customs there, it was alleged. That went against the lords of the manor.

36,326. That went against the lords of the manor. They won that after an enormous fight?—Oh, yes.

36,327. Did they go to the House of Lords?—I do not think they went to the Lords. They went to the Court of Appeal, if I recollect rightly, and got judgment. I think it cost 30,000*l.* I had to pay pretty well the last of the bills, about 6,000*l.* or 7,000*l.*, to the solicitors who fought the case.

36,328. I think it was generally in favour of the tenants and against the lords of the manor?—That was so, yes. Of course I only acted as solicitor in that payment. It was not a personal matter.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. E. Vincent recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

36,329. Do you wish to give some evidence?—Yes. I do not think I need state my position again; I have stated it several times. I hand in a table of abatements and reductions, with observations as to the history of rent, in the exact words of the various persons who have made returns to me; and those returns are, as the Commission know, ready for their inspection at any moment. I think I would like to say this further about Monmouthshire, that I have fewer returns for Monmouthshire than any place—not particularly, I think, because the members of my association are fewer in Monmouthshire than elsewhere; but I find that the Monmouthshire landowner, like the Monmouthshire tenant, is afraid to come forward. I am afraid he labours under the delusion that he lives in England.

Chairman—continued.

The following table was handed in:—

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
S. C. Bosanquet, Dingestow Court, Monmouth.	Dingestow (2,580 acres).	10 per cent. on rents due February 1878 to February 1880, inclusive; 20 per cent. on rents due August 1880; some 10, some 20 per cent. on rents due February 1881; 10 per cent. on reduced rents due August 1885 to August 1888 inclusive; 5 per cent. on rents due February and August 1889; 10 per cent. on rents due August 1892.	The rents were reduced in 1881 for the most part, but some before, i.e., about 1879, and some since. The reduction amounts to rather more than 29 per cent., viz., from 2,231*l.* in 1877 to 1,574*l.* in 1892.	——
J. A. Bradney, Taly-coed Court.	Tal-y-coed (1,500 acres).	- - - -	On most of the farms the rents have been permanently reduced, so much so that no abatement has since been applied for by any tenant, and none has been given. Most of the farms have been purchased since 1880.	——

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Rev. J. T. Harding, Pentwyn, Rochfield, Monmouth.	Pentwyn and Deepholme (200 acres).	I am giving back now 10 per cent. on a reduced rental.	Since 1877 rents have been reduced 30 per cent.	When I purchased Deepholme in 1873 I found the tenant leaving of his own accord, and I re-let at a 10 per cent. higher rent than he had been paying, and had no difficulty in so doing. That rent has been reduced as stated.
Capt. Homfray, Penllyn Castle, Cowbridge.	Penllyn Castle, (in Glamorgan and Monmouth 2,025 acres).	Abatements of 5 to 10 per cent. have been made; for the last audit rent 15 per cent.	Since 1877 some reductions have been made in the case of old tenants.	The estate has not been revalued within the last 50 years, nor have rents been raised.
J. Lawrence, Caerleon House.	1,500 acres -	I have granted several abatements since 1877, but not uniformly, as most of my property is occupied by tenants under leases.	I have in two instances granted a permanent reduction of from 15 to 20 per cent. where leases were running and the term unexpired. In two other instances my tenants have sold the unexpired term of their leases, in the one case for 110*l.*, and in the other for 80*l.*; and in a third case where the lease had to run about 20 years, the tenant in possession sold the unexpired term for six hundred pounds.	——
Sir W. T. Lewis, The Mardy, Aberdare.	In Brecon, Glamorgan, Carmarthen, and Monmouth (1,200 acres).	- - - -	A farm in Monmouthshire, purchased by me in 1886, was held by the tenant under an agreement, dated June 1856, at a rental of 266*l.* per annum, but this had been reduced by verbal arrangement prior to my purchase to 239*l.* per annum; and, although I have, since the purchase, spent over 400*l.* on the farm buildings, the tenant has been granted a lease for 14 years at the reduced rent.	I have only acquired the farms within the last 20 years, and there has been no re-valuation since they have come into my possession; neither have the rents been raised.
Lord Llangattock, The Hendre.	The Hendre (5,000 acres).	On eleven occasions since 1877 abatements of from 10 per cent. to 50 per cent. have been granted.	Since 1877 permanent reductions amounting to about 25 per cent. have been made.	The estate has not been revalued in the last half century, nor have rents been raised.
Major R. H. Mansel (as trustee for Mrs. Mansel and his own property).	In Monmouth, Glamorgan, and Brecon (500 acres).	Abatements have been granted of 5, 6½, 17, 9, 10 and 8 per cent.	- - - -	The estate has not been revalued.
Mrs. Perry-Herrick, Beau Manor Park, Loughborough.	Pen Coed and Penhow (4,120 acres.)	Some farms have been kept at the original rent (on the rent-roll); these have had allowances since 1877, viz.: 1877, 10 per cent.; 1878, 10 per cent.; 1879, 30 per cent.; 1880, 15 per cent.; 1881, 10 per cent.; 1882, 10 per cent.; 1883, 10 per cent.; 1884, 12½ per cent.; 1885, 15 per cent.; 1886, 15 per cent.; 1887, 35 per cent.; 1888, 35 per cent. (from this year permanently reduced 20 per cent.); and in 1892 abatement 20 per cent. on reduced rent. Other farms re-let since 1877 permanent reductions made according to circumstances.	The rent-roll of farming lands (1877) was 4,827*l.* 11*s.*; in 1892, 4,355*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* (with increased acreage of about 300 acres). The rental shows that returns and abatements to tenants from 1877 to 1892 amount to 7,142 l. 7*s.* 3*d.* outside of reduced rents.	The estate has not been revalued within the last 50 years. Rents have certainly not been raised during that period.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Trustees of the Trelleck Charity Lands.	23 acres - -	12 per cent. was granted on one year to one tenant; and 8 per cent. was granted on one year to another tenant.	One holding has been reduced from 12*l.* to 10*l.*	One holding near Monmouth has been raised from 10*l.* to 12*l.* per annum, but we have had 480*l.* offered for this holding, which shows that we have been receiving only 2½ per cent. on this land and tenement, and have been liable for all repairs also.
Mrs. Tudor, Wyesham House, Dixton.	Wyesham and Llanolway (330 acres).	An abatement has been granted since 1878 of 6*l.* per annum to one of three tenants at Llanolway. This year 10 per cent.	Since 1877 I should say the rents have been permanently reduced 50 per cent.	The estate was re-valued in 1884 resulting in a great reduction of rents.
Geo. Willis, Newton Hall, Dixton.	Cwm-Collier farm (110 acres).	- - - -	In 1889 I reduced the rent 33 per cent., and it has so continued since.	—

Mr. Grove.

36,330. With regard to that table, you will give us any further information, if we need it, after looking it through?—Certainly. Above that, I have had sent to me this morning, first of all, the written answers to some questions that Mr. Seebohm and Lord Kenyon wished answered by Mr. Sackville Owen, agent to the Picton Castle Estate, and a minor correction in one point of that gentlemen's evidence. I think he got the acreage of the Picton Castle estate wrong by 2,000 acres.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,331. Does he say the number of tenants?—Yes, he gives the number of tenants. There were questions asked by you, I think.

Chairman.

36,332. Will you just read that out; then it will get on the notes?—This is the statement:—

Chairman—continued.

"Welsh Land Commission.

"Picton Castle Estate.

"Syllabus.

"Page 1, Question 4. The acreage of the above estate is 22,500, not 25,000 as stated.

"Evidence.

"The acreage of agricultural land is about 20,000, and the rental 18,332*l.*

"Total repairs from 1879 to 1893 (both inclusive) 36,000*l.*

"This amounts to 13*l.* 2*s.* per cent. off income

"No. of agricultural tenants, 500.

"I have been agent for the Picton Castle estate for 19 years, and during that time there has not been one case of ejectment nor a single lawsuit.

"SACKVILLE H. OWEN."

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. ALFRED M. PILLINER called and examined.

Chairman.

36,333. You live at Llantarnam Grange, Newport?—I do.

36,334. You are a landowner, and you farm as well?—Yes.

36,335. Do you farm your own land?—I farm my own land, and some that I rent—about equal proportions.

36,336. What is the acreage of your land?—Something over 400 acres.

Mr. Grove.

36,337. That includes both?—That includes both—that is, cultivated land, and woods besides.

Chairman.

36,338. On what subjects do you wish to speak?—I thought, perhaps, I might be able to give some evidence on the dairying industry. There has been a good deal of interest taken in that in Monmouthshire lately. Schools have been opened for technical education, and so forth. There was started last season a school for butter-making. I am very much afraid there is very little money to be made out of butter-making. The calculation of making butter is a comparatively simple one. I think it takes three gallons of average milk to make a pound of butter; when you take butter to market you get 1*s.* 2*d.* a pound perhaps, all the year round. It is true you have the skim milk back, but I do not think farmers can make 2*d.* a gallon of the skim milk in any way. Therefore that brings a net return for the three gallons of milk of about 1*s.* 6*d.* or 1*s.* 7*d.*

36,339. What do you think three gallons of milk are worth?—Of course, if they can sell it, and if it is anywhere near a railway station, they can get 8*d.* a gallon for it all the year round, nett, at home. Personally, I sell at 10*d.* in the winter, and 8*d.* in the summer; then there is the carriage to pay for it; but it makes about 8*d.* all the year round.

36,340. What do you get for a pound of butter?—I make none.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,341. So that you get 2*s.* by selling the milk as against 1*s.* 2*d.* by selling the butter?—Yes, it is true you have the pleasure of making the butter.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,342. Is there a great demand for milk?—Oh, yes, all through Monmouthshire.

36,343. The demand is greater than the supply?—Yes. It is imported in large quantities from Somersetshire, and if the railway companies would assist the local farmers it would be a good thing.

Chairman.

36,344. Butter-making is a dead loss?—I am afraid so.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,345. That would only apply in populous districts?—I think it applies to the whole of Monmouthshire, or the greater part of it—at any rate, by far the greater part of it.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,346. Is this butter made under the new system, or according to the old system?—At the dairy schools it is made under the new system. My object is to show that these dairy schools are rather a step in the wrong direction. I think they are rather encouraging farmers to produce that which, with all said and done, and when it is made, will not pay them to make. You may encourage farmers to launch out in separators, and so forth, and when all is said and done, there is nothing in it; it lands them in loss.

36,347. How about the dairies, are the dairies suitable? As a rule, in most parts we have been in they are very bad?—I do not think they are suitable, but I do not think it is worth any one's while to make them suitable. If they cannot sell the milk they had better not produce it.

36,348. But milk has not been so fluctuating, has it, as other things?—In price?

36,349. Yes?—No; it maintains a fairly regular price.

36,350. And butter is better than anything else in the farming line?—I think cheese is better than butter.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,351. Could you give us the figures for producing a pound of cheese in the same way?—No, I cannot; I have nothing to do with cheese. They are now about starting a school for teaching cheese making. I had a letter from Mr. Grant about it the other day. I told him I was perfectly ready to give him any assistance I could; in fact I offered to place my place at the disposal of the County Council for the purpose of their lessons.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,352. But you believe that neither cheese nor butter will be equal to selling milk?—Oh, dear, no. There is another advantage in making cheese, that it can be stored; if you cannot sell it to-day you can keep it for a month or two; but butter must be sold at once. Farmers when they take butter to market must take what they can get for it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

36,353. Your reply only applies to Monmouthshire; it would not apply to thinly populated districts, where there is no market?—Quite so.

Mr. Griffiths.

36,354. To places where railways are convenient?—Yes, where railways are convenient. The greater quantity of the milk that is consumed in Newport and Cardiff comes from Somersetshire by rail. The railway company carry milk a long distance for a much cheaper rate per mile than they will carry it for a short distance. I am within five miles of Newport, but it costs me just the same to send it to Newport as it would for 20 miles. Up to a very short time ago I could send it for 70 miles for the same price. The consequence is that it brings milk from a large circle into the populous districts.

36,355. We find that butter from Devonshire is sold very much in our district?—Oh, yes, undoubtedly.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,356. Does it come by water?—No, I think not. Some of it may come across from Bristol by water, but not to a very large extent. There is another little matter in railway rates that struck my attention only this morning. I inquired a rate for hay from my place to Aberdare, and they gave me: hay, machine pressed, exclusive of labour, minimum charge for 2½ tons per truck, 6*s.* 11*d.*; hay, not hydraulic or machine pressed, minimum charge as for 30 cwts., 9*s.* 8*d.* Now, I do not know whether it strikes you at first sight how that operates. Farmers as a rule send full truck loads, and their object is to put as much as they can on a truck; but unless the farmer is prepared to make a declaration that it is pressed or says it is pressed, he has to pay the high rate of 9*s.* 8*d.* in those cases. If he chooses to say it is pressed he can do so, although it may not be so. If he can put anything over 30 cwts. on a truck and say it is pressed, he gets it sent at the low rate. He can put as much as he likes on, and if he does not say it is pressed he does not get the advantage of the lower rate. Really it is a premium on fraud. A very large number of farmers and dealers are tempted to say their hay is pressed when it is not pressed, and it just depends on the strictness or otherwise of the local station master. I feel it myself. I was loading some the other day, and the station master said to me. "If you are prepared "to say it is pressed, that is enough for me." I said "No, I am not prepared to say it is "pressed. There is over 3 tons on the truck, "and it should go at the rate of 6*s.* 11*d.*; but "because I do not like to say it is pressed when "it is not, I have to pay the higher rate." I think they might easily alter the classification, and simply say, hay in loads of 30 cwts., so much; or not less than 50 cwts., so much.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Mr. Grove.

36,357. Do you know this blue-book that is published by the Board of Trade?—Yes, I have seen it.

36,358. It costs 1*s.*, and tells you everything?—Yes, we know it It simply requires a little alteration of it, that is all.

36,359. But the agricultural question of hay was very ably discussed by the agriculturists before Lord Balfour of Burleigh's Committee. I was present the whole of the time, and, although it may still be not in a satisfactory position, I think they did get an improvement on what was originally proposed. Hay, if it is hydraulic or steam pressed—"steam packed" they call it——?—Of course it never is in this country.

36,360. That is in Class C.?—Yes.

36,361. If it is machine pressed with a minimum of 40 cwt. per truck, that is in Class 1.; if it is a minimum load of 30 cwts. per waggon, it is in Class 2. There are each of those classes for hay?—Yes.

36,362. And the station terminal varies according to the class that it is put in?—Yes.

36,363. In Class 2 the station terminal would be 1*s.* 6*d.* at each end; that is 3*s.* at once?—That is the machine pressed.

36,364. Yes; I think it is the same with Class 1 and Class 2; it is 1*s.* 6*d.*, but have you worked out the mileage to see whether the rates are exactly right?—No, I have not. That is not the part of it that affects my question. Whether the charge is high or low, I do not mind particularly as long as they are all on the same footing. But what I feel is this. At present I am called upon to compete against a man who gets his hay carried at a lower rate than I do, simply because he is able to make a false declaration. That is my complaint.

36,365. As long as there are differential charges, any man may make a false declaration, and try to get a benefit from it?—But it invariably goes through.

36,366. But that is rather a serious position for a man to place himself in, is it not?—It is.

36,367. I think you must see that there is something to justify the railway companies. For instance, hay pressed goes into much less space than hay that is not pressed?—Yes, but why cannot they leave out the term "pressed," and simply make it a question of weights. Say, "If you put on 2 tons 10 cwt., and keep under "our gauge, very well and good, we do not care "whether it is pressed or not; all we want is "to have full loads for our trucks." I think it is the pressing that is the objectionable part of it.

36,368. There was a recent Committee, as you know, inquiring into the railway rates question, and I believe this matter has come before that Committee. Have you seen their report?—No, I have not.

36,369. I think you will find probably it is dealt with. If not, it would be well for you to communicate with the member representing your division, Colonel Morgan, stating this fact to him, and ask him to move an amendment with regard to hay, when the Bill comes before the House, which is going to be introduced in a few days?—Yes. I again offer to give information on the question of ensilage. I do not know whether you care to hear it.

Chairman.

36,370. Oh, yes, I think so, very much indeed?—I believe I am one of the first persons who ever made it in England experimentally, and I have made it ever since. I think it is a pity that farmers do not make use of it more. In wet seasons I frequently have farmers come to my place, and see it being made, but they seem disappointed at the simplicity of the operation; they think there is nothing in it; I think in only one case have I ever met with a farmer who will take the trouble to see it cut out later on. I have frequently given them an opportunity; I have written and said, "I am cutting "out my ensilage stack, will you come to see "it?" The answer is, "Oh, some day," and they do not come. I think it is a pity for their own sakes that they do not. I think good ensilage is certainly better than bad hay, and that farmers would be wise to make more of it in risky seasons. Some people go so far as to say that a greater head of stock can be kept on the same land by making ensilage than by making hay, but I do not think that.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,371. It is a much simpler process than it was thought to be, is it?—There is absolutely nothing in it at all. You build it up into a stack in the same way that you would hay, and simply press it.

36,372. It does not require a great outlay?—Absolutely nothing. The outlay is nothing at all. It is simply made into the stack in the same way that hay is.

36,373. And trodden down?—Trodden down, weighted, and thatched.

36,374. Your experience is that that mode is satisfactory?—Oh, most satisfactory. My method is this. I make a good deal of hay and ensilage. I make hay when it is fine, and if the weather turns wet, I turn to and make silage. I keep a stack going all through the harvest time. Once it is started, we keep going on putting a little on every other day. That is the part of it that farmers do not understand, I think. They think that they must commence a stack and go along and finish it. As a matter of fact, it takes me from two to three months to finish my stack.

36,375. Do you not find it heat?—Yes, naturally, as it is necessary that it should, but not to a prejudicial extent. A certain amount of heat is necessary.

Chairman.

36,376. Have you anything to say about small holdings?—I do not see how farmers of small holdings can ever compete against large ones. When it comes to arable land especially, I think a small farmer with a small holding who has any arable land finds the difficulty of getting that cultivated, entirely does away with any profits that may be derived from it.

Mr. Grove.

36,377. But you consider arable land is getting less and less, and pasture land is getting more and more?—Yes, that is so. Then there is another matter which I have given a good deal of attention to, that is irrigation. I think that last summer being a very dry summer, very many farmers turned their attention to it who had never done so before, but even then in my limited field of observation, I saw many cases in which it was entirely neglected. It is often easily done by damming streams up at the top portion of their land, flooding large areas, and consequently getting very much increased crops. People do not believe in it; lots of farmers do not believe in it. They say, "Oh, you grow "a lot of rubbish," but it is a great mistake. There is an immense amount of fertilising matter even in a perfectly pure clean stream, and the effect upon pasture is very marked if turned over it.

36,378. Do you think their disinclination is because they have not got a stream in a convenient position?—They do not consider it; they do not believe in it, and do not turn their attention that way at all. I may say that I entered on some land last year and grew some very good crops indeed in the dry season, although it was a very poor farm, simply by watering. Then again, I think farmers are much illtreated by the middlemen. If farmers would make up their minds to sell their fat stock by live weight, I do not say bring in an Act to make it compulsory, because I do not believe in interference in that way, but I think if farmers would amongst themselves combine and make up their minds not to sell their fat stock except by live weight, it would be greatly to their advantage. I do not think a farmer is a match for any butcher in the guessing of the weight of a carcase. The butcher is enabled to check his judgment by every beast he kills; the farmer has no means of checking his judgment. He may imagine that an animal may weigh so much, but he has no means of finding out later on. The butcher is very loth to give him any information on the point; that is my experience.

36,379. I suppose in the market they do not weigh now?—Oh, dear, no.

36,380. I know, in my time, there was a compulsory weighing machine?—There is one at Newport.

36,381. I have never seen it?—No. I believe, as a matter of fact, the butchers boycot it. If they see farmers weigh their beasts they will have nothing to do with them. That is what I have heard; that is not my own experience.

36,382. Why should the butcher be stronger than the farmer? Why should he be able to boycot the farmer?—Because they all join together and farmers do not.

36,383. Is there no combination among farmers?—No.

36,384. That is most unfortunate, is it not?—Most unfortunate, I think.

36,385. I suppose there is no co-operation for the purchase of manures or fertilisers, and so on?—That is so, and I believe it is a great weakness amongst farmers. Instead of telling each other what they are doing and working together, every man works in the dark, and does the best that he can for himself, as it were. I have frequently known cases in my neighbourhood where that has been demonstrated. They are the only class of people that do try to get on without some combination or co-operation, and efforts to pull together.

36,386. Just taking another view of that for the moment; are butchers more successful in life than the ordinary tenant farmer?—I suppose so. My experience goes to that most distinctly.

36,387. I think some butchers have retired pretty early in life with a very decent fortune?—That is my experience. The men who have made any money out of farming, I think, you could count on the fingers of one hand; at any rate, the men that I have known in this county for the last 20 years. It is the same with dairy produce. The farmers with their milk could, no doubt, do vastly better if they would combine together and start a central dairy; the public need not pay a higher price for it.

36,388. You mean a factory?—A factory is not necessary; because there is nothing to manufacture, it is simply for the sale.

36,389. The same that they have in parts of Wiltshire, Devizes, Melksham, and so on?—Yes, the public pay a fair price for their milk, but by the time it gets to the farmer it is cut down most unmercifully. The man who walks round with the pails gets more than one-third of the gross value, yet the farmer has all his labour, all his capital, and all the risks to run.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,390. In your neighbourhood is there a good supply of milk to the cottage holders?—Oh, yes; they can get any quantity by paying for it. That is the only difficulty, I think.

36,391. The distribution is expensive, I suppose?—Not necessarily. It should not be. The reason why distribution is expensive is that there are such a large number of men at it, a number of people trying to make a living out of selling eight or ten gallons of milk a day; it will not stand it. There are too many between the farmer and the general public. Whereas, if farmers would join together instead of half a dozen carts going along every street daily in Newport now, if the farmers round a neighbourhood like Newport would join together, they could map it out and work it on more economical lines. I do not hesitate to say that milk could be distributed in a wholesale way well at 2*d.* a gallon. As it is done now, the retailer wants from 4*d.* to 6*d.* for doing it. It could be done without raising the price to the public, and I am sure it would very much benefit the farmer. Again, if they would combine, I think they would benefit themselves by getting manures and so forth in a wholesale way. If a farmer is buying manure in a small way, say he is buying a couple of tons, and has a sample analysed, and that costs him 10*s.*; that is 5*s.* a ton. If he and his neighbours combine together and get some 20 tons, they could get a sample of that analysed for the 10*s.*

36,392. Would one sample be sufficient out of 20 tons?—I think it would give one a very fair idea.

36,393. There are tables issued by the Agricultural Department, I dare say you have seen them?—Oh, yes, that is only one question. Then, of course, he has to pay carriage. As you know, a large quantity of manure can often be got round by water at a very much lower rate than two tons could be brought across by rail.

Chairman.

36,394. Have you any other ideas about remedies for the agricultural depression, or anything else?—Well, at the risk of being laughed at, it is my opinion that we must have a change in our fiscal policy before agriculture can fairly revive. I think wheat growing is getting less and less every year, and farmers would be wise if they gave it up entirely, perhaps we should then doubt the wisdom of trusting absolutely to foreign nations for our entire supply of bread stuffs. I advise all farmers myself not to sow another bushel of wheat. I never intend to sow another until the price alters. I do not think it can alter until we get a change.

36,395. What do you mean to rely on then?—I think no farmer now relies on wheat-growing. It is difficult to know what to rely on, because it is difficult to see what is profitable, but wheat-growing, I think, is certainly not profitable. Oat-growing is better than wheat-growing. To put it in tons, the land that will grow a ton of wheat, I think, will grow 25 cwts. of oats. A ton of oats is worth more money, now a days, than a ton of wheat. I fail to see how a duty of 5*s.* a quarter on corn would hurt anyone, or where the wisdom of taxing tea and coffee, and admitting wheat free comes in.

36,396. What was the proportion you said between oats and wheat?—I drew a bow at a venture rather. I said 25 cwts. of oats to one ton of wheat. I think land that will grow one ton of wheat will grow something like 25 cwts. of oats.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,397. Which takes the most out of the ground?—Ton for ton?

36,398. Yes?—I should say wheat; and there is another advantage in growing oats. Oat straw, as chemists will tell you, has a distinctly higher manurial value than wheat straw. The only thing that has kept wheat on its legs as long as it has is the high price that has been obtaining for wheat straw, but that, of course, is out of the reach of the greater proportion of the farmers. It is only farmers in the neighbourhood of large towns that can command these high prices for their straw. Wheat straw has been selling at 4*l.* 10*s.* and 5*l.* a ton this winter for horses. Of course it is a very small proportion that fetches that.

36,399. May I ask a question about the farming rents in these populous districts, does it not often happen that a man on a little farm pays what seems a very high rent because it is partially residential?—Yes, that is so.

36,400. Do you think that acts badly to the man who wants to be pure farmer?—I think it does to a small extent. I think men in the manufacturing districts have some employment at the works, and they take a bit of land and keep two or three cows, and, apart from the profit and loss of the thing, they compete with the bonâ fide farmers, I think somewhat to his prejudice.

36,401. It makes a home for them that they like to have?—Exactly, there is no reason why they should not do it. They have a perfect right to do it.

36,402. There is no remedy for it?—There is no remedy for it. I would not like to suggest one. I think every man has a right to live where he likes and do what he likes.

36,403. You think that no legislation could ultimately get out of that difficulty?—No, I think not. I think it is a fact, but it is one that we must put up with.

36,404. Of course there is a great advantage to the farmer in having a market close at hand with a large population in the neighbourhood?—Undoubtedly, and they pay much higher rents in consequence.

36,405. Do you know any farmers near you who use separators?—No, I do not.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

36,406. You do not use one yourself, I suppose?—No. I keep 60 cows and buy butter, I could not afford to make butter.

36,407. Because you can sell your milk to better advantage?—Yes.

36,408. You think the neighbourhood of Newport, and so on, would take a larger supply of milk from the surrounding farmers than appears to go there?—Oh, dear, yes.

36,409. Then you think if there was co-operation in the sale of milk it would be profitable. For instance, in Haverfordwest last week we had evidence of a case where a farmer makes up 1 cwt. of butter and sends it by passenger train to Bristol. He says he gets 2*d.* and even 3*d.* a pound better than if he sold it locally?—Might I ask what he gets?

36,410. We have it on the notes. I think he told us he got 1*s.* 4*d.* or 1*s.* 5*d.*?—In the winter—in the dead of winter.

36,411. I suppose that would be so. I think he said 1*s.* 4*d.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* The carriage would cost him 1*d.* about. Do you think if any co-operation of that kind could be brought about it might improve the idea of making more butter?—Not in Monmouthshire, I think.

36,412. Do you think the railway carriage of milk is reasonable, or do you think the railway companies ought to carry it for less?—I think they should carry it for less for short distances—for very short distances. Although the limit has recently been reduced from 70 to 20 miles, I think the limit is still too high. I think they should reduce it to 10 or even five miles, and they could carry it well for ½*d.* a gallon.

36,413. You know their scale of charges?—Oh, yes, I am fully aware of their scale of charges. They have recently modified them, and to some extent reduced them, but it has been more to the benefit of the middleman than of the farmer. For instance, in this way, formerly there was a charge of 2*d.* for every empty can on the return journey. Now they carry the cans back free. The farmer is not able to squeeze an extra fraction out of the middleman on account of that, and the immediate result is that his cans get very much more knocked about than they used to be. The railway companies will carry them entirely at your risk, but they knock them about in a most unmerciful manner. Before there was a small charge of 2*d.* per can, and every can was booked, and they were not so liable to be lost, and not so liable to be knocked about.

36,414. Does milk as a rule go by passenger train?—Yes, I think invariably in this district.

The witness then withdrew.

Mr. JOHN LAWRENCE called and examined.

Chairman.

See 34,668. 36,415. You live at Caerleon House, Caerleon, I think?—I do.

36,416. You are a landowner, and you wish to give general Monmouthshire evidence?—That is my desire.

36,417. Language, I suppose, in Monmouthshire makes no difference?—Not the slightest.

36,418. What sort of agents are generally employed in the country?—As a rule I should say practical men acquainted with the locality and with the management of land.

36,419. What is the date of entry on a farm?—The 2nd February, as a rule, I believe; almost universally the rule.

36,420. They are yearly tenancies as a rule?—As a rule, yes.

36,421. Is there any demand for leases?—Not in my experience. I think I may say that one-fifth of the property I own is let under leases.

36,422. How much property do you own yourself?—About 2,000 acres altogether—not in this county; I own somewhere about 1,700 acres in this county, and 300 acres or rather more, in Herefordshire. I may tell you that my Herefordshire property is about 300 acres, and I let it for 70*l.* a year. It is in the Golden Valley, but when I tell you the rent it is not a very golden property.

Mr. Grove.

More like copper than gold, I should think.

Chairman.

36,423. Have you got a copy of your lease?—I have not it by me.

36,424. Will you kindly send one in?—With pleasure, if you wish it. I have leases now, I think, of 42 years standing—a lease for 21 years, subject to a further term of 21 years. Then I have leases for only 21 years. I could either send you one of the originals of the longer period or the shorter period.

36,425. You might send us both?—I have not the slightest objection.

36,426. What should you think the average of rent of upland and lowland farms is?—It depends very much indeed upon the district. I know some districts where I should say the average would be 14*s.*, and that would be a very high rent. I know other districts where the average would be, perhaps, 25*s.* or 30*s.* That is in the county of Monmouth.

36,427. Have you made any reductions and abatements on your estates?—Not a general reduction, but constant reductions in one shape and other, in kind, and in various ways. A general reduction, as a rule, I take it, would be very impracticable, and a very difficult matter. You never know how to make your reductions until you know what the seasons are.

36,428. When are the rents paid on your estate?—In my own case rents due on the 2nd February are paid in June—about the latter end of June; rents due on the 2nd August are paid about December. I never demand them before.

Chairman—continued.

36,429. Do you think the local rates have increased in the last 25 years?—Yes, they have, largely in some instances.

36,430. Does the tenant pay them?—It depends entirely. In all cases in my own experience.

36,431. What is the size of farms?—They vary very much. Do you mean with reference to my own holdings?

36,432. Yes?—I should think about 200 acres is the average.

36,433. You have no bigger farms than that. You have no farms of 1,000 acres or 800 acres?—No, none. The largest holding, I think, of one of my tenants is somewhere about 360 acres.

36,434. Is labour more scarce and expensive than it used to be?—Yes, and certainly very much more difficult to get. I should say there is great difficulty in getting a thoroughly qualified servant as an agricultural labourer—what we would call an all-round man such as I remember in my younger days; these men have gone to the iron works and to the collieries, and so on.

36,435. And I suppose a great deal of land has gone down to grass, has been let go to grass?—A good deal of it—not put down, but simply allowed to run down to grass from common stubble.

36,436. Has there been a great increase of growing roots?—Very largely indeed.

36,437. And that has been of great value, I have no doubt?—Immense value. In my younger days I remember a tenant of mine came to me and told me he had been advised to grow half an acre of swedes, but another friend of his had advised him not to do anything of the kind, on the ground that they would never answer. Few roots were grown in those days, but in the present day I look upon a good root crop as the foundation of all success in the various rotations.

36,438. What allowances do you give to an outgoing or an incoming tenant?—In my own experience, and as far as I know from the experience of others, I know of no case where the landlord takes very much interest in that. I am bound to say I think probably there may be some improvement in that respect. As a rule the matter is left entirely as an arrangement between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant, and the landlord really has no interest whatsoever in it. The outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant agree between themselves, and are regulated very much by the usages of the parish—by the practice and custom of the parish.

36,439. But you do not recognise any tenant's right?—Oh, certainly. An outgoing tenant is entitled to his right as distinctly as he would be to any part of his growing crop, I should say.

36,440. Do you recognise tenants' right?—Certainly.

36,441. Besides the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Certainly.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,442. But not in the sense of selling his goodwill? What is generally meant by tenant right is the power to sell goodwill?—I have never known a landlord make the slightest objection. I have one instance in my experience in the last two years where an outgoing tenant received 600*l.* from an incoming tenant upon a lease. I have another instance now within the last three years (I can give the names of the parties if you would like them) where the tenant in possession sold an unexpired lease of four years for 126*l.*

Chairman.

36,443. Have you any trouble about the game on your property?—Not the least. I do not preserve myself, and I am very sorry to say there is very little of that.

36,444. Are there any proprietary farmers in your neighbourhood that you know of—freehold farmers?—I know one or two small ones; very small indeed.

36,445. The farmers, I suppose, work hard on their farms; they are a hard-working lot of people?—Some of them are.

36,446. And their wives work hard?—Yes.

36,447. And the children too?—Well, I do not know. I think you will find there is about as great a variation in that respect as among any class of people. Occasionally you will find a hard-working industrious man and a hard-working industrious woman and children; but there are very many that are just the opposite, who do neither the one nor the other.

36,448. Is the condition of the labourers satisfactory in your opinion?—In what respect?

36,449. Are they well housed?—No, I do not think they are. I believe that is one of the greatest defects in the neighbourhood and in the county generally.

36,450. How are the cottages held, are they held from the landlord or from the tenant farmer?—From the tenant farmer as a rule. I am speaking of my own experience and of the experience of many instances I am acquainted with. A farm is let probably with half-a-dozen cottages on it. There is really no rent placed upon the cottage as between the landlord and the tenant, and that is one of his assets in the working of his farm, the rent from his cottages of course.

36,451. Does he generally keep those tenants as weekly tenants?—Generally I think they are subject to a month's notice, or probably three months' notice. It depends entirely upon the circumstances.

36,452. You have never known them to be weekly tenants?—Weekly tenants of a cottage?

36,453. Yes?—I have known several instances of it.

36,454. Of the farmer letting his cottage and giving a man a week's notice to quit when he left his service?—Yes, that is almost universally the case in commercial matters, and coal mining, and so on, and at iron works.

36,455. If a man left a farmer's employment he would be given a week's notice to quit?—

Chairman—continued.

Possibly, or a month according to circumstances, according to the arrangement that he may have made.

36,456. The farmer would give this man notice to quit and put in a man on the farm instead of him?—Certainly, and vice versâ, the man would give his master notice.

36,457. But if he gave his master notice to quit he would have no right to remain in the cottage?—Certainly not; I presume not.

36,458. What are the wages of the labourers?—They are very variable, the farm labourers. I should put them down from 15*s.* to 18*s.* a week.

36,459. Is there nothing below that?—There are instances, no doubt. I should say probably the fair thing would be to say that the average would be about 15*s.* a week.

36,460. And you say that the cottages need improvement, and that they are in a bad state generally?—No, I would not say that exactly, my Lord.

36,461. You would not go as far as that?—No, as a rule the cottages are in fair condition, but I do not think there are sufficient cottages.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,462. In putting the wages at 15*s.* and 16*s.* a week, do you exclude or include the extras at harvest time and so on?—That is excluding the harvest certainly. I am speaking of what the average would be.

Chairman.

36,463. I suppose you would say that trade depression began with the importation of foreign produce?—Certainly.

36,464. Have you any remedies you could suggest?—There are remedies, no doubt. My own impression, if you would pardon me for speaking upon the matter——

36,465. Yes, we want to get your opinion?—My own impression is that I look upon the army and navy of this country as much a police for the protection of foreign ships as it is for the protection of our own country, and it has always occurred to me that it would be only a reasonable and fair thing that every ship should bear part of the expense. I know that to speak of protection and a charge upon corn would be such a proposition as could not be maintained, but my own impression is that some reasonable and moderate charge should be made; say, for instance, every ship of whatever nation she belonged to, that came into a port should pay 5*l.* for every 100 tons of stuff that she had on board. If you come to work that out, supposing a ship had 100 tons of wheat on board, it would be so infinitesimally small upon the article itself that really it could affect no one prejudicially. Still, in the aggregate it would give a very considerable income. That is one of the remedies that I, in my humble way, should suggest for compensation.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,466. Both British and foreign ships, do you mean?—All ships.

Mr. Grove.

36,467. Bringing in foreign produce?—Bringing in cargoes of any description.

36,468. Yes, meat or wheat?—Simply upon the principle that I look upon the navy of this country as much a police for France, Russia, Germany, and all those places, as it is for our own protection.

Chairman.

36,469. Is there anything else that you can suggest?—There is one thing that I would take the liberty of suggesting. I strongly feel myself that the cottage accommodation for farmers is not as good as it should be. I think also, if it were possible, that the Government should create a fund for the reduction, for instance, of tithes, which is a serious grievance and trouble to the landlord. I think if the tithe could be redeemed, and the Government could provide a sum of money for that purpose, and for the purpose of building at a moderate rate of charge, say $2\frac{3}{4}$ to 3 per cent., it would be availed of enormously by the landlords of the country, and it would be an enormous privilege and advantage to them. It would be beneficial if it could be done without an expensive process of investigation of title and all that sort of thing as a first charge upon the estate. I have no doubt it would lead to vast improvement in the cottage accommodation of this country, and I believe also it would lead to a very much better feeling, as a rule, between the tithe owners and the tithe payers.

36,470. The relations with your tenants, I suppose, are very friendly?—Perfectly so.

Mr. Grove.

36,472. You would include Lord Llangattock in that, I suppose?—Yes, I would most certainly. I would not undertake to mention all the names, but I really do not know a single instance in the whole county amongst the large landowners in which what I have mentioned is not the case.

Chairman.

36,473. Have you any account of the improvements you have made on your estate; have you any schedule of them?—Yes. I do claim, my Lord, to have done more in the way of improvement, in proportion to the small estate I have, than any man living. I have not a single inch of property of any description whatever that I have not thoroughly drained, because I look upon it as one of the first essentials in the farming of land. I occupied a farm of my own, I think it was somewhere about 450 acres, for about six or seven years, and during that time I drained 50 miles of drainage, every drain being 3 feet 6 inches deep and set with 3-inch pipes, and the drains being carried at 8 yards apart.

36,474. A good many of your tenants, you have told us, have been a long time on the property?—They have.

36,475. You are master of hounds, I believe?—Yes, I am.

Mr. Grove.

36,476. No leases, I suppose, are asked for now, or very few, by the tenants, Mr. Lawrence?—No. None of my tenants at the present moment are asking me for a lease. There is one point that I wish very much to mention, and I hope the Commissioners may find their way to make a very strong point upon that, namely, that we pay income tax upon the necessary repairs from year to year. For instance, supposing a tenant paid me 200*l.* a year, I have to expend, say, 40*l.* in repairs, and the income tax is paid upon the whole sum. I am an Income Tax Commissioner myself, and I have pleaded very strongly against the injustice of demanding it, but the surveyors always give you this remedy, "We will give you a case if you like to appeal"; but still they exact it. At this very moment I am under a contract to spend 880*l.* in repairs. I cannot get the abatement of one single sixpence upon that outlay in income tax, which I think is a very very great hardship indeed. It is not so in my case only, but it is in all cases. If I were rich enough to fight it with the Government, I would at this present moment. I can never believe it was intended that income tax should be paid upon that which a man did not receive.

36,477. You think income tax ought to be upon the beneficial interest in the property?—Upon the absolute interest that you receive—upon the rent you receive or the income you have.

36,478. But you draw a distinction between the money you expend for ordinary repairs and the money that you expend on new buildings and increasing the value of the property?—Certainly.

36,479. Then you think that for all ordinary repairs you ought certainly to be allowed that?—Most certainly. I think it is a great want of equity not to do so.

36,480. I am afraid the income tax, from my own experience, is settled upon the gross income, and they make you pay upon the gross, and you may do what you like with it afterwards?—Yes, that is so.

Mr. Grove—continued.

36,481. And it is a very great injustice in many cases?—Yes.

36,482. Then we gather from you, Mr. Lawrence, that you made abatements upon your property to your farmers?—Yes.

36,483. But not general?—Not general.

36,484. Nor uniform?—Certainly not.

36,485. Varying according to circumstances?—Yes, exactly. It depends so very much. You have good tenants and bad tenants. I have no doubt there are good landlords and bad landlords; but you have good tenants, industrious people, and so on, and a landlord, if he is a man of observation at all, knows the difference between one and the other. I have known instances in my own experience where people have been industrious and done the best they could, and they have still been driven to the necessity of asking for allowances. I have met them always, I hope, liberally. I always feel it is a matter of good common-sense on the part of the landlord to meet his tenant.

36,486. That is, you have placed yourself in full sympathy with your tenants?—Yes. I have never discharged a tenant in my life. During the whole of my lifetime I have never given a tenant notice to quit his property.

36,487. When you give those abatements, does it enable them to get the valuation of the poor rates reduced so that they may pay less rates and taxes?—Yes. I am bound to say, I think the tenants are pretty wide awake upon that subject. As a rule, I do not think they would pay the rates beyond the rent they really pay.

36,488. Of course the practice of different unions, as you know, varies. In some parts of Wales we have found that unless abatements have been made for three years in succession they will not reduce the rateable value?—Yes.

36,489. So that in many cases landlords have met that by making permanent reductions?—Certainly.

36,490. Then when a permanent reduction is made they can go at once and show the reduction, and get their rates reduced?—Yes. That, no doubt, is an evil in the system which I have adopted, that is, of giving casual abatements, because I do not think in any case where I have given abatements in that way that the tenants have availed themselves of it, or had any concession made to them on account of the rate.

36,491. I think you say that there ought to be more cottages throughout the district generally?—I do, strongly.

36,492. Do you think that would have a tendency to settle more labour upon the land permanently?—I think it would.

36,493. Do you consider that more labour might be profitably employed upon the land?—Yes, certainly.

36,494. That the land would carry more labour, in fact?—Yes.

36,495. Do you approve of the Agricultural Holdings Act as it now stands, Mr. Lawrence?—I am sorry to say I have never had any experience of it or acted upon it. I have spoken to one or two persons who have had some little experience. They seem to think it is a fair Act upon the whole.

36,496. Then you spoke of the arrangements between the outgoing and incoming tenant. I think we have heard that some landlords will not admit the new tenant until he has made a fair and equitable arrangement with the old tenant. Do you go as far as that?—No, indeed I do not.

36,497. You let them agree amongst themselves?—I have never had the slightest difficulty in any case. As I said before, I never gave notice to a tenant in my life up to the present moment, but I have had tenants who, by reason of some circumstances, have changed their holdings, and the transaction has been carried out between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant, and I have never interfered at all.

36,498. Without any reference to you at all?—Yes.

36,499. Do you know whether there are any field experiments with reference to seeds and fertilisers and so on being carried out in your neighbourhood? I suppose there is nothing of that sort just at present?—Well, I assure you that the tenants within a range of some 16 or 18 miles of this place are about as intelligent men as you can possibly meet with, and in all their business transactions they conduct themselves with as much skill and attention as any persons in commercial matters do.

36,500. Now just take one point. Some little time ago when there was such a quantity of acorns on the trees—last autumn—the Board of Agriculture, as you know, perhaps, issued a caution to the farmers of the country to keep their cattle out of those fields and make proper arrangements. I know a farmer within two miles of where you live who lost five of his best cattle. That does not show very much care, does it?—Well, you see, that was an extraordinary year. I have never known such an occurrence before in the whole of my lifetime, which is more lengthened than that of the majority of people. I have never known such an occurrence in my life before to equal the crop of acorns last year. There is no doubt, as a rule, the crop of acorns has been considered a very valuable one for feeding pigs, and I have known instances where pigs have been sent out very lean, and probably never appeared again until they come out in very good flesh and make very good bacon; they go into the covers and live entirely upon the acorns. But I have known no instance in my experience, until last year, of animals having suffered from eating acorns.

36,501. Last week we heard of an instance where a man lost three or four very fine cows—young cattle, two or three years old, of course?—Yes.

36,502. The Board of Agriculture are continually issuing leaflets containing valuable information for the farmers. Naturally it is no good having a Board of Agriculture unless they do some good. They issued one leaflet last summer giving 20 different ways in which catch-crops might be raised pretty soon, giving suggestions of that sort. How would you suggest that we, say, as a county council, should issue those to the farmers? Are we to print them in a small form, and send them broadcast through the country by the police? What would be a good way to do?—It is a very difficult thing. I remember in my early days when a newspaper was a very rare thing; but in the present day newspapers have got so cheap, and all sorts of useful publications are circulated, so that, as a rule, I do not see how things in that respect could be materially improved.

36,503. I think, touching this question of acorns, I mentioned it to the county council, and the farmers present said, "Oh, but the "farmers are very intelligent, and they will take "very good care of themselves." The next I heard was that a farmer who was quite as intelligent as the rest had lost some of his best cows?—Yes.

36,504. Is there much sub-letting amongst tenant farmers, do you think?—No, I think not, as a rule. I do not think any landlord would submit to it very readily.

36,505. What is your view as to growing more fruit in the county? Do you think that that would tend to help the farmers at all?—In a climate such as ours, so extremely variable, I do not think there is really very much to be got out of that beyond cider growing. Cider, in my opinion, is one of the most useful beverages, and certainly is a beverage of considerable importance to a farmer. I do not think the system of manufacturing cider is a very good one. I believe it is as slovenly a process as can possibly be; but my own impression is that good cider is about the best beverage you can drink, and I think it may be most materially improved. But really beyond the growth of cider fruit, I do not believe that any great improvement can ever be made by that means for the benefit of agriculturists.

36,506. Mr. Grant, the technical instructor for the county——?—Yes, I know him very well.

36,507. He is trying to recommend patches of strawberries here and there. He thinks that might perhaps be suitable?—I quite agree in that.

36,508. And he has recommended the better kinds of apples?—Yes, fruit for the table.

36,509 Yes?—No doubt that is important. I think that is important.

36,510. If that is so, what would be your view, as a landlord, supposing a tenant farmer came to you and said, "I have a field here of "half an acre that I can turn into an orchard." Would you give him the trees?—Most certainly, and I have done so in various instances.

36,511. Would you protect them for him for four or five years, or would you give him the trees only, and let him find the labour and protect them?—I think that would depend very much upon circumstances. No doubt if he could show any reason why one should, I think most landlords would be inclined to meet him.

36,512. No doubt a tree is some years in coming to perfection, and to fruit-bearing?—Yes.

36,513. Do you know anything at all about the county council butter school? Did you go in when it was at Caerleon?—Yes, I looked at it. Anything of that kind is very important indeed, no doubt; but there is one thing of all others in my mind, that is, that there is nothing more important to farmers than housing their animals comfortably, whether it be beasts or horses, pigs or poultry, or anything else. I think if such an institution were established as I am speaking of, where loans could be obtained, it would have a wonderfully good effect upon all farming and agricultural pursuits, because my impression is that it is impossible to produce anything in perfection unless you can keep them comfortable and warm.

36,514. Would you go so far as to say that an animal that is properly housed would live upon less food than an animal that is turned out?—Yes, undoubtedly.

36,515. So that there would be that economy, which is a matter which has been put before us in evidence?—Yes, very great economy.

36,516. Then do you consider the outbuildings of the farmers in the farms in this immediate district you are speaking for are not quite up to the mark, or do you think they are fairly up to the mark?—I must say I think they are defective. They are not so good as I should like to see them. I may tell you I am spending 1,000*l.* this year in new buildings.

36,517. Do you think that the land bears undue burdens, that is, that it bears more burdens than it ought to bear in taxes?—Yes, I do indeed.

36,518. Can you suggest any remedy in that respect?—Land is that description of property that it is impossible to evade any tax connected with it. I have been engaged in trade, as many of us have, and I hold that the land pays a very much larger proportion of every description of charge than trading operations.

36,519. Would you go so far as this, that the question of free trade is a national question?—Quite.

36,520. Agriculture feels that more than any other industry?—Undoubtedly.

36,521. Then do you not think that Imperial help should be given to remove some part of the burden upon the land?—I think it would be very nice if it were possible.

Mr. Grove—continued.

36,523. You have dwelt in this neighbourhood for a long time. You heard the evidence this morning about the fear the tenants have, and that they are under the influence of their landlords?—Yes.

36,524. Did you go along with that, or did you think it was exaggerated?—I am bound to confess I could not, sitting behind, hear the evidence given—I could not catch it all; but I fancy that in some cases there was a little colouring to it, more than one would wish.

36,525. You would say that during the last 50 years there has been a gradual lessening of it, would you not—that it had been growing less and less?—Yes.

36,526. And that the political changes giving the vote and the ballot had really reduced it within a late period?—No doubt, very much indeed.

36,527. Is not the fact that the labourers now have votes as well as the tenant farmers a very strong reason why we should expect that if things were let alone that fear would very soon vanish?—Yes, I am inclined to think so. I do not think it is possible that with any legislation that will keep wheat down at 3*s.* a bushel, any farmer can exist under it. I do not think wheat can be grown at 3*s.* per bushel if the land were free of rent.

Mr. Grove.

36,528. If the land were free of rent?—Yes.

36,529. No rent at all?—No rent at all, with the present charges upon it.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,530. I am speaking about this fear from political reasons. Do you think that there is any chance of lessening that by legislation in the future?—I do not quite understand the drift of your question.

36,531. What I mean is, in your opinion is there anything more that legislation can do than it has done to prevent interference with the liberty of the tenant as to his vote?—Nothing more than I have suggested. I think it would be an enormous relief to the country at large if a tax were imposed upon all ships, as I have suggested.

36,532. The evidence given this morning was that on, I think it was, the Duke of Beaufort's estate, there was considerable fear on the part of the tenants of their being interfered with by their landlords on account of political action of theirs?—I do not think so; indeed, I do not know a single instance of such a thing. I have said before that I do not believe that there are more independent men in the whole world, or more liberal in their dispositions in every respect than the great landlords of this country. I do not include myself in the great landlords; I am a very small one. But with such men as the Duke of Beaufort,

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Lord Tredegar, Lord Llangattock, the Llanarth estate, the Pontypool estate, and all those men, I do not believe the least notice would be taken of any political movement on the part of their tenants.

Mr. Grove.

36,533. Would you go so far as to say that you think that canvassing ought to be made illegal?—Upon my word, I ought not to express an opinion upon that, because I do not understand much about it.

Chairman.

36,534 There is one question handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Have you not a letter concerning "a man named Pritchard, who gave evidence "about your hounds the other day at Newport"?—I have.

36,535. Do you wish to produce it?—If you will kindly allow me to do so, I should like to. I put it into my pocket for the sole purpose. I do not know the man. I never saw him, but he volunteered to send me this letter. (The witness handed in the letter).

36,536. This is written by Mr. John H. Scott to John Lawrence, Esquire, Courtybella Farm, Newport, Mon., 15th March 1894: "Dear Sir,— "Having been tenant of the above farm for the "last 25 years, and my wife's father, the late "Moses Scard, for 15 years previous, I was sur- "prised to see in to-day's issue of the 'Western

This party is a mineral guard in the "employ of the Great Western Railway Company, "and simply rents a too-roomed cottage of me, "which was formerly occupied by a labourer "until the farm was curtailed for railway pur- "poses. I am quite satisfied with my landlord, "and only wish we were in sound of 'Tally-ho!' "occasionally. You, as a very old railway "director, must know it is almost impossible "for this party to live at Newport, look after "his employment, and look after the foxes "(under the Beaufort estate) at Llanbaddock. P.S.—I have written to the "'Western Mail' to-day"?—I had not the slightest idea when I came into the room that I should be questioned upon this. I knew nothing about it. I never saw the man before in my life, but in consequence of the evidence I gave, I had a letter from a lady, in which she said she was very glad to find I had a fund prepared to satisfy the persons who had suffered from foxes; that she claimed for a brood of turkeys, for three cotswold sheep, and for a three-year old colt; that she had no distinct evidence that the fox had actually disturbed the colt, but that there was distinct evidence that the fox was seen in the field with the colt.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM GRAY called and examined.

Chairman.

36,537. Are you a farmer of Cae Hedydd Farm, Shirenewton?—Yes, I farm my own land.

36,538. What is the acreage of your farm?—About 50 acres.

36,539. Where is it?—It is at Earlswood, in the parish of Shirenewton.

36,540. How far from here?—Six miles.

36,541. What do you want to tell the Commissioners, Mr. Gray?—I wish to state a little of my experience of the unfair, as I consider, grasping by people in the district of land. I bought this farm, well, I might say that I bought some land adjoining the farm. It was two allotments, and I bought it.

36,542. When did you buy it?—I bought it of the owner.

36,543. When?—About three years ago, or four.

36,544. How many acres is that?—About two acres—more than that, about three acres and a half, I think. I cannot exactly state now. I have not the measurement.

36,545. That is near enough?—About two acres and a half, we will say, or three acres.

36,546. Six years ago, was it?—Four years ago. I had title deeds, and the parties had no deed, and there was a declaration prepared and a transfer. We will say a year after I bought it a neighbour came and took possession of it, and there appeared two or three others with him. They sent for me; I went down; they all shook hands with me very friendly, and one of the parties had a map of the property, that was the vicar. He says to me, "Can you show us "where your land is, Mr. Gray?"

36,547. The vicar said that?—Yes. Not the present vicar, the late vicar of Shirenewton parish.

36,548. A year after you bought it?—A year after I bought it, about.

36,549. What was the name of the late vicar of the parish?—Davies.

36,550. The Reverend Mr. Davies?—Yes.

36,551. He came to see you?—Came and measured out the land.

36,552. Did he bring anybody with him?—Yes, he did.

36,553. How many?—Four or five. It was Mr. Lang, of Cwm, claimed it.

36,554. Did Mr. Lang come too?—Yes, and Major Lowe, of Shirenewton, and the assistant overseer, Thomas Williams, of Gaerllydd. See 36,65

36,555. You bought this land and paid for it?—I bought that land and paid for it. It was two allotments.

36,556. These gentlemen came to see you, and what did they do?—They came first, and the allotments had not been enclosed, and they came and measured each one's allotment, and then they sent for me, and Mr. Lang digged a hole, or digged a part of the earth—took possession of my land.

36,557. Major Lowe took possession of the land?—No, Mr. Lang, in company with others.

36,558. What did he do to take possession?—He digged a small hole. I saw the place where they digged.

36,559. He claimed the place as being his by digging a hole?—He claimed my land.

36,560. What did you do then?—They sent for me and, as I stated, they all shook hands with me friendly, and then the vicar opened a map, a map that Mr. Lang, I was told, had prepared specially for himself.

36,561. Had the vicar got this map?—Yes, the vicar had it in his hand, a map of the land.

36,562. What did he do then?—He asked me if I could point out my land on the map.

36,563. On his map?—Yes, on his map. I did so: "Here it is," I said. "Yes," the vicar says, "it is Mr. Lang's."

36,564. What had the vicar got to do with it? Was he a relation, or what?—Nothing whatever, I should think he was merely there as company. "Yes," he said, "it is Mr. Lang's." I looked at him in the face, put my two hands on his shoulder, and said, "If the clergy cannot make "the people fair and do what is right, what "good are they—take and blow it all up." Mr. Lang turns round to the others, and says, "This "is a low fellow; he must be put down." I forget just at the moment what he said, "he must be put "down," yes, that was his word. Mr. Lang said to me, "I have bought the land, and it is in "my deed, and I will have it. I will spend "hundreds of pounds, and to-morrow you shall "have a letter from my lawyer." The day after the morrow I had a letter from his solicitors in Newport, stating that I was not to interfere, that they had pointed it out by their client, Mr. Lang, yesterday, and I was not to interfere with his estate or land—with his estate, I believe it was—upon any conditions whatever, and that if I did, proceedings would be taken against me at once. I went to a solicitor. I knew that he had not bought the land. He told me he had bought it, and that it was in his deed. I knew it was an untruth, for I had talked to the man that he had bought land of, and it was not in his deed at all, and this man did not know anything about this land that I had bought. I went to the lawyer that he had bought the land of, and he told me that it was not in his deed; he had an abstract of the deed, and that he had not the slightest claim to it. He claimed the other piece that I had bought of another man. Then I hurdled the land out at once, and nothing could be done. Last summer Mr. Lowe——

36,565. Who is Mr. Lowe?—Mr. Lowe, of Shirenewton—I believe Mr. Lowe is here now. I wish to tell the truth. I do not see why people should be annoyed in this sort of way and it not be known.

36,566. What is the name of the other gentleman? Last summer you said Mr. Lowe——?—Mr. Lowe put a man to cut the fern on my land, and they took some of it away, and when I heard of it I went and took the remainder. Then I had a letter in a few days, a registered letter, from Mr. Lowe, to tell me that if I did not bring the fern to their residence—I believe it was in two days—legal proceedings would be taken against me. Of course, I took no notice of it.

36,567. You have not got all these letters, have you?—I have not got them with me

36,568. You have them at home?—I have them at home.

36,569. A registered letter came from Mr. Lowe telling you that if you did not give up the fern you would be prosecuted?—It was stating that they understood I had been taking some fern off their estate, or something of that sort, and if I did not bring it back——

36,570. Then legal proceedings would be taken if it was not given back?—Legal proceedings would be taken at once. I took no notice of it—of course not—I was only on my own land, and it was my own land that I have title deeds for, and a declaration. I bought this property up in Shirenewton, and after we had been living there about——

36,571. This is another property now?—This is another property.

36,572. Then you bought some adjoining property?—Yes, two allotments they were.

36,573. What year was that in, do you remember?—In the year 1877 or 1878.

36,574. You bought two more allotments?—No, I bought the farm that I now live in. It is very difficult to get a little place—a small farm.

36,575. Let us keep to that. You bought the farm you now live in, in what year?—In the year 1877 or 1878, I think. After we had been living there about two years we had a demand from the Tredegar family claiming 12*l.* for rent.

36,576. Whom did you buy it of?—I bought it of Mr. Lawrence—Mr. Lawrence's brother, that has just given evidence.

36,577. He was the auctioneer?—No, it was his own property. I bought it of Mr. George Lawrence.

36,578. After two years a demand was made by the Tredegar family?—By the Tredegar agents, of 12*l.* for rent. It is freehold property. All the property is signed over by the Commissioners that were sent down to carry out the Enclosures Act of 1849, all but one field that the house was in, and that was signed over by the guardians. It is all freehold—freehold title on the deeds.

36,579. After two years, demand was made by the Tredegar agents for 12*l.* rent, though you say the property is freehold?—The property was freehold, but there were two pieces behind the house, and I thought one of those pieces might have been Lord Tredegar's, I rather thought it was, and I went to them to talk about it.

36,580. How big was this bit of land that you thought was Lord Tredegar's?—About two acres.

36,581. How big is the whole of the property that you bought?—The whole property is 48 acres that we bought first all the farm—about 48 acres. I have bought some since in addition to that.

36,582. We will come to that presently. You thought that two acres at the back of the house might be Lord Tredegar's?—Yes, but not quite up to the house. I was told that it was bad, but others told me again that it was not. They claimed, first of all, rent for this lower piece.

36,583. What happened then?—I had several interviews with him. I wanted to buy it. I did not want to dispute; I would rather buy than I would have any dispute. I went down to see them to try to buy, and I had forgotten everything at the time. I was very busy, and my mind was taken up with the farm, and I gave them a cheque. They kept pushing the account to me—they would not sell then. They kept pushing the account, and I said, "Why "should we pay, we have not been there but "three years?" Then they said, "Well, how "much will you pay—how much will you pay?" I did not know how to get out from that, and I gave them a cheque, I think it was for 5*l.* 5*s.*

36,584. To square it?—And I thought if it was wrong I could stop the cheque, and I did stop the cheque at once—the payment.

36,585. I do not quite understand you. You gave a cheque for 5*l.* 5*s.* to square the matter?—Yes, I thought I was paying for the bottom piece. There are two pieces there, but they got it in the account both pieces.

36,586. Then you stopped the cheque?—Then I stopped the cheque, and I went to a solicitor, and he told me that I had done wrong, that he thought they could not claim it, and he saw them and tried to arrange the matter, but they had put me in the County Court then. They sued me in the County Court for the amount of the cheque, and I was obliged to pay it, and they have sent me one or two lawyer's letters since, and I have been obliged to pay ever since. The man I bought the farm off never paid them anything for the piece behind the house, but the one who owned before him, I have been told, did pay them something. It is the unfair grasping of land.

36,587. Have you to pay 12*l.* now?—I have to pay for what I paid then. This land is part of Earlswood Common.

36,588. What do you pay now a year?—1*l.* 15*s.* a year, much more than the land is worth.

36,589. Then you did not pay the 5*l.* 5*s.*, did you?—I was obliged to pay it.

36,590. You paid 5*l.* 5*s.* first?—Yes.

36,591. You paid 5*l.* 5*s.* when sued in the County Court, and you pay 1*l.* 15*s.* a year now?—I pay continually now. They send me a lawyer's letter if I do not. I think they cannot claim it; they have no right. Lord Tredegar, the Tredegar family, in fact, I do not believe have any manor at all in the place. As soon as they get my cheque the lawyer comes into the room and says: "There is three and fourpence a year for you to "pay as manorial rights."

36,592. You pay 1*l.* 15*s.* a year?—Yes.

36,593. Then besides that have you to pay anything else?—No. They tried to influence me unfairly, I consider—to make me pay three and fourpence a year as manorial rights to the

Chairman—continued.

Tredegar family, when the property was freehold and freehold title on the deeds.

36,594. That you refused to pay?—That I refused to pay, and they wanted me to sign and pay, and that I refused, and they told me if I did not pay they could claim it by law.

36,595. And have they claimed it by law?—How can they? They knew they could not, but it is the unfair grasping of land. Lord Tredegar owns 100,000 acres, and yet they want to grasp more. I must state that on the whole Lord Tredegar's agents have been quite civil to me.

36,596. Have you ever written to Lord Tredegar about this?—No, never.

36,597. Had you not better write to him direct?—I have written to the agent.

36,598. Ah! write to Lord Tredegar himself?—I was told he would not listen to me—he would refer it to his agents. I was told so. I have paid them now more than the land is worth.

Mr. Grove.

36,599. He would ask his agents to look into it, and report on the case to him. There is the advantage of writing to him direct?—I see. That is true. It is very important that this land should be owned by the house, as it is a very exposed place, and I wanted to plant it with fir trees—with trees for shelter for the house.

Chairman.

36,600. I think we quite understand. Is there anything else you wish to mention?—Yes; there is a lot that could be stated, how the people in this district and in that parish have been unfairly influenced to sign over their holdings to others. There are several instances where Mr. Hall, the vicar, they say, had his children's names put in a deed preventing the holders of the properties from carrying out their rights of putting names in, who they wished to succeed them. He was made lord of the manor, and I was talking only yesterday to two parties that he has property of—the family has property of theirs. There is one place they never paid any rent for till Mr. Hall came and took possession. See 36,619

36,601. What is the name of that place, and who lives there, do you know?—Yes, it is one of the Waters'. I forget now the Christian name. They never paid any rent, and now they charge 10*l.* a year.

36,602. Up to what time did they pay no rent?—They have now paid, they say, seven years to Mr. Hall's family.

36,603. And now they have been charged rent?—10*l.* a year. They have to pay it to Mr. Hall's relative, I think it was his brother—no, it was not his brother.

36,604. How long have they been on that land without paying any rent?—Well, the woman—the wife—was born there, and she is about 50 years of age. I believe she was born there.

36,605. And has there been no acknowledgment paid?—There has been no acknowledgment paid to any one.

36,606. Are you perfectly certain of that?—I am perfectly certain of that. That is what they tell me.

Mr. F. Evans: I can explain all this.

Chairman.

Presently you may do so.

Witness.

Yes. They have told me that Mr. Evans, the lawyer, got a relative of theirs, and Mr. Hall picked up this relative off the road, and took him and treated him with a dinner, and gave him half a crown, and then put him to sign something—I do not know what it was—and when the man died, Mr. Hall went there and took possession of the place, and now makes them pay 12*l.* a year. Mr. Hall took this relative off the road, and took him to his residence, I think, and gave him a good dinner, and gave him half a crown, and then asked him to sign something that Mr. Evans, I believe, had prepared, so they say. The people are ignorant; they cannot read or write, and there are some others as well—this is not the only case by many.

36,607. Do you know of another specific case?—Yes, I could hunt up several. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction there in the parish, although they are obliged to keep quiet.

36,608. Do you consider that they are afraid to come forward?—Yes, they are afraid to come forward, my Lord.

36,609. For what reason are they afraid to come forward?—Well, they say that they do not know what they will want. That is the answer they made to me yesterday. They say they are poor, and they do not know what they would want, and therefore they think that they would be marked probably by those that are above them.

36,610. Then do you agree with the last witness who told us that there was no intimidation of any sort or kind as regards landlords?—Oh, bless you, yes, there is considerable intimidation. When there is an election they get their friends to go round—paid friends, very probably—to go round canvassing, I cannot say unfairly, and influence the people to vote certain, as they did last election. There was a certain person in the parish told a friend of mine that he knew——

36,611. We cannot have anonymous statements. Can you give the name of the person?—Yes, Thomas Williams, Gaerllwyd, the assistant overseer. He went to every voter in the parish, I do believe, and he told a friend of mine that he knew how every one in the parish was going to vote but him, and he gave him a good reprimanding. (The witness subsequently wrote to the secretary stating that he was in error in making this statement, and that he had misunderstood the effect of the conversation referred to. Secretary.) See 36,626.

36,612. Did he come to you?—No, he did not come to ask me about voting.

36,613. Is that all that you wish to say?—Well, there is very much that I could say. There was an Act passed in 1849 to enclose all these places. Here is one of the deeds. (The witness produced deed.) It was a considerable loss to farmers. Hundreds of people, I should think, have lost heavily by that Act being passed.

36,614. What does this deed relate to?—That is a piece of land that I bought—one of my deeds.

36,615. I do not think we can go into enclosures of commons. I think that will be as much evidence as we shall want this afternoon from you. We are much obliged to you for your evidence, and for coming forward and giving it in such an open way?—I should like to add that I have had experience in various ways, and it is my experience that every man should farm his own land, and there should be an Agricultural Board in every parish, and if a man did not improve his land and farm it properly, he must sell out and let another try. I am positively certain that there are thousands of people who would get land, and most willingly, if they could, by special lots to suit them, and we would have nearly three times the produce. I know my land will produce three times as much now as when I bought it.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 36,643, 36,668.

Mr. Henry Clay called and examined.

Chairman.

See 36,131.

36,616. Where do you live?—Piercefield Park, Chepstow. I am the chairman of the Assessment Committee at Chepstow, and also a pretty regular attendant as a Commissioner of Taxes, and I was very much surprised to hear, I must say, this morning from one of the witnesses, the first or second I think, that on account of his known politics, it was no use for him to appeal to the Assessment Committee because we took no notice of it. Now, it seems hardly likely that that would be so, and I need not, I am sure, say more than a word on the subject. Even supposing that we did not listen to him on account of his politics, he knows perfectly well that there are several places where he could go and appeal. But it is hardly likely, in fact I can state of my own knowledge that it is utterly untrue that we take the very slightest notice

whatever of politics; in fact, I did not know Mr. Pugh or his politics, and I think that would probably be the same with most of the Assessment Committee. What holds good, I think, with the Assessment Committee would be equally true of the Income Tax Commissioners. It is hardly likely that anyone can believe that because a man is of certain politics they would keep his assessment up above what it ought to be. That is, I think, all I wish to state. If it had only been for myself I should not have thought it worth while, but I represent, I may say, the Assessment Committee, and to a certain extent the Income Tax Commissioners also.

36,617. You wish distinctly to rebut the statement?—Certainly, as distinctly and as plainly as it is possible for anything to be rebutted.

Mr. Grove.

36,618. You say that the action of both those committees is entirely unaffected by any consideration of politics?—Certainly, entirely. We do not know their politics, and, if we did, we should take no notice whatever.

Mr. Grove—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Fothergill Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

See 36,600. 36,619. You are a solicitor practising at Chepstow?—Yes. I am steward of the Manor of Shirenewton, which is an ecclesiastical manor, and it is within my knowledge that a former vicar of the parish, the Reverend Chas. Rankin Hall bought an interest of a family to which Mr. Gray has alluded. He bought it perfectly fair and square, and the actual value was paid. Anyone who knows the late Mr. Hall, or who has ever heard of him, would know that he would not do any such action as Mr. Gray has mistakenly imputed to him.

36,620. Was that the Reverend Mr. Davies? No, my Lord, the Reverend Chas. Rankin Hall, a vicar before Mr. Davies.

36,621. The Reverend Mr. Davies came afterwards?—I do not know anything about that transaction. Mr. Gray says that Mr. Hall went to some poor persons and induced them to sign a document prepared by the firm to which I belong, in order, I presume, that the land may have been acquired by him for less than its value. I say, my Lord, and I can prove it, that Mr. Hall paid a perfectly fair value for what he bought from those people. The late Reverend Charles Rankin Hall (he was a brother of the late Lord Llanover) paid a perfectly fair value for the interest that he bought in that property.

36,622. Whom did he buy it of, do you know?—I think he bought it from the family of Waters, my Lord. Mr. Gray is mistaken in that, and in several other points of his evidence.

36,623. What else is he mistaken in?—In regard to the influence that is said to be brought to bear in the parish, that influence exists only in the imagination of Mr. Gray. There is no improper influence in the Parish of Shirenewton, either on the part of the vicar or of any persons in the parish that I am aware of.

36,624. So far as you know there is no undue influence?—Certainly not, my Lord.

36,625. Is there anything more you wish to state?—I think not. The other facts to which Mr. Gray has alluded are not within my knowledge.

Mr. Grove.

See 36,611. 36,626. Do you know Mr. Thomas Williams, the assistant overseer?—I do.

36,627. Do you think it is probable he would go round and ask people how they were going to vote?—I think it is extremely probable that Mr. Thomas Williams acted as many other persons would on the eve of an election, and nothing more.

Mr. Grove—continued.

36,628. That it would be a matter of conversation?—Yes.

Chairman.

36,629. What do you mean by "acted as "many other persons would on the eve of an "election"?—I mean, my Lord, taking an active part on one side or the other. Mr. Thomas Williams, to my knowledge, is a Conservative, and he is experienced in electioneering matters, having assisted at many elections on the Conservative side, and I never knew him to do an unfair thing either by threatening or influencing any person to abstain from voting. The election in this part of the country is fought out with the best good temper, and with perfectly fair play on both sides, as far as I know. I am Conservative agent for one district here.

36,630. Then do you go so far as to say that you are perfectly positive that Mr. Williams has never asked anybody which way he is going to vote?—Oh, no, I do not say that. Mr. Gray represents that Mr. Thomas Williams brought his character as assistant overseer to bear upon the political aspect. I say, my Lord, that is not so.

36,631. I did not understand him to go so far as that?—That is the implication, my Lord.

36,632. What I understood him to say was that, being assistant overseer, he took an active part in the election, and that he asked people which way they were going to vote, and that he told them the ballot was not secret. Are you prepared to rebut that?—I do not believe he said anything of the kind.

36,633. You do not know?—I do not know what Mr. Williams did say, but I do not believe it.

36,634. You do not?—I do not, and I form my judgment from this fact, that Mr. Williams is experienced in electioneering matters, and he has been through many elections before now, and no charge has ever been made against him before. He is a person trusted by the Conservative party, and, as I say, the election is fought out here, and, indeed, all surrounding Chepstow, with the best good temper on both sides; we have not a cross word—last election was specially so—and with a spirit of fair play.

36,635. Do you say that so far as you think he would not have said so?—I do not believe he did say so.

36,636. You go so far as to say you do not believe he did say it?—I, of course, cannot pledge my word that he did not say so, but I do not believe he did say so.

Mr. Grove.

36,637. Do you think he is an intelligent man who would understand distinctly that the ballot was secret?—Of course he knows as well as you and I do that it is secret.

Mr. Seebohm.

36,638. May I ask a question. Seeing that there is a feeling of something like undue influence, do you not think it is not a very wise step for either party to employ a paid officer of that kind?—I think it would be better that all public officers of that kind should be perfectly independent of both sides, if I am asked the question.

36,639. I quite understand that he would be appointed because of his knowledge of everybody, rather than from perhaps political reasons?—Quite so.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

36,640. But then it would give one side rather the advantage over the other to get hold of a public officer who had that knowledge?—But both sides have an equal chance, and I could instance assistant overseers on the other side who take an active part, and of whom we do not complain. I quite agree, if I am asked the question, that it would be better not to employ paid officers.

Chairman.

36,641. It is a common custom in this part of the country for officers holding public positions to take an active part in elections?—It is so.

36,642. Is there anything else you wish to say?—No, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Gray recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 36,615.

36,643. I think you wish to hand in a note about the Enclosure Act?—Yes. This is the statement. "The Enclosure Act of 1849 or 1850 "enclosed the following commons: Caldicot "Moor, Roggeit Moor, Ben-acre Common, Sea, "Earlswood, Mynydd Bach and Cwm Wood, "situate in the several parishes of Caldicot, "Shirenewton, Undy, Llanvihangel, and Roggeit "in the county of Monmouth. The Commissioners' names that were appointed to carry "out the Act were William Blamire and George "Darby." Then. I wish to say something about how Mr. Williams has grasped land off me.

36,644. Do you want to say anything in rebutting that gentleman's evidence?—Yes, I might say a little.

36,645. What have you got to say?—After I had been up there on that farm, there were about six or eight different owners owning small allotments adjoining our farm. One was particularly pressing me to buy his lot. They were asking me to buy their lots. It was no good to them as it was enclosed. One day Mr. Williams, of Caerllwyd, the overseer, was going along the property with a gun. I went down to ask him some particulars about the land, as I was a stranger——

36,646. I only want you to rebut anything the last witness has said. This is another story altogether?—Mr. Williams got over me and got some common from me. He would get over anyone, Williams will, so they tell me.

36,647. I want to know if you want to contradict anything that that gentleman said?—I have only to say what I have been told. Mr. Williams did go and ask people how they were going to vote, and try to get to know how they were going to vote, and he told my friend that he knew how everyone in the district was going to vote but him; he was a Cardiff man.

36,648. Do you still repeat that statement?—Yes, I still repeat that this person told me, and I knew ——.

36,649. Never mind. Do you repeat your statement that he told your friend that he knew that the ballot was not secret?—Oh, no.

36,650. You withdraw that?—He told my friend that he knew how everyone was going to vote but him.

36,651. Then I misunderstood you?—That is how it was, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Hugh P. Lowe, called and examined.

Re-examined 36,668.

Chairman.

See 36,554.

36,652. Where do you live?—I live with my father at Shirenewton Hall. I manage my father's affairs at the present time.

36,653. How far is Shirenewton?—That is about four miles from here; but where Mr. Gray lives is three miles further on still; in the same parish.

36,654. Do you want to contradict anything that Mr. Gray has said?—Yes. He mentioned about Major Lowe going with the late rector, Mr. Davies, and Mr. Lang and some others, I think he said about four years ago. Well, my late brother died in May 1888, and he had been too ill to go anywhere near there for 18 months before that. If the date Mr. Gray gives is correct it could not have been my brother. But I think I can explain more what Mr. Gray says. About 1883, my father bought some property adjoining to where we live, from a charity at Usk, and this property also had connected with it a piece of common which had been allotted to it at the enclosure. This common had been, I believe, originally marked out with grips, but which were pretty well obliterated. At the time of the purchase I remember that Mr. Gustard, who was a solicitor and the clerk of the peace, pointed out to my father and my brother with the allotment map on the main road where our boundary joined to the land which Mr. Gray, I think, had. I do not know whether Mr. Gray had bought the land at that time, or whether it was just after, but he pointed out to my father and my brother where the boundary came on to the road. At that spot a boundary stone was placed in, I should think, about the year 1884. Some time after Mr. Gray, I know, had the adjoining property—it is all rough common land—and he put up hurdles coming on to our piece about the width of this room. I am not certain, but I think at one time my brother had these hurdles removed. Two years ago the boundary stone disappeared at night. Mr. Gray having told me previously that we had got his land, and that the stone would have to be removed, the stone disappeared. Last year fodder being scarce, I sent up some men to cut the fern on this piece of common. Mr. Gray, as he now tells us—we did not know for certain, we only supposed it was him—removed part of the fern which we had cut whilst we had left it to dry before gathering it for fodder; Mr. Gray removed it. I think Mr. Gray bought rather more land than the people who sold it to him had to give; that is always understood in the parish—that he got that land without deeds. Of course, ours was all marked on the enclosure, because we bought from the original persons to whom it was allotted. Mr. Gray's, I believe, had changed hands once or twice.

See 36,668.

36,655. Then the dispute between you is as to a piece of land about the size of this room, is it?—Yes, a narrow strip of land running to nothing.

36,656. Between the two properties?—Yes. Mr. Gray says that the part he has bought goes on to our land. I may say that ours has not been sufficiently valuable for us to enclose any of it.

Mr. Grove.

36,657. I was going to ask you that question, whether you had fenced the land at all in any way?—Well, there is some property of my late brother's, I think, that comes on one side, and the road forms on another side; it is really almost three sides, for it runs up to the wall of Mr. Gray's farm at the top, running out almost to nothing. I think I may say, as a resident in the parish, that Mr. Gray is quite wrong in saying that there is intimidation or anything at election times, and that Mr. Williams is not a paid servant, as I understood your Lordship to think he was.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Chairman.

36,658. He is not a paid servant, do you say?—No, he is a voluntary worker.

Mr. Grove.

36,659. You mean Mr. Thomas Williams, the assistant overseer?—Yes. He is an enthusiastic politician, as a great many of us are.

Chairman.

36,660. But he is a public servant?—I understood your Lordship to understand that Mr. Gray said that he was paid for his services.

36,661. Oh, no. He is only an enthusiastic politician?—Mr. Gray said something about friends assisting at elections, whom he believed to be paid; so I gathered.

36,662. I understood him to say that he was an enthusiastic party man, and at the same time a public official?—That is very common all round here. Take the whole of Monmouthshire, and you will find that in many cases.

Mr. Grove.

36,663. Is Mr. Gray supposed to be a Liberal; do you know anything about his politics?—I do not think there is much supposition about it, from what I hear. I hear Mr. Gray talking politics every time I meet him.

36,664. He is an enthusiastic man on the Liberal side?—Undoubtedly he is.

36,665. And you are enthusiastic on the Conservative side, I think I may say?—Yes, I believe I am.

36,666. Is it not possible that he may hear of cases of intimidation that would not by any chance come to your knowledge?—He might do.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

Are there any other witnesses in Monmouthshire who would like to be called?

Mr. Pugh.

I should like to make a short explanation as to what Mr. Clay said.

Mr. Thos. Lewis Pugh re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

See 36,131, 36,616.
36,667. What do you wish to say?—Simply to say that I did not know of any other authority that I could appeal to beside the Assessment Committee. I understood Mr. Clay to say that I should know that there was some other authority that I might have appealed to. I never knew of any other.

Mr. Grove.

I apprehend that Mr. Clay meant that you might commence legal proceedings against some one.

Mr. Clay.

Or that he might have appealed to the Quarter Sessions.

Witness.

That would be a very expensive matter.

Mr. Grove.

That would be a very expensive process; but you know of no authority that he could have appealed to without expending money?

Mr. Clay.

No, of course; but he could have gone to Quarter Sessions.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Wm. Gray recalled and further examined.

Witness.

36,668. I wish to say a few words in reference to what Mr. Lowe has said. It is incorrect. It is quite true that Mr. Lowe's father, or Major Lowe, owned a piece of the common adjoining mine, and when Mr. Lang and the others came to take possession of my land, they measured out everyone's lot by the map, and Mr. Lowe's brother, Major Lowe, had fixed a stone claiming about perhaps three quarters of an acre of my land. I told Mr. Lowe—I cut it short when I gave my evidence; I did not want to detain you too long—I told Mr. Lowe that they must remove this stone. I told them more than once that if they did not remove it, I would remove it. Mr. Lowe, senior, told me that it was all right, and if I would remove it, it would be at my peril, and they had got a man coming down from London to measure the land, and it would cost me 50*l.* That is the real words he said.

See 36,654.

Chairman.

36,668*a*. What, to measure the land?—Or something like that; that they had a man coming down from London; that he had written that day. They tried to frighten me, my Lord, and that is how they have done in this parish.

Chairman—continued.

36,669. You were not frightened, and you removed the stone?—I was not frightened to move it. I did move it, and I put it where they themselves had marked as the boundary, and I hurdled it out afterwards. I only hurdled out my own land. I did not take a foot of anyone else's.

36,670. The stone was in the wrong place according to your opinion and you removed it?—They put a stone at random; they fixed it on my land, and they knew it,—I believe they knew it, and Major Lowe told me that he would move it, and I told him he need not be in a hurry. That was before he died, and they never moved it and would not move it until I moved it. I consider it unfair that people should try to take other people's property.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

Are there any more witnesses from Monmouthshire? (No response.) The next sitting of the Commission will be at Llanelly in Carmarthenshire, on Monday the 16th day of April, at 10.30 a.m. The sittings in Monmouthshire are closed.

* * * *

What if we had the history of the bawdy houses of London and of Paris, and the gambling dens of Monte Carlo! What number of the Lords I wonder patronise these vile places? Not a shilling is spent therein but what some honest and diligent labourer has been sweating to produce. There was a time when things were different. It is said that the word lord means the giver of a loaf; duke means leader; in former days the earls led the soldiers to battle, and administered the laws in time of peace.

The Lords "did" something better than "scaring game" then. They worked, and so were part of society. By this time they do nothing but spend and spoil, sin, and corrupt, and society would not be the loser if they ceased to exist. It would be strange without the shoemakers and tailors; and how awkward it would be without the shopkeeper, the joiner, the sailor, and the miller. But it would be an inexpressible blessing if we were to get rid of the Lords. There would be no shadow of loss after them, and it would be a great gain to all who earn their living in an honest and honourable manner.

What then is the inference we draw from these facts? Well, the question that suggests itself to the mind is this, does the keeping of this useless and unproductive class answer any good end? As a rule we don't keep anything or anybody unless we derive some benefit from them. We keep the police and the soldiers because they defend us from thieves and enemies. We keep the preachers because they teach us religion and morality. But what service do the Lords render us? None whatever. Instead, they destroy our wealth, corrupt our morals, and oppress us in every way. Are they worth keeping then? If not, annihilate them, and restore the land to the nation. Do away with individual ownership in land, and give it again, as it was in the beginning, to the Government, to be used for the benefit of the nation generally.

LETTER III.

Extract.

SIR,—I have not quite finished with the Lords yet. Indeed I have only just begun. I should like my readers to pay special note to the question: Are the Lords worth keeping? Can the country afford to keep them without harming itself? If we cannot go on without the Lords, if we must have them, then it can't be helped, we can only "grin and bear it," as the Englishman says. But I for one secretly believe somehow we can do fairly well without the Lords; indeed, it would be an infinite blessing for us to get rid of them. It appears to me that we can't afford to keep them, that they cost us too much. I have shown that they produce nothing, but that they waste the fruit of the toil of the diligent, the honest, and the provident on racehorses, social display, and harlots. I doubt whether there is any other class in the country as corrupt and polluted as they are, and setting such low price on religion and morality.

But besides being useless and immoral, spending money on horses and harlots, they are merciless tyrants. They cruelly oppress those that work hard to keep them. This doubles and trebles their sin. Besides going to the workman's pocket to steal his money, they enter his head and heart to rule his religion and his politics. They say to their tenants, you must believe the same things as we do in politics, and profess the same religion, and woe betide you if you don't do this. Have we not a bitter experience of this in Wales? But I will leave Wales now, hoping to return to this section of the subject sometime again.

"Farmers not joining the Farmers' Union."

Our correspondent who sends us the "Notes from Merioneth" makes a remark about the farmers of the vale of Ardudwy, and we think that it is applicable to the brotherhood throughout the Principality. An union was formed in this division, but what number of the farmers have joined it? Only 19. As the correspondent says, "this is only child's play!" The number ought to have been at least a few scores. The reason he gives for this is "lack of confidence in one another." It's a pity to think that this is only too true of many a vale besides the vale of Ardudwy, and of many a county besides the county of Merioneth.

LETTER IV.

* * * *

The Principality is not enjoyable enough for the Lords to live in. They have palaces here, but these are empty for the most part of the year. Somewhere in the vicinity of the racing horses, and the houses of the harlots the lords like to live, so that they might enjoy themselves in a way becoming to their situation.

Carousal and pleasure are the chief items, and the money of Wales is spent in foreign countries upon every excess and ungodliness. The Lords impoverish the land, and carry our wealth to other countries.

Look at the perplexed farmer and the poor labourer; they work diligently early and late, they are industrious and provident to earn bread for themselves and their children! their mode of life is simple, and they know but little of pleasures and luxuries. They produce much wealth but they shall not enjoy it. A vast portion of it is taken from them by aliens, who spend it on pleasures somewhere far away from Wales.

If a corner of the curtain was raised we should see sights that would make our hair to stand on end and our blood to boil in our veins with rage. See this lordling in the midst of racehorses, look at the other swaggering in the gaudy rooms of the West of London, see the third amidst the harlots of Paris, and the fourth playing away his wealth in the vile dens of Monte Carlo. Here is where the money of Wales goes. Here is the way the produce of the land of Wales is wasted. There is no reason in such a thing as this. Is such a system one that we ought to bear? Does not justice loudly demand that the land of Wales be restored to the people? Let the foreign Lords be sent to their own country. Why do we bear their oppression, and why are we compelled to feed their greediness? The land is ours and it is foolishness to let strangers to rob us of it and to swallow its gains.

LETTER VII.

Extracts.

* * * *

What is the remedy? We see that the disease is a serious one. We see that the land has been usurped through fraud, craftiness, and oppression, by a handful of unprincipled people; that those few people have not only stolen the land, but also oppress the people that cultivate it and live on it; that a vast portion of the gains of the land is grasped by these lords, and spent on frivolous and sinful pleasure, and that the country is thus greatly impoverished. I ask the reader what does he seriously think of this?

* * * *

Why do we allow so much wealth to be stolen by the lords, who spend it on frivolity, degrade society, and prevent progress everywhere? We cannot afford to keep them. We harm ourselves by keeping them, and it would be an infinite blessing for to get rid of them.

"Celt," March 24th, 1893.

We have had the names of these gentlemen at last. Only three of them are Welsh, and of the three there is not one of them in whom the whole of Wales can feel any trust. They may be good men, but who knows? And although we greatly honour Professor Rhys for his learning, he knows nothing about land. Why, a man of the knowledge and the experience of Principal M. D. Jones was not appointed on the Commission? He is an extra kind landlord, and knows the affairs of the farmers as well as anyone in the country. Look again at the Tories that have been named. There is Sir J. Dillwyn Llewelyn, the man that has been cursing the "Celt,"—he cannot understand anyone speaking Welsh. Why in the name of every reason not appoint Sir Watkin or his able agent, Mr. Hughes; granting that they are Tories like Lord Kenyon and his friends, they have the advantage of being able to speak Welsh. Who are Lord Carrington, Messrs. Grove and Seebohm? What do they know of Wales? The only bright part in the business is the appointment of Mr. Lleufer Thomas as Secretary.

THE CEMLYN FORESHORE.

From the "Law Times," 11th June 1892. The Report of the County Court Judgment:—

"Foreshore.—Prescription. Danger to natural barrier against the sea. At the Anglesey County Court, on the 17th May, Sir Horatio Lloyd delivered the following judgment:—

"His Honour. In the case of the Board of Trade against Owen Williams, I took time to consider my judgment, and also that I might have an opportunity of seeing the locus in quo. I am glad that I had such an opportuity, as the view of the place has thrown a good deal of light upon some of the evidence. The action is upon the face of it brought by the Board of Trade, but the true plaintiffs are the owners of property abutting upon Cemlyn Bay, and it is sought to restrain the defendant from continuing to cart sand, gravel, and seaweed from the shore of the bay—it being contended that the ownership is primâ facie in the Crown, being between high and low water mark. An action claiming damages for trespass and for an injunction restraining the defendant has therefore been brought. The site of the alleged trespass is agreed upon by all parties. I find from the plans that have been put in and from the view I have had, that there is no practical difference as to the place from which the material is taken. It is in fact near the foot of a cliff of rock 20 or 24 feet high, which bounds the farms, and the sand was taken a few yards seawards from the foot of these rocks. Now the defendant alleges that he and his predecessors in title in the farms he occupies, which is called 'Caerdegog Ucha'—which is about a mile and a half from this point of the shore—that he and his predecessors in the farm were in the habit for many years of taking this sand and gravel without interruption or hindrance, and he claims under the Prescription Act that he has the right to continue to do so. Now, I have not the advantage in the County Court of having the points at issue put before me in such a way as they would have been in the High Court, where the pleadings would have shown upon what grounds the defendant claimed the right to take this sand, whether it was by tenure of this farm, or as one of the inhabitants of the parish, or as a landowner. This action is brought against Owen Williams personally, and although meant to try the question of right between the Crown and other persons, it is in form brought against him, and him alone. There is very strong evidence indeed as to the exercise of the right. Owen Williams himself gives important evidence on the subject; so does Richard Williams, an old man who has lived there all his life, and during all this time exercised the right without any interference. He said they always claimed to go as the tenants of the defendant's farm. And there are several other important witnesses. Owen Parry—a man of 85, who was born two miles from the place, and has lived there all his life—says that all the tenants of the parish came there. Then John Thomas gives equally strong evidence, as does John Williams, John Thomas, and Lewis Williams—all highly respectable farmers, some of whose families have lived in this district something like 150 years, who say that they always went to this place for sand and gravel for building and also for manuring purposes. It is also said that vessels had been in the habit of carrying cargoes of sand from this place; but that could not under any circumstances be justified, and is outside the present action. There was no evidence whatever of interference at any time except upon one occasion, when Mr. Prichard, as agent for Sir George Meyrick, says he stopped a man from taking material at a point above high-water mark. That, and a notice put up recently, were the only interference with the right these people claimed. But then the question arises, Is this a right which can exist? [His Honour referred to Padwick v. Knight, 7 Ex. 854; Grimstead v. Marlowe, 4 T. R. 717; Constable v. Nicholson, 14 C. B. N. B. 230; Blewitt v. Tregoning, 3 A. & E. 554; and Delawarr v. Miles, L. Rep. 17 Ch. Div. 535.] Now, the result of these cases, and particularly of that of Delawarr v. Miles, leads me to come to the conclusion that the right claimed by the defendant is such as he can establish by law, and that it is immaterial whether he claims it in his individual capacity or as the representative of a larger class, such as the farmers of the district. I think the defendant has made out his title, under the Prescription Act, to go to this place for gravel, sand, and seaweed for the purposes of his farm. That being so, he would be entitled to succeed in this action; but then there is another point which has to be taken into consideration. It may be that he has acquired a right, but that it is a right which, if persevered in, would be detrimental to the land, which by its effect upon the natural barrier would encourage the sea to flow inland and damage the adjacent lands. Upon this point there is the well-known case of the Attorney-General v. Tomline (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 880, L. Rep. 14 Ch. Div. 58). In that case the Attorney-General was seised in fee in trust for the Crown of land which was not on the sea shore, but which immediately adjoined it. The Crown had acquired the land for the building of a Martello tower, the seashore having been acquired by the defendant Colonel Tomline, the lord of the manor, who was in the habit of taking sand and gravel from the sea shore. The Crown interfered on the ground that the result of his doing so was to jeopardise the natural barrier, the result being that the sea would be let in on the Crown land, and so damage the Martello tower. And Lord Justice Fry, before whom the action was heard, held that the Crown was entitled to the injunction sought for. Now, that was a very strong case, because the defendant Tomline was not allowed to interfere with what was his own property; he was seised of this land, but was not allowed to use his rights upon it. This was not the case, however, at Cemlyn Bay, as the the rights on the foreshore were exercised by persons who were not the owners. Lord Justice Fry granted the injunction, and the Court of Appeal affirmed his decision, holding that the plaintiff's land had been imperilled by the acts of the defendant, and that if the natural barrier was removed the Crown land would be flooded, and the property of the Crown damaged. Now, if that could be done in a case like that—where the Crown was not the owner of the foreshore, but could prevent such owner from exercising his primâ facie right à fortiori the Crown would have a right to interfere in a case like the present one, assuming, of course, that any damage would result from the removal of a natural barrier. It therefore comes to this: is the exercise by the defendant and other farmers of the right to take gravel and sand in the limited manner claimed likely in any reasonable probability to injure the natural barrier of that part of the coast, and so endanger the property of other people inland? The natural barrier at the point of the actual alleged trespass is, as I have said, rock, about 20 feet high; but about 100 yards westward the land drops, and the inland country is protected from the sea by a ridge of sand and gravel, the gradual accumulation of time, several feet high, and covered with grass. I have had evidence from Mr. Jones, surveyor, and from Mr. Prichard, both of whom say that the sea would be let up into the land above if this natural barrier was removed. And I am satisfied that in that contingency they were right in their surmise. Although there is rising ground inland, I agree with them that, if the natural barrier is removed or endangered, it might have prejudicial effect upon the land more inland. But their evidence is problematical; they both said 'if the natural barrier were removed.' On the other hand we have the evidence of two other gentlemen, Mr. Marks and Mr. Davids, both of whom say that the beach is in its natural state, there being no excessive carting away of sand or gravel at the point in question, where the alleged trespass occurred, and that the continuance of the practice would have no appreciable effect in reducing the ridge which is the natural barrier. I am bound to say, after looking at the place, that I have come to the same conclusion as Mr. Marks and Mr. Davids. It is not possible, in my opinion, that the place will be interfered with in any measurable or even immeasurable distance of time by such acts as the defendant has exercised. In course of the hearing of the case, there was put in an old map belonging to Lady Neave, which showed that the place in the year 1793 was very much the same as it is to-day; so that all this taking away of gravel and sand for the last hundred years, and even by vessels, has not affected this place in the least degree: and it seems a proper inference to draw that in all probability the same state of things will continue. Taking all the facts into consideration, I do not think this is a case in which I can grant an injunction, so long as the farmers use the right in a reasonable manner, and as has hitherto been done. Therefore, with respect to the action for trespass, I hold that the rights of taking gravel and sand from this place has been proved, and that the Court ought not to interfere. Judgment will be entered for the defendant, and the application for an injunction refused.

"Mr. R. A. Griffith:—Will your Honour certify for costs on the higher scale, inasmuch as we have been put to the proof of title and for a special advocate's fee.

"His Honour:—I shall allow costs on the higher scale, it being a case of public interest.

"Mr. E. G. Roberts:—This judgment, I suppose, applies only to individuals and not to shipowners. You will give us the right to appeal if we think fit.

"His Honour?—Certainly.

"Mr. Roberts:—And may I take it that if we find other people who have not a prescriptive right dealing with this sand and gravel this judgment will not apply to them?

"His Honour:—Certainly. One case of this kind is enough at a time.

"Judgment was therefore entered for the defendant with costs on the higher scale and special advocate's fee certified for.

"E. G. Roberts, Holyhead, for the plaintiffs; R. A. Griffith, Bangor, for defendant.

RULES of CONSTITUTION and BYELAWS of the NORTH WALES PROPERTY DEFENCE ASSOCIATION.

(Handed in by Lord Penrhyn at Llangefni, Question 22,781 (27th Day)).

Rules of Constitution.

1. The Association shall in no sense be a party or aggressive organization.

2. The Association shall consist of all landowners in North Wales who shall be enrolled members and contribute to its funds, as hereafter provided.

3. The objects of the Association shall be as hereafter stated:

I. To take every legitimate means for the protection of the members' interests and rights of property in the Principality, and carefully to watch all movements affecting the same.

II. To make proper arrangements for the supplying of accurate information on Welsh affairs to members of Parliament and others interested, and expose and refute all mis-statements and insidious assertions put forth by local agitators and the Welsh press.

III. To take into consideration any measure affecting the ownership or tenure of land in Wales which may be submitted to Parliament, or intended to be submitted to Parliament, and to take such action in regard thereto as circumstances may dictate or may be thought desirable.

IV. To use every constitutional means to oppose any special legislation for Wales affecting the rights of property, more particularly the creation of any different system of land laws or land tenure in Wales from England, and to keep before the public the fact that the land tenure and customs are identical in England and Wales.

V. To endeavour to form a sound public opinion by the spread of literature bearing upon land tenure, estate management, the relations between landowners and tenants, and other kindred subjects in Wales.

VI. To take all necessary steps as may be deemed advisable by the committee to assist all landowners who are members of the association who may be prevented by organized opposition from enforcing the legal proprietory rights.

VII. To empower the executive committee to take such steps as they may deem advisable to secure to all landowners who are members of the Association reasonable rents in the event of lands being thrown upon their hands through boycotting or other organized combination.

VIII. To make and assist all such efforts as may be considered necessary or desirable to carry out the foregoing objects.

4. Every landowner becoming a member of the Association shall contribute to the fund thereof for general purposes, if required, an annual subscription of not less than 5*s.* per cent. on his gross income from land, excluding house property; but a member's minimum subscription shall not be less than two guineas, half the first year's subscription to be paid on joining, the remainder to be called for, if required, pro rata from each member. This subscription shall not entitle the member to the benefit of any organization that may be established for farming land which shall have a separate fund and shall keep separate accounts.

5. The central committee shall be empowered, if they think desirable, to take South Wales into the Association, so as to form one united Association for North and South Wales, or to amalgamate with any similar organization that may be formed in South Wales or any part of it.

6. At a general meeting of members held at Chester, 4th of August 1887, the following resolutions were adopted:—

I. That the North Wales Property Defence Association be now permanently formed and established.

II. The land agent of any member contributing an annual subscription of not less than 10*l.* 10*s.* to the funds of the Association may be permitted a member without any additional subscription.

Byelaws.

At a general meeting of the members, held at Chester on the 4th day of August 1887, the following byelaws for carrying out the objects of the Association were considered and passed in accordance with the provisions of Rule 5 of the Rules of Constitution:

1. The Association shall hereafter be managed and its objects carried out by a central or executive committee of 25 members [subject to Rule 13, paragraph 1].

2. The first members of the executive committee shall be elected at the first meeting of members or some adjournment thereof.

3. Thereafter the executive committee shall be elected annually at the annual meeting, and all members of the executive committee shall be eligible for re-election.

4. Five members of the executive commitee shall be a quorum for the transaction of business.

5. In future an annual general meeting shall be held at such a place on some day in January in each year as the executive committee shall appoint.

6. The executive committee may at any time convene a special general meeting, and one-fourth of the members of the Association may at any time, by requisition in writing addressed to the secretary, require the executive committee to call a special general meeting.

7. Fourteen days' notice of the annual general meeting and of any special general meetings shall be sent by post to all members who shall furnish the secretary with their address in writing on joining and from time to time with any alterations therein.

8. In the case of special general meetings such notice shall state the business to be transacted, and no other business shall be considered at such meeting or any adjournment thereof.

9. Special general meetings shall not proceed to business unless there are 15 members of the Association present.

10. A chairman and two vice-chairmen shall be elected at the annual general meeting, and they shall be ex-officio members of the executive committee; any vacancy in these offices during the year may be provisionally filled up by the executive committee.

11. The power of admitting members shall continue to be vested in the executive committee.

12. After the 31st day of December 1887, no one shall be entitled to the assistance of the Association who has not been a subscribing member for three months previous to his application, and unless his subscription has been paid up in accordance with the rules.

13. The executive committee shall have the following powers:—

I. To add to its numbers not exceeding five members during the year, and to provisionally fill any vacancies occurring on it until the next annual meeting.

II. In the absence of the chairman and vice-chairman of the Association to elect a chairman at each meeting of the committee.

III. To select a bank as treasurers of the Association and to change same if necessary.

IV. To appoint a paid secretary and any other officials they may deem necessary, and to dismiss and change the same at their discretion, such secretary shall also be secretary to the Association generally.

V. To make rules and regulations for its own guidance and procedure, and to arrange the times and places of its meetings.

VI. To appoint a London and one or more sub-committees of such members as they shall deem it advisable, who shall act under the direction and control of the central executive committee; to dissolve such committees at their discretion, and to make rules for their guidance, and define their duties.

VII. To act generally as a committee of safety for the protection of the members' interest and right of property, and to take whatever steps they think advisable for that purpose, and generally by all means in their power to further and carry out the objects of the Association.

14. A banking account shall be opened in the name of the Association at the bank selected by the executive committee, and all subscriptions or other monies received on account of the Association shall be immediately paid thereto, and no money shall be withdrawn except by cheque signed by two members of the executive committee and countersigned by the secretary.

15. The executive committee may from time to time allow the secretary to have a sum not exceeding 20*l.* in his hands on a petty cash account; and he shall regularly enter every receipt and payment on such account in a book, which shall be produced and examined at every meeting of the executive committee and signed by the then presiding chairman.

16. The secretary shall keep a book in which he shall enter the name of every member on joining, with his postal address and the amount of his subscription.

17. No alteration shall be made in these byelaws except at a general or special meeting of the members held in conformity with them and by a majority of at least two-thirds of those present, nor unless due notice of the proposed alteration has been given with the notice of the meeting.

1892.—L. 586.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

Writ issued the 2nd day of March 1892.

Between William Lewis, John Gibbs, John Williams, Sarah Clement, Anne Morgan, William Williams, David Jones, Thomas Davies, David Rees, John Evans, Margaret Evans, Gabriel Rees, Rees Penry, William Looker, John Looker, Edward Looker and William Bennett on behalf of themselves and all other persons entitled to rights of common over certain waste or common lands in the Manor of Court-y-Carne in the Parish of Llandilo-Talybont in the County of Glamorgan - - - Plaintiffs, and

Statement of claim.

1. At the dates herein-after mentioned the Plaintiffs were respectively possessed of certain messuages and lands situate and being within the Manor of Court-y-Carne in the parish of Llandilo-Talybont in the county of Glamorgan which said messuages and lands are hereunder set forth.

PARTICULARS.

Owner.	Description of Messuages and Lands.
William Lewis - -	Melin Monach. Gors Monach. Rhydymardy. Mardy Lands. Bryngwyn.
John Gibbs - - -	Llannant and part of Cefnarda.
John Williams - -	Brynyrarad and part of Cefnarda.
Sarah Clement - -	Cefnarda.
Anne Morgan - - -	Penyrheol.
William Williams - -	"
David Jones - - -	"
Thomas Davies - -	"
David Rees - - -	"
John Evans - - -	"
Margaret Evans - -	"
Gabriel Rees - - -	"
Rees Penry - - -	"
William Looker - -	"
John Looker - - -	"
Edward Looker - -	"
William Bennett - -	"

2. By reason of the possession of the said Messuages and Lands within the said Manor the Plaintiffs and their predecessors in title and their respective tenants have at all times enjoyed as of right and without interruption as appendant to their said messuages and lands lying within the said Manor common of pasture for all the commonable cattle levant and couchant in and upon their said lands and common of turbary in respect of their said messuages and also the right of cutting fodder and litter for all their said commonable cattle in and over the waste lands of the said Manor known as Llandilo-Talybont Common at all times of the year and the Plaintiffs respectively by reason of such possession are entitled to such rights as aforesaid.

3. Alternately the Plaintiffs say that they were and are respectively possessed of the messuages and lands described in the particulars to paragraph 1 hereof and situate in the said parish of Llandilo-Talybont and that the occupiers of the said messuages and lands respectively for 30 years before the acts herein-after complained of enjoyed as of right and without interruption common of pasture for all the commonable cattle levant and couchant in and upon the said lands and common of turbary in respect of the said messuages and also the right of cutting fodder and litter for all their said commonable cattle in and over the said Llandilo-Talybont Common at all times of the year as appurtenant to the said messuages and lands of the Plaintiffs.

4. The Plaintiffs also if necessary repeat the allegations of the preceding paragraph with the substitution of "60 years" for "30 years."

5. Alternatively the Plaintiffs also say that they respectively were and are seized in fee of the messuages and lands described in the said particulars and situate in the said parish and that they and all those whose estate they respectively have in the said messuages and lands from time immemorial have enjoyed common of pasture for all commonable cattle levant and couchant in and upon their said messuages and lands and common of turbary in respect of their said messuages and also the right of cutting fodder and litter for all their said commonable cattle in and over the said Llandilo-Talybont Common at all times of the year as to the said messuages and lands of the Plaintiffs respectively appertaining.

6. Alternatively also the Plaintiff William Lewis further says that immediately prior to the dates of the grants hereunder mentioned the owners or occupiers of the messuages and lands hereunder set out used and enjoyed in respect of the said messuages and lands common of pasture for all commonable cattle levant and couchant in and upon their said messuages and lands and common of turbary in respect of their said messuages and also the right of cutting fodder and litter for all their commonable cattle in and over the said Llandilo-Talybont Common at all times of the year and by the grants hereunder mentioned such rights of common as aforesaid were granted to the Plaintiffs or their predecessors in title in respect of the said messuages and lands.

PARTICULARS.

Owner.	Premises.	Particulars of Deeds in which such Grant was comprised.
William Lewis	Gorsmonach -	Indentures of lease and release dated respectively the 24th and 25th September 1835, the former made between Daniel Morgan of the first part, Morgan Jones of the second part, and Edward Hamlin Adams of the third part; the latter made between the said Daniel Morgan of the first part, the said Morgan Jones of the second part, the said Edward Hamlin Adams of the third part, and Michael Clayton of the fourth part.

7. The Defendant Nathaniel Pryce Cameron claims to be Lord of the said Manor and also claims that he is owner of the said Llandilo-Talybont Common.

8. The Defendants Cameron and Howells between the month of February 1892 and the commencement of this action disturbed the Plaintiffs in the use and enjoyment of their said rights of common by wrongfully marking and pegging off considerable portions of the said common lands. The Defendants Cameron and Howells have stated that such marking and pegging is for the purpose of enclosure and of leasing the said common lands for building purposes.

9. The Defendant Cameron has granted leases of portions of the said common lands to (amongst other persons) the Defendants Morgan Watkins and Thomas Thomas and such Defendants threaten to build on the land so demised to them.

10. The Defendants Cameron and Howell deny that the Plaintiffs are entitled to any rights of common over the said common lands and have committed the act herein-before complained of under a claim of rights and title in that behalf and threaten and intend to lease further portions of the said common land unless restrained from doing so.

11. By reason of the wrongful acts herein-before complained of the Plaintiffs have been prevented from having the use and enjoyment of their said rights of common in so ample and beneficial a manner as they otherwise might and would have done.

THE PLAINTIFFS' CLAIM.

(1.) 100*l.* damages for the wrongs herein-before complained of.

(2.) A declaration that they are entitled to rights of common as aforesaid over the said Llandilo-Talybont Common.

(3.) An injunction restraining the Defendants their servants agents and workmen from enclosing any part of the said common lands and from interfering in any manner with the Plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of their rights of common.

COEDPENMAEN INCLOSURE.

Commissioners' AWARD.

Date of Award, 2nd November 1861;

Confirmed, 4th November 1861.

Now know ye that in pursuance of the said Acts and by virtue of the powers and authorities in me vested I the said E. W. David the valuer as aforesaid do make and declare this to be my award in the matter of the said Inclosure and to this my award I have annexed the Map referred to by my said report.

And I declare that I have set out and appointed and do hereby set out and appoint the following private carriage and occupation roads that is to say:—

One private carriage and occupation road of the width of 15 feet and numbered 30 on the Map annexed commencing at a point A on the said Map and proceeding thence in a north-westerly direction to the point marked B and then proceeding in a westerly direction to and terminating at a point marked A1 on the said Map which said road is set out for the use of the persons interested for the time being in the old inclosure numbered 2090a on the said Map.

And I direct and appoint that the said private carriage and occupation road shall for ever hereafter be maintained and repaired by the owners and proprietors of the said old inclosure numbered 2090a on the said Map.

And no other private carriage and occupation road of the width of not less than 15 feet and numbered 31 on the Map annexed commencing at a point B on the said Map and extending thence in a south-westerly direction to and terminating at a point marked B1 on the same Map which said road is set out for the use of the persons interested for the time being in the old inclosure numbered 2090a on the said Map.

And I direct and appoint that the said private carriage and occupation road shall for ever hereafter be maintained and repaired by the owners and proprietors of the said old inclosure numbered 2090a on the said Map.

And I declare that I have set out and appointed and do hereby set out and appoint the following public footway that is to say:—

One public footway of the width of four feet numbered 19 on the Map annexed commencing at a point marked C on the said Map and extending thence in a south-easterly direction to and terminating at a well at a point marked C1 on the said Map.

And I declare that I have set out and do hereby set out allot and award unto the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said Parish of Eglwysilan all those two pieces or parcels of land numbered 1 and 2 on the Map annexed containing respectively 27a. 1r. 25p. and 1a. 3r. 30p. to be held by them and their successors in trust as a place of exercise and recreation of the inhabitants of the said parish and neighbourhood.

And I have also set out and do hereby set out allot and award unto John Boyle of Chancery Lane, in the County of Middlesex, Esquire, and Charles Stuart, of Hubborne Lodge, in the County of Hunts, Esquire, the Lords of the Manor of Senyemth as Devisees in trust under the will of the Most Honourable John Crighton Stuart, Marquis of Bute, and Earl of Dumfries, deceased, all that piece or parcel of land numbered 4 on the said Map and containing 1a. 3r. 35p. And I direct that the fences on all sides thereof shall be made and maintained by the owner or owners for the time being of the said allotment.

And I have also set out and do hereby set allot and award unto the said Lords of the Manor all that piece or parcel of land numbered 11 on the Map and containing 3r. 20p. And I direct that the fence on the north-east side thereof shall be made and maintained by the owner or owners for the time being of the said allotment.

And I have also set out and do hereby set out allot and award unto the said lords of the manor all that piece or parcel of land numbered 18 on the said Map and containing 6a. 2r. 27p. and I direct that the fences on the south-east south-west and north-west sides thereof shall be made and maintained by the owner or owners for the time being of the said allotment. The whole of which said allotments numbered 5 11 and 18 I adjudge and declare to be equal in value to one-fifteenth part of the lands to be enclosed and to be in lieu and in full compensation for the right and interest of the said lords of the manor in the soils of the said lands exclusively of their rights and interests in all mines minerals stone and other substrata under the same.

And I further declare that I do on the request in writing of the said lords of the manor reserve and set out to the said lords all mines minerals stone and other substrata under the lands to be inclosed with full power and authority for them the heirs lessees and assigns and their agents miners and servants at all times hereafter to enter upon all or any part of the said land to search for work and carry away all mines minerals stone and substrata under the said lands and to do all necessary or reasonable acts for the convenient exercise of this power and authority they paying reasonable and adequate compensation to the persons entitled to the surface of such land for damage done to such surface in the exercise of the rights and easements intended to be hereby reserved.

And I further declare that I have set out all the remainder of the said lands to be enclosed among the several persons herein-after named being all the persons interested therein in the shares or allotments following set opposite to their respective names which allotments I have adjudged and determined to be proportionate to the value of the respective rights and interests of such several persons in the said lands that is to say:—

I do set out allot and award unto Bailiff—John Matthews.

Constables and Haywards.

Wick.—Thomas Evans.
Saint Brides.—Major William Hopkin.
Sutherndown.—Evan David.
Llandevoduck.—David Leyshon.
Llangeinor.—David Leyshon.
Llanphey.—David Bowen.
Ynisawdre.—Herbert Thomas.

The Jurors being sworn and charged do say and present that sundry persons owing suit and service to this Court have made default in their appearance here this day, and for whose names they refer themselves to the Suit and Resiant Rolls of the said Manor.

The Jury present that John Ricketts has moved his fence adjoining Ogmore Downs, and ploughed a piece of the Common, and the Bailiff is directed to inquire into the encroachment and require the fence to be reinstated.

The Jury present that a Quarry is opened at Brest-y-Ffwythog by John W. Morgan, of Bridgend, and that the same is unfenced, and that North's Navigation Company are working a Quarry on Rhiew Gladir, and that the same is unfenced and dangerous.

The Bailiff was directed to see the persons responsible, and get the fences made.

Mr. Verity called attention to the surface of Common, which was being decreased by the working of Pant Mawr Quarry. After hearing evidence the Jury decided that no sufficient damage was proved to warrant any presentment.

The Jury present that Mary Griffiths has fenced a piece of the Common alongside the Road at Craig Talyvan, and used barbed wire to the damage of the Commoners' Cattle, and such fence ought to be removed. The Bailiff was directed to have the fence removed.

The Jury state that it is, and has for many years been, the custom for any resident in the Parish of Saint Brides Major, who shall occupy a house, to have the right of Common sans number.

The Jury having heard a complaint by Mr. Verity that poor Commoners were unable to pasture their sheep on the Common, present that there is no ground for such complaint.

We, the said Jury, continue all former presentments.

The following Constables and Haywards were appointed:—For Southerndown, Evan David. Llanphey, David Bowen.

CROWN LANDS.

Returns handed in or referred to by Mr. J. Russell Sowray, of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests Department (34th Day).

I.—A SCHEDULE of CROWN FARMS and SMALL HOLDINGS in WALES, 1893.—(Question 27,464.)

Tenants.	Name and Situation of Farm.	Acreage.	Term.	Rent.	Tithe, (last year's).	Abatements of Rent and Changes in Tenancy since 1880.	Expenditure by Crown on Buildings, &c. since 1880.	Remarks.
J. Powell Jones	Sychnant Farm, Maentwrog Parish, Co. Merioneth.	A. R. P. 101 3 39	21 years from 10th October 1891.	£ s. d. 45 0 0	£ s. d. 1 2 10	In 1880 Ellen Roberts was tenant at 50*l.* per annum. In 1881, however, the farm was occupied under her by David Jones, and in 1885 it was let to him at a rent of 40*l.* on a yearly tenancy. Mrs. Roberts was allowed 20 per cent. off rent for two years to 10th October 1882, and again for two years to 10th October 1885, and D. Jones was allowed 10 per cent. in each of three years, 1888 to 1890. The present tenant was allowed 5 per cent. off rent to 10th October 1892, and it is proposed to request Treasury authority for an allowance of 10 per cent. off rent to 10th October 1893.	Since 1880 the sum of 396*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* has been expended by the Crown in repairing and partially rebuilding the farmhouse and buildings, and in fencing and draining. Drainage works are now going on, and the sum of 33*l.* 8*s.* further has to be expended by the Crown to complete the estimate.	The abatements of rent were asked for on the ground of bad seasons, agricultural depression, and fall in prices. The present lease contains no reference to the Agricultural Holdings Act. The lessee pays all the rates and taxes, except tithe and the landlords' property tax. Conditions of Cultivation.—Lessee to pay 40*l.* per acre for meadow or pasture land broken up without Lessor's consent. To repair and keep repaired and to insure buildings and to cultivate the land in a good husbandlike manner. To consume on the premises all hay straw chaff and fodder produced thereon and at the end of the tenancy to leave on the premises the unconsumed hay, &c. being paid for the same. And also to consume on the premises all root and green crops grown thereon and all feeding stuff brought on the premises. To pay 5*l.* for every load of produce of the premises or of dung or manure carried off the premises without Lessor's consent. Until forbidden by notice the tenant may sell and carry off the premises hay and wheat straw (except the produce of the last two years) not exceeding half the produce in any year on condition of bringing back on the premises within 6 months one-half of the market value of the hay and straw sold in manure approved by the Lessor or three-fourths in value of feeding stuff not produced on the holding and approved by the Lessor. To spread manure produced on premises over the land. Not to cultivate the land with hemp flax teasles or other exhausting crops nor leave for seed on the premises a greater quantity of turnips rape mustard rye grass &c. than may be necessary for seeding the farm from year to year without consent of Lessor. Not to cut for hay any of the pasture lands demised and not to cut for hay more than once in the year the meadow land and after every second crop of hay to spread not less than 10 cartloads of dung or other manure per acre on the land. Not to cultivate during the last two years of the tenancy more than one-half the arable land with any white straw crops including wheat oats barley and rye and not to cultivate in the last year of the tenancy with any such crops any part cultivated with such crops in the preceding year nor plant any field with potatoes more than once during such last two years. The Lessee not to be entitled at the end of the tenancy to any payment allowance compensation or "rights founded upon the custom of the district." (Note.—The words as stated here are quoted from the lease.)
Wm. Roberts	Hafod y Wern Farm, Llanwnda Parish, Co. Carnarvon.	160 0 0	Yearly tenancy from 10th October 1888.	60 0 0	3 17 6	The property was bought by the Crown in 1888. 10 per cent. was allowed off rents for year to 10th October 1892, and it is proposed, subject to Treasury approval, to make an allowance of 15 per cent. off the rents of these five farms for year to 10th October 1893.	Since 1888, when these five small farms came into the hands of the Crown, the sum of 302*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* has been spent upon them in repairs and alterations to the houses and buildings, and in fencing and drainage. And it has now been decided with Treasury authority to provide additional farm buildings at Hafod y Wern and Tyddyn Sir Hugh Farms, at an estimated cost of 300*l.*	The abatement in the rents of these five farms has been asked for on the ground of bad seasons, agricultural depression, and fall in prices. The tenancy agreements state that the 33rd section of the Agricultural Holdings Act is not to apply. The tenants pay all the rates and taxes, except landlord's property tax. The Crown pays the tithe, but it is afterwards repaid by the tenants in accordance with covenants in the agreement entered into before the recent Tithe Act. Conditions of Tenancy.—The documents under which the tenants of these five farms hold of the Crown are annual tenancy agreements and there are no special conditions in them as to cultivation. It is provided generally that the land shall be properly managed and cultivated and kept and left clean and in good heart and condition.

Hugh Hughes -	Land on Mynydd Poeth, in the Parish of Cerrigydruidion, Co. Denbigh.	126 2 22	21 years from 10th October 1891.	16 0 0	—	In the year 1880 this land was in lease to the Misses Jane and Catherine Hughes at a rent of 16*l.* for a term of 21 years, which expired on 10th October 1883. It was let to Miss Catherine Hughes on an annual tenancy from 10th October 1883 at 18*l.* per annum, but from 10th October 1887 a new agreement at the reduced rent of 12*l.* was entered into, and for the year to 10th October 1887 the reduced rent of 12*l.* was accepted. The rent was reduced on the ground of the fall in the price of sheep, and because the land had decreased in value. The present tenant's lease runs from 10th October 1891, at an annual rent of 16*l.* No further abatements than that mentioned above.	None. No buildings - - -	All rates and taxes, except landlord's property tax, are payable by the Lessee. There appears to be no tithe, the land was formerly waste, and was allotted to the Crown under an Inclosure Act. There is no reference to the Agricultural Holdings Act in the lease. Conditions of Cultivation.—Lessee to pay a rent of 40*l.* per acre for all pasture or meadow land ploughed or broken up without Crown's consent. To cultivate and manage the arable land in a good and husbandlike manner and to keep and leave the same properly manured and in good heart and condition and not to break up the pasture or use the same for any other purpose than as pasture land nor erect any building without consent of Lessor.
Margaret and David Owen.	The Llaneilian Allotment, Co. Denbigh.	20 0 0	20¾ years from 5th January 1883.	6 0 0	—	3*l.* was accepted instead of 4*l.* 10*s.* as rent for first three-quarter year of term of current lease. 10 per cent. abatement granted in each of three years ending 10th October 1889, 5 per cent. abatement for year to 10th October 1892, and 10 per cent. abatement for year to 10th October last. Asked for on ground of agricultural depression. (See last column.)	Do. do. - - -	No special clauses as to cultivation in lease. The land was held in 1880, and up to the date of the present lease, by John Owen, under an annual tenancy, at rent of 3*l.*
E. O. Partridge - -	Two allotments of mountain land, in the Parishes of Llanddwywe and Llanelltyd, Co. Merioneth, forming the Cefn Cam Allotments.	95 1 6 221 0 0	7 years from 10th October 1889.	13 0 0	—	The rent was remitted for the first quarter of Jones' lease, as he did not take possession till February 1883. No other abatements asked for or granted. (See last column.)	Do. do. - - -	No special provisions as to cultivation. Early in the year 1880 the tenancy which was then subsisting was put an end to, and the Crown recovered possession of the land, the rent being in arrear. Arrears discharged. From this date to 10th October 1882 the land was unlet. From the 10th October 1882 up to date of present lease the land was held in lease by R. Jones at a rent of 8*l.* per annum.
Representatives of John Evans.	Morfa Bocas Allotment, Llanelly, Co. Carmarthen.	23 3 0	Yearly tenancy from 5th April 1884.	5 0 0	—	No abatements applied for or granted. (See last column.) MONMOUTHSHIRE CHAMBER OF AGRICULTURE.

Proposed Scale of Compensation for unexhausted Improvements, approved by the Chamber, February 2nd, 1884.

1. Purchased manures applied to grass, roots, or green crops consumed on the farm :—

For undissolved bones	¾ for last year.
,, ,,	½ for second year.
,, ,,	¼ for third year.
Dissolved bones	⅔ for last year.
Superphosphate	⅓ for second year.
Other phosphatic manures
Nitrate of soda, soot, sulphate of ammonia, and other nitrogenous manures	½ for the last year, nothing beyond.
Stable manure	¾ for last year.
,, ,,	½ for second year.
,, ,,	¼ for third year.

2. Manures applied to arable land or grass off which a crop has been taken :

Same scale as above.

Thus, in the case of a crop taken off, after an application of undissolved bones, one-quarter of the value of bones would be held to be exhausted, and in the case of dissolved bones and phosphates one-third would be held to be exhausted.

In the case of nitrates the whole value of manure would be held to be exhausted.

3. The application of lime to arable or pasture :—

Compensation to be on the five years' principle ; that is to say, one-fifth is held to be annually exhausted.

4. Draining :

Where the tenant finds labour and the landlord tiles, compensation on the ten years' principle ; when the tenant finds both, compensation on the 20 years' principle.

In all the above cases, the cost of carriage and application to the land is to be added to the cost of the manure, lime, and cost of draining.

5. Compensation for feeding stuffs not produced on the holding :

The manurial value of feeding stuffs shall be based as follows :—

Linseed, cotton and rape cakes, malt dust, beans, peas, and linseed, one-third of the cost price.

All other feeding stuff, including hay and straw, one-fourth their cost price.

The manurial value of the purchased feeding stuffs consumed on the farm having thus been ascertained the outgoing tenant would be entitled to the full manurial value of such feeding stuffs as had not produced a crop, or had not been applied to his away-going crop, half the manurial value for feeding applied where away-going crop is taken, and to two-thirds where consumed on grass in last year of tenancy, and to one-half of the manurial value of such feeding stuffs consumed in the last year but one of the tenancy. In Candlemas takings the year to terminate May 1st.

Vouchers in all cases to be produced.

6. In reduction of the above, the out-going tenant shall pay to the landlord the manurial value of all hay, straw, and roots sold off the holding in the last two years of the tenancy on the following scale :—

	£	s.	d.
Hay, clover, or seeds	1	0	0	per ton.
Straw	0	10	0	,,
Roots	0	4	0	,,

The expenditure in feeding stuffs and manures in the last year not to exceed the average of the two preceding years.

7. Compensation for laying down pasture :

If laid within four years of the termination of tenancy the remuneration should be half the cost of seeding, plus the net value of a corn crop, such as the land might be fairly estimated to produce.

If the land had been laid more than four years, the remuneration should be the net of a corn crop and a half, that is, what it would be estimated to leave after paying every expense of growing, harvesting, and marketing.

The whole of the above are based on the assumption that in all cases the work is well done, that the manures and feeding stuffs are the value represented, and that waste is avoided as much as possible.

A small pamphlet containing the following matter has been forwarded to the Secretary.

"The custom in Mynyddislwyn Parish respecting unexhausted tillages, &c. Pontypool, Printed by H. Hughes, Bookseller and Stationer, 1867.

"We, the undersigned farmers and landowners in the parish of Mynyddislwyn, in the Hundreds of Wentloog and Abergavenny, Monmouthshire, do hereby declare that the prevailing custom in the above parish, on the change of farm tenants, respecting unexhausted tillages, is as follows:—

"1st. That the out-going tenant is paid by the in-coming tenant (or the landlord if he takes the farm into his own hands) for manure and lime, including haulage and labour applied to arable land during the last three years of the tenancy, in proportion to the crops taken out, that is the out-going tenant is entitled to three crops, namely, a green crop and two white crops (one crop in each year). If the out-going tenant has had only one crop out, two-thirds of the cost of such manuring is charged to the in-coming tenant; if two crops have been had out, one-third is charged.

"2nd. For farm-yard manure, laid on meadow land, the out-going tenant is entitled to the benefit of it for three years; and if the out-going tenant has had only one crop of hay after such manuring, two-thirds are charged to the in-coming tenant; if two crops have been had off, one-third is charged.

"3rd. For lime and earth mixture, applied to meadow land, and three crops of hay taken off after it, there is no charge.

"4th. For lime and earth mixture, applied to grass land, it extends over a period of six years, where the same shall have been grazed and the crops not mowed.

"5th. As regards the wheat in the ground, the in-coming tenant takes to the whole crop (on paying all expenses incurred therewith), if the out-going tenant does not prefer to take his share, which, out of summer fallow is four-fifths, out of wheat after turnips, vetches, or potatoes is two-thirds, and out of clover by wheat one-half. If the out-going tenant takes his share of the wheat, after summer fallow, the in-coming tenant is charged two-thirds the cost of manuring and liming.

"6th. The in-coming tenant does not take anything out of the wheat crop for tithe.

"7th. Ditching, and fences laid in proper season, during the last three years of tenancy, are charged to the in-coming tenant. If the hedges so laid have been enjoyed for one year only by the out-going tenant, two-thirds are charged; if enjoyed for two years, one-third is charged. If the out-going tenant buys the stakes for the fences, he will be entitled to be paid for them in the same manner as for the hedges laid.

"The tenancy of the land ends on the 2nd of February, and the farmhouse and buildings on the 1st of May following. The out-going tenant is entitled to a field, with water in it for his cattle, to the 1st of May. This mode of valuing the interest of out-going tenants has been adopted on several farms in Mynyddislwyn parish, for instance, at the following:—

"January 1854.—At Llwynon Farm, between Henry Rowlands and William Thomas.

"January 1858.—At Penrhiwpenner Farm, belonging to Lord Llanover, between Morgan Williams and Thomas Edwards.

"January 1858.—At Glanshone Farm, belonging to Mrs. Rees, between Charles Davies and Daniel Evans.

"January 1859.—At Llwynon Farm, belonging to Mrs. James, between William Thomas and Evan Hopkins.

"January 1863.—At Llys Pentwyn Farm, belonging to Mr. Roger Lewis, between William Thomas and the landlord, for his son John Lewis.

"January 1863.—At Penmain Farm, belonging to Mr. Roger Lewis, between James Patfield and the landlord.

"January 1863.—At Llanarch Uchaf Farm, belonging to the late C. H. Leigh, Esq., between Mr. M. Morrison and William Thomas.

"December 1863.—At Penypant Farm, belonging to Hall and Davies, between Margaret Thomas and Morgan Williams.

"February 1864.—At Tir y Sais Farm, belonging to Mr. Roger Lewis, between the landlord and Edmund Francis.

"February 1865.—At Llys Pentwyn Farm, belonging to Mr. Roger Lewis, between John Lewis and Charles Davies.

"January 1866.—At Pant Farm, belonging to Lord Llanover, between Thomas E. George and Thomas Edwards.

"January 1866.—At Pentwyn Farm, belonging to W. J. Davies, Esq., between Thomas Isaac and Thomas E. George.

"February 1866.—At Penmain, between the landlord, Mr. Roger Lewis, and Henry Walters.

"March 1866.—At Gelly Gynhes Farm, between John Thomas and Mr. Richards.

"The principle of valuing is clearly to the benefit of landlord and tenant.
